Reactions Mixed On Reagan-Nakasone Talks

By JIM IMPOCO
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Business leaders expressed guarded optimism Saturday over the outcome of talks between President Reagan and Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, but opposition parties and agricultural officials said the leaders' agreements may harm Japan.

During a two-day Washington summit which ended Friday, Reagan emphasized the need to improve the competitiveness of American industry and reduce the U.S. trade deficit, which reached $58.6 billion with Japan last year.

Reagan also pledged to resist protectionist pressures, and Nakasone outlined his plan to take vigorous action to stimulate domestic growth in Japan.

Tsurumi Yamaguchi, secretary-general of the major opposition Socialist Party, complained that the two men failed to present concrete measures to prevent the further decline of the dollar against the yen, which has made Japanese products more expensive in the United States.

The leaders agreed that the dollar, now worth about 140 yen, has fallen far enough since September 1985, when five major industrial countries agreed to drive the dollar down in an effort to ease the U.S. trade deficit. At that time, one dollar was worth 242 yen.

Yamaguchi said a joint statement released by Reagan and Nakasone "sounds like Japan will have to shoulder an increased burden." He termed the talks "too abstract."

Officials at the government Bank of Japan and Finance Ministry said they were pleased with the agreement on exchange rates and said "it is natural" that the leaders' statement did not contain specific measures for stabilizing the yen, Kyodo News Service reported.

Eishiro Saito, chairman of the powerful Federation of Economic Organizations, said, "We hope the agreement will lead to stabilization of the exchange rates."

Japan's electronic industry welcomed a pledge by Reagan to lift $300 million in tariffs on Japanese goods as soon as possible. Reagan imposed the tariffs April 17, saying Japan violated a 1986 agreement by selling computer chips below cost.

Officials at the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries, demanding anonymity, said they were worried about Nakasone's agreement to review Japan's agricultural policy, including rice imports, in coming multilateral trade talks in Uruguay.

The United States has pressed Japan to open its markets wider to U.S. farm products.

Japan bans rice imports. The United States has claimed Japan's subsidies of Japanese rice growers has highly inflated the price in comparison to what it would cost the Japanese to buy U.S. rice.

Agriculture officials said Saturday the ministry has no plans to lift the ban on rice.

Business leaders said they were still wary of strong protectionist sentiment in the United States and will press the Nakasone adminstration to follow through on its pledge to stimulate the domestic economy, Kyodo said.

During Nakasone's visit, the U.S. House of Representatives voted in favor of retaliatory trade measures against countries running trade surpluses with America if those countries are judged to be engaging in unfair trade practices.

N.C. Lawmakers Ready To Focus On New Budget

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

With four months of discussion, debate and decison-making behind them, North Carolina lawmakers will soon be focusing on the 1987-89 biennium budget as this year's session heads into the homestretch, Pitt County legislators say.

Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt, who is chairman of the Base Budget Education Appropriations Committee, said the panel is in the midst of reviewing requests.

"As far as education is concerned, we've completed reviews of the University system and the community colleges and have begun working on the public school appropriations," Warren said. "We should finish reviewing the public schools budget within two weeks."

When the reviews are completed, the committee will look for possible spending reductions, according to Warren, who also serves as vice chairman of the Appropriations Expansion Budget Committee.

"We are planning to go back into all those budgets to identify any possible cuts in the budgets of each group," he said. "We'll look at areas, flag them, and then go back to vote on them. We hope to finish the entire process in the month of May."

The four-term representative said the committee will then examine projected revenues.

"Once we get the figures next month as to revenues, we'll be able to see how much we have to work with," he said. "We haven't discussed the salaries of state employees and teachers. We won't discuss that until the revenue figures are in.

The Base Budget Education Appropriations Committee plays a vital role in the budget process, according to Warren, who said the $158 million Basic Education Program designed to provide equal education opportunites in all North Carolina counties regardless of size is a central consideration in the discussions.

"We always have a lot to do in this particular committee," he said. "Education takes a larger share of the state budget than any other aspect — about 61 percent."

Warren guaranteed lawmakers would approve only a balanced budget.

"We have a balanced budget in North Carolina," Warren said. "That's a very good thing for our state. We respect and honor that. Our budget will be balanced each year."

However, Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt, said revenue projections have dropped in recent months.

"My most important responsibility as a senator is my part in the state's budget process," Taft said. "We've had two months in a row of declining revenue projections which concern me as budget maker. If the trend continues, we will have seriously problems on our hands, and we will have to make some serious adjustments downward in expenditures.

"Hopefully, the two months are only temporary and the revenue picture

Pitt Faces Trash Disposal Decisions

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County residents will face a marked increase in the cost of disposing of their garbage in the next six to eight years unless new and less expensive disposal methods are developed.

"Certainly we have to look to alternatives in the future. We're not going to be able to bury trash forever," County Manager Kramer Jackson said last week. "We've got to find some way to dispose of future refuse."

At the present time, solid waste generated by county residents is buried in the county's sanitary landfill on the Allen Road just west of Greenville. And the cost of burying the waste is paid for from property taxes.

But according to Jackson, "I don't know how long we can continue to pay with property taxes. One day we may have to look at fees or some other means to generate revenue."

Burying trash "is an expensive proposition. It doesn't get any cheaper. It will continue to get more expensive," Jackson said. And the board of commissioners has been "very active in seeking alternatives."

The county began studying the problem of solid waste disposal in the late 1960s and leased a small site at Littlefield, between Ayden and Grifton, to begin a pilot sanitary landfill operation in the early 1970s. It then bought, and in July 1974 opened, the present Allen Road site to give county residents a place to dispose of their solid waste.

Following more study, county

Final Body Is Recovered From Collapsed Building

By BRENT LAYMON
Associated Press Writer

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP) — The final body was recovered early Saturday from the wreckage of an apartment building project that collapsed and killed 28 workers in a pile of twisted steel and concrete.

Investigators say human error must be considered as a possible cause of the accident, but it is likely that a combination of factors led to the April 23 collapse of the L'Ambiance Plaza, which was about 60 percent complete.

Four bodies had been pulled out Friday. Until the last body was found, Jonathan Best, city emergency medical services director, and hundreds of volunteers insisted they were performing a rescue operation rather than a search for bodies.

Investigators say it could be months before they determine why the $17.6 million building collapsed.

"It's very much like a police investigation," said Matthew Heyman of the National Bureau of Standards, which is assisting the Occupational Safety and Health Administration in the federal government's investigation.

"The important thing up front is to consider all the possibilities," Heyman said.

The first of the spate of lawsuits likely to result from the collapse was filed in federal court on Thursday by a subcontractor seeking immediate access to the site to ensure the preservation of evidence.

The building was being constructed by the lift-slab method, in which 325-ton concrete floor slabs are poured at ground level and hoisted into place. City Building Officer Frank Mercaldi has said that three slabs were being jacked into place for the fifth through seventh floors when the 13-story building collapsed.

Hussein Cancels Trip

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — Palace sources said King Hussein planned to go to Egypt Saturday for talks with President Hosni Mubarak, but a palace spokesman said later the monarch would not make the journey. He gave no reason.

The sources had said hours earlier that the monarch would fly to Cairo for talks with Mubarak and to attend the opera "Aida" at an open-air theater in Luxor.

The usually reliable sources spoke with the condition they not be identified.

Hussein and Mubarak have met numerous times since September 1984, when the king restored diplomatic relations with Egypt, breaking an Arab boycott imposed after the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadar signed a peace pact with Israel in 1979.

The palace sources had said the canceled Saturday meeting would have been linked to last week's meeting in Algeria of the Palestine National Council, the parliament of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

At the council meeting, the PLO, headed by Yasser Arafat, formally ended a two-year-old agreement with commissioners awarded contracts in 1978 for the construction of two 40-cubic yard container sites — the first of 14 now located throughout the county — to give rural residents a place relatively close to their homes to dump their trash without having to travel to the landfill.

Pitt Faces Decisions On Trash

The first of the container sites — on the County Home Road about 1.5 miles West of Bells Fork — opened in August 1978, with the second site on the Stantonsburg Road 3 miles west of Pitt County Memorial Hospital opening in October 1978.

And the solid waste business has been growing ever since.

County Engineer Phil Dickerson, who oversees the waste disposal program, said in the fiscal year which began July 1, 1979, "601,000 loose cubic yards of waste were disposed of in the landfill at a cost of $550,000."

This fiscal year, which ends June 30, will see one million loose cubic yards of waste (between 175 and 200 tons per day, according to Dickerson) buried in the Allen Road landfill at a cost of $750,000.

And he said "the volume of waste to be disposed of is expected to double every nine to 10 years if the present growth continues.

About half of the 120 acre Allen Road landfill has been used. The remaining acreage, Dickerson said, "will last six to eight more years."

The county temporarily closed the Allen Road landfill in 1978 and operated the Greenville city landfill until it was filled, then reopened the Allen Road site in September 1980.

What happens when the Allen Road site is completely filled?

"That's a good question," Dickerson said. "Two or three things could happen. We could go to a lined landfill, which will increase the cost."

Or, the county could go to an incinertor-lined landfill combination, which would be still more expensive. Incineration refers to cogeneration, or burning refuse to generate steam.

Recycling is also a possibility.

Based on the present volume of solid waste, a lined landfill, Dickerson said, would cost about $2 million a year to operate (based on 1987 costs), while an incinerator-lined landfill would cost about $7 million a year.

A cogeneration plant to burn garbage would cost between $25 million and $30 million, Dickerson said. "And you'd still have 15 to 20 percent you'd have to landfill."

Dickerson said "there are so many environmental concerns associated with solid waste disposal ... regardless of the method used."

The present landfill was permitted under rules existing in 1974, Dickerson explained. Six monitoring wells, located at strategic spots around the landfill, are used to test for possible pollution, as is a deep drinking water well in the area.

"As of the present time, the tests have shown little decrease in groundwater quality in the shallow wells and none in the deep well. The only change has been a slight increase in iron content in some of the shallow wells, which in its natural state contains about 10 times the maximum allowable iron content for drinking water."

Present state regulations, Dickerson said, say new landfills can cause no degradation of ground water quality. There's no distinction between groundwaters now being used for drinking and those unsuitable for drinking in their natural state.

"There's no clear indication as to how to conform with this standard," Dickerson said. "It appears that the only acceptable technology to the state regulatory agencies involves double artificial liners, leachate collection and treatment systems, and gas collection and venting systems."

Cogeneration is the process of burning solid waste and using the heat to generate steam. The steam is either sold directly to a steam user or used to generate electricity which can be sold to a power company.

But such plants are costly.

The best way to evaluate the cost for Pitt County is to look at the cost of the New Hanover County facility built in 1983, Dickerson said.

Four years ago, the New Hanover cogeneration plant cost $16 million to build. Today, Mecklenburg County is building one about the same size for $30 million, according to Dickerson.

"The annual cost of operating that (New Hanover) plant, which is approximately the size Pitt County would need, is about $4 million. Revenues from steam and electric sales total about $1.2 million, leaving a remaining cost of about $2.8 million to be borne by the people in the county in the form of taxes and user fees."

But "the actual net cost of disposal," when the cost of landfilling the ash from the burning process and items that can't be burned is considered, "would probably be in the range of $3.5 million."

"I'd estimate that to construct a facility of the type in New Hanover County, maintain a lined ash landfill, and make the necessary changes in our collection system, the annual costs would be in the range of $7 million.

"Assuming that $1 million in outside revenue could ge generated (through the sale of steam and electricity), the cost to the taxpayers in user fees and taxes would be in the range of $6 million a year ... an eight fold budget increase."

And there are environmental concerns with cogeneration, too.

"Air quality could be affected by emissions from the incinerators," Dickerson said. "Concerns already exist about dioxins. Some feel that emissions from incinerators containing dioxins are at least as serious an air quality concern as the potential groundwater pollution from landfills.

"Even if the cogeneration process itself is successful from an environmental quality standpoint, we are still faced with the necessity of landfilling the ash from the plants."

And, according to Dickerson, "some experts believe this ash will be classified as hazardous waste in the future.

"The ash may constitute up to 20 percent of the original volume of the waste and if it is hazardous waste, the cost and environmental liability associated with its disposal may reach the same magnitude as that of landfilling all the waste initially."

While it can't be considered to be a total solution, the recycling option "has a great deal of promise if integrated with other methods of disposal," Dickerson suggested.

"It's estimated that as much as 50 percent of solid waste can be recycled. The primary advantage to recycling is that it is a form of disposition which has less future liabilities."

Dickerson said the recyclables are converted to usable nonhazardous products and the seller — in this case the County of Pitt — would not have to be concerned about future environmental problems from the waste.

But there are costs involved in recycling ... the cost of collection, separation and marketing.

And the waste that cannot be recycled still has to be disposed of — either by landfilling or incineration.

"We don't see any one quick fix to the problems," Dickerson said.

"But we think the single most important factor in solving the problem is education. We need to keep informed on the options available to us ... to inform the general public that the county has, or will have, serious solid waste problems ... that the decisions to be made will involve more cost."

The second most important factor, Dickerson suggested, "is related to education. We must find ways to avoid generating waste in the first place ... find ways to reuse items now wasted.

"It's important to realize that the solutions to future solid waste problems are going to be considerably more expensive that the present methods of disposal."

Surgeon's Licenses Suspended

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The state medical licensing board Saturday suspended the license of the former chief heart surgeon at Bethesda Naval Hospital, who is serving a prison term for criminal malpractice.

The 15-member Board of Medical Examiners unanimously approved advice from an attorney that Dr. Donal M. Billig's license to practice medicine in the state be suspended temporarily rather than canceled.

Although Billig, former chief heart surgeon at the Navy's flagship hospital in Bethesda, Md., and his attorney were invited to appear at the hearing, neither showed up. Billig has not practiced medicine in Texas in nearly 20 years.

A 1986 court-martial stemming from allegations of malpractice by Billig ended with his conviction on two counts of involuntary manslaughter, one count of criminally negligent homicide, 17 counts of dereliction of duty and two counts of culpable inefficiency, said Bill Campbell, director of the board's disciplinary division.

Billig, 56, was sentenced to four years in prison, of which he has served about 16 months, Campbell said. He is jailed at Fort Leavenworth in Kansas.

Campbell said he recommended the board only suspend Billig's license rather than cancel it because Billig was appealing the convictions and could request a hearing from the Texas board when appeals are exhausted.

Budget Work Set

will be bright so that there is adequate money for improvement in public education, teacher and state employee salary increases, as well as the many other needs of the state."

Taft said the 1987 session has been a busy one.

"I'm very pleased with the session thus far and my role on behalf of my district," he said. "I've been playing an active role in a number of key issues including the medical malpractice problem, environmental issues and education.

"It has been a very busy session thus far, but the summer promises to be even more hectic."

Rep. Walter Jones Jr., D-Pitt, echoed Taft's sentiments about the General Assembly's workload.

"As far as the overall session, I think that we got off to a fast pace in February," Jones said. "It has been a very hardworking session, and we still have a great deal of hard work to do in the next two and a half months. There are still many major decisions to be made on both appropriation matters and non-appropriation matters in that period of time."

Jones said he is pleased with his role in the Legislature this session.

"Personally, I've been involved in more statewide legislation than in the two previous sessions because of my belief that these issues I've been involved with needed to be addressed," he said. "Any time you are involved in statewide legislation it requires a total commitment."

Sen. Bob Martin, D-Pitt, also said his work in the 1987 session has been gratifying.

"I've been more heavily involved in this session because I have introduced several bills," Martin said. "I spent the first session observing and working on the sidelines, seeing how the system works. This session, I've been busy getting things done. I'm part of the system and I feel at home with it."

Lawmakers in the 1987 session have been busier this year than in years past, according to Martin.

"We're at about the halfway point as far as the legislature is concerned," he said. "It's been very heavy, more heavy than my first session. We're way ahead in the number of bills introduced."

Final Body Found

By week's end, several publications, including The New York Times and Engineering News-Record, a highly respected trade journal, were reporting that investigators were focusing on a particular column that was bent into a curve.

The Times, quoting unidentified experts close to the investigation, reported that a possible failure to brace steel columns as required by engineering plans may have contributed to collapse.

But Heyman and other experts said the collapse was likely caused by a combination of factors.

"It's rare that there is a single cause," said John Loss, director of the Architecture and Engineering Performance Center at the Univerity of Maryland. "It's frequently a layering of errors."

The Bureau of Standards began its investigation with examination of samples of concrete, steel and other materials taken from the site. Investigators also have used computer models and replicas to figure out what went wrong, Heyman said.

Besides design and material flaws, investigators will also likely look into the possibility of human error, experts said. Human error played a role in four of five major structural collapses investigated by OSHA during the last 15 years, according to agency records.

For example, the quality of welds and a failure to place wedges between beams contributed to the 1982 collapse of a highway ramp under construction in East Chicago, Ind., Heyman said.

Jordan to work toward peace talks with Israel.

At the Algiers conference, Palestinian hardliners said they would reunite with Arafat only if the PLO canceled its coordination with Jordan and reduced ties with Egypt, the only Arab nation to make peace with Israel.

Mubarak responded by closing the PLO offices in Egypt. Hussein closed many PLO offices in Amman last year after an earlier setback in his relations with Arafat.

The PLO's abrogation of Arafat's agreement with Hussein meant little, because the monarch months ago said he would no longer deal with the PLO leader because he had reneged on parts of the agreement.

Jordanian officials denied reports Friday from Israel that Hussein and Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres have agreed on a framework for Arab-Israeli peace talks that would exclude the PLO.

Egypt and Jordan have maintained that the PLO should participate in any peace effort. Israel has said it would negotiate with a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation, but none of the Palestinians could be linked to the PLO, which Israel cosiders a terrorist organization.

Something To Think About

Donovan Phillips
DIRECTOR

TWO SEPARATE CHOICES

As we have so often stressed, the best time to plan for your funeral is while you are healthy. In that way, you can protect your loved ones from having to make a number of difficult decisions during a trying period.

You will have to consider both the DISPOSITION OF REMAINS and MORTUARY RITES. These are two separate matters calling for two or more decisions. The first is what to do with the actual body; burial or cremation. The second is what kind of religious or secular rite should accompany the disposition.

Many people frequently confuse and amalgamate the two. They may tend to think that expensive, ostentatious funerals go along with burial, and low-cost simplicity with cremation. This is not necessarily true. A cremation may be part of an elaborate and costly funeral; on the other hand, some religious sects bury their dead with extreme simplicity.

Phosphate Ban Important Step For Rivers, Lakes

The statewide ban on phosphorus in household detergents is an important first step toward protecting the state's waterways from phosphate pollution.

The ban passed by lawmakers Tuesday has two substantial strengths.

First, it provides the state's over-burdened lakes and rivers with relief from the ever-increasing stress of growth.

Second, the ban represents a move toward careful scrutiny by the state of the environment and a willingness to place tangible limits on harmful substances when necessary. The debate surrounding the legislation also created a new public awareness of the pressures development places on natural resources. It is, in this respect, an important psychological victory for preservation of these resources.

Arguments that the measure is ineffective don't hold up. The phosphate ban limits home use of the substance. Multiply the number of households in the state by the number of loads of laundry and dishes done daily and the impact is clear.

Besides, phosphates aren't needed to get laundry really clean. There are good products that don't contain phosphorus that get clothes and dishes squeaky clean. Many households have been using them for years.

The bill also makes allowances for households or businesses with special soiling problems since commercial laundries can still wash with detergents containing phosphates.

Phosphorus spurs algae growth, which robs water of oxygen and kills fish. State lawmakers, in passing the phosphate bill, showed a willingness to deal with important environmental issue by placing limits on potentially harmful substances.

Lawmakers should use this beginning as a foundation on which to build strong unequivocal legislative support for the state's resources.

A Harsh Lesson For A Child

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

The little girl is only 2½ years old and she knows nothing of death and change. At 2½ you only know the world as it is. Loved ones are the same as you've always known them. Grandparents are old, parents are an indeterminable age and your playmates are somewhat like yourself. Never having experienced change — and death — you have no concept of it.

Anyway, this little girl lives in one of the many suburban residential areas of Greenville. They are areas which have cropped up where tobacco and corn grew only a short time before. Such areas teem with wildlife and the animals hang around for a time, having no reasoning power to understand that their centuries old habitats have been taken over by man. Eventually, of course, animals move on to the deep woods and relative safety from man.

For a time, however, there is a clash. There was the New York lady who looked out her window to see a snake sunning itself on her patio — but that's another story.

At our little girl's house a rabbit regularly shows up in the bushes at the front and it quickly grew to be a favorite of the little girl. She gets excited when the brown rabbit appears, and in a child's innocence, wants to play with it. Of course the rabbit is wild and, while it has a fascination for the humans in its romping range, it hops off when people approach.

The game, however, has continued for months. The rabbit comes frequently, the little girl squeals with delight, chases after the rabbit which promptly hops off.

Well, it turned out the rabbit was female and, as rabbits do, it had a litter of bunnies in April. That meant even more excitement for the child.

Then one day in late April one of the little bunnies was hopping in front of the girl's house. But danger lurked. A black cat spotted the bunny, raced over and grabbed it by the neck. The little girl watched in horror as she saw for the first time a living thing in danger of death.

Rabbits aren't supposed to make sounds, but they do when they face death. The bunny's squeaks brought the mother rabbit but it saw there was nothing it could do and veered off into the bushes.

The triumphant cat trotted off with the bunny, surely to its death.

It was a harsh lesson for a 2½ year old. It is one we all know — but prefer not to think about — food chain, survival of the fittest and survival by preying on natural food sources. That is the way it is in the world of wild life and now, for the first time, a 2½ year old has learned how cruel nature can be.

Rural Counties Need Tax Credit

A constant problem in North Carolina is the lack of economic growth for some counties.

While farming fades as an economic force in many counties, there has been no corresponding rise in business and industries to provide new jobs. These counties have stood on the sidelines as new industrial jobs came to such counties as Wake, Durham, Orange, Mecklenburg and even Pitt.

Now there is a bill in the legislature which supporters hope will help to alleviate this situation. It is a bill which will provide a $2,800 tax credit for each job above 10 created by new or expanded industry in 20 of the state's most economically weak counties. The tax credit would be paid over four years and it would have a limit of 50 percent of the firm's state taxes.

The 20 counties would be determined on the basis of per capita income and unemployment rates. If the criteria had been applied this year, the counties would have been, in order of need, Hyde, Swain, Robeson, Cherokee, Graham, Bladen, Clay, Hoke, Columbus, Northampton, Halifax, Brunswick, Pender, Yancey, Warren, Bertie, Ashe, Richmond, Avery and Caswell.

The bill would be expected to cost the state $3 million to $12 million a year in taxes. However, if 3,500 jobs were created it would add $29.8 million to $37.8 million in wages in North Carolina. The bill is now in the Senate.

There have been some objections raised to the bill including the possibility that it might draw industry from populous counties to adjacent underdeveloped counties.

Still the plan seems to be worth a try. North Carolina is a contrast of counties which are growing rapidly and those which are standing still economically. As farm jobs are eliminated there is a clear need for industrial jobs so that people can stay in their homes and continue to have employment.

The state can lose nothing in enacting this plan. If there is no industrial development in underdeveloped counties there will be no credits. And if there is, the state will receive new income from the taxes paid.

Most important, however, we will be doing something for the counties which are being lost in the shuffle of industrial procurement. And nothing builds enthusiasm more than the prospect of making some progress in improving a county's economy.

The High Court's Independent Swing Vote

David O'Brien

The most divisive issues of social policy decided by the Supreme Court come down on 5-4 votes, with Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. often casting the deciding vote. In upholding capital punishment two weeks ago, he wrote for a bare majority, dismissing racial bias as an "irrelevant factor" though blacks who murder whites are 11 times more likely to suffer the death penalty than whites who kill blacks. Powell also holds pivotal votes on abortion, affirmation action, homosexual rights and some criminal justice matters.

At the fulcrum of power within the court, Powell's views are more influential than retired Chief Justice Warren E. Burger or his successor, William H. Rehnquist. Even William J. Brennan Jr. — the most liberal and skilled consensus-builder, who, Powell noted during a recent interview in his chambers, "is going down in history as one of the great justices of this court" — has less influence across the range of issues.

Powell went to the court reluctantly in 1972, after being pressured by Richard M. Nixon. At 64 and a wealthy senior partner in a powerful Virginia law firm, as well as a former president of the American Bar Association, he "had no desire to be a judge."

On the bench, Powell maintains a moderate conservative position, less ideological than others and more geared toward the governing process than particular results. One of his first opinions that "surprised some people," he proudly recalls, rebuffed Nixon's wiretapping of civil rights activists. He later joined the abortion ruling and stood firm against pressure to overturn it. Looking frail and gaunt, he conceded that "If the personnel of this court changed, it's entirely possible that (it) would be reversed."

Because he so often casts a crucial vote, Powell is frequently described as a "swing" voter. Last term, the justices split 5-4 in 46 cases and he was most often in the majority (35 times) — the conservatives winning three times as often as the liberals. Yet Powell denied that he "rolls with the court." He is, in fact, fiercely independent, a self-consciously pragmatic jurist with an abiding faith in precedent and judicial self-restraint.

He has no truck with New Right conservatives, and openly rejects the Reagan administration's call for a return to a "jurisprudence of original intentions." "The Constitution is a document framed in language that requires interpreting the critical provisions of it," he explained. "The 1st Amendment, the 4th, the 5th, the 6th and the 8th all require interpretation of language that's nowhere defined in the Constitution." "Few," he added, "will be influenced by any edging that would return to original intent."

At the same time, Powell is a force in limiting Warren Court rulings that expanded the rights of the accused — he distrusts mechanically applied guidelines for police procedures. Watershed rulings like Miranda, however, he emphasized have been "meticulously upheld."

As a result, liberals attack him for diluting rights of the accused, and conservatives for not going far enough. But, key to his position is his "gift of moderation," as Harvard professor Paul A. Freund put it. Almost 40 years of practicing law, Powell explained, "made me oriented perhaps more than some of the other justices toward deciding each case on the basis of its own merits." That case-by-case approach puts him at storm center.

More than a centrist, Powell is the conscience of the court, with an affinity for balancing individual and societal interests. In the landmark ruling on affirmative action in universities, the justices split with Powell in the middle. Given the tie-breaking vote, he announced the decision, though no other justice agreed with his reasoning, allowing affirmative action (but not quotas) to ensure "a diverse study body."

Powell's independence and central role is exemplified by his opinion last year upholding Georgia's sodomy law. When the justices discussed the case in private conference, Powell again held the crucial vote. Although he indicated he might go along with striking down the law, Justice Harry A. Blackmun's draft opinion proved too sweeping in its use of precedents for protecting personal privacy. Powell said he was "troubled by that" and switched his vote. Blackmun wrote for four dissenters, rather than a majority.

Powell insisted that the case was more politically symbolic than legally important. The defendant had not been tried and convicted, which could have meant 20 years imprisonment. So, Powell explained, there was "no threat to him and the law was not being enforced, hadn't been enforced since the late 1930s." Though he says sodomy laws "are moribund," Powell did not want "to decide the case in the abstract." For that reason, he switched votes and crafted an opinion saying penalties for sodomy might constitute "cruel and unusual punishment."

Just as Powell's pragmatic independence puts him at the court's center, his departure could radically shift its direction. He could well be the last advocate of judicial self-restraint in the tradition of John M. Harlan, whom he greatly admired, and Felix Frankfurter, whom he studied with at Harvard. Powell recalls his father thought Frankfurter "corrupted" him by making him too liberal.

That tradition may come to an end, if Ronald Reagan has the chance to fill Powell's seat. Powell agrees but denies that keeps him from resigning. He does, however, have major health problems and joked, "my wife beats on me to retire every year, so I just live from year to year." At 79, five recent surgeries have taken their toll. Colon surgery in 1979 was followed by several operations for prostrate cancer and the removal of cataracts from both eyes.

"If there were a vacancy," he said in his soft, measured way, "I can't imagine that Reagan would not appoint someone who was intellectually strong and shared his points of view, and would not name somebody who was of such a sufficient stature that the Senate Judiciary Committee would feel compelled to approve him."

Within the court, Powell enjoys the reputation of a respected patrician and team player — "a Southern gentleman in the best sense," observed a brethren. He remains extraordinarily hard working, laboring 10 hours a day, six days a week. He spends most evenings reading and relaxes by walking the corridors of the marble temple or his apartment complex. "When you're as old as I am," he quipped, "it's not as necessary to have the time to do things that you would like to do."

For now, Powell remains as a moderating force. He said "courts alone in the end are responsible for preserving" civil liberties and "what we call our democratic government."

Myths About The Land Interfere With Japanese, U.S. Progress

Kenichi Ohmae

Nothing touches the hearts of Americans more than stories about the soil and the families who work on it. Americans want to believe that these touchstones will always exist.

My countrymen are emotional in the same way about our land, where water spreads tranquil and smooth over rice paddies. We imagine a scene where a few farmers work knee-deep in water, planting or harvesting our life-sustaining rice.

These visions exist in the mind's eye only. Both are myths, in Japan as in America. Big farms that run like factories are the only kind that can compete in the new global market for agricultural products. Americans can no longer afford to subsidize individual farmers growing wheat on 500 acres in Iowa. For its part, Japan cannot continue to allow 15 percent of our land to be taken up with uneconomical and tiny rice farms while the rest of the nation is forced to live in cramped and phenomenally expensive housing.

The Japanese farmers would be better off doing something else, but they refuse to give up their land. Some of the results are personally tragic. Japanese girls will not marry farmers' sons today because the future for farmers is bleak; so Korean, Filipino and Taiwanese girls are imported to the farming villages to meet young farmers' sons across tables. The sons, at least those who have not left for the cities, propose marriage to one girl after another until finally one agrees.

Japan is a small island nation, of which nearly 70 percent is mountainous. Of the remaining 30 percent of our land, a miniscule 2.9 percent is taken up with housing for 120 million people, while half of the rest of our flatland is taken up by government-mandated rice growing. While the city dwellers are kept hostage in cramped apartments, farmers are kept equally hostage on their acre plots by their own dependence on government subsidies.

Now the United States has entered this already turbulent picture. In order to help American farmers, the United States has asked that Japan open its rice markets. While most Japanese loyally say that their rice has the best taste in the world, in a blindfold test hardly anyone can tell the difference between the Japanese "Sasanishiki" and Arkansas "Liberty" or California "Kokuho" short-grain rice. So the taste of the rice is not an obstacle to change or the opening of markets.

We Japanese have several major obstacles, the first being that farmers, who make up a small proportion of the population, control our legislature and resist any weakening of their strong position. Our parliamentary representation unfortunately reflects the population distribution just after World War II when 40 percent of the population were farmers. At the time the country was starving and keeping the farmers in the countryside was vital. The postwar constitution, guided through our legislature by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, commander of the postwar occupation, kept them there.

Land was divided into small plots and given to thousands of farmers. In order to accommodate these farmers and encourage them to stay on the farm, the government gave incentives and subsides and a certain percentage of votes. As generations passed and the farmland was inherited by the first son, the rest of the family moved to the cities because the farm could not support them all. But during this population shift the allocation of seats in the House of Representatives remained virtually unchanged.

The result of this 40-year-old idea is that 6 percent of the population, the farmers, now hold 18 percent of the votes. What is worse, the urban population does not always vote but the farmers always do, giving farmers what actually amounts to 25 percent of the voting power. Some city voters always vote with the farmers (as they were farmers themselves only a few years ago), so we can never muster the votes to change this unfair law that gives a Tokyo resident about one quarter of the voting rights of a rural resident, typically a rice grower. Change thus becomes impossible. It boils down to Aesop's question of who in a society of mice puts the bell around the cat's neck.

The first step is to change the voting representation so that every citizen's vote is equal. This change would give city residents enough power to demand using farmland for housing. Real estate prices would drop significantly and the government would be able to invest in our country's infrastructure. Today, some 80 percent of our public spending on construction disappears in the purchase of land. Given this situation it does not make sense for the taxpayer to demand more public spending. Agricultural reform to remove rice paddies within a 100-kilometer radius of Tokyo would free up enough land for every family to own at least 1,620 square feet of property. Then we could start importing rice to compensate for the lost farm land, and also would have large enough housing to be able to buy and use "American-sized" manufactured goods.

One major obstacle to change is our image of self-sufficiency. Rice is almost considered a religion in Japan. We have always grown our own rice and many Japanese believe that is as it should be. Many feel that we should not depend on outsiders. After all, President Nixon once imposed an embargo on soybean shipments to Japan. Those who insist that Japan remain self-sufficient in rice remind us that there is no guarantee that the grain-exporting nations will not form some of ominous Food-OPEC.

Interdependence is the key to making our world work. To protect its steel industry Japan should invest in Australian iron ore and coal mines.

We should stop subsidizing our rice farmers and free them to go wherever they want. If necessary, they could grow rice in joint-ventures with Australian or Arkansas or California farmers. We could buy land in the Imperial Valley and grow our own rice. It would be a safer world than that of today where each country seeks to protect its own borders to the detriment of its own consumers.

The United States must also accept the reality that American farmers must remain internationally competitive. If Japan removed rice from the list of remaining import quotas in the hope of improving its trade imbalance with the United States, cheaper rice might be offered from Australia and Thailand. Should Japan then ignore the best buy in rice? The only guarantee the Japanese would want is that the United States does not initiate another round of bilateral demands, as it did with textiles, color TVs, steel, and automobiles.

Both the United States and Japan must give up some of their most cherished myths in order to make the last few years of the 20th century work well. Only when we have accepted the fact that small farmers have to become a pleasant memory will we be able to hold the family portraits in our hearts while we maintain something closer to reality in our mind.

National Monetary, Fiscal Policy Trapped Between Two Evils

Irwin Kellner

In classical mythology, mariners who sailed the straits of Messina between Italy and Sicily had to navigate very carefully. Scylla, a barking monster, lived on the Italian side, while Charybdis, who created dangerous whirlpools, inhabited the Sicilian coast. Anyone traversing these waters faced danger on either hand, since neither of these two perils could be evaded without risking the other.

Policy-makers in Washington must feel very much in sympathy with these ancient mariners. For both monetary and fiscal policy appear to be trapped between two evils.

Today's version of the classical evils is, surprisingly, recession and inflation. If the fiscal and monetary authorities try to avoid one, they may very well bring on the other.

It was not supposed to be this way. After all, inflation was down for the count during most of last year. Indeed, during 1986's second quarter, prices at the consumer level actually fell.

But that was last year. This year's inflation story is a lot different. In the first three months of 1987 alone, prices at the consumer level shot up at a rate that would equal 6.2 percent if carried on for the rest of the year.

As long as prices of U.S.-made items rise in tandem with foreign goods, we will not only see our trade deficit remain large, we will also see more inflation. And since a large trade deficit means that the goods-producing sector will be unable to increase its sales, a wide swath of American industry will remain in the doldrums — and more downward pressure will be put on the dollar.

Enter the Federal Reserve. During the past 4½ years, by pumping in liquidity at a record rate, our central bank has managed to: (1) lower interest rates; (2) fuel an unprecedented surge in stock prices; (3) pull the U.S. economy out of the 1981-82 recession, and, when it seemed as though the expansion was stalling out because the dollar had soared, (4) depress the dollar.

But the Fed has run into a problem. The decline in the dollar has apparently gone further than the Fed intended. Chairman Paul A. Volcker is worried about a further drop in the dollar's foreign exchange value because of its implications for inflation — not to mention the willingness of foreigners to continue investing in our financial markets.

Direct intervention by the Fed and its foreign counterparts does not seem to work, so the only way that the Fed can prop up the dollar, it would seem, is to raise interest rates. Yet, higher interest rates clearly bring on the threat of recession.

On the other hand, some say the Fed ought to ease. They point to the sluggishness of many parts of the U.S. economy, high real interest rates, and debt burdens at the consumer, corporate and country levels. Yet lower interest rates could very well prompt a flight out of dollars, causing the U.S. currency to spiral downward.

Plainly, the Fed, like the ancient mariners, is between Scylla and Charybdis. It can neither ease nor tighten.

Fiscal policy is not in much better shape. It is true that the budget remains deeply in deficit and that nearly everyone wants this red ink to be reduced.

But keep in mind that this is the fifth year of economic expansion. By business cycle standards, that makes it a senior citizen, since most upswings don't even last three years without the "benefit" of war.

Too much budget-cutting could easily pull the plug on this expansion. And if a recession occurs for whatever the reason, will Washington try to cushion it by pumping up the deficit? If $200 billion deficits have caused problems for the financial markets, imagine what a $300 billion slug of red ink will do!

The Campaign Finance System Needs No Antedote For Ills

Frank Fahrenkopf

WASHINGTON — A blizzard of newspaper editorials, Common Cause appeals and legislative proposals decries the ills of our "sick system" of financing campaigns. But before devising cures, let's question the diagnosis.

The physicians of reform say that 1) campaigns are too expensive; 2) candidates and officeholders spend too much time and effort raising funds; and 3) special-interest groups have too much influence. None of these allegations stands up to rigorous analysis.

Is too much money being spent on political campaigns in the United States? Too much in comparison to what? Simply citing a gross dollar amount is much too simplistic. If you compare U.S. campaign spending with other countries' on a per-voter basis, we spend much less in the United States than in many, if not most, other Western democracies.

In America, millions more are spent on advertising pet food than are spent by all the House and Senate campaigns combined. Should we spend more money discussing dog food than discussing who will lead our nation politically into the next decade and century? Politics is the art of communication, and it is the cost of communication (television, radio, newspaper ads, direct mail, etc.) that has generated the need for increased campaign fund raising.

Is too much time and effort being spent raising funds? Many members of Congress complain bitterly about fund raising. In the past, it was possible to raise campaign funds more quickly than today, but ease of fund raising is not necessarily a virtue. The physicians of reform should review past campaign finance practices. Fund raising now consumes more time precisely because of public disclosure and tight limits.

Are special interets too powerful in the financing of our campaigns? Concerns over special-interest groups are not new. In The Federalist, James Madison repeatedly recognized the dangers of conflict between special interests, but conceded the inevitability of such strife.

But we should trust the intelligence of the American people. Time and again, from Adlai Stevenson to Walter Mondale, the voters have rejected politicians they recognized as beholden to special interests.

Our present system of funding congressional elections is public financing. The public voluntarily decides who will receive its financial support. What Sens. Robert Byrd and David Boren are now proposing is to force the taxpayers to finance their campaigns.

As former senator Eugene McCarthy said in testimony against public financing before a Senate committee: "The isolation of political leaders from influences of individuals and groups sounds like, and is, totalitarianism."

Taxpayer financing, like so many other well-intentioned government spending programs, also involves the government precisely in an arena it should venture into only with great trepidation — regulating the political debate.

Our doctors of reform also argue that all candidates would get equal funding, and that equal funding is equal treatment. But what they would really give us would be the "The Congressional Incumbent Protection Act of 1987."

Public Forum

To the editor:

I commend my colleague, Camille Kroll, for sharing her concerns about the nursing shortage in a Public Forum (Reflector 4-28). However, I believe the situation is certainly not as bleak as was pictured. Although there are economic, epidemiological, employment and social factors which currently contribute to the perceived lower supply and higher demand for nursing services, these are not constants. They come and go in cycles. What is a growing problem is the public image of nursing and its influences on recruitment of bright, competent and committed young people into the profession.

The public needs to know that nurses provide the vast majority of the direct health care in this country, and for that, nurses are paid relatively well. Starting salaries of staff nurses are $18,000-$20,000; head nurse salaries average $31,000 nationally; and many nurse executives are earning more than $100,000. In addition, there is a wide array of flexible roles for nurses in a variety of health care settings, including private practice. Nurses are responsible and respected health care providers who value professional autonomy, expert clinical skills, sound academic preparation for practice, and patient-client welfare. Above all, nurses are truly needed. We must encourage the best of our young people to enter the dynamic and challenging field of nursing.

Therese G. Lawler, R.N.

Submissions to the Public Forum should consist of no more than 300 words and should deal with public issues. The editor reserves the right to cut longer letters. Signatures and phone numbers should be included on all letters.

Love is remembering

The uniquely natural freshness is a result of an artful blend of wild marigold and jonquil. These floral notes intermingle with notes of greenery, creating a most original balance of delicate floralcy that has never before been used.

Mumtaz Mahal, the woman for whom the Taj Mahal was built. The gardens where their love grew were called the gardens of Shalimar. They were brilliantly composed of splashing fountains, exotic blooms, crossed with romantic paths and filled with rare song birds. Their love became a legend. The perfume justifies its name.

Occasionally, you come across a real find - one day, a beautiful white viole shirt; another time, Nina Ricci's L'Air du Temps. Both are pure pleasure to own and wear. You put them on and hours later they are still airy and light.

Beautiful: A totally feminine, truly extrovert fragrance from Estee Lauder

Beautiful expresses a woman's charm, her confidence about herself. A melange of many flowers, a brilliant floral bouquet laced with citrusy freshness and velvety woods-and-spices. Let it begin some beautiful moments for you.

Pitt Students Involved In Heritage Week Activities

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Students in the Pitt County schools celebrated American history and culture with activities during the state observance of Heritage Week, which ended Friday.

North Carolina artisans shared their skills with the student body at Elmhurst School each day during lunch. The stations set up for the students to visit included quilters, potters, folk singers, basket weavers and woodworkers.

Local family recipes were featured in a Tarheel Tasting Party hosted by the fourth-grade students at Pactolus Elementary School. Students from each class participated in a Tarheel Trivia research activity in the media center.

Special programs at Pactolus included entertainment by Henry Queen, visiting artist at Pitt Community College. A singer, guitarist and banjo player, Queen performed a variety of folk music.

Owen Kingsbury demonstrated the art of glassblowing, and Gloria Potter displayed gems and jewelry in the media center and discussed the various stones with each class.

The fourth-grade students at Stokes Elementary School made a filmstrip on North Carolina. All the students viewed demonstrations on basket weaving, sausage making, quilting and other arts and crafts. Stories were told by Julie Hicks and Bernard Haselrig.

Other activities at Stokes included a Maypole wrapping and the singing of North Carolina songs. The students also participated in a "chalk-in" in which they drew pictures pertaining to the state on the cement walkways in front of the school. A quiz bowl on North Carolina topics also was held.

The theme at G.R. Whitfield School was "History of Our Forefathers." Each grade level studied certain aspects of the theme. Activities included making puppets, creative writing, skits and plays, speakers, arts and crafts and food. Field trips were a part of the celebration, as well as a history display in the media center. Dogwoods were planted.

The Junior Tar Heel Historian Club at A.G. Cox School gave facts about the school and its history, including facts on the life of A.G. Cox, for whom the school is named, on the school's intercom each day.

Craft demonstrations conducted by staff and community volunteers were a feature of the week at Belvoir Elementary School. Exhibits included spinning, furniture refinishing and caning and basket weaving. A display on curing tobacco and a seafood exhibit sponsored by Evans Seafood were set up. Soap was made and the students used a washboard.

Each student participated in a "country store" tasting activity featuring homemade relishes, jams, jellies and bread. Henry Queen performed bluegrass and mountain music and Molly Small and the Celestials sang gospel and spiritual music.

Several classes at Eastern Elementary School visited former Gov. Charles B. Aycock's birthplace and museum in Fremont. North Carolina songs were presented at an assembly program.

A Heritage Week Scrapbook including historical contributions from the staff and students is being compiled at Grifton Elementary School. Demonstrations at the school included taxidermy, hunting and fishing, basket weaving, knitting, hammock making and net making. Jean Williams spoke on Grifton's history and the students toured the Grifton museum.

Ayden Elementary School celebrated the week with special bulletin board displays, guest speakers and a antique and photograph exhibit in the media center. The week ended with the students dressing as their ancestors; the costumes were judged.

At Falkland Elementary School, a trivia contest was sponsored by the fifth grade and the fourth-grade students made schoolwide announcements about the founding fathers of North Carolina. At a Parent-Teacher Association meeting, the school chorus performed North state songs. The week culminated in School Spirit Day.

Students and teachers at Third Street School dressed in costumes representing the early days of North Carolina. Each grade presented a skit depicting an aspect of state heritage at an outdoor assembly program.

Craftsmen, storytellers and a tobacco auctioner demonstrated their skills at H.B. Sugg School. Farm implements were displayed. Henry Queen sang and the students participated in special projects.

Craftsmen were featured at Sam Bundy School for the history celebration. The exhibits featured basketweaving, wood carving, tin punching, stained glass, bread making and soap making. Also on hand were the Edgecombe County Beekeepers, the Bell Arthur Quilting Party, storyteller Jane Maier and an exhibit of antique cars.

A chorus program featuring North Carolina songs was held at Bundy and the students drew chalk paintings on the sidewalk in front of the school,

The second-grade classes participated in heritage activities at W.H. Robinson School and painted historical murals.

Students at South Greenville School viewed two films: "Roanoke, Genesis of the Nationhood" and Charles Kuralt's "North Carolina is My Home." Henry Queen entertained with mountain music and an antique show was given by Carol Gardner.

The students at South Greenville made and shared individual projects on North Carolina and handicrafts were made in art classes.

First Temporary Host Named

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — Chuck Millhuff, an ordained elder of the Church of Nazarene, will be the first of several temporary hosts of the "PTL Club" television show, a spokesman for the Rev. Jerry Falwell said Saturday.

Millhuff, 49, of Olathe, Kan., will host the show for one week beginning Monday and is a candidate for the full-time position, said Mark DeMoss, administrative assistant to Falwell.

Evangelist Jim Bakker had served as host of the show before turning control of the PTL mission over to Falwell in March after admitting to a 1980 sexual tryst with a secretary.

The Rev. Richard Dortch stepped in for Bakker on the show before resigning Tuesday. Falwell filled in on the program for the remainder of the week.

Millhuff was the first person Falwell had in mind to host the program, DeMoss said. Millhuff agreed Saturday afternoon to do the show, DeMoss said.

"We were waiting for him to give his firm committment before announcing it," DeMoss said. "We were in the position of having to do something quickly."

Millhuff had a weekly television show for three years titled, "Promise." He has conducted more than 1,000 revival meetings and crusades over the past 20 years.

Correction

An earlier ECU News Bureau release erroneously reported the results of the recent elections of the East Carolina University Faculty Senate.

Jo Ann Jones was re-elected vice chairman by a Faculty Senate vote of 35-15 over Dr. Robert Schellenberger of the Decision Sciences faculty.

Ms. Jones did not hold the position of secretary of the faculty in 1986-1987, as was reported in the release. Madge Chamness of the medical technology faculty, who was an unsuccessful nominee for chairman of the faculty in the recent elections, served as secretary.

Dr. James Joyce of the physics deparment was elected secretary for 1987-88 and will succeed Mrs. Chamness when the new academic year begins in August.

Pories To Speak At Convocation

Dr. Walter Pories, professor and chairman of the department of surgery at the East Carolina University School of Medicine, will deliver the school's convocation address Friday in Wright Auditorium at ECU.

The ceremony begins at 1:30 p.m. and will be followed by a reception honoring the graduates and their families in the Brody Medical Sciences Building.

