Reagan Said Recovering Rapidly After Surgery

Fluid Removed From Surface Of Brain

By Tony Kennedy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCHESTER, Minn. — Recovering rapidly from surgery to remove fluid from the surface of his brain, former President Ronald Reagan on Saturday joked with visitors and read several newspapers, his spokesman said.

"He is in excellent spirits, telling baseball stories and joking with his staff," Reagan's spokesman Mark Weinberg said.

In reference to the removal of at least some of his hair for the surgery, Reagan quipped, "I guess my barber can have the week off," Weinberg said.

Shortly after awaking at 6:30 a.m. Saturday, Reagan underwent a follow-up CAT scan to view the upper right portion of his head where surgeons on Friday drilled a hole in his skull to remove a buildup of blood. Weinberg said the problem stemmed from a July 4 incident in which Reagan fell from a "wildly" bucking horse. It was detected on a routine physical examination.

The "evacuation" of the puddle of blood had progressed "exactly as had been anticipated" as of Saturday morning and doctors removed the drain that had been placed on his skull at the time of surgery, Weinberg said.

Friday's hour-long operation was led by Dr. Thoralf M. Sundt, chairman of the Mayo Clinic's department of neurologic surgery. Sundt, editor of a leading medical journal on neurology, was assisted by two neurologic surgeons, three nurses and an anesthesiologist at the clinic, located about 70 miles southeast of Minneapolis.

Reagan's postoperative recovery room is located in an otherwise unoccupied section of St. Marys Hospital which was under security guard. Nancy Reagan spent the night in a room across the hall from her husband and will remain at the hospital "at least for the time being," Weinberg said.

He would not say when Reagan is expected to be released and Sundt would not comment about any aspect of Reagan's care.

Weinberg said Reagan spent part of Friday night

Metal Fatigue Considered In Denmark Crash; 55 Died

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — Aviation specialists said Saturday that metal fatigue might have caused the crash of a Norwegian charter plane that plunged into the North Sea, killing all 55 people aboard.

The twin-engine CV-580 Convair turboprop was flying from Norway to West Germany when it vanished from radar screens Friday and crashed 18.5 miles north of the Danish fishing port of Hirtshals.

Whatever occurred happened so quickly the pilots had no time to send a distress signal, according to investigators.

Tommy Jensen, head of the Danish crash investigation team, was quoted by the Norwegian NTB news agency as saying "so far no burns or other damage on bodies or wreckage has been found to indicate an explosives blast. Bodies and wreckage were found within a concentrated area whereas midair explosions usually scatter them."

Some victims were found still strapped in their seats that had torn loose from the fuselage, he said.

In Norway, political parties canceled the rest of the campaign for national elections in mourning for the crash victims but the balloting will be held Monday as scheduled.

Rolf Grimsrud of Norway's Civil Aviation Board said parts of the plane might have been ripped apart when cabin pressure dropped as the craft arrived at its cruising altitude of about 23,000 feet. The cause could have been metal fatigue in some section, he said, indicating a bomb explosion was seen as unlikely though not ruled out.

All 50 passengers were employees of the Wilhelmsen Lines shipping

Officials Believe Jailed Jamaicans Only Part Of Larger Drug Problem

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Tuesday morning jury selection will begin for the trial of four Jamaicans arrested in Greenville on a number of drug-related charges. The three men and one woman reflect what some officials consider as the leading edge of a larger problem.

In September of 1988 Greenville police and Pitt County sheriff's investigators seized $99,000 worth of drugs, mostly crack cocaine, and $23,600 in cash when the Jamaicans were arrested. The four were charged with a number of counts of possession, trafficking and manufacturing cocaine and marijuana.

A federal grand jury indicted the Jamaicans in May, and jury selection for the trial is scheduled to begin in an Elizabeth City federal court on Tuesday. The trial could also begin the same day, according to Assistant U.S. Attorney General Bob Skiver.

The persons arrested were all apparently of Jamaican descent and had lived in the Bronx in New York City before moving to Greenville.

Authorities said the suspects followed a similar pattern seen in larger areas where Jamaican gangs now have a strong footing in the illegal drug trade.

"They move in one, two at a time and gradually try to take over the area," said R.G. Moss, special agent with the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Moss, who worked in the Pitt County area last winter, said the Jamaicans were just beginning to move in and influence the drug traffic.

A.P. White, a narcotics investigator with the Greenville Police Department, said Jamaicans now run two operations in the city and possibly three.

"Right now we've got two, possibly three, different organizations," White said, "two we know about and one we're just hearing about."

Tom Haigwood, Pitt County district attorney, said over the past few years the number of cases involving "foreign nationals" has climbed.

The district attorney used the term "foreign nationals" because "Jamaican" is a generic term for islanders. The "Jamaicans" often show connections to New York City.

"There was a time in years past when we didn't see anybody but from Pitt County charged with drug activity," Haigwood said. Activity by non-natives later picked up, and more recently trade on an international level. "Now we're seeing people from other countries, particularly people from Caribbean nations, involved in drug-related activities," he said.

Haigwood said arrests of Jamaicans in the area have increased, but are more common in larger areas such as Raleigh and Jacksonville.

A recent report from the U.S. attorney general's office confirmed Haigwood's observations.

"Cocaine is the major drug problem here, as everywhere," the report stated. "Cocaine distribution within (eastern North Carolina) is epidemic."

Jamaican activity in Raleigh and Jacksonville is well documented. But arrests and convictions by the attorney general's office are few in the area around Pitt and Craven counties.

"Small, but increasing, groups of Jamaicans have begun distributing cocaine in the Craven/Pitt County areas of eastern North Carolina," the report said. "Typically arriving by car from New York, with their crack/cocaine being brought in separately by car or bus, these groups

Gabrielle Stalls

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Hurricane Gabrielle stalled in the Atlantic on Saturday, annoying the Northeast coast of the United States with heavy swells, but remaining far from land.

"It's losing its steering currents," said forecaster Bob Case of the National Hurricane Center. "It looks like its going to hang up and become almost stationary for the next two days."

Gabrielle's 85 mph winds will probably weaken because the storm is partly over water that is too cold to maintain its circular motion, he said.

"But it continues to create large swells along the coastline, especially along the New England and mid-Atlantic coast," Case added.

At 6 p.m. EDT, Gabrielle's center was located near 39.2 degrees north latitude and 60.2 degrees west longitude, or about 335 miles south of Sable Island, Nova Scotia.

Solons Want To Resolve Hazardous Waste Issue

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Representatives of eight Southern states are scheduled to meet Friday to develop a final regional hazardous waste agreement.

And Gov. Jim Martin said last week that he intends to call the General Assembly into session on Sept. 21 to consider the agreement if it is adopted by the state representatives.

The preliminary agreement calls for the state to develop a 40,000-ton hazardous waste incinerator, which would accept wastes from other states. The residue from the incinerator would be buried at existing landfills in South Carolina and Alabama.

The regional agreement would allow the state to build only the incinerator, not an entire treatment complex.

"If our General Assembly says yes, we will go ahead and sign the agreement," Martin said. "If it says no, the other states will sign and we will have to find another way to deal with the waste."

Two of Pitt County's legislators who could be contacted Friday said

Colombia Native Concerned About Drug Situation, Mafia In His Home Country

By Rosalie Trotman
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Severe drug problems in America and South America are a grave concern of Carlos Thompson, a native of Colombia.

Thompson returned to his Greenville home Monday after making a second trip to South America this summer because his mother is critically ill in the Colombian city of Cali.

Interviewed at home Wednesday night, Thompson expressed his convictions about the Colombian Mafia.

"Before the killing of presidential candidate Sen. Luis Carlos Galan, people in Cali were sort of accepting the presence of the Colombian Mafia — something they were forced to live with even if they didn't like it. I sensed this feeling during my two-week visit in July," he said.

"The assassination of the candidate proved that the goal of the Mafia goes well beyond getting rich. They want now to take over the government of the country — they want to rule the country," Thompson said.

"In conversations with several friends, I could note the anger and frustration of not being able to collectively do something and throw the Mafia out of Colombia. For example, an old friend said, 'Why do we have to put up with this? If I took my wife to a cocktail party, I would not be able to say anything bad about the Mafia because in all probability, there would be someone waiting for us with a machine gun to assassinate us.'

"He said, also, that this situation was the same as Germany during the reign of Hitler."

Thompson said Cali residents don't go out at night for entertainment as they did in July. "Some friends and I sat down in a nice restaurant and we were the only ones there. The same situation goes for dance clubs, lounges, bars or any nighttime entertainment. People are afraid to get caught in a crossfire between rival Mafia groups. The effect of the Mafia is being felt by owners of these nightspots — they are letting employees go; increasing even more the unemployment rate, which is 40 percent," he said.

"The major war happenings between the government and the Mafia are taking place in Medellin and Bogota. There is not really a war going on in Cali. Both Mafia cartels in Medellin and Bogota have been involved in the killing of key political figures. The Cali cartel has not been involved in the assassination of major political persons," he said.

"Another factor to consider is the buildup in strength for the past 30 years of leftist guerrillas, communists, to overthrow the government. During this war between the government and the Mafia, the guerrillas have been strangely silent. It makes you wonder if they are waiting for the Mafia and government troops to annihilate each other and take over the country easily," he said.

"It is felt by several of my friends that, in addition to guns, supplies and aircraft, the United States should send military troops into Colombia — it is the only way to ensure that the government fighting forces would not be subject to intimidation as the Mafia tells Colombian military forces that, if they fight against the Mafia, their families will be harmed or killed," he said.

Thompson did not see any violence during his stay in Cali. "We were to fly directly from Cali to Miami Monday, but instead we flew to Medellin airport. All the passengers company of Oslo. They had been chosen by lottery for the free trip to Hamburg, West Germany, to see a ship christened. The plane had a crew of five.

Officials initially said all of the victims were Norwegians. But a company list, which reported there were 38 men and 17 women aboard, said three of the women had British passports and were living in Norway.

Rescue officials reported late Saturday that 31 bodies had been recovered and it was presumed the others were trapped in the wreckage. They had reported Friday that 32 bodies had been found but lowered that figures as the remains were brought ashore.

The U.S.-built plane belonged to the Norwegian Partnair charter airline company. The 35-year old aircraft had recently undergone a major maintenance checkup in Canada, the airline said.

Flight Supervisor Karl Andersen at Copenhagen's Kastrup Airport was quoted by Danish radio as saying parts of the plane might have broken off in flight. "The radar signal disappeared very suddenly from our screens, and the plane went down fast," he said.

No other flights or flying objects were spotted on flight control radar screens at the time, discounting the possibility of a collision or the craft had been shot down, Andersen added.

Officials said a fishing trawler participating in the search received a sonar echo that could have been from the wreckage but West German navy divers could not confirm that because of poor visibility at the 90-yard depth.

A Norwegian vessel with minisubmarines was on its way to the area to help locate the wreckage, including the flight recorders, according to officials.

They said the effort to recover all of the bodies and complete the salvage operation could take up to two weeks.

they have had no official word of a possible special legislative session or what the proposed regional hazardous waste agreement might contain.

Sen. Tom Taft said, "I've not received any formal notice of a call and not received any materials about the issue." But Taft said, "I serve on the Senate environmental committee so I'm sure I will be somewhat involved in the process dealing with this issue.

"From what I understand, much of the preliminary work is being done and hopefully the special session will last only a single day. I have not heard of any other issues that will be taken up."

Ed Warren, a member of the House, said, "what I've been reading about" is a Sept. 21 special session, but "I haven't received a letter on it yet."

Warren said, "I'm prepared to go (back to Raleigh) because it's something we should resolve in North Carolina. I would think the General Assembly would be agreeable and finalize a decision as soon as possible."

Suggesting that, "if we place hazardous waste in other places we should have something of our own to offer other states," Warren said, "I for one know we should take some action and resolve this issue once and for all.

"I think the Governor is doing the right thing in having us come back to resolve this.

"I hope we can accomplish it in one day. I don't anticipate anything else and surely hope this will be the only issue" to be considered," Warren said.

The General Assembly completed the longest regular session in history in August.

If North Carolina doesn't enter doesn't enter an agreement with the seven other southeastern states by Oct. 17, the state will lose federal toxic site clean-up funds as well as access to Alabama's hazardous waste landfill.

Missouri Teens Drown

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two Missouri teen-agers drowned in separate incidents while playing in flood-swollen waters, and at least seven people were injured in Indiana, one by lightning, as a powerful thunderstorm moved through Saturday.

Bryan Hammer, 18, of Gladstone, Mo., was killed when he was pulled into the 7-feet-deep Line Creek in Kansas City, Mo., authorities said.

Hammer's roommate, Mike Marquez, said the two had gone to the creek about midnight.

"We were out late and had nothing else to do, so we thought we'd mess around in the water," Marquez said.

Up to 4 inches of rain fell in the Kansas City area overnight.

A 13-year-old North Kansas City boy died when he was swept into a storm drain Friday night. Robert Ragsdale was pronounced dead about 7 p.m. at North Kansas City Hospital.

Ragsdale and a friend "were riding the drainage ditch like a water slide and the water current just got too strong," said Bob Jones, a spokesman for the Kansas City Police Department.

In Indiana, the storm sparked flash flooding and cut electrical power in Indianapolis.

An unidentified 14-year-old girl was treated and released after lightning struck near her during halftime of Saturday's football game between Miami of Ohio and Purdue in Lafayette, officials said.

And in New Palestine, between six and eight people received minor injuries when gusting winds knocked down a tent at a festival, police said.

Plane Wreckage Found

EL TORO MARINE CORPS AIR STATION, Calif. (AP) — The wreckage of a military plane that disappeared more than two weeks ago was discovered Saturday in the Southern California mountains, officials said.

Two bodies found at the scene were tentatively identified as the two crew members from the reconnaissance plane, said Lt. Gene Browne, spokesman for the El Toro base.

The plane, an OV-10A assigned to the 3rd Marine Aircraft wing, left Camp Pendleton on Aug. 24 for a three-hour mission and was never heard from again.

The plane was discovered in the San Gorgonio wilderness.

San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department officials and the military both took credit for finding the airplane.

Sheriff's Sgt. Jim Singley spotted the crash site on the 5,300-foot-high ridge line of San Gorgonio Mountain between Banning and Big Bear Lake, Bryant said. The San Gorgonio wilderness is 60 miles northeast of El Toro Marine Corps Air Station and about 90 miles east of Los Angeles.

The mission crewmen were Capt. Sergio R. Vivaldi, 29, of Port Chester, N.Y., the pilot, and 1st Lt. Joel H. Piehl, 31, of Fargo, N.D., the observer.

The aircraft was on a visual reconnaissance training mission that could have covered an area from Camp Pendleton east toward the Colorado River, north toward Las Vegas and south to the Mexican border.

Reagan Making Fast Recovery

watching the Minnesota Twins play the Kansas City Royals on television. He ate a breakfast Saturday of bran cereal, whole wheat toast, orange juice and decaffeinated coffee and will continue to be able to choose his own diet, Weinberg said.

"President Reagan read several newspapers and visited with Mrs. Reagan and members of their staff," Weinberg said. "President Reagan will spend the rest of the day reading and resting."

White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk said President Bush called Reagan about 6 p.m. EDT and the call lasted about five minutes.

"The president wished him well." said Popadiuk. "President Reagan sounded strong and very well. He said he had no pain. He stated that he hopes to get out soon and expressed his appreciation for the flowers the president and Mrs. Bush had sent."

Among the others sending messages to Reagan were Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Great Britain, the Rev. Billy Graham, Henry Kissinger and former presidents Ford and Nixon, Weinberg said.

Also Saturday, delegates to a state Republican convention in Mankato, Minn., received an unexpected call from Reagan.

"I'm being handsomely treated here in your state, and it's a pleasure to be here," Reagan said. "I'm going to be out on the mashed potato circuit as much as I can."

A hospital employee who asked not to be identified said only a mild pain killer was prescribed for Reagan. Weinberg said he did not know if Reagan was taking any pain-killers.

"He looks great, he feels great, his spirits are terrific," Weinberg said "No further treatment is now anticipated."

Several doctors not involved in the surgery or connected to the Mayo Clinic said the type of surgery Reagan underwent was common. They say the recovery period usually includes up to a week of hospitalization.

Weinberg said he does not know if the recovery period will limit the former president's activities.

set up in local motels and distribute in the black communities in New Bern and Greenville.

"Little is known about their structure — available information suggests that money is being laundered through cooperating business and offshore (nations). Individuals arrested to date have been found in possession of thousands of vials of crack/cocaine and firearms."

The Jamaican influence also affects the crime statistics. "From our experience, most of your drug-related killings involve the Jamaicans," Moss said.

The islanders are generally regarded as more violent and threatening in their drug dealings. And informant reports and arrests say the Jamaicans usually carry firearms, sometimes semiautomatics.

"As typical of Jamaican organizations, (one) group possessed firearms and used violence and threats of violence to aid their activities," the attorney general's report stated.

"We've been fortunate that we haven't had gunfights or whatever when we're making arrests," the Haigwood said. But he said reports indicate the Jamaicans in the area are well armed.

According to Greenville's narcotics investigator, the Jamaicans operating in the city use violence as a reminder.

Crack prices are stable and all dealers agree to one price, White said. He said violence only comes into play if one dealer undercuts the price, and he may get a non-fatal shot in the leg as a reminder of the standards.

