Announcements

Chinese Language I, II

An introduction to the Chinese language. No previous study of Chinese required. Through two semester of intensive training in the basic skills of understanding, speaking, reading and writing Chinese, students will be able to understand basic Chinese and carry on a simple conversation. This course serves as an excellent preparation for advanced study or for a professional career in which understanding of China is essential.

The class will be taught Tuesday and Thursday from 1:00 p.m. to 2:15 p.m. in Brewster C302.

Japanese Language

The Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures is pleased to announce that it will continue its offering of 1st and 2nd semester Japanese language courses in the coming academic year.

These courses are taught with video cassettes under the supervision of a native Japanese instructor.

The course will meet M-W-Th-F at 1:00. For further information call the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures at 757-6232.

Reagan Rejects SovietProposal

change for Soviet missile cutbacks prompted even tighter secrecy.

Even the dispatching of Nitze to Western Europe, Rowny to Japan and Australia and Homes to NATO headquarters in Brussels was not announced.

Officials said privately the emissaries had been directed to get "informal readings" from friendly governments and were to return this week.

The Soviets have indicated they will not finish preparations for a Gorbachev visit to the United States until they get a response to their latest arms control proposals.

The key question confronting Reagan and his advisers is how to get reductions in U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, missiles and submarines, and whether the United States must make concessions in space.

Students Learn Leadership

Wendling said the Ropes Course is designed to develop each of these characteristics. Cooperation, communication, and planning are vital since most of the events are team events.

In some of the more scary events, like the 45-foot rope walk, sensitivity and consideration are needed. Wendling said students learn to be considerate of others because they could be the next ones to freeze half-way over.

Most of the participants find the Ropes Course in particular, and Legislator's School in general worthwhile.

"It makes you use all of your leadership skills. You really have to apply what you've learned," said Ross Cribbs a senior from Littlefield High School. Tripp Harper, a Union Pines senior agreed, "It's a good experience for us to be in leadership positions. We can use what we learned here when we get back."

As for the entire program, Nathalie Mizelle from Enloe High School summed up the student's feelings. "Your mind would be idle if you were at home; it (the program) makes us work."

A junior from Louisburg High School, Angela Alston said, "It's helping us to improve our skills. Besides that it's just alot of fun."

Legislator's School is funded by the North Carolina General Assembly. ECU and WCU are the two state universities participating in the program.

Campus Voice

Do you think the U.S. military should be involved in international drug trade?

Helen Colevins
Graduate, Art
"No, even if it were a military action we shouldn't get involved in another country's affairs."

Melannie Wilson
Senior, Communications
"I think they should because drugs are coming in easily and if the military is used it might help."

Jackie Armstrong
Junior, Psychology
"I don't think so because if they send all the world's troops over there, drugs will still get through."

Brooke Stonesifer
Junior, Industrial Technology
"I think the U.S. should be there to help cut back the drugs in the U.S."

Bryan Gaiser
Junior, Industrial Technology
"Yes, as long as Bolivia agrees I think we should be there."