This year's ceremony will honor the school's seventh four-year class. The 67-member class will also be recognized Saturday at 10 a.m. during general commencement exercises at Ficklen Stadium.

Other convocation speakers include Dr. Richard Eakin, chancellor of ECU; C. Ralph Kinsey, chairman of the ECU Board of Trustees, and Dr. William E. Laupus, ECU vice chancellor and dean of the School of Medicine.

Pories, selected as this year's speaker by the class of 1987, has served in his current position with the School of Medicine since 1977. He is also chief of surgery at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

A native of Munich, Germany, Pories earned his undergraduate degree in 1952 from Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., and in 1955 graduated with honors from the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry in Rochester, N.Y.

He served in the U.S. Army and is a colonel in the U.S. Army Reserve.

He has served as a faculty member at the University of Rochester and as director of the department of surgery at Case Western Reserve University and chief of surgery at the Cleveland Metropolitan General Hospital.

He founded the Cleveland Cancer Center, the Cleveland Burn Center and the Hospice and the Rochester Cancer Center.

Pories and his wife, Dr. Mary Ann Rose, have five daughters and a son.

Jones' Bill Ratified

A bill calling for "truth in labeling" for political action committees introduced by Rep. Walter Jones Jr., D-Pitt, has been ratified by the N.C. General Assembly and will become law effective July 1.

The measure requires that political action committees clearly identify their economic interests in both their names and in any political advertising they sponsor. Previously, the law required only that media ads bear the name of the sponsor.

Jones said he was pleased with the support of his colleagues for the action which requires PACs to clearly identify their economic interests in their names and in any political advertising the support.

"This bill will strengthen the democratic process and will enable both the candidates and the public to know where their support really comes from," Jones said.

"Accurate naming of PACs will make the background and interests of these organizations readily available and clearly visible to persons interested in campaign financing."

The legislation will hopefully be seen by the public as an effort to promote integrity in political campaigns, according to Jones.

"This legislation is another positive step in promoting openness and integrity in political campaigns," he said. "We want and need public confidence and public respect for campaigns and elections.

"Campaign contributions need to be easily identified so that both the candidate and the public can know the interests represented by the contributors. I believe North Carolina citizens deserve this accountability in state government."

Health Programs Honored

Two hospital nurses and 39 health agencies were recognized recently at a special recognition program given by the East Carolina University School of Nursing.

The Agency Appreciation Luncheon, held at the Greenville Country Club, recognized Mabel Baker and Jo Twilley, two nurses at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. They were cited for their service to the nursing profession and for the help they have given the ECU School of Nursing.

Ms. Baker, a native of Elm City, is the program coordinator of the psychiatric unit and has been with PCMH since 1951. In addition to her nursing positions, she serves as a role model and preceptor for students from area nursing school programs.

Ms. Twilley, a native of Salisbury, Md., and director of the patient representative program, joined the hospital in 1965. She has worked in a number of roles at the hospital including staff nurse, head nurse, supervisor, and critical care unit administrator. In 1985 she earned the annual service award given by Pitt Memorial Hospital Foundation for dedication and service to the hospital.

In presenting recognition plaques to the nurses, Dr. Angelo Volpe, vice chancellor for academic affairs, praised both women for the help they have given to ECU nursing students.

Recognition was also given at the luncheon to 39 health agencies in eastern North Carolina for their assistance to the nursing program at ECU.

Pitt County agencies and organizations honored were Creative Living Center, Developmental Evaluation Clinic, Eastern Area Health Education Center, Epilepsy Association, Greenville Dialysis Center, Greenville Villa, Hospice, Pitt Community College, Pitt County Memorial Hospital, Walter B. Jones Alcohol Rehabilitation Center, University Nursing Center, Pitt County Schools, ECU School of Medicine, ECU Student Health Service, Eastern Carolina Home Health, Pitt County Health Department and Pitt County Mental Health Center.

Agencies in Washington, N.C., honored were Beaufort County Health Department and Tideland Mental Health Center.

"The university is grateful for the cooperative and collaborative efforts of these agencies in the education of our nursing students," ECU Chancellor Richard R. Eakin told the 175 agency representatives attending the luncheon.

In addition to recognizing the nurses and the health agencies, featured remarks were given by Al Guthrie, deputy director of the Eastern Area Health Education Center.

Two ECU students also made presentations about their research proposals. Cynthia Bradberry, an undergraduate student from Raleigh, discussed her proposal "Sharing Your Sorrow: A Program for Helping Grieving Parents." Marcia Bryant, a graduate student from Saratoga and a nursing administrator at Pitt Memorial, presented her proposal "Sleep Deprivation in the Critical Care Patient."

AIDS Will Strain Health-Care System, Experts Say

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — Some 12,000 people in North Carolina may have AIDS by 1992, straining a health-care system not equipped to handle the many needs of AIDS patients, state health officials say.

"AIDS is a complex social problem as well as a medical problem," said Dr. Rebecca Meriwether, head of North Carolina's Communicable Disease Control Branch.

She told the North Carolina Medical Society that as many as 10,000 North Carolinians have been infected with the AIDS virus, although only 205 AIDS cases have been confirmed in the state through April 13.

Her projection is based on national estimates that 50 people are infected with AIDS virus for each person with a "full-blown" case of AIDS, Ms. Meriwether said.

Since the disease has a long latency period, estimated now to be five years or longer, the full 10,000 cases could be projected to appear after 1992.

She explained that the estimated cost per patient from diagnosis to death is between $50,000 and $150,000, and each year, each case costs between $20,000 and $60,0000.

"In general, AIDS will represent 3 percent of all hospital expenditures (nationwide) by 1991," Meriwether said.

North Carolina ranks 10th among the states in population, but is 21st in reported AIDS cases among states and territories, according to a state AIDS update. That makes the state a low-risk area for the disease. However, at least one case has been reported in 58 of the state's 100 counties.

In North Carolina, over a 20-month period, 36 AIDS patients cost the state over $1.3 million in Medicaid costs, with an average of $78,000 per patient, according to Meriwether.

Daniel G. Moreschi, who also spoke about AIDS during the medical group's two-day meeting, agreed the disease is a complex problem.

Moreschi, director of development for the Houston-based Institute for Immunological Disorders, said managing AIDS requires a new approach.

"We need a laboratory or a mechanism that rethinks all of our traditional ways of viewing illness and wellness, and where we're at," Moreschi explained. "That's going to take a tremendous collaborative effort of all medical and health-care professionals."

Founded in 1986, the Institute for Immunological Disorders is the nation's first hospital entirely devoted to diagnosis, research and treatment of AIDS. All its medical staff are cross-trained in many disciplines to maximize use of staff.

The institute now treats 700 patients on an in-patient and outpatient basis.

"It's kind of like the generalist is coming back," Moreschi said. "We need to forget our individual past traditions and history and focus on conquering this virus before the virus conquers us."

AIDS — acquired immune deficiency syndrome — is a condition in which a virus kills the body's immune system and thus is always fatal. It is transmitted primarily through sexual contact with someone infected with the virus and through the sharing of contaminated needles by drug users.

Ms. Meriwether proposed tearing down barriers that prevent effective treatment of AIDS patients.

She said "sub-acute care" — a level of care between hospitals and nursing homes — or special reimbursements for nursing homes may be a way to address the high costs of nursing-home care for AIDS patients.

Whenever possible, she added, care for AIDS patients must be community-based so patients can receive care as outpatients, making use of family and other local support systems.

"It's very draining, very tiring to provide care for (AIDS patients), and all these people need support themselves in order to keep going and keep providing the best care," Ms. Meriwether explained.

Health insurance remains a barrier to effective care of AIDS patients, Meriwether said. She noted that insurance companies are looking for ways to cut their losses, that AIDS patients often lose their group insurance coverage when they become unable to work, and, often, personal coverage is prohibitively expensive.

But, she said, the biggest barrier is fear: health-care workers' fear of getting infected and fear among clients and their families.

Meriwether and Moreschi agreed that early and continuing education and a united effort are key to effectively combatting AIDS.

Boater Missing

HAMILTON, N.C. (AP)— Rescue crews searched the Roanoke River Saturday for a Williamston man missing after his boat sank Saturday morning, Martin County Sheriff Willie Rogers said.

"He and a companion were on a boat in the Roanoke River and the boat sank," Rogers said. "They put out an anchor after the the motor malfunctioned and for some reason ... it just pulled it on under the water. His companion swam to shore."

He identified the man missing as Joseph Dennis Hardison, 57, of Williamston.

Ellis Keel, the missing man's next-door neighbor, alerted authorities, Rogers said.

"We've got about three boats out there dragging now in an attempt to locate him," Rogers said. "The river's high and there's a strong current."

The accident occurred near the Hamilton boat landing near the town of Hamilton, he said.

A Smaller Dam

GREENSBORO (AP) — A smaller dam project on the the Deep River could be built in place of the Randleman Dam project which federal officials scuttled this week, according to Piedmont officials.

Talton Harrison, secretary of the Piedmont Triad Water Authority, said that group will meet in Greensboro next week to discuss that possibility.

Federal officials said that $2 million in start-up costs for the dam would not be granted because the cost of the $144.9 million project would greatly exceed its benefits.

Greensboro, High Point, Jamestown, Archdale, Randleman and Randolph County — the members of the water authority — would use water from the reservoir.

Lindsay W. Cox, executive director of the Piedmont Council of Governments, said the smaller reservoir would cost about $61 million.

Building the reservoir about five miles upstream from the site originally proposed could save money, he said. For example, a pipeline that would carry High Point's treated sewage around the reservoir could be five miles shorter if the upstream site was used, Cox said.

Traffic Fatalities

By The Associated Press

Two people have died on North Carolina roads this weekend, including a 28-year-old Dobson man who was killed when his car ran off the right side of N.C. 89, about 3 miles east of Mount Airy, the state Highway Patrol said Saturday.

Troopers said David Michael Sawyers' car struck a utility pole, a tree and an embankment. The accident occurred Friday night in Surry County.

Barry Eugene Crisp, 18, of Horseshoe, was killed Friday night in an accident about 4 miles west of Hendersonville. Troopers said he was exceeding a safe speed when his car crossed the center line and struck another vehicle head-on.

The deaths push the year's death toll on North Carolina roads to 423, compared to 500 on this date last year.

PTL Resignation

DALLAS (AP) — A former PTL board member said Friday night he resigned his seat on the board earlier this year because he was troubled by rumors of misconduct by PTL founder Jim Bakker.

The Rev. J. Don George, who lives in the Dallas suburb of Irving, is considered by many observers to be the front-runner to become permanent host of the PTL Club.

George, minister of Calvary Temple, repeated his earlier denial that he had been offered the job, but said he is willing to serve as an interim host.

"I became troubled in my own spirit concerning some of the rumors that had begun to circulate as early as last fall," George told KERA-TV, Dallas' public television station.

"I was not able to schedule a conference with Jim Bakker, so I went to the executive vice president, Richard Dortch. He assured me there was no truth to the stories I was hearing. Nevertheless, I could not get rest in my spirit because of those things and other aspects of the PTL ministries, so I distanced myself from the ministry by resigning from the board in February," George said.

Thirty days after George resigned, Bakker resigned from PTL in March after it was revealed that Bakker had been involved in a sexual encounter with a church secretary in Florida.

Asked whether Bakker could ever resume PTL leadership, George said, "It would be a tragic mistake for Jim to attempt a return to PTL anytime in the forseeable future."

He said he plans to tell Bakker that directly.

Jim and Tammy Bakker have been in seclusion in Palm Springs, Calif., but he told reporters Friday that he and his wife won't fight to regain leadership of the $129 million PTL empire and that "without a miracle of God, we will never minister again."

Researcher Notes Male Impotence, Smoking Parallel

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — Preliminary evidence suggests that smoking may contribute to the development of impotence in men, perhaps by disrupting blood flow in small arteries, a researcher says.

An examination of some 200 impotent men found they were more likely than others to be smokers and to have evidence of impaired blood flow to the penis, a possible cause of impotence, said Dr. Alvaro Morales, chairman of the urology department at Queen's University in Kingston, Ontario.

"It is by no means conclusive evidence," Morales said Friday at the annual meeting of the American Association of Sex Educators, Counselors and Therapists. "But I think the evidence is there."

Eighty-one percent of the impotent men were current or former smokers, compared with 58 percent of men selected from the general population, Morales found.

Smoking has been thought a possible cause of impotence since the turn of the century, Morales said. But evidence of the relationship has been lacking until the last few years, when several researchers have found in a handful of patients that stopping smoking can lead to return of sexual function, he said.

At least half of all cases of impotence are thought to be due to some physical problem rather than to a psychological difficulty, Morales said. And about half of the cases with physical causes are believed to be the result of a problem in the blood vessels that supply the penis, he said. These are the cases that could be aggravated by smoking.

A telephone call was made Saturday to The Tobacco Institute, a tobacco industry group, seeking its view of the study, but the call was not immediately returned.

Morales emphasized that a much larger group of patients would be needed to confirm these findings. He also noted that the study did not consider whether the link between smoking and impotence might reflect the fact that smokers were also more likely to be coffee drinkers, for example, or more likely to be under unusual stress.

The 1979 U.S. Surgeon General's report on smoking and health identified smoking as one of the most important causes of so-called peripheral vascular disease, or damage to small arteries, said Morales. It is reasonable to assume, therefore, that smoking could disrupt blood flow in the small arteries that supply the penis, he said.

To determine if that was the case, he and his colleagues measured blood pressure in the penis and found that one in five smokers had abnormal penile blood pressure.

In contrast, only one in 12 nonsmokers had abnormal penile blood pressure, Morales found.

"The blood supply seems to be impaired in the smokers," he said.

He also found that about 15 percent of his group of 200 impotent men were heavy smokers, consuming more than 25 cigarettes per day. That is roughly twice the percentage of heavy smokers found in the general Canadian population, he said.

CONTACT LENSES
-Price vs. Quality?-
With so many brands of contacts available, it can be tempting to choose a pair with the lowest price. The fact is, however, that quality lenses may cost more but are a better value in terms of VISION (superior optical quality), COMFORT (due to precision manufacturing), and DURABILITY (better materials result in longer lens life).
At Carolina Eye Center we offer no sales or gimmicks to entice you to come see us. We only offer quality contact lenses, professional eye exams/contact lens fittings, and extensive follow-up exams for all of our contact lens patients. We want you to be a happy contact lens wearer but more importantly, we want you to have healthy vision with contact lenses.

Utilities' Demand-Side Management Is Studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — Duke Power Co. and Carolina Power & Light Co. are among the nation's utility company leaders in using demand management to reduce peak demand, a new survey reports.

The study also found that more than a quarter of the electric utilities in the survey want to increase power sales, and some are offering discounted rates to do it, even though most say they are trying to conserve electricity.

Results released Saturday from the survey conducted by the Investor Responsibility Research Center said "some utilities' demand-side management activities may be aimed primarily at improving customer relations or fulfilling public service commission orders."

"Demand-side" management includes programs to conserve electricity overall and to shift it from peak periods to off-peak hours. Eighty percent of the sample reported operating either conservation programs or both conservation and load-shifting programs.

The center, which advises institutional investors such as pension funds and college endowments on social questions, sought information on conservation and other programs from electric utilities. Eighty-eight private companies and 35 municipal or other publicly owned utilities responded. Together the 123 companies cover about 70 percent of the nation's generating capacity.

Demand management is expected to reduce growth in peak demand among the respondents by 20,000 megawatts, the equivalent of 20 large nuclear plants, by 1995, but Duke Power, CP&L and three other utilities in the south — the Tennessee Valley Authority, Texas Utilities and Florida Power Co. — account for more than half of this.

These companies are buying the equivalent generating capacity "at far less cost than is now associated with construction of conventional central station power plants," the center said.

"If the rest of the industry were to follow the example of these leaders, the pipeline for utility power plants, now slowing to a trickle, could remain practically dry for the rest of the century," the center said.

Though utilities have in aggregate about a 35 percent reserve in generating capacity, twice what they would like, and are ordering practically no large new plants, sometime in the next decade they could be forced "to choose whether to launch a major new round of construction or deepen (their) commitment to demand-side management and third-party power purchases."

Officials Claim Former PTL Chiefs Stonewalled Ministry's New Board

By WILLIAM STRACENER
Associated Press Writer

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Former PTL President Richard Dortch and other top executives stonewalled the troubled cable television ministry's new board for three weeks, PTL officials said.

"For a period of about three weeks the board could get no basic information and that came from the very top office," said Atlanta businessman Jerry Nims, chairman of the board's executive committee.

Nims and other new PTL executives met with reporters to discuss the progress made since the new board took over the $172 million religious empire after the Rev. Jim Bakker resigned as PTL chairman and turned his ministry over to the Rev. Jerry Falwell on March 19.

Dortch succeeded Bakker as president of PTL, but the board forced Dortch to resign Tuesday.

Falwell said Tuesday that Bakker and his wife, Tammy Faye, have been banished from the pulpit of the ministry they founded.

"Now we have an open flow of information; we're pleased with the cooperation we're getting and all the information is being made available to us," Nims said.

That information also is being protected, officials said.

At the request of the accounting firm, Arthur Andersen & Co., new PTL chief operating officer Harry Hargrave put security guards outside the executive offices for three days this week and ordered them to ensure no files were being taken or added.

"We didn't know what we were walking into," he said. "We did that ... to make sure the integrity of the files was protected," Hargrave said.

"We brought the security with us. This is the last day," he said.

In other developments, PTL officials announced:

—Falwell accepted the resignation of board member James Watt "with regret," and Nims said the choice of a replacement will be left for the board next month. Watt and Dortch had been the only Charismatics on the board made up mainly of fundamentalists.

—The PTL Club television program will have guest hosts for the next few weeks as candidates are auditioned. No permanent host has been selected, but the choice will have to be "somebody with the heartbeat of the Christian ministry and world missions," Falwell spokesman Mark DeMoss said.

—Attendance at Heritage USA, based on car counts at the main gate, was up 29 percent last month compared to a year ago and 22 percent for the year to date. Bookings at the Heritage Grand Hotel are in the "80 percent or better range through December." No baseline figures were provided.

—PTL will continue to market the Bakkers' books, records, tapes and toys. "If we can turn the inventory over, we will sell it because what they offer is good merchandise," Nims said.

—Bakker's father, Raleigh, has been told he can remain in his home on the Heritage USA grounds, but officials are investigating whether the home is owned by PTL.

—New board members have been dropped from a $601 million class-action lawsuit brought by three members of an Ohio family who alleged their contributions to PTL were used for illegal, illicit and immoral purposes.

—Jim Bakker's claim that he is owed $8 million in royalties will be resolved by the audit. "We will just get (the auditing firm) and do it by the numbers. Whatever contracts are there, we will honor," Nims said.

Hargrave, who has described PTL's financial books as "a mess," told reporters the information the board is seeking is available, but "it's just taking time to trail the paperwork."

"It's difficult to understand how to operate a ministry under the current bookkeeping and management system they had," he said.

"There are a lot of strings that need to be tied and pages that need to be closed before we can come to some conclusions."

Nims said the PTL finances are a classic example of explosive entrepreneurial growth. The growth of PTL outpaced the organization's ability to keep adequate records.

Soldier Killed

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — One soldier was killed and five others were injured Friday when a crane struck a power line at the post, a Fort Bragg spokeswoman said.

The soldier killed was identified as Pfc. Ronald Wee, 22, of Minot, N.D., said Carol Jones at Fort Bragg.

The crane was moving a storage container when it struck the power line, she said.

Paper Reports Split Up Likely If Burlington Industries Sold

GREENSBORO (AP) — New York investor Asher Edelman and Dominion Textile Inc. of Montreal have increased their holdings in Burlington Industries to 9.4 percent of the textile giant's stock, the Greensboro News & Record reported Saturday.

Edelman and his partners said it "is likely that assets or businesses will be sold" if they get control of Burlington. Edelman has done that with some other companies he has taken over.

He told The Charlotte Observer he would sell Burlington Industries' employee golf course and club and the New York City apartments for visiting executives if his proposed takeover of the company is successful.

"There's a degree of corporate excess" at Burlington, Edelman told The Observer in a telephone interview from his New York office.

In filings Friday with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the investors said they purchased another 236,300 shares of the company between April 24 and Thursday, giving them about 2.6 million of the company's 27.3 million shares outstanding.

The SEC, which requires periodic public disclosure when investors buy certain amounts of stock in a company, also asks the investors to state their intentions in buying the stock.

In the SEC filing, Edelman said any decision on what to sell wouldn't be made until after he acquired control of Burlington.

Burlington officials bristled at the suggestion that the company's fleet of airplanes, golf course and the New York apartments are symbols of crporate opulence.

"We don't feel we have anything to hide," said Burlington spokesman Bryant Haskins. He declined to say how many aircraft are kept at the company's hangar at the Greensboro-High Point-Winston-Salem Regional Airport, but a former company official said Burlington has two small seven-passenger planes and two 12-passenger planes.

"It's a small aviation departmet," Haskins said. "It's used to serve our plants in the Southeast, many of which are located in rural areas not accessible by commercial airlines."

He said the Bur-Mil Country Club includes a pitch-and-putt golf course, clubhouse, swimming pool, tennis courts, walking paths and picnic tables.

"It's a very plain-Jane, homey type of place," said Burlington spokesman Dick Windham. "It's used mainly by floor people (factory workers) in the mills and secretaries," who gather for Wednesday "chicken nights" and Sunday brunches.

The additional shares were purchased at prices between $55.50 and $58.37 a share, under the $60 Edelman has offered to Burlington to acquire the company. Burlington has not accepted his offer but has sued, contending that the takeover is based on illegally obtained confidential information about the company's finances.

Burlington's stock closed Friday on the New York Stock Exchange at 58¾, up $1½ from Thursday, in heavy trading. Some 1,258,900 shares were traded.

The new SEC filing came as the General Assembly enacted a new law to help Burlington fight the takeover bid, and lawyers for both sides prepared for a first court hearing in Greensboro Monday.

Burlington praised passage of the state law Friday.

"Our state's legislators have acted decisively, and almost unanimously, to help protect the rights of shareholders and workers in North Carolina and to preserve the state's economy," the company said in a statement. But spokesman Bryant Haskins wouldn't speculate on what impact the law might have on Edelman's takeover bid.

The new law seemingly would make it difficult for any investor to launch a hostile takeover of a company unless he could get support from holders of 95 percent of the company's shares.

The law was enacted in less than a week, winning House approval Friday by a vote of 97-1. The Senate endorsed the bill earlier in the week by a 44-4 vote.

"If we can help save Burlington, (this) very well could be the piece of legislation that did the most to directly impact ... jobs of anything this session," said Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who spearheaded passage of the law.

Legislators from Burlington's home county of Guilford voted unanimously for the bill — a switch from two days earlier when Republican Rep. Michael Decker opposed it.

Decker said he changed his mind after a flood of calls from Burlington workers in his district, talks from Republican legislative leaders and Gov. Jim Martin's lobbyist. He said his concerns for what the bill's future impact might be were outweighed by seek ing to help Burlington. Rep. Larry Etheridge, R-Wilson, was the only House member to oppose the bill Friday.

Family Has Nine ATSU Graduates

By DONALD W. PATTERSON

GREENSBORO (AP) — After Valerie, there'll be no more.

It all started in 1966 when Mildred Moore enrolled at N.C. A&T State University. Then came Beverly Moore. Then Herbert Moore Jr. Then Edith Moore, Edward Moore, Dexter Moore, Gloria Moore and Cheryl Moore. In that order.

And now, finally, Valerie Moore.

"After my oldest sister went to A&T, it became a tradition," says Valerie Moore, a 22-year-old economics major from Blounts Creek in Beaufort County.

Sunday, that tradition ends.

When Valerie Moore gets her diploma, she'll become the last of Joyce and Herbert Moore's nine children to graduate from A&T.

"I'm so happy, I don't know what to think," Joyce Moore said as she prepared for her daughter's graduation. "It seems like it's been a forever task."

And with good reason.

For the past 21 years, the Moores have had at least one child at A&T — and sometimes two.

"Once I got it started there was always one of us there," says Mildred Moore Hill, the Moores' first A&T graduate. "It was a good support system."

The more the merrier, you might say.

Joyce Moore says she and her husband never intended to keep A&T in business single-handedly.

"It just sort of happened that way," she says, "but we definitely knew we wanted them educated."

Mildred Moore Hill got the idea to attend A&T from two of her cousins who were Aggies during the days of the Greensboro lunch counter sit-ins.

"We looked to them as an example," Mildred Moore Hill says. "If they could make it so could we."

Once the tradition started, the Moore children gave little thought to going anywhere else.

"As a matter of fact, that was the only school I applied to," Valerie Moore says. "I had a reputation to live up to."

Part of the Moore reputation is for academic achievement. And like her brothers and sisters, Valerie Moore excels in her studies. She'll graduate as an honor student with a 3.55 average.

Although Joyce and Herbert Moore didn't get the chance to attend college themselves, they worked hard to provide their children with that opportunity.

The Moores started out on a family farm in Beaufort County. Seventeen years ago, they moved to Blounts Creek. She went to work in a nursing home; he for a wood products company.

"I told them that by the time they got grown there wouldn't be any ditches to dig because they'd be using machines," Joyce Moore recalls, "so they better get it together."

Joyce Moore says she has no idea what it cost to educate her children. A&T tuition in 1966 was $300 a year. Now it's $966 a year.

"We didn't make a lot of money, but we had the faith that we could finish it," Joyce Moore says. "We give God the credit."

Financial aid helped, too.

Most of the Moores qualified for scholarships or loans. When that wasn't enough, they worked everywhere from the campus laundry to the library.

And when that wasn't enough there were older brothers and sisters to turn to.

"When one does well they reach back and help the other," Valerie Moore says. "That's one of the advantages of having a big family."

Most of the Moore brothers and sister plan to attend Valerie Moore's graduation. They'll be coming from all over the country.

Says Mildred Moore Hill, "It's a historic milestone for our family."

Senator Wants N.C. Surrogate Legality Studied

By JODY TAYLOR
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina needs to decide the legality of surrogate contracts before the state is faced with a Baby M case that will put the decision in the hands of a judge, a state senator says.

Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, said North Carolina law contains a gray area on the issue of surrogate mothers, and such an emotional issue should not be put first in the hands of the courts.

"That's what we have seen with Baby M and the courts do not like to have to make laws," said Hardison, who is sponsoring a bill to create a study commission on the issue. "And what they have done in the Baby M case, they have actually in reality made a law.

"I think the people of North Carolina would be smart to go ahead and conduct a study of people with some expertise in the field," he said. "They can come with some recommendations to the General Assembly that will give us some recommendations as to what kind of statute we should pass, and be guided by rather than waiting."

The bill would establish the North Carolina Study Commission on Surrogate Parenthood, consisting of nine members, including two legislators, a clergymen, a psychiatrists, a social service personnel, a doctor, a lawyer, and a child advocacy worker. The chairman of the committee would come from the educational sector.

Hardison wants the commission to look at everything from the rights of the potential parents to the legality of the surrogate contract, and to the pyschological evidence of mother-child bonding.

The commission also would look at potential North Carolina legislation to sanction or bar surrogate births and contracts. It would hold public hearings to gauge public opinion.

"I don't care too much about too many study commissions," Hardison said. "But it seems to be that this is a prime example of when we really truly feel we need a study commission.

"It's amazing how much you hear them (constituents) talking about it," Hardison said. "You find opinions here and opinions there. Let them talk with the people, and let them do it openly and boldly. Then the mothers and fathers would be governed by it."

The committee would issue its final report before the first day of the 1988 General Assembly. The bill calls for a $25,000 appropriation from the General Fund to fund the commission.

"I think the mothers and potential mothers in this state ought to know what they're dealing with before they enter into these kinds of agreements," Hardison said. "That was an ordeal for both sides to go through.

"I think the people of North Carolina would welcome something like this," Hardison said.

Young Transplant Recipient Eulogized At Funeral

By A.J. DICKERSON
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Ronnie DeSillers, the 7-year-old whose struggle through three liver transplants attracted the attention of President Reagan and the nation, was eulogized Saturday as the bearer of "a special message."

Ronnie's white, gold-trimmed coffin draped in an American flag was carried to his funeral service at St. Raymond Roman Catholic Church by a six-man Miami police honor guard.

Later, an honor guard fired a 21-gun salute over Ronnie's grave as he was buried at Woodlawn Park Cemetery. Colored balloons floated overhead and hundreds of mourners filed past and placed flowers on his coffin.

More than 350 people jammed the small church and others waited outside as Rev. Timothy Hannon gave the eulogy for the boy, who died Wednesday at Pittsburgh's Children's Hospital while waiting for a fourth liver.

"All of us have been inspired by this young man," said Hannon. "In seven years Ronnie has given us a special message; pay attention to the thoughts of children."

The ceremony was climaxed by the singing of "Ronnie's Song," commissioned by Miami Beach millionaire industrialist Victor Posner, who attended the funeral. He said he would set up a national foundation in Ronnie's name to encourage organ donations.

The song ended with the words "Help someone to live!"

Ronnie, born with defective liver ducts, first attracted national attention in February after about $4,000 collected by his schoolmates to help pay for the urgently needed transplant was stolen from St. Anthony's Roman Catholic School in Fort Lauderdale. Donations began to pour in.

Sailors from the aircraft carrier USS John F. Kennedy, stationed in the Mediterranean, and quickly raised more than $32,000.

"One sailor I talked to said 'Sailors can't stand to see a kid get ripped off,'" said Lt. Dave Knox, a spokesman for the 5,000 crew members.

A benefit concert was held at a Miami Beach nightclub, and more than 1,300 people paid $10 each to attend. Posner donated $200,000 and later supplied the plane that flew Ronnie to Pittsburgh.

Ms. DeSillers, 31, a publicity consultant, lost her medical insurance 4½ years ago when she was unable to make payments because of an extended absence from work to be with her only child during one of his many hospital stays.

Ronnie was credited with raising $30,000 through interviews broadcast on WHYI-FM in Hollywood before his first transplant.

"Just hearing his voice, this cute, intelligent little boy talking about his disease, did it," said disc jockey Sonny Fox. "Once he asked his mother, 'You're not crying because I'm going to die, are you Mommy?'"

Ronnie underwent his first transplant Feb. 24. Then a viral infection damaged his new liver and spread to his lungs.

A second transplant was performed April 3, but Ronnie never recovered enough to leave intensive care. Pneumonia and inflammation of the pancreas required a third liver transplant.

Ronnie underwent surgery again April 23 just three hours after being placed on a waiting list. He emerged looking healthier than ever, but the organ never functioned properly.

When Ronnie's case attracted national attention even before his first transplant, some parents of other children in need raised questions about the publicity.

"It makes me sick, not for Ronnie. It makes me sick for all those many other children who don't have access to the president," said Deborah Downey of Crafton, Pa., whose 19-month-old daughter Bridget died last Christmas, a day after transplant surgery at Children's Hospital.

Snipers Believed Dead After Fire Levels Cabin

By STEVE MOORE
Associated Press Writer

WOLF CREEK, Mont. (AP) — Searchers hunting three heavily armed snipers were shot at from a mountain cabin that caught fire Saturday, but the occupants died as the blaze consumed the building, authorities said.

Lewis and Clark County officials and FBI agents could not confirm how many people died in the blaze or whether they died from gunshots or fire.

"We're reasonably sure at least one of the individuals we were looking for was inside," said Toby Harding, the FBI agent in charge of Montana and Idaho.

FBI agents and a Cascade County dog handler approaching the cabin were fired on by automatic weapons, but did not shoot back and did not fire tear gas into the cabin, said Lewis and Clark County Sheriff Chuck O'Reilly.

"The fire started from within," O'Reilly said. The cabin was engulfed and was still hot to enter by late afternoon. "We can't even get to it for a body count," he said.

A German shepherd dog believed to be with the snipers jumped out a window and was the only survivor. "We know there were people in there," O'Reilly said. "Nobody came out except the dog I saw come out initially."

In Butte, FBI agent Toby Harding said the searchers were making another sweep of cabins near Holter Lake, a popular recreation area, when they were fired on.

Officers surrounded the cabin and made phone contact with the occupants, and Harding said that conversation, along with the dog, led authorities to believe the occupants were the fugitives.

O'Reilly said the cabin was near the campground where deputies fought a four-hour gunbattle with the snipers Monday, and about one mile southeast of the Holter Lake Lodge, were police established a command post.

The sheriff said he was confident the three were in the area as he prepared Saturday for the fifth day of the search, one of the most intense manhunts in Montana history.

O'Reilly said the fugitives' tracks showed them hiding in heavy timber and not trying to make time or distance. Searchers found cigarette butts but no evidence the fugitives have eaten.

He had hoped that hunger, rain and a 25-degree drop in temperature would prompt the fugitives into making a false step.

The manhunt started Monday when a patrolman checked the license plates on an overturned van along the Missouri River. That led O'Reilly and eight deputies to a campground at Holter Lake looking for two men wanted for questioning in a double murder in Colorado.

He and his men were ambushed as they climbed toward a ridge above the campground, and for four hours they were pinned down in a hail of more than 300 bullets. Two campers were wounded, but not seriously.

"With the amount of ammunition that was being dropped on us, it was a long four hours, I can tell you that," O'Reilly said. "We were coming from no cover; it was the only approach we could get. They were under heavy cover, and they had the height advantage."

When darkness fell, deputies pulled back and the recreation area between Helena and Great Falls was evacuated.

The next morning, dozens of local, state and federal officers assaulted the hillside, but found only what the snipers had abandoned of their arsenal. They also found Polaroid photos of the two California escapees, each brandishing a weapon and making an obscene gesture.

The suspects were identified as convicted murderers Steven Miller and John "Doc" Whitus Jr., who escaped from a state prison at Vacaville, Calif., in February 1986. Both were wanted for questioning in the April 23 slayings of a man and woman near Byers, Colo.

An as-yet-unidentified woman was seen with them, along with a dog.

Miller, 34, has a criminal record dating back to age 13 and was in prison for two 1975 murders, including a police officer in Ontario, Calif.

Whitus, 36, killed two men in 1972 "when a drug deal went sour," said California Corrections Department official Bob Gore.

Adams County, Colo., authorities said the men were survivalists who spent an hour a day practicing with weapons and were believed to have a large cache of guns and ammunition. But their training was geared more toward weapons than living off the land, he said.

Holter Lake area residents got out their guns and locked their doors. Some loaned hunting rifles to officers armed only with handguns and shotguns. School continued at Craig, eight miles northeast of Wolf Creek, but doors were locked during class.

More than 100 people were brought in to search the western edge of the Big Belt Mountains, an area of rugged grazing country. The terrain rises abruptly from an elevation of 3,500 feet at the lake.

Counterfeit Watches Seized; 3 Arrested

NEW YORK (AP) — Three people were charged Friday with trafficking in thousands of counterfeit designer watches bearing such brand names as Gucci, Rolex, Piaget and Movado, federal officials said.

U.S. Customs Service agents seized more than 20,000 watches and parts at the offices of P. Bachrach Watch Corp. in Manhattan, U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani said.

He said agents also seized equipment allegedly used to produce counterfeit watches, including five stamping machines for attaching counterfeit logos and brand names.

Giuliani said the watches were shipped to dozens of businesses nationwide.

Robert Van Etten, deputy assistant regional commissioner for the Customs Service, said the out-of-state dealers "absolutely knew" they were getting counterfeit watches for sale to unwitting customers. The sold for up to $200 each, he said.

Charged with trafficking in counterfeit merchandise were: Pinchas Bachrach, the company president; his wife, Pia Bachrach, and Gina Salazar. Their ages and addresses were not immediately available. They each face up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine if convicted.

Bachrach invoices showed they sold phony Rollex and Gucci watches for $10 to $35 each. The wholesale price for genuine watches runs from several hundred to several thousand dollars.

Reagan Accused By Senator Of Forcing Budget Showdown

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic lawmaker accused President Reagan on Saturday of forcing "a showdown with the bad guys at the other end of town" instead of working with Congress to reduce the budget deficit.

"The president has chosen confrontation over cooperation," Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said in the Democrats' weekly radio address.

While acknowledging that the Democratic budget "isn't perfect," Johnston charged Reagan with provoking a confrontation with Congress and refusing to cooperate even with his Republican supporters on the issue.

"In parlance the president would use, we've arrived at the OK Corral for this budget process," Johnston said, referring to Reagan's cowboy-actor days. "I would like ... to tell the president: Take your finger off the trigger. And let's talk this over."

Reagan used part of his weekly radio address to repeat his charges that the Democratic-controlled Congress is passing "a hodge-podge of excessive spending bills" and failing to forge a comprehensive budget to keep deficit spending under control.

"The problem is the congressional budget process itself — Congress just refuses to exercise any budget discipline," Reagan said. "Congress just keeps passing higher and higher spending bills, all the time ignoring its promise to the American people under Gramm-Rudman Hollings," the deficit reduction law.

"Maybe your reaction is the same as mine," Reagan told his audience. "Here we go again."

Reagan's budget, introduced in January, also fails to reach the deficit limit, based on estimates by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office.

Johnston noted that under the Gramm-Rudman law, Congress and the president are required to fashion a budget that reduces this year's deficit of $176 billion to $108 billion.

He accused Reagan of coming up with a budget plan that used "phony economic projections" and combined hidden taxes with sales of naticnal assets to claim he had met the budget balancing law.

"The president wants a showdown with the bad guys at the other end of town," said the senator, referring to the Democrats in the Capitol.

"It's one thing to send up a budget as a starting point for negotiations, every president does that. But it is quite another thing to submit a budget that is a total fraud, then withdraw from the budget process and refuse to work with Congress in writing a budget that is fair and honest. That's what the president has done," Johnston said.

The Louisiana Democrat said this strategy is designed to give the president a chance "to blame Congress for a deficit that has more than tripled since he came into office."

On Friday, Senate Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, confirmed that $7 billion in military spending would be added to the $284 billion in the Democratic budget the Senate began debating this week. President Reagan asked for $297 billion.

Total military spending authority, including new programs with costs extending past the end of fiscal 1988, would be about $302 billion in the revised Democratic plan, compared to $312 billion in Reagan's request.

Lutheran Convention Disrupted

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Protesters invaded the founding convention of a newly unified Lutheran denomination Saturday, but were promptly hustled outside by security guards.

"We have rights!" the group of about 40 shouted as a defrocked pastor, Daniel Solberg of Alison Park, Pa., was seized by two guards and ejected.

The disruption at the Ohio Convention Center was drowned out when delegates of the new Evangelical Lutheran Church in America began singing "A Mighty Fortess is Our God," by 16th-century reformer Martin Luther.

The group from the Pittsburgh area, a labor-clergy coalition charging that church-corporate conspiracy has caused economic depression and unemployment, then stood outside holding huge signs.

"Lutherans support apartheid ... defrock pastors ... back banks" for "token food pantries," the signs read.

Solberg and another minister, the Rev. Douglas Roth of Clairton, Pa., were ousted from the ministry of the former Lutheran Church in America, part of the newly merged body, for defying church orders and disruptive tactics.

They, along with several other ministers, have been active in a coalition called Denominational Ministries Strategy.

Both men were arrested on charges of criminal trespassing. A judge had issued a restraining order against their incursion, saying it could 'result in irreparable injury, including bodily harm."

The demonstration came as the convention worked through its initial business, electing the Rev. Lowell G. Almen of Minneapolis as secretary, second-ranking officer of the new denomination.

Almen, 45, is the long-time editor of the Lutheran Standard, official magazine of the former American Lutheran Church, another part of the merger.

His choice balanced the top officers of the two largest merging bodies, since the convention Friday had elected Bishop Herbert W. Chilstrom of the LCA's Minnesota synod as presiding bishop, the top office.

"We are bringing together our histories and hopes," Almen told delegates of the new 5.3-million-member denomination.

"We are standing at a point that many of our forbears longed to be, that they worked for, prayed for and dreamed. We have joined hands in living that bright new day."

The new church also includes the smaller Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches. Still maintaing a separate identity is the conservative Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, which claims 2.7 million members.

The convention also elected the Rev. Edgar R. Trexler, 49, of Philadelpha, as editor of the church's magazine, The Lutheran. He had served as editor of the LCA's magazine by the same name.

Shortly before the disruption, the convention adopted a resolution condemning apartheid in South Africa and its "illegal oppression in Namibia," and praising churches there for courage in struggling for "freedom with justice."

The convention turned down a move by the Rev. John Wetzel, of Downey, Calif., to allow a representative of the DMS coalition, the Rev. Phillip Long of Pittsburgh, to address delegates.

That was followed by the demonstration.

Before he was seized, Solberg told reporters that the church is "destroying legitimate ministry, defrocking and jailing pastors and supporting the destruction of industry and jobs."

"The new church builds itself with with words and acts on the basis of money, mamon and gold," he said. "It is born on an injunction probiting us even from addressing it.

"It is hiding from the truth being spoken by this ministry. It has demonstrated its sickness."

Panel Report Suggests VA Hospital Care Inadequate

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Patients may have died needlessly in Veterans Administration hospitals because of preventable mistakes made by doctors, according to a report Saturday by a congressional panel.

The report concluded that incidents of medical mishaps are increasing at VA medical centers, and the committee accused the VA of failing to take steps to lower its high mortality rates.

The report blamed higher risks for VA patients on what it said was the failure to adequately analyze and then correct high death rates, failure to adopt measures to reduce avoidable malpractice, and failure to credential and discipline VA physicians.

It said incidents such as unexpected deaths, medication errors, patient suicides and falls have increased 11 percent since 1983, rising to 85,357 in 1985. The report said a review of selected unanticipated deaths after heart surgery found 50 percent involved "preventable errors" that may have been a cause of death.

VA officials took issue with the report, saying that some portions appeared to be based on faulty comparisons between patients at VA hospitals and private hospitals.

The report was released by the House Committee on Government Operations, based on an investigation by its human resources and intergovernmental relations subcommittee.

Among the incidents cited in the report was one involving a 51-year-old veteran who checked into the VA medical center in La Jolla, Calif., in 1983 and died after a liver biopsy performed by a physician in training.

The patient's blood pressure dropped steadily after the biopsy, and a student nurse monitoring his condition did not call for a doctor until the blood pressure was "unobtainable," according to a VA inspector general's report cited by the committee. The doctor treated the patient for a drug reaction but not a hemorrhage.

"Four hours after the biopsy, (the patient) was taken into surgery," the VA report said. "The liver was found to be lacerated and he had an arterial bleeder.

"After much difficulty, the bleeder was controlled. ... His condition deteriorated and he was pronounced dead on Sept. 9, 1983."

Dr. Francis Conrad, director of quality assurance for the VA medical system, said in an interview that the VA has moved to correct some of the problems highlighted in the report, including new oversight of physician credentials.

"The VA is aware of surgical mortality as an issue and does monitor ... VA surgical mortality rates against rates in the non-federal sector," he said. "Instances in which variation exist are very few and involve a remarkably small number of patients."

The VA last year reviewed its heart surgery facilities and closed units at four hospitals because of concerns about high death rates. The congressional report, however, raised concerns about mortality rates at 10 other VA heart surgery units, saying they were above VA standards or had mortality rates in 1986 that were nearly twice the national average.

The 10 listed in the report were: Denver; Memphis; Oklahoma City, Okla.; San Juan, Puerto Rico; Shreveport, La.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Iowa City, Iowa; Lexington, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn.; and St. Louis.

However, the VA maintains that its mortality rates may be higher in some cases because its patients are older and sicker than average. Conrad said the committee "may have mistakenly assumed that raw mortality rates" alone are sufficient to base a judgment about heart surgery units.

The report cited reviews by the VA's inspector general and a VA committee of heart surgery consultants of unanticipated deaths within 24 hours of surgery at 21 medical centers during 1983 and 1984. It said more than half the factors cited as possible causes of death were classified as preventable.

The report grew out of a hearing conducted last year by subcommittee chairman Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y. "We were given a lot of excuses about how difficult it is to oversee such a large medical system," Weiss said in a statement. "The VA must take the report's findings seriously."

Nine Republicans on the panel dissented in a joint statement, saying "the committee has sought to overdramatize incidents of quality assurance programs at VA medical centers. ... It paints an overly bleak picture of the type of care veterans are apt to receive at VA medical centers."

Any group or organization that would like to charter bus service through the Greenville Area Transit (GREAT) system should call the city's Public Works Department at 752-4137. Charters can arranged to destinations within a 50 mile radius of Greenville. The service is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Baker Says Tryst With Secretary Was Move To Get His Wife Back

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — The Rev. Jim Bakker, admitting failure but maintaining that he has been forgiven, says the tryst with a church secretary that forced him out of the PTL television ministry was an attempt to win back his wife.

Bakker and his wife, Tammy, talked with reporters at their home here and in a newspaper interview at the end of a week in which his PTL salary was stopped and more allegations arose.

"I did it to get my wife back," Bakker told the Los Angeles Times on Friday, explaining his adulterous liaison seven years ago with secretary Jessica Hahn.

He apparently was referring to Mrs. Bakker's crush at the time on country singer Gary Paxton, who helped her with her singing career, the Times said.

"It was a stupid thing to do," Bakker said.

"I have failed, I have sinned in my life. God has forgiven me of my sin," he told the newspaper.

Earlier Friday, Bakker told reporters outside the couple's home in this desert resort that "without a miracle of God we will never minister again."

He said he did not know what the future held and denied another minister's allegations that he engaged in homosexual acts and used prostitutes.

Mrs. Bakker said they had never met the Rev. John Ankerberg, who made the allegations.

Bakker said in the later interview that he and his wife were emotionally drained and that at one time they thought they "would not be able to live through another day."

"I was living 10 minutes at a time, then an hour at a time," he said. "Tammy and I have been hurt so badly that for awhile we thought the next step could only be death. It was a killing pain."

Bakker turned control of the PTL organization over to the Rev. Jerry Falwell in March, admitting the sexual tryst Miss Hahn in 1980.

Subsequent revelations that Bakker and his wife were paid $1.6 million in salary and bonuses in 1986 prompted PTL's new board, led by Falwell, to sever ties with Bakker on Tuesday.

Bakker said he and his wife had reinvested most of that money in the PTL organization or spent it on personal wardrobes and social gatherings related to the ministry. "We don't have any life savings," he said.

He also said he had no say in how much money he was paid.

"When the (PTL) board of directors voted (on salaries), I walked out of the room," he said.

"I like quality, I like nice things," he admitted. "But if I had it to do over again — even if the board gave me those things — I would turn around and give them back again."

During the news conference, Bakker said he and his wife were owed $8 million to $9 million in royalties but did not know if they would get that money.

"Financially we'll not be able to survive, probably six months at the most," Bakker said. "But God has always taken care of us. I've never had to ask for money for myself. God has always taken care of me from when we started as young evangelists making $50 a week until now."

Of criticisms that the pair lived extravagant lives, he said: "What you see is what you get. Jim and Tammy don't live secretly, we live open. You see our homes, our cars. This is what we are."

Submarine Target Of Sea Search

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Coast Guard and Navy searched the Pacific Ocean near here Saturday after receiving a distress message claiming to be from a Soviet submarine, officials said.