With the prices stabilized and the market hooked, White said he doesn't expect the violence caused by the Jamaican presence to increase.

"Drug dealers here pretty much have an agreement," White said. "They can all make money and get rich."

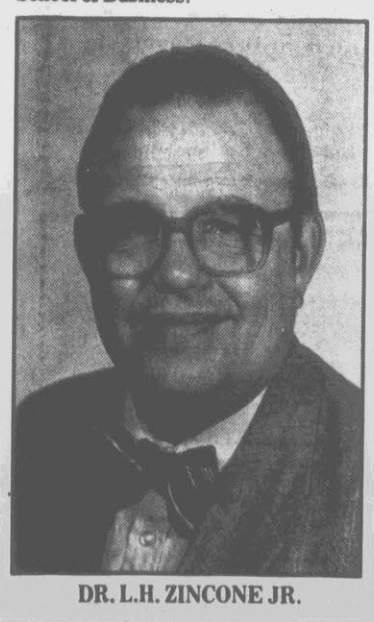
Zincone Associate Dean In School Of Business

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Dr. L.H. Zincone Jr., a business professor at East Carolina University, has been named associate dean for academic programs in the ECU School of Business.



DR. L.H. ZINCONE JR.

Zincone was formerly chairman of the department of decision sciences and director of the Bureau of Business Research. His appointment to the new position was made by Dr. Ernest B. Uhr, the School of Business dean.

A 23-year veteran of the School of Business faculty, Zincone said he was looking forward to the decade of the '90s and to the continued growth and development of the School of Business.

"This new assignment will give me an opportunity to focus my attention on the internal workings of the school," he said.

Zincone joined the ECU faculty in 1966 after completing his doctorate in economics at the University of Virginia. He has promoted stronger relations between the School of Business and the business community. He directed the Bureau of Business Research for the past five years and co-founded the Entrepreneurial Development Council of Eastern North Carolina. Both organizations were established to help businesses in the region.

Mafia Woes Worsen

were ordered to leave the plane and to take all hand-luggage with us. After about 45 minutes we were allowed back onto the plane and the flight then continued without problems to Miami. We were not told of the reason for getting us out in Medellin. When I called my wife that night from Miami, she told me that, while watching CNN-TV, she had learned that a bomb threat had been called in for my flight while the plane was in Medellin. The passengers were not told this. I still don't know whether a bomb was found and dismantled or if there was a bomb at all," Thompson said.

Americans are leaving Colombia as requested by President Bush, he said. "All flights out of Colombia are booked for the next month. Because of this, I had to be at the Cali airport at 11 a.m. for my 2 p.m. flight. If I had missed the flight, I would have had to remain in Cali for at least another 30 days," he said.

Thompson said he was pleased to hear what President Bush had to say in his televised speech last week concerning drugs. "I sincerely hope that his plan is approved as soon as possible in Congress. The plan has been criticized for not being strong enough. At the present time, the most important thing is to start. If necessary, more funds can be allocated later — it is the only way to avoid that, not only Colombia but several other South American countries, end up being governed by thugs," he said.

Thompson and his family have lived in Greenville for eight years. He works at Burroughs Wellcome as an engineer.

Perfect, But Dangerous, Balance

Clarence Boone, a third-grade student at Rocky Mount, practices his balance during a trek along the railroad tracks in his hometown. In spite of Clarence's expertise in maintaining his balance, railroad officials prefer that he and other youngsters find a safer place to play.

Jones Supports Part Of Autonomy Call

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOONE — The chairman of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors endorsed part of a call for more autonomy for the state's 16 public universities.

Universities should have more freedom in making some spending decisions, Chairman Robert L. Jones said in an interview after a board meeting here Friday.

"There's not a business in this world that makes an annual budget that doesn't realize halfway through the year that they guessed wrong," Jones said.

Jones said he would ask legislators to give the Board of Governors authority to approve campus requests for transferring money from one budget item to another. He said he also would ask that the General Assembly consider raising the ceiling on contracts for which universities, like other state agencies, are required to advertise for bids.

The push to persuade legislators to relinquish some control over how UNC campuses spend money was launched last week by Paul Hardin, chancellor at UNC-Chapel Hill.

In addition to calling for more fiscal autonomy, Hardin proposed in a report to his trustees that campuses be allowed to set their own tuition and keep the proceeds instead of turning them over to the state.

Jones said he preferred to push for greater freedom over spending, in return for which campuses would be more accountable to state legislators.

Currently, UNC officials, like their counterparts in other state agencies, are prohibited from transferring money designated for one purpose to another. Any money that is not spent by the end of the year reverts to the state.

Hardin and others have said such restrictions breed inefficiency and encourage wasteful spending.

On Thursday, UNC system President C.D. Spangler Jr. offered an unfavorable critique of many of the proposals advanced by Hardin. Calling on campuses to work "as a family," Spangler adamantly opposed any plan to raise additional revenues through tuition hikes.

But Hardin remained undaunted.

"It's the product of a summer of careful thought," Hardin said Friday of his report. "I stand by it."

Asked for his reaction to Spangler's appeal to UNC trustees and chancellors to work as a family, Hardin said, "In a family — at least in my family — there are many voices.

"There is finally a family position. What we have not had so far is a full discussion of these issues within the family. My board (of trustees) is asking for that."

While Jones said he shared Hardin's goal of greater efficiency, he frowned on attempts to convince lawmakers to let campuses keep tuition revenues.

He warned that if such a freedom were granted, legislators could reduce the UNC system's total appropriation by a comparable amount — resulting in no net gain of funds.

Firing Tests State Law

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — The firing of a blind social worker who refused to provide services to an AIDS victim is apparently the first in North Carolina under a new state law barring discrimination against patients with the deadly disease.

Thelma Lu Mendenhall, who has a master's degree in rehabilitation counseling, said she regarded the incident as a matter of risk to her health, but her superiors viewed it as insubordination.

For her refusal, Miss Mendenhall, who has worked for the N.C. Division of Services for the Blind since 1978, was fired Friday from her $26,076-a-year job in the regional office in Winston-Salem.

The firing appears to be the first in the state since the legislature enacted the anti-AIDS discrimination law on July 31.

S. Stewart Vick, the regional director who fired Miss Mendenhall, said that she was a competent employee who worked well with clients in the 16-county area of northern-central North Carolina.

Asked if her job performance weighed in the decision, Vick said,: "It arose out of this incident. This person applied for services, and she (Miss Mendenhall) declined to take the application. We are legally obligated to serve all eligible clients."

Vick said Miss Mendenhall was assigned to provide instruction to newly blind clients, such as the male patient in Greensboro's Moses Cone Hospital whose case arose July 24.

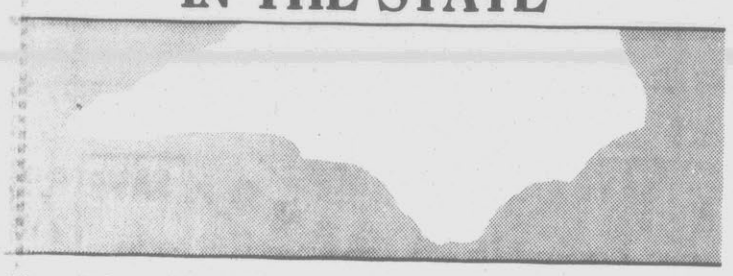
"She refused to even go and take the application," he said. "Her job was to teach living skills to blind applicants, and eventually it could involve some hands-on instruction. It's possible there could be some contact."

Vick declined to say whether the AIDS patient has since been admitted into programs for the blind. He declined to answer further questions.

Herman Gruber, the state director of the division, would say only that "there are things that need to be looked at."

Cindy Crouse-Martin, a spokesman for the N.C. Department of Human Resources, said guidelines for some of the agency's employees who directly work with AIDS patients have been available since 1986.

IN THE STATE



New Vice Chancellors

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Two new interim vice chancellors have been named at the N.C. School of the Arts to replace the vice chancellor who was perfunctorily dismissed soon after the interim chancellor was appointed.

Another vice chancellor is resigning.

Peter Neary and Robert Trotter have been appointed to replace Roy Fluhrer, who was the vice chancellor for arts and academic programs. And Randolph Fehr, the vice chancellor for finance and administration, announced Wednesday that he is resigning.

Neary, a former director of the executive seminar program for The Aspen Institute, will be the vice chancellor for academic and student affairs, and Trotter, a professor emeritus of the music school at the University of Oregon, will be the vice chancellor for the arts.

The interim chancellor, Philip Nelson, has known Neary for about five years and Trotter for about 15 years. Trotter and Neary have known each oither for at least two years.

Training Exercise

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — More than 25,000 service personnel, including Fort Bragg's entire 82nd Airborne Division, will participate in the Market Square III training exercise in four states Monday through Sept. 23.

The third annual exercise will put the entire 14,000-soldier division in the field and include a two-brigade, 3,000-soldier D-day'' airborne assault Sept. 16 at Fort Bragg's Holland Drop Zone and Camp Mackall's Rhine-Luzon Drop Zone, officials said

Market Square III will be the largest exercise Fort Bragg has hosted in many, many years, said Maj. Baxter Ennis, a division spokesman.

Agribusiness Study

RALEIGH (AP) — A study measuring the impact of agribusiness on the state's economy was unveiled and awards for distinguished service to agribusiness were presented Saturday.

Michael Walden, an economist at North Carolina State University, prepared the study, which covers productivity, from basic raw materials through final product destination, of the agriculture, food, fiber, forestry and life science sectors.

The awards and the study were presented Saturday during the 20th annual meeting of the N.C. Agribusiness Council Inc.

Judge Throws The Book At Former PTL Aides

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — A federal judge said Friday it was time that white collar criminals got stiff sentences and slapped two former PTL aides with long prison terms and heavy fines for tax evasion convictions.

"They went wild. ... They would take money and not pay taxes on it," said U.S. District Court Judge Robert Potter as he sentenced David and James Taggart, brothers who worked for PTL founder Jim Bakker.

Potter sentenced David Taggart to 18 years and five months. James Taggart was sentenced to 17 years, nine months. They were fined $500,000 each.

"I cannot understand the minds of these defendants," Potter said. "They seem to feel like they had an unlimited check out there. They kept going to it over the years.

"If we don't stop this kind of conduct here and now, others will go out and do the same. White collar crime yearly results in more lost money to the government than the poor devil who robs a bank.

"White collar criminals seem to get away with extremely light sentences. It's time we do something about that."

The Taggarts were convicted of evading taxes on $1.1 million in PTL funds that used to buy personal luxuries, such as a Trump Tower apartment in New York, Jaguar cars, Cartier jewelry and Gucci leathergoods.

Potter ordered the Taggarts to pay their back taxes as well as pay the cost of prosecution.

David Taggart, 32, Bakker's former personal assistant, had testified against Bakker when the PTL founder's trial opened last week. James Taggart, 35, was the PTL interior decorator whose style Bakker liked. The brothers, originally from Detroit, joined the ministry as piano players.

Bakker is charged with using nearly $4 million in ministry funds to finance an extravagant lifestyle, including the purchase of a Rolls Royce, an air conditioned dog house and a home in the California desert.

Bakker was not at the sentencing. But former PTL executive vice president Richard Dortch, who was indicted with Bakker and pleaded guilty before the trial started, was in the courtroom. Dortch was sentenced last month to eight years in prison and fined $200,000 on four fraud and conspiracy counts.

Prosecutor David Brown said he was prepared to call Dortch to testify that he hadn't given the Taggarts authority to spend the PTL money. At the Taggart trial, prosecutors said the Taggarts would take large cash advances on ministry credit cards and use the money themselves.

Neither Taggart said anything during the short hearing and neither displayed emotion.

"These defendants evaded over $500,000 in taxes and that's just the tip of the iceberg," said Brown, from the tax division of the Justice Department. "There's numerous other cases of false statements that they made that lead us to believe their tax deficiency was more than $500,000."

Brown told Potter that both Taggarts lied when they testified they were authorized by their former bosses at PTL — Bakker and Dortch — to take the money. Dortch wasn't called to testify and left the courthouse without comment.

Taggart attorney Ben Cotten said he hadn't decided whether an appeal would be filed.

"I thought they were unduly harsh," he said of the sentences.

Cotten said there was a possibility of a reduction in sentence in exchange for the Taggarts' testimony against Bakker. David Taggart has testified. James has not yet been called in the case.

Cotten blamed Bakker for the Taggarts' problems.

"They came and they learned everything they did from Jim Bakker," he said, coming to the ministry after the IRS started a probe of PTL for possible tax violations.

Asked what the sentence means for Bakker if he is convicted, Cotten said, "He has to look forward to an even more severe sentence, not only because of the number of counts he's charged with but because of Judge Potter's assessment of responsibility for what went on out there at PTL."

Brown said he didn't know where the Taggarts would serve their prison time.

"Judge Potter sent a message that white collar crimes aren't going to go unpunished," Brown said. "They lied to the jury under oath and showed no remorse."

Director Of Fundamentalists Anonymous Questions Bakker Brand Of Christianity

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Jim Bakker's emotional breakdown during his fraud and conspiracy trial raises doubts about the brand of Christianity he preached, says the co-founder of a group that counsels disenchanted fundamentalists.

"The $64 question is that if his Pentecostal experience cannot save Jim Bakker in his time of need, who can it save?" asked Richard Yow, the executive director of Fundamentalists Anonymous. "He is so desperate he has to resort to ploys like faking a nervous breakdown. He was always telling people to pray to solve their problems."

Yow, in a telephone interview from his New York office, said Fundamentalists Anonymous has worked with a number of "lifetime partners" who sent Bakker $1,000 for three nights of free lodging each year for life at Heritage USA.

Bakker's lifetime partnership programs have landed him in federal court, where he faces 24 counts of fraud and conspiracy. Bakker raised $158 million through the programs from 1984 to 1987, but prosecutors say most of the promised hotel rooms were never built and Bakker and other PTL executives pocketed more than $4 million for their own uses.

Three other former PTL executives indicted by a grand jury last December after a 16-month investigation already have been convicted or pleaded guilty.

Richard Dortch, who pleaded guilty to four counts in a plea bargain, has been sentenced to eight years in prison and $200,000 in fines.

David Taggart, Bakker's former personal aide, and PTL interior designer James Taggart were convicted in July for tax evasion. On Friday, U.S. District Court Judge Robert Potter sentenced David Taggart to 18 years and five months. James Taggart was sentenced to 17 years, nine months. Both were fined $500,000 each.

A string of prosecution witnesses have testified in Bakker's trial this week that they bought lifetime partnerships for the free lodging, and were not sending "donations" to the ministry. The defense has argued that the lifetime partnerships were church contributions and that the free lodging was only a gift Bakker gave in return.

"The prosecution brings in the poor little old ladies in their tennis shoes to testify against Jim," Barbara Driskill of Long Island, N.Y., an adamant Bakker supporter, said Friday. "I'm just waiting for the defense to bring in the people who loved Jim Bakker because he changed their lives."

"Anyone can fall for this guy under the right circumstances," Yow said. "It's incredible some people want to believe him despite the fact he's a crook.

"Fraud in the name of religion is still fraud," he said.

Yow said he was dubious from the start about Bakker's emotional breakdown. The PTL founder's lawyers reported on the fourth day of the trial that Bakker was hallucinating and hiding under a couch at his attorney's office.

Bakker was taken to the Federal Correctional Institute at Butner for a psychiatric evaluation. After six days of evaluations, Bakker's trial resumed Wednesday when psychiatrists said he was competent to continue.

"He's the biggest fraud," Yow said. "You cannot believe this guy and his track record.

"First of all, it wasn't a real mental breakdown. Psychiatrists who have diagnosed him say it was a panic attack," he said. "It's hard to know if he's just seeing things. ...I was extremely skeptical because of this guy's track record.

"It's so easy to just laugh at this guy," Yow said. "We have to realize that this guy has done damage to people's lives.

"Every time I talk to one of those poeple who have been defrauded by him, I really get mad," he said. "It's absolutely outrageous."

Whether Bakker is convicted or acquitted, the case already has had an impact, Yow said.

"We're very encouraged because I think the landscape for TV evangelists has been changed for good," he said. "There are still people out there, but much fewer. We'll always have TV evangelists with us because they fulfill some needs of some people.

"I think we have changed the groundrules, the public perception about them," he said. "From now on, they're going to have a lot more difficulty."

Day-Care Panel Leader Says Punishment Ban May Be Lifted

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The N.C. Child Care Day-Care Commission might remove the state's ban on corporal punishment in day-care centers and homes, the chairman of the commission says.

John W. Morris' comments came after the commission voted 10-1 on Friday to settle a lawsuit filed by 13 churches and to allow spanking in day-care centers run by churches. The settlement would take effect if it is approved by state Attorney General Lacy Thornburg and a Superior Court judge.

"Changing the rule itself is a formal process that will take six months or more," Morris said by telephone. "But based upon that vote, I believe the commission will do so at the first opportunity."

Thornburg declined through a spokesman Friday to comment until he reviews the matter Monday. Thornburg's deputies are recommending that he refuse to sign the commission's proposed settlement. The attorneys have expressed concerns that the ban would strike the rule for all day-care facilities, not just religious ones.

The provision also would bind future panels from enacting the ban unless the state law was revised.

The commission on Thursday had deferred consideration of another formal acknowledgment that the churches were right in a second suit they have filed, one that would have an even more lasting impact.

In that suit, the churches contend the ban was unconstitutional by denying the First Amendment right to freedom of religious expression and the 14th Amendment's equal protection clause. They argue that the ban denied some parents the right to determine the disciplinary upbringing of their children.

Administration Wants To Give Foes Of Sandinistas $3 Million

By Rita Beamish
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration is shunning covert intervention in Nicaragua and instead looking for money from Congress to openly support the Sandinista government's political opposition, sources said Saturday.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III is expected to speak with congressional leaders this week on prospects for a grant to the National Endowment for Democracy, which would help the opposition campaign in the February elections, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The administration is considering asking for around $3 million to help Violeta Chamorro, the prominent newspaper publisher chosen by several opposition parties as a consensus presidential candidate, plus an unspecified amount for such things as voter registration, election observers and repatriation, said the sources.

Carl Gershman, president of the National Endowment, said he did not know if Congress or the administration was using the $3 million figure but "my understanding is that it is roughly in the range of what some of the Nicaraguans thought they need."

Gershman said he has discussed new funding with members of Congress and the NED board of directors, which would approve how the money is spent, will take it up at the end of the week.

The Endowment is a private foundation created by Congress in 1982 to support democratic elections worldwide, with money appropriated by Congress. For 1989, it got $15.8 million for its democracy-promoting activities, such as holding conferences and observing elections.

The organization since 1985 has provided support for La Prensa, the opposition newspaper led by Mrs. Chamorro.

Earlier this year, Congress approved $1.5 million for the Endowment to promote democratic activity in Nicaragua, along with the same amount to pay for election observers under the auspices of the Organization of American States.

"We don't want to go the covert route," said one administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The official added the administration believes there would be no support in Congress for covert action of the sort the CIA used for years in Nicaragua.

Nicaragua's political opposition leaders signed an agreement with the Sandinistas this summer agreeing there would be no secret funding of political activity.

Under Nicaraguan law, half of any funds coming into the electoral system from outside the country must be given to the national Supreme Electoral Council which oversees and monitors elections.

That means giving $6 million would have to be sent to Nicaragua to ensure Mrs. Chamorro got $3 million and some of the money would benefit the Sandinista ticket under the national council's activities.

Gershman said the U.S. funds, if approved, would help even out an "incredibly unbalanced situation" in Nicaragua where President Daniel Ortega's Sandinistas control government resources.

"They're getting massive subsidies from the Soviet bloc," he said, adding any U.S. funds would be spent by his group "in the spirit of trying to introduce a degree of fairness in the situation."

He said the opposition forces also are expected to seek campaign funds in Europe and Latin America.

The Washington Post, which initially reported on the aid proposal Saturday, said the administration had been considering using the CIA in the election in Nicaragua, but anticipated heavy congressional opposition.

After years of pinning its policy on the Contra rebels that were fighting to oust the Sandinistas, the United States under President Bush has endorsed diplomatic efforts underway to achieve peace.

With little sentiment in Congress for renewing military aid, Bush agreed with congressional leaders on a $49 million non-lethal aid package to keep the Contras in supplies and food until the election, and to be used for repatriation where needed.

U.S. Congressmen Call Noriega 'Narco-Terrorist'

By Eloy O. Aguilar
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOWARD AIR BASE, Panama — A four-member U.S. congressional delegation on Saturday accused Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, who controls the Panamanian government, of being a "narco-terrorist."

Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., told a news conference that the United States will continue its efforts to oust Noriega and will "increase pressure against him and his associates in areas such as preventing their travel to the United States and preventing their conducting business with the United States."

He was referring to recent U.S. measures aimed at further isolating the Panamanian government economically by forbidding U.S. companies from doing business with Noriega's associates.

"Noriega's involvement in drug dealing and money laundering, for which he faces indictment before U.S. courts, makes him a premier narco-terrorist," Edwards said in a statement. "From the streets of American cities to the unfolding drama in Panama's neighbor to the south (Colombia), we can see the effects of men like Noreiga choosing power and profit over principle."

His statement said the United States will "stand by the people of Panama until their fight for self-determination is respected and democratic government is restored." It also said the United States will continue to "oppose any accommodation with any regime or official appointed by Noriega."

Noriega, commander of Panama's Defense Forces, was indicted by two federal grand juries in Florida in February 1988. They accused him of dealing in illegal narcotics including laundering drug money.

The congressmen came to this Air Force base, part of the U.S. Southern Command, from El Salvador. They left Saturday for Nicaragua.

They met with former presidential candidate Guillermo Endara and his vice presdiential running mate Guillermo Ford, whom they called "the elected leadership of this country."

International oberservers said opposition candidates Endara and Ford won the May 7 elections, but the government annulled the balloting, saying U.S. financial assistance and other support for the opposition distorted the election results.

Edwards declined to say if he thought the United States should recognize Endara as president, as it did ousted President Eric Delvalle.

"That is a decision for President Bush and Mr. Endara," Edwards said. "The world is full of presidents in exile. We do not want a president who does not hold power.... It is not up to the United States to put an elected president in power ... that is up to the Panamanian people."

Noriega has denied all U.S. allegations against him and claims the United States want to remove him and renege on the Panama Canal Treaties that turn the canal over Panama at the end of the century.

New Trident Sub Launched

Six Anti-Nuclear Protesters Arrested

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW LONDON, Conn. — The Navy on Saturday launched its newest Trident nuclear submarine, the $1.2 billion USS Pennsylvania. About 100 anti-nuclear activists protested and six were arrested.

The 560-foot long submarine is the second ballistic missile submarine equipped to carry the Trident 2 missile, which is intended to have a range of up to 4,000 miles and accuracy of within 200 yards.

"Fleet ballistic missile submarines, and particularly our Trident submarines and the men who take them to sea, are the heart and soul of our deterrent," Navy Secretary H. Lawrence Garrett III told a crowd of about 1,000 at the commissioning. The sub will be based in Kings Bay, Ga.

About a quarter of a mile from the ceremony, members of the environmental and anti-nuclear group Greenpeace formed a flotilla of 10 small boats in the Thames River. Several protesters floated in a wooden replica of the yellow submarine made famous by the Beatles. A four-piece band on a sailboat played "Anchors Aweigh" and "Yellow Submarine."

"We're committed to the cancellation of the Trident program. Even though we make light of the Pennsylvania, it's the taxpayers' money that's being wasted," said Shannon Fagan, a Greepeace organizer.

Six protesters in three inflatable rafts deliberately crossed barriers the Coast Guard had set up about 50 yards from the submarine. One of the rafts reached the submarine, and protesters were trying to affix an anti-nuclear flag to its side when Coast Guard boats arrived with New London police aboard.

Coast Guardsmen sprayed the protesters briefly with water cannons. No one was injured. The six demonstrators were arrested and charged with criminal trespass and reckless operation of a motor vessel. They were released after posting bond.

Fire At Resort Kills Two

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MACKINAC ISLAND, Mich. — A fire destroyed two Main Street buildings early Saturday on this popular resort island in northern Lake Huron, killing a man and a woman, authorities said.

The bodies were found on the second floor of the LaSalle Building, where the fire broke out about 3 a.m. Saturday, said Pam Brown, a dispatcher with the City of Mackinac Island Police Department. The building, and one next door that also was destroyed, both contain shops that cater to the thousands of tourists that visit the island each year.

The victims' names and hometowns were withheld pending notification of relatives, Brown said. Several firefighters suffered smoke inhalation, but none required hospitalization and no other injuries were reported, she said.

Firefighters, aided by rain that began falling later Saturday morning, contained the blaze by 10 a.m. and extinguished it an hour later, Brown said. The cause remained under investigation.

Ms. Crier, 34, has no experience in television journalism, but Steve Haworth, CNN spokesman, said she "has perfected the kinds of skills that a reporter has to perfect."

GUILD Rx OPTICIANS
YOUR EYEGLASS PRESCRIPTION
What does the Federal Trade Commission say about "Eyeglass Prescriptions"
Q. Can I charge my patients an extra fee for releasing the prescription?
A. No. The Rule makes it illegal for you to charge your patients any fee in excess of your normal examination fee as a charge for releasing the prescription. So if your normal examination fee is $30, you cannot add an extra $5 or $10 for releasing the prescription.
Q. When do I have to give out a prescription?
A. The prescription must be given to your patient immediately after you complete the eye examination. This means that you must give your patient his or her prescription before you begin your dispensing procedures (if you also dispense eyeglasses).
Q. What if my patient doesn't ask for the prescription? Do I still have to give it out to my patient?
A. Yes. The Rule requires that you prepare the prescription and physically offer it to the patient. Of course, you can't force the patient to take it, but you must offer him or her the written prescription. Simply asking your patients whether they want their prescription is not sufficient. We found that many consumers had never seen a prescription for corrective eyewear, and thus were unaware that they could take that piece of paper and use it to comparison shop.
Q. What is the penalty for violating the Rule?
A. The penalty for violating the Rule is up to $10,000 per violation.
Q. How can I report violations of the Rule?
A. You can contact us directly in Washington, D.C. Our mailing address in Washington is: Eyeglasses TRR, Federal Trade Commission, Room 281, Washington, DC 20580

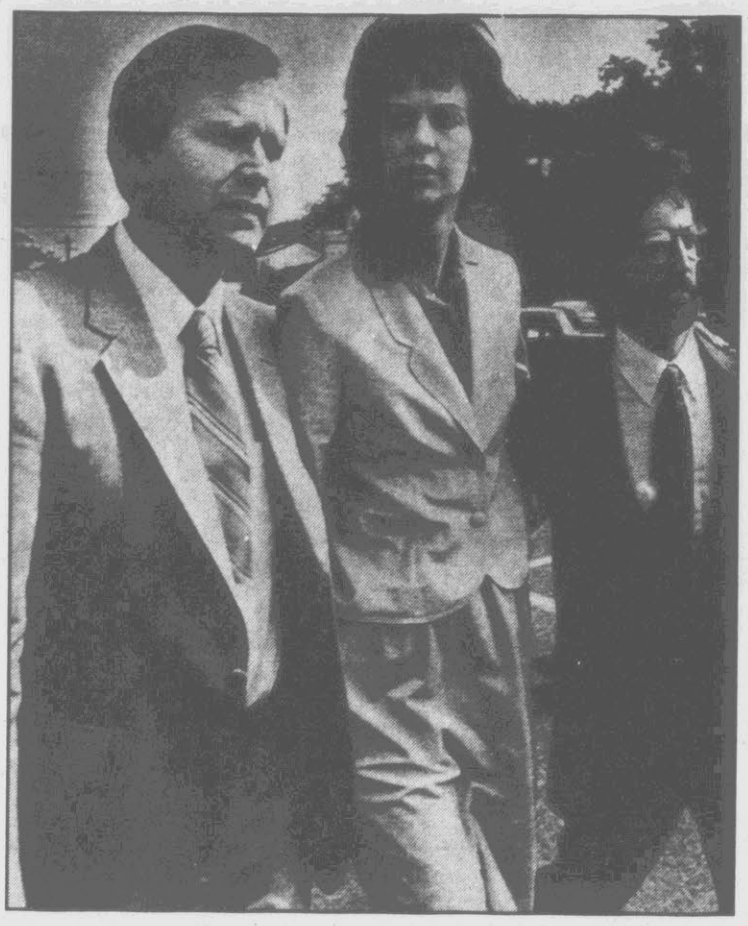
Couple To Appeal Conviction In Starvation Case

By David S. Martin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. — Attorneys for a Seventh-day Adventist couple convicted of starving their teen-age son to death say they will appeal the verdict on grounds the boy was expressing his freedom of religion.

Fourteen-year-old Eric Cottam died Jan. 3 after the family went six weeks without food despite $3,775 set aside by Eric's father, a former Seventh-day Adventist Church pastor, as a tithe for God.

A jury on Friday deliberated for less than two hours before finding Cottam and his wife, Leona Cottam, guilty of third-degree murder, two counts each of recklessly endangering another person and endangering the welfare of children in the cases of Eric and their 12-year-old daughter, Laura, who since has been placed in a foster home.



The Associated Press

"They were under the care, control and custody of their parents ... Even though they may not want to eat, the parents' duty supercedes," Luzerne County Judge Gifford S. Cappelini said after the verdict.

The family had contended that each member agreed to the fast because of their religious convictions. But Cappelini ruled the Cottams couldn't raise the children's religious freedom in front of the jury.

Al Flora Jr., an attorney for the Cottams, said he plans to appeal on the grounds the children's constitutional rights to religious freedom were not considered by the jury because of Cappelini's ruling.

"Some of the issues involved in this case are novel ones," Flora said in asking the judge to allow the Cottams to remain free on bail pending appeal. "They are issues that have not been taken up by our appellate courts."

Cottam, 39, and Mrs. Cottam, 38, remain free on $50,000 bail each. An anonymous benefactor posted bail for them Aug. 23 after they spent 230 days in custody following their Jan. 5 arraignment at Mercy Hospital.

After he was arrested, Cottam told police he couldn't spend the nearly $4,000 in tithe money for food because it belonged to God. Spending it would have been akin to stealing, he said.

Seventh-day Adventists generally give 10 percent of their earnings as a tithe, but a church official testified at the trial tithing was not a requirement for membership in the church.

Mrs. Cottam testified she had several dollars saved as a tithe, but also believed spending the money for food would have been the same as stealing.

Neither Cottam or his wife commented following the verdict, nor did they testify during the trial.

No sentencing date has been set. They face a maximum 28 years in prison.

Eric Cottam died in an upstairs bedroom of the family's modest two-story home in Nuangola, just south of this northeastern Pennsylvania city. His 5-foot, 9-inch frame weighed 69 pounds.

A day later, Larry Cottam went to a neighbor's house to call police to his home. He, his wife and daughter were hospitalized for malnutrition.

Flora said the family went without food because they authorities and believed God would rescue them from their plight. They also believed their children would be taken away from them if they sought help, he said.

Paralyzed Man Firm In Decision To End Own Life

By Bill Poovey
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALABASTER, Ala. — A quadriplegic who won court permission to turn off his own life support system said Saturday he knows that whatever happens after he does so will be better than life without a body.

"Try to imagine being frozen, not being able to move anything, not even being able to breathe," said Larry McAfee, an engineer and avid outdoorsman before a 1985 motorcycle wreck severed his spine, paralyzing him from the chin down.

The 33-year-old Atlanta resident received permission Wednesday from a Georgia judge to return to that state and turn off the ventilator that has breathed for him and kept him alive since the accident.

McAfee said he was not frightened, but wonders what will happen when he dies.

"I believe in God. I pray a lot. I believe that whatever happens after death will be better," he said.

McAfee met with reporters for about 30 minutes at a nursing home where he has been for the past month. He sat strapped into a wheelchair with breathing tubes in his throat and mouth, his words interrupted by loud gasps for air.

He would not say when he plans to turn off his life-support machine.

McAfee said that in "some small way" he hoped publicity over his decision would help others in similar conditions.

"I wasn't aware of the problems involved in trying to obtain a court order like this — the problems and the time it took for me," he said.

McAfee said he did not consider the decision to end his life to be suicide. "To me, suicide is an unnatural act. Turning off a ventilator ... and letting nature take its course, to me that is not unnatural," he said.

McAfee said his family supported his decision, but none of his relatives attended the news conference. Julie Orr, one of his sisters, said he had not discussed his plans with family members.

McAfee said he has spent the last four years "watching a clock, watching TV and doing a small amount of reading."

He said that although the high cost of his care was a factor in his decision, the main reason was the indignity of having to depend on others for everything.

"Year after year, day after day, it just slowly drains everything you have," he said.

Georgia Superior Court Judge Edward Johnson ruled last week that McAfee's right to refuse continued life-sustaining treatment outweighed the state's interest in preserving his life.

"The ventilator to which he is attached is not prolonging his life," Johnson said his order. "It is prolonging his death."

Johnson ordered the state to appeal the decision to the Georgia Supreme Court, but said McAfee would not have to await the outcome.

McAfee met privately Saturday with his attorney, Randall H. Davis of Atlanta, who said McAfee plans to go to a friend's apartment in Atlanta. He said McAfee wants to activate a timer that will shut off his ventilator.

The two men told reporters that offers of high-tech machines that would help McAfee perform routine household tasks were generous, but could not provide a life that he wanted to live.

Davis said McAfee has been in counseling for four years and has had ample opportunity to discuss innovative technologies that would allow him to perform some functions. "He's heard it all," Davis said.

Old West Cattle Drive Hits Town

By Tom Laceky
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BILLINGS, Mont. — Montana's Old West centennial spectacular of longhorn cattle, cowboys and covered wagons rumbled into town just after dawn Saturday, drawing an uproarious welcome along a three-mile parade route.

Thousands began lining the Main Street route through Billings Heights in spite of a pre-dawn temperature of 47 degrees to cheer on the cattle drive and wagon train that revived — for six short days — the romanticism, heroism and friendship of a bygone era. Some people had begun reserving viewing spots with parked cars the day before.

The cattle and drovers had been accompanied on the trail by some 240 covered wagons and 2,400 "social riders."

"This is the best Western movie I've ever seen," said Ingemar Gleissman of Stockholm, Sweden. Gleissman said he decided he had to join the cattle drive after reading about it during a business trip to San Francisco.