The Coast Guard received a radio call at 7:54 a.m. claiming to be from a Soviet submarine named Dresnavia, said Chief Warrant Officer Charles Hartjen.

The caller claimed the submarine lost power and was taking on water 70 miles southwest of San Diego, he said.

"The Coast Guard stresses that this is an unconfirmed report," said Hartjen. "Efforts are under way to search the area and confirm the distress call."

Hartjen said the Coast Guard search force included a Falcon jet, a helicopter, and the 65-foot cutter Point Stuart. The Navy also sent "several units" to assist, but Hartjen said he did not know what ships or aircraft the Navy sent to the area.

Hartjen said he did not know if any Soviet vessels were in the area of the reported distress call.

Bob Wittes, a Port of San Diego employee, told the San Diego Tribune he heard on a marine scanner radio the original distress call, in which a man with a heavily accented voice said, "This is a Soviet submarine ... We are taking on water and request United States of America assistance."

Making false distress calls is a violation of Federal Communication Commission rules, authorities said.

Lutheran Church Torched

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Arsonists set fire to a Lutheran church in suburban Roettgen early Saturday, one day after a Roman Catholic church was gutted by a blaze during Pope John Paul's visit to West Germany, police said.

Police said Friday's fire near Cologne may have been connected to the pontiff's visit, but had no such indications about Saturday's arson.

Police said the fire destroyed about $55,000 worth of furniture in the St. Thomas church in the Bonn suburb.

The arson came shortly before John Paul was to tour the industrial Ruhr valley on the third day of his trip to West Germany.

"Someone set the fire," a Bonn police spokesman told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

The spokesman, who demanded not to be identified by name, said police were investigating and did not know if the arson attack was connected to the pope's visit. There were no claims of responsibility.

In 1858, the county's courthouse was destroyed by a blaze supposedly set by a man trying to destory a will. In 1910, the courthouse burned again.

Pope Praises Union Leaders Killed By Nazis

By MARK HEINRICH
Associated Press Writer

GELSENKIRCHEN, West Germany (AP) — Pope John Paul II paid tribute Saturday to three labor union leaders who died at the hands of the Nazis after being accused of involvement in a failed attempt to kill Adolf Hitler.

It was the third day in a row he spoke out in West Germany against Nazi World War II atrocities and praised Roman Catholics who defied the Third Reich.

He also addressed social issues on a swing Saturday through the economically depressed Ruhr, calling some unemployment "a social scandal," demanding protection for the environment, and asking for step-by-step nuclear disarmament.

At an outdoor Mass in Gelsenkirchen, 55 miles northeast of Bonn, the pontiff praised Nikolaus Gross, Gottfried Koenzgen and Bernhard Letterhaus.

All three were prominent Roman Catholics and union leaders from the Ruhr industrial area who were convicted of involvement in the 1944 bomb attack on Hitler's Wolf's Lair bunker near the Russian front.

"They sacrificed their lives for their faith and for their church," the pontiff said in his homily, speaking in German.

"Numerous priests and laymen have, together with them, been staunch witnesses of the faith in opposition to a godless, inhumane dictatorship."

The pontiff, dressed in brilliant gold robes, said the Mass on a large, star-shaped platform in a sports stadium jammed with 80,000 people. Trumpeters blared ceremonial music, and a large banner, fluttering in the evening breeze, proclaimed: "John Paul, we're on your side."

The pope praised the labor leader victims at an earlier stop in the Ruhr town of Bottrop, saying, "They lived in the certainty of their faith that Christ, the light of the world, is stronger than all darknesses that time and again seek to threaten life."

Gross and Letterhaus were executed. Koenzgen was sent to Mauthausen concentration camp, where he died of malnutrition.

The notorious People's Court in Berlin, which sentenced to death thousands of Hitler's foes, convicted all three of helping plot the attack. The assassination attempt was carried out by top-ranking army officers dissatisfied with Hitler's leadership. Hitler was hurt in the bomb explosion, but survived.

John Paul started his trip on Thursday in Cologne by condemning the Nazi "death machinery." He strongly defended the conduct of German Catholic bishops and the Vatican during the Third Reich.

Some critics have charged that the Roman Catholic Church did not do enough to condemn Nazism and protect Jews during the Nazis' 12 years in power, from 1933-45.

On Friday, the pope beatified Jewish-born nun Edith Stein and called for Christian-Jewish solidarity to counter any signs of renewed anti-Semitism. The Nazis killed an estimated 6 million Jews.

On Sunday in Munich, the pope beatifies the Rev. Rupert Mayer, a Jesuit priest and victim of Nazi persecution.

The pope also addressed social issues Saturday.

In Bottrop, about 5 miles west of Gelsenkirchen, he called for "the just distribution of jobs and wealth" and urged better treatment of foreign workers.

"Unemployment that is not the fault of the unemployed becomes a social scandal when available work is not distributed fairly and the profit of the work is not used to create new work for as many possible," the pontiff told an audience of 12,000, many of them coal miners and steelworkers.

Many older heavy industries have moved out of the Ruhr, pushing unemployment in West Germany's manufacturing center up to 15.3 percent, more than 6 percent above the national average.

The pontiff started his day with a visit to the pilgrimage town of Kevelaer near the Dutch border, where 70,000 cheering and waving faithful turned out to greet him.

"Work for international understanding, for the step-by-step elimination of all weapons of mass destruction, and for common efforts by all nations to foster peace and justice in the world," the Roman Catholic leader said during a prayer service.

John Paul frequently has called for the reduction of nuclear weapons since he became pope in 1978.

The pontiff also spoke of the need "to defend this planet," saying, "After all, where environmental and radiological protection, for instance, are concerned, it has long since ceased to be merely a question of the present, but also of future generations."

About 26.3 million West Germans, or 43.6 percent of the population, are Catholics. Nearly an equal number are Protestants.

Vessels Boarded By Iranian Navy

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian marines intercepted and boarded 14 foreign ships and oil tankers at the Strait of Hormuz looking for Iraq-bound goods, Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency reported Saturday.

All vessels searched Friday by the Iranian navy were allowed to continue voyage after no "suspicious" goods were found aboard, said a war communique carried by IRNA. It was referring to cargo bound for Iraq.

Iran has been intercepting ships in strategic Hormuz hunting for Iraq-bound goods that could be used in the war effort.

Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980. Interceptions and attacks on foreign ships by the Iranian navy in the southern Persian Gulf and at Hormuz, the waterway's outlet to the Indian Ocean, were in retaliation for Iraqi air raids on Iranian shipping lanes and oil ports in the northern approaches of the gulf.

Iraq has vowed to continue its attacks to throttle Iran's oil exports until the Tehran government agrees to negotiate an end to the war. Iran has said no vessels are safe in the gulf if its own ships are threatened.

Commodore Mohammed-Hussein Malekzadegan, commander of Iran's navy, said in April his units have intercepted and searched 1,200 ships in the last 18 months. The cargoes of 30 vessels had been seized, he said.

IRNA said Iranian patrols in the northwestern border region near Sar Dasht clashed with Iraqi troops, inflicting casualties and damage.

The agency, monitored in Nicosia, also reported artillery exchanges in the Kurdish-inhabited border regions between Iran and Iraq on the northern front.

Iran launched a drive April 24 in the northern front east of the Iraqi Kurdish city of Sulaymaniyah, and said its forces were pushing into Iraq's rugged mountains.

The official Iraqi News Agency, also monitored in Nicosia, quoted an Iraqi field commander as saying Iran has lost the bulk of its invading force.

The commander, not identified by name or rank, told Baghdad's military newspaper al-Qadissiyah in a battlefront interview that his forces kept up air and ground attacks against the Iranian invaders, INA reported.

Iraqi warplanes, helicopter gunships, tanks and artillery provided fire support for Iraqi commandos, the commander said.

U.N. Workers Die In Wreck

GAZA CITY, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — A private bus slammed into the rear of a United Nations bus Saturday near Gaza City, killing eight U.N. workers and injuring 11 people, authorities said.

Police spokesman Avraham Barzilai said the collision took place about 14 miles south of Gaza City after the U.N. vehicle had suddenly slowed.

A United Nations official said 16 employees of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency were aboard the U.N. bus. He said eight of them were killed and eight hurt, including the driver, who suffered minor injuries. The Relief and Works Agency aids Palestinian refugees.

Barzilai said 11 people in all were injured, three seriously. He did not know how many people were on the second bus or who owned it.

The U.N. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the United Nations bus was traveling north toward Gaza when the accident occurred at 1:30 p.m.

The injured were taken to a hospital in Khan Yunis, 18 miles south of Gaza, said Barzilai.

Korean Leader Says New Party Advocates 'Violent Revolution'

By PAUL SHIN
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Chun Doo-hwan's party charged Saturday that a new opposition party was advocating "violent revolution" and said the government would not tolerate any attempt to undermine its decisions.

The Reunification Democratic Party, led by Kim Young-sam and Kim Dae-jung, South Korea's two best-known dissidents, was formally inaugurated Friday. It vowed to fight for democracy and to revive parliamentary debate on a new constitution.

Lee Choon-ku, secretary-general of Chun's governing Democratic Justice Party, said Saturday that the new party should not try to overturn a presidential decision to postpone debate on direct elections.

"We will not tolerate any attempts to distort the true intentions of the April 13 decision," said Lee.

Chun, on April 13, announced he would keep through next summer the present electoral college system, which opposition members say allows him to hand-pick his successor. Chun said that in the interest of national stability, he would postpone talks on a new electoral system until after the 1988 Seoul Summer Olympics.

The two Kims demand direct presidential elections.

On Friday, Kim Young-sam, 59, said the new party would not accept voting under the electoral college "for the same reason we do not recognize elections in North Korea as true elections."

He said the party would undertake a nationwide non-violent campaign to protest the elections.

The Democratic Justice Party on Saturday released a statement challenging Kim Young-sam's speech.

"Isn't it an attempt to seize power through a violent revolution that a party, which has set sail under the framework of the fifth (present) republic, pledges an overall rejection of the current government, including a boycott of elections?" the statement said.

Education Minister Sohn Jae-suk told a meeting of lawmakers from Chun's party on Saturday that 253 professors from six universities signed statements denouncing the postponement of constitutional debate.

Officials at the National Council of Churches said Saturday at least 178 Roman Catholic priests and 23 Protestant ministers were conducting hunger strikes in Seoul and six other South Korean cities.

A week ago, 223 poets, novelists, literary critics and playwrites issued a statement demanding greater press freedom and the resumption of constitutioal debate.

A new constitution, if adopted, would take effect after Chun's 7-year term ends next Feb. 24. Chun, who took power after President Park Chung-hee was assassinated in 1979, repeatedly has promised to step down when his term ends.

Turmoil Mars Election Activity

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — An upsurge in violence and protests has overshadowed the campaigning for Wednesday's whites-only election, the target of the most intense black opposition activity in months.

Strikes by black workers provoked mass firings and at least 11 deaths in two weeks, police whipped or tear-gassed protesters at three universities, and anti-apartheid groups laid plans for a nationwide boycott of jobs and schools on Election Day.

Apartheid establishes a racially segregated society in which the black majority of 24 million has no vote in national affairs.

The turmoil has not altered expectations that President P.W. Botha's National Party will keep its big majority in Parliament's dominant white chamber. But there is a new urgency to opposition pleas for change and an extra emphasis by the Nationalists on security issues.

"You must decide on May 6 if you will continue with a strong and determined government against anarchists and vagabonds," Botha said in a speech Thursday.

Botha's party defended an April 25 army raid against purported African National Congress guerrilla targets in Zambia, despite complaints it was an election stunt. Its advertisements imply that the Progressive Federal Party, the main liberal opposition, would hand over power to the banned ANC, which is fighting the white-led government

But black Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace laureate, said in a pre-election message to white voters: "Whatever you do, know clearly that there is no way the whites can will away the ANC, that negotiations will one day have to be entered into with them."

"There is no way that a small minority can go on ruling this country on its own forever," he said.

A major force behind the boycott of job and schools is the 600,000-member Congress of South African Trade Unions.

Close to 30,000 black rail and postal workers affiliated with the Unions are on strike. The seven-week rail strike, the longest and largest ever in South Africa's public sector, has led to the firing of more than 17,000 workers.

The National Party's campaign to extend its 40-year hold on power is being waged with the slogan: "Reform, Yes. Surrender, No." Orange-and-blue roadside posters nationwide bear the message.

Despite goading from both the left and far-right, the Nationalists have balked at elaborating on the first half of the slogan.

The party promises to negotiate power-sharing "at the highest possible level" with the voteless blacks. But Botha has ruled out any form of majority rule and insists the 5 million whites will retain segregated neighborhoods and schools.

Critics say no popularly accepted black leaders will negotiate while that stance is maintained.

At stake Wednesday are the 166 elected seats in Parliament's 178-seat white chamber. The other 12 seats are filled by presidential and party appointments. Asian and mixed-race chambers, created in 1984, are not up for election until 1989.

The Nationalists held 127 seats in the previous Parliament, the Progressive Federal Party held 27 and its moderate ally, the New Republic Party, held five. Nineteen seats were held by the extreme-right Conservative and Herstigte Nasionale (Reformed National) parties.

The National Party's Stoffel Van Der Merwe, seeking re-election to Parliament and serving as deputy minister of information, predicted the party would keep its seats and then tackle reform to prevent defections to the left.

"There are voters saying, 'I'll vote for you this time, but you'd better do something,'" Van Der Merwe said.

Until the recent unrest, which started in mid-April with arson attacks on trains of the strike-bound state rail company, the campaign's most dramatic aspect was a string of high-level defections from the National Party.

The defectors included several well-known Afrikaners, the Dutch-descended whites who control the party and government.

Three defectors, including former Ambassador to Britain Denis Worrall, are running in an alliance as independents against Nationalist candidates.

Worrall is challenging Constitutional Development Minister Chris Heunis, a possible successor to Botha. Worrall suggested last week that, if victorious, he will try to establish a multiracial party to spearhead a drive away from apartheid.

The election, called by Botha two years early, is the first for whites since 1981.

That year, the National Party received 57 percent of the vote, while about 16 percent went to the far right and 27 percent to the Progressive Federal and the New Republic parties.

Soviet Male Life Expectancy Said Rising After Down Cycle

MOSCOW (AP) — A magazine said Saturday the life expectancy of Soviet men dropped four years within a decade and a half before beginning to rebound with the help of Mikhail S. Gorbachev's fight against alcoholism.

Western demographers long suspected that an absence of official statistics hid a sharp drop in life expectancy, probably tied to alcoholism and rare for a developed society.

Soviet publications recently began providing more information on population statistics such as life expectancy. The report in the magazine Ogonyok was the most detailed so far.

In an article on widows written by demographer Mark Tolts, the magazine said the life expectancy of Soviet men increased rapidly after World War II, reaching 66 years in the mid-1960s.

But "toward the end of the 1970s ... the average life expectancy of men fell to 62 years," he said.

Tolts wrote that the trend was halted in the early 1980s, and life expectancy increased one year. "After measures were taken for a decisive struggle against drunkenness, it rose another year. And now ... the average life expectancy of men is again 64 years."

An average American male born in the early 1980s could expect to live 70 years.

Tolts said alcoholism played a part in the decrease in life expectancy, but the costs of technical progress and the failure of medicine to react quickly enough also were to blame.

"The scientific-technical revolution carries not only good, but negative results — for example, the worsening of the ecological situation when technical progress does not spare nature, and that includes man," he said.

Men traditionally are more closely tied to technology and therefore their health has suffered more, Tolts said.

He said the number of doctors in the Soviet Union doubled between 1965 and 1980, but they did not have the necessary resources to deal with the problem.

The average Soviet woman can expect to live nine years longer than a male, to age 73.

In an article April 17 in the weekly newspaper Nedelya, another demographer said that difference had been as much as 11 years before it narrowed as men's life expectancy increased.

Valery Yelizarov, assistant director of the Soviet Center for Population Studies, in that article also tied the campaign against drunkenness to the increase in life expectancy for men.

Yelizarov said demographers also had noted "at last" a decrease in the death rate for all ages younger than 40.

Two months after taking power as Communist Party chief in March 1985, Gorbachev increased prices and cut production of alcoholic beverages, raised the drinking age and cut back on the hours of liquor stores.

Vietnam Moves Rice North

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam has decided to move surplus rice stocks from the southern provinces to the north to offset shortages there among workers and soldiers, a Vietnamese radio broadcast said.

It said the Council of Ministers, the country's collective presidency, authorized ministries to purchase and transport the surplus rice to the northern provinces.

"This year the south has enjoyed a bumper winter-spring rice crop while the north has met with difficulties," the broadcast said.

"Faced with such a situation, the chairman of the Council of Ministers has decided to launch a drive to concentrate on buying and shipping food grain ... to meet the requirements ... in the north, especially the requirements of troops stationed at the border and those of the compatriots in the capital and of workers at various key industrial complexes."

The southern provinces traditionally have been the country's breadbasket. The northern crop this year was hurt by unseasonal weather and insects. The government previously admitted to shortages for soldiers guarding the sometimes volatile northern border with China.

Population growth continues to outpace food production. Last December's sixth National Party Congress identified increased production of foodgrains as a major economic goal for Vietnam.

The Council of State directive authorized southern provinces to ship surplus rice for sale in Hanoi, the nearby industrial port of Haiphong, and Quang Ninh province bordering China. Sales would be at below-market prices, however.

The directive also instructed the State Bank to provide southern provinces with cash to buy rice, and urged farmers to sell grain to the state on interest-earning credit. It gave the northern provinces permission to go southward to shop for grain.

Bombings Cut Power In Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Authorities worked to restore full service but intermittent power failures persisted Saturday after guerrilla sabotage blacked out much of Chile.

Many residents in and around the capital said they were without power at various times during the day as utility company workers repaired power pylons damaged in Friday night bombings.

The blackout occurred just before a scheduled prime-time television broadcast of a May Day speech given earlier in the day by President Augusto Pinochet.

Authorities and local press reports said at least three high-voltage towers in Santiago, three in the coastal port city of Valparaiso, and one in the city of Rancangua, 60 miles south of the capital, were felled by explosives.

Power was cut off to cities and towns along a 1,200-mile stretch where 11 million of Chile's 12 million people live.

Alysheba Charges To Win In The Race For The Roses

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Racing Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Alysheba, running for only the second time since undergoing an operation on his windpipe, stormed to the lead as he neared the wire and won the $793,600 Kentucky Derby Saturday at Churchill Downs.

Alysheba, ridden by Chris McCarron, took the lead in a rough homestretch battle with Bet Twice to get the roses in the 113th running of America's premiere horse race.

Derby favorite Demons Begone pulled up in the final turn, bleeding badly from both nostrils, and the colt was taken off in an ambulance.

Third was Avies Copy, a member of the mutuel field, while Cryptoclearance got home fourth in the field of 17 3-year-olds.

McCarron, who returned to riding last March after sustaining a severely broken leg, said Alysheba brushed two times with Bet Twice in the homestretch.

The first time, McCarron said, Bet Twice "ducked out in front of me, and I thought I was gone."

The second time, Bet Twice "stuck out right dead in front of me, and I clipped his heels. This horse (Alysheba) is a real competitor to get up on his feet again and go on to win the race.

"I felt if that horse had beaten me, he would have come down," McCarron said of Bet Twice.

The victory, in 2:03 2-5 for the 1¼ miles, was Alysheba's first in four starts this year and only the second in 11 career races.

Alysheba had finished first in the Bluegrass Stakes in his previous race but was disqualified for interference.

But on this hot, sunny Kentucky day, he ran straight down the stretch to gain a Derby victory for his Hall of Fame trainer, Jack Van Berg. Van Berg also trained Gate Dancer in 1984 when that colt became the only colt disqualified in a Derby race.

He was dropped from fourth to fifth.

"He's a good colt," the 50-year-old Van Berg said in appraising Alysheba's Derby chances a few days before the race. "He's legitimate, he's talented and he's sound."

The $500,000 yearling, a son of Alydar, also is a horse for the ages, which is what all Kentucky Derby winners become.

McCarron sent Alysheba into contention nearing the quarter pole on the turn. Then, in the stretch run, he finally caught Bet Twice inside the sixteenth pole for the victory.

A jubilant McCarron, winning the Derby for the first time in seven tries, said: "He ate up horses down the backstretch."

He also ate them up down the homestretch.

Immediately after the race, Pat Day, who rode Demons Begone, the 2-1 favorite, said "my horse bled. He wasn't right going into the first turn.

"We got bumped at the half mile," Day said. "I knew something was wrong. There was blood from both nostrils.

"He bled from the nose," said Phil Hauswald, who trains Demons Begone for John Ed Anthony. "I have no idea what caused it."

Sandberg Lives Up To Expectations

CHICAGO (AP) — It was Ryne Sandberg poster day at Wrigley Field — and the Chicago Cubs' All-Star second baseman didn't disappoint his fans.

Sandberg hit a three-run homer to cap a four-run seventh inning Saturday, helping the Cubs to a 7-4 triumph over the San Diego Padres.

Andre Dawson and Leon Durham hit successive home runs in the fourth inning and Jody Davis connected in the eighth, marking the second straight game the Cubs had hit four home runs.

"That was really a thrill," said Sandberg. "I hadn't been swinging the bat well all day and then getting the home run. They wouldn't stop cheering. I had to come out of the dugout to wave my hat but I did it quickly."

Sandberg's homer made a winner of Steve Trout, 2-1, and a loser of Ed Whitson, 3-3, who also gave up the homers to Dawson and Durham, and has given up 13 home runs in his six starts.

Dawson's homer was his eighth and fifth in the last eight games, Durham's was his seventh and Davis hit his fifth in the eighth off reliever Craig Lefferts.

"That's going to happen a lot this year," promised Sandberg. "We're swinging the bats, playing good baseball and the pitching has been great."

The Cubs struck quickly in the seventh. With two outs, Dave Martinez doubled and scored the tying run on a pinch single by Jerry Mumphrey. Chico Walker singled and Sandberg

Fernandez Paces Blue Jays To Win

TORONTO (AP) — A sore finger on his throwing hand and a slight groin injury almost forced Toronto's Tony Fernandez to ask Manager Jimy Williams to take him out of Saturday's game against Texas in the bottom of the ninth inning.

The Texas Rangers undoubtedly wish he had.

Instead, Fernandez lined a two-run double down the first-base line, lifting the Blue Jays to a 9-8 victory.

"I thought I was going to have to take myself out and get someone to pich-hit for me," said Fernandez. "I'm happy with the hit, but I'm not there yet. I'm still struggling. I was just up there looking for something to hit and he gave me a breaking ball."

Pete O'Brien homered for Texas in the top of the ninth to break a 7-7 tie. Texas reliever Greg Harris, 1-3, got the first two outs, but walked Fred McGriff and gave up a single to pinch-hitter Rob Ducey.

Fernandez then grounded his double past a diving O'Brien at first base and Ducey beat right fielder Ruben Sierra's throw to the plate, giving the Blue Jays their fifth straight win.

"I wasn't sure if it was a hit because I'm not used to the artificial turf here," said Ducey. "On grass, that's an out."

"It was in the place I wanted it — down and in — but he painted the line with it," Harris said.

Mark Eichhorn, 4-1, got the win despite surrendering the homer to O'Brien, who went 3-for-5 with three RBIs.

Pete Incaviglia's two-run homer in the seventh inning had given the Rangers a 7-6 lead.

The Blue Jays had rallied from a 5-2 deficit in the sixth to take a 6-5 lead against kuckleballer Charlie Hough. A run-scoring single by Garth Iorg, Sierra's throwing error and Lloyd Moseby's two-run single put Toronto ahead.

Hough was ejected in the sixth after becoming an argument with home plate umpire Vic Voltaggio. Texas manager Bobby Valentine was also tossed out by Voltaggio after joining the discussion.

"Things changed after I lost my starter and a great hitting job was wasted," said Valentine.

Two walks and rookie Jerry Browne's bloop RBI double put Texas ahead 4-1 in the fourth, but Toronto got one run back in the bot-

Paige Benefit Lets Others Help Out

Tom Morris

It was a situation where all involved came out winners.

The event was the Terry Paige Benefit Softball Game, featuring the East Carolina football team against a team of coaches and area media. The game was a fund-raiser for Paige, a former ECU running back who is battling cancer.

On the scoreboard, the football players took a 16-14 win, but for all the participants and the 200 people who attented, the winner is Terry Paige and his family. The proceeds will go toward easing the high costs associated with Paige's cancer treatments.

Paige was diagonsed with the cancer over the winter and is presently undergoing treatment in Chapel Hill at North Carolina Memorial Hospital. He is commuting there from Whiteville and the costs grow larger every day.

He was one of the most highly recruited running backs in North Carolina in 1983 after rushing for more than 4,500 yards in his high school career. He was hampered by knee injuries throughout his career at ECU and eventually had to give up football because of those injuries.

"I hope that people will know that this is just a very small part of the problem, as far as rehabilitation," said teammate Ron Gilliard, Terry's former roommate.

"This is strictly for Terry Paige. The seniors met and decided a way to help Terry out. I wish we could do more."

The proceeds from the game, along with those from a car wash conducted before the game, will not cover Paige's medical bills but they are a start and a good one.

"Any little bit can help," said Leon Hall, a former teammate. "It's just such a hardship. This thing (cancer treatment) costs a lot of mony. We're doing the best we can for him."

Teammate George Franklin echoed Hall's sentiments.

"It's very important to me and the rest of the fellas, the seniors," he said. "We came in together and we're like a big family. We hope to get all the money we can so we can help in any way possible with those chemotherapy treatments. We hope a lot of people come out and donate."

Paige is undergoing radiation and chemotherapy treatments as doctors try to reduce the size of his tumor, which is located in and behind his nasal cavity.

"The players really wanted to do something to try and help Terry," said Lee Workman, athletic marketing director for East Carolina. "We wanted to help him too.

"We worry about winning and losing games, selling tickets and raising money but this right here brings everything into perspective. We all wanted to try and help this young man at a time when he really needs it."

But the need will be there long after the game is just a memory. It will be a long battle, and for the Paige family, an uphill struggle.

The players have tried to do all they could to help Terry.

They dedicated the spring football game to Terry and had him down on the field before the game.

"He was really touched," Gilliard said. "He knew that we really cared for him. He appreciated it. He appreciated what we did here today because it (cancer treatment) is costing a whole lot."

Gilliard also said a personal collection was taken up among some of the players to be given to Paige.

Through it all, Paige's former teammates have been deeply affected.

"It's made me see things a lot more clearly," Franklin said. "I don't take things for granted. It's affected all of us. We didn't think this could happen. It's life or death and he's fighting for his life. All of us want to do our part and help his family raise the money."

Hall said Paige's situation really hits close to home.

"It makes you think a lot. He's so young," Hall said. "He's my age. It could happen to me just the way it happened to him. You hate to see it happen to someone so close. He's just like my brother.

"I think the one thing I will always remember about Terry is his sense of humor. He came back after being diagnosed with cancer and the one thing I remember him doing is smiling. I was like, wow, he's been through all this and he's smiling. But that's Terry."

He's a survivor," Gilliard added. "He can handle adversity very well. He's had it since he got here."

The players hope to set up a permanent fund for Paige but in the meantime, donations are still being accepted at ECU. Donations should be sent to the ECU Athletic Fund, earmarked for Terry Paige, and mailed to the Athletic Business Office.

George Mason Sweeps By ECU

FAIRFAX, Va. — George Mason swept a double-header from East Carolina Saturday, eliminating the Pirates' chances for a first place finish in the Colonial Athletic Association baseball standings.

George Mason won the first game 4-2 and took the nightcap by a score of 7-1.

In the opener, the Patriots pushed across all four runs in the second. With two outs, Rob Billingsley singled. Kevin Kobylinski followed with a walk. Jimmy Brown then doubled to score Billingsley and Kobylinski went to third. Ryan Johnston followed that by hitting a grounder to John Adams at short, whose resulting error allowed two runs to score. Ed Walonac then tripled home Johnston to make it 4-0.

ECU countered with two runs in the fourth but that was as close as the Pirates would get.

With one out, Ed Walonac tripled and scored on Luke Sable's single. The Patriots added three more runs in the inning.

ECU is 20-12 overall and 8-6 in the CAA.

The two teams play again today for third place in the conference.

Two Tied For Lead In S&H Classic

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Cindy Hill and Jan Stephenson both birdied the 18th hole Saturday to take a one-stroke lead over four other golfers after three rounds of the $225,000 S&H Classic.

Hill, sidelined for the last nine weeks with a pancreas ailment, sank a 3-foot putt on the last hole to finish with a 69, while Stephenson rolled in an 8-footer to complete a 70. That left the co-leaders with 54-hole totals of 11-under-par 205.

Rookie Donna Cusano-Wilkins, who held a two-shot lead until she double-bogeyed the 16th hole, led a quartet of players at 10-under 206 after a 70 on the par-72, 6,013-yard Pasadena Yacht & Country Club course.

Kathy Postlewait and M.J. Smith shot 68 and 70, respectively, to join Cusano-Wilkins at one shot off the pace. Second-round co-leader Myra Blackwleder, seven months pregnant, birdied the last hole for a 71 that kept her within one stroke of the lead heading into Sunday's final round.

"Here I am again, and feeling pretty good about it," said Blackwelder, who is expecting her second child in June.

"The big question is whether I'm supposed expect to win tomorrow," she added. "I'm still taking the approach that I shouldn't expect a lot."

Blackwelder started the day sharing a one-stroke lead with Stephenson. She birdied the third hole, but bogeyed the 10th and matched par the rest of the way until No. 18.

"If I had been a normal golfer I would have been mad or frustrated out there," said Blackwelder, who not only withstood the pressure of playing for the lead but also had to deal with the hot, humid weather conditions.

"I know everybody is wishing me well," she added. "But I can't put pressure on myself or let that affect me. The fact is I'm 7½ months pregnant and surprised I'm doing this well. That's just being realistic."

Cusano-Wilkins, a member of the University of Miami's NCAA championship team in 1984, played near-flawless golf for 15 holes and found herself alone in first place when Postlewait faltered slightly on the back nine.

The 23-year-old rookie ran into trouble on the par-4, 16th hole when she hit her second shot over the green and under a palm tree. Until that point, she had four birdies and no bogeys.

Playing for the first time since the Women's Kemper Open in February, Hill bogeyed No. 10. She regained the stroke with her birdie on No. 18.

"I got a little tired on the back side, but you can't complain about these conditions," said Hill.

"I've only played in two tournaments this year and just wanted to come out, make the cut and get back on track," Hill added. "I'm very surprised."

Stephenson started slowly and made the turn at 1-over for the round. She birdied the 10th and 12th holes to move back into contention and finished with the birdie on No. 18.

Scores Saturday after the third round of the $225,000 LPGA S & H Golf Classic, played on the 6,013-yard, par 72 Pasadena Yacht and Country Club:

Derby ....

winner of his first three starts this year including the Arkansas Derby, was not immediately known.

Alysheba's winning margin was three-quarters of a length.

Alysheba, who earned a record winner's share of $618,600 from the record gross purse, paid $18.80, $8 and $6.20.

Bet Twice, ridden by Craig Perret, returned $10 and $7.20 while Avies Copy, ridden by Mickey Solomone, was $6.80 to show.

Capote, the 1986 2-year-old champion who was trying to redeem himself after losing his first two starts this year, broke on top, but when the field went by the finish line the first time, his D. Wayne Lukas-trained stablemate, On The Line, was in front.

Capote, ridden by Angel Cordero, took the lead on the first turn and held it going down the backstretch.

Then the Derby became a cavalry charge around the final turn and through the upper stretch.

It was another disappointing Derby for Lukas, who now has saddled 12 starters in seven Derbies and is still looking for his first victory.

Lukas' On The Line finished 10th, War 13th and Capote 16th.

It also was a disappointment for 55-year-old Bill Shoemaker, who rode Gulch in search of a second straight victory and record-tying fifth Derby win for a jockey. Gulch finished sixth.

The complete order of finish after Cryptoclearance was Templar Hill, Gulch, Leo Castelli, Candi's Gold, Conquistarose, On The Line, Shawklit Won, Masterful Advocate, War, Momentus, No More Flowers and Capote. Demons Begone did not finish.

No favorite has won the Derby since Spectacular Bid in 1979.

Alysheba, whose sire, Alydar, chased Affirmed to the Triple Crown in 1978, opened his 3-year-old campaign with a fourth-place finish in an allowance race. He finished second in the San Felipe Handicap on March 22, and Van Berg noticed he seemed to be having trouble getting air.

Two days later, the colt underwent surgery for an entrapped epiglottis, the flap that keeps food and watrer from entering the windpipe.

Alysheba looked strong in the Bluegrass although the disqualification cost him the victory. But Van Berg thought it boosted the colt's confidence and it certainly boosted the trainer's.

Through the stretch drive, Alysheba stumbled a bit at the eighth pole but quickly righted himself and got to the wire first in what Van Berg calls "the Race."

It was the first Derby win in six tries for Van Berg, whose late father Marion also is in racing's Hall of Fame. Marion Van Berg had one Derby starter, Spring Broker, who finished eighth in 1960.

Before the race, Van Berg said: "It would mean a great deal to me to win the Derby. It would be one of the greatest things that could happen."

The Padres went into the sixth trailing 2-1, when Garry Templeton walked with one out. Tony Gwynn doubled, sending Templeton to third. Carmelo Martinez popped out, but Kevin Mitchell singled, driving in both runners.

The Padres scored their first run in the first inning. Joey Cora singled, went to third on a single by Templeton and scored as Gwynn grounded into a double play.

NEW YORK (AP) — Tim Raines, playing in his first game one day after re-signing with Montreal, capped a storybook day with a 10th-inning grand slam that gave the Expos an 11-7 come-from-behind victory over the New York Mets Saturday.

Raines, a free agent who left the Expos after last season and rejoined Montreal when he was unable to find a job with another team, also had a triple in his first at-bat, two singles, a walk, three runs scored and a stolen base.

Raines, who led the National League with a .334 batting average last year, had been keeping himself in shape during his layoff by working out daily at his Sarasota home, lifting weights, stretching and running. He became eligible to negotiate with Montreal on May 1 and came to terms on a three-year contract for $4.8 million.

And he was a dual hero in his return, igniting a ninth-inning rally when he legged out a routine ground ball to shortstop off reliever Gene Walter with the Expos trailing 6-4.

Montreal eventually tied the score 6-6 on a single by Tim Wallach, Andres Gallaraga's RBI infield out and Vance Law's two-out single off Doug Sisk.

Byars Breaks His Other Foot

Byars injured the fifth metatarsal bone in his left foot Saturday afternoon making a cut on a pass-pattern drill at Veterans Stadium during the Eagles fourth mini-camp practice, Eagles spokesman Ron Howard said.

"It's sad because Keith was doing so well," Philadelphia Coach Buddy Ryan said. "We can't cry about it. We've got other backs."

Team spokesman Ed Wisneski indicated surgery would be necessary for Byars. If Byars has to undergo another operation, his pro career would be in jeopardy.

Byars, 23, was expected to receive a medical examination by team physician Dr. Vincent DiStefano Saturday night, Howard said. According to Wisneski, Byars would probably not be ready for preseason camp in August.

Byars was the Eagles' leading rusher last year with 577 yards, the most ever by an Eagles rookie. He carried the ball 177 times and scored one touchdown. He also caught 11 passes.

At Ohio State, Byars broke the fifth metatarsal bone in his right foot in pre-season practice on Labor Day 1985.

He returned to see limited playing time, rushing 55 times for 213 yards and four touchdowns in his senior year. In January 1986, Byars underwent surgery to graft a small piece of bone from his hip to his injured foot.

Ryan, the night before the 1986 NFL draft, said on his radio show that Byars was "a medical reject" and that the Eagles would make no attempt to select him.

The following day, Ryan and the Eagles picked Byars in the first round, 10th in the draft, and immediately described him as a "franchise player."

Unknown Is Tied For Charley Pride

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Unheralded Texas pro Jimmy Powell wedged his way to a 4-under-par 68 Saturday and a share of the lead with veterans Dale Douglass and Bobby Nichols after two rounds of the Sunwest Bank-Charley Pride Senior PGA Tour event.

Powell, Douglass and Nichols all shot 68 as the wind and cold temperatures claimed first-round co-leaders Bruce Crampton and Lee Elder and created a traffic jam at the top of the leader board.

The three leaders are at 5-under-par 139 heading into Sunday's final round of the $250,000, 54-hole tournament. Thirteen others are within four shots of the top.

Former major-league pitcher Ralph Terry and New Zealand left-hander Bob Charles are a shot back at 140. Terry, best remembered as the New York Yankee pitcher who served up the home run to Pittsburgh's Bill Mazeroski in the seventh game of the 1960 World Series, had the day's best round, a 67.

Charles, the leading money-winner on the Senior Tour this season, put together a second straight 70 over the tree-lined, par-72 Four Hills Country Club course.

Jim Ferree, Chi Chi Rodriguez and Elder were at 141, with El Collins and Crampton three shots out at 142.

Elder and Crampton started the day tied for the lead after opening-round 68s, but both faltered. Crampton birdied three of the first five holes, then lost five shots to par over the final 11 holes to finish with a 74. Crampton's round included a double-bogey on the par-3 17th.

Finger In Face

Towers Can't Stop Sonics

HOUSTON (AP) — Even with their Twin Towers intact, the Houston Rockets can't seem to figure out how to beat the Seattle SuperSonics.

The Sonics beat Houston in four of their five NBA regular-season meetings when the Rockets' Twin Towers — Ralph Sampson and Akeem Olajuwon — were hobbled with injuries.

But Seattle's own Dynamic Duo of Tom Chambers and Dale Ellis was too much for the Rockets Saturday. Chambers hit nine of his 24 points in overtime and Ellis scored 34 points as the Sonics beat the Rockets 111-106 in the opener of their second-round playoff series.

Ellis played the final minutes with five personal fouls, but it was his 3-point basket with 14 seconds to play that sealed the victory. Chambers capped the scoring on a breakaway dunk with seven seconds left.

"The shot was there, time was running down and I had to do something," Ellis said. "I'll make that shot 50 percent of the time."

Despite his offensive output, Ellis attributed the victory to the Sonics' defense, which has been excellent since a playoff-opening 151-129 blowout at Dallas.

"We are playing good team basketball, especially good team defense," Ellis said. "I think after the embarrassing game in Dallas, we really pulled together. Defense has been the key."

The Rockets had 14 turnovers at the half and finished with 21 turnovers to eight for the Sonics.

"We played great defense and didn't turn it over," said Chambers, who combined with Ellis for the Sonics' entire overtime scoring output. "They had to work real hard for every shot."

Olajuwon, who led Houston with 28 points, was harassed throughout the game by the Sonics defense.

"We simply didn't play our game," Olajuwon said. "We played the way they wanted us to play. The game was too slow. We just didn't get into it. We have to attack that press and shoot dunk shots."

The Sonics eliminated Dallas 3-1 in their first series and now have won four straight playoff games.

"Our confidence level is definitely up," Seattle Coach Bernie Bickerstaff said. "It was serious at practice yesterday and it carried over today."

Houston Coach Bill Fitch said his club, "just didn't execute and missed too many easy shots. They didn't have to stay in tow too long to get the advantage."

After regulation ended tied at 97, Chambers hit two free throws and a basket to put the Sonics on top in overtime. They never trailed from then on as Ellis added a jumper seconds later.

Ellis' game-clinching bomb came after Olajuwon had pulled the Rockets within 106-104 with two straight baskets.

Houston, which spent most of the game playing catch-up, had a chance to win in regulation after Leavell hit a 3-point basket with 1:01 left in the game to tie the score at 97. With 33 seconds to go, Cedric Maxwell came up with a loose ball lost by Ellis.

Robert Reid added 19 for the Rockets, who lost Leavall on fouls and had three starters with five fouls each.

Seattle grabbed a 66-56 lead with five minutes left in the third quarter, hitting three straight baskets after Sampson received an offensive foul call and then scuffled with Seattle's Maurice Lucas.

The biggest previous lead was Seattle's 32-27 advantage early in the second quarter. The Sonics, led by Ellis' 18 points, led 49-48 at the half.

Owner Couldn't Watch Horse

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The Kentucky Derby wasn't half over when Demons Begone owner John Ed Anthony quit watching.

He turned to friends in his box on the finish line at Churchill Downs and said, "He broke down."

The horse was almost walking when Anthony raised his binoculars again. Anthony told his entourage to wait and he began trying to figure a way to get to the colt.

When Anthony popped out of a door and onto the dirt-covered paddock path to the track, he spotted jockey Pat Day heading back to the jockeys' room. They spoke briefly.

"He said he bled (from the nostrils)," Anthony said.

A worker assured him that Demons Begone, unbeaten in his three races as a 3-year-old, had walked onto the van with ease. Anthony came out of the paddock tunnel and made a right turn onto the track.

Two hours after the race, Demons Begone was reported walking and cooling out at trainer Phil Hauswald's barn. Veterinarian Gary Lavin was attending to the horse and said Demons Begone was walking with no apparent discomfort.

Day said he could tell the first time under the finish wire that Demons Begone was not the same colt he was when he won the Arkansas Derby two weeks earlier.

"I knew something was drastically wrong, but I was hoping the crowd and all the excitement was getting to him and he would settle down," Day said. "Then when we turned on the backside he had no run absolutely. He kept letting horses go by him and he wasn't competitive at any point.

"At the half-mile pole I was getting ready to ease him because I could tell he was getting limber-legged, and that's when I looked down and saw the blood coming out of both nostrils. I'm sure he'll be put on Lasix and it'll cure it in time.

"He had given no indication at all before that he had this kind of problem but I know Mr. Hauswald and owner Mr. Anthony will do the right thing."

Lavin said the colt was "cool now, perfectly sound." He said it would be a couple of weeks before he could determine the extent of the bleeding, but he said there was no real explanation for it.

Ryan Not Expecting Another No-hitter

ATLANTA (AP) — Nolan Ryan knows it's unlikely he'll ever pitch another no-hitter in his major league career.

"Realistically the odds aren't very good," Ryan said. "You have to be strong the last two innings. To pitch a game like that, you're probably talking about a minimum of 120 pitches."

Despite having reached his 40th birthday, the hard-throwing Ryan still has a fastball that zooms by batters at more than 90 mph.

The possibility of adding a sixth no-hitter to his record major league total arose Friday in an evening contest against the Atlanta Braves.

He then lost his bid for a 55th career shutout on Glenn Hubbard's RBI single with two out in the seventh, leaving the game at that point with a 10-1 lead and his 255th major league victory safely in hand.

"I never really gave it any thought because I didn't have what I considered good command," Ryan said of a possible no-hitter.

"I don't think I had that good a velocity and I think the ball looked pretty straight tonight."

The Braves had clocked his fastball early in the game at 93-94 mph.

"He usually goes 94, 95, 96," Ashby said.

Ryan departed after yielding three hits, three walks and collecting four more strikeouts to lift his major league record total to 4,317.

He also hit a three-run homer, only the second of his career. It came eight years after his other homer, a shot off Don Sutton of the Los Angeles Dodgers in Ryan's first start with the Astros.

Atlanta Manager Chuck Tanner complained after the game that Ryan had scuffed the balls, showing reporters 18 balls he said were scuffed by Ryan during the game.

"This isn't sour grapes," Tanner said. "They kicked the stew out of us. We couldn't touch him. He's a Hall of Famer. He's fantastic."

Ryan's teammate, Mike Scott, often has been accused of scuffing the ball, but this was a rare charge against Ryan.

Astros President Dick Wagner said at a news conference prior to Saturday night's Houston-Atlanta game that no one has ever proven that Scott or anyone else on the club scuffs the ball.

Wagner complained that National League President A. Bartlett Giamatti told him umpires would continue to check balls for scuff marks on days when Scott pitches.

"We told him the Astros objected to Mike Scott being singled out and hassled," Wagner said.

"I've seen a couple move, but he throws so fast you don't know what it does," Murphy said.

"Sometimes you see pitchers that make you feel some other aerodynamic forces were involved," Murphy said.

Derby Success Has Run In This Family

Every 28 years or so, it seems someone in that family wins the Kentucky Derby.

The sentimentality of it all was almost enough to make the whole family cry.

"I didn't want to burst into tears," Dorothy Scharbauer said. "But it was in my mind."

"Horses are in our blood," Mrs. Scharbauer said. "Dad would have really liked this colt."

"It means an awful lot to her," Pamela Scharbauer said of her mother. "Just the sentimentality of it."

The family raises quarterhorses and operates cattle ranches in west Texas at Midland. But Clarence Scharbauer said his wife expressed an interest in getting back into the thoroughbred business in 1984.

They came to the yearling sales at Keeneland in Lexington and purchased Alysheba for $500,000.

Alysheba had been beset by problems, requiring a throat operation this year to help his breathing. In the Blue Grass Stakes last month at Keeneland, he finished first but was disqualified and placed third for bumping.

"Maybe after this he'll stand on his own," Clarence Scharbauer said. He also credited trainer Jack Van Berg and nearly broke into tears himself as he spoke during a victory party.

"I'm a little bit sentimental when it comes to people who work hard."

His son, Clarence Scharbauer III, said he recalled his family's first Derby win when he was 8 years old.

"I've only been to two Derbys in my life and both of them were winners," he said.

The Rangers scored three runs with two outs in the first. Oddibe McDowell, mired in a 1-for-17 slump, hit his second homer of the season for a 1-0 lead. Consecutive singles by Incaviglia, who also stole second, O'Brien and Sierra produced a 3-0 lead.

The Blue Jays made it 3-1 in the third when Jesse Barfield singled, moved to third on two groundouts and scored on McGriff's single.

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Mike Gallego's suicide sqeeze bunt with the bases loaded in the 13th inning scored Mark McGwire and gave the Oakland Athletics a 3-2 victory over Detroit on Saturday.

It was Oakland's second straight 13-inning victory over the Tigers.

Stan Javier chopped an infield single over Petry's head to load the bases before Gallego, whose eighth-inning error helped the Tigers tie the game, bunted a 1-0 pitch to score McGwire.

The Athletics scored in the first inning when the first four batters to face Detroit starter Frank Tanana singled. Consecutive singles by Tony Phillips, Reggie Jackson, Carney Lansford, and Jose Canseco gave the Athletics a 2-0 advantage.

The Tigers tied the game in the eighth. Pat Sheridan was hit by a pitch and Mike Heath was safe when Gallego bobbled his grounder for an error. After Lou Whitaker's sacrifice bunt, consecutve RBI singles by Alan Trammell and Larry Herndon tied the game.

Gooden Faces Tough Road

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The toughest start Dwight Gooden will ever make comes now, away from the pitching mound.

He must start his life over again, at age 22.

"He will be recovering the rest of his life," New York Mets General Manager Frank Cashen said.

Forever, Gooden's brilliant career will carry an asterisk that denotes cocaine. No matter how many more Cy Young Awards he wins or how many no-hitters he throws, he can't shake the past. And someone somewhere will remember that Gooden took drugs.