To take part in the drive, riders had to have an animal for the cattle herd. If they didn't own one, they could lease one.

"All our friends loved the fact that we're renting a cow," said Sally Branning of Cherry Hills, N.J. "They all asked how I'll tell it apart from the other cows."

After the parade, the cattle were driven to two Billings livestock markets, where most cattle arrive by truck, and the riders dismounted for an auction of memorabilia and a concert.

The six-day celebration was the most ambitious of scores of official events created to celebrate Montana's 100th year as a state.

The parade opened with one rider bellowing a long "Yeeeee-HAW!" as a procession headed by a Union calvary unit rolled into town.

The riders and covered wagons accompanying the drive arrived first, followed by the 2,700 head of cattle that had been driven 60 miles the old- fashioned way since leaving the small town of Roundup on Monday. Roundup was chosen as the starting point partly because of its name.

Although the riders and wagons were confined to one-half of the street, the cattle swept along all six lanes of the boulevard when they hit the parade route.

"Nobody explained to the cows that they're only supposed to use half the street," a police officer said.

The rangy longhorns that made up most of the herd, trail-wise and a little tired after six days, caused little trouble on city streets and delighted the exuberant crowd in the city of about 65,000 people.

Although they were nearly surrounded by the 105 drovers who had herded them over the route, the animals still passed within easy petting distance of the crowd and a few people reached out to touch them as they moved by.

Riders and horses strutted and pranced in response to the crowd's admiration, but the cattle were largely indifferent. They plodded sedately — and unknowingly — past McDonald's, Arby's and other symbols of their fate.

Billings police, augmented by sheriff's and Highway Patrol officers, turned out full-force to control and protect the crowds.

A full force of street cleaners, both people and machines, swung into action immediately after the cattle and horses were gone.

A hint of Saturday's turnout came Thursday when an estimated 20,000 people drove 21 miles north of town for a public concert at the wagon camp. Traffic was snarled for hours, and police had to turn back about 5,000 people.

Activists Disrupt Opera

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — About 50 AIDS activists disrupted opening night of the San Francisco Opera, chanting, "You have the power to stop AIDS now." But an opera spokesman said the protest was misdirected.

"The audience that these people irritated are the people who are paying for AIDS benefits in San Francisco. It was the wrong audience to do this in front of," Tom Illgen, the opera's marketing director, said after Friday night's demonstration.

The protesters were members of the group Stop AIDS Now or Else, also known as SANE. Members of the same group blocked off the Golden Gate Bridge during rush hour for about 45 minutes on Jan. 31 before being arrested. Police made no arrests Friday night.

Shortly after the conductor took his place and the orchestra prepared to strike the opening chords of "Falstaff," the protesters stormed through the aisles.

"We are demanding that those in attendance tonight wield their power to make ending the AIDS epidemic a national priority," a group statement said.

As the activists chanted, threw leaflets and displayed banners, the orchestra played the national anthem, and members of the audience stood and sang along, Illgen said.

"I don't think the message that was meant to get across got across," he said.

Opera staffers carried and shoved the protesters out of the auditorium, Illgen said.

He said the 30-minute protest upset the opera audience, which included singer Linda Ronstadt and actor Raoul Julia, "but it was not a big problem because opening night goes up about 20 minutes late anyway."

Koch, Dinkins Locked In Duel For NYC Mayor

By Gary Langer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Six months ago Mayor Edward I. Koch was an any-one-can-beat-him underdog. Now he's a comeback-of-the-year contender in his quest for an unprecedented fourth term.

Polls have the three-term incumbent running nearly even with his prime opponent, Manhattan Borough President David Dinkins, in Tuesday's Democratic primary. Strategists on both sides said their ability to turn out voters would decide the election.

"I think it's going to be very, very close," said David Garth, Koch's political and media adviser. Asked his plans for last-minute appeals, he joked: "We're going to ask the people to join us in prayer."

"It's neck and neck. I don't think you can ever count out an incumbent who has been in office as long as Ed Koch," said Bill Lynch, Dinkins' campaign manager. He claimed a slight lead, confirmed by most polls.

The latest survey, conducted Wednesday and Thursday by WABC-TV and the Daily News, found 49 percent support for Dinkins and 42 percent for Koch. But the margin of error for that poll was six points, and previous polls showed the race within the margin of error.

Koch, reacting to the latest poll results, declared: "A big turnout, I win." But he also expressed more anxiety about this race than any other in his career.

Meanwhile, he presides over a troubled city.

When Koch was elected to his third term in 1985, only a handful of investigators were aware of city corruption scandals about to break open. Crack was virtually unknown. The full devastation of the AIDS epidemic was not yet generally apparent. There were fewer homeless people. Crime rates had not hit the historic levels they're at now.

The Democratic primary is about all those issues, said Rep. Thomas Manton, Democratic leader of the borough of Queens and a new Koch supporter. "But more than anything, it's a question of the incumbent and his record."

Whatever the primary's outcome, it will make history. Dinkins would be the first black man nominated by a major party for mayor in New York; Koch would be the first mayor nominated for a fourth term.

The Democratic nomination usually means election, because there are five Democrats here for each Republican. But Rudolph W. Giuliani, a popular former federal prosecutor, is front runner for the GOP nomination and could mount a creditable challenge in the Nov. 7 general election.

Attention for the moment was riveted on the Democratic race, a contest of style as much as substance between the reserved, unflappable Dinkins and the outspoken, occasionally outrageous Koch.

But while he trailed badly in early polls, Koch appears to have regained many of the voters who had left him for the now-faltering candidacy of city Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin. Goldin and a fourth candidate, former transit chief Richard Ravitch, trail the leaders badly, as does Giuliani's only challenger in the Republican primary, cosmetics company heir Ronald Lauder.

"Koch's campaign has been focused on his record. His TV ads are about what Ed Koch has done," said Lee Miringoff, pollster at the Marist College Institute for Public Opinion. "The net effect of that seems to be to have driven down his negative rating somewhat."

Dinkins got help last weekend from Jesse Jackson, who got 45 percent of the New York City vote in last year's Democratic presidential primary. Jackson came back "to energize our support," said Lynch, but he has not played a major role because of his negative appraisal by many Jews, another important voting group.

Jews may make up 25 percent of the Democratic vote; blacks, up to a third. Koch himself is Jewish.

Kemp Doesn't Care For Fence Proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Housing Secretary Jack Kemp said he does not want to see security fences put up around public housing projects as called for in President Bush's anti-drug strategy, saying it's more important to make the projects better places to live.

Kemp called a proposal in Bush's National Drug Control Strategy put security fences around the housing projects "at the margin, a possibility, but it's not my idea."

"I don't want to put up some type of fence around public housing," the secretary of Housing and Urban Development said in the interview broadcast on CNN's "Newsmaker Saturday" program.

The strategy includes a plan to "make the nation's public housing projects safer and freer from drug activity."

The outline suggests steps including new regulations Kemp has already supported to speed the eviction of public housing residents who are found to be drug dealers. It continues, "Security improvements such as better lighting, guards, identification cards, security fences will be added to protect law abiding citizens from the threat posed by drug dealers."

Asked on the broadcast about the fences, Kemp said, "Not in every instance. And very frankly, that is at the margin, a possibility, but it's not my idea.

"And I think Bill Bennett as well as the president would, if they had been where I've been — and I've been in many public housing communities in the last six months — what we mean by 'security' is not ... dogs and machine guns and fences," he said.

"What we mean by security is well-lit residences, public housing authority figures on the premises, or maybe police on the corner. It means getting the drug dealer out and it means making sure that these units are not being used for crack dealers," said Kemp.

He added, "I think the president's program is justified in terms of putting out some of the brush fires that already exist in public housing."

Three Amendments On W.Va. Ballots

By A.V. Gallagher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Voters cast ballots in a special election Saturday on three proposed state constitutional amendments, including one that would eliminate three elected statewide jobs.

"Our indications so far is that turnout is light," said Bill Harrington, chief of staff for the secretary of state's office. "But we're not dealing with an ordinary election. Most elections are on Tuesday and this is a Saturday election so the voting pattern is going to be different."

One amendment would eliminate three statewide elected offices — secretary of state, treasurer and agriculture commissioner — and place their duties under the governor's control. The second would give the governor greater authority over the state primary and secondary education system. The third would give cities and counties the ability to merge or choose new forms of government.

The secretary of state's office said 828,000 West Virginia residents were eligible to vote.

"Historically, 10 (percent) to 12 percent of voters turn out for special elections," said Kanawha County Clerk Alma King. "But I think this time it will be above 30 percent. There seems to be a lot of interest on both sides. I think a lot of people will turn out who don't normally vote."

Two of the officeholders whose jobs were at issue — Secretary of State Ken Hechler and Agriculture Commissioner Cleve Benedict — opposed the measure. The third, Treasurer Thomas Loehr, supported Gov. Gaston Caperton's plan.

But in a debate Thursday with Hechler, Loehr predicted defeat for the amendments.

"I think they're all in trouble," said Loehr, who was appointed by Caperton in July. "People are fed up with government and that's a shame. This was a good opportunity to restructure our state government in a very positive way."

Several state legislators have been indicted or resigned in recent months, and the former treasurer and attorney general resigned recently.

Respondents to a telephone survey conducted in August indicated residents would approve the amendment to allow the city-county government merger, while saying they probably won't change the way education is administered in the state nor would they abolish the elected offices.

Loehr said other voters may reject the measures because of a lack of understanding or anger with Caperton, who has been criticized for raising taxes by a record $392 million this year.

Sports To Compete For News Airtime On NPR

By Jay Arnold
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — National Public Radio is taking a new hard line on sports.

If sports news is important, it gets on the air; if it isn't, it doesn't.

Pete Rose's gambling woes were important at NPR, as were the death of Major League Baseball Commissioner Bart Giamatti and firing of Dallas Cowboys football caoch Tom Landry.

Until recently, NPR's popular "Morning Edition" show may have tossed such stories into short, hourly compilations of scores and games results that often are called the "ghetto" approach to radio sports coverage.

Not now.

"Sports today is no longer scores," says Robert Ferrante, executive producer of "Morning Edition," which has dropped its hourly sports updates and now lets sports compete for airtime with other types of news.

NPR, a nonprofit, private corporation that provides national programming and support for 377 stations nationwide, is touting its "different kind of news" in its first multimedia campaign for "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered."

Local TV stations are playing sprightly animated ads for the shows, and national and regional magazines are scheduled to carry print ads as part of a drive to expand the audience of 6 million who are attracted to NPR news shows, NPR spokeswoman Cate Cowan said.

The 10-year-old "Morning Edition" is an eclectic mix of in-depth news, arts, business, political and science features and interviews hosted by Bob Edwards. It still has segments by veteran sportscasters Red Barber and Bill Littlefield, but it no longer locks sports into hourly 3¾-minute slots.

"It was too restrictive. It didn't give due attention to sports as part of the culture of this country," Ferrante said in an interview last week.

The allegations that Rose, baseball's alltime hit leader and manager of the Cincinnati Reds, bet on the game "was a morality play for America," Ferrante said.

Giamatti's unexpected death a week after he barred Rose from baseball "is probably as important to a larger section of America as any national leader," Ferrante added.

"The part that sports plays in our culture is a news story and should be judged the same way as other news stories," Ferrante added. "Sports is news, sports is fitness, sports is health. Sports today rarely reflect the outcome of the game."

Ferrante said scores now are delivered once on "Morning Edition" "as a quick measurement" of sports activity. But he denied that NPR was rolling back it's sports coverage.

The features by Barber and Littlefield still air in the old sports time slot and still are among the most popular features on "Morning Edition," Ferrante said. The other sports carried throughout the broadcast means more airtime for sports, he said.

"Since June 19 there have been 120 (sports) stories on 'Morning Edition,'" he said.

The change appears to have been well received at public stations.

"I think it's a good idea to treat sports news as news when it is news, rather than ghetto-ize it," said Iris Adler, news director of public station WBUR-FM in Boston. "Our listeners tune in for news and information. I don't think they listen to us for one type of news or feature story. All they want is quality."

"I'm happy with the change," said Carol Pierson, program director for all news station KQED-FM in San Francisco. "I think it's more logical to treat topics according to their news importance rather than dedicating a specific amount of time to a particular topic."

Pierson said a lot of public stations previously cut out the hourly NPR sports segment to broadcast local news or sports, "and we were one of them. So I'd say sports is now getting on our air more than it was before."

She noted NPR's new approach was more in line with sports coverage on the major TV networks.

"You hear sports news if it is important, and none if it isn't," she said.

The change was not without its critics. Edwards, the affable host of "Morning Edition," thinks it was a bad idea, although he admitted his probably was a minority view at NPR.

He said listeners don't know when to tune in for the sports.

Edwards said a recent Gallup Poll conducted for NPR mostly on "Morning Edition," "showed our listeners don't care much for sports," so sports news should be placed where those who are interested can find it.

"Sports fans expect to hear sports where they've always heard sports. And people who don't like sports feel the rest of the news is being trivialized by having sports in that slot," he said.

Edwards said listeners "sort of plan their activities" around certain segments of the show: "'Oh, that's Afghanistan. I can shower now.'"

Self-Sacrificing Principal Still On Job, But Problems Lurking

By Lee Mitgang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Mass. — Last June, the principal of Richmond Consolidated School could see only one way to solve his school's desperate money woes — quit.

Norman Najimy made national headlines with his self-sacrificing solution to save teachers' jobs and precious programs for 185 children attending kindergarten through eighth-grade. And the school committee accepted his resignation.

Shocked townspeople rallied around Najimy, and by August this hamlet had saved his job.

But as a new year began last week at Richmond Consolidated, a school cited repeatedly for excellence by the state and surrounded by yellow wildflowers and Berkshire hills, everyone here knew that neither Najimy nor the school were out of the financial woods.

In all probability, the summer's crisis was just a taste of worse to come.

Tighter state purse strings, here in Massachusetts and in other states, mean school districts must increasingly battle budget woes with less hope of outside bailouts.

And Massachusetts, in common with a dozen other states, must live with tax revolt measures passed a decade ago that are now coming home to roost, making local school tax increases hard or even impossible.

As the new school year began, Richmond Consolidated's budget crisis has already meant a kindergarten class almost double the size of last year, with a teacher paid just half what she earned last year; less early remedial help for kids with reading problems; scuttled plans for expanded foreign language instruction, less music and art.

Because of the district's deficit — still about $30,000 as of last week — kindergarten teacher Carole Collins says she plans to meet with parents "to ask them for paper, soap, tissues, Band-Aids, crayons. And I'll have to tell them that without help, there'll be no field trips, and there'll be fewer activities and crafts."

Teacher Bill Kerwood set any doubters straight on opening day:

"Copy this class schedule off the board," he told his 40 or so seventh- and eighth-graders. "I would have run them off on the copying machine, but I can't this year because of ..."

"The budget cuts," said the students, completing Kerwood's sentence.

"Break periods are longer this year," he continued, "because of ..."

"Budget cuts!"

"There'll be more study periods because of ..."

"Budget cuts!"

The school's predicament and Najimy's magnanimity stunned this upscale town of 1,600 people in one of the artsy corners of the nation.

In July, shortly after the Richmond school committee reluctantly accepted Najimy's resignation, angry parents flocked to the general store where owner Elizabeth "Sunny" Lloyd-Eriksen circulated petitions demanding his reinstatement.

The town's selectmen met parents on a hot, buggy August evening in the parking lot outside Town Hall. The selectmen suddenly announced they had found money in the town budget to save the job of Najimy — a principal so respected and beloved that he got a hug from every single boy and girl as they entered school opening day.

A happy ending? Hardly.

"How is morale here?" said Mary Hanson, an instructional aide to handicapped youngsters at the school. "On a scale of 1 to 10, I'd say it was a 1. I think things here are going to get a lot worse before they get better."

With the national economy showing signs of cooling, Massachusetts is tackling a deficit estimated at $170 million. The state cut aid to Richmond by $75,000, not inconsiderable for a district whose budget is just $1.2 million.

When school opened last Wednesday, Najimy and his 19-member teaching staff sported buttons on their shirts summing up their mood:

"Wouldn't it be great," the buttons read, "if schools had all the money they needed, and the Air Force had to hold a bake sale to buy a new bomber?"

Sitting in his spartan, cinderblock office, Najimy said everyone knew money trouble was brewing last spring when the district's Blue Cross premiums shot up by 33 percent, the furnace needed repairs and the water system had to be replaced.

Richmond high schoolers must attend classes in Pittsfield about 10 miles away because Richmond has no high school. Pittsfield, with financial woes of its own, raised the tuitions it charges the Richmond district by 10 percent.

Making matters worse was Proposition 2½, a measure passed by irate voters in 1981 back when some derisively called the state "Taxachusetts." Proposition 2½, akin to other tax revolt measures passed in other states, limited to 2½ percent the amount that property taxes could go up in a single year unless town voters agreed to higher rates.

Richmond voters, many of them affluent professionals keen on education, approved two such tax "overrides" in the last two years. School committee chairwoman Janice Hartford says another may be proposed this year if no other money is found.

The bottom line at the height of the crisis this summer for Richmond Consolidated was a $140,000 deficit and few options to close it besides cutting staff and educational programs.

The school's instrumental music program was eliminated. For now, a 71-year-old retired musician named Walt Lehmann has volunteered to teach kids without pay.