Gooden's goal now must be: Don't let it happen again. If he relapses, he will be suspended from baseball for at least one year, and the consequences could be even more far reaching.

LaMarr Hoyt, 1983 Cy Young winner who could not contain his drug use, went to jail. He was suspended this season by Commissioner Peter Ueberroth, might lose his $1 million-a-year salary and may never play again.

Others who went through cocaine rehabilitation, as Gooden did for 28 days in April, were more fortunate.

Tim Raines got treatment after the 1982 season and came back as a perennial All-Star. Lonnie Smith, who underwent rehabilitation during the 1983 season, resumed a productive career. Keith Hernandez, Gooden's teammate, and Dave Parker were among others who were conditionally suspended after being tied to cocaine, but they have returned as top-notch players.

Whether Gooden is able to follow their examples depends on how well he follows his after-care program. Dr. Alan Lans, associate director of the Smithers Alcoholism and Treatment Center where Gooden underwent rehabilitation, says those who follow the program can expect a 75 percent recovery rate.

Said Smith: "If he's really sincere about not going back into what got him there, he has to believe everything they told him at the center and follow through on it. People who don't follow through usually wind up relapsing."

"I hope he doesn't feel any pressure," said Darryl Strawberry, Gooden's closest friend on the Mets. "I don't want him to think it's his fault we're .500. Having him here will make a big difference, but what matters now is how he feels about himself.

"His teammates respect him and care for him," Strawberry said. "How he performs isn't as important to us right now as his frame of mind."

While at the center, doctors determined that Gooden was an occasional user, not addicted. But it is important Gooden does not think he can control cocaine the way he can control a 95 mph fastball.

"Do it one time and you're right back in the same bag," Smith said in an interview with The New York Times. "You can't do controlled drugs."

The Mets plan to have roving minor-league coach Greg Pavlick travel with Gooden when he returns to the major leagues, possibly in early June. That's one form of support he'll receive from the Mets. The other will be psychological.

"He'll find out right away there's a lot of support for him here," said Mets relief pitcher Roger McDowell, who may return about the same time as Gooden after he recovers from a hernia operation. "We'll be there for him whenever he needs us."

Gooden has not said anything on the subject, other than a minute-long admission last Thursday that he "made a mistake."

He repeatedly denied drug rumors last season and, after getting involved in a fight with Tampa police during the winter, made an anti-drug commerical for local police. The commercial was never shown and shelved in spring training after Gooden took a voluntary drug test that was positive for cocaine.

The Mets do not plan to let Gooden say much on the matter. The team has shielded him from the intense New York media since he arrived in the majors in 1984 at age 19. He spends much of his nonplaying time in the trainer's room, off-limits to reporters. Cashen said no one-on-one interviews will be allowed with Gooden "in the forseeable future."

Gooden will work out in private at Shea Stadium for about three weeks, then make a couple of tuneup starts in the minors.

Lans said he did not believe Gooden suffered any physical impairment by using cocaine and there was no evidence that the stress of life in the majors caused his problem.

"He has lived in the glare of publicity. That's part of the game," Cashen said. "The best medical opinions say his best chances of successfully readjusting are going to be maximized if the amount of stress he has to undergo is minimized."

But that stress level will be high both on and off the field.

"The first year will be very tough because there are always people throwing it in your face. Especially on the road," Smith said.

Pohl Charges Back In Vegas

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Dan Pohl came from nine shots off the pace with a bogey-free 65 Saturday and muscled his way into a 4-way tie for the lead after three rounds of the $1.3 million Las Vegas Invitational.

Pohl, fresh from a 16-day layoff, completed three rounds — one each over three desert resort courses — in 205, 11 shots under par.

He left the Desert Inn Country Club without knowing he was tied for the lead going into the final round of the chase for the $225,000 first prize.

Hal Sutton, playing at Spanish Trail, was three shots ahead of the field at one point, but 4-putted from 35 feet for a double bogey on the 15th hole.

He was still one in front when Pohl finished play.

But Sutton gave back another shot when he dumped his second shot in the water on the 18th and dropped back into a tie with Pohl, rookie Ken Perry and Scotland's Ken Brown.

It also set up a sizeable traffic jam in the struggle for the biggest prize to date on the American Tour. Ten men are within two shots of the top.

"A dumb mistake," Norman fumed after he hit into the water on the 18th hole the Las Vegas Country Club.

Norman was 8-under for the tournament at the time and figured he needed to get to nine to have a chance to make a successful defense of his title.

But his second shot caught the pond on the par-5 finishing hole, and he wound up with a bogey for a 67 that left him at 209, four shots back.

"I made a dumb mistake, so I deserve a dumb bogey," he said. "Four shots is too much to make up."

A single stroke back at 206 were former champion Curtis Strange, Andy Magee and South African David Frost. Frost and Strange had 67s in the windy weather and Magee shot 69, all at Desert Inn.

Tied at 207 were Payne Stewart, Bruce Soulsby of New Zealand and Paul Azinger, who holed a 5-iron shot for an eagle-2 in his round of 67. Soulsby and Stewart each had a 69. All three played at Spanish Trail.

Second-round leader Larry Rinker drove into the water, left another shot in a bunker and staggered off the ninth hole at the Desert Inn with a triple bogey that opened up the tournament to a variety of contenders. He wound up with a 78 that left him at 208.

The tournament, orginally scheduled for 5 days and 90 holes, was reduced to a 72-hole format after storms disrupted Wednesday's play.

Goalby's Mistake His Own Doing

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Bob Goalby had this problem — a problem of his own making.

"Like a lot of guys, baseball players, all kinds of athletes, I'd shaved a couple of years off my age. It was a pretty common practice back then," Goalby said. "You had a real age and a playing age."

About 25 years after his biography first was entered in the PGA Tour records, long after he'd won the Masters and 10 other titles, Goalby found his playing age was his handicap. It was costing him money.

The record said he was too young for the Seniors Tour, that young circuit for old players that Goalby helped create.

The records were corrected, the real age entered and Goalby joined some of his old friends and golfing foes on the over-50 tour that has grown, in eight years, from a tentative, two-event exhibit with a total purse of $250,000 to a 34-tournament Tour with $11 million in prize money.

"We really didn't know what we were getting into or where we were going," said Don January, the slow-moving Texan who calls himself "Old Folks." "Whatever it was that we expected, this is more."

It was an idea whose time had come.

— "The Seniors Tour is on a roll now. The players like it and it's obvious that the fans like it. It's good for golf. It's fun," Arnold Palmer said.

— "We're having the times of our lives," said Billy Casper, another of the over-the-hill gang who found a second career.

— "Now it's easier to pass 50 than it is to pass 40," said Chi Chi Rodriguez.

— "It's reached the point now that any player who has played the Tour, when he approaches 50, he has a decision to make," said Dale Douglass.

The decision: He must think about rejoining Palmer and Casper and Gary Player and Peter Thomson and Roberto DeVicenzo and Julius Boros and Sam Snead and Tommy Bolt and Gene Littler in a revival that has captured the imagination of the golf public.

The reason for the decision: Money.

The more successful seniors are making more money now than they did at the peak of their regular Tour careers.

Player, for example, led the American money-winning list in 1961 with $64,540. Last year, as a senior, he won $291,190.

Player Dies

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Hernell "Jeep" Jackson, a Texas-El Paso basketball star and first-team All-Western Athletic Conference player, died Saturday after collapsing during a game at Fort Bliss, officials said.

Jackson, 23, a UTEP senior, was with a team of Fort Bliss all-stars playing a team composed of Houston Oilers football players when he collapsed shortly before 3 p.m. MDT, officials said.

Preliminary indications were that he died of cardiac arrest, said Lt. Col. Jim Lawson, public affairs officer at the Army base.

Barkley And Erving Hold The Key For Bucks' Win

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — If the Milwaukee Bucks hope to beat the Philadelphia 76ers in the deciding game of their first-round NBA playoff series Sunday in Milwaukee, they'll have to derail a feisty Charles Barkley and the irrepressible Julius Erving.

Barkley and Erving combined Friday night to trigger the 76ers into a 2-2 deadlock in this best-of-five series for the right to meet the Boston Celtics in the second round.

Barkley scored 25 points, took down 13 rebounds and handed out four assists. Erving scored 22, adding six assists, one steal and two blocked shots as the 76ers overcame a 17-point second-period deficit to win 124-118.

Philadelphia's "dynamic duo" is ably assisted by guard Maurice Cheeks. Erving is the leader, the inspiration. Barkley is the enforcer. Cheeks is the playmaker, and a brilliant defender.

The meaning of the series — a step for one team toward a potential championship — has in some ways been overshadowed by the realization that a 76ers loss would end the spectacular 16-year pro career of Erving, whose performances belie his coming retirement.

Erving remains the focal point for the media's questions after the game. Friday night was no exception, as Erving held court on what to expect on the court Sunday.

"There are no surprises anymore," he began.

" Both teams know each other. The best team will win the series. We have the confidence and the momentum going into the game.

"It's time to step forward and prove that we're the better team. We all knew that this was a series that would go down to the wire, and series like this often go down to the last shot.

"There is really no single element that you can look at at this stage. It's like a chess game. The reigns are loose. We have the ability to control the tempo of the game.

"We absolutely must play 48 minutes (at full speed) on Sunday," Moncrief said after Friday's loss. "Every shot is more important. Turnovers are no longer acceptable.

Detroit And Atlanta Set For A Tough Guy Battle

ATLANTA (AP) — With the preliminaries out of the way, Detroit and Atlanta resume their rivalry Sunday to determine which team is the true new tough guy of the NBA's Eastern Conference.

Atlanta edged Detroit at season s end to win the Central Division title with the second-best record in the conference.

Detroit has been resting since Wednesday when the Pistons completed a three-game sweep of Washington.

"They're tough," Dominique Wilkins, the Hawks' All-Star forward said of Detroit.

"They did have a chance to rest, but we still have somewhat of an advantage because we play at home. We always play better at home."

The first game of the best-of-seven series is scheduled for 3:30 p.m. in The Omni. The second game will be either Tuesday or Wednesday before the series moves to Detroit for two games.

The winner advances to the Eastern Conference finals and could face any of three teams. Boston, which swept Chicago in the first round, awaits the outcome of Sunday's game between Milwaukee and Philadelphia before beginning a semifinal series against the winner.

The series is a rematch of last year's first-round pairing, which Atlanta won 3-1, including a 114-113 double overtime victory in the Silverdome to clinch the series.

Atlanta then lost to Boston 4-1 in the semifinal series.

The Pistons and Hawks split their six games in the regular season, with each team winning once on the other team's home floor and four of the games being decided by five points or less.

"At this point, we're not afraid of anybody (because) this is the best team we've had since I've been here," Pistons center Bill Laimbeer said.

Wilkins, whose 29-point average was the second-best in the league, averaged 28 points in four games against the Pistons. Kevin Willis, the other forward, averaged 22 points and 15.7 rebounds in all six games. Guards Randy Wittman (10.2) and Glenn Rivers (11.5) and center Tree Rollins are scheduled to start.

Mike McGee, the Hawks designated long-range shooter, also hurt Detroit during the regular season, averaging 13.8 points a game, mostly from 3-point range.

Joining Laimbeer as playoff starters are guards Isiah Thomas and Joe Dumars and forwards Adrian Dantley and Rick Mahorn.

Thomas and Dantley averaged 21.3 points each against the Bullets. They also led the way against Atlanta averaging 21.2 and 19.7 points respectively.

The last time the two teams played, the Hawks took a 101-99 homecourt victory on April 10 that virtually assured them of the Central Division title.

Atlanta then chased Boston until the last day of the season when the Hawks lost in Boston Garden, giving the Celtics the best record in the conference.

But the Hawks, who had an Atlanta best 35-6 record in The Omni this year, retain the homecourt advantage for this series.

Knights Hand Rose 1st Big East Loss

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Northern Nash's Coach Ron Ramsey fired his team up early, as the Knights handed Rose High School its first Big East Conference loss Friday night.

However, Ramsey didn't really plan to do it the way he did, nor did he plan on watching the rest of the game from the stands.

But early on in the 7-5 victory by his Knights, Ramsey found himself banished from the ballpark after a first inning argument with plate umpire Joe Colenda.

"That turned out to be a big factor in the game," Rose Coach Ronald Vincent said later. "It really pumped them up a notch."

Meanwhile, the Knights took advantage of mistakes by the Rampants to forge the early lead, then, when Rose rallied to take the lead, to come back and gain the victory anyway.

The loss by Rose served to nearly knot the two up in the Big East race. Both now have one conference loss. Rose, however, with six wins, is a half-game up on the Knights, who have five. Both teams lost games in the first run-through of the league — the Rampants, one, and the Knights, two.

"We didn't do a lot of positive things tonight," Vincent moaned. "We didn't hit with men on base and we didn't get them out when we had the chance. It serves to make next week's games all that more important."

Rose must travel to Rocky Mount on Tuesday — always a hard place for them to play — then go on to Wilson Hunt, another contender, on Wednesday.

"I think we were a little overconfident...careless," Vincent said. "We didn't do the things we had to do, the things we usually do."

Rose ace Tom Moye took the loss, going the distance. However, he had his ups-and-downs. He gave up six hits, three of them for extra bases, and walked five while striking out 10. However, he was also charged with four wild pitches while catcher Axel Smith had two passed ball.

Northern struck early, scoring three times in the first inning as Coach Ramsey made his hasty exit.

Tim Marshmon led off with a walk and moved up on a passed ball. He took third when a pickoff attempt by Smith was off-target. After a pop-up got one man out, Paul Strickland's third strike was a wild pitch, sending him scurrying to first and Marshmon home. Smith chased the ball down, however, and relayed to Moye, who put the tag on Marshmon for the out.

That infuriated Ramsey, who charged the plate and went nose-to-nose with Colenda for several minutes before finally getting the heave-ho.

Rose put men in scoring position in the bottom of the frame, but came away with nothing.

Then, in the third, Rose struck for three to tie it up. With one down, Smith reached on an error and Todd Galloway singled to right. The ball got through the fielder and Smith came around to score with Galloway ending up on third. He scored from there on a balk. David Daniels followed with a homer to dead center, knotting it at 3-3.

Rose then pushed out to a 5-3 lead in the fifth. Galloway opened with a single but died at second on Daniels' infield grounder. Curtis Perkins followed with a single and the two stole up a base. Both scored on Robbie McDonald's single to center.

But the Knights then rallied for three in the sixth to take a 6-5 lead. Boone opened with another double and Rouse walked. Frankie Joyner laid down a bunt that no one could handle in time, loading the bases. Moye bounced one off Smith's chest that bounced off the dugout fence down the third base line. By the time it was chased down, both Boone and Rouse had scored and Joyner was on third. He scored on Jeff Turner's sacrifice fly with the go-ahead run.

The Knights added insurance in the top of the seventh. Marshmon led off with a walk and went all the way to second when the ball got away from Smith. He moved up on an out and scored on a wild pitch, making it 7-5.

Rose left men in scoring position in both the sixth and seventh innings, but couldn't rally again.

Boone led the Knight hitting with two while Perkins had three and Galloway had two. For Daniels, it was the first action in several weeks as he returned from a broken thumb.

The loss drops Rose to 13-2 overall while the Knights go up to 11-4.

Knight Is Reprimanded; Indiana Is Fined By NCAA

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — Indiana University basketball coach Bob Knight has been reprimanded and the university fined because of Knight's action during a tournament game, the National Collegiate Athletic Association announced today.

The action by the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Committee involved a regional tournament game in Cincinnati on March 22, when the Hoosiers, who went on to win the national championship, defeated Louisiana State.

The NCAA announcement said Knight was reprimanded for having "conducted himself in an inappropriate manner" at the scorer's table after getting a technical foul for going onto the court.

The NCAA announcement said the basketball committee was withholding $10,000 from Indiana's share of net receipts for the NCAA tournament, which total $1,003,375.

Knight went onto the court during a timeout to ask official Tom Frain what had been called on the play prior to the timeout.

Knight reacted in surprise at Fraim's call and took his case to official Paul Houseman on the sidelines. He then turned to Tournament Committee representative Gene Corrigan, Notre Dame's athletic director who was seated at the officials' booth, and voiced his displeasure, pounding his fist down and hitting a telephone.

Knight was summoned by the committee to appear at a hearing in Chicago the Friday after his team beat Syracuse for the NCAA championship.

The committee made its decision on the penalty and the university had until 6 p.m. Thursday to appeal it to the 12-member NCAA Executive Council.

Indiana officials notified the NCAA that neither the university nor Knight would appeal the committe's decision to the NCAA Executive Committee, which meets May 4-5 in Kansas City.

IU did not appeal, and the penalties were expected to be announced by the NCAA this afternoon.

Knight, in a statement to the Bloomington Herald-Telephone, said, "These men, over their careers, have made a tremendous impact on the game that I like so well. I cannot contest their right to make such a decision, as outlined in the NCAA book of rules."

Virginia Athletic Director Richard Schultz, the chairman of the committee, said the committee's action dealt solely with "what he did at the table and the pounding the table."

Aspirin, Antacid Help Bowa In A Tough Year

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Aspirin and antacids are Larry Bowa's constant companions in what so far has been a distressing season for the first-year San Diego manager and his youthful Padres.

"To be honest, I didn't think it would be this difficult," the 41-year-old Bowa said. "But I like what I'm doing or I wouldn't subject myself to all this mental strain."

Before each game, Bowa takes two aspirin to ease his mind and makes sure he has a fresh package of Rolaids in his back pocket.

The ultimate pain relief for the former all-star shortstop is winning, but that remedy has been in short supply during his first month.

"What I do that I shouldn't do is take these things very personally. I really take it personally when we fail," said Bowa, whose Padres had a 6-16 record through Wednesday, worst in baseball.

"It's like a player getting his first hit," Bowa said. "You want to get it out of the way so there's no added pressure. Otherwise, you start to doubt yourself and start doubting other people around you."

San Diego's roster is not making it easy for Bowa. Five of eight starters have never been regulars.

In their first 22 games, the Padres did not score come from behind to win a game. They also have had losing streaks of five, three, five, and two games. They have won two games in a row only twice.

Before last Sunday's game, Bowa called a team meeting and berated players he thought were developing losing, uncaring attitudes. The team responded with a shutout of the Los Angeles Dodgers and beat the St. Louis Cardinals on Tuesday.

Reserve catcher Mark Parent, who played for Bowa when he managed the Padres' farmclub in Las Vegas to a Pacific Coast League title last year, rated Bowa's outburst a "9.5 on the Richter scale."

"I'll tell you how worked up he got. By the time it was over, he had white stuff at the corners of his mouth," outfielder Tony Gwynn said.

Known for his determined style of play and hot temper in his 16 years as a player, Bowa simmered through weeks of losing before, as he put it, "flipping out."

Considering the Padres play and Bowa's state of mind, it was inevitable.

"For a while, I was calm even though I was burning up inside," he said. "I really think that they (the players) were waiting for me to flip out. It's not an everyday kind of thing. If it was, I wouldn't be here for more than two weeks because flipping out is not good for your health."

Bowa said his speech was intended for the 15-16 guys he thought were just going through the motions. He apologized to the eight or nine players he thinks are hustling.

"What they have to realize is that when I get on them it's to make them do better," he said. "As a player, I got ripped by a lot of managers. I think it made me a better player."

But he said he's been getting a lot of advice to cool off — for his own good.

Padres General Manager Jack McKeon has told Bowa he needs to relax more. Cincinnati Manager Pete Rose counseled patience, while Los Angles Manager Tom Lasorda reminded Bowa that he has no control over a pitcher's hanging slider that's tagged 400-feet.

"I appreciate their concern and advice, which I'm trying to grab hold of," Bowa said. "But it's not easy until I really believe it."

He clearly didn't believe it when, in the Padres' first home game, Bowa was ejected after a five-minute tirade over an umpire's call.

Earnhardt's Style May Be Dangerous

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — A lot has been said and written about Dale Earnhardt's unmannerly attitude on a racetrack.

The two-time Winston Cup champion is known for his bump-now-and-ask-questions-later driving style.

But Sunday, in the Winston 500, picking the wrong time to charge through another driver could result in something far worse than a dented car and bruised feelings.

"On short tracks, running 90 to 100 (mph), you can get away with rubbing fenders," explained Bill Elliott, who will start from the pole in Sunday's race, just two rows ahead of the fifth-place Earnhardt. "You can't do it here. You just don't slide off into the grass here.

"I hope he doesn't do anything that foolish as far as jeopardizing you by putting himself in the position to be bumping past people," Elliott added. "He races you every lap on every track. But you have to think out there. If it's a matter of taking too big a chance, I'll wait until the time and the situation are right. Dale doesn't usually wait for anything."

Darrell Waltrip, who built a reputation as an all-out aggressor in the early days of his driving career, said, "You have to learn you can't win at all costs. Sometimes it's a hard lesson.

"We can't have any foolishness here because this is a place where people can get hurt.

"Earnhardt's got the best crew, got the best car. The Boy's got a lot of ability. He's got no excuse to be acting like that.

"I told some people the other day that if I had that situation, I'd be trying to show people how good I am, not how bad I am," added Waltrip, who will start from third Sunday in the 1 p.m. CDT race.

Meanwhile, the subject of all the speculation and accusations, was basking in the warm glow of four straight victories and six triumphs in the first eight races this season.

"There are times I make a mistake on a racetrack, and I admit them," said Earnhardt. "But I'm not going to apologize to anybody for the way I drive. That's racing. The idea is to get there quicker than anybody else and to get past the guys who are in front of you. That's what I try to do."

Looking ahead to Sunday's $600,000 race, which will pay the winner about $75,000, Earnhardt said, "There's more people out there to race than just Bill. It's going to be a real competitive race."

Elliott, who set an all-time 500-mile race record of 186.288 in 1985, agreed with Earnhardt.

"As tight as the field is now, there are some very good competitive cars," Elliott said. "And as hot as it's gonna be Sunday, it's gonna be one of those races where just about anybody can win.

"Handling is not usually very important here, but it's different this week because of the heat."

Temperatures are expected to reach into the high 80s during the race, just as they have each day since the track opened officially for practice on Wednesday.

Elliott, who was having a year almost as dominant as Earnhardt's, came back from nearly two laps down to win the 1985 Winston 500.

Asked if anybody could do that Sunday, he replied: "You couldn't do it. There's too many cars that are about equal."

The race, which will be televised live by ESPN, features a 41-car lineup in which 39 cars qualified at more than 200 mph.

Vikings Roll By Pats

MOREHEAD CITY — Bronswell Patrick tossed a one hitter and helped his own cause by going 3-4 from the plate as D.H. Conley blanked West Carteret, 6-0, in a high school baseball game Friday.

Butch Mills and Brian Bullock led off with a singles. Patrick then singled to left to score Mills. After a double steal advanced the runners to second and third, Brian Joyner hit a long fly ball and Bullock was thrown out at plate. Sherwood Wilder then doubled home Patrick.

The Vikings added three runs in the fifth. Bullock and Patrick singled and Joyner followed with a three-run homer to make it 5-0. The Vikings added another run in the sixth to complete the scoring.

Patrick struck out nine and walked nine while picking up his third victory of the season against one loss.

Mills, Bullock and Wilder all went 2-4 to support the Vikings.

Conley improves to 12-2 overall and 6-0 in the Coastal Conference and the Vikings return to action Tuesday at Washington.

Lions' Top Pick Rogers To Be Charged With Assault

SEATTLE (AP) — Defensive end Reggie Rogers, the Detroit Lions' top pick in Tuesday's NFL draft, will be charged with gross misdemeanor assault involving his former girl friend, the Seattle city attorney's office said Friday.

The 6-foot-6, 270-pound Rogers, who starred for the University of Washington, became the highest NFL draft choice in the school's football history when he was picked seventh overall by the Lions.

He is the younger brother of the late Don Rogers, who died at the family home in Sacramento, Calif., of a cocaine overdose last year.

Jerome Vainisi, a lawyer representing the Lions, said Rogers was en route to Tampa, Fla., for a three-day orientation camp and could not be reached for comment.

The city attorney's office reported that Rogers will be ordered to appear in city court and answer the charge, which carries a maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $5,000 fine, according to Doug Whalley, chief criminal deputy with the city attorney's office.

Whalley said information from Alicia M. Wright and a witness established enough evidence to charge Rogers with assault.

Rogers is accused of grabbing Wright around the neck and throwing her against a wall outside her Seattle apartment on April 22, a police report taken at the time said.

Wright told police that the assault occurred while she was involved in an argument with Rogers over a purse he had given her earlier. At the time, Wright said she was unsure if she would prosecute Rogers for fear of retaliation.

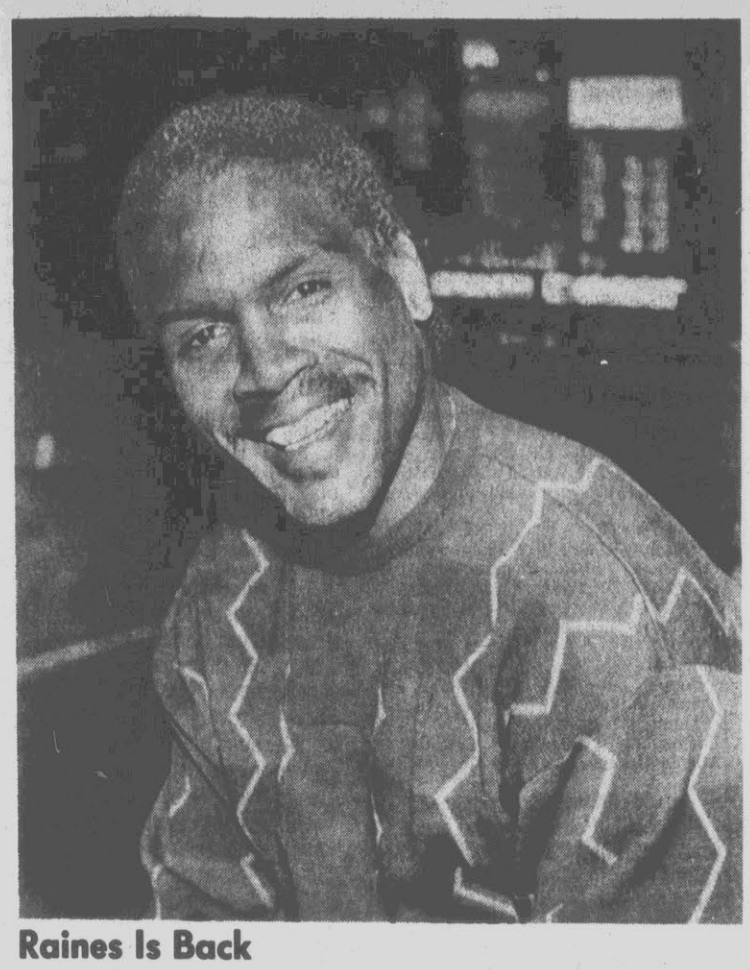
Unwanted Free Agents Rejoin Teams



Raines Is Back

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Tim Raines and Rich Gedman were expected to start Saturday, and Ron Guidry and Bob Boone will soon join them in starting lineups as free agents flocked to their former teams as quickly as possible.

Friday marked the first day free agents could return to their 1986 teams, and after months of being apart, it took only hours for four of them to reach agreement. Only Doyle Alexander did not, and he may be close to rejoining the Atlanta Braves.

"I feel proud to say I'll be wearing a Montreal unifor again," Raines said. "Now I can't wait to get on the field and play."

Raines was scheduled to start this afternoon in New York against the Mets. Gedman was expected to start tonight for the Boston Red Sox in California. Guidry, back with the New York Yankees, and Boone, with California, will begin training programs in the minors. Raines, Gedman and Guidry all received offers from ther teams, but none of those proposals matched what their former clubs offered. That led to further charges by the players' union that owners were in collusion to restrict free-agent movement and drive down salaries. A grievance on the issue is currently in the hearing stage.

Raines was courted by San Diego, Atlanta, Minnesota and Seattle, Gedman was approached by Houston and Oakland and Guidry talked to Baltimore and Minnesota.

Three other proinent free agents had already signed. Andre Dawson left Montreal for the Chicago Cubs, Lance Parrish went from Detroit to Philadelphia and Bob Horner departed Atlanta to play in Japan.

Raines signed a three-year contract for $5 million, $200,000 more than Montreal offered after last season ended. He did not accept the Expos' offer of salary arbitration on Jan. 8, thus makinghim a free agent who could not negotiate with his former team until May 1.

Raines led the National League with a .334 average and stole 70 bases last season. He kept himself in shape by working out in Sarasota, Fla., and watched in street clothes as the Expos lost 7-6 Friday night in New York.

"I wanted to suit up and pinch-hit and hit a home run," Raines said.

"I don' remember a lot of things I said, and a lot of things I said I didn't mean," said Raines, who will not lose money for the time he missed. "A lot of it was out of frustration. ... But it's over now and I'm happy."

Raines' teammates welcomed him back, covering his new locker in New York with a large sheet of paper they all autographed.

"I'm Not Getting Your Errors This Year," fellow outfielder Mitch Webster wrote as joke, adding, "You're A 'Lfer.'"

"I Used To Love Left Field," wrote Dave Engle, one of those the Expos have shuffled in the outfield this season.

The terms of Gedman's two-year contract were not announced, but Red Sox co-owner and chief operating officer Haywood Sullivan said the catcher would not be paid for the 25 days he missed in April.

When Gedman rejected a three-year, $2.65-million offer, he Red Sox said they would leave that proposal on the bargaining table.

"After much discussion, we decided two years was more equitable for both parties," Boston General Manager Lou Gorman said.

"I feel I'm in as good baseball shape as possible, considering all the snow and bad weather we've had this spring," Gedman said. "I worked hard, doing what I could to be ready for my return. I was optimistic that things would work out and I'd come back."

Guidry's deal will reportedly pay him $1,558,242 for two years.

Guidry and the Yankees were only $50,000 apart on a two-year contract when their talks ended in early January and the 36-year-old lefthander became a free agent. Guidry wanted $850,000 a year..

Although Guidry slipped to a 9-12 record and 3.98 ERA in 1986, the 11-year veteran's career mark is 163-80. Last year, Guidry was paid $975,000.

"When he builds up his innings, he willmove up to Columbus (of the Class AAA International League) and get an outing there" before joining the Yankees, Yankees General Manager Woody Woodward said.

The terms of Boone's contract were not revealed, but it was believed to be for the remainder of the 1987 season at a figure less than the $883,000 the Angels offered the catcher last winter. Boone's deal was for a reported $77,154.

Boone, 39, will begin a conditioning assignment at Palm Springs, Calif., with the Angels' minor league affiliate in the Class A California League.

Alexander and the Braves met for three hours Friday.

Alexander, 36, went the free agent route when he declined to sign a two-year contract for $950,000 per year.

McLeod To Talk To Shinn

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Former Phoenix Suns coach John MacLeod will meet next week with Charlotte's NBA officials to discuss coaching the city's NBA expansion team.

"I'm very interested," MacLeod said from Atlanta, where he is working with WTBS. "I've heard a lot of good things about George (Shinn) and about Charlotte. The thought of taking a team from scratch and building it into a championship contender is very exciting."

MacLeod, 49, is scheduled to meet Wednesday with Shinn, who is managing general partner and majority stockholder of the Charlotte team that will begin play in the 1988-89 season.

"Several people in the league have called me with suggestions on things since we were awarded the franchise," Shinn said. "One owner recommended MacLeod, both as a coach and a person."

MacLeod coached the Suns for 13½ season, starting in the 1973-74 season and continuing through Feb. 26 of this year, when he was dismissed with his team at 22-34. At the time, his tenure was the longest of any active NBA coach and the third longest in NBA history.

At Phoenix, he was 579-543 in regular season play and 37-44 in the playoffs. He had a record of 80-79 in six seasons at Oklahoma.

His best season at Phoenix was in 1980-81, when the Suns were 57-25 in the regular season.

Sixers Top Bucks To Tie Series

By The Associated Press

The Doctor and his associates have at least one more house call to make this season.

For a while, it looked as if Julius Erving might be playing in his last NBA game as Philadelphia trailed Milwaukee by 17 points three times in the second period.

But the 76ers finally tied the score 67-67 with 7:25 left in the third quarter and built a 77-70 lead with 3:44 to play en route to a 124-118 victory, sending their NBA first-round playoff series to a decisive fifth game in Milwaukee on Sunday.

Someone asked Barkley if he was happy that Dr. "J's" retirement was delayed another game.

Barkley, who also grabbed 13 rebounds, said, "I'm not worried about Doc's last game. I'm worried about this being Charles' last game. Hey, this is a team effort."

Erving didn't spend much time concerning himself that retirement might be 48 minutes away. He shot 7-for-14 from the field, 8-for-8 from the foul line.

"The prospect of playing my last game wasn't something that I thought a lot about," said Erving, who also had six assists, two blocked shots and a steal.

"I tried to block it out of my mind, but sometimes when it came back I refused to focus on it."

Elsewhere Friday night, Atlanta eliminated Indiana in four games with a 101-97 victory and Golden State tied its series with Utah at 2-2, winning 98-94.

Maurice Cheeks hit a 17-foot jumper to put Philadelphia ahead to stay. The closest the Bucks got was 95-90 with 8:25 remaining. The 76ers' lead ranged from six points to 13 the rest of the way.

Wingate scored 12 points in the second quarter and triggered the defense as the Sixers pecked away at the Bucks' lead. In the third period, Cliff Robinson scored 11 of his 21 points as Philadelphia tied the game and went ahead.

In the final quarter, Barkley collected 12 points and Erving 10 to keep the Sixers ahead.

Philadelphia won the game at the foul line, making 46 of 50 free throws. "The refs were calling a lot of fouls which let them get back into the ball game," Milwaukee Coach Don Nelson said. "These teams are evenly matched and Sunday should be a heck of a ball game."

Hawks 101, Pacers 97

Dominique Wilkins scored 30 points, including the go-ahead basket and a clinching pair of free throws in the closing minutes, as the Hawks beat the Indiana Pacers to win their first-round NBA playoff series in four games.

The victory moves the Hawks into the Eastern Conference semifinals against Detroit. That series opens Sunday in Atlanta.

Wilkins had 14 of his points in the final period and put the Hawks ahead for good at 95-93 with 1:32 to play, scoring on a rebound of a missed free throw by teammate Glenn Rivers. Wilkins then stole the ball from Pacers rookie Chuck Person and hit two free throws after he was fouled by John Long.

"I figured I was playing so bad, I had to do something," Wilkins said. "Once I got my rhythm going, I was able to get in the lane, get some easy baskets, get to the line, get a couple offensive rebounds."

Purvis Short came off the bench to score 32 points and Golden State rallied from a 15-point deficit late in the third quarter to a beat Utah and even their first-round series at 2-2. The decisive fifth game will be played Sunday in Utah.

The Warriors were trailing 72-57 with 3:28 left in the third quarter when Short sparked an 11-2 run to pull within 74-68 entering the final quarter.

Short's free throw with 7:33 remaining in the game gave the Warriors an 82-81 lead, which they never relinquished. Golden State outscored Utah 25-9 during the pivotal span of eight minutes.

SuperSonics-Rockets

Seattle beat Houston four of five times during the NBA regular season, but the SuperSonics won't be depending on past performances when the two teams meet today in a second-round playoff series.

"We played them twice when Akeem (Olajuwon) was out and twice when (Ralph) Sampson was out," Sonics center Tom Chambers said. "So this is a completely different team we'll be facing."

The Sonics spoiled an intra-state showdown by upsetting the Dallas Mavericks 3-1 in their best-of-five first-round playoff series while the Rockets were eliminating Portland 3-1.

"I'm going to be realistic — we're the underdogs," Seattle Coach Bernie Bickerstaff said.

The Rockets defeated Portland 113-101 Thursday night to clinch their best-of-five series 3-1 with twin towers Olajuwon and Sampson rounding back into playing shape.

Pitino Decides To Stay At PC

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Providence College Coach Rick Pitino, the NCAA Basketball Coach of the Year, on Friday ended all speculation that he would be joining the professional ranks by announcing his intention to return to the Friars for a third season.

Pitino, 34, said at the news conference he might sign a new five-year contract at the small Dominican college or continue with the remaining two years of his current four-year contract.

"I will be staying with Providence College," the coach said. "I felt all along I would be back because this is such a great job."

Pitino had been wooed by the New York Knickerbockers and the Phoenix Suns of the National Basketball Association, but said Friday that only the Knicks expressed serious interest.

The coach said he met with the Knicks as recently as Tuesday but they were not ready to decide on a new head coach by Friday, his self-imposed deadline for making a decision.

"In no way did the New York Knicks sour on me, nor did I sour on them," the New York native said. "The timing was just wrong for me for the Knicks."

The Knicks reportedly were offering a five-year, $3.2 million contract, but Pitino said Friday no numbers had been discussed. Pitino was an assistant coach for the Knicks before joining the Friars.

He is believed to make $200,-000 a year at Providence, including his summer camp and sneaker-endorsement contract with Converse.

Pitino has denied published reports that the new contract with Providence College will offer $350,000 annually.

Fishing Report

Although local waters have been high lately, fishing is starting to improve as rivers, creeks and ponds slowly return to normal levels.

According to Bernice Ballance of Mattmamuskeet National Wildlife Refuge, "fishing is really good" now at the Lake Mattamuskeet. She said a lot of bass have been caught during the past week in canals adjoining the lake, especially those near refuge headquarters.

James Faulkner, owner of Ja-Lynn Sport Shop near Grimesland, said nice catches of bream and bass have been taken from local creeks.

"Trainter's Creek is beautiful right now," he commented. "Crappie are biting minnows, the bream can't turn down a cricket and the bass are hitting anything." He said bass have also been hitting crickets at Cambell's Creek.

Robert Howard of Blanche's Trading Post on the Washington Highway said he has not heard any good fishing reports. "The water's still too high," he said.

River Park North on Mumford Road, which features five large ponds near the Tar River, is experiencing problems with flooding.

"The water has only dropped a few inches in a couple of days and a lot of the fishing spots are not accessible," said park Supervisor Howard Vainright. "Right now there is limited fishing until the water returns to normal, but the places that are accessible are good for bream."

Vainright said he expects the water to drop near the beginning of the week. "Fishing is usually real good for a while after a big flood."

Russell Rhodes of the Neuse Sport Shop in Kinston said Contentnea Creek and other local waters are "high and there's not much activity." He added, however, that spot and sea mullet have been caught in the Bogue Inlet area, as well as two-pound bluefish on Gotcha' plugs.

CATCH Clinic

A CATCH Clinic designed to teach children fishing skills will be held Saturday from 8:30 a.m. until 12:30 p.m. at River Park North on Mumford Road.

The clinic, sponsored by the Greenville Recereation and Parks Department and the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, will instruct children ages 8 to 15 on how, when and where to fish and will promote good sportsmanship and outdoor ethics.

Partially funded through the Wildlife Endowment Fund, the program will focus on fish identification and life history, water safety, basic aquatic technology and fishing techniques.

Membership and registration may be completed at the clinic, but advanced reservations are mandatory. For reservations or more information, call 830-4560 or 758-1230.

Tournament Guide

The brochure includes a tournament calendar and provides information on the year-long North Carolina Saltwater Fishing Tournament sponsored by the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries.

For a free copy, write Sea Grant, Box 8605, N.C. State University, Raleigh, N.C. 27695. As for UNC-SG-87-02.

Turkey Hunter Cautioned

Wild turkey hunters who hunt near rivers and lakes in North Carolina should remember to avoid areas within 500 yards of flood waters. Regulations set by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission prohibit hunting within 500 yards of flood waters.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has notified the commission that because of recent heavy rains, the Roanoke River in northeastern North Carolina has risen above flood stage in areas in Martin, Halifax, Northampton and Bertie counties. The flood stage at Scotland Neck is 28 feet and waters are now above that level.

Hunters should avoid the flood zone until waters subside. Those who violate the 500-yard regulation could be charged with misdemeanor hunting in a restricted area.

Canoe Expo

Canoe Expo 1987 will be held Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m. on the pond at the North Carolina State Fairgrounds in Raleigh.

Canoe clinics and demonstrations will be presented by the country's top designers, builders and paddlers. Topics to be covered include choosing a canoe, canoe construction materials, canoe design, reading whitewater rivers and paddling styles.

Little League

True Value.....13
F. Federal.....1

J.D. Helms went 3-4 with a double and a triple as True Value defeated First Federal, 13-1, in a Tar Heel Little League baseball game Friday.

True Value scored 11 runs in the first inning.

With one out, Monte Roundtree walked. Beau Williams singled and both came home on Helms' two-run double. Two straight walks loaded the bases and Heath Boyer followed with another walk to score Helms. Two more walks brought home two more runs as True Value went on to score five more runs in that inning.

Williams added two hits for True Value.

Lions.....13
Coke.....6

Carlton Holder went 3-3 with a home run, a triple and a double to lead the Lions to a 13-6 win over Coca-Cola in a North State Little League baseball game Friday.

Holder's double in the first inning drove in three runs to key a seven-run inning that put the Lions in control early. Holder added a solo homer in the second inning.

The Lions rapped out 14 hits in the game. Kevin Hardy and Deonna Barrett also had three hits each for the Lions.

Deke Herrin got the win for the Lions

Super Team Not Doing That Good

Darrell Waltrip, the winningest driver in NASCAR stock car racing over the last 10 years, has fallen upon hard times.

Going into the Winston 500 on Sunday at Alabama International Motor Speedway, Waltrip, who has 70 career victories and has been used to racing with the leaders, has failed to finish in the top five in eight races this season.

Waltrip, 40, decided to leave car-owner Junior Johnson at the end of the 1986 season after winning all three of his Winston Cup championships and taking 43 of his victories in six years with the former driving star.

He and top engine builder-crew chief Waddell Wilson joined with big money car-owner Rick Hendrick, who already was fielding cars for Tim Richmond and Geoff Bodine.

"There ain't been nothing super about it," said Waltrip. "I guess everybody, including us, figured with all the experience that I had, and Waddell had, and a real good sponsor in Tide and a real good, involved car-owner like Rick, we were going to just pick up where we left off on our old teams.

"The trouble was we forgot we were still a new team," Waltrip said. "What that means is you've got to put everything together. You've got to have cars, you've got to have everybody on the team get to know each other. It just takes time."

Waltrip admits frustration.

"It ain't no fun watching people go racing by you. What's fun is running up front," he said.

"Running in front, racing to win, having a shot, that's what we need," Waltrip said. "But what we've got to remember is there's a lot of teams here that ain't going to get no better. We are."

American Eyes June 15 To Launch P-G Service

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Plans to initiate American Eagle service to Pitt-Greenville Airport on June 15 with six incoming and six outgoing flights to American's new hub at Raleigh-Durham Airport are on schedule, airline officials said.

"I am pleased to say construction has been progressing right on schedule and (the RDU terminal) will open on June 15 — about four weeks ahead of the original schedule," Alan G. Cohen, area sale manager for American Airlines, told guests at a reception Thursday night at the Holiday Inn celebrating the RDU hub.

"By October of 1987, American and American Eagle will be serving over 55 cities from the RDU hub with over 145 flights per day," Cohen said. "Our service to the North will include such key cities as New York, which includes all three airports, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and Washington National Airport.

"To the South we will serve points in South Carolina, Georgia, as well as 11 cities in Florida."

The RDU hub will create new travel opportunities for area fliers similar to existing American Eagle hubs, according to Cohen.

"American Eagle is a network of nine regional airlines fully integrated into the American Airlines route system," he said. "It allows us to reach markets that we would otherwise be unable to serve with our existing jet aircraft and yet provide a frequent, convenient schedule pattern.

"American's route system is based on the hub and spoke concept, whereby spoke cities such as Greenville feed into our Raleigh/Durham hub offering a vast array of destinations to choose from. At our Dallas/Fort Worth and Chicago hubs, we offer our passengers almost 600 daily departures."

American Eagle, which recently opened a hub in Nashville, Tenn., flies to over 110 cities, has 1,000 daily departures and operates a fleet of over 125 aircraft, according to Cohen, who said the Raleigh-Durham area was selected as the fourth hub for a variety of reasons.

"The geographic location of RDU will allow for convenient north/south traffic patterns, and the area contains three major universities — North Carolina State, Duke University, and the University of North Carolina," he said.

"The area has a diversified economic base, including the Research Triangle Park, and Raleigh is the location of the state capital of North Carolina. When compared to other major Southeast cities, population growth at RDU is strong. The growth is especially impressive recognizing that RDU has not enjoyed the benefit of superior air service typically provided by a hub in places like Atlanta and Charlotte."

American has invested $113 million in the RDU hub, which includes a 300,000-square-foot terminal, Cohen said.

"The first phase of the hub will open with 15 gates," he said. "By 1989, we will have a total of 25 gates, and when that happens, we will expand the hub to its ultimate potential for American and American Eagle of about 275 flights per day to nearly 75 destinations."

Cohen said the enthusiasm generated by local business leaders led to the selection of Pitt-Greenville Airport as a spoke.

"The city of Greenville and the surrounding Pitt County area will play an important role in the development of the RDU hub," he said.

"The aggressive and enthusiastic approach by your community leaders, the diversified economy of the region and the strength of East Carolina University are some of the reasons American Eagle selected Greenville as one of their inaugural cities to be connected with the RDU hub."

Meanwhile, Larry D. Rednour, American Eagle vice president-marketing and stategic planning, said the commuter airlines is focusing on another market.

"The business community including the university here does plenty of its travel between Greenville and Raleigh, which gives a local market as well as a connecting market," Rednour said.

"We feel as though there's a market today that drives that distance rather than flies it because there isn't frequent adequate service in there at an affordable price, and we hope to capture that market as well as the market that's connecting on American to other destinations."

American Eagle has been encouraged by support from the Pitt County and Greenville business community, according to Rednour.

"When you run across a city where the community seems to be 100 percent behind getting additional service or competing service into the marketplace and they are willing to offer their support as in the case of Greenville, it is very encouraging because we feel like we're in a partnership to provide service to the community," Rednour said.

Hearst Corp. Purchases Houston Publishing Co.

HOUSTON (AP) — The Hearst Corp. completed its purchase of the Houston Chronicle Publishing Co. for $415 million, up $15 million from its original offer, officials said.

Hearst's board of directors approved the increased price to avoid delays in buying the newspaper from the Houston Endowment Inc., officials from both companies said.

The sale price of the state's largest daily newspaper was announced March 12 as $400 million.

The revised agreement was approved earlier by Hearst directors.

Frank A. Bennack Jr., Hearst's president and chief executive officer, said that although the amount was fair, it was increased "so that this purchase can be completed without any further delay, which could possibly be harmful to the newspaper and its employees."

William Dean Singleton, who bought the Dallas Times Herald last year, had offered $415 million for the Chronicle before the sale to Hearst was announced, according to Christopher Shaw of Henry Ansbacher Inc., a New York investment firm representing Singleton.

"At the time the competing offer for $415 million was received, we had already signed a letter of intent with Hearst for $400 million," said J.H. Creekmore, Houston Endowment president, apparently in reference to Singleton's offer.