The basic skills teacher was eliminated — meaning no early intervention for youngsters with reading or other academic problems.

Najimy had hoped to extend foreign language to the early grades. But those plans are "on permanent hold."

Najimy eliminated his personal expense budget and passed up a $3,000 raise this year, leaving his salary unchanged at $40,000.

Those and other cuts reduced the deficit to $30,000. The gap has to be closed this month, or new cuts will have to be made.

So Richmond Consolidated is barely scraping by this fall — with the help of parents, teachers and volunteers.

Townspeople have offered money for computer equipment. One parent rototilled ground around the school for landscaping.

Balloon Blamed In Power Outages

By Alan Flippen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — A child's balloon knocked out power to two of Rhode Island's largest hospitals for up to 40 minutes Saturday, forcing surgeons to operate by flashlight and nurses to help intensive-care patients breathe by hand.

Emergency generators that normally would kick in within one minute of a power failure at Rhode Island Hospital failed to work for unknown reasons, said hospital spokesman Rick Piester.

The neighboring Women & Infants Hospital, which is on Rhode Island Hospital's electrical system, also was without power for several minutes until its own generator started, said spokesman Robert Ball.

"It was a period of no little panic," Ball said. "We've never lost power before."

A balloon with an aluminum foil streamer got loose from a waterfront festival being held on Narragansett Electric Co. property and drifted upward into a transformer that serves the two hospitals, causing a short circuit but no permanent damage, said Charles F. Moran, a utility spokesman.

Although the festival's organizers had been coached about safety, "we never anticipated anybody would bring in balloons with aluminum trailers on them," Moran said. All such balloons — which were being given away by a restaurant running a food booth — were hunted down and destroyed after the power failure, he said.

Two patients were in operating rooms at Rhode Island Hospital when the power went off. Surgery on one had not yet begun, and the other patient, who was on local anesthesia, remained awake while his operation was finished by flashlight, Piester said.

At Women & Infants, a surgeon completed a Caesarean section by flashlight and mother and child were doing fine, Ball said.

About 40 intensive-care patients on respirators were respirated by hand, with nurses using bags to force air into their lungs, Piester said. Some emergency room patients were taken to a lobby so their condition could be monitored in sunlight, he said.

Nurses also helped premature infants breathe by hand at Women & Infants, said Ball. Women & Infants, which specializes in obstetrics and gynecological procedures, had 110 adults and about 170 infants Saturday. The number of premature infants on respirators was not immediately available.

One emergency room patient at Rhode Island Hospital was transferred elsewhere, ambulances were warned away by radio, and the hospital was preparing to transfer some of its other 575 inpatients when the power came back on, Piester said.

Narragansett Electric said power was restored 25 minutes after it went off, but Piester said it was 40 minutes before Rhode Island Hospital's power was fully restored.

Deputy Fire Chief Frederick Miller said all five of the city's ambulances stood by to transfer patients, and nearby cities were warned to expect calls for help.

Miller said the fire department had never practiced coping with a hospital blackout, and Ball said there had never been any drills at the hospital to practice for total power outages.

"What happened today is the thing that would never happen," Ball said.

Exxon Ready To Withdraw Spill Workers

By Paul Jenkins
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

POINT HELEN, Alaska — Thousands of oil-spattered workers hampered by worsening weather have only a few more days to clean crude oil off Alaska's petroleum-fouled shoreline before Exxon Corp. stops work for the season.

Exxon says it will pull out the last of its workers by this coming Friday after treating more than 1,000 miles of shoreline tainted by the nation's worst oil spill. The company claimed Thursday that only four miles remained to be treated, but state and federal agencies disagree with Exxon about how much has been cleaned and how well.

"Our position is that the weather is going to make us go regardless of what the numbers are, regardless of how much is left," said Exxon spokesman Henry Beathard.

Exxon said it chose Sept. 15 for the withdrawal of the last of its thousands of workers and hundreds of vessels to avoid increasingly poor weather and reduced hours of daylight. In this land where winter comes early, the first dusting of snow can already be seen in some higher elevations.

"We have buses and planes set up for them to leave that day," Beathard said. "They don't have the option to take that free trip three days later." Already, the first fall storm has raked Prince William Sound, where the tanker Exxon Valdez spilled nearly 11 million gallons of crude oil on March 24. Gusts to 70 mph and 6-to 10-foot seas shut down the Point Helen cleanup operation once. On Smith Island, a test of a solvent Exxon wants to use to clean oily shores was delayed for at least four days by the storm.

Point Helen, one of the last heavily hit shorelines on the cleanup list, was left untouched until after mid-August to avoid disturbing a fish hatchery at Sawmill Bay, officials said.

Weather permitting, the shore will be "environmentally stable," if not clean, by Exxon's deadline, the company said.

"I'm quite confident we are going to make it — if we can just get a few good days of weather," said beachmaster Warren Winstead of Baton Rouge, La. "I think if we can get another few days in, we'll beat it."

But the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation and Exxon dispute just about everything, including how many miles have been treated, how well the job has been done and whether Exxon plans to duck out after giving the shore a quick once-over.

The state has sued Exxon and a half-dozen other oil companies that get oil from Alaska's North Slope by way of the Alyeska pipeline, claiming they were negligent in preventing and cleaning up the spill. The Exxon Valdez was outbound from the pipeline terminal at Valdez when it ripped its bottom open on a reef.

Crews have removed gross contamination from many shorelines, but they remain oily. Exxon claims about 244,000 gallons of oil and water emulsion have been recovered.

Exxon, the DEC and the Coast Guard all have different figures for virtually everything, in part because they use different criteria for measuring contamination and what constitutes an effective cleanup. The state agency's figures show Exxon claiming to have treated more shoreline than was fouled.

"We're the only people honest about the numbers," said Joe Bridgeman, a DEC spokesman. "The numbers are being manipulated to show great shoreline progress." Exxon officials acknowledged discrepancies. "I honestly don't have an adequate explantion," said spokesman Karsten Rodvik.

As the cleanup operation grinds down from its peak of 12,000 workers and 1,300 vessels, Valdez officials are bracing for a shrunken economy.

Temporary housing set up by Exxon will close. The Valdez population likely will plunge from 13,000 to about 4,500.

Public agencies are getting ready to pare their staffs to winter levels, although some work will continue. Scientists are studying the effects of fertilizer spread on test beaches to stimulate the growth of oil-eating bacteria. Other agencies plan to collect samples and study the environment during the winter.

Otter and bird rescue operations are shutting down. More than 32,000 birds and 980 otters died from the spill's effects.

Exxon has started shipping millions of pounds of equipment to winter storage in Anchorage, home of its Alaska headquarters.

State environmental officials say Exxon's withdrawal is premature and that it should stay on the job as long as the weather permits. "We don't buy the deadline. We not only want them to come back next year. We want them to work past Sept. 15," Bridgeman said.

Over the winter Exxon plans to monitor how the shoreline looks. It has made no commitment to come back next summer but says it will abide by any reasonable decision of the Coast Guard on whether more cleanup is necessary.

The price tag for this summer's cleanup is expected to top $1.2 billion and the effort has become an industry of its own.

Exxon's spending spree was felt statewide and helped lower unemployment, said state labor economist Neal Fried. In Valdez and Cordova, unemployment was about half the previous year's level.

Exxon has paid more than $90 million in damage claims so far, and is paying up to $3 million a day, about two-thirds directly to fishermen who were kept in port by oil-covered water.

Exxon bought 302,000 pairs of rubber gloves, 167,000 sets of rain gear, 73,000 pairs of rubber boots, 125,000 coveralls and 53,000 life vests.

The company said it purchased more than 12 million pounds of groceries, amounting to 1,000 cows, 360,000 chickens, 1,000 turkeys and 700 pigs. Washing machines agitated more than 3 million pounds of laundry, and equipment consumed more than 400,000 gallons of diesel fuel each week.

School Target Of Lawsuit

DALLAS (AP) — A former Baylor University student contends in a lawsuit that she was forced to quit school in 1987 because she was pregnant and single.

The Dallas Civil Liberties Union filed the lawsuit Thursday on behalf of Dawn L. Bonner, alleging that officials of the university in Waco violated her constitutional rights by failing to tell her about an "unwritten policy" that requires unmarried, pregnant students to leave the school.

The policy also is discriminatory, the suit alleges, because no male student has been forced to leave because a woman to whom he was not married became pregnant.

The school is run by the Southern Baptist Convention.

A.A. Hyden, emeritus vice president for student affairs, one of the officials named in the suit, and Basil Thomson, legal counsel for the university, said they had just received copies of the suit and would have no immediate comment.

Ms. Bonner, a pre-med student, was four months pregnant when she asked her dorm mother if the school would make her move into private housing because of her condition, the lawsuit said. She allegedly was told, "We have a reputation to keep and we can't have you walking around pregnant."

Economist Paints Dim World Hunger Picture

By Don Kendall
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The specter of world hunger is moving nearer as the population grows and the land loses its capacity to grow enough food to keep pace, says Lester R. Brown, head of Worldwatch Institute.

"With more hungry people in the world today than when this decade began, there's little to celebrate on the food front as we enter the '90s," he said.

Brown, in a World Watch magazine report released Saturday, said he sees no sure-fire way to boost global food production enough in the 1990s to keep pace with expected population growth.

"The only reasonable goal will be to try and cut (population growth) in half by the end of the century, essentially what Japan did in the '50s and what China did in the '70s," he said.

But reaching that goal will be "perhaps more demanding than anything the international community has ever undertaken," Brown added.

"For the United States, the obvious first step is to restore its funding of the United Nations Population Fund and International Planned Parenthood Federation, which was [illegible] overall [illegible] in 1985 [illegible] pressures from the pro-[illegible]right," he said.

The United States halted its support for the U.N. agency in 1986.

"Given the link between population growth and environmental degradation, President George Bush cannot credibly call himself an environmentalist if funding is not resumed," Brown said. "In the process, the United States could reinvigorate the international family planning effort."

Last May, the United Nations Population Fund said that unless women win more access to birth control, education and employment, the world's population could almost triple to 14 billion by the year 2100.

Dr. Nafis Sadik, executive director of the U.N. agency, said the world's population, now at 5.2 billion, may be held to 10 billion in the next century if family planners succeed in reducing birth rates.

In pulling its funding for the U.N. agency, the Reagan administration contended it promoted coercive abortion, but Mrs. Sadik said the reasons were political. She said movements such as religious fundamentalism "seem to be designed to somehow keep women in bondage."

She expressed hope the Bush administration would resume the U.S. contribution.

However, the Bush administration has continued Reagan's policy of not funding the agencies based on the idea that no federal funds should be spent for population control that involves abortion.

Brown, whose private, non-profit Worldwatch Institute for years has espoused population control as part of its research and policy recommendations, said some progress has been made in scaling back birth rates, from about 2 percent annually in 1970 to 1.7 percent this year.

However, this decline has been so slow the annual incremental increase is actually going up, he said. The world is now projected to add 921 million people during the 1990s, the largest increment ever for a decade.

"In many developing countries, soaring population now has a dual effect on food balance," Brown said. "It increase demand as it degrades the agricultural resource base.

"For instance, crowded cities and villages create a need for firewood that exceeds the sustainable yield of local forests. Deforestation is the outcome, which in turn increases rainfall runoff and soil erosion."

Brown said soil erosion tops the list of enviromental trends that threaten humankind. Other hazards include air pollution's damage to crops and its long-term effect on climate.

Last year's drought in the United States and its lingering effects in some areas reduced world grain output. Even with larger crops this year, global stockpiles are still short, Brown said.

With reduced output, world grain prices rose by roughly one-half from July 1987 to July 1988 and have remained relatively high since, he said.

"For many heavily indebted Third World countries, rising grain prices are combining with falling personal incomes to pose a policy dilemma," Brown said. "Price hikes are needed to stimulate output and encourage additional investment by farmers, but the world's poor can't cope easily.

"Perhaps a billion or more of the world's people already spend 70 percent of their income on food. For many in this group, a dramatic rise in the cost of grain is life threatening."

In the United States, a $1 loaf of bread contains only about five cents worth of wheat. If the price of wheat were to double, the price of the loaf would increase to only $1.05, Brown said. But in poor countries, where wheat is bought at local markets and ground into flour at home, a doubling of wheat prices means a doubling of bread prices.

"A food price rise that is merely annoying to the world's affluent can drive consumption below the survival level among the poor," he said.

Congress To Tackle Flag Burning Issue

By Jim Drinkard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court's decision on flag burning is steadily fading from the forefront of public concern, but lawmakers returning from a summer recess say it remains a political powder keg as they deal with the matter this week.

"The issue that has been made such a major issue in Washington is on the wane across the country," said Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif. "It is beginning to be seen in perspective now. People believe it was overblown."

"It's an abstraction to most people," said Rep. Phil Crane, R-Ill. "Who personally has ever witnessed a flag burning? ... It does not have, except through some veterans' organizations, a specific hard-core constituency."

Even so, leadership aides in both parties predict lawmakers will move quickly this fall to pass legislation to outlaw burning and other acts of flag desecration, if only to take the steam out of President Bush's drive for constitutional amendment to do the same thing.

Top Democratic leaders in both houses back the legislative approach, in part out of fear that outright opposition would leave them vulnerable to criticism from Republicans in the 1990 congressional elections.

The issue arose when the Supreme Court ruled June 21 that burning the flag could be free speech protected by the First Amendment. That triggered a wave of outrage, including Bush's call for a constitutional amendment. Many veterans groups, including the American Legion, want the change written into the Bill of Rights to make it safe from any future court ruling.

The House will be the first to address the issue when it takes up a bill on Tuesday that would impose fines and up to a year in prison for physically desecrating a flag, an approach supporters say should be at least tried before seeking to amend the Constitution.

Lawmakers just back to work after a month at home agreed passions on the issue have cooled over the summer.

"I did not have one single person bring it up," said Rep. Beryl Anthony, D-Ark.

"I think the momentum to build up to a constitutional amendment has diminished substantially," said Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., who held 63 meetings with constituents during August. "A statute will suffice. Even veterans' groups ... are telling me right now they think a statute's sufficient."

Rep. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, who supports the amendment, agreed. "If a statute can address the problem, that will take care of the issue," she said.

But Republicans are betting lawmakers will vote for any measure that would protect the flag, fearing any "no" vote could be turned by an opponent into a 30-second political attack ad.

"I'm going to support whatever comes up," said Rep. Claude Harris, D-Ala. "I'm not going to be in a situation of voting against anything that would punish someone for violating the flag, whether it be a statute or a constitutional amendment."

"My sense is that people are concerned that Republicans will use the issue in the same unprincipled but politically effective way in which they used the Pledge" of Allegiance against Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis last year, said Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, already has promised a vote on legislation as well as the amendment in October. And late last week, House Democratic leaders were discussing a similar agreement with Republicans.

Democratic sources said leaders in the majority were prepared to allow a House vote on a constitutional amendment sometime after the Senate acts on it if Republicans would support the statutory measure that comes to the floor Tuesday.

The measure was tentatively scheduled to be brought up under an expedited process normally reserved for non-controversial bills. That means it would require a two-thirds majority to pass.

Opponents of the constitutional amendment, including House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., apparently are gambling passage of statutory flag protection will defuse the issue — and indeed, many lawmakers said that's exactly what they heard back home.

"They (constituents) want to stop the burning of the American flag, and they don't care how we do it up there in Congress," said Rep. Sonny Montgomery, D-Miss., a primary sponsor of the constitutional amendment.

School Bans Rebel Flag

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Forest Hill High School can keep the nickname "Rebels" and the old colonel cartoon mascot, but the Rebel flag is out.

"We are phasing out the Rebel flag ... because some groups feel it is offensive," Principal Ennis Proctor said Thursday.

"It's better to phase out the flag than lose the mascot altogether," Proctor said. "Forest Hill has got a lot of pride and a lot of good kids. We've got a lot of other good things going on to get too upset over this."

School Board President Ollye Shirley said before classes started this year that she was offended by the Confederate symbols.

Students at Forest Hill said they were surprised when Proctor announced the ban a week ago. Forest Hill's 1,000-member student body is 68 percent white.

"When we wave that Rebel flag, it's got nothing to do with prejudice," said Amy Durden, 17, a white senior. "It's just our school flag. I know black students at our school that wave the flag."

Willie B. and Kinyanni, 6, make eyes at Zoo Atlanta

Zoo Atlanta's Willie B. Answers Call Of Wild

By Sonya Ross
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Willie B., the 31-year-old gorilla whose recent introduction to the opposite sex prompted zoo billboards to ask "Willie or won't he," did.

Zoo Atlanta's famous lowland gorilla — who spent almost three decades alone in a cage — mated Friday with a 6-year-old female in front of his own stunned trainer and visiting children who hadn't expected to see such monkey business.

Zoo officials hadn't expected it either. They thought it would be at least another year before the sheltered gorilla answered the call of the wild.

"We're just excited he has shown us he knows what to do," said Dr. Terry Maple, the zoo's director. "He's not as bad off as we thought."

Willie and his newly matured partner, Kinyanni, had been "wrestling and chasing each other" since they were placed together about two months ago, said Charles Horton, Willie's longtime trainer.

A few children visiting the gorilla exhibit questioned what Willie B. was doing, but parents stepped in "and explained that it was all very natural," said zoo spokeswoman Lisa Littlefield.

Willie B. has progressed quickly since May 1988, when he stepped outdoors for the first time since he was captured in the wild at about age 3.

Kinyanni and another female from the Yerkes Primate Research Center, 26-year-old Katoomba, were placed with Willie in June. At the time, he seemed uninterested in courtship.

Researchers say they will wait about a month to see whether Willie and Kinyanni produce offspring. Willie's sperm count was deemed a little low, but Horton is hopeful.

"We know the sperm count may not be as high as everybody wants it, but it is there," he said. "And it only takes one."

Pro-Union Protest Erupts In Violence

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INTERNATIONAL FALLS, Minn. Hundreds of people "acting as terrorists" burned temporary housing and overturned cars Saturday in a protest of the hiring of non-union construction labor at a Boise Cascade paper mill.

Gov. Rudy Perpich put the National Guard on alert for possible duty in the usually peaceful town on the Canadian border. But the crowd, estimated nwhich around 400 in the morning, dwindled by afternoon and city officials said the violence had ended.

Several people were reported injured, but the extent of their injuries was not immediately known. About 30 people were arrested by afternoon on charges of criminal damage to property and contempt of court, said police dispatcher Florence Dilworth.

The violence stemmed from Boise's hiring of a non-union general contractor for an $535 million expansion project at the paper mill, a move that sparked a wildcat strike by union members in July. Since then the company has been hit by sporadic violence including an arson fire that caused an estimated $250,000 damage.

"You don't have a lot of control in this situation," said Koochiching County Sheriff Bill Elliott. "The people involved in it showed no respect for the law or for International Falls."

About 45 officers from several jurisdictions were on hand, he said, but "we could have had all the police manpower in northern Minnesota and still it wouldn't have been enough."

Union officials say they have tried to dissuade protesters from violence or mass demonstrations in International Falls. There was no immediate comment Saturday from Brad Skarich, president of the Iron Range Building Trades Council, and Bill Peterson, head of the Minnesota Building Trades Council; Skarich did not return a message left on his home answering machine and there was no answer at Peterson's office.

Protesters pushed through a gate at a temporary housing complex being set up for construction workers and tore down part of the fence surrounding the camp.

Boise Cascade spokesman Bob Anderson said eight to 10 mobile homes in the camp were destroyed, including some that were "totally burned to the ground." He estimated that the facility, intended to eventually house about 1,000 people and include a cafeteria, was 60 percent destroyed.

The 100 workers already living there were removed Friday night in anticipation of trouble, Anderson said. Boise also canceled work Saturday at the project, he said.

"The building trade activists from the area have just gone berserk," said Anderson.

"It was non-union and racially motivated," Anderson said. "People destroyed property and went after lives. We've had many people threatened. It's been building trades activists that are just acting as terrorists."

Anderson said a black family was threatened Saturday and the company moved them inside the plant for protection. Police were previously called to a Mexican-American family's home after an arson threat, he said.

He said there had been complaints that the company was only hiring blacks and Hispanics.

Police Chief Tom Hardy said officers used tear gas to turn back the crowd Saturday and witnesses said protesters threw rocks at security guards. A police dispatcher said several vehicles were overturned at the housing camp about a mile from the construction site.

A state evaluation team was sent to International Falls to keep state officials appraised of the situation, said Public Safety Commissioner Paul Tschida. "We're in constant touch with the people up there," he said.

Anderson complained that the governor was "playing politics" and siding with labor by not immediately sending National Guardsmen, only putting them on alert. Although the situation had calmed by afternoon, Anderson said protesters were drinking and he thought more violence could erupt.

Anderson said Saturday's protesters had come from North Dakota, Wisconsin and Michigan.

U.S. Agents Gear Up For Peru Cocaine War

By Monte Hayes
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TINGO MARIA, Peru — American narcotics agents, trained in tropical combat and armed with automatic weapons, are preparing to move into a heavily fortified police garrison built with U.S. funds in the heart of Peru's coca-rich jungle.

The base at Santa Lucia, 65 miles northwest of here, is part of a major offensive by the Peruvian government against drug gangs and their allies — dogmatic Maoist guerrillas who call themselves the Shining Path and control much of the lush Upper Huallaga River Valley on the eastern slopes of the Andes.

Despite the danger posed by the guerrilla force, the United States is making the campaign in Peru the centerpiece of its drive against cocaine trafficking in the Andean nations, which supply the coca leaf from which the drug is refined. The plans were drawn before President Bush outlined his $7.9-billion drug program Sept. 5.

"Sixty to 70 percent of the world's coca production comes out of here," said Craig Chretien, chief of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency's operations in Peru. "Peru, of all the countries, offers the best opportunity to do significant damage to the coca trade."

Once the anti-drug base is completed in October, as many as 50 Americans will operate directly from the Upper Huallaga region, providing training and air support to some 300 police rangers assigned to the garrison.

The Americans include DEA agents and contracted Vietnam War veterans who fly and maintain the nine U.S. Bell helicopters and two C-123 cargo planes currently on loan to Peru for the anti-drug fight.

"The base is strategically located near all of the most important trafficking areas," said Gen. Juan Zarate, chief of Peru's drug police.

The compound will have a three-quarter-mile airstrip that can accommodate C-130 cargo planes, three helicopter pads, and nine buildings, mainly barracks. The 100-acre area will be enclosed by barbed wire and the outlying perimeter will be protected by mines.

The step-up in the U.S. involvement comes as the Peruvian army, armed with recently acquired Soviet armored helicopters, has launched its heaviest campaign so far in the valley against the Shining Path — "Sendero Luminoso" in Spanish.

The escalation in the fighting in the valley, however, has aroused the concern of the Andean Commission of Jurists, among others, that the United States could be drawn into the war against the guerrillas.

The commission, affliated with the Andean Pact alliance of Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia, noted recently that while the base is intended for the drug fight, "observers are concerned that in the medium term it can be converted into a springboard for the internationalization of the counterinsurgency fight in Peru."

The DEA agents came to Tingo Maria, about 250 miles northeast of Lima, Peru's capital, in search of cocaine traffickers. But they have found themselves in the middle of a revolution and working in a valley dominated by at least 2,500 guerrillas.

"It's probably the most hostile situation the DEA works in anywhere," Chretien said in an interview in Lima.

Earlier this year the Shining Path offered a $50,000 reward for any DEA agent killed in the valley, according to the Rev. Paul Feeley, a Canadian Roman Catholic priest working in Aucayacu, a town 35 miles north of Tingo Maria.

"The DEA has become a dirty word in the Huallaga Valley," he said. "Sendero, and most other people around here, too, see the DEA as being anti-subversive, not just anti-drug."

In return for providing protection from police raids, the Shining Path enjoys the support of tens of thousands of peasants who grow coca in the valley, earning 10 times what they could from other crops.

The guerrillas collect a 10 to 15 percent "tax" from the growers as well as charging Colombian traffickers $10,000 to $15,000 for each small plane that picks up cocaine paste for refining in Colombia, according to the peasants and police.

Houses along the Jungle Highway leading out of Tingo Maria, the largest town in the valley, are scrawled in blood-red paint with deadly messages for the DEA.

One on a school building said: "Get out, Yankees, while you can — you will find your tombs here."

The DEA is not permitted to take part in counterinsurgency wars. But in practice that changed in Peru when it became clear two years ago that the guerrillas were actively involved in the cocaine trade.

"The rule is that Sendero is fair game if they're trafficking in drugs," Chretien said. "What counts is if they're traffickers, not their politics. That doesn't mean we go looking for guerrilla camps or columns. But if we spot them from the air, we notify the police. And if they attack us, we defend ourselves."

The DEA pulled out of this ramshackle settlement in a hurry in April after a force of 200 rebels, aided by local drug gangs and Colombian traffickers, overran a police post in Uchiza, a town a few miles from Santa Lucia, killing 10 policemen. Three of them were officers who were executed publicly in the town plaza after the garrison ran out of ammunition.

"Tingo Maria isn't a healthy place if you're an American," said a DEA agent. "There's a Sendero committee on every block, every block."

Tingo Maria, at the southern end of the narrow, 150-mile-long valley, has the look of a town expecting an attack at any moment. Nervous troops behind sandbag barricades guard the bridge over the river to the town's airstrip.

Villagers say the Shining Path now moves boldly through the valley, in columns of up to 500 fighters. The rebels wear uniforms of black T-shirts and khaki pants, forsaking the clothing of the Peruvian peasantry that would allow them to fade into the civilian populace.

In response, the army has begun employing its Soviet helicopters, known as "flying tanks" and armed with heavy-caliber machine guns and rockets. In July the armed forces reported killing 210 rebels, 110 of them in three air and land battles over a two-day period in the valley.

"It's getting to the point where there are going to be full-scale battles between two strong forces," said Feeley, the Canadian priest.

Making use recently of four of the MI-25 helicopters, the army strafed guerrilla columns and at least one village of peasants considered to be Shining Path supporters.

Human rights groups fear that the casualty tolls provided by the army may include many civilians.

Feeley said that 17 suspected Shining Path leaders detained by the army in late July in Aucayacu "are now on that long list of disappeared people."

But the guerrillas have taken their own toll.

In June three Shining Path assassins walked into the office of Tingo Maria's popular mayor, Manuel Espinosa, and shot him to death as he sat behind his desk.

In Aucayacu, the Shining Path has assassinated four of the last six mayors.

"The other two quit before they were killed," said Feeley.

India Says It Will Pull Troops From Sri Lanka

By Patrick Cruez
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — India has agreed to withdraw its peacekeeping troops from Sri Lanka by end of the year, a senior government official said Saturday.

Sri Lankan officials have been trying for months to obtain the withdrawal of the troops, who were sent to this island nation two years ago to quell ethnic violence.

An agreement on the new withdrawal date, Dec. 31, was reached by Indian and Sri Lankan officials during a meeting of nonaligned nations in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, the official said. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi said Friday in New Delhi that an agreement had been reached on the pullout of the estimated 42,000 Indian soldiers from Sri Lanka's northeast. But he refused to give details.

Gandhi held at least two meetings in Belgrade with Sri Lankan Foreign Minister Ranjan Wijeratne. The Sri Lankan official said Wijeratne apprised President Ranasinghe Premadasa of the Indian proposals.

India had earlier proposed a withdrawal by the end of February. Sri Lanka rejected the date, triggering a dilplomatic deadlock.

The official said Premadasa will consult his ministers on the new proposal on Wednesday. The government was "very likely" to approve the December withdrawal, the official said.

India sent its troops under a peace accord it had sponsored to end a Tamil insurrection for an independent nation in Sri Lanka's northeast. The accord, signed on July 29, 1987, offered Tamils limited autonomy if rebel groups surrendered their weapons.

While most militias abided by the accord, the dominant rebel group reneged on the pact and began attacking Indian troops. India despatched more soldiers to put down attacks by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam but the fighting continued and at least 1,000 Indian soldiers have been killed.

In June, Premadasa asked India to withdraw all its troops by July 29. Gandhi refused, saying a hasty pullout would lead to even more bloodshed.

A military showdown between the two countries, however, was averted when India agreed to make a token pullout on July 29 and subsequent limited withdrawals. But the two countries failed to agree on a timetable for the complete withdrawal.

Premadasa asked for the withdrawal to appease Sinhalese radicals in the south who had launched a campaign of assassinations and terror to protest the accord and the presence of Indian troops. The militants say the Indians compromise the country's independence, and they say the accord made too many concessions to the Tamils.

Tamils make up 18 percent of Sri Lanka's 16 million people. They claim they are denied jobs and education by the Sinhalese, who make up 75 percent of the population and control the government and military.

India got involved because of the sympathies of its own 60 million Tamils for the rebel cause.

At least 10,000 people have died in the 6-year-old Tamil war. Officials say at least 5,000 have died in the 2-year-old uprising by the Sinhalese militants.

ILIGAN, Philippines — Troops battled supporters of a former mayor suspected in the slaying of an election official, and three bystanders were killed, the military said Saturday.

The former mayor was arrested after the shootout Friday in the town of Bacolod Grande in Lanao del Sur province, 510 miles south of Manila.

Lt. Col. Omar Manabilang, Philippine Constabulary provincial commander, said that in addition to the three slain bystanders, seven people were wounded. He said the wounded included four of the ex-mayor's bodyguards.

The fighting broke out when the soldiers went to the home of Dimangadap Dipatuan to serve a warrant for his arrest in the February slaying in Manila of Vicente Gerochi, an election commission official, the commander said.

Gerochi was in charge of nationwide village elections, which were held in March. He was gunned down by unknown assailants near his Manila home a few weeks before the balloting.

Manabilang told reporters Dipatuan's bodyguards and about 50 other supporters opened fire, touching off the 25-minute gun battle. The mayor's defenders fled after military reinforcements arrived.

Soldiers then arrested Dipatuan, a former mayor of Kalawi, a small town near Bacolod Grande, the commander said.

Also Saturday, the military said soldiers arrested eight ranking Communist leaders, including a Roman Catholic priest, in raids in the central city of Cebu.

REBATE PROGRAM ENDS

Greenville Utilities' CASH BACK Rebate Program for new energy efficient heating/cooling equipment will officially end September 12, 1989. Rebate applications will now be considered on a first-come, first-serve basis until the program's remaining funds are depleted. Funding for the program was provided by the N.C. Department of Commerce, Energy Division, from money made available through Exxon oil overcharges. Greenville Utilities was the only North Carolina utility to offer rebates to its customers.

During the course of the successful CASH BACK Rebate Program, which began December 9, 1987, Greenville Utilities issued over 550 cash rebates averaging $230. First year energy savings for these customers may total more than $70,000.

Before the program started, less than 20% of all new heating/cooling equipment purchased in our area were high-efficient models. According to one local contractor, since GUC started the Rebate Program, sales of high-efficient equipment have increased ten fold over the previous year, and there is more interest in high-efficient equipment than ever before.

The CASH BACK Rebate Program is just one example of how Greenville Utilities, your public power utility, works to provide YOU with the lowest cost energy (electric and gas) available. If you have questions about any GUC programs, call 752-7166.

Doctors Condemn Shooting Of Children In S. Africa

By Laurinda Keys
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Doctors in Cape Town said they have treated children as young as four years old with gunshot wounds, which relatives said were inflicted by police during election violence.

Police said Saturday they used pistols, birdshot, rubber bullets and tear gas to disperse mobs overnight and Saturday morning in mixed-race townships near Cape Town, where violence has been reported since Wednesday's elections. The elections excluded South Africa's 28 million black majority.

Also Saturday, the National Union of Mineworkers said three black mineworkers were shot to death by private security guards in a protest related to the elections. Mine owners said the workers attacked the guards.

"It is extremely saddening to find children caught up in the firing line," said Dr. David Bass, head of the Red Cross Children's Hospital Trauma Unit. He said 10 children, aged four to 12, had been treated there for birdshot or buckshot wounds on election day.

Bass was one of 75 Cape Town area doctors who issued a statement late Friday describing the injuries to children as "barbaric and stomach-turning."

Police issue daily unrest reports, which give few details, but their extensive listing of more than 300 incidents from Wednesday through Friday do not refer to any children being hurt by police action.

"To apportion blame without being there is very difficult, but to have buckshot and birdshot fired into crowds where there were women and children present points to questionable responsibility," Bass said.

Relatives of injured children have alleged that police shot them.

He described some of his patients in an interview with the independent South African Press Association.

"One of them, a four-year-old girl, has birdshot inside her skull. Another eight-year-old girl has an eye injury and wounds to her limbs and trunk. A 12-year-old boy was shot in the leg, foot and buttocks," said Bass.

The Ministry of Law and Order has disputed the claims of anti-apartheid activists, clerics, doctors, journalists and township residents who have reported indiscriminate police firing in the Cape Town area during elections for parliamentary seats reserved for whites, mixed-race and Asians. Blacks have no voice in national affairs.

Cape Town attorney Essa Moosa said Friday that 29 people were killed on election night. He was referring to reports from mortuaries, doctors, relatives and an ambulanceman.

Most were killed by police, Moosa said, but some were involved in factional fighting which he and other activists said was instigated by police.

Police have not acknowledged killing anyone, although they say 15 people died and 26 policemen were injured. They have reported only a handful of civilian injuries from police shootings on election day, wile Cape Town activists and doctors have reported up to 200.

On Saturday, police said in a statement that they fired pistols, birdshot, rubber bullets and tear gas to disperse stone-throwers who damaged vehicles in four mixed-race townships overnight and Saturday morning. Pistols with live ammunition sometimes are used to fire warning shots.

"No injuries were reported as a result of police action" since Wednesday, said the statement.

One mixed-race man was hurt in a stoning incident, and four were arrested for stoning a delivery vehicle, the statement said.

In Johannesburg, meanwhile, the General Mining Union Corp. said three people were killed and 11 injured Friday night when a crowd armed with sharpened sticks and knives attacked security guards at a workers hostel at Kinross gold mine in Evander, 60 miles east of Johannesburg.

But the National Union of Mineworkers said the company "used live bullets to intimidate union members who had been involved in protest action against the general election, and management were using mine security to assault workers" taking part in a nationwide work stoppage.

The union said security guards opened fire on workers who wanted to ask them to stop the assaults, killing the three.

Army Claims Drug Kingpin's Personal Death Squad Nabbed

By Bruce Handler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOGOTA, Colombia — The army said Saturday it has captured four leaders of a terrorist gang employed by drug kingpin Pablo Escobar to protect his wife and kill his enemies.