"Acceptance of the original Hearst offer ended months of research and negotiations with many of the major publishing companies in the United States, and was the highest credible offer at that time," Creekmore said.

A statement released Friday by Hearst and Houston Endowment officials said $300 million was paid in cash at closing and $115 million would be carried in a promissory note maturing at 15 years with 7 percent interest, an increase from 5 percent.

The purchase was submitted to Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox's office for review, and the price was increased after a series of discussions, the statement said.

Mattox's review followed reports that the endowment received a competing offer of $415 million, officials said.

Creekmore said officials studied the competing offer, but remained convinced the Hearst offer was still the most attractive.

"Further realizing we had already signed a letter of intent with Hearst, we chose not to risk jeopardizing the existing agreement with Hearst by opening negotiations with a new party," he said.

Chronicle officials said Mattox had stated that he was satisfied with the terms of the revised agreement. Mattox could not be reached for comment at his office late Friday.

The paper — which publishes morning and afternoon editions with circulations of 425,434 daily and 528,153 Sunday — will operate as a wholly-owned subsidiary of Hearst.

Complaints Spoil QE2 Atlantic Trip

LONDON (AP) — The renovated British luxury liner Queen Elizabeth II was en route to New York Saturday, dealing easily with the mostly calm North Atlantic but buffeted by waves made by some unhappy passengers.

The 67,139-ton QE2 sailed Thursday from the English port of Southampton with 1,200 passengers, mostly Amricans, and is scheduled to arrive in New York Monday.

British newspapers on Friday reported widespread discontent on board over malfunctioning showers, toilets, telephones and television sets. The papers said passengers were also upset about meals that reach their tables cold.

Eric Flounders, public relations manager for Cunard, the ship's owner, said: "This is really a maiden voyage for the QE2 after its refit and there has never been a maiden voyage for any vessel that has not gone without some hitch."

The ship's renovation cost $182 million.

The QE2 underwent a previous refitting after serving as as a troop carrier in the 1982 Falklands War. Argentine forces invaded the Falklands, a British colony off of Argentina's southern coast, on April 1982. Britain sent a task force that defeated the Argentines in a 74-day war.

Britain's domestic Press Association news agency said some passengers had to wait up to six hours before getting their cabins, and others complained of ruined clothes because of grease or wet varnish on deck mountings.

The London Times, in a report from aboard the QE2, said, "Some passengers found themselves without cabins after a flood, arising from a leakage in the fresh water system, left many rooms unusable.... Sports facilities and swimming pools were not functioning. Ice cream was not available in the best restaurant, and you could not even get a suit pressed due to a temperature problem in the valet service."

Dining Comments from Bob:

Merchandising Promotion Created By Area Convenience Store Chain

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Imagine driving up to the gas island of a convenience store, filling your car's tank, and being greeted by flashing lights and a siren.

You've just won eastern North Carolina's version of the Joker's Wild, and your prize could be a free soda or a chance at $5,000.

Customers at 18 Kash and Karry convenience stores have started to notice the little devices that resemble slot machines sitting atop gas pumps enabling patrons to play the Gas Game.

Charlie Hardee of Ayden, a partner in the convenience stores, says the Gas Game is "a great way to promote gas sales and inside sales," but he is quick to point out the gadgets are totally legal and do not involve gambling.

The devices have three small windows with wheels that turn to display numbers, bars and various fruits. If the right combinations appear when the nozzle is hung up, customers win things.

Technically, they are not slot machines because customers don't have to put money in to make the wheels turn.

Roger Hatchell, a service station owner and fuel distributor from Tarboro, came up with the idea and had it adapted to fit on the pumps, while Hardee developed the merchandising promotion.

Engineers with a casino machine maker in Las Vegas produced the device, according to Mark Rosenberg, president of East Coast Creative Designs, which is handling promotions, advertising and public relations for the Gas Game.

Customers have a 1-in-10 chance of getting two-of-a-kind on the wheel qualifying them for a free soft drink, a 1-in-100 chance of winning a two-liter soft drink with three-of-a-kind, and a 1-in-1,000 chance of getting three sevens making them eligible for the grand prize — a $5,000 monthly drawing.

"When somebody hits three sevens or two-of-a-kind or three-of-a-kind, the lights go off and it makes a siren sound. It goes wild," Rosenberg said.

"It's a very unique promotion, and it's never been done in the industry. It is one of the most innovative approaches to gas convenience store marketing. It already has created a lot of excitement. It's also a fun way to give something back to the communities which they serve. They'll be giving away $60,000 a year."

The Gas Game has been in use for about a month, according to Rosenberg, who said the first monthly $5,000 drawing will be held Monday.

"Some other plans being made for the gas game include a monthly drawing (where) instead of $5,000 there will be items that may amount to $5,000, such as a fur coat, or possibly gift certificates at area merchants or possibly a pickup truck or something along those lines," Rosenberg said. "There's a lot of other things that are going to be happening with it."

The game has already had a positive impact on gas sales in the stores, according to Hardee, who said an increase of 10 to 15 percent will be needed to make a profit on the game.

"We've had up to a 15 to 20 percent increase in gas sales," Hardee said. "We're pleased with it. We expect some stores to increase possibly more than 25 percent."

Both Hardee and Rosenberg said the Gas Game has the potential to impact more than gas sales.

"We also believe it is helping with indoor sales," Hardee said. "It has a direct affect on our inside sales. We had favorable results during the last month."

"The main thing is the fact that it will increase the traffic flow through the business," Rosenburg said.

Use of the Gas Game machine, which may be purchased through Gemini Promotions, may spread outside of the area, Rosenberg said.

"Any convenience store in the state of North Carolina or really the East Coast can pick up the Gas Game," he said. "There are a lot of other convenience stores that are interested in possibly purchasing the Gas Game."

Nurturing A Profession Toward Good Health

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

The fact commencement exercises for the East Carolina University School of Nursing fall within National Nurses Week may be coincidence.

However, the timing couldn't be better if it had been planned, according to local nursing professionals who are making the most of happenstance and are using the occasion to highlight the rewards of nursing in hopes of luring more young men and women into the field.

Always interested in the university's emerging nursing corps, Pitt County Memorial Hospital is perhaps the most eager for completion of the May 9 graduation ceremony which will bring the hospital approximately 40 new RNs — fresh faces needed to offset local manifestation of what could be the state's worst nursing shortage ever.

Now nearing 100, the number of vacancies at the hospital is not yet critical, but is still a matter of concern for hospital nursing administrators as well as for Dean Emilie Henning of the ECU School of Nursing.

"In the 36 years I have been involved in nursing, the profession has suffered repetitive shortages and I can't absolutely say that the current one is the worst, but it has the potential to be," she said.

Henning and her Pitt Community College counterpart, Judith Kuykendall, PCC division director for nursing and allied health, attribute the shortage to a number of factors, including an overall decline in college and nursing school enrollment as well as rapidly expanding career opportunities for women. "It used to be women were either nurses, teachers or mothers. Now they can be anything from computer experts to physicians," Kuykendall said.

PCC expects to graduate 45 students from its two-year RN program May 22. Fifteen of those students are expected to go to work at PCMH. An additional 11 graduates from schools outside Pitt County have also been hired.

Gradual erosion of federal funding for nursing education played a part in bringing about the current crunch, too, Henning said.

"In the past when there was a shortage, we had federal assistance to back us up, to work as a sort of incentive for people to enter nursing." Since the Nixon era, though, Henning said federal support for nursing has declined to the point where few if any scholarships are available. "But we're hoping that will change in 1988 when Congress readdresses the issue of assistance for nursing students."

According to Diane Poole, PCMH vice president for nursing services, the shortage also is rooted in problems specific to the practice and management of nursing. Promotion policies, scheduling problems, work load, stress and salary levels are all things that are of concern, she said.

Nurses apparently agree with Poole. One of seven PCMH employees with similar views who asked not to be identified said that job conditions and "the fact that nurses are treated as second class citizens" are behind the shortage — also "low pay and a pay scale that has not kept up with inflation" are to blame, she said.

While pay and working conditions appear to be of concern here, the issues are present in other institutions as well. According to Dave Kalbacker, spokesperson for North Carolina Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill, "everybody thinks they're getting dumped on. I don't mean to minimize, but I don't think your problems are specific to just your area. They seem to be industry wide."

According to Kalbacker, NCMH is seeking 300 new nurses to fill vacant as well as newly-created positions. And doing so will not be easy, he said. "We, like most hospitals these days, have a national recruiting program. We have to if we're going to maintain our sizeable nursing force and meet our care needs. It's the price you pay in this industry," he said.

Although there is little that can be done to reverse changes in nursing that coincide with increasing opportunity spurred by the women's movement, Poole said something can be done about other concerns that appear to have peaked during the shortage — specifically pay, promotion policy, work load, and stress. In some instances, concrete steps to ease these problems are already being taken.

For example, a board approved increase to $9.45 an hour for entry level nurses at PCMH will take effect June 1. Although Poole said that figure "does not lead the pack," she said it is competitive and should help in the recruiting of much needed nursing staff. North Carolina Memorial Hospital pays beginning nurses $9.95 an hour.

PCMH is also developing a clinical ladder system which officials hope to put in place within coming months as an incentive for experienced staff members who would like to advance, but want to stay at the bedside. "Until now, if a nurse wanted to advance she had to either go into management or administration. But with the clinical ladder a nurse who wants to remain in patient care can be rewarded and stay where she or he wants," Poole said.

Implementation of such a system should be a boon for morale, according to Irene Tozer, a PCMH RN with 10 years experience who is now working part time in intensive care.

"Probably one of the most frustrating things for nurses is that they often do not get that needed pat on the back. And if you choose under the current system to stay at the bedside, that pat never materializes in terms of money nor recognition," she said.

In spite of the emotionally and physcially draining apsects of nursing, Tozer said shat she is one of the profession's most enthusiastic champions.

The promise of the future and problems of the present are equally on the minds of local nursing professionals as they prepare to celebrate National Nurses Week, May 3-9, and Nurses Day, May 6.

"Being a nurse allows you to grow emotionally as well as professionally. It's an extremely rewarding profession. The pay is fair and it allows you to be creative. If you get tired of one discipline, you can move to another within the same institution, there's so many outlets," she said.

When the system is taxed, however, the good side of nursing sometimes becomes obscured, she said. "Especially for the full-time nurses, who can't give as much to their patients when they're having to cope with being short-handed.

"What's so rewarding about nursing, in addition to the professional apsect, is the human contact. So when a nurse is pushed and can't spend as much time with the man on her hall who's dying of cancer and just needs his hand held, needs to be touched and reassured, then that's when things can get sour, when a nurse can begin to feel that's she's not able to give the kind of quality care she would like to be giving," Tozer said.

Also a 10-year veteran of nursing, PCMH heart transplant program coordinator Art Schneider agrees that nursing offers a deluge of in-profession options.

"Some nurses I know have said that they like to change their focus or the place where they work every few years just for the variety, the diversity. It's the only job I know in which you can travel all over the country and be sure of employment."

As far as stress and job satisfaction go, Schneider said that nursing is like any other profession in which one deals with people. "It can be very demanding to try and help families and patients in a hospital setting. But not in a bad way, in a challenging way. It all depends on how you look at it," he said.

Schneider said he chooses to look at nursing as a field that is in a "sort of evolution.

"The opportunities have expanded. there's more to do, more to learn in terms of technological advances, but not just within the hospital. Home health agencies, private practice, private duty, they're all alternatives," Schneider said.

Kathleen Council, a registered nurse who has worked in a variety of situations and recently joined the PCMH surgical floor staff, concurred. "Sure there are problems but overall nursing is a good profession. It's the only field I know in which you can take one little step, change your whole career and still be doing what you were trained for."

Most Mothers With 4-Year-Old Kids Also Have Jobs

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — More than 66 percent of North Carolina mothers with 4-year-old children also have jobs, a University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill survey shous.

"Without a doubt, women with preschool children make up a significant part of North Carolina's large female labor force," said Dr. Richard Clifford, associate director of UNC's Bush Institute for Child and Family Policy at the Frank Porter Graham Child Development Center.

"The state is heavily dependent on women workers, many of whom are employed in the textile, tobacco and furniture industries," Clifford said.

UNC researchers surveyed 996 parents in 1986 as they registered their children for kindergarten in Charlotte, Burlington and rural Duplin County.

Almost half the mothers were full-time employees. Burlington had the greatest percentage of working mothers with almost 74 percent. Eighteen percent of the women surveyed had part-time jobs.

"I think this finding is reflective of the kinds of employment opportunities here in North Carolina," Clifford said. "Most industries want full-time workers who will be there for an entire shift."

Combined family incomes varied at the three sites. Many families in Charlotte reported annual incomes of more than $40,000 while nearly 68 percent of the Duplin County families said they earned less than $20,000. Burlington families fell in the middle, Clifford said.

"Clearly, many children in Duplin County are being raised in poverty," Clifford said. "These figures reflect a growing trend in America."

Overall, the respondents were most concerned that child-care arrangements encourage their children's development. They wanted their children to be happy and safe and the day-care workers to be experienced.

The study found parents split over the type of child-care or preschool program they wanted, with one-third preferring a day-care center or nursery school and 17 percent favoring preschool programs in public schools.

"We also found that fewer parents want to leave their 4-year-olds off at family day-care homes or a relative's house than currently are," said Marta Wenger.

"This may be an option that they want for their infants or toddlers, but not their older preschoolers. Compared to the rest of the nation, North Carolina in general has fewer children going to family day-care homes," she said.

"We were surprised by our results," Clifford said. "Parents may be unfamiliar with public school programs for preschoolers, which exist in several other states. Or, given the hours of the traditional school day, they may think their child-care needs won't be met."

The UNC researchers found that 75 percent of all 4-year-olds being registered for kindergarten already had some kind of child care, with more than half enrolled in a day-care center or preschool.

Another one-third of the children were in the care of a relative. Seventeen percent were cared for by a babysitter and more than 45 percent of the mothers staying home used some kind of child care or preschool program.

The survey also found that nearly 25 percent of the children were living in single-parent homes, and their parents were more likely to use more than one type of child-care arrangement.

Cookbooks Offering Best Fiction

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

Are you aware that some of the best fiction being written today is by authors of cookbooks?

For sheer mystery, intrigue, surprise and drama, no one does it better. The cover is the first clue, where they show you a complete meal that is done at the same time. Is that the stuff of which fantasies are made or what!?

There's always that element of danger that makes me want to skip to the end to see what the yield is and what it's supposed to look like, but I like the challenge. It's like living on the edge. Call it madcap, but there's something exciting about having guests in 55 minutes only to find out that the meat you are going to serve has to be marinated overnight. Or how about finding goat cheese near a cabin at Lake Ochiwaba on a Saturday night in January? Eat your heart out, Stephen King!

The latest cookbook novel to come into my hands was given to me by a friend. What it lacks in dramatic content, it makes up for in its fairy-tale simplicity. It's a book of recipes directed to people who want to cook for one ... either on those nights when your husband is out of town or you find yourself alone.

The author calls it a celebration of privacy and offered the following recipe for cold poached chicken breasts with salmon sauce. She listed 11 ingredients, including two anchovy fillets mashed with a fork, fresh lemon juice and a heaping tablespoon of capers. The chicken breasts and salmon had to be skinned, boned and cut into chunks. The chicken had to be poached in broth and refrigerated and then brought to room temperature for 30 minutes before being refrigerated again overnight.

With it was suggested a menu of English-style cucumber tea sandwiches, rice salad and fruit sundae.

In reality, I view eating alone as a round-trip ticket out of the kitchen for one night. I stand in front of the refrigerator and make my choice: a quarter-pounder onion sandwich with a thin slice of hamburger and pickles on the side or a jumbo platter of pasta with no vegetables or salad to ruin the taste.

When I was producing a sitcom in L.A. a few years ago, I lived in an apartment by myself for four months. Every night I dragged in around 8 or 9 and had my favorite meal: a large bowl of burnt popcorn and a cold beer.

Then I'd curl up with a good cookbook until I fell asleep.

Tips On Grooming A Home For Sale

Homemaker's Haven

Evelyn Spangler

People who live in areas where real estate is booming may think they can put their homes on the market without fixing them up. They reason, why spend time sprucing up something that is bound to sell, anyway? The answer? Because it can dramatically increase the price you get for your home.

Some ways to raise the value of a home need not be expensive. Many of them revolve around cleaning, polishing and minor repairs, explains The Soap and Detergent Association.

Look at the package from the outside. First impressions count. A prospective buyer may set his or her mind against buying even before entering the home, if its exterior is unwelcoming. So trim bushes and trees, weed the garden, mow the lawn, edge along the walk and plantings. Put away or discard yard clutter. Fix up and paint broken fences. If fences are beyond repair, remove them. Wash windows on the inside and out so they sparkle. Clean doors and screens, sweep sidewalks, driveway and any other outside areas. Spend time fixing up the front entrance and foyer since this area plays a key role in creating first impressions.

Indoors, clean the entire house but give special attention to the kitchen, master bedroom and garage. These are the parts of the home that people examine most carefully, experts point out. Be certain to clean the oven, keep countertops clear, wax kitchen cabinets. Wipe fingerprints and smudge marks from around wall switches and door frames. Wax floors and shampoo rugs.

Fix any dripping faucets. If soap or hard water deposits have built up on bathroom tiles, or a shower stall, clean them up.

The ultimate look to achieve is one of a clean uncluttered home. A home looks more spacious if excess furniture and paraphernalia are cleared out. Closets and cabinets should be neatly arranged to create a feeling of adequate storage space.

Other improvements such as painting, redecorating and major repairs should be considered in relation to time and expense compared to the benefits. Cleaning, polishing and small repairs may be time-consuming, but not costly, and could pay off in selling a home.

Smith-Jones Vows Said

GREAT BRIDGE, Va. — Amy Ann Jones and James Patrick Smith were married at 2 p.m. Saturday by Dr. Conrad Crawe. The double-ring ceremony was held in the Great Bridge Presbyterian Church.

MRS. SMITH

The bride is the daughter of Garr Jones and Betsy Jones of Great Bridge. The bridegroom is the son of James W. Smith and Teresa De Wald of Kempsville, Va.

Music was presented by organist Jack Ralston. The bride's mother sang "There is Love."

The bride was escorted by her grandfather, George Leonard Mann of Greenville, N.C. She wore a formal gown of white silkened organza over peau de soie designed with an open portrait neckline outlined in appliques of re-embroidered alencon lace beaded in pearls. Fluted ruffles of organza emphasized the neckline and extended over the bodice front to the modified natural waistline which was also adorned with pearls and iridescent sequins. The long, fitted sleeves were fashioned in imported English net appliqued in the embroidered lace beaded in pearls with calla points covering the hand. The full skirt and attached cathedral train featured rows of ruffles extending asymmetrically across the skirt front to the hemline which was also edged in ruffles. Borders of the beaded lace interspersed with lace medallions adorned the skirt and train. She wore a Camelot headpiece trimmed in re-embroidered lace with a tiered veil of imported illusion edged in alencon lace. She carried a white cascade bouquet of roses, daisies and baby's breath.

Greta Northnagle of Great Bridge was maid of honor. She wore a formal blue satin gown with scalloping of white Venise lace and satin bows on the full skirt. She carried a cascade bouquet of white daisies and rosebuds mixed with baby's breath.

The bride graduated from Great Bridge High School and works for Wendy's. The bridegroom graduated from Kempsville High School and works with L and S Airconditioning Firm.

After the ceremony the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Mann, gave a reception in the church fellowship hall. Mrs. Kerry Northnagle poured punch and Nina Bean of Washington state served cake.

An after-rehearsal dinner was given by the father of the bridegroom at his home.

Couple Marries In Enfield

ENFIELD — The wedding ceremony of Terri Lynn Averette and Kenneth James Tippette took place Saturday at 2 p.m. in the Enfield Baptist Church. The double-ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dallas Prestwood and the Rev. Craig Gaither.

A program of wedding music was presented by organist Ramona Prestwood and soloist Susan Skinner.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E.C. Averette Jr. of Winterville. She is a graduate of East Carolina University and teaches at W.H. Robinson School in Winterville.

The bridegroom is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Burton T. Tippette of Enfield. He is a graduate of ECU and is director of the Wayne County Planning Department.

Escorted by her brother, Clevie Averette, the bride wore her mother's wedding gown. It was tea-length of chantilly lace over satin with accordian pleated inserts in the skirt. The molded bodice of lace was edged with pearl trim. She wore a matching bolero jacket. Her shoulder-length veil of imported bridal illusion was attached to a cap of pearls and iridescents. She wore a string of pearls, a gift of the bridegroom, and carried a gathering bouquet of long-stemmed roses and baby's breath.

Her only attendant was her cousin, Angela Ward of Wilmington. She wore a tea-length gown of aqua styled of scalloped lace over acetate satin. The neckline was V-shaped and the cummerbund tied in a back bow. She carried a long-stemmed pink rose.

MRS. TIPPETTE

Hospital To Open Unit To Aid Teens In Coping

By AMY RAGSDALE
Decatur Herald & Review

DECATUR, Ill. (AP) — The pressures working on adolescents around the nation are also at work in Decatur, and a psychiatrist says they can drive some young people into alcoholism or suicide.

Those pressures include single-parent families, the intense competition to get into a good college and the struggle to find a job after school.

Dr. Ira Brent, director of psychiatry at St. Mary's Hospital, says more young people nationwide — and in Decatur — are seeking psychiatric help than ever before. To help meet the growing need, St. Mary's plans to open an eight-room unit devoted exclusively to treating youth with mental illnesses.

The adolescent unit, to open in a few months off a hallway near the present psychiatric ward, will have its own recreation area, and possibly a classroom where teachers from the Decatur School District can work with groups of students.

Brent and other local experts have an arsenal of statistics to justify the need for the unit.

"Adolescents have their own special needs which make it difficult for them to be mixed in with adults," Brent said. "There's a higher rate of divorce, more single families. There's a breakdown in the nuclear family. There's more mobility, more transiency.

"Kids struggle with problems these days ... that their parents never had to face. Kids are killing themselves over the issue of taking the ACT (American College Test) to get into college," he said.

Mike Bach, who works with adolescents at Decatur Mental Health Center, said the center last year sent an average of one youth per week to local psychiatric care centers — primarily St. Mary's Hospital. Twenty-five youths were admitted to Adolf Meyer Mental Health Center last year. "There are a lot of pressures with being a kid ... drug use, drinking, sexual activity. Kids see themselves as less in control. Parents see them as out of control," Bach said.

Authorities say that having a "school" on the proposed adolescent psychiatric unit would help teenagers ease back into the routine of everyday life.

Dallas Beyer, director of special education for the Decatur School District, said he's been working closely with St. Mary's staff as the adolescent psychiatric unit is planned.

"We would consider having a teacher there," Beyer said, adding that the district will probably start looking soon for someone trained to work with emotionally disturbed and behavior-disordered students.

Evening Wedding Vows Said

The wedding of Cynthia Lue Raisor and Garret Alan Cost, both of Greenville, was conducted Saturday at 6 p.m. in the First Christian Church of Greenville. Glenn Evans officiated at the double-ring ceremony.

Both bride and bridegroom are members of the EastCare Air Ambulance Service flight team. The bride is a nurse and the bridegroom is a pilot. They are relocating soon to Montgomery, Ala., where the bridegroom will be lead pilot for LifeFlight Air Ambulance Service and the bride will be a nurse at St. Margaret's Hospital and a student at Auburn University.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Bill Raisor of Carrollton, Ky., and Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Cost of El Segundo, Calif.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a candlelight satin tea-length dress with a sheer lace overlay trimmed with Venise and chantilly lace, sequins and pearls. A short pearl-studded veil was attached to a satin hat. She carried silk flowers, including deep mauve tea roses, blue hyacinth, and peach dendrobium orchids and ivy.

The maid of honor was Lunn Hundley of Louisville, Ky. She wore a tea-length printed-flower dress with colors like those of the bride's flowers and her own. She wore a teardrop mauve hat with matching feathers and sequins.

The flower girl was Alena Nicole Swain of Greenville. She wore a street-length dress of mauve, pale peach and ivory. She carried a fireside basket of mauve rose petals.

MEASURING PASTA

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Without a kitchen scale, it's helpful to know some cup measurements for dry and cooked pasta.

Better Homes and Gardens Pasta Cook Book says four ounces of uncooked elbow macaroni or conchiglie measures about one cup. When cooked, it will yield about 2½ cups of pasta.

Four ounces of uncooked medium noodles measures about three cups and when cooked, you'll have about three cups of pasta. Four ounces of uncooked 10-inch-long spaghetti held together in a bunch has about a one-inch diameter. When cooked, it will equal about two cups of pasta.

MOVING UP

NEW YORK (AP) — Clerks, supervisors, managers and professionals share a common struggle in the work place: how to knock down the barriers to advancement.

"It's easy to get trapped in a stagnant job," says career counselor Janice LaRouche in Family Circle magazine, but there are ways to break out. "Take on more challenging work and open the avenues to promotion, responsibility and a bigger salary."

Companies want two different kinds of employees, says LaRouche. They want people who will stick to a boring job and continue to produce no matter how they feel about it. And they want enterprising risk-takers who respond to challenges. This second group gets the promotions and becomes the managers.

Family Splits In Two When Parents' Marriage Breaks

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: After 42 years of marriage, my parents divorced when my mother learned that my father had purchased a penthouse condominium for "Cynthia," his mistress of many years.

Apart from the pain and humiliation this caused Mom, it created a split among the siblings. My younger sister and I sided with our mother. Our brother and older sister sided with Dad.

When our parents separated, Dad moved into the condo with Cynthia. A few months later, Dad's mother died, and he brazenly brought Cynthia to the funeral. Our whole family was there, and it was very painful for Mother to see Dad and his mistress together in public. (My parents were still legally married.)

Three months later, my older sister's son had his bar mitzvah. Dad's invitation was addressed to him alone, but he accepted on the condition that he could bring Cynthia. My sister agreed. When Mom heard this, she refused to attend, which angered my sister so much she hasn't spoken to our mother since — it's been 18 months. By the way, Mom sent a lovely bar mitzvah gift, which was never acknowledged.

Abby, I feel as though I've lost half my family. I am heartsick. How do other families deal with a situation of this kind? — HOPEFUL OF HEALING

DEAR HOPEFUL: Blessed are the children of divorced parents who can remain neutral — which is always difficult and sometimes impossible — without appearing two-faced and hypocritical.

If, after having taken sides, you sincerely want to patch things up, extend your hand in friendship to each member of the family whom you offended — or who offended you for having taken sides. Make a bid for a new beginning, and bury the past. (You can't force anyone to forgive or accept you, but if you are rejected, at least you'll know you tried.)

Now, for those of you who haven't taken sides, but are faced with the prospect, a word of advice: Out of loyalty to no one should you permit yourself to be locked out of anyone's life.

If a parent behaves in a manner that you consider hateful — hate the sin, but love the sinner. Forgive your parents for their wrongdoing, just as they have forgiven you. I know I sound like Mary Poppins, but it's the only way to keep peace in the family — even when the family is blown to smithereens.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend is constantly telling me he wants to marry me. We are currently living together and have no definite plans to marry as yet.

My problem is that my grandmother is very sick and, according to the doctor, she doesn't have much time left. My grandmother is very dear to me (I am her only granddaughter), and I know she would love to see me married.

I have asked my boyfriend several times if we can get married in the near future while my grandmother is still around. His reply is always, "Wait until we have more money."

Do you think he really wants to marry me? — CONFUSED IN CANADA

DEAR CONFUSED: Not enough.

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of a 60-(and sexy)-year-old grandmother taking a bath in the tub with her 5-year-old grandson?

It kind of bugged me so I'm seeking your opinion. — JOHN FROM OAK PARK

DEAR JOHN: A 5-year-old boy should be able to bathe by himself — and so should his grandmother.

Mississippi Store Stocks Products Of A Past Age

By TOM GILLIES
The Meridian Star

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. (AP) — Been looking for a bottle of Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? How about a bottle of Peruna Tonic, Swamp Root, Scott's Emulsion or a quart bottle of Beef-Iron Wine?

Out of Kreml or Lucky Tiger Hair Tonic, or do you need some more Halo Shampoo?

Search no more, all of these items plus hundreds more medicinal and personal-care preparations are in stock at Yates Drug Store in Philadelphia, Miss., and, at their original shelf prices of 30, 40 and 50 years ago. Opposite the Neshoba County Courthouse on Main Street, the store has been in continual operation for 60 years by a Yates family member.

Founded by Earl Yates in 1927, the business was acquired in 1946 by Cecil Yates from his Uncle Earl, and joined by his twin brother Kenneth in 1962. The 71-year-old pair still put in a full day. Cecil is the pharmacist while brother waits on customers. It is the oldest drugstore in Neshoba County, according to the Yates brothers.

Dr. Claude Yates, father of the twin brothers, graduated from Memphis Medical College in 1913. After practicing in north Mississippi for a dozen years, he opened his practice in Philadelphia in the back of the drugstore until he purchased the present building. Then, he moved upstairs to build a 12-bed hospital.

Yates' hospital was the only medical facility of its kind available to area residents for many years. He maintained office hours until his death in 1953.

Cecil, an Ole Miss graduate, reflected on his early years of dispensing drugs when most preparations had to be compounded from scratch. Today, most prescriptions call for drugs which come ready to use from pharmaceutical houses.

Yates said that in the early days, many people wuld consult the pharmacist instead of a doctor for minor medical problems; and he added that some still do.

Fountain service on a limited basis still is available in the store with handmade milk shakes selling for 95 cents, ice cream cones for 35 cents, and homemade sandwiches such as ham and cheese going for $1.15. Freshly brewed coffee carries a bargain price of just 35 cents.

The brothers reminisced about how the fountain was a favorite of the high school crowd after classes. They employed two girls full-time to take care of the fountain and prepare a wide variety of sandwiches, soup and fountain treats.

Brother Cecil said many girls found future husbands while dipping cones, and added that the shop earned a local reputation as being a good place to work and find a marriage partner.

Ice cream cones and large glasses of Coke went for the standard price of a nickel, with sundaes and banana splits selling for 20 or 25 cents. The brothers recalled fine Cuban cigars going for a nickel, rum crooks at 10 cents and cigarettes for 25 cents per package.

While the front of the store is stocked with many patent preparations of by-gone days, the back room is a veritable collector's mecca. Attesting to the fact that nothing is ever thrown out, there are hundreds of antique medicine bottles, discontinued products and all manner of drug store memorabilia.

The two said they would sell any or all of it at the orginial prices marked on the packages.

Cutting back from a seven-day-a-week operation of 15 years ago, Yates Drug Store now closes at noon on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons. The doors remain locked on Sunday unless an emergency arises, in which case pharmacist Cecil will take care of the prescription customer.

"The business has been good to us," Cecil Yates said. "It has enabled us to live well, provide a good life for our families and has given us an opportunity to be of service to some fine people."

Corncob Wine Called A Bubbly Good Punch

By ROBERT BYRD
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Corncob wine, warn Clarence and Alma Lusk, isn't as sweet as grape wine, and the bottles will blow up if you put the lid on too tightly.

Dandelion wine, according to Granny Toothman, tastes like "real bubbly good punch," but will make you "a little juberous" if you don't watch it.

And in a pinch, says John Bulgin, "You can make wine out of anything but a rock."

Those tidbits of information come from a well-known source: students in north Georgia's famous Foxfire project. After two decades of chronicling Appalachian folklore about log cabins, banjos, mountain cooking, mule swapping, gun making, home remedies and other topics, the students have turned their attention to wine.

Foxfire Press, the publishing venture created from the Foxfire magazine of Rabun County High School, this spring has released "The Foxfire Book Of Wine Making."

Written in the oral-tradition style of the best-selling "Foxfire" book series, the latest publication includes interviews with more than 20 winemakers, two dozen wine recipes and instructions for making other mountain beverages, from apple cider to homebrew, a potent malt concoction.

There also are stories from the people of the Appalachian foothills.

The idea for the book came from another recent project, "The Foxfire Book of Appalachian Cookery," according to teacher and staff coordinator Hilton Smith. Students in the school's Foxfire classes began interviews in the summer of 1985, and three students edited the manuscript.

Like other Foxfire books, the interviews with the people of southern Appalachia provide a lively insight into a way of life that has vanished in much of the South.

But unlike the Foxfire dissertations on blacksmithing or log cabin building, the "Book of Wine Making" gives simple recipes that just about anyone could try if they wanted.

"This is a thing you can do in the kitchen or the laundry room that doesn't require a lot of special equipment," Smith said. "It can be kind of a touch of country in the city."

Recipes range from those using hydrometers, corkers and siphon tools to Scott Brooks' recipe for grape wine, which calls for a jug, a balloon, some bottles, sugar, yeast and two cans of grape juice.

The decision to venture into enology might have proven controversial among some of north Georgia's staunchly religious mountain folk, but Smith said the Foxfire students didn't get any fallout from teetotallers.

"We've heard nary a quibble from anybody," Smith said. "That image of this region as fundamentalist ... I think that's counterbalanced with a certain amount of practicality.

"This area has a long heritage, all the way back to European roots. And there's a sense, in a way, that making wine is one thing that continues that heritage."

The students were offered frequent chances to sample the product they were writing about, and their teachers left that decision up to them.

"They didn't make a big point about it," Smith said. "Some may have sipped a little. ... But most of our students are churchgoers, and they were talking to churchgoing folks."

Indeed, several of the mountain vintners quoted in the book were quick to argue the religious ramifications of their craft.

"Wine," Bill Park says, "is the most wholesome beverage in the world. That goes back to the Bible. The Lord gave Paul grapes, and told him to make wine."

But Nora Garland, who contributed juice recipes for the book, puts her faith ahead of her taste.

"I went to a place for Christmas," she recalls. "I was invited for supper and a man came out with little glasses of wine, and I thought that was the best stuff, honestly, that I ever put in my mouth.

Cleaning Up Bangkok's Street Vendors

EDITOR'S NOTE — Long before there was a McDonald's, street hawkers have been dispensing fast food in Bangkok, adding splashes of color and a variety of aromas to the crowded sidewalks. But their days may be numbered. This is one of a series of periodic reports by The Associated Press on the way of life in other countries.

By MOLLY YONG
Associated Press Writer

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — They've already vanished from other modern Asian cities, and soon Bangkok's street hawkers and their colorful food wagons and carts full of wares may be gone too.

The city's governor wants them to clean up or clear out.

Street hawkers have been sharply curbed in Singapore, Hong Kong, Seoul and other Asian cities where sanitation ordinances as well as traffic and zoning laws have relegated them to sterile and colorless state-run stalls.

Gov. Chamlong Srimuang, the equivalent of a mayor, wants to do that in Bangkok — put the hawkers into stalls off the streets.

"They have no right to encroach on public sidewalks, obstruct pedestrians and leave litter behind," he said.

City officials charge that thousands of "meals-on-wheels" — vendors of food from carts — clutter sidewalks, discard refuse and and force pedestrians off sidewalks to avoid overturning sizzling cookers and gas stoves.

But the hawkers have their defenders, including some tourists, who maintain that the hawkers enhance the city's exotic atmosphere, especially as Thailand seeks to attract foreign tourists during this "Visit Thailand Year."

Local residents say street vending allows them to grab a quick — and often better — bowl of noodles for a fraction of what it costs in air conditioned restaurants. People also can buy clothes, fruit and household items much cheaper from the street hawkers.

Chamlong, who is widely credited with cleaning up the city, is trying to control the hawkers by fining them and their customers if they litter, clutter and otherwise do wrong. He also maintains that they breed corruption and rob the city of income since they avoid paying taxes.

In mid-February, hawkers, customers and politicians complained when the city said it would impose fines of 500 baht ($19) on patrons of vendors if they violated regulations.

"Sticking vendors behind city-run booths in marketplaces where few people shop is a good enough reason for many to leave such a workplace and try the streets," he argued.

Last year, the city set aside 164 areas for 10,000 vendors but takers were few.

Chamlong said that while street vending is deeply ingrained in the Thailand's still-developing economy, hawkers nonetheless must find a place in city-regulated areas.

"The city is rebelling against these hawkers because we need to demonstrate that unless they can co-exist with other street-users and the law, we'll make no room for them," Chamlong said in an interview.

"Street vendors who don't pay business tax cannot be allowed to determine their own place under the sun. The vendors can't carve a utopia out of Bangkok's sidewalks."

Although laws permit Chamlong's 500 inspectors to apprehend violators, they cannot impose fines. The police, who can impose fines, don't do it because many of them are on the take from vendors, Chamlong said.

"Illegal vending and corruption feed on each other. We have to end that too, in time."

Last year angry vendors assaulted 34 city officials who tried to move them from congested sidewalks. This year, the force carries batons on inspection tours.

Vendors say they're on the streets because of economic necessity.

"Chamlong thinks we're eyesores," said a woman selling flowers. "Can't he see that we're only trying to scratch out a living?"

"Vendors cannot just go from one job to another, like office people," said a peddler of wooden wares.

But Mali Taptimtong, a fruit seller, said she believes the governor is an honest official who wants to reform Bangkok. She noted he is a devout Buddhist, who eats no meat, sleeps on a hard mat, wears simple peasant clothes and recently spent part of a day disguised as a street sweeper.

"I got the message when I saw him with pushcart and broom in hand," she said. "He swept for hours — unpublicized and unnoticed — and stopped to ask us about our hardships."

HAWKERS — Women throng to sidewalk vendors along a thoroughfare in Bangkok, Thailand. Governor Khamlong Srimuan, widely credited with cleaning up the capital city of 5.8 million, is trying to control streetwide hawkers like moveable food carts that obstruct pedestrians and leave behind discarded refuse. Defenders, including some tourists, argue that street vendors enchance the city's exotic atmosphere. (AP Laserphoto by Mangkorn)

Fish Return To The Han River

By TERRIL JONES
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The Han River, once so fouled by industry and sewage that dead fish lined its banks, has come alive again with carp, catfish and waterfowl.

"It used to be so dirty, you couldn't catch any fish, and you never saw ducks or seagulls like now," said Mun Hong-gu, a seafarer who has known the river for 40 years.

A five-year engineering project has unclogged and cleansed Seoul's lifeline, transforming the Han into a source of national pride.

The river fell victim to rapid industrialization as textile mills, chocolate factories and city sewer systems poured waste into its waters. In 1982, the government launched a $470 million project both to clean the Han and provide a sorely needed facelift for this city of nearly 10 million before it hosts the 1988 summer Olympics.

"The Han is like clothing to the people of Seoul — something to wear daily with pride, something to keep clean," said Kim In-sik, director general of Seoul's Water Supply Bureau, which oversees the work. "Our fathers and their fathers would swim in it. It's our lifeblood."

For centuries Korean merchants plied the Han, which winds 293 miles through the central Korean peninsula before reaching Seoul and emptying into the Yellow Sea. Farmers raised cabbage and potatoes on its banks, and scholars gathered at riverside pavilions to study Confucian scriptures.

The Han also afforded a buffer against marauding Mongolians in the 13th century, a Japanese invasion in 1593 and Communist troops during the 1950-53 Korean War.

Three of the project's four stages are complete: a new highway, four sewage treatment plants and dredging to control water levels and flooding. The final phase, building recreational areas and terracing the banks, is expected to be finished by the end of the year.

Engineers have created 1,730 acres of land along the shore, built with material dredged from the river.

"We use about 90 percent of the sand and pebbles from dredging for construction," said city planner Park Kyei-byung. He said sales of the dredged material paid for nearly half the project's total cost.

The riverbed was irregular and too shallow to navigate at many points, so workers scooped out the marshlands, sand bars and nearly all the islets in the river in 1982. Today the Han averages about a half mile in width and is eight feet deep.

On the south bank a four-lane highway from Seoul's airport to the riverside Olympic site at Chamsil was increased to eight lanes, helping build up the south bank as a business-residential district. The pollution control plants daily treat 107 million cubic feet of sewage — much of it coming from upstream.

Biochemical oxygen deand, a pollution yardstick indicating the density of oxygen-consuming microbes, has dropped from seven to nine parts per million five years ago to about three, thanks mainly to tightened control over waste emissions, Kim said. Anglers also can catch such delicacies as loach and eel from the Han.

Kim remembers when he and other young lovers strolled along the Han's banks. "It was romantic then, but we haven't seen any of that in recent years."

"They come to nest here because there's food for them," he said, standing on the deck of a ferry. "It's so moving to see the beauty that has returned to the Han."

Work continues on terraced banking for flood control and recreation areas. Cranes hover over huge mounds of gravel while crews build vast sports grounds.

"We thought of operating pleasure boats 10 years ago," said Joung Chung-ryol, business manager of Semo Co. Ltd., which began the service six months ago. "But with the river so unattractive, the idea never got anywhere."

Now leisure firms are developing windsurfing and water skiing.

"It's an all-Korean project," said Park. "All aspects involve Korean firms and equipment, except for one bridge-building device from Switzerland."

"It wasn't necessary to seek even consulting from abroad," said Kim. "People who know every bit of the river can do the best job. And no one knows this river better than Koreans."

No More Igloos In Canada's Northwest

EDITOR'S NOTE — You won't find people living in igloos any more in Canada's Northwest Territories. Many other things have changed as well in one of North America's last frontiers. This is one of a series of periodic Associated Press reports on the way of life in other countries.

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

YELLOWKNIFE, Northwest Territories (AP) — Satellites bring in American soap operas on cable TV, and dogsleds have given way to snowmobiles and three-wheeled Japanese All-Terrain Vehicles.

Across the Northwest Territories, a wintry sweep of tundra and traplines covering one-third of Canada from the 60th parallel to the North Pole, the native Indian and Inuit cultures are entering the modern age at computer speed.

"In 20 years we have gone from the stone age to the modern world," said Inuit leader Jack Anawak, born in an igloo but now a successful businessman in the Keewatin region of Hudson Bay below the Arctic Circle.

Yet the territories remain one of North America's last frontiers, a place to stalk caribou, dig for gold, explore for oil or step dance to a country fiddler.

Stretching 2,000 miles east to west and north to south, the region's bright summer nights and shudderingly cold, dark winters are shared by about 17,000 Inuit above the tree line, 11,000 Dene Indians, 3,000 half-caste Metis, and 20,000 assorted Canadian civil servants and other settlers here for a tour of duty or for a lifetime.

Spring weather doesn't arrive until June, and ice returns in September. In winter, natives wear parkas fringed with wolf fur because it doesn't freeze.

The Inuit, as people commonly known as Eskimos prefer to be called, abandoned igloos a generation ago, and now live in compact modern settlements of heated, prefabricated homes and well-equipped schools. The men continue to hunt, using rifles instead of spears, while the children play street hockey in weather 25 below zero.

The Dene Indians use bush planes more than canoes and employ computers to record trapping season harvests.

Established in 1875 and later reshaped when Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan became provinces, the Northwest Territories have a 24-member Legislative Assembly that holds three sessions spread over a year for a total of about 12 weeks. It makes laws and spends money. Natives hold a majority.

The assembly sits in an annex to the rowdy Yellowknife Inn and reflects the territories rough-hewn nature — sealskins on the wall, a narwhal-tusk mace and a polar bear skin separating Cabinet members from ordinary members.

Formal control is held by the Canadian federal government in Ottawa, which provides most of the territories' funds and has responsibility for oil, gas and mineral resources. Indians and Inuit have complex land claims that are expected to take years to negotiate.

In search of more ethnic autonomy, natives agreed in January to split the territories: the Inuit eastern half would be called Nunavut, and the Indian half Denendeh, both meaning "Our Land" in the separate languages.

But the accord broke down in March in squabbling over access to Hudson Bay and traditional hunting grounds. The rift followed federal and provincial rejection of a proposal to enshrine the right of native self-government in Canada's Constitution.

The region attracts outside mavericks:

—Territories legislators include a Scot, Gordon Wray, and a Dane, Red Pedersen, who came as Hudson's Bay Co. managers and decided to stay.

—Cris Sabuni, a black immigrant from Tanzania in Africa, said he has been mining gold in Yellowknife for 13 years.

—The Rev. Rene Fumoleau, a French Roman Catholic missionary known as the "freelance priest," has written the definitive history of Dene treaties with the white man.

Hudson's Bay stores still buy fur from trappers over the counter, as original trading posts did 300 years ago. But the stores also stock Whitney Houston records, the latest fashions and an array of baseball caps, the favored headwear.

With few roads, people get around by airplane, snowmobile, boat or dog sled. Inuit women are flown to hospitals in Manitoba to have their babies.

Leaders of the Chipewyan, Slavey, Dog Rib, Loucheux and Hareskin Indian tribes seek to rebuild pride among their people by pooling their interests as the Dene nation, while the sensitive Inuit rankle when called Eskimos, an Indian word meaning "eaters of raw meat." Inuit means "the people."

Unemployment is critical, despite improved education. Jobless teenagers known as "walk-arounds" in the eastern Arctic wear running shoes and carry Walkmans, eat junk food and fall easy prey to over-drinking.

Raised in isolated communities speaking their native tongue of Inuktitut, few complete high school or learn adequate English and French to qualify for government jobs.

"They don't have enough Inuit culture to have respect for themselves, nor enough white culture to make it in the mainstream society now emerging," said Inuit leader Anawak.

As the traditional hunting culture dies out, jobs are being found in tourism, including work as guides. Recreation facilities such as the new indoor hockey and curling rinks built at Rankin Inlet help with community morale.

Shopping requires long-range planning in the northern reaches of Hudson Bay, navigable only 10 weeks a year, and families and businesses place bulk orders well in advance of the arrival in July of barges loaded with goods from Manitoba.

In winter, it costs $1 for an air-transported apple or $2.50 for a head of lettuce.

Rickshaws Still Widely Used In Calcutta

By RONE TEMPEST
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

CALCUTTA, India — In two years, Shekh Mohammed Enus said, he hopes to retire. For more than 20 years he has strained and slogged through the foul streets of Calcutta with his wooden rickshaw, ferrying passengers too feeble or too fat or too squeamish to walk.

This year, Enus' oldest son has become a rickshaw puller like his father. In two years he will know the streets well enough to earn the rupees needed to take over support of the extended family. Enus can retire then, weary but still alive. That in itself will be a minor miracle for this man who has walked barefoot thousands of miles pulling a two-wheel, 180-pound rickshaw with its human cargo.

Sometimes, that cargo has been an entire family — a couple and their three children and perhaps a mother-in-law, sitting high and mighty on the plastic-covered seat of the rickshaw.

India is a land of great compassions and charity. It is also a land of stunning cruelties. For a Westerner raised in a more egalitarian setting, the cruelties are sometimes easier to understand than the indifference to physical humiliation of one person by another, as symbolized by the man-powered rickshaw.

In Calcutta, for example, there is little or no social stigma attached to riding in a carriage pulled by another human being.

"Compared with being crushed and jostled on a bus, clinging to the door of a tram or stumbling along a broken pavement, rickshaw riding is luxurious," a British engineering professor, T.H. Thomas, wrote in a 1981 study. "The view is good; conversation between riders is easy; the puller may be instructed to hurry, dawdle or make impromptu stops at a rider's will. Fine clothes will not be crushed or dirtied."