The death squad, which called itself "Love for Medellin," also acted as a vigilante morals squad, killing prostitutes and homosexuals in the drug-infested city of Medellin, a military source said.

Also Saturday, military officials were quoted as saying they have made new raids on properties linked to Colombia's No. 2 drug lord, Gonzalo Rodriguez Gacha. They said a computer disk showed he owned 374 vehicles, all with telephones.

The daily outbreaks of terrorism linked to drug traffickers continued in Medellin, home of the powerful cocaine cartel of which Escobar is the overlord. Bombs knocked out telephone lines and damaged two factories and a restaurant, police said. No serious injuries were reported.

Also, police in Medellin said they arrested five suspects in connection with a mid-week bombing there of a government-run savings bank.

The 4th Army Brigade in Medellin said it had arrested four leaders of Escobar's feared "Love for Medellin" assassin squad — sarcastically named after a local charity group.

The group acted as bodyguards for Maria Victoria Henao Vallejo, Escobar's wife, the communique said. An army lieutenant, speaking on condition of anonymity, described them as "hit men."

The gang also operated as a sort of vigilante morals squad, killing local drug addicts, prostitutes and homosexuals, to "clean up the streets" in the city of 2 million, the army said.

Escobar heads the list of Colombian drug lords wanted in the United States and who are believed to supply the vast majority of cocaine-consuming Americans.

On Friday, authorities said Luis Fernando Galeano, a key aid of Escobar's and a suspected trafficker, was released from custody because there was no legal Colombian warrant for holding him and also no extradition request from the United States.

The Drug Enforcement Administration in Washington said Galeano was not wanted there.

Colombian newspapers said Saturday that Galeano was a financial administrator for the Medellin cartel. They said he was linked to a political assassination earlier this year in Monteria and a failed death plot against a man with ties to the rival cocaine cartel in the city of Cali.

The government of President Virgilio Barco began a crackdown on Aug. 18, after death squads linked to drug traffickers assassinated leading presidential candidate Sen. Luis Carlos Galan.

Drug traffickers responded with bombings and shootings and threats to kill judges, journalists and government officials.

Barco assumed special emergency powers, such as confiscating bank accounts and property linked to suspected traffickers and the "administrative extradition" of traffickers to the United States, bypassing the slow, often corrupt and highly intimidated Colombian court system.

Bogota's El Tiempo newspaper reported Saturday that the army raided 30 sites in Bogota and the rural town of Pacho suspected to belong to Rodriguez Gacha, No. 2 on the nation's most-wanted list of drug bosses.

Colombia is offering a $250,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of either Escobar or Rodriguez Gacha. Gacha's wealth has been estimated at $3 billion.

El Tiempo, citing unnamed military sources, said the army raid netted 49 vehicles, including two bullet-proof Mercedes-Benz sedans. Authorities also seized the computer disk showing Rodriguez Gacha owns a total of 374 vehicles, all with telephones, worth about $10 million, the paper said.

Carter Says Ethiopia, Rebel Talks Seeing Some Progress

By Marc Rice
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Three days of talks between Ethiopia and Eritrean rebels have convinced each side that the other sincerely wants to end their 28-year war, former President Jimmy Carter said Saturday.

"I don't really see a major obstacle now," Carter, a neutral observer in the talks between Ethiopia's Marxist government and the Eritrean People's Liberation Front, told reporters.

Carter said negotiators had agreed on 13 items during discussions aimed at setting an agenda for future, more substantiative, peace talks. He would not elaborate but said a statement with more details would be issued after the talks end, probably Sunday or Monday.

Carter also announced he plans to travel to Nicaragua later this month and again around year's end to examine preparations for that country's national elections. He went to Panama earlier this year to observe the national voting there, and accused the Noriega government of stealing the election.

Since 1961, the Ethiopian government and rebels have been fighting over the independence of the province of Eritrea, a former Italian colony that has Ethiopia's only direct access to the Red Sea. An estimated 1 million people have died in the war and related famine.

"I think each side, when I began talking to them, was totally convinced that all the other side wanted to do was have a propaganda victory of some kind," Carter said.

"And now, after these hours of communicating with each other, making concessions to each agreement, I don't think there's any doubt that they both know that the other side really is sincere in trying to make progress toward peace," he said.

He said the leaders of the delegations here frequently have called Ethiopian leader Mengistu Haile Mariam and the liberation front's general secretary, Isaias Afwerki, for guidance. The delegation representatives were not on hand with Carter at Saturday's briefing, but Carter said they would participate in a news conference at the conclusion of the talks.

Carter, who is participating in the talks as a private citizen, said he has notified the State Department of the progress of the discussions. He said he also has been in contact with the Soviet Union, which supports the Ethiopian government. He would not comment on the U.S. or Soviet response.

The talks are being held at the Carter Center. Opened in 1986, the center houses the presidential libaray, a museum, a think tank and organizations dedicated to peace, public health and other issues.

Carter, who as president a decade ago helped Egypt and Israel negotiate the historic Camp David accords, said his role in the Ethiopia talks has occasionally been frustrating.

"The thing that's frustrating to me as a mediator is the time-consuming exchange of ideas, the repetition and so forth," he said.

Four Soldiers Die In Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — A bolt of lightning downed a helicopter during U.S.-Honduran military maneuvers, killing four Honduran soldiers and injuring three, the government said Saturday.

Military sources said the accident occurred Friday night during a heavy thunderstorm near the small village of San Antonio de Majada, 180 miles northeast of Tegucigalpa. The source said the chopper was returning to the air base at San Pedro Sula, 120 miles north of Tegucigalpa.

The type of helicopter was not identified, but the United States has donated numerous choppers and other equipment to the Honduran military.

The victims were identified as Lt. Col. Daniel Arturo Tabora Talbot, Lt. Col. Wilfredo Mendoza Garay, Capt. Luis Felipe Reyes and Lt. Nelson Henriiquez.

The military said that Col. Reinaldo Andino Flores and Lt. Juan Ramoon Bautista were hospitalized and in serious condition on Saturday. They said the pilot, Sgt. Luis Ayala, was in critical condition.

Police and soldiers began recovering the bodies Saturday morning.

The camouflaged helicopter and its occupants were participating in the aerial part of the joint exercises, which conclude Sept. 12.

Yasser Arafat Says He'll Address United Nations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JIDDAH, Saudi Arabia — PLO leader Yasser Arafat will fly to New York to call on the U.N. General Assembly to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East, a newspaper quoted him Saturday as saying.

Last year, Washington denied Arafat a visa, prompting the world body to move to Geneva to hear the Palestinian leader.

"I am going to New York to discuss the convening of the international conference" on Middle East peace, Arafat was quoted as telling the daily newspaper Asharq Al-Awsat.

Arafat appeared confident he will be allowed to enter the United States to address the United Nations later this month.

Mark Dillen, a State Department spokesman, said Saturday that "as far as we know he has made no visa application."

On Friday, Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin told reporters after a meeting with Secretary of State James A. Baker III that his government would view issuance of a U.S. visa to Arafat "very gravely."

During last year's session in Geneva, the 60-year-old Arafat openly renounced terrorism and recognized Israel's right to exist, encouraging the United States to end a 13-year ban on dealings with the Palestine Liberation Organization and to begin a dialogue with the movement.

Asharq Al-Awsat said it interviewed the Palestinian leader in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, this week during a summit of 102 non-aligned nations. He said he was "heading to New York with the leaders of the nine states who met on sidelines of the non-aligned summit conference ... to discuss the international peace conference with the U.N. secretary-general and the permanent members of the Security Council."

Egypt is spearheading Arab efforts to persuade Washington not to block Arafat's intended visit, despite pressures by Israel. Palestinian sources have said Arafat would offer new peace proposals in his address.

Arafat told Asharq Al-Awsat that convening an international conference as envisaged by Arab leaders "is not going to be easy as some might think, because nothing comes on a silver platter."

He said he discussed the issue with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar at the Belgrade summit that ended Friday.

Arafat charged the United States is proving "intransigent" in the peace process by ignoring Arab proposals and supporting only Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's election plan.

Ukrainian Leaders Push For Politburo Member's Removal

By Andrew Katell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Two Ukrainian leaders joined Saturday in calling for the ouster of the last Old Guard member of the ruling Politburo, an activist said.

At a different meeting Saturday, another conservative Politburo member, Yegor K. Ligachev, warned that ethnic unrest could lead to the collapse of the Soviet Union.

The calls for the removal of Vladimir V. Shcherbitsky, who is also chief of the Ukrainian Communist Party, came at a meeting of the Ukrainian Popular Movement for Perestroika in the republic's capital, Kiev. Speakers called for creation of a sovereign, free Ukraine with a multiparty system.

Sergei I. Konev, a member of the new Soviet Congress, called on the grass-roots group "to express its lack of confidence in the government of the Ukraine headed by Shcherbitsky," according to Anatoly Dotsenko, Moscow-based spokesman for the U.S. human rights group Helsinki Watch.

Konev said President Mikhail S. Gorbachev should "do everything he can, as soon as possible, so that the criminals of Chernobyl get out of the Ukrainian government."

Shcherbitsky was in charge of the Ukraine when a reactor exploded at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, killing 31 people, spewing radiation and forcing the evacuation of thousands. Some residents accuse him of covering up the radiation damage, restraining the local press and arresting and harassing dissidents.

At 71, Shcherbitsky is the oldest of the 12 men on the ruling Politburo, and is considered one of the most conservative. Except for Gorbachev, he is the only member who dates back to the late President Leonid I. Brezhnev, now blamed for the country's economic decay.

Many of the 2,000 delegates and guests applauded Konev's remarks, Dotsenko said, quoting observers at the meeting.

Ligachev spoke out for the second time in a week against ethnic unrest.

"If there is no inter-ethnic accord and friendship between people, there will be no effective work in the economic sphere, at businesses, in fields and at farms, and then the disintegration of the union of Soviet republics is unavoidable," Ligachev said.

The Communist Party daily Pravda reported his remarks at an agricultural seminar in Frunze, capital of Soviet Kirghizia.

In Kiev, Shcherbitsky also was denounced by Ivan Saly, a secretary of the Communist Party regional committee in Kiev's Podol region.

"Comrade Shcherbitsky, your time is up!" Saly told the meeting.

Petro Poberezhny, deputy chairman of a committee that organized a coal miners' strike in Donetsk in July, lashed out at the Ukrainian party chief's handling of news media.

"As a communist, I announce that the republic newspaper Pravda Ukraine is an organ of Vladimir Shcherbitsky, and not of the communists of the republic," he said.

Gorbachev, during a visit to Kiev in February after six Ukrainian leaders were defeated in parliamentary elections, ordered party leaders there to work "with the people and for the people."

Shcherbitsky has remained firmly in control, however, reportedly because he ensures that the important industrial and grain-growing region — popularly known as the Soviet breadbasket and the second most populous republic — meets its economic targets.

In an interview earlier this year, Shcherbitsky accused the leaders of the Ukrainian Popular Movement for Perestroika of ambitioa and nationalism that "leads the way to permissiveness and national antagonism, contradicting the interests of perestroika," or restructuring of the economy and society.

Bomb Blast Rocks Beach In Greece

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ERESSOS, Greece — A bomb exploded Saturday on a beach at this popular tourist village on the eastern Aegean island of Lesbos but caused no injuries, police said.

Antenna, an Athens commercial radio station, said an anonymous caller who warned about the bomb claimed to represent a previously unknown group, the Patriotic Liberation Front of 1989.

A policeman in Eressos would not confirm that report, and it was not clear exactly what political motive such a group would have had.

The blast occurred far from shops and camping sites in the early afternoon after two warning calls to the police station, Eressos police said.

The beach was evacuated, and there were no injuries, said a spokesman on condition of anonmity.

He gave no details on what type of device exploded.

Soviet Politician Makes First U.S. Visit

By Larry McShane
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Boris N. Yeltsin, the gadfly in Soviet politics, is making his first visit to the United States — a 10-day national tour featuring the Moscow maverick's views on glasnost and government.

The trip, arranged at the invitation of the Esalen Institute's Soviet-American exchange program, caps the comeback of Mikhail Gorbachev's most vocal critic from political outcast to populist hero.

"He's in a class by himself. He has an enormous vitality. He's an iconoclast. ... He's become a symbol of resentment against party bureaucrats," said Marshall Shulman, an adviser to Carter administration Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and a Soviet expert.

It is clear Yeltsin's looking forward to meeting the American media. He sent word that he would be available for questions after arriving Saturday at Kennedy International Airport and planned a news conference for Sunday.

On Monday, he is to deliver a luncheon address to the Council on Foreign Relations, followed by an evening speech at Columbia University.

"We expect Boris will be on 'Good Evening America' or 'Good Morning America' — whatever it is," said Yeltsin's chief aide, Lev Sukhanov.

Two years ago, Yeltsin was booted from his post as Moscow's Communist Party chief after he criticized the slow pace of reform under Gorbachev.

But Yeltsin thrived after his dismissal. He campaigned for a seat in the Soviet Congress, and in March was swept into office with more than 90 percent of the popular vote in the first contested Soviet election since 1917. He now heads the Soviet Union's radical bloc of legislators.

Yeltsin, 58, through an intermediary, sent word earlier this year to the Leigh Bureau in Princeton, N.J., that he was interested in coming to the United States, said Bill Leigh, head of the speakers agency.

An invitation was extended via Esalen and the final details worked out the first week in August, Leigh said. Yeltsin's visit may also have a capitalist purpose: Yeltsin has a book deal with a U.S. publisher, Shulman said, although Yeltsin plans to donate his speaking fees to a Soviet fund to fight AIDS.

Yeltsin is scheduled to leave Sept. 18 so he can attend the Communist Party plenum the next day; in the meantime, he'll stay busy.

Appearances have already been announced in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Indianapolis, Minneapolis and Washington, although Leigh said his exact schedule was not set.

It's not clear if Yeltsin plans to criticize Gorbachev during his visit — Leigh would only say his Columbia speech concerned "the future of Soviet democracy."

Shulman believes Yeltsin will tread lightly when it comes to criticizing the Soviet leader while in this country.

"He is conscious of the fact that Gorbachev is in a difficult position. He supports Gorbachev, but he would like Gorbachev to move along more quickly with reform," Shulman said.

"My guess is he will be constrained in his criticism, but it's hard to predict. He's a mercurial man."

Ethnic Poles Want Lithuania Autonomy

By Carey Goldberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — As if the Soviet Union didn't have enough trouble with republics demanding autonomy or outright sovereignty, now 40,000 ethnic Poles want their own piece of Lithuania.

The demand by the Salcininkai district has put Lithuanian officials, who complain of Moscow's authority over their Baltic republic, in the uneasy position of hearing the same arguments about their authority over Salcininkai.

"This is a cry from the soul, the desire of the people to say what hurts," L. Yankelevich, chairman of the Salcininkai regional council, told the official Tass news agency.

Tass quoted V. Belskaya, a kindergarten teacher, as saying at the council session that made the demand: "We see autonomy as the only way today to protect our people's interests."

The council voted 50-14 to declare the region autonomous and residents carrying Polish flags rallied outside the council building, the news agency reported Thursday. It did not say when the vote was taken.

Salcininkai, 30 miles south of the Lituanian capital of Vilnius and near the border with Byelorussia, is a traditionally Polish district, Tass reported. It said the population now is 81 percent ethnic Polish and only 7 percent Lithuanian, while the republic as a whole is 80 percent Lithuanian.

Ethnic Poles fear the campaign for Lithuanian sovereignty organized by the political movement Sajudis, which so far has produced a law making Lithuanian the official language.

A major complaint in Salcininkai is that the law requires interoffice communications to be in Lithuanian by January 1991, even if nearly all employees are Polish.

Members of the district council complained of a case in which an accountant four years short of retirement would have to leave early because he could not learn Lithuanian well enough in the time allowed, Tass said.

Lithuania's language law took effect in February, before resistance stiffened among ethnic minorities in small Soviet republics that seek greater autonomy.

The Soviet Union encompasses 100 ethnic groups, and animosities exist between many of them.

In the Moldavian republic on the Romanian border, Ukrainians, Russians and other non-Moldavians are in the third week of a strike to protest a law making Moldavian the official language. Ethnic Moldavians make up 64 percent of that republic's 4.2 million people.

A Christian Turkish people known as the Gagauz, a small minority in Moldavia, are demanding an autonomous district.

Many republics have passed laws making the tongue of the dominant ethnic group the official language, and more are being prepared.

In Salcininkai, the people appear inspired by Kremlin reaction to the Baltic campaign for sovereignty rather than Poland's experiment with democracy. Some banners carried by the crowd at the council building said "Down with the Sajudis Dictatorship," and others expressed support for a tough Kremlin statement that separatists were leading the Baltics into an abyss, Tass reported.

It said President Vytautus Astrauskas of Lithuania and S. Gedraitus, a secretary of the republic's Communist Party, attended council meetings and urged patience.

Tass quoted Astrauskas as saying the council decision did not make autonomy a fact and declaring: "Earlier we worked together in friendship and no problems arose. That's the way we'll search for a solution."

Copter Joyride Ends In Disaster As 6 Die

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BORDEAUX, France — A group of gendarmes on a nighttime joyride with three female companions Saturday crashed their police helicopter into the Atlantic Ocean, killing all six people aboard, said an officer for the force.