Calcutta is the last major city in the world to have significant numbers of man-pulled rickshaws. Eighty thousand men, mostly Moslems from the poor state of Bihar, toil at this anachronistic occupation.

The rickshaw was invented by a missionary in Japan in 1871 but it has long since disappeared there. China banned the rickshaw in 1949 as a cruel and exploitative occupation. Even Bangladesh, the miserably poor country east of Calcutta, does not permit one human being to pull another between the shafts of a rickshaw.

Yet rickshaws persist, and even thrive in Calcutta, where they were introduced in 1914 by Chinese immigrants.

Actually, they are a relatively modern mode of transport here. During the Victorian era, in which Calcutta was transformed into an Asian capital for the British empire, 10,000 palanquin (litter) bearers worked in Calcutta, carrying British and rich Indian sahibs in compartments supported on the shoulders of two or four men.

There are no more palanquins in Calcutta today, but rickshaws are as much a part of the city as the Howrah Bridge over the Ganges or the giant temple to the Goddess Kali or the home for the dying run by Mother Teresa and the Sisters of Charity.

One reason is that during the monsoon season, June through August, rickshaws are often the only transportation moving through rain-flooded streets. And in the monsoon season, rickshaw pullers triple their rates.

"As flood levels rise, so do the importance and fares of rickshaws," Prof. Thomas wrote.

Despite their usefulness during the monsoon, the rickshaws remain an embarrassment to the Communist government of the surrounding state of West Bengal, a symbol of its failure to bring progress to this city.

Repeated efforts by the government to ban rickshaws here, or at least to limit their number, have obviously failed. Some city officials here sadly admit that the numbers of rickshaws on Calcutta streets may actually be increasing.

Only 6,000 rickshaws are licensed to operate in Calcutta, Police Sgt. Shyamal Chakravarty said, "but you will see more than 30,000 plying our streets."

Rickshaw owners — who include many police constables, Chakravarty admitted — run several rickshaws under the same license, making sure that their vehicles operate in different parts of the city. If they are caught by police and their rickshaws confiscated, it is not very expensive to buy a replacement, and they can recoup their investment in less than a year. Some rickshaw owners have several hundred vehicles.

With very few exceptions, the rickshaw puller leases his rickshaw from an owner at a rate of about 55 cents a day.

A typical rickshaw puller is a Moslem from Bihar state. Usually he will leave his family in Bihar and come to Calcutta for six months at a time. He sleeps on the floor of a room that he shares with 25 or more other rickshaw pullers.

If he is lucky and works hard, he will earn about $2 a day. After he has paid his rent to the rickshaw owner and spent money for food and housing, he might have about 75 cents to send to his family.

To a Westerner this may seem a paltry sum, but to a poor man from Bihar, where farm workers are often paid in grain instead of cash, it is a step up.

"I was paid five kilograms (11 pounds) of grain a day," said Mohammed Saku, 25, a rickshaw puller from Bihar who came to Calcutta only a few months ago. "I know that this is not a good job. But I had six mouths to feed and five kilograms of grain was not enough."

In India's complicated, caste-dominated society, there are many jobs considered much worse than rickshaw puller: working with leather, for example, or removing human waste from private homes or handling the remains of dead animals.

And, according to a study on the subject by Unnayan, a Calcutta social work organization, "rickshaw pulling is a socially acceptable activity insofar as it is considered no defect in a prospective husband."

That is significant, since marriage is a key measure of status in Indian society, even in the supposedly casteless Moslem community.

Still, there are few rickshaw wallahs who will say that they like their jobs.

"I hate this work but I can't find anything else," said Mohammed Khartali, 35, who came to Calcutta from Bihar after a mica plant where he worked closed.

The biggest challenge to a rickshaw puller is the constant threat to his health. Rickshaw pulling is hard and dangerous. During the monsoon rains, when the streets become rivers, inexperienced rickshaw men have been known to fall into manholes uncovered by the city to help drain the streets. During dry times, many others are hit by buses and cars vying for space on the congested roads.

Although one famous Calcutta rickshaw puller named Ramrit Paswan recently retired at the age of 80 after toiling between the wooden shafts for 60 years, most pullers do not survive 10 years. If they do not die on the job, their lungs collapse or their legs finally give out under the strain.

Unlike the many other rickshaw pullers who succumb to disease or maiming injury after only a year or two as a human horse, Shekh Mohammed Enus, the man who hopes to retire in two years, said he had been able to survive two decades pulling a rickshaw because he spends a little more money on his body each day than the others.

The key to longevity, said Enus, a ragged figure no more than 4 feet, 8 inches tall clad in a cotton dhoti tied like a diaper around his groin, is to eat a balanced diet that includes an occasional piece of meat or fish. When he speaks of food, Enus can make a grizzle of mutton sound like filet mignon and a stinking piece of Ganges River fish sound like truite bleu.

Whereas other pullers might spend only about 60 cents or even as little as 40 cents each day on food, Enus said he spends 75 cents.

That means he sends a little less money back to his family in Bihar. But the extra money allows him to supplement his normal meals of flat bread and lentils with an occasional shred of fish or mutton.

"I have to maintain myself," Enus explained, speaking as a mechanic might of the need for a regular tuneup.

After all, he knows what it takes to keep his tiny, sinewy human engine running — 10 rupees a day, 75 cents.

ISRAEL ART SHOW

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ancient art from the Israel Museum is being exhibited at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art through July 5.

"Treasures of the Holy Land" includes over 150 antiquities covering all the major archaeological periods, from the 10th millennium B.C. to the Byzantine period in the 7th century A.D. In addition to their beauty, the objects are of cultural significance and nearly all of them come from excavations of famous biblical sites conducted during this century.

Among the highlights are the Habakkuk Commentary, one of the first discovered and best preserved of the Dead Sea Scrolls, and a bronze statue of the Roman emperor Hadrian.

ROGOFF CITED

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS
Chippendale furniture will never go out of style and most of today's furniture designs are taken from past Chippendale designs. Characteristics of Chippendale furniture include: rolled arms; sofa arms as high as the back; legs can be either Marlborough, Cabriole or bracket; scroll top on secretaries and highboys; yoke shaped backs on chairs with vertical splats and open carving; hardware usually shaped like an eagle with ball; keyholes; feet are often ball and claw; open carving is displayed in chairbacks; humpback on upholstered pieces with carving at the knee of the leg; shell and canthus leaf motifs; tripod pedestal tea tables with pie crust table tops and bird cage table supports; lattice work on the front of cabinet work; saddle seats; chairs with either ladder back or ribbon backs. The wood most often used was mahogany and most used fabrics were tapestry, velvet, brocade and needlepoint.
Chippendale is an English style and is usually considered formal. Some of the newer Chippendale sofas, however, have informal fabrics and an added skirt, sometimes gathered. The latest adaptive look has an overpadded look over the arm.
We have just returned from the Spring Furniture Market where we made some really beautiful purchases. Significant new lines have been added with more new and different looks than could ever be described here. We invite you to visit our showroom frequently over the next thirty to sixty days to see these exciting new additions.

Bavarian Studio Rivals Europe's Best

By KENNETH JAUTZ
Associated Press

MUNICH, West Germany

West Germany's Bavaria Atelier, one of Europe's oldest movie studios, has become one of the continent's biggest film and television production centers, giving new competition to better known rivals in London and Rome.

As the heart of West Germany's Hollywood, Bavaria has contributed to several box office hits in recent years, including Wolfgang Peterson's "The Boat" and "Never Ending Story," George Roy Hill's "The Little Drummer Girl" and Jean-Jacques Annaud's "The Name of the Rose."

The German studio was long overshadowed by Rome's Cinecitta and London's Pinewood Studios. But Bavaria chiefs launched an aggressive expansion program after director Bob Fosse put the studio on the international movie-making map in when he made "Cabaret" there in 1971.

"We now do everything that needs to be done to make a movie here, from getting scripts together to putting on the post-production touches," said Michael Roehrig, a studio producer.

Bavaria Atelier is a sprawling fantasy world set in the Bavarian woods outside Munich. Scattered among the trees is a full-sized model of a World War II submarine — used in the 1981 movie, "The Boat" — a 21st century spaceship and a turn-of-the-century Munich street. Nearby, the paint is peeling on the buildings along main street of "Toyland." The giant Studio 9 rises above the trees, looking much like a towering airline hangar.

"We've become bigger than the other (studios) on the continent in terms of space and facilities," said Bernhard Kock, a Bavarian Atelier spokesman. "This isn't as big as (Hollywood's) Universal studios, but by European standards it's very big."

With its expansion, the studio expected a boom in business from American filmmakers. It has failed to materialize though, due largely to the [illegible] has increased production work overseas for Americans.

Industry experts note it was the lure of lower costs that had helped bring American filmmakers to the Munich studios in the first place, not a movie-making expertise that couldn't be found elsewhere.

"This is my home, but in this business the pool of talent is still simply larger in Los Angeles or New York than anywhere else," said Bernd Eichinger, West Germany's best-known movie producer.

Bavaria Atelier officials noted that while movies have traditionally attracted attention to the Bavaria studios, television pays the bills.

The Munich studios, partly owned by the state of Bavaria, produce a sizable 150 hours worth of TV programs a year, mostly dramatizations, variety shows and serials for West German television networks. They account for most of the studio's income, which annually averages $72 million.

"Television has been the backbone of these studios since they got going again after the war," said Hans Appel, an in-house TV producer and 26-year veteran of the Bavaria Studios.

Appel predicts the television division will increasingly concentrate on made-for-TV movies or serials with an international appeal in an effort to boost its profile abroad. West German television shows have traditionally not sold well abroad. "The (production) costs have become so great that we have to avoid plots and scenes that will appeal to German audiences only," he says.

From March to October, the public is allowed onto the studio grounds for a behind-the-scenes look at Bavaria Atelier. Last year, 500,000 vistors toured the seven studios, dozens of workshops and a small museum filled with film props.

"These tours have been more popular than anyone guessed," Kock said. "It seems everyone is curious about the movie business."

Frankie, Annette In New Beach Movie

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — The surf's up, Annette and Frankie are back on the beach and all's well with the world.

Some things never change, and some people, too. Although they both have grown children, Annette Funicello and Frankie Avalon aren't much different from the years when he pursued her in "Beach Blanket Bingo," "How to Stuff a Wild Bikini" and other mindless teen-age movies of the mid-1960s.

Paramount Pictures is sponsoring a reunion of the pair in "Back to the Beach," in which they play onetime beach lovers who move to Ohio. He is a successful car dealer who wins a trip to Hawaii. On the way they stop in California to visit their college-age daughter.

The movie was recently filming on Malibu Pier under the direction of Lyndall Hobbs, a newcomer from Australia. The scene had Avalon and Miss Funicello storming up to an apartment over a bait shop. They suspect — horrors — that their daughter is shacked up with a surfer.

Could that ever have happened in one of their movies?

"Never," Miss Funicello said. "Frankie was always trying to get me, but my line was 'Not without a ring.'"

"Maybe we'd have a little kissing in the back seat of the car," Avalon said. "That was it."

Miss Funicello, 43, and Avalon, 47, are pop icons from a more innocent age. She was the San Fernando Valley girl who became the most popular member of Walt Disney's Mickey Mouse Club (1955-59). She moved into features with "The Shaggy Dog" and "Babes in Toyland" and recorded the hit singles, "Tall Paul" and "How Will I Know My Love?"

He was the south Philadelphia boy who organized his own band at 14, was discovered and made million sellers with "Venus" and "Swingin' on a Rainbow." He starred with Alan Ladd in "Guns of Timberland" and John Wayne in "The Alamo."

BACK TO THE BEACH — Frankie Avalon and Annette Funicello, who starred in "Beach Blanket Bingo," "How to Stuff a Wild Bikini" and other movies of the mid-sixties, relax during a break in taping their new movie, "Back to the Beach" in Malibu, Calif. The independent American International Pictures united the young stars in 1963 with "Beach Party" and the pairing continued until "Fireball 500" in 1965.

"We made those picture in three weeks — 15 working days — but we got a lot into them," Miss Funicello recalled. "The budget of 'Back to the Beach' is up to $10 million, and we're shooting it in 8½ weeks."

Their appearances together since that time have been sporadic: a Dick Clark special now and then, her appearing as a guest on his CBS variety show.

They followed separate careers. She had occasional TV shots ("Love Boat," "Fantasy Island") and was the nine-year spokeswoman for Skippy peanut butter; he was a headliner in Las Vegas, Atlantic City and elsewhere.

"I have been trying to retire for a long time," Miss Funicello said. "A couple of years ago I went back into a recording studio for the first time in 18 years. I did a country and western album in Nashville, and I was scared to death. Singing has always frightened me, so I decided I had to do it.

"I loved it, and now I'm back into recording because of this picture. We're going to have a soundtrack album."

In 1965, she married her agent, Jack Gilardi, and they had three children, now 21, 17 and 12. The marriage ended in 1983.

"When I was divorced, I grew up for the first time," she admitted. "I had been so very much in the arms of my father and then Walt Disney and then my ex-husband. I didn't know how to write a check, much less balance a checkbook. Everything was taken care of for me, always with love and great TLC. But it wasn't always good for me."

In the last two decades Avalon has made a few movies and appeared on television, mostly in variety shows. He also toured with fellow Philadelphians Bobby Rydell and Fabian in a show called "Golden Boys Bandstand."

"We tried it out the summer before last and we were supposed to do 30 concerts," he said. "We did 50. Because of the success of it, we did 80 last summer. It was back to one-nighters again, on the bus or plane, and at the end of the 80th I said, 'Guys, I love it and I love you, but I'm out.' They're going out again without me."

Like Miss Funicello, Avalon is family-oriented. He married Kay Deibel 25 years ago, and they have eight children, ranging in age from 13 to 23.

After 25 years of travel, he's happy to be spending more time at home: "It's a great family, four boys and four girls, which made it good for the bedrooms. Seven of them still live at home; the oldest boy just moved out a couple of months ago.

"They're wonderful kids — no big drug problems, that sort of thing," he said. "The reason is that I have a very strong, dedicated, disciplined wife who took care of the home while I was out there taking care of my business."

Greek Filmmaker Drawing Big Audiences

By KERIN HOPE
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Film director Theodoros Angelopoulos, who won the Golden Lion award at Venice in 1980 with a four-hour historical epic, is attracting bigger international audiences now that he cuts his films to commercial length.

The 51-year-old director's latest movie is "The Bee-Keeper," starring Marcello Mastroianni. It runs 120 minutes.

"I feel like a prisoner, being restricted to two hours, but it does make distribution and financing much easier. It seems people can't take big films," Angelopoulos said in an interview.

The bespectacled, soft-spoken director earned his reputation with a series of slow-paced, beautifully lighted period pieces.

"When I started directing, Greece was always shown as a tourist land of sun, sea and islands," he said. "I wanted to convey visually how difficult life can be in winter, especially in the northern countryside."

Angelopoulos prefers to shoot under steely skies in bleak Macedonian towns and stony mountain villages. His heroes are the outsiders of modern Greek history — political exiles and frustrated leftwing idealists.

"I was a child of World War II, born during a pre-war dictatorship. My earliest memory is a chilly Christmas in Nazi-occupied Athens," he said. "Inevitably, I was concerned with war and politics."

A lawyer by training, Angelopoulos chose filmmaking over writing in the early 1960s and studied in Paris. He calls himself a latecomer to films.

Success came in 1975 with his first lengthy feature, "The Traveling Players," which illustrated political turmoil in Greece through the fortunes of a touring actors' company in the 1940s. The film launched Angelopoulos' reputation abroad, winning prizes in Britain, Japan and Italy.

He won the Golden Lion award with "Megalexandros," based on a notorious 19th century incident in which Greek outlaws kidnapped and then killed a group of aristocratic British tourists after their ransom demands were rejected.

Angelopoulos has since abandoned epics in favor of more personal themes. "Journey to Kythera," winner of the best screenplay award at Cannes in 1984, told how a repatriated political exile tries to recover relationships that were buried for 30 years.

"I feel a kind of silence of history now. The great visions don't seem to exist any longer, so you have to turn to the small-scale, personal things," he said.

In "The Bee-Keeper," Mastroianni plays a retired schoolteacher who sets out from a frigid town in northern Greece with his beehives, driving south in search of his leftwing past. He dies after an unhappy affair with a young hitchhiker, stung to death by his bees.

"It's a powerful, gloomy piece. I needed an actor with the weight of Mastroianni and he was tremendous in the part," the director said.

"We've worked together for years, shooting at first on a shoestring budget, never knowing when we started where we'd find the rest of the money," he said.

Angelopoulos says that Greece's cash-strapped film industry remains "timid and provincial" in outlook, despite recent efforts by former actress Melina Mercouri, Greece's culture minister, to boost quality movie-making here.

"We have talented directors, but a shortage of bold scriptwriters. Few people are willing to confront big themes so the films don't attract audiences," he said.

Although movies are still popular in Greece, local filmmakers produce only a dozen serious features a year. More than 80 percent of films seen at Greek theaters are American, French or Italian.

"I worry that Greece may be losing its distinctive cultural identity as it gets wealthier and locked into Europe," Angelopoulos said. "I get anxious that soon we'll be like everyone else."

Efficient Appliances, Layouts Key Trends In Kitchen Designs

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

What's happening in American kitchen design?

Judging from prize winners in a design contest, efficient appliances and layouts and low-maintenance surfaces free of clutter are a few of the trends.

In addition, a lighter color palette with peach and green color schemes and mood as well as task lighting are other features. Accenting the importance of the kitchen as a social center, designers in the contest favored open floor plans based on curves and angles that direct traffic and encourage sociability.

The six winners (three first prize and three second prize) are to be honored May 3 at the National Kitchen and Bath Conference in Atlanta. They come from coast to coast. Their kitchens incorporate regional differences as well as national similarities, said Julie Bundy, director of consumer education for the Maytag Co., which sponsored the contest.

Another fact of life about the winning kitchens, which are designed for hypothetical families living in an imaginary 25-year-old ranch house, is that they are all expensive

There are three imaginary budgets; they started at $15,000 to $25,000 and escalated sharply to $25,000 to $40,000 and then to infinity. Each design included demolition and construction costs, cabinetry, counter and flooring materials. Contest requirements also included opening the kitchen to the family room, providing a breakfast area and powder room or full bath as well as a laundry area, separate home office and food preparation area and space for more than 100 cookbooks.

The first prize winner in the $15,000 to $25,000 category is Shirley Anderson of Redding, Calif. Her plan costed out at $24,653. Included are features such as a curvilinear island and cabinets as well as a copper hood over the stove.

Glen Gardner, N.J., designer Dean Ingram's $30,357 kitchen features angled walls, cabinets, counters and a peninsula to direct the flow of traffic away from the main work triangle. Luxury appliances star in this kitchen including downdraft ventilation on the stove, additional ovens and a second cooktop, wok accessories for stir frying and a built-in wine chiller.

The top prize in the over $40,000 category went to Michael B. Laido, of Franklin Lakes, N.J. He removed all existing interior walls in his $92,000 design. Custom windows and skylights, built-ins for a home office and a dining island as well as a whirlpool bath were some of the must-haves in his design.

Regional differences surfaced in interviews conducted with the winners. In the Midwest, Lynda Wilhelmus of Evansville, Ind., a second place winner, said that popular features include appliance "garages" in which small appliances are stored behind doors on the countertop, rollout cabinets and tray dividers.

"People want more storage, more convenience and better use of space and they want a place to eat in the kitchen even if it is only a bar."

In the California area, Anderson says "people want to express their individuality. They want to entertain and be in the kitchen."

Built in appliances, dishwasher panels for an unbroken line of cabinets, quarter-round moldings to refine the details, built-in microwave ovens and skylights are especially popular.

Anderson also said people tend to use their kitchens in different ways during the week and on weekends. Weekdays, it's quick snacks and saving time; but on the weekends leisurely preparation of elegant food is often a recreational activity.

She advised families interested in remodeling to prepare before calling on a remodeler or kitchen designer.

"I encourage clients to look at their kitchen, list what they like and don't, what they've always dreamed about, but didn't think was possible."

Laido tells prospective clients to look around before coming to him and to check prices on similar quality and work. He thinks people are spending more time thinking about and planning a new kitchen and that more men are involved with both the designing and working of the kitchen than in the past.

Ingram says individuals contemplating remodeling look at magazines and jot down what they like about the pictures they clip.

The two second place winners, besides Wilhelmus were Catherine Kresge, for a kitchen in Houston, Texas, and Colleen Langston of Newport Beach, Calif.

Langston says working women are strongly influencing kitchen design. Though work outside the home takes women away from the kitchen, it also provides them with the money they may need to remodel the room as they see fit.

Barbecued gastronomy comes into its own when the weather invites us to spend more of our time in the backyard, patio or wherever we do our outdoor grilling.

Successful barbecuing is synonomous with safe barbecuing. And safe barbecuing means such things as never taking for granted the business of making a fire, watching it while the food is being cooked and being especially careful about extinguishing it properly. Remember, too, that charcoal, so popular outdoors, emits carbon monoxide and can be dangerous when used inside.

Speaking of charcoal, the taste that is so cherished by many barbecue lovers does not really come from the charcoal, but from the smoke that hits the food as grease drips on to the fuel. One other point while still on the subject of charcoal: Since it absorbs moisture, it should be stored so that moisture does not affect it, which means in an airtight container or in a very dry place.

Despite an almost endless number of experiences with outdoor grills, we felt that the matter of safety in this particular area called for advice from an authority on the subject, in this case John L. Paige, senior vice president of the Scripto-Tokai Co. of Rancho Cucamonga, Calif. His first comment was that safety can be attained simply by following commonsense rules that apply to the handling of fires of any kind.

"A container of water should be close by at all times because of the possibility of flare-ups and other emergencies," said Paige. "It is surprising how often barbecuing is done in an area where the water is not instantly available in case of trouble. It is not enough that there be a faucet nearby or in the house. The water should be in a container so that it can be poured in a matter of seconds."

All flammable objects should be kept away from the fire, a seemingly unnecessary bit of advice since it is so obvious, yet it is often ignored. Paige recommends this distance should be eight feet at the very least. If possible, avoid a flash-flammable liquid. To start charcoal, self-starting briquets are readily available. Or, you can pile briquets inside a large coffee can with the top and bottom removed. Paige said you then light some crumpled newspaper underneath the can and, when the briquets settle to the bottom, carefully remove the can, using tongs or special gloves, and spread out the coals. Should you use lighter fluid, keep it far from the grill after use. Never squirt lighter fluid on hot coals. And be sure to keep the lighter fluid or a butane barbecue lighter out of the direct sunlight and other hot locations.

The fire should be "cold out," not just out, so that what is left is cold enough to touch. If possible, dump the coals into a pot of water, but the important thing is not to leave hot coals unattended until they go out by themselves.

Children present a hazard which must be controlled. They should be told which items will be hot and must never be touched. They must be supervised by an adult at all times. Be sure that any games they or the adults play are far away from the grill, especially if the games involve running or the throwing of a ball.

Paige said other things to watch out for are chairs close to the grill so a child or anyone else cannot tip one over within range of the fire; not leaving snacks or glass plates on the grill's table attachment, if it has one; removing all sharp utensils, such as carving knives and serving forks, from reach, and making sure the grill stands securely and cannot tip easily.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable data in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $2 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Here's The Answer

Q. — We are building a house and using cedar shingles for the siding. Is it necessary to treat the shingles in any way? We like the natural aging look that appears to take place in time after exposure to the elements. Can we just leave the singles alone and have them age that way?

A. — Yes. In time, the weather will bleach the siding to a silvery gray.

Q. — Our old house has a toilet tank which fills with water and then empties into the bowl when the handle is turned. It has gotten kind of balky lately. I notice when I take off the top of the tank that the metal ball at the end of the horizontal rod is below the top of the water when the flushing has stopped. Is this the way it should be?

A. — You did not say what "balky" means. There can be half a dozen things that can go wrong with that type of toilet mechanism. As for the float ball, only part of it should be below the surface of the water. If more than that is submerged, it usually means the ball has lost its buoyancy, in which case it must be replaced. If all goes well, the ball should come off easily by unscrewing it, but worn, corroded float balls and threads can cause trouble. If the ball does not come off fairly easily, use a pliers to assist you. But be careful or you will throw everything out of alignment. Be sure the rod is held firmly while you are trying to unscrew the ball. This might be a good time to consider replacement of the inside mechanism of the tank with one of the modern gadgets that are less likely to go out of order. They are sold at most hardware stores and home centers.

Q. — I am going to do a considerable amount of woodworking and will be using a lot of nails. Can you tell me the difference between common nails and box nails?

A. — Common nails are the kind with the flat heads used for most rough work. Box nails look very much the same, but are thinner and less likely to split the wood.

Q. — I want to clean an old piece of furniture that has a varnish finish and lots of grime on it. The finish appears to be intact and I would hate to go to the trouble of taking off the old finish and starting from scratch. What can I use for the cleaning that will not ruin the finish?

A. — Use denatured alcohol, which is a solvent for shellac but will not hurt the varnish.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, remover, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. 'Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Q. Will my Easter lily survive if I plant it outside?

A. Yes. Plant your Easter lily in a sunny spot with good drainage. A spot receiving four to five hours of sunlight per day is sufficient. Don't cut the stem off, but allow it to die naturally. Your Easter lily will bloom again next summer.

Q. Blackbirds are eating my corn before it sprouts. What should I do to keep the birds away?

A. Use scare tactics or physical barriers to keep the birds away until the corn is three to four inches tall. Some scare tactics are scarecrows or pieces of shiny metal. Setting off firecrackerse or shooting a shotgun will keep the birds away for a while. A line of string running the length of the row and a few inches above the ground will help serve as a physical barrier. Netting is a good barrier if you do not have a large area planted. It should be about three inches above ground.

Q. Is there such a thing as a white eggplant?

A. Yes. It was from the white varieties that the eggplant received its name. If you see some of the white varieties, you will see how appropriate the name eggplant is. There is also a red variety of eggplant available.

Q. What is a gazania?

A. Gazania is also called treasure flower. It is a daisy-like flower that has many colorful hybrids of pink, bronze, yellow, red, gold and tangerine. There are usually bold contrasting markings on the flowers. The leaves of the plant are gray-green and the plants grow about eight to 11 inches tall. Gazanias like full sun and well-drained soil. They flower in summer and early autumn. They are not hardy in North Carolina.

Opening lead: Four of ◇ South, declarer at three no trump, did not set his sights high enough on this hand from a rubber bridge game. Instead of looking to make nine tricks, he played to insure one! The result was deservedly catastrophic.

HOW HIGH THE MOON?

After North's jump rebid, South was faced with the decision of whether to rebid his hearts or to gamble three no trump in the hope that his positional spade stopper would suffice. He also could have passed, but that seemed cowardly. So he tried for the nine-trick game and there was no denying that three no trump was a good contract.

Unfortunately, South's play did not measure up to his bidding. West wisely chose not to give declarer a trick and the tempo by leading a spade. Instead, he elected to lead from his diamond holding. To make sure of a trick in the suit, declarer followed low from dummy. East's queen won, and he wasted no time in getting a spade on the table. As a result, the defenders took the first eight tricks—six spades and two diamonds.

Declarer forgot all about his main goal—fulfilling his contract. An extra diamond loser was of no consequence whatsoever. What was critical was to keep East off lead. To the uninitiated, it might seem like a pure guess as to whether East held the queen or ace of diamonds. Not so. If East held the ace, there was no way he could be stopped from gaining the lead. Therefore, the crucial case was where East held the queen. To stop that card from becoming an entry, declarer had to play the king of diamonds at trick one. That would have produced a swing of five tricks and the contract.

Soil Fungi Serves Role In Forests

By ROBERT STERLING
Medford Mail Tribune

MEDFORD, Ore. (AP) — For years they were ignored or considered a threat, but these days life is jolly for mycorrhizae.

The microscopic soil fungi have become champions of the forest, hailed by scientists and forest managers as essential to healthy woodlands. Forestry practices are being altered to accommodate the fungi, which have been shown to link tree roots in a complex interdependent web.

Without mycorrhizae (pronounced mike-o-rise-ee), seedlings turn sick and pale, reforestation fails and clearcuts stay bare.

"Mycorrhizae are one of the hottest topics in forestry," says Mike Amaranthus, a soil scientist for the Siskiyou National Forest in southern Oregon. Amaranthus and others at Oregon State University in Corvallis are among the leaders in mycorrhizal research, regularly presenting talks on their latest findings.

They have drawn the attention of forest managers throughout the world, who have traveled to southern Oregon and Oregon State to see for themselves the latest mycorrhizal experiments.

For Amaranthus, who is doing his doctoral research on the importance of mycorrhizae on managed forest lands, spreading the word about the tiny fungi has become something of a crusade. He talks to colleges, high schools and international symposiums.

Although the fungi's existence has been known for the past century, for much of that time there was little research into them. Some even thought they caused disease, Amaranthus says.

Only in recent years have scientists discovered their vital role in the forest. Mycorrhizae are tiny fungal caps, 3 to 20 millimeters long, that cover the ends of roots like socks. Minuscule hyphae radiate like hair from the caps and through the soil, commonly extending up to 50 feet from a tree.

Occasionally these hyphae bear "fruit," known as mushrooms and truffles. Woody forests in the Pacific Northwest are particularly dependent on mycorrhizae, which help feed water and nutrients to trees, and allow them to better resist drought and disease.

In turn, the trees provide the fungi with sugars that help them survive. The important symbiotic relationship has been more fully understood in recent years, as soil has come to be viewed as a crucial element of forest ecology.

"Soil is really a tremendous living, breathing thing," Amaranthus says.

With some of their new-found knowledge, scientists have gone back to old forest clearcuts where reforestation has failed, and where "biological activity in the soil was almost nil," Amaranthus says.

In one recent case in the Siskiyou National Forest, scientists combined seedlings with new soil rich in mycorrhizae. Seedling survival doubled and growth tripled. Mycorrhizae was the key, and the word has spread.

Private timber companies and public agencies have begun including mycorrhizae spores in the water fed to greenhouse nurseries. Forest managers have learned that forests are complex, that once the ecology has been disturbed "you can't just plant a tree and expect it to survive," Amaranthus says.

Logging techniques that involve machine piling — where soil in clear-cut areas is scraped aside — severe burning of brush and soil compaction all have helped cut vital mycorrhizae populations, Amaranthus says.

In response, the Forest Service has tried to minimize severe burning, encourage skyline logging to avoid disturbing the earth, and has placed more emphasis on mycorrhizae inoculations, Amaranthus says.

New information has been uncovered by leading mycorrhizal scientists such as Jim Trappe, David Perry and Mike Castellano, who are conducting research at Oregon State. Their work is drawing intense interest from forest and agriculture managers in Central America, India, Africa, China and elsewhere, where ecological systems have been destroyed and reforestation has been difficult.

Ahoskie's Rachel Pittman Combines Toy Making With Writing History Books

Costumed Bears Focus On George Washington

AHOSKIE — Rachel Pittman of Ahoskie did not set out to write a book about a fictitious bear nor start a business dressing collectable teddy bears — it just happened. She purchased some three-inch teddy bears for ornaments for her antique shop Christmas tree, and then decided they needed some clothes. One thing led to another.

The idea of a little colonial bear occurred to Mrs. Pittman. Because she had a great admiration for the father of our country, she promptly named the bear "G. Washington Bear."

"I dressed the little three-inch bear in red waistcoat with a ruffle at the neck and a tricorn or cornered hat," she recalls. "It was while I was doing this that the story occurred to me about my 'G. Washington Bear.' Once I knew where I was headed, I began to write. From then on 'G. Washington Bear' and I became a twosome.

Text And Photos By Gail Roberson

Sought Assistance

I placed an ad in the paper for women who might like to do sewing at home and help me dress the bears. We held some training classes, and before long I had as many as 17 women scattered over three counties working on the Washington bears."

Today, Mrs. Pittman generally employs two full-time workers, while the rest of her helpers sew at home. The number of employees fluctuates with needs. The full-time employees, seamstresses Margaret Bracy and Lila Parker are "the sewingest women in Hertford County," she says.

Mrs. Pittman soon moved on up to larger bears instead of working only with the ornament size. She progressed from the five-inch to the eight-inch size, and then to 13-inch teddy bears.

Book And Bear As One

"I was not consciously trying to keep the book and the bear as one," she admits, "but looking back on it, I realize that I unknowingly merged two real interests of mine. I have alwasys loved teddy bears, and George Washington is someone who has intrigued me for a lifetime. I've collected memorabilia on him for years."

Mrs. Pittman's first book, "G. Washington Bear," is the account of a special little bear whose desire to see more of the world led him to a new land and many adventures. Once in America, he was befriended by George Washington himself.

"G. Washington Bear," is of course, the main fictional creation in Mrs. Pittman's book, but the events that take place in the bear's life are authentic parts of our nation's history.

The historical appeal of the book neither begins nor stops with any age group, especially since her dressed bears now accompany the sale of the book. The book is not packaged with the bear, but it's sold alongside it.

Brings In Martha

Her second book, "Martha C. Bear," is primarily about the wedding of the two. In it she has also introduced "Mary Washinton Bear," who is "G. Washington Bears's" mother. All of these are available in a variety of costumes, both formal and informal, ranging from inaugural to coonskin cap, and to the actual wedding gown and formal attire necessary for the ceremony.

The books are printed by The Herald Printing House of Ahoskie, North Carolina. The first was illustrated by Rachel's nephew, Judson Newbern. Rebecca Askew, a local artist and friend, is responsible for illustrations in the second book.

Both the books and the bears are available at Mrs. Pittman's Ahoskie shop, at Jefferson Florists in Greenville, and in Raleigh, Winston-Salem, and three Virginia cities — Virginia Beach, Yorktown, and Fredericksburg. They are currently stocked by the DAR Museum in Washington, D.C., at Mount Vernon, and at the Toymaker in Williamsburg.

The bears are marketed as a "Ra'wel" bear, — the name comes from Mrs. Pittman's grandchildren, who had difficulty in pronouncing her name, so the bears ended up with the Ra'wel name.

In 1986 Mrs. Pittman estimates that between 2,000 and 3,000 were dressed by hand. The business is now in its third year of operation.

Was Scout And Spy

"My little bear was a scout for Washington," Mrs. Pittman said. "In the book, he helped save the life of Washington and also served as a spy and delivered messages for him. Though the bear itself is fictional, everything about Washington is true. Through the bear, we learn about Washington and our country during his lifetime."

Mrs. Pittman foresees other books in the making. By early summer this year she hopes to introduce the third book which involves "G. Washington Bear" at the Constitutional Convention. She has already carried the bear through the French and Indian War and the American Revolution, and intends to continue the series on through Washington's life, introducing various characters in American history such as Lafayette, Alexander Hamilton, and members of the Constitutional convention.

Cards hung around the necks of the bears carry comments which are written as if the bear itself might actually be speaking.

"I hope that I can present history to children or to anyone else who might read the book, in an entertaining and interesting fashion in order to make history more exciting," she said. "I love history and I want to share that love with others."

Intensive Research

Mrs. Pittman spends hours of research on the costumes to insure authenticity.

"I went to the costume department in Williamsburg," she said. "That was extremely helpful. I purchased books on 18th century clothing. Then I sketched what I wanted, and those working on the costumes helped from there on out. Of course, we have to keep the bear's physical shape in mind because it's quite different from dressing a person. We've had to adapt the costumes to fit the more 'hippy' bear. But we have tried to keep them as appealing as possible."

The bear Mrs. Pittman began with looked so much like a Koala bear that in the beginning of her first book, she placed him in Australia for his journey to America. When she moved to the larger bears, the facial features changed. She now designs her own bear, with its individual identifying facial features copyrighted.

Import Problem

When Mrs. Pittman settled on her plans, she soon became exposed to an unexpected import problem.

"I wanted an American-made bear to be my 'G. Washington Bear,' she said. "I went to the toy fair in New York, certain that I'd find exactly what I wanted."

To her amazement, however, there were no jointed bears like she wanted made in America. The only place she could turn to was the Orient. For the first time, she personally experienced the seriousness of the import problem.

"There were plenty of soft, floppy bear types available," she said. "but I couldn't visualize this type of bear portraying our country's founding father. I wanted a bear that would wear military clothing well, and would stand proud and erect."

The bear Mrs. Pittman chose is imported from China by an American firm. Even the smallest bears have jointed legs, arms and head.

One of the chores involved with the day-to-day bear dressing is shopping for the material itself. It's one of her favorite tasks. "I need lace, taffeta and other cloth that ranges from felt to moire and from chintz to fur. I have to be careful to choose fabrics that lend themselves well to 18th century styles."

She and her employees draw their own patterns. If it's too complicated for the bear's body, they work on it until it's right. When a pattern works, it's cut from the special material. Like the bears and the books, every costume must be copyrighted. "It's always an ongoing thing," she said.

A Long Dormant Interest

Her family was surprised with her involvement in sewing and designing animal clothing and writing children's books. She had not shown such interests before, but realizes that it lay just below the surface all these years. Her major in college was economics. Before her marriage to Woody Pittman, she taught at Wake Forest University and then taught economics and government for 12 years at Chowan College in Murfreesboro.

Mrs. Pittman now spends considerable time visiting schools in areas of eastern North Carolina and Virginia. She takes along her bears and books in conjunction with special educational events.

Ramp Eating Time In The Tennessee Hills

COSBY, Tenn. (AP) — Ramps are eaten in scrambled eggs, barbecued chicken or soup beans.

Sometimes they're eaten in self defense, says the organizer of an annual celebration of the onion-like plant which grows wild near this East Tennessee town.

Each year on the first Sunday in May, folks from around here gather on a mountain or hillside to exchange ramp recipes, listen to bluegrass music and tell stories while munching on the wild weed.

"It's like a big family gathering. There's never any trouble up there," said Lorene Hartsell, dispatcher for the Cocke County Sheriff's Office. "Usually the worst offense anybody commits is bad breath."

Sometimes political candidates show up to stump with the ramp.

"It's part of the tradition here in this part of the world," said Cocke County Executive Charles Lewis Moore, who doesn't worry about munching ramps and talking to voters.

"I don't think there's any fear of offending. But you don't go around blowing your breath on anyone," Moore said. "The benefits certainly overshadow any bad breath."

This year, the 34th annual ramp festival is expected to attract more than 10,000 people, said Henry Hoage, president of the Cosby Ruritan Club which organizes of the event.

"The ramp is like an onion, but it's actually a cross between a garlic and a leek," he said. "They have a small bulb and two leaves like that of a lily.

"The old-timers here considered it a cure-all and spring tonic to get rid of winter blues," he said. "It's really quite tasty but pungent, very pungent. A lot of the people will eat ramps in self-defense."

Ramps flourish at elevations of 3,000 feet or more, and each year festival organizers fan out through the hills and mountains around here to dig up 40 to 50 bushels for cooking and snacking during the festival, said Hoage.

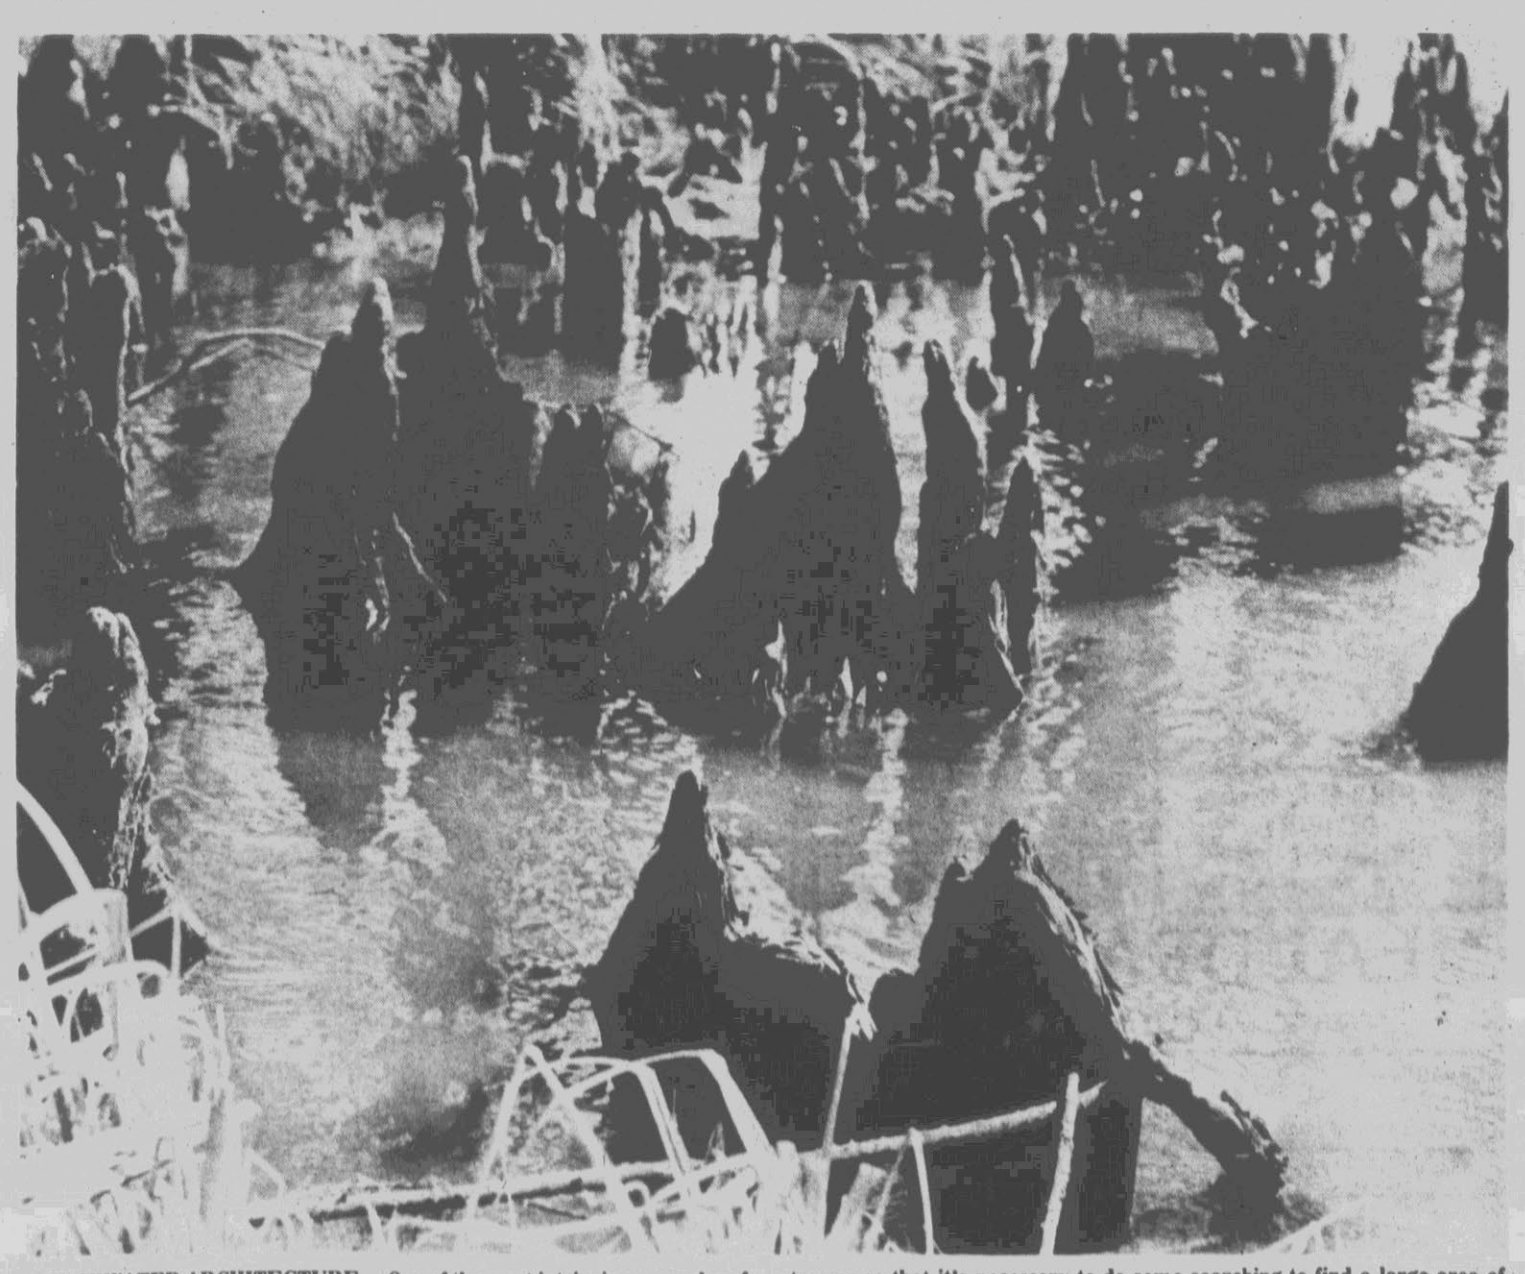
"They can be eaten raw or cooked. We put ramps in barbecue, but mainly they're used with scrambled eggs," he said.

"We have all kinds of recipes. Usually the women go around and talk about what they're cooking while they're cooking it," he said. "We'll barbecue somewhere in the neighborhood of three- to four-thousand pounds of chicken and fry four- to five-hundred pounds of fatback. And there'll be soup beans and cornbread, and hamburgers and hot dogs."

The annual day-long event includes a beauty pageant to select the Maid of Ramps from a bevy of 15 young women, he said.

"They will be judged on personality, poise and beauty. The winner will get a trophy, a banner, a crown and a bouquet of roses," he said.

Even the Legislature is anxious to honor the ramp. A bill to make the ramp the official state wild salad is under consideration in Nashville.



BACKWATER ARCHITECTURE — One of the most intriguing examples of nature's architecture is the growth of cypress knees that circumference fully grown cypress trees. These lovely growths, sometimes reaching a height of six feet, are generally located in the backwaters of rivers, swamps and streams so that it's necessary to do some searching to find a large area of them at one locale. The knees shown here are in a wooded area along the Neuse River near Bridgeton in Craven County. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Stamp Series To Honor U.S. Constitution

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

The bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution (1787-1987) calls for much celebration — and the U.S. Postal Service has ambitious plans for the issuance of a series of related postal items to hail the occasion.

One of the philatelic gems will be a booklet containing four panes of five stamps each featuring the preamble to the Constitution. It is scheduled for release Aug. 28.

Each of the five stamps on the booklet pane has a light blue and white background. Depicted in the upper right corner is an eagle, based primarily on a reproduction of a carving from the late 18th century. It is outlined in black, with a yellow background. "USA 22" appears in the lower right corner in black type.

The top of the pane (attached to the booklet selvage) shows, in five lines of type, the words "The Bicentennial of the Constitution of the United States of America, 1787-1987." The four remaining stamps have across the bottom "Preamble to the U.S. Constitution." There are four additional lines above that read, in descending order:

Stamp 2 — "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union ..."

Stamp 4 — "And secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity ..."

Stamp 5 — "Do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Also this year, a postal card will be issued May 25 honoring the convening of the Constitutional Convention. A stamp will be issued Sept. 17 commemorating the signing of the historic document.

In addition, as previously announced, there will be issues recognizing the 200th anniversaries of statehood for the 13 original states, in appropriate years. This year the states are Delaware, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. A postal card next year will pay tribute to the publication of the Federalist Papers. In 1989, stamps will be released recognizing George Washington's inauguration, the House of Representatives, the Senate, the Supreme Court and the drafting of the Bill of Rights.

In 1990 we will see a stamp commemorating the establishment of the boundaries of the nation's capital. A post card in 1991 will honor the ratification of the Bill of Rights.

Details concerning the first day of issue cancellations will be reported here as soon as they become available. Watch for details.

New Show At East Gallery

"Textures of Two Generations" is the exhibit currently on display at East Gallery, 646 Arlington Blvd. The show will be up through June 6.

Art featured in the show is handmade paper by Nancy Salome Sanford and woodcarvings by her son, Stephen L. Sanford.

An opening reception for the artists, free and open to the public, will be held from 4 to 6 this afternoon. Henry Queen, artist in residence at Pitt Community College, will present a half hour program from 4:30 to 5:30.

Mrs. Sanford's handmde paper is made from 100 percent cotton fiber without additives, and uses fade-proof acrylics to color the paper pulp. She practices her art in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area and has a studio in Alexandria, Va.

Stephen Sanford lives and works near Syria, Va., a village at the base of the Blue Ridge Mountains. He creates rugged, rustic pieces from applewood roots and driftwood and also cuts wood for his woodcarvings from the hollows and creek beds of the mountains.

GRANTS RECEIVED

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Archives of American Art says it has received grants from the J. Paul Getty Trust and the Andrew Mellon Foundation.

It says each contributed half of a total of $350,000 to support a project to make the organization's collections more accessible. The grants will support staff and related requirements for a three-year project.

Jewish Treasures In Chrysler Show

NORFOLK, VA. — The Chrysler Museum is currently exhibiting "Danzig 1939: Treasures of a Destroyed Community," a major exhibition selected from over 300 Jewish ceremonial objects that were shipped from the Polish city of Danzig to New York prior to the destruction of the Jewish community there in 1939.

Organized by the Jewish Museum in New York, the exhibition includes over 130 objects, ranging from exquisitely crafted silver Torah crowns to simple Kiddush goblets, as well as documents and photo murals that record the Jewish society that developed in the Baltic Sea port city of Danzig during the 18th, 19th and early 20th centuries.

The exhibition has been seen in several cities in the United States, in Europe and in Israel.

In the spring of 1939, on the verge of the German Nazi occupation of the Free City of Danzig, elders of the Jewish community assembled in the city's Great Synagogue to collect and pack for shipment their most valued and important religious items and memorabilia.

With the assistance of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, the Danzig community was able to ship those objects to the Jewish Theological Seminary of America in New York.

The ceremonial objects thus escaped the Nazi invasion — but the community of Danzig Jews was not so fortunate.

The treasures were sent to the New York seminary on the stipulation that if within 15 years the Danzig Jewish community was reborn, the collection would be returned. If not, it would remain in America for the education and inspiration of the rest of the world.

In conjunction with the exhibition, a program has been organized to search for survivors of the Danzig Jewish community who now live in North Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, Maryland or the District of Columbia. Any such person is to contact Roger Clisby at 804/622-1211 or Dr. Gary N. Rubin, 804/489-8040.

The final two of the series of lectures related to the exhibition, free and open to the public, will be given in May. The first, "Jewish Music in Danzig: Ancient Traditions Confront the Modern Era," will be at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Chrysler Museum Theater. The final of the series will be "Jewish Ceremonial Art: Design and Symbolism" by Dr. Abram Kanof, to be given at 7:30 p.m. May 13 at The Gaines Theater, Campus Center, Christopher Newport College, Newport News.

The Chrysler Museum is located at Olney Road and Mowbray Arch, Norfolk. Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays, 1 to 5 p.m. on Sundays, closed Mondays. Parking and admission are both free.

NEW PERIOD ROOM

NEW YORK (AP) — The Metropolitan Museum of Art recently opened a new period room in its American Wing.

The room, in the Gothic Revival style, is a library from a house built in 1859 in Newburgh, N.Y. The Gothic Revival, like the Greek and Renaissance revivals, was one of the many fashionable mid-19th century styles that borrowed architectural ideas from earlier "romantic" times.

Built for a bank president, Frederick Deming, the house is "an example of some of the finest design and craftsmanship of the time." The architect was Frederick C. Withers.

ECU Fraternity Gives Ovid Pierce A Farewell Banquet

ECU News Bureau

After serving for 30 years as advisor to the Kappa Alpha Order at East Carolina University, novelist Ovid W. Pierce said farewell to the KAs Saturday night at a dinner given in his honor by the local chapter.

Pierce, a native of Weldon and professor-emeritus of English at ECU, told the fraternity members and alumni that the purpose of higher education is "to expand your abilities, to further your vision of what your capabilities really are."

"In other words, it is to help you see farther and farther down the road," Pierce said.

During his long service as advisor to the Gamma Rho chapter of Kappa Alpha, Pierce has counseled hundreds of young men and befriended them during their college days. He is known affectionately as "Doc" by the KA graduates and has been awarded many honors by the national organization.

For those attending the farewell dinner, Pierce spoke on the matter of fraternity membership in college "and your understanding of what a fraternity is — what a purpose it can serve."

"First of all, a fraternity is not a license. It is not a signal for your abandonment of your purpose for being in college," he said. "College has one central purpose.

"You are here to enlarge your abilities to give to the world, by enlarging your understanding of yourselves by comparing your ambitions with able men around you who are giving to the world," he said.

"Kappa Alpha, fortunately, will become for you not a playground, but a valuable place for your own growth. Show your parents that you have been affected by generations of inspired men," he said.

"I want you to leave this university bigger men than you were when you came here, and carry with you lasting effects of what your years here had to give. Self-indulgence alone plays no part in this," he said.

"Kappa Alpha has for a hundred years pointed the way to many great men who have passed on and on to us what strengthens, what confirms and enlarges the abilities we have.

"You, perhaps without knowing it, have led me to realize that my efforts and my hopes for you have rewarded me with a sense of a fuller and happier life," Pierce said.

Pierce is the author of seven acclaimed novels and other published works. In retirement, he has lived in Greenville and recently established a home in Morehead City.

WELCOMING THE SUN'S RETURN — After the long gray days of recent cool spring rains and overcast skies, this week's blossoming of familiar April sunshine brought people outdoors. Here two East Carolina University students welcome the spring warmth by playing Frisbee on campus. The two are, left, Brian Hill of Fayetteville and Randy Lassiter of Hertford. Both are freshmen at ECU. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Authentic Cherokee Arts And Crafts Are Available From Co-Op

CHEROKEE — Authentic Cherokee Indian crafts and arts are now available at the Qualla Arts and Crafts Mutual in Cherokee, a small town 50 miles west of Asheville.

The gallery is a cooperative venture in which ownership is shared by 300 producing participants, governed by a board of ten directors. Betty DuPree is the cooperative's manager. Board members and Ms. DuPree are all Cherokee Indians living on the Qualla Indian Reservation.

More than 90 percent of the crafts featured in the shop are handcrafted by Cherokees on the reservation, made in accordance with the Cherokee culture of the early 1800s.

The remainder of the merchandise also is authentic, although it represents other Indian cultures and is displayed separately to avoid confusion or misrepresentation.

Qualla arts and crafts are not to be construed as mere souvenirs. They are true items of Cherokee and other Indian cultural art, ranging in price from $3 for small rag dolls to over $1,000 for intricate wood sculptures. These are pieces designed for collectors of Indian art and artifacts.

The Qualla items cover a broad spectrum of Indian art — wood and stone carvings, woven baskets, pottery, wood and copper utensils, finger-woven scarves, cherrywood dolls, cane-woven mats, hunting weaponry, and original paintings and prints. A fine selection of wooden masks — a Cherokee specialty — is also featured.

Cherokee Indian artists and craftsmen of western North Carolina use raw materials — either dug or grown in the area for their art.

Anyone interested in a 24-page, full color catalog of items available can send $2 to: Qualla Arts and Crafts Mutual, P.O. Box 277, Cherokee, N.C., 28719. For more details on the co-op or other activities at Cherokee call toll free (in North Carolina) 1-800-222-6157 or 704-497-9195.

10. Never In A Million Years

Abrams Theater Collection Established At St. Andrews

LAURINGBURG — The Amos Abrams Theater Collection, housed in the Detamble Library on the St. Andrews Presbyterian College campus, opened April 25.

The collection is named for William Amos Abrams Jr., a 1965 St. Andrews graduate who died of cancer on Sept. 1, 1986. Abrams was an actor and casting director for many Broadway productions — the collection contains memorabilia from these productions.

A native of Raleigh, Abrams appeared in Franco Zeffirelli's Broadway production of "Saturday, Sunday, Monday"; in the National Company's prodcution of "Cabaret" and in several off-Broadway musicals early in his career. His best-known work, however, was as casting director for a number of Broadway productions.

He cast "Gypsy" with Angela Lansbury in the production given in New York and London; Alexis Smith in "Platinum"; the Jane Powell-Howard Keel production of "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," and "The Royal Family."

Abrams left casting in 1981 to become an associate producer with RKO-National Film and Television Productions. He became the assistant director of the Independent Booking Office in the final three years of its operation, and in 1985, he founded the Road Resources Department which incorporated the booking office into another league, making it into a national business league.

The collection is free and open to the public.

Work By Gordley In Exhibitions

Local husband and wife artists Tran and Marilyn Gordley currently each have an example of their art showing at the 1987 Wake Visual Art Association's festival, ArtsPlosure.

She is showing a watercolor of flowers, "Poinsettia" and he is showing an oil, "Soybean Blinds." Acceptance for the show, which will be on view through May 30, was through a juried competition.

Today, in Florence, a work by Tran Gordley, an oil painting, will go on view at the Joyce Dickinson Dowis Memorial Institution. The show is comprised of work by artists invited to exhibit, and will be on view through May 31.

A Mid-19th Century Journal Of Life On The Outer Banks

NAG'S HEAD OR TWO MONTHS AMONG THE BANKERS. By George H. Throop (pen name Gregory Seaworthy). Charlotte. Heritage House, 1958. (Out of Print).

"When people come to Nag's Head you see," observed George Higby Throop in his book "Nag's Head or Two Months Among the Bankers," "they think they can do anything; run in the noonday sun; eat soft crabs for supper; dance till midnight, and maybe, drink a dozen juleps."

Most beach vacationers today would hardly find this description unusual. What is so unusual is that Throop was writing almost a century and a half ago, before the Civil War.

Throop's "Nag's Head or Two Months Among the Bankers" gives a delightful account of life at Nags Head during the summer of 1849. A northern schoolmaster, Throop spent that summer employed as a tutor for the George Washington Capehart family of Scotch Hall Plantation in Bertie County.

When the Capehart family moved to Nags Head in July, Throop accompanied them. He published the book under the pseudonym Gregory Seaworthy.

Throop, who was fascinated with everything he saw at Nags Head, based the novel on the journal he kept during that time. Like Throop, the main character, Gregory Seaworthy is employed as a tutor for an aristocratic family who packs their entire household, including servants, furniture, and domestic animals, and moves to Nags Head to escape the intense mainland heat of an eastern North Carolina summer.

"Nag's Head or Two Months Among the Bankers," although unconventionally written, is extremely valuable for the detailed observations that Throop makes of the "local color". These descriptions overcome any negative aspects created by the absence of a conventional plot. "And there, in the gray of morning, its sand-hills, live oaks, and white cottages dimly visible, lay the promised land, my home for two months."

The journal begins with Seaworthy's arrival at the beach. As Throop writes, he often addresses his readers. "Did you ever walk in the sand, worthy reader, for a considerable distance? Do you know anything in life that so moderates any undue . . . enthusiasm in your feelings? Do you know anything more discouraging?"

Throop continues to share Seaworthy's experiences with his audience for the entirety of the novel. His recollections are as familiar to today's reader as they were to his reader in the 1850's. Seaworthy swims in the ocean, climbs Jockey's Ridge, visits Roanoke Island, collects seashells, and listens to the local lore.

He even suffers from the "bilious fevers" and chills that he claims the native North Carolinians are raised on. "That I should have forgotten the staple of fun — the State — patronized FROLIC — the CHILLS AND FEVER."

The gaieties of the times are not lost on Throop. He colorfully relates Seaworthy's adventures as he socializes with the fashionable vacationers. The "old hotel" and the bowling alley were the two most popular gathering spots where the young, gay, and energetic could dance and gossip until all hours of the night.

These goings-on were often seen in a disapproving light by the local people. "I have seen but little of them . . . I have seen them mending their nets, I have chatted with them, and yet I know but little of their character and habits," writes Throop. "They are a peculiar people. They are isolated from the social intercourse, which, in the more densely-peopled communities of the mainland, refines and elevates the individual. They look jealously, I am told, upon strangers; but are clannish and therefore honest and social among themselves."

Throop spends most of the book disgressing from his present-day observations to telling stories from the local lore, often without the use of any transitional devices. Thus, "Nag's Head or Two Months Among the Bankers" is obviously more a journal than a novel. Throop's unconventional writing technique becomes evident in the interrupted passages.

Digressions though they may be, Throop's recollections of the local lore are the most fascinating part of the book. Through the memory of Jack, the old Negro slave who has always lived at Nags Head, Throop recounts intriguing tales of shipwrecks and men lost at sea. He describes daring rescues during storms to save endangered crews and the looting of wrecked ships' cargo on the beach by the locals. He captures a part of Nags Head's history that might have been forgotten over the years.

The preservation of local history is what gives North Carolina all the respect that accompanies the name "The Old North State." Throop's presentation of his summer at Nags Head made this the first book of the late 1840's to deal with contemporary times in the state.

Although "Nag's Head or Two Months Among the Bankers" is now out of print, several copies can still be found in area libraries. The North Carolina Collection in East Carolina University's Joyner Library has a rare copy which is available to the local community.

A New Melville Williams Novel

STRANGE WIND FROM THE ROANOKE. By Maxville B. Williams. Winterville. Creative Resource Systems, Inc. $7.

"Strange Wind from the Roanoke" is an analogy of post-Revolutionary War years in North Carolina and of Sam Pickett, a fictinal citizen of the town of Halifax.

The novel begins at the end of the war in 1781, and ends with North Carolina's ratification of the U.S. Constitution in Nov., 1789. It parallels the experiences and moods of the people of a state without a national connection and with those of Pickett, who has lost his wife.

Williams has extensively researched the history of North Carolina, especially as it relates to the Revolutionary War and Halifax. He uses this information to reveal the unsettled feelings of the people who are seeking a national government unlike that of the mother country which usurped the rights of individuals. Yet, they want a government with enough power to be effective and strong.

The story is told through the life of Pickett, a Halifax surveyor and assistant to William R. Davie. The marriage of Pickett to Josephine Hamilton almost immediately after the war is soon interrupted by the illness, and, supposedly, the death of his "Josie." When North Carolina ratifies the national constitution in Fayetteville in Nov., 1789, Josie reappears in Halifax and life is supposedly happy-ever-after. She had been surreptitiously stolen from the small pox house of contagion by her father, an obstinate Loyalist.

Pickett receivs a letter from his father-in-law, John Hamilton, requesting permission to visit Halifax. He had been forced to leave Halifax during the Revolution. It would be dangerous for a Loyalist to come to Halifax, as the citizens have sacrified too much in lives and possessions to accept anyone who represents the Royal Crown of England.

The reader learns about problems facing Halifax citizens in those turbulent times — inadequate compensation to soldiers; loss of loved ones; broken families, depression. Fear and uncertainty face the average citizen. In Pickett's thoughts, "These last five years had been a period of taming and now the spirit of the people was well in harness."

Williams' novel covers the appointment of Davie by the N.C. Assembly as a representative to the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia. Willie Jones was also appointed, but for some reason refused to serve. Jones feared a strong national government; Davie supported such a government. At this point only North Carolina and Delaware had not ratified the constitution; Davie felt that because of not being represented in the first session of Congrss, . . . "our vessels are considered alien vessels when we trade with other states along the coast."

Through the interplay of characters and history, Williams presents an enlightening and entertaining novel, as well as an important historical message, of the restive era following the Revolutionary War.

The book is available from: Williams Publications, 427 Holliday Drive, Enfield, N.C., 27823 at $7, postpaid.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By JULIE HICKS

For those readers who laughed at and were touched by "Raney," Clyde Edgerton has written another warm and comforting novel, "Walking Across Egypt."

At 78, Mattie Rigsbee thinks she may be "slowing down." She plans her funeral so as not to be a burden; she supports the local Baptist church and entertains herself with hymns at the parlor piano; she tries not to meddle in her children's lives, though she does wish they'd marry; she longs for grandchilren.

However, nothing in the outcome of her story will corroborate those fears as she shows herself still to be at the moral center of life for those around her. When a stray dog shows up on her doorstep one day, she calls the dogcatcher, arguing that "with everything else she had to do to keep up the house and yard," she had no business taking on a dog. (Mattie has been a widow for five years and now lives alone).

But when the dogcatcher arrives to pick up the stray, events are set in motion that will result in Mattie taking on far more than just a stray dog. It turns out that the dogcatcher has a 16-year-old nephew named Wesley, who grew up as an orphan and is now being held in a rehabilitation center for stealing a car.

And it turns out, too, that Mattie takes some of her homemade food to the boy, compelled not only by her own sense of goodness but by a passage in the Gospel of Matthew about doing good unto "the least of these my brethren."

When Wesley escapes from the center, he heads for Mattie's, intending to steal some more of that good food. A comedy of errors ensue — there are alarmed neighbors, another stolen car, a farcical mix-up in the choir loft in church — with Mattie in the end choosing to create a new life and home for the prodigal Wesley, confirming the view of her children (aged 38 and 43) that their mother has quite lost their marbles.

With a touch here of Samuel Clemens and of Peter De Vries, Edgerton takes on the pieties of church, family, and goodness, and without the least hint of mawkishness or falsehood, inspires them with a laughable comedy that hits the mark and lingers.

"Walking Across Egypt" is a beautiful story of determination, made more poignant by a Southern (North Carolina) small-town setting. One reviewer calls Edgerton's latest venture, "Homespun verities with an unjaundiced eye and master's hand."

Little Known Talent Of A Black Poet

THE HOPE OF LIBERTY. By George Moses Horton. Raleigh. Gales and Son. Bound pamphlet, 22 pages. Published 1829. (Out of Print).

George Moses Horton, born in 1798, a poet slave, was the property of James Horton of Chatham County, North Carolina. He was a black man who forever left his mark on the literary community.

In the summer of 1829, "The Hope of Liberty" was published by Gales and Son of Raleigh. The quest for Horton's freedom inspired the printing and subsequent distribution of this pamphlet. The small volume represents the first poetic protest by any slave concerning his status and was the first known book by a Negro from the South.

In the foreword, Gales writes of the budding literary genius' enslaved condition. He implores the reader to have empathy with Horton and to support him in his quest for freedom. The sincerity of Horton's quest is emphasized in these stanzas,

And break this vast enormous bar
Between a wretch and thee;
Purchase a few short days of time,
And bid a vassal soar sublime,
On wings of Liberty

"The Hope of Liberty" contains a variety of poems which reflect the "Sable Bards's" condition of slavery, influence of a Methodist background, nature scenes around Chapel Hill, and his natural inclination for poetry.

Horton credits Mrs. Caroline Hentz of Boston, his friend and mentor, for helping to mold and polish his uncultivated, rough talent. Horton composed lyrical lines in his head even before he mastered the skill of writing. In his poems, line by line the words flow with ease and an underlying hymnal rhythm. Until he mastered the skill of writing, a foreign hand wrote down each spoken word in succession.

"Praise of Creation," "The Lover's Farewell," "On the Evening and Morning," "On Liberty and Slavery," and "On Spring," represent outstanding pieces within "The Hope of Liberty." Individual poems from this collection were published in the North and South, their publication often unknown by the author.

Although "The Hope of Liberty" resulted in little profit toward the freedom of Horton, original copies are a rare treasure today. Manuscripts of this collection are also difficult to locate.

Dr. Keats Sparrow, professor of English at East Carolina University, has a manuscript copy on reserve at Joyner Library. Through inter-library loan, copies of this work may also be obtained. Other sources with partial printings of Horton's poems include "An American Man of Letters," by Collier Cobb and "The Black Poet," by Richard Walser.

A search to uncover this rich heritage in early black North Carolina literature rewards the diligent pursuer with lively, picturesque verse.

A Reflector Review

A Reader Must Decide What's True

OUT ON A BROKEN LIMB. By F. LaGard Smith. Eugene, Ore. Harvest House Publishers. Trade paperback, 207 pages, $6.95.

F. LaGard Smith, a professor of law at Pepperdine University, wrote "Out on a Broken Limb" with the express purpose of debunking Shirley MacLaine's theories espoused in her best-selling novel "Out On a Limb". As someone who has read both books, I feel more referee than reviewer, caught in the middle of a game of semantics.

In her book "Out on a Limb," she merely sets forth what she discovers about her life, and nowhere does she try to proselytize as does Smith throughout his "Out on a Broken Limb." For you see, Dr. Smith is not only a lawyer but the author of the "Narrated Bible", his chronologized version of the Bible. From this prospective he claims to speak for Christianity in opposition to New Age Philosophy.

He mocks her ideas as frivolous and contradictory and of his ideas as weighing heavily on the side of truth according to the Bible. He continues throughout to characterize Ms. MacLaine as a "crusader" and a "promoter" of "non-judgmental love and positive spiritual energy." I would challange him to prove that, for nowhere can I find where she has written, or stated on television talk shows, that she wants you and me to believe as she does.

There are places in "Out on a Broken Limb" where Smith makes some good points regarding Ms. MacLaine's belief in reincarnation. "If we can't remember our past lives," he asks, "what good does it do us in this life? How are we going to work out our bad karma if we don't even know what it is?" But more often than not, Dr. Smith's sentences end in exclamation marks where Ms. MacLaine's end in question marks.

If the author had wanted answers, he could have written Ms. MacLaine a letter. Clearly, the purpose of his book is to preach, and his sermon is titled "I'm O.K. you're not O.K."

While I feel he has the right to have his opinions published, it seems unfair to trash MacLaine's book while capitalizing on her title which consistently topped the hardback and paperback best seller lists.

It would be unfair to read "Out on a Broken Limb" without having read "Out on a Limb" first, though unfortunately, the reader will ultimately feel forced to take a stand — MacLaine's theory vs. Smith's theory, her "proof" vs. his Proof. As to the resolution of that age-old question. "What is truth?" That's for the reader to decide.

NCMA's Show Of 'Chrestomathy' Art

N.C. Museum Of Art

RALEIGH — An exhibition of works by Winston-Salem artist Richard C. is currently on view at the North Carolina Museum of Art, Raleigh. The key word in the title of the show, "Chrestomathy," means a selection of literary passages, and refers to the diversity of forms utilized by the artist.

Huston Paschal, organizer of the exhibition, calls it "a jam-packed superabudndance of objects . . . it can be seen as one enveloping, walk-in, read-through assemblage, demonstrating the cumulative impact of Richard C.'s artistry."

In his work, the artist uses discarded candy wrappers, softballs, bicycle wheels and the production packages found in supermarkets. The assemblage "Family Portrait," for example, comprises grocery store items — Grandma's molasses, Uncle Ben's rice, Mother's mayonnaise and Baby Ruth and even includes the checkout receipt for these items. Another assemblage creates a "Still Life Landscape" using Land of Lakes butter, Mountain Dew soda and White Cloud toilet tissue.

He also delights in visual puns such as a box of arrows with feathers on both ends, titled "Errors."

The exhibition additionally includes the artist's well-known painted sticks, embellished with enameled stripes, speckles, bands and dots; and his "Poems" in multiple guises. Richard C. believes that anything he rubber stamps as a poem is a poem, including a crushed Orange Crush can or a candy wrapper. Drawings in the exhibition present images in sphagetti-like handwriting, deliberately executed in cheap and non-durable media like felt-tip pens on paster paper. Birdhouses and T-shirts are among other objects in the exhibition.

Born Richard Craven in Thomasville in 1941, he received degrees from Western Carolina University and East Tennessee State University. In 1976, as a staff member of the N.C. Museum of Art, he co-organized the exhibition, "Correspondence: An Exhibition of the Letters of Ray Johnson."

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays, on Fridays until 9 p.m., Sundays from noon to 5 p.m. Admission is free. For more information on the museum's programs, call 833-1935.

St. Louis Showcases Sculpture

EDITOR'S NOTE — With a little luck and a lot of ingenuity, a county park in St. Louis has become a major showcase for contemporary sculptures. But there is no money for Laumeier Park to buy the artworks. All were donated or are on loan from the artists, most of whom live in New York.

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — When Laumeier Park first opened, it barely caught the eye of local residents, much less the attention of the international art community.

Then sculptor Ernest Trova began looking for a place to display his creations. St. Louis County had just the place for them — at Laumeier Park.

"I got kind of excited about it," says Wayne Kennedy, county parks director. "The sculptures fit beautifully and gave the park the focus it needed."

From that beginning a decade ago, Laumeier's collection — and reputation — has grown so that it is now compared to the Storm King Art Center near West Point, N.Y., Kroller Muller in the Netherlands, and Louisiana in Denmark.

"A lot of artists actually prefer Laumeier because the terrain is better to display their sculptures," says Adam Aronson, chairman of Laumeier's board of trustees. "I still consider Storm King No. 1. I'd like Laumeier to be first. We're headed in that direction."

More than 250,000 people visited Laumeier last year to explore contemporary sculptures by artists such as Mary Miss, Alexander Liberman, Alice Aycock, Mark di Suvero, Jackie Ferrara, Carl Milles and Beverly Pepper.

"We try to get people to come here and spend a few minutes to enjoy the park-like setting," says Beej Nierengarten-Smith, the park's director. "The more time they spend here the more likely it is that we can grab their attention with the sculptures."

Laumeier has become known in the art world even though nearly all of the artists whose works are on display there live and work in Manhattan.

"We're trying to follow contemporary thinking, to anticipate where contemporary art is going," says Nierengarten-Smith. "We're on the cutting edge."

"We don't have a lot of money like some of the major museums," he adds. "The value we can offer artists is a beautiful setting for their works. There's simply no space for this kind of thing in New York City."

A measure of good luck also has played a part in the park's good fortune. Aycock gave it one of her sculptures, "The Hundred Small Rooms," after she was approached by its director in 1984.

"I had built it for a festival in Houston and I wanted to hold onto it," Aycock said in a telephone interview. "I was really happy when she (Nierengarten-Smith) offered to take it. She took it over."

The three-story-tall tower of white painted wood had to be hauled from Houston to Laumeier and reassembled next to a pine tree where a small house once stood.

"I knew her reputation, so I told her I'd take it even though I had no idea how I was going to bring a 28-foot high piece back here," she says.

Aycock is happy with her decision.

"It's really a romantic piece about the houses built in America a long time ago," she says. "The site maintains this fantasy. It's like taking a drive out in the country."

Another obstacle the park has been able to overcome is a lack of money. Laumeier is the only contemporary sculpture park in the United States that is part of a public park system. Unlike Storm King, it does not have an endowment to buy works.

Aronson says that should change.

"I would be surprised if an endowment drive is not announced soon," he says.

For now, however, the county pays about $200,000 a year to maintain the park and gallery and pay the salaries of three full-time employees, including Nierengarten-Smith.

"St. Louis County doesn't pay a dime for any of the sculptures," Kennedy says. "We will accept them as a gift. It's up to the art world to make this come true."

For that reason, most of the sculptures are at Laumeier on extended loan from the artists and their dealers. Aronson says that has its benefits.

"We don't object to transitory pieces," he says. "With the kind of traffic we get we need to keep changing some of the sculptures."

Kennedy agrees.

"You can't have something like this and keep it static," he says. "You have to keep introducing new pieces, to keep changing it. Otherwise you won't get people to keep coming back."

The park also saves money through a team of volunteers who put in hundreds of hours organizing special exhibitions and shows. Others work in the gallery or gift shop.

Kennedy says he isn't satisfied with everything about the park.

"I do dream about putting in paths so people in wheelchairs and the elderly can see all the pieces," he says. "I also want to do something with the lighting.

"I would like to introduce the element of surprise. Imagine someone walking down a heavily wooded path and all of a sudden there's a sculpture there, all by itself, with no other pieces to distract your attention. Yes, I do dream."

The park also needs a master plan, Nierengarten-Smith says. "In the beginning it was supposed to be a sculpture garden. It was supposed to be 1½ acres. Now it's 96 acres."

How did it expand?

A Wise Change Of Heart

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — They could have been Adventures in Shrubbery or Fried Dirt. But the five-piece band wisely had a change of heart.

When it formed in 1983, the group considered a list of more than 500 names. The band and RCA Records settled on Restless Heart.

They are often compared to the Eagles and have had two straight No. 1 hits on the country music charts: "I'll Still Be Loving You" and "That Rock Won't Roll."

In April, "I'll Still Be Loving You" was in the Top 5 of the adult contemporary music charts, giving the band a coveted crossover hit. Their song "Don't Ask the Reason Why" is on the soundtrack of the Michael J. Fox movie "The Secret of My Success."

Their two No. 1 hits, and three others in the Top 10, helped them to be a finalist this spring for the Academy of Country Music's group of the year.

They've been successful with soaring five-part harmony and positive love songs, a mix of sound and lyrics that appeal to country music audiences and pop music fans alike.

"We've been labeled everything known to man: country, rock, pop, American," said lead singer Larry Stewart. "We'd just like to be known as doing good music."

Adds bass player Paul Gregg, "I think we sound different. We have a texture all our own by the way we stack our harmony and blend our voices.

"If there's a message in our music, it's have a good time. We do positive songs, nothing about drinking and cheating."

The five are all former studio musicians in Nashville who made a demonstration record in 1983 and were signed by RCA on the basis of that performance.

They've been influenced by various kinds of music. Dave Innis, who plays keyboards and guitar, was trained in classical piano. John Dittrick, guitarist, has played jazz and big band music.

Restless Heart has been on the road for a year as the opening act for Bruce Hornsby & The Range, Alabama, the Judds and others. They plan a concert tour of Europe this August and expect to play to more than 1 million people before the year is out.

Being the opening act has its drawbacks, but the five welcome the exposure.

"You learn you can't give them enough," Stewart said. "The lights and sound have all been rigged for the main attraction. You learn to deal with that and work around it if possible. It's an exercise in patience."

The band carefully selects its album material, reviewing a few thousand tapes before settling on the final choices. One "no" vote among the five eliminates a song from the album.

"Everybody has to be satisfied," guitarist Greg Jennings said. "It's a yearlong process."

They look for strong lyrics, material that lends itself to harmony and "something you can see, something you can visualize," Gregg said.

Says Stewart, "If you play our album, you'll hear a variety in music style. But you can count on a vocal sound. All five of us sing on every song. We do the best songs we can and put our own style around them."

They've recorded two albums, "Restless Heart" and "Wheels," and two videos.

Langevin Chosen For Concert

BOILING SPRINGS — David J. Langevin, a student in the School of Music, East Carolina University, is a winner in the Gardner-Webb College Concerto Competition, an annual event to select four soloists to appear with the Gardner-Webb College/Community Orchestra in its spring concert.

A semi-professional orchestra with a membership of 50 located in a rural setting, it is made up of musicians from western North Carolina and South Carolina.

Langevin, a junior at ECU, has studied at Juilliard School of Music in New York and at the New England Conservatory in Boston. He is the Young Artist Winner for 1987 at ECU and was one of three winners of the Concerto Competition at ECU this year.

The Spring Concerto Concert of the Gardner-Webb orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Robert Decker, will be held at 8 p.m. Monday in the Dover Theater on the college's campus. It is free and open to the public.

To Present 'Trojan Women'

WINSTON-SALEM — The School of Drama of the North Carolina School of the Arts in Winston-Salem, in association with the School of Design and Production, will present the Greek tragedy by Euripides, "The Trojan Women" for eight performances in early May.

Performances, all to be presented in the Agnes de Mille Theater on the NCSA campus, will be nightly at 8 on May 7-9 and May 12-16, with a 2 p.m. matinee performance on May 10.

Tickets are priced at $7 for adults and $4 for students and senior citizens. For reservations, call 721-1945.

Malcolm Morrison, dean of the drama school for 11 years, will direct the play. It will be his final directorial task before assuming his new duties as director of The National Theater Conservatory in Denver, Colo.

"The Trojan Women," written more than 2,000 years ago, in 415 B.C., is set after the sacking of Troy by the Greeks. The play follows the extermination of the sons of Troy and the return of the Greeks to their home with the Trojan women as their slaves and concubines. Essentially, this is a story of war told by playwright Euripides from the woman's point of view.

The NCSA spring production, traditionally a junior class project, this year will also use the entire freshman drama class in a cast of 53. A prologue on war will precede each production.

Members of the large cast include Mitchell Riggs of Ayden, who will appear in the prologue and also as an officer.

'Death Of The Heart' On PBS Today

By MATT WOLF
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — To the stage doorman of London's Dominion Theater, Jojo Cole is a sound engineer. But to fans of British TV, she is Portia Quayne, the 16-year-old orphan in "The Death of the Heart."

Adapted from Elizabeth Bowen's 1938 novel, the two-hour TV movie is vintage "Masterpiece Theater" stuff. It will be televised in the United States today by the Public Broadcasting Service.

"The Death of the Heart" is a tearful tale of first love set among the upper class in England before World War II. The shy and naive Portia gets thrown in among the callous and moneyed ways of her older half-brother and his wife.

The show was first broadcast in December 1985, earning rave reviews for Miss Cole in her screen debut.

Sixteen months later, the attention has died down, and Miss Cole, an unpretentious and lively 23-year-old, is working on the sound board of the West End musical, "Time," as she waits for another good acting job.

"'Death of the Heart' really brought me up out of nowhere to something I had dreamed about since I was little," the freckle-faced actress recalled over tea at the end of replacement rehearsals for David Cassidy, the new star of the musical.

"There were so many things Portia said that I felt, like her very last line: 'Everyone wants me to be special, but I don't know what I'm meant to be,'" Miss Cole said.

"That's how I've been since the year dot. I've never quite fit in, and I've wanted to be special."

Victoria Principal with Patrick Duffy in Dallas: He's back but she's leaving—or is it all just a dream?

Q Has Victoria Principal ever told the full story of her relationships with Frank Sinatra, financier Bernie Cornfeld, football player Lance Rentzel and singer Andy Gibb? It is my understanding that she has been offered as much as $5 million for her autobiography. Isn't that the real reason she's leaving "Dallas" after being on the TV show since 1978?—Pam Simmons, Houston, Tex.

A Victoria Principal has resigned from the cast of "Dallas" for "contractual reasons"—which may mean she simply wants more than the $50,000 per episode she has been getting. Recently married to Dr. Harry Glassman, well known for his plastic surgery, Principal currently is out plugging her health book, "The Diet Principal."

Q After all those years of playing his heart out on the basketball court, is Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers really broke? Don't tell me it's true.—Tom McKenna, Michigan City, Ind.

Focus on Sports

Jabbar: Business is bad

A Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, 40, is not broke. He's under contract through next year to play for the Lakers at $2 million a year. His lawyers allege, however, that Jabbar has lost approximately $10 million in the last six years in business adventures that turned sour.

Q George Bush, Bob Dole, Jack Kemp, Alexander Haig and several others would like to run for U.S. President on the Republican Party ticket. If Alexander Haig were to win the nomination and then the election next year, to which position might he appoint Henry Kissinger, his old boss?—B.S.B., Dana Point, Calif.

A Good bet: United States Ambassador to Chad.

A Princess Stephanie, 22, has told reporters she plans to leave Monaco and Paris and settle down in California with Mario Oliver, 34, a onetime waiter from Marseilles who owns Vertigo, a club in downtown Los Angeles. Hardly anyone, however—including her father, Prince Rainier—seems to take Stephanie seriously. Reportedly the princess is a willful young lady who falls in love every other Wednesday. Not too long ago, the love of her life was the actor Rob Lowe. Before Lowe, her grand amour was Paul Belmondo, son of the French actor Jean-Paul Belmondo.

A Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, 27, was reared in Oak Park, Ill. She did not fall in love with Cruise during the production, although they became fast friends. Prior to "The Color of Money," Mastrantonio played Al Pacino's sister in the film "Scarface," a box-office disappointment.

Q What is the title of the film in which the cast included Deborah Kerr, Robert Morley, Rex Harrison, Emlyn Williams, Robert Newton, Wendy Hiller and Stanley Holloway? I'm a film student, and I know it surely isn't an American picture. —Robert C., Durham, N.C.

A The film is "Major Barbara," from the play of the same name by George Bernard Shaw. Made in 1940 in and around war-torn London, it boasted one of the best casts ever assembled for a British production. The director was Gabriel Pascal, a Hungarian refugee who knew little about directing. Fortunately, he was helped immeasurably by his young film editor, David Lean, who went on to direct such classics as "Brief Encounter," "Great Expectations," "The Bridge on the River Kwai," "Lawrence of Arabia," "Doctor Zhivago" and "A Passage to India."

How Kent and Carmen Amos and 42 kids became a family

Andy Levin

Meet a few members of this growing family! Clockwise, from No. 1, Kent Amos—in "Best Dad" shirt: 2) Lisa Dickey; 3) Stanley Wright; 4) Michele Brown; 5) Debbie Harvey; 6) Royal Richardson; 7) Fred Davy; 8) Clenteous McCoy; 9) Wesley Harvey; 10) Linda Lawson; 11) Mrs. Carmen Amos; 12) Byron Hawkins; 13) Anthony Riley; 14) Anthony Graham; 15) Tia Martin; 16) Valarie Bryant; 17) Kwanza Jones; 18) Wanda Bell; 19) Shawnte Best; 20) Derrick Price; 21) Delinda Dixon; and 22) Adrianne Garrett.

LOVE WITHOUT MEASURE

BY SHERRYE HENRY

COVER PHOTOGRAPH BY ANDY LEVIN

AN AFFLUENT ENTREPRENEUR IN Washington, D.C., gives new meaning to the concept of the extended family. Six years ago, Kent Amos and his wife, Carmen, had only two children—Wesley, now 22, and Debbie, 17. Today, they have 42 girls and boys and, if Amos has his way, the number will soar geometrically. Why? "The capacity to love is without measure," he says, "and so are the children who need help."

The first Amos family additions were accidental: Basketball players Wesley brought home from Calvin Coolidge Senior High School after practice stayed for dinner and conversation one night and kept coming back for more. Typical inner-city kids, many were from broken homes or no homes, with most of the disadvantages that entails.

Milton Newton was one of them. He had spent most of his life getting into trouble—until he met Kent Amos. "Milton needed a lot of help," Amos recalls. "I'm not sure where his father was. His mother was in the Virgin Islands. He needed family. He'd failed eighth grade and was having a rough time with ninth after his grandmother had sent him to live with an aunt here in Washington. I took a liking to him. For the last five years, he's called me Dad."

Milton and his friends soon became regular after-school visitors to the Amos home and were asked to stay for dinner almost every night. A routine was established: dining as a group, then a two-hour study period. Says Amos: "During this period, there is silence—no phones, no television. They are required to do their work and study and read." Eventually, group discussions ensued about long-range goals, and then came private dialogues about their personal concerns. Soon, all the boys were calling him Dad, and Kent Amos was living the part.

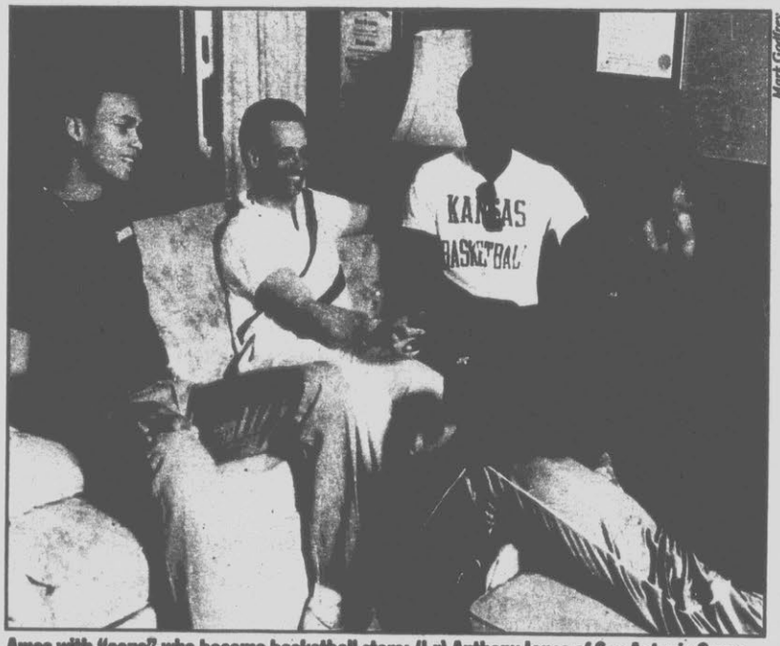
He saw their teachers regularly, checked their report cards, attended their games and began to love them as his own. He also set rigorous standards for behavior and scholastic achievement, pledging college as a reward—and they met the challenge. Milton, now 22, graduated from high school with honors and a full athletic scholarship to the University of Kansas, where he is completing his junior year. In addition to Milton, there are now 13 more "children" in college.

"The first kids just evolved," says Amos. "But then Carmen and I made a conscious decision to broaden what we were doing. We decided our house could accommodate 20 to 25 kids a night. So we went to the school and said we would take them on."

Kent Amos kept his expanding family running smoothly by tapping into his business skills: He is a trained systems and management expert and was the youngest corporate director in Xerox history. A second refrigerator was purchased for the house; another pantry was added for paper plates, canned goods and fruit juices; shelves were stocked with school supplies, thesauruses and dictionaries. On most school nights and almost every evening in the summer, eight to 10 boys and girls gathered at the Amos home for what they could find in no other place—constant attention and continuous affection.

Initially, Carmen cooked for the group. But when the rapidly growing number became unmanageable for this homemaker with a demanding job as a customer-service representative for Xerox, Kent sought out a sympathetic home-economics teacher at Coolidge High who agreed to prepare dishes in class if the Amoses would provide the food. Twice a month, Kent spends several hours in a supermarket stocking up. "I take four or five kids to the store," he says. "Each one takes a shopping cart. We use a separate checkout lane just for us, and I spend from $400 to $500 every two weeks on food."

Kent Amos' favorite word in describing his relationship with his children is "consistency." He admits that some youngsters are naturally smarter, cleaner, more attractive and more productive than others. "But that doesn't matter," he says. "I love and treat them all the same. They are all my children."



Mark Godfrey

Amos with "sons" who became basketball stars: (l-r) Anthony Jones of San Antonio Spurs, Kent Amos, Milton Newton of University of Kansas, Tim Anderson of Virginia Polytechnic.

On the personal costs of being responsible for so many young lives, Kent Amos says, "I have a good life. What am I giving up—stocks?"

Still, being consistent with these children tests the Amoses for more emotional fiber than most middle-class parents will ever need. Kent had to go to court with one of his first boys, an 18-year-old who later broke probation after being arrested for burglary. He was sent to the prison where his real father and stepfather were inmates. During regular visits, Kent oversaw the boy's efforts to acquire a GED (high school equivalency diploma). He since was released from prison and has a job. A worse fate befell André, slain at the age of 17 by a drug dealer against whom he had agreed to testify. André was killed in the autumn of 1985 in the same house in which his father had killed his mother 10 years earlier.

Most of the children have only a single parent, or they live with relatives in large groups of siblings or half-siblings where father figures, if present, often are involved in illegal activities. A few have stable homes, but most face overwhelming financial disadvantages. One boy—a top-ranking student from a strong, solid home—lost his father to cancer.

After Kent stops by the school—first to watch his girls at cheerleading practice, then to measure the basketball team's progress and, finally, to check on one talented forward whom he once had ordered off the court until he'd improved his grades—he arrives home shortly before his children do. Carmen is icing a cake (two boys are celebrating birthdays tonight), and they have a rare moment to measure the personal costs involved in being responsible for so many lives. Kent insists the costs are minimal. The 14 young people in college all have scholarships that require only supplemental living expenses, although occasionally one of the youngsters has a pressing need, including clothing—from underwear to a topcoat. Kent estimates that he spends from $15,000 to $20,000 each year on his brood; hardly small change. But he looks around his tastefully furnished home and says, "I'm living in a pretty nice house, I have a good life and manage my money well... My wife and I each drive a Mercedes... What am I giving up—stocks?"

How about leisure time?

Kent shrugs away the thought of any activity that does not include Carmen or the children. "They are my life," he says.

The children burst through the door at this point, strewing jackets across a giant pool table and carrying foil-wrapped platters of lasagna and bowls of salad into the kitchen. Carmen directs the table-setting and food-warming for tonight's group of 14, some of whom already are studying for exams. Kent soon is in the midst of them, firing questions. Though Carmen appears infinitely calm, she says that Kent has far more patience with this daily gathering of youngsters. "I'm more private than he is," she says. "Once I get everybody situated and fed, I'll take my quiet time. Kent thrives on having the kids around. He's the special force."

Her only major problem, she says, initially involved losing her living room to a study hall. But Carmen and Kent eventually set up tables in another part of the house so the kids could study and she occasionally could entertain friends. "If there are a lot of dishes, or if I'm tired, the kids'll do them," Carmen says. "They are also good about picking up after themselves. We share a lot of love. That's why the program works."

And it is a program now. At the beginning of 1986, Kent set up his own management-consulting firm, The Triad Group. Concurrently, with a major contract from Xerox, he orchestrated the nonprofit Urban Youth Investment Program, which already has installed $250,000 worth of computer equipment in Coolidge High to train students for skilled jobs. Kent not only intends to expand his own parental responsibility to 200 children, but he also hopes to provide a concrete programmatic model for others who might wish to pursue his vision.

After dinner, Kent savors the quiet as the children study. Among his successes is Derrick Davis, 20, who once faced glum prospects. Just two years ago, Derrick was going nowhere. Then Kent arranged living space for him in a good home and took him into the Amos program. Today—after leading Coolidge High's basketball team to the city championship and being named all-American—Derrick is a freshman at Oklahoma State University, which granted him an athletic scholarship.

Derrick remembers the dark days, before Kent Amos helped him: "I was a street hustler. I wanted to make fast money. I was living with my father, and things weren't going right between us. I had a girlfriend . . . she had a baby . . . When I first came to Coolidge, I didn't have anything on my mind but cutting class, hanging out with boys who didn't go to class. Then Mr. Amos came to me and asked me what kind of life did I want. He said if I went to school, enhanced my study habits, I could have that. What I said I wanted—what I want—is a nice job, a nice family and to raise my own kids someday. After he talked to me, I said: 'Why throw that away when I can give it a chance?' When the guys I used to hang out with ask where I've been, I say 'in school,' and they say, 'Yeah, that's good.' Good that I'm trying to make something out of myself. Since my father's seen some of these people trying to help me, he's been coming back. This program made a big difference for me. Now I can dream of being like Mr. Amos—helping young people."

Kent Amos passionately believes in people and the power of love. "These kids don't need to drown," he says. "There are enough substantial adults out there—entertainers, athletes, professional people—who can make a difference and who—if they would just walk into the water and lock arms—would stop these kids from being swept downstream." There are, he maintains, vast numbers of children ready to be saved, and well-meaning people ready to help—if shown what to do.

"Kids are easy to love, once you get to know them," says Kent Amos, "and love is truly the answer."

If you would like to learn more about Kent Amos' program or how to establish one of your own, write to the Urban Youth Investment Program, Dept. P, 1625 K St., N.W., Suite 1210, Washington, D.C. 20006.

Will Reagan Pardon the Guilty?

This Thursday, the House and Senate committees commence public hearings on the Iran-Contra mess. Which is why a colleague of ours covering that unholy disaster in Washington phoned us the other day with this provocative and intriguing question: "If Rear Adm. John Poindexter and Lt. Col. Oliver North are found guilty eventually of having committed some crime in connection with the Iran-Contra scandal, do you believe that Ronald Reagan, if still President, will pardon them?"

Ponder that a moment. What's your reply? Ours was that, unlike Richard Nixon, who refused to pardon even one of his associates convicted in the Watergate transgression, Reagan will pardon Poindexter, North and, if necessary, others in the badly botched scandal—including former CIA Director William Casey, who may have to be pardoned posthumously. This reporter bases his response on Reagan's record in the Felt-Miller case, which relatively few remember.

In April 1978, three former high-ranking officials of the FBI—acting Director L. Patrick Gray III, acting Associate Director W. Mark Felt and Assistant Director Edward S. Miller—were indicted for authorizing, from May 1972 to May 1973, the so-called "black bag jobs." These were the illegal break-ins and burglaries of the homes of relatives and friends of fugitive radicals. The government subsequently dropped its case against Gray, but Felt and Miller were convicted in November 1980, the very month Ronald Reagan was elected President. Immediately, their FBI associates lobbied the law-and-order Reagan for compassion, while Felt and Miller, fined $5000 and $3500 respectively, appealed the verdict in court.

The new President was enormously sympathetic, and he granted both men full and unconditional pardons on March 26, 1981. But on March 30, before the pardons could be publicized, Reagan was shot in an assassination attempt by the deranged John Hinckley Jr. On April 15, however, while still in the process of recuperation, Reagan explained his pardons of Felt and Miller in these words:

"Their convictions... grew out of their good faith belief that their actions were necessary to preserve the security interests of their country. The record demonstrates that they acted not with criminal intent, but in the belief that they had grants of authority reaching to the highest levels of government."

If Poindexter and North, two undeniably patriotic career servicemen, should in the end be judged guilty—say, of conspiracy to defraud the government or obstruction of justice or perjury—surely the above words could be applied to them and possibly to a few others entangled in the Iran-Contra web.

FBI officials Miller (l) and Felt after 1980 convictions: Reagan soon pardoned them, and history may repeat itself

Tights Up for Auction

London Express

Monroe (top) and Scott in tattered tights

Sotheby's in London, the swanky auction house, announced recently that it planned to sell to the highest bidder a pair of tights (with the original holes) worn by Marilyn Monroe in Bus Stop 31 years ago. An old green bodice goes with the tights, and how anyone can assure that the outfit belonged to Marilyn at one point in her up-and-down career is indeed a puzzle.

Vicky Scott, a Monroe look-alike, modeled the tights for publicity's sake while a spokesman for Sotheby's declared that the outfit might well bring $15,000. Wishful thinking no doubt, but who knows? A pair of red shoes worn by Judy Garland in The Wizard of Oz went for $15,000 several years ago.

Take Control Of Your Health

BY STUART M. BERGER, M.D.

MOST DOCTORS CAN RECALL patients who, upon being told they have a serious illness, seem to "give up" and soon wither and die, while others confound the experts and live out their lives with unexpected energy, suffering less pain and fewer symptoms.

Why the difference? One possibility, now under study, is that the survivors instinctively found ways to draw on mental and emotional energy, using it positively to affect their health. Research into how our minds can keep us healthy and make us well when we are sick, though only beginning, clearly suggests that "mental medicine" techniques may be powerful self-help skills that can be used to reinforce traditional drug and medical therapies.

Many mental medicine treatments rely in some way on "imaging"—a process of creative positive thinking in a relaxed state, where you "see" or "visualize" the hoped-for goals with tremendous intensity. In some cases, patients supplement their thinking with prayer. Others repeat positive health-promoting affirmations: "I am feeling better" or "My body is growing stronger each day."

A person's mental state can contribute to disease. Research has linked prolonged stress, for example, with a wide range of illnesses, including high blood pressure, heart disease, arthritis, ulcers, migraines, kidney and digestive disorders, complications of pregnancy and allergies. Mental medicine techniques can bring stress under control and help to keep those conditions at bay. At the University of Massachusetts Medical Center, Jon Kabat-Zinn, assistant professor of medicine, has shown success using meditation techniques and imaging to supplement traditional medical care in treating gastrointestinal disorders, high blood pressure, chronic headaches, coronary bypass surgery and cancer.

At the Menninger Foundation in Topeka, Kan., clinicians used biofeedback machines to monitor 2800 patients' body temperature, heart rate or blood pressure. The machines gave an audible or visual signal whenever the body's physiology varied. Using the signals as a guide, patients actually can learn to control their bodies' internal processes. Some report success in using biofeedback to lower their blood pressure and avoid the pain of migraine headaches.

It is possible that specific chemical changes occur in connection with our emotions. Researchers at the University of Helsinki in Finland, studying emotional factors connected with heart disease and sudden death, outlined a trail from the brain, via the chemical messengers of the autonomic nervous system, to important physical functions such as blood clotting, blood pressure, heart rate and heart contractions. Could we learn how, using mental techniques, to cause the biological chain of command to stop damage involving those functions?

Much still needs to be learned about how mental factors actually work to affect physical health. I always tell my patients that positive imaging is a supplement, not a substitute, for proven clinical treatments. But it can work alongside the traditional methods of drugs and surgery to help you tap your own inner healing resources. So the next time somebody says, "Your symptoms are all in your head," remember the first rule of mental medicine: Your symptoms may not be in your head, but the power to get rid of them may well be.

ARMY FILM DEALS WITH FRIENDSHIP AND LOVE

Gardens of Stone, Francis Ford Coppola's movie about soldiers who bury the dead at Arlington during the Vietnam war, is really about the U.S. Army as family, says co-producer Michael I. Levy: "Some of the men wanted to fight, some had fought enough, but this is about their relationships with each other and their women." The hero is a Vietnam-hardened sergeant (James Caan) who'd prefer to be teaching recruits to fight in the jungle war, which he feels is mismanaged. In fact, says Levy, he tells an impatient young soldier: "There's a troop over there that has cards printed saying, 'Our business is killing, and killing has been good.' Well, here at Arlington, our business is burying, and our business is better." From Tri-Star Pictures.

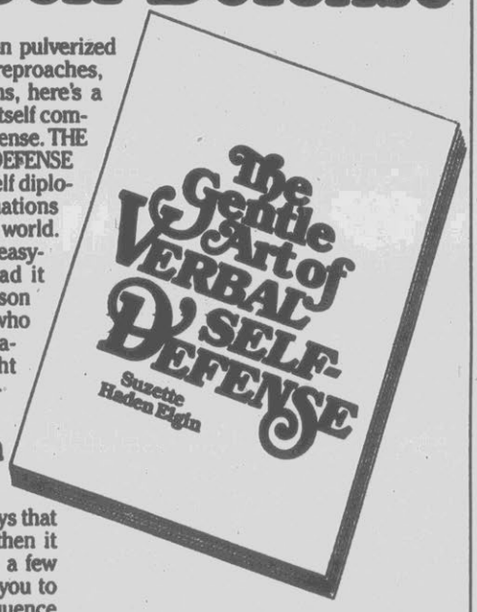
SHOULD NEWLYWEDS HAVE FINANCIAL PACTS?

Before tying the knot, sign on the dotted line, says the May New Woman. Happy couples should draw up a prenuptial agreement that spells out what property and income each wants to keep separate, how much they plan to pool and how assets should be divided in case of death or divorce. This forces people to discuss finances (evidently, the last taboo) before marriage. And, adds the article, it works out what both partners think is fair—while they're still friends.

How to Become a "Black Belt" in Verbal Self-Defense

For anyone who's ever been pulverized by put-downs, rankled by reproaches, or irritated by insinuations, here's a revolutionary book that devotes itself completely to tactics of verbal self-defense. THE GENTLE ART OF VERBAL SELF-DEFENSE teaches you how to defend yourself diplomatically in delicate family situations and in the hard-nosed business world. And this book is so thorough and easy-to-understand that you can read it once and become the kind of person everybody admires—the person who stays unruffled during confrontations, who always says the right thing, and who enjoys good relations with everyone.



Stop them with a few words

This book explains the various ways that people will try to bait you and then it tells you how to stop them with a few carefully chosen words. It trains you to defend yourself with a simple eloquence that will subdue your verbal opponents. And it shows you how and when to use blunt honesty, agreement, humor, flattery, and distraction.

Keep cool during arguments

THE GENTLE ART OF VERBAL SELF-DEFENSE also helps you avoid the self-defeating, overly emotional attitudes that many people assume during arguments. Once you've read this book, you may never again lose an argument by being sullen, uncontrollably angry, peevishly defensive, or apologetic. You'll have gained enough savvy not to be thrown by hostile remarks.

Learn to handle all attacks

THE GENTLE ART OF VERBAL SELF-DEFENSE covers most types of verbal attacks and attackers you're likely to encounter. And it explains both attacks and defenses with helpful features like these:

- ☑ The 8 types of verbal attacks and how to fight them.
- ☑ The 4 Principles of Verbal Self-Defense—from knowing you are under attack to following through with your counter-attack.
- ☑ The 5 personalities and how they communicate—Is your boss a "leveller?" Is your mother a "blamer?" Is your husband a "distracter?"
- ☑ Dialogues that show effective and ineffective defense strategies.
- ☑ Instructions on voice control and body language.

These features will teach you how to deal with all types of people, including bullying bosses, backbiting co-workers, guilt-producing mothers, nagging wives, condescending husbands, and many others. And you'll discover how to counter all the varieties of verbal abuse—from subtle put-downs to out-and-out attacks.

Save yourself years of mistakes

THE GENTLE ART OF VERBAL SELF-DEFENSE gives you a complete education in communication, an education that may improve the quality of your personal and professional relationships. On your own, it might take you years of trial and error, of fights and misunderstandings, to learn all the lessons of this book. So why not order your copy today?

THE GENTLE ART OF VERBAL SELF-DEFENSE, originally $12.95, now costs only $8.95! And, should you want to return the book, you can do so and have your money refunded with no questions asked.

What Hollywood Taught Jon Voight

The maverick actor tells how he got that way and why his new role is unusual

BY HERB GLUCK

"HE WAS my hero, a truly wonderful man," Jon Voight said of his father, Elmer, who died in 1973. "At the age of 16, he became the head golf professional at the Sunningdale Country Club in Scarsdale, N.Y. Stayed on and on. They loved him. They were like a family to him."

Jon Voight will soon star in a movie called The Avatar. I had heard that it was very special to him and that he had co-written it. I wanted to discover what it really meant to him. Instead, as soon as we sat down in a sunny outdoor Beverly Hills restaurant, he leaned forward and started to talk about his father.

What he shared with his sons above all, Voight recalled, was how to live. "Dad spoke quite beautifully, actually had a great style about him. He'd come home at night and give me and my two brothers a little piece of wisdom. I remember there was this psychiatrist that Dad knew. 'Boys, I talked to the doctor today, a very wise man,' Dad said one night. We immediately sat up. 'All right, pay attention now,' he said. 'I'm going to discuss the subject of values.'"

Voight's eyes took on a distant gleam as he attempted to repeat the story the way his father told it: "'We were on the course, watching some golfers tee off on the back nine. I said, "Doc, it's amazing to me that we have a group of people coming in from New York City and from various towns all over Westchester County, and the only thing they have on their minds is revenue. Money. The stock market going up and down, up and down. They don't seem to be concerned with the things that should make them happy and peaceful. They never see the sky, the lovely trees, the grass or even the other people. Instead, they come out on the course, ask me to check their swings and run around for a couple of hours. Then they get into their cars, drive away to Wall Street and watch the stocks go up and down again. So, Doc, what do you make of this?" And the doctor looked at me and said, "Elmer, you don't have to do it." And that's the advice I'm giving you, my sons. YOU DON'T HAVE TO DO IT!'"

Blake Little

Voight in Los Angeles: "I've always had this dream...that people must help each other."

Jon Voight, 48, has never quite done what others expected him to do. "My father probably thought I'd follow in his path—become a fine golf-teaching professional—because I was nice with people," he said. "Yet he couldn't help but see that I was an artist. A dreamer."

In Hollywood, Voight is known as a maverick, a loner. And, though he has achieved critical and popular success in such films as Coming Home (for which he won an Oscar), Midnight Cowboy and Conrack, he preferred to talk about the dream he has had since boyhood.

Something of that dream seems to be tied up with The Avatar, produced by Paul Entertainment. Voight is enthusiastic both about the film, which he considers his most ambitious, and about the Pauls themsleves, who have made him a part of their family enterprise.

Voight recently was made an adviser on future film development for the company. "We pooled our talents and wrote a spiritual contract on a napkin to love, respect and protect each other's psyches," said Hank Paul, the chairman of the board. "Of course, our lawyers buttoned up the legal end." A separate agreement called for Voight to write and star in The Avatar. The film is a "magical love story," said Stuart Paul, the film's co-writer and Hank's son, who added that Voight plays "a great holy man who brings truth to human consciousness."

Voight explained how the screenplay of The Avatar came out of his own deep longings to share hopes, fears, dreams and desires—"those basic emotions that ultimately drive us all into doing either good or bad things."

"I've always had this dream," he said. "I'd see God looking down on our tiny planet as a land needing to get better, that people must help each other, must realize we are all the same flesh and blood. So when I became an actor, it was to do good things—maybe unlock a little laughter, some love, a bit of wisdom—by which I mean the understanding of life's dramas, the ability to face tragedy, then pull out of it with lessons to grow from. But you know my films. They aren't holy things. They contain a wide range of very human qualities: anger, dismay, fear, unattainable longings. In The Avatar, I want to show how every individual can be elevated to a complete state of spiritual awakening."

When did he first decide to become an actor?

"In the fifth grade, while painting sets for a play," he said. "The comedy lead took sick. They couldn't get anyone to replace him except me. It was a simple matter of them offering and me accepting it. Not reluctantly, I might add. Well, I acted and wrote my own jokes, using a lot of my father's humor, as he was such a funny fellow."

He paused. "From my mother, we learned endurance," he said. "She has a super-strong personality. She never set any worldly goals, but nothing—nobody—stands against her for long when it comes to family. An example: She wanted us to learn how to swim. What better spot than at the country club, where we could enjoy everything? So she worked there for several summers. And my brothers and I got to be champion swimmers."

Despite the importance Voight places on family, he was not an ideal candidate for marriage. He tried it briefly in the '60s, and he has been divorced since 1979 from his second wife, Marcheline Bertrand, a former model. "Early in my marriage to Marcheline," he said, "we had some problems that couldn't be worked out. Fortunately, our relationship is much better now. We're completely harmonious, especially in the raising of our children, whom we both love deeply." The children—Jamie, 13, and Angelina, 11—live with their mother, but Voight sees them often.

During his second marriage, Voight experienced a rush of celebrity. "After Midnight Cowboy, people were giving me a great deal of attention," he said. "Sometimes you can get distracted, and this can bring on unnecessary, puffed-up feelings of importance."

Was he suggesting that something was lost in those Hollywood years?

"No," said Voight. "Something was learned. Because the experiences I had were lessons I needed to learn. Well, I learned them. Moreover, in spite of the difficulties, I never cheated on my sensibilities. I never went in a direction that didn't have some value in it or took a role without extending myself to see those values succeed. Of course, I didn't succeed every time. There were frustrations—like battling and then losing the battle to get my point across. Not to lay it on anybody, but in this system there's an excessive amount of negative energy—people who run scared, thinking this or that might go wrong, each one operating out of an almost paralytic state of mind."

This brought him back to the Pauls. "The situation with them is unique," he said. "We are working together out of courage instead of fear."

For Jon Voight, I learned, making movies was not just a job; it was about everything that mattered to him.

"My family was like the Pauls," he added. "Same thing. Trusting them, trusting different personalities to help me, always benefiting from that help. The family unit—mine, yours, everyone's—is but a small preparation for the world outside. When I came into contact with the Pauls, we shared that. Meeting them was the answer to my dream."

Donna Karan

TWO YEARS AGO TODAY, DONNA Karan became fashion's latest overnight success. After 14 years of grinding hard work.

Most of the fashion superstars, the millionaire designers, are men: Bill Blass, Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein, Oscar de la Renta. Now Donna Karan is one of them and, at 38, the youngest. Of course, she has a slight edge: She knows how it feels to wear the clothes.

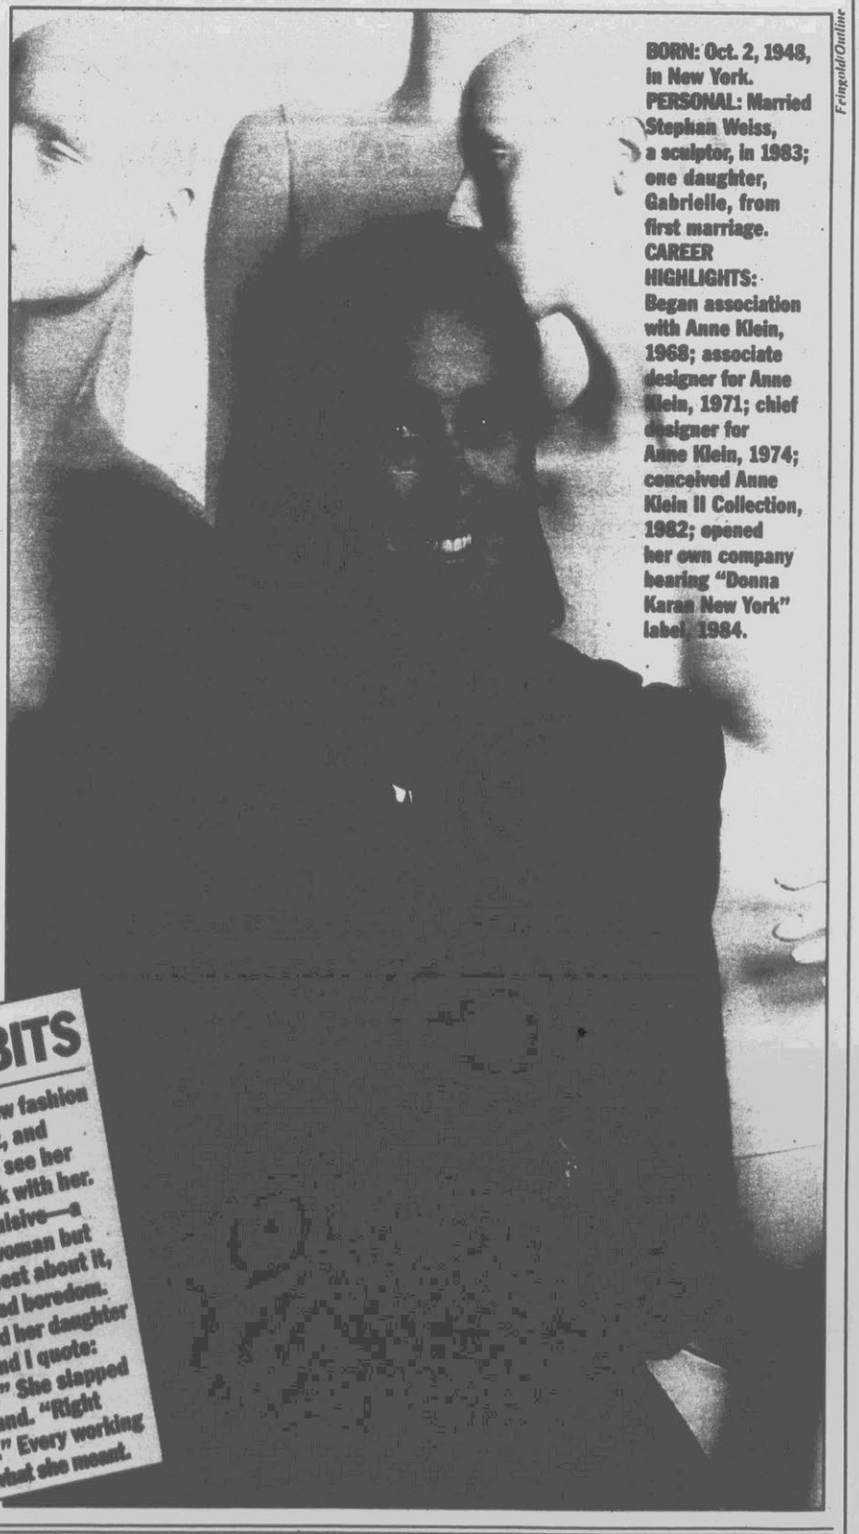
Donna is a tall, unglamorous New Yorker with fashion in her genes: Her mother was a model and then a showroom saleswoman; her father made men's suits for, according to Donna, "gangsters" and showbiz clients. At 14, Donna was selling dresses in a Long Island shop. Then came a stint at Parsons School of Design, where, top fashion editor Carrie Donovan reports, she was "loudmouthed but talented."

A summer job led to an offer from Anne Klein, then one of the few important women in the business. When Klein died in 1974, her financial backers took a deep breath and gave 26-year-old Donna the top design job. As if that weren't sufficiently dramatic, two days before Miss Klein died, Donna gave birth to a daughter, Gabrielle. Donna and a gifted associate, Louis Dell'Olio, not only kept the Klein outfit in business, they also began to win respect. Critics who had sniffed at her as second-rate began to have second thoughts. That didn't mean there weren't problems. And not only at work.

Her first marriage fell apart, and four years ago she married Stephan Weiss, a sculptor whom she considers her best friend and closest adviser. It was Stephan who helped her through the biggest business decision she would ever have to make: leaving the safe Anne Klein womb to start up her own fashion house. After months of agonizing and nail-biting, she became, with a Japanese backer, half-owner of a company bearing her name. On May 3, 1985, she showed her first "Donna Karan Collection." It was a sensation.

Most fashion designers work from sketches. Some can't do it any other way. They take out a pencil and draw a dress or a pair of pants, and skilled tailors actually create the clothes. Donna works as the great Coco Chanel used to do in Paris, draping cloth on a model, twisting it this way and that until the idea of a dress or suit comes through. Sometimes, impatient and nervy, Donna will snatch the cloth off the model and tug it around herself, looking for the right look, the right feel.

She's no model, of course. Though she does try, riding an exercise bike every morning and working out three days a week with a trainer. Does it work? The usually staid New York Times reported last year that, as she exercises, Donna chants, "I must/I must/Improve/My bust."



Feingold/Outline

BORN: Oct. 2, 1948, in New York.
PERSONAL: Married Stephan Weiss, a sculptor, in 1983; one daughter, Gabrielle, from first marriage.

BRADY'S BITS

Donna was one of the few fashion designers I'd never met, and last year I went over to see her new collection and talk with her. She was excited, impulsive—a successful businesswoman but still refreshingly honest about it, no phony sophisticated boredom. When I asked how old her daughter was, Donna said, and I quote: "She's 11. No, 12!" She slapped her head with a hand. "Right now, I'm not sure." Every working mother will know what she meant.

TV Pulls Out The Stops This Week

By Evan Levine

Spring often seems to represent a vast chasm to television viewers. Many shows are in reruns, strong fall programming hasn't started, and series often pop up and disappear with alarming frequency ("I'm sure I saw a show about a time-traveling elk last week.") But to save audiences from abandoning the pursuits of life, liberty and channel-flipping altogether, the networks came up with the idea of the May "sweeps," the bombardment of all-the-stops-pulled-out programming designed to grab viewers' attention and raise their own ratings.

This week's offerings include:

"Police Story: The Freeway Killings," which stars Angie Dickinson (whose series "Police Woman" was spun off from the original "Police Story"), Richard Crenna and Ben Gazzara. It follows the personal and professional lives of metropolitan police detectives on the trail of a serial killer. The three-hour movie airs Sunday, May 3, on NBC.

Also noteworthy is the CBS miniseries "Murder Ordained" (Sunday, May 3, and Tuesday, May 5). Based on a true event, it chronicles events surrounding a pair of murders. Keith Carradine and JoBeth Williams co-star.

With Michael J. Fox burning up the big screen, NBC is capitalizing on his success by offering "Teen Wolf" on Monday, May 4. ABC has the captivating "Mary Poppins," with Julie Andrews and Dick Van Dyke. This original movie musical, with classic songs such as "Just a Spoonful of Sugar," airs Sunday, May 3.

Fat Feline Garfield, the subject of one of the world's most popular comic strips, gets a taste of the good life in "Garfield Goes Hollywood." He, friend/rival Odie and owner Jon make themselves into the musical group "Johnny-Bop and the Two-Steps" and fly to Hollywood to audition for "Pet Search." It airs Friday, May 8, on CBS.

In the please-tune-in-next year category come several cliffhanging season enders. Marking the end of a five-year reign on "Cheers" (Thursday, May 7, NBC), Diane (Shelley Long) says goodbye to her volatile relationship with Sam (Ted Danson — forever. Reportedly, three endings were shot so no advance word could leak out. On ABC's "Dynasty" (Wednesday, May 6), wedding bells sound for Dana (Leann Humley) and Adam (Gordon Thomson) ... or do they? And "Cagney & Lacey" (Monday, May 4, CBS) airs part one of a two-part episode that centers on the death of Christine's (Sharon Gless) alcoholic father.

Angie Dickinson, Ben Gazzara (r.) and Richard Crenna star in "Police Story: The Freeway Killings." The movie follows a group of police detectives on the trail of a serial killer. It airs Sunday, May 3, on NBC.

SOAP OPERA WEEK

'SB' actress to appear in new feature film

By Kimberly Redmond

Why was Robyn Wright, who recently returned to "Santa Barbara" and her role of Kelly Capwell, absent from the show for several months? — S.M., Blackburg, Va.

Robyn Wright

Wright took a leave of absence from "SB" in order to film a co-starring role in the feature film "The Princess Bride," which should be released later this spring.

Please tell me about Steve Bassett, the actor who portrays Seth Snyder on "As the World Turns." I think he's a real hunk. — S.H., Columbus, Ind.

Bassett grew up in southern California. He attended Arizona State University and UCLA before completing his theatrical training at the Juilliard School in New York City.

Bassett began his acting career in New York City, where he appeared in several off-Broadway productions. He made his Broadway debut in the hit thriller "Deathtrap," in which he appeared for a year. He had roles in the feature films "Spring Break," "Endangered Species" and "Ratboy." Bassett created the role of Seth Snyder in 1985, marking his first recurring role on television.

Bassett is married. He and his wife, Anne, have a son, Tyler, who is 3 years old.

Steve Bassett

I heard that Hugh Franklin, who portrayed Charles Tyler on "All My Children," had passed away. Is that true? — M.B., Scranton, Pa.

Sadly, it's true that Franklin passed away in September 1986, after a long illness.

Noble Houseman

NBC has added another Hollywood dignitary to its "Noble House" cast. John Houseman has joined Pierce Brosnan, Deborah Raffin and Ben Masters for the eight-hour miniseries, now filming at a Hong Kong mock-up constructed in Wilmington, N.C. The 84-year-old actor and director is best known to TV audiences as Professor Kingsfield in "Paper Chase." "Noble House" is based on the best-selling novel by James Clavell.

TV Chatter

"Cagney & Lacey," which won John Karlen an Emmy last year for his portrayal of Tyne Daly's sympathetic husband Harvey, doesn't keep the Brooklyn-born actor very busy. In fact, he says he works only one day a week. So, what does he do with all his leisure time? "The rest of the time I spend at the track, going to good restaurants, jogging on Santa Monica beach. There are so many incredible places to go in southern California. But I even like just sitting out in the backyard and watching my apricot tree blossom," Karlen says. He has also had enough spare time to go through three personal fitness trainers, all female. "I'm on my fourth now. She's a woman, too. My trainers didn't give up in disgust. I train good with them during the day. It's the nights that are hard. There are all these great restaurants right near the beach." Besides good food, Karlen says his biggest indulgence since the "Cagney & Lacey" bucks started rolling in has been his purchase of a Jaguar. "The car is great, and I love a gourmet meal. But you know, the fact is, after a while gourmet food gets boring, and a steak and potato will suffice."

Ed Asner admits that he was "disappointed" that the reviews for his new dramatic series "The Bronx Zoo" haven't been "all that sensational," but unlike many other actors who get knocked by the press, he says he plans to use the criticism "as a guide. I hope the producer/writers of the show will do the same." Even if the critics were unkind, Asner says he gets positive reaction from viewers on the street. "Young people whose brains aren't out to lunch find the show very appealing," he says. Asner's character, high-school principal Joe Danzig, is gruff, tough and doesn't suffer fools easily. That sounds a lot like Asner's most famous role, newspaper editor Lou Grant. Are the two men similar? "I'm playing Joe heavier, balder and grayer than Lou Grant," Asner says, referring to the inevitable march of time since he first appeared as Lou on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" in 1970. On May 26, Asner will make a departure from both Lou and Joe when he stars in the ABC movie "Cracked." He plays a timid clergyman who must confront his son's addiction to cocaine. Asner admits that it was difficult to avoid sensationalism when dramatizing such a volatile subject. "But I don't think we sensationalized it intentionally," he says. "We sought to do a legitimate portrayal of a young man who gets hooked on crack. It's hard to avoid sensationalism when you're dealing with death in youth — especially when the death is something of a spectacular one."

Although it's being billed as a variety show, don't expect the usual goings-on when you tune in "The Tracey Ullman Show" on the new Fox network. Says the redheaded British singer/comedian, "It is a variety show, but not the 'glam-glam' variety show of the '70s where it was all fountains, fur coats and Shirley Bassey racing through the Everglades on a speedboat," she says, describing a show Hotline has never seen — but would like to. "We don't rely on fab guest stars. I do four or five different characters each week. I like putting on wigs and false noses maybe because I don't like looking like me." If the show fails, Ullman says you won't see her guest-starring on "Hotel" and "Falcon Crest," which seem to be the living graveyard of so many stars whose own series fail. "I plan to return to my left-wing women's theater group in England, which is not to say I'm a commie," she says. "Please don't go getting me deported."

CABLE LOG

By Connie Passalacqua

Showtime's "It's Garry Shandling's Show" is one of the biggest hits of the 1987-88 television season, so much so that it has been renewed for a record 52 episodes, or three full seasons. A renewal like that is unheard of on the networks (all of which nixed the Shandling pilot). It's something that can only happen on cable. But for all the benefits of cable, Shandling's hit show is shortchanged by its limited viewing audience.

Michael Tucci

"I don't see it that way at all," says Michael Tucci, who plays Garry's schleppy but lovable best friend, Pete Schumaker. "(Executive producer) Bernie Brillstein keeps telling us, 'It's a great slot to be in. We're a hit, all the people in show business who really matter love us, and so does the media. We're on the sidelines, so we can really do what we want.' As for me, it's great! I'm an actor, it's great to a have a job."

Tucci admits that he knew from the beginning that the Shandling sitcom would be special. "My wife read the pilot and said it was time to break the 'fourth wall.' I like when Garry talks to the audience. He treats them with a lot of respect. And my favorite show as a kid was 'Burns and Allen.' George Burns always spoke to the audience."

Tucci also hit it off immediately with Shandling. "Garry's very low-key and I'm very hyper, so we just clicked," he explains. Tucci feels that their characters are a study in contrasts, and that the result works well. "Pete (the very married, regional representative for Hush Puppies) is a good boy; he's all heart. Both as a performer and a person, Garry is very up on things, he always knows what's happening. He'll know what's going to happen in 1988. Pete's in 1965."

Tucci maintains that Pete "knows what's good with the old. He's very Old World, and so am I." Tucci feels tied to his Italian roots; "my family even made sausages and cheese." After graduating from law school, he decided to enter acting full time after seeing "Godspell." "But my mother – she's so Italian – keeps telling people I'm a lawyer. When I decided to be an actor, my family was against it. My mother said, 'Who do you think you are – Frank Sinatra?' "

Incredible Ida Early

Jackee Harry and Ed Begley Jr. will star in "The Incredible Ida Early," a one-hour NBC drama slated to air before the end of the season. Harry, star of "227," plays an unorthodox housekeeper who goes to work for a widower and father of four (Begley). Begley has garnered three Emmy nominations for his portrayal of Dr. Victor Ehrlich on "St. Elsewhere."

Take the Clara Johnson Test.

In Alamance County, North Carolina, Honda lawn mowers are assembled from the wheels up. Then each mower must pass rigid quality control standards before we ship it.

The final test is a critical performance check to ensure easy starting. We call it the Clara Johnson Test. At the end of the assembly line, each mower is started or it doesn't ship.

Come in and give the whole line of Honda mowers the Clara Johnson Test yourself. Each one will start easily or it wouldn't be a Honda.

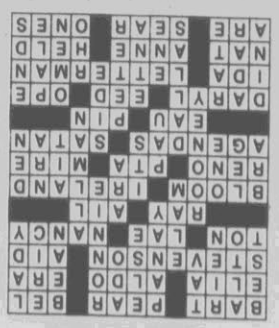
SUNDAY
POLICE STORY
Former "Police Woman" star Angie Dickinson returns to television — as a policewoman, naturally. Ben Gazzara co-stars as the captain of her squad. "Police Story: The Freeway Killings," a three-hour NBC movie airs Sunday, May 3.

FRIDAY
GARFIELD
Television's only Emmy-winning cat stars in his sixth animated special, airing Friday, May 8 on CBS. In "Garfield Goes Hollywood," Garfield, Jon and Odie, billed as "Johnny Bop and the Two-Steps," audition for "Pet Search," a TV talent show.

PBS
DEATH OF THE HEART
Patricia Hodge stars in "The Death of the Heart," airing Sunday, May 3 on PBS. The program, which is adapted from a novel by Elizabeth Bowen, is a "Masterpiece Theatre" production.



Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: My boyfriend and I are having a battle about whether the Monkees played instruments on any of their albums. Yes or no? — MICHELE PINETTE, BRISTOL, CONN.

Yes and no! The members of the group were culled from hundreds of applicants in the fall of 1965. Micky Dolenz and Davy Jones were actors, while Peter Tork and Mike Nesmith had some previous musical experience. Although they were constantly drilled and rehearsed so they could be passed off on TV viewers as accomplished musicians, the foursome was not allowed to play their instruments on their early records. They did supply the vocals, and eventually they were allowed to play their own instruments and to tour the country. Hits on which the Monkees did not play instruments were "I'm a Believer" and "A Little Bit Me, A Little Bit You," both written by Neil Diamond. It wasn't until May 1967, with the release of the album "Headquarters," that the group played their own instruments.

Dear Michele: Just out of curiosity, who is the highest paid actor on TV? — ALISA TEW, HOPE MILLS, N.C.

Bill Cosby has that honor. Last year, Cos earned an estimated $10 million with his take from his hit sitcom, commercials, concerts and albums. For 1987, Cosby has fattened his wallet even more, with a three-year deal as Kodak's spokesman. For six days work, Cosby pocketed $6 million. That translates to $1 million per day.

Leading the rest of the pack is Larry Hagman, who rakes in $125,000 per episode of "Dallas," plus profits, and Tom Selleck, who receives $100,000, plus profits, for each episode of "Magnum, P.I."

Dear Michele: Please clarify the relationship between actors Dana Andrews and Steve Forrest. A friend says they are father and son. I say they are brothers. — JEAN SMITH, CITRUS HEIGHTS, CALIF.

Forrest and Andrews are brothers. The sons of minister Charles Forrest Andrews, Dana was born Carver Daniel Andrews on Jan. 1, 1909 in Collins, Miss. Steve, born William Forrest Andrews, was born on Sept. 29, 1924, in Huntsville, Texas.

ASK ME ABOUT TV

The legendary Glenn Miller never saw his story on film

By Toni D'Amato

Did Glenn Miller play himself in the movie "The Glenn Miller Story"? – M.R., Yakima, Wash.

Glenn Miller, the legendary bandleader, died in 1944. The film, which was based on his life story, was released in 1954 and starred James Stewart in the title role. Some other music greats appeared in the film – Louis Armstrong and Gene Krupa. The cast was rounded out by June Allyson, Charles Drake, George Tobias, Harry Morgan and Frances Langford.

Ben Murphy

Can you give me some information about my favorite western series, "Alias Smith and Jones"? Also, what happened to stars Pete Deuel and Ben Murphy? – M.B., Humboldt, Kan.

This series aired on ABC from 1971 to 1973. Hannibal Heyes (alias Joshua Smith) was played from 1971 to 1972 by Peter Deuel and from 1972 to 1973 by Roger Davis. Jed "Kid" Curry (alias Thaddeus Jones) was played by Ben Murphy. Sally Field frequently appeared as Clementine Hale. The change in casting of the role of Hannibal Heyes occurred when Peter Deuel was found in his Hollywood Hills apartment, dead from a gunshot wound, in December 1971. It was labeled a suicide. Roger Davis had been doing the opening and closing narrations for the show and was put in the lead after Deuel's death.

After "Alias Smith and Jones," Ben Murphy went on to appear in "Griff" (1973-74); "Gemini Man" (1976); "The Chisholms" (1979-80) and "Lottery" (1983-84).

My husband and I agree that Charles Laughton appeared in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," but we don't agree that he also played an English ghost during World War II. – L.H., Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

Laughton starred in "The Canterville Ghost" in 1944 opposite Robert Young and Margaret O'Brien. In the 1939 classic "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," he starred in the title role opposite Maureen O'Hara.

Open Admissions

Jane Alexander and Michael Beach are the stars of "Open Admissions," a CBS movie now filming in Chicago. Alexander plays Ginny Carlson, a college speech professor who is, by her own admission, unable to help her barely literate student Calvin Jefferson, played by Beach. Dennis Farina and Estelle Parsons also star.

Custody Battle

"After the Promise," a CBS movie now filming in Vancouver, depicts the true story of a Depression-era widower whose four sons are taken from him by overzealous social workers. Former "St. Elsewhere" star Mark Harmon, seen most recently on "Moonlighting," plays the widower, and Diana Scarwid ("Mommie Dearest") plays his second wife.

BEHIND THE SCENES

By Frank Lovece

When CBS's "Cagney & Lacey" begins its two-part season climax this week (Monday, May 4), the partnership between cops Christine Cagney (Sharon Gless) and Mary Beth Lacey (Tyne Daly) will be strained almost to the breaking point. Will they go their separate ways? Of course not. But the tension does allow semi-regular Robert Hegyes to take some of the spotlight as the producers ease him into what will be a full-time role next season if the series is picked up.

Robert Hegyes

Hegyes – typecast for years following his role as Jewish-Puerto Rican street kid Juan Epstein in "Welcome Back, Kotter" – is back on prime time. His "C&L" role as cop-cum-con-man Manny Esposito may not be a great stretch for Hegyes, but Esposito's smarmy charms seem a hit with fans.

Welcome back, Robert.

"The typecasting – I knew that danger going in," Hegyes reflects. "But 'Welcome Back, Kotter' was so good for me, how could I not take it? It was hard getting other kinds of parts after the show was over, and there didn't seem to be anything I could do. I cut my hair, I did all sorts of things to try and change. Then I decided that I was who I was: a guy from New Jersey who plays street guys."

In the interim, Hegyes wrote scripts, played Chico Marx in "Groucho: A Life in Revue" and did bit parts in feature films and TV movies. "It's funny," he says. "It was easier to see the head of Paramount to pitch a movie than it was to see a casting director!"

Hegyes says he was about to switch agents when his current one landed him the "Cagney & Lacey" audition. He almost blew it. "Ah, that first audition! I just didn't have it," he says. "But they called me back, and that time I was better. It was a scene where Esposito shows up hawking fans during a heat wave. I walked in with my own fan, which nobody else had bothered with, and kept fanning myself while everyone else sweated."

Hegyes sees his Esposito character as "ambitious in his way, but not someone who takes himself too seriously. He wants to get as much out of the police force as possible, and then get out and be on his own." Not a bad game plan for Esposito and Hegyes alike.

MONDAY
RHINESTONE

Sylvester Stallone has worked box-office magic as Rocky and Rambo, but "Rhinestone," in which he teamed with Dolly Parton, is no gem: The film was a colossal flop in 1984. It makes its network TV premiere Monday, May 4 on ABC.

TUESDAY
MURDER ORDAINED

Keith Carradine stars as Kansas Highway Patrolman John Rule in "Murder Ordained," airing on CBS. The two-part miniseries concludes Tuesday, May 5.

INSIDE CANADA

Title of broadcasting king still up for grabs

By Bob Remington

First it was Foster Hewitt. Then it was Danny Gallivan. But ever since Gallivan retired in 1985, nobody has emerged as the dominant force in Canadian hockey broadcasting. As the National Hockey League playoffs enter the conference championships this week, nobody is heir apparent to reign as king of the gondola.

Don Cherry

"They're all all-stars," says "Hockey Night in Canada" producer Don Wallace, being diplomatic as he describes his on-air talent. "Any one can do the job."

As the Stanley Cup finals approach, Wallace says the only shoo-in is former Boston Bruins' coach Don Cherry. Bob Cole, probably hockey's best play-by-play man, is also a good bet to be part of the crew. Beyond that, it's anybody's guess.

Ex-coaches like Cherry seem to be Wallace's preference for analysts and color men. Former Detroit Red Wings' and Vancouver Canucks' coach Harry Neale has been with "HNIC" all season. Former Montreal Canadiens' and Buffalo Sabres' mentor Scotty Bowman was added for the playoffs.

"Bowman doesn't have a lot of flash," says Wallace, "but he's so knowledgeable, every time he opens his mouth, you listen."

One who definitely won't be on the "HNIC" crew is Dave Hodge. The veteran was dumped just before the playoffs for criticizing his bosses on the air.

The Stanley Cup finals begin May 20 on CBC. If all series go their full seven games, the NHL championship will be played June 1.

The hockey wars annually draw some of Canadian television's biggest audiences. The Edmonton Oilers' 5-2 win over the New York Islanders in the fifth and final game of the 1984 series holds the record for largest audience of any Canadian-produced program (6,192,000 viewers on the CBC English network).

That's mere chicken feed compared to audience figures in the United States, but in Canada, it meant a 74-percent share of the TV audience. Surprisingly, last year's all-Canadian final between the Calgary Flames and Montreal Canadiens did not draw as big an audience. The final game, which Montreal won 4-3, drew 3,671,000 viewers.

Sox-Angels Rematch On Game Of The Week

By Adam Beckerman

NBC's baseball Game of the Week on Saturday, May 9, features the California Angels returning to Boston to meet the Red Sox for the first time since their October collapse in the final three games of the American League Championship Series.

If the Red Sox are acknowledged to be baseball's most star-crossed team, it's only because the Angels of Anaheim are only 26 years old and haven't quite had time to catch up. In the 1982 playoffs, the Angels led the best-of-five series 2-0, then lost three straight to the Milwaukee Brewers. And last year, with two strikes on the final out in the ninth inning of the fifth and potentially final game, Angel reliever Donnie Moore let Sox center fielder Dave Henderson golf one out of the park.

* The NHL's Wales and Campbell Conference Finals begin Monday and Tuesday, May 4 and 5 on ESPN. Ice hockey hasn't had a Stanley Cup final round reach seven games since 1972, when the Montreal Canadiens defeated the Chicago Black Hawks, 6-4, but the conference finals often have provided NHL followers with the best action of the season.

Last year's Campbell final featured two teams that had survived thrilling divisional tests: The St. Louis Blues of the Norris Division, who had disposed of the pesky Toronto Maple Leafs in seven games; and the Calgary Flames of the Smythe Division, who had ruined the Edmonton Oilers' bid for a third straight Stanley Cup by beating the Oilers in Edmonton. The Flames won because of Oiler rookie defenseman Steve Smith's errant clearing pass from behind his own goal that struck goalie Grant Fuhr's skate and ricocheted into the net.

In a tense, tightly checked seven-game series, Calgary prevailed over the Blues, winning the final contest 2-1. Unfortunately for the Flames, by the time they were in the Stanley Cup finals and faced the Wales champion Canadiens, the team was exhausted. The Flames lost to Montreal in five.

* The NBA is in the midst of its own playoffs, which can be seen on CBS on Sunday, May 3, and WTBS during the week.

* On Sunday, May 3, on ABC, Bobby Czyz (31-1-0, 22 KO's) defends his IBF light-heavyweight belt for the third time. He'll be fighting Jim MacDonald (20-3, 18 KO's), winner of four straight since losing to Michael Spinks 1985.

Francis Is The Latest Soap Vet To Return

By Connie Passalacqua

On a recent episode of "Days of Our Lives," when Genie Francis woke up on the examining table of Salem's Hope Memorial Hospital as bruised and battered reporter Diana Coleville and batted her mascaraed eyelashes, it marked one of the highlights of the 1987 soap year. Francis had not been seen regularly on daytime television since she and Tony Geary rocketed to national renown as "General Hospital" 's Laura and Luke Spencer in the early '80s. "DOOL" has netted itself daytime's biggest fish — save for Geary, of course!

Soap actors have been going from one show to another since the advent of daytime television. But there has been so much movement lately that even the most avid fan needs a score card to keep track.

Why has the rehiring of soap favorites reached the fever pitch this year?

REVCO RECOMMENDS GENERICS FOR GUARANTEED QUALITY AND SAVINGS

A generic drug is a pharmaceutical that is manufactured and sold using the common or chemical name. For example, Hydrochlorothiazide is the common name for Hydrodiuril, a leading diuretic.

Brand name products are priced so manufacturers can recover marketing and developmental costs. After the patent expires, a drug becomes common property and can be produced without royalties or fees. Increased competition between manufacturers provides low drug costs which means your Revco pharmacist can save you money.

Revco has attempted to order what we feel to be sufficient quantities. However, our high quality products at low, everyday discount prices mean we cannot guarantee that we will be able to fulfill all requests. We suggest you shop early for best selections! Most stores open Sundays and evenings. Items available while quantities last. Revco reserves the right to limit quantities. No dealers allowed. Differences: 1. Elbow is concealed. 2. Rug is missing. 3. Head is tilted. 4. Watch is missing. 5. Number is different. 6. Skateboard is missing.

• SIGN LORE! Three persons attending a party were given signs bearing the numbers 1, 3 and 6. They were challenged to mix these figures any way they wished to produce a number divisible by seven.