The Ecureuil helicopter and its crew had been posted on temporary duty at the small seaside town of Mimizan-Plage for the summer vacation season. Its mission was beach surveillance and medical evacuation.

However, an officer at regional gendarme headquarters in Bordeaux told French radio that the helicopter's pilot had taken the aircraft for a joyride with a flight engineer, a doctor in the gendarmes, and three women.

"It was not an official mission," said the unidentified officer.

The craft, which was not equipped for night flight, crashed into the ocean 50 miles southwest of Bordeaux, killing all six aboard, officials said.

A witness alerted police about 2 a.m. that he saw a helicopter crash into the sea. A search was launched, and the wreckage of the aircraft was found 500 yards offshore, officials said.

The gendarmes are part of the French police force but serve under the Defense Ministry. Many of them have recently complained in a rash of letters published in French newspapers about the poor pay and difficult conditions they endure in the quasi-military unit.

Beijing Crackdown Underlines Changes In Taiwan

By John Pomfret
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAIPEI, Taiwan — For most of its 40 years in power, the ruling Nationalist Party has maintained that when the people of mainland China rose up, Taiwan would attack and win back its right to rule.

But in April, May and June, when China was rocked by pro-democracy demonstrations, the Nationalists dropped the idea that Taiwan could govern the mainland.

That was part of Taiwan's complex reaction to the repression in Beijing — a reaction that highlights the about-face Taiwan has made since the death of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

The political opposition provided another example: During the few years since political debate has been allowed in Taiwan, opposition politicians have advocated the declaration of a Taiwan independent from the mainland.

But after the brutal crackdown in Beijing, just when the time seemed right, the opposition changed its tune.

Talk of independence was placed on the back burner as the opposition pushed for further democratic reforms on this island of 20 million.

Once known for its rabid anti-Communism, Taiwan is now famous for its powerhouse economy. Once notorious for its jackboot security agencies, the island now has a lively political scene, which is evolving towards democracy.

Among the common people, reaction to events in China was a contradictory mixture of detachment and pain. Donations of blood and millions of dollars, which never made it to China, coincided with celebrations of a new stock market high.

"The massacre in Beijing has showed us we cannot be part of the Communists, but we also cannot be rid of them," said Hsiao Hsia-huang, professor of sociology at Taiwan University. "We have different societies but we are still Chinese."

For the ruling Nationalist Party, the trouble in China helped solidify the most important policy change since martial law was lifted in 1987 after 38 years.

On June 3, as Chinese troops used tear gas for the first time in 40 years in Beijing, Taiwan President Lee Teng-hui abandoned a decades-old myth that Taiwan can govern China.

"We must have the courage to face the fact that at this moment we are unable to effectively exercise the right to govern the mainland," Lee told a meeting of party leaders.

For the bulk of their 40 years in power, the Nationalists, under Chiang's leadership, had vowed to invade the mainland once the Chinese rose up.

Lee, instead, committed the island to a pragmatic foreign policy designed to compete with Beijing for international recognition. On July 20, the policy had its first big success when Taiwan established relations with Grenada, making the Caribbean nation the first country with ties to both Beijing and Taipei, although China later severed its ties.

On the ideological front, the crackdown in Beijing gave Taiwan "an opportunity to vindicate what we've been saying for 40 years," said Ma Ying-jeou, a rising star in the ruling party and head of the Cabinet's Mainland Affairs Council.

But that opportunity wasn't seized.

The party issued several lackluster statements and organized demonstrations among university students to support the democracy movement, but government officials closed a "democracy wall" at Taiwan University once criticism turned to Taiwan.

A Hong Kong activist said Taiwan refused to help him smuggle Chinese dissidents from the mainland. And a government source said Taiwan's military on Quemoy Island turned back a Chinese student who rowed there and claimed he had participated in the pro-democracy movement.

While other countries imposed sanctions, Taiwan took no measures to limit its blossoming contact with the mainland. Instead, less than a week after the massacre, Taiwan opened direct mail and telephone links for the first time since 1949.

"The government policy was based on its security concerns," said Jaw Shau-kang, a Nationalist legislator. "They fear the Communists, so they were very careful. I personally think we could have done more."

Some observers say the government appeared uncomfortable criticizing China for human rights violations when Taiwan's increasingly lively press is willing to expose the skeletons in the Nationalist's own closet.

Indeed, after the crackdown, opposition politicians and intellectuals filled newspapers with essays and letters, calling on the government to quicken the pace of democratic reforms in Taiwan.

"If those students who marched to Tiananmen Square came to Taiwan, I believe they would also demonstrate," editor Antonio Chiang wrote in The Journalist, Taiwan's leading news magazine.

Chaing said the only thing Taiwan could do in response to the massacre was to democratize.

Following the lead of their Beijing classmates, Taiwan high school students put up posters calling for the withdrawal of military officers stationed in every school on the island. Authorities ripped them down.

"As Chinese dissident Liu Binyan and student leader Wu'er Kaixi were heading overseas, was the Nationalist Party thinking about letting its own blacklisted dissidents return?" opposition leader Lin Cheng-chieh wrote in the China Times.

Despite the debate, many observers said they didn't think the stronger calls would spark faster change.

"The Nationalists can relax because they know that no matter what they do, they're still better than the Communists," said Chiang of The Journalist.

Add to that the confusion the crackdown caused among the opposition and the case for quickened reform seems even weaker.

Before June 3, many in the opposition felt that Taiwan should declare independence from China and abandon the "one China" policy pursued by Chiang Kai-shek and his Nationalist allies.

But China has warned Taiwan that it risks invasion if the island declares independence. After the crackdown, many activists began to take the threat seriously.

"If they are crazy enough to shoot their own people, they might be crazy enough to attack us," said Lu Yu, a top official in the opposition Democratic Progressive Party.

Since the Nationalists retreated to Taiwan in 1949 after losing a civil war to Communist forces on the mainland, Taiwan and China have had little to do with each other.

But in the 1980s, the two sides began to edge closer. China began opening to the West. Taiwan allowed its people to travel to China and invest in the mainland's reforming economy. Beginning last year, Taiwanese journalists were welcomed on the mainland.

The crackdown came as the two sides were just getting to know each other.

"Things were just getting better between all of us, and then this had to happen," said Lee Ying-shih, a noodle stall operator who returned to Nanjing last year for the first time since 1949.

Mother Teresa Develops Fever

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALCUTTA, India — Nobel laureate Mother Teresa developed a high fever and an irregular heartbeat Saturday a day after suffering a heart attack, hospital officials said.

Doctors said they have decided to place a temporary pacemaker to help the ailing heart of the frail 79-year-old nun, who has dedicated her life to the destitute and dying.

Officials at Woodlands Nursing Home, where Mother Teresa was admitted Tuesday, refused to elaborate or say whether they already implanted the pacemaker. In a statement, they said the nun is not responding to medication.

"Her rising temperature and irregularity of pulse is causing anxiety," the statement said.

Mother Teresa became ill Sept. 3 and was admitted to the hospital's intensive care unit last Tuesday. She suffered a heart attack on Friday, but doctors had said her condition had stabilized and she was improving.

Saturday's statement said Mother Teresa spent a "sleepless night" Friday but rested throughout the day Saturday.

It said a renowned Calcutta physician had been called for consultations, but did not name him. Mother Teresa's cardiologist in Rome also has been contacted and may fly to Calcutta soon, the statement said.

Mother Teresa was born in Yugoslavia and received several honors for her work with the poor in this eastern Indian city, including the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize and the U.S. Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest American civilian award, which former President Reagan presented to her in 1985.

In October 1950, Mother Teresa founded the Missionaries of Charity in an abandoned, run down hostel donated by city officials. The order, recognized by the Vatican in 1965, now has 3,000 nuns working in 87 countries.

Despite heart problems and failing eyesight in recent years, Mother Teresa traveled widely and vigorously spoke out against abortion, an act she called "the greatest sin a woman can commit."

Iowa Crewmen Mum On Explosion Report

By Pia Hinckle
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GAETA, Italy — The memory of the explosion was still vivid, but crewmen from the USS Iowa were tight-lipped after an official report found a gunners mate intentionally sparked the April blast that killed 47 on board.

"What is done is done. We just want to forget about it now. But I will never forget the smell of a burning body," one sailor said near Gaeta, where the Iowa was anchored.

Sailors interviewed in bars and diners near the U.S. Naval base at Gaeta said they had not seen a copy of the report and refused to fully identify themselves. The Associated Press requested access to the Iowa but it was denied by the Navy.

The report released by the Pentagon on Thursday said "circumstantial evidence" indicated gunners mate Clayton M. Hartwig intentionally sparked the April 19 explosion in a turret for 16-inch guns.

A sailor who identified himself only as being from Miami said he worked in the turret six months before the explosion and had asked to be transferred to another assignment.

"I am glad I transferred because I had been there. I had loaded the same guns. I would have been in the middle of it. If I had my way, I would be off the Iowa by now," he said.

"A lot of the guys who died were my friends."

One crewman expressed doubt that Hartwig was to blame.

"I find it hard to believe that one guy could be responsible for all that," said the sailor, who would identify himself only as Bob. He said he was from Michigan.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Substance

No Mud, No Curves, Just Issues

This editorial issues a chal e.

To candidates for Greenville's City Council: give the voters a campaign filled with substance. Give them so much to think about they can't digest it all. Give them firm stands, solutions to problems, opinions and vigorous dialogue. Give them a quality election.

Forget the hogwash. Forget the campaign rhetoric. Don't throw mud. Don't throw curves. Run a substantive campaign that focuses on good government.

In the coming weeks the race for city council seats will take shape. The opening shots were fired this week as the mayor, council members and candidates exchanged dialogue over an emergency meeting Sept. 1 which excluded three members of the council.

Squabbling during election time is usual, but it should not be the dominant force. The temptation to run a campaign based on personality and mudslinging dangles in front of each candidate like a carrot. There's no doubt, that's the easy way out. No need for thinking through choices or expressing opinions. No danger of antagonizing voters by articulating views. No danger of jeopardizing financial backers. No positions, no solutions.

No fair. That's a short-sighted approach that cheats the voter. It puts the political life of a community in an abyss. Witness the presidential and gubernatorial elections of 1988, where candidate spent more time answering accusations than discussing issues. That didn't work very well, i.? Sure, people got elected, but did the voter really know what the decisions on the ballot meant? With all the talk about Willie Horton and drug dealing, we had no idea what was going to be done about the budget deficit did we?

So pay attention, candidates. Good government begins at the grassroots level. Greenville's municipal races can be robust but you must do your part before voters can do theirs. You have already proved you care about your community by your willingness to run for office. The voters have a broad pool of talent from which to make their choices. Now give them the information they need to make the right decisions.

Accept the challenge, candidates. Resist the temptation to politicize issues in council meetings, resist the urge to pit personality against personality. Instead, pit issues and qualifications against stands and records.

Otherwise, the ballot box could be a Pandora's box.

Pop Guns

A Little More, But Not Much

President Bush has proposed a little more in launching his great war on the illegal drug trade — but not much.

The president, in his much heralded drug policy address to the nation proposed $350 million in law enforcement grants; $1.2 billion for prison construction, $925 million for drug treatment, $1.2 billion for prevention and $250 million for courts and corrections. The prison construction funds are already in the budget. To a considerable degree, the president's drug fighting strategy is to urge states to adopt tougher laws on drug users.

A significant inclusion in the presidential recommendations is $261 million in military and law enforcement aid to Colombia, Bolivia and Peru to aid in fighting the drug czars. That is about four times the amount appropriated in the current budget.

The president recognized that the drug war has to be fought on the streets of United States cities as well as in South America, but he hasn't shown the willingness to properly finance such a war. The governments of Colombia, Peru and Bolivia want help in fighting the drug bosses, but they also want the U.S. to dry up the market for illegal cocaine and other drugs.

The president had some good thoughts on controlling illegal drugs. The international drug bosses are not quaking in their boots, however. They understand that the president's financing of his program is like shooting pop guns at military tanks — and they have the tanks.

The country must clearly set as its goal the eradication of illegal drug trafficking. Then it must allocate the necessary resources in a way similar other great national thrusts we have undertaken.

Fighting illegal drugs begins at the local level, but it is also a national and international endeavor. We have not found the answers for decades. The president's program still does not provide the answers. We can only hope it will be built upon until success is achieved.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The League of Women Voters has a long history of support of open meetings, representative government and the right of the citizens to be informed about governmental decisions.

So, it was disturbing to learn that the city council held an emergency meeting on Friday, Sept. 1 at 12:15 p.m. in city hall with the mayor and only half of the council members present. Since they went into executive session to discuss "personnel matters" the public has no way of knowing what constituted the emergency.

The open meetings law of North Carolina allows for emergency meetings if two elements are met: 1) the meeting must concern "generally unexpected circumstances" and 2) those circumstances must require "immediate consideration."

We have to wonder, however, what constituted such a personnel emergency on the beginning of a long national holiday weekend that could not have waited until Tuesday a.m., Sept. 5 when all council members could attend.

The argument that those who raised objections to such a meeting have objected for personal or political reasons is not a substantive explanation at all for the emergency meeting and simply begs the question. The public needs, and clearly deserves a better explanation from those who called the meeting.

Clearly then, and most assuredly the public has a right to a substantive explanation as to why this emergency meeting was held with half of its council representatives not participating in the public's business.

What was the emergency requiring immediate attention at 12:15 p.m. on Friday that could not have been accomplished on Tuesday, Sept. 6 in the a.m. when ALL of the public's elected officials could have been present to conduct the pressing business?

Edith M. Barrett
Vice President, League of Women Voters

To the editor:

City Council members Jenkins, Hadden and Fridley:

I'd like to offer my sympathies to you after having been "locked out" of last Friday's "emergency executive session" of the City Council.

I myself fail to see where there was an emergency, but like yourselves, I was on the outside of those closed "executive doors," and I must proclaim my ignorance. We can only assume that there was an emergency situation that we still don't know about.

I understand that those members present used this opportunity to "counsel" our City Manager, Mr. Greg Knowles, regarding how he communicates with City Council. If memory serves, the Council commended Mr. Knowles at their last meeting, for his constant efforts to keep Council informed. Whatever the consensus was at that time is immaterial at this point. Council Members Shinn, Huggins and Council, spoke on behalf of the Council, and apparently expressed dissatisfaction with Mr. Knowles for failing to keep them informed of his daily activities. I am not certain that his "counseling" session was legal. This would not really matter if no official action was taken, as was reported. If no action was taken, are we to assume that the "counseling" Mr. Knowles received, can be disregarded, as it wasn't an official action of the City Council?

I strongly urge the three of you who were not present at this meeting, to address the issues concerned in the presence of the entire City Council, and resolve the emergency as soon as possible. In the mean time, please take a good look at the outside of those "executive session doors." This marks the 16th time this year that those doors have swung shut to the general public. This is a rare opportunity for you to see things from the same vantage point that your constituents see them.

Casey Dobyns
Candidate for City Council District 2

To the editor:

I was very disturbed and appalled at what I heard and saw while watching the 6 p.m. news on WNCT-TV on Tuesday, Sept. 5, concerning the so called emergency meeting of the city council.

Mayor Ed Carter's statement concerning councilman Rev. W.J. "Bill" Hadden Jr.'s not being in attendance was completely uncalled for and unprofessional. Carter said he didn't know whether he (Rev. Hadden) had resigned or whether he just didn't plan to come to any meeting.

We do not need anyone holding a public office in our city making such unprofessional statements. Rev. Hadden has served this city for 12 years as a councilman and certainly deserves more respect than those kinds of remarks. I first met Rev. Hadden about 30 years ago when he came to Greenville as pastor of the First Christian Church then located on Eighth Street. During the last election, he received more votes than any other candidate and normally he would have been elected Mayor Pro Tem but for some unknown reason he was not elected to that office.

The Mayor's remark concerning the upcoming election "It will get more interesting all along so just be aware" concerns me!

The citizens of Greenville deserve better than this.

Sidewalk Superintendents Stay Busy

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

Sidewalk superintendents have a lot to look over in Pitt County these days. Your columnist is unabashedly a sidewalk superintendent.

If you don't know, sidewalk superintendents are those people who toil at other professions but stop by construction projects on the way home each day to criticize the way the work is being carried out.

There was a time when most new construction here involved remodeling of buildings in the downtown area. That meant a new store was coming. A wooden retainer wall was erected and sometimes a covered walk constructed in the parking space. It was a rare individual who could walk by without taking a peek through the cracks to see how the construction was going.

Sidewalk superintendency is becoming a much larger endeavor these days. I know. I made the tour over the Labor Day holiday.

There is, for instance, the huge new parking lot which has been constructed west of Minges Coliseum and adjacent to Charles Boulevard. It is almost complete now and you have to drive in it to take in just how much asphalt has been laid.

To the east, the East Carolina University sports medicine building is nearing completion. It was locked up but it was worth a walk around it. Quite a structure.

To the south the Plaza Mall is being expanded and modernized. Inside it will be a huge cavern of walkways and shops all connecting the major stores which are already open.

Over at Pitt-Greenville Airport the steel work soars for a major addition to the airport terminal. Gradually the area will be enclosed to provide far more space for departing and arriving passengers.

At the Burroughs Wellcome plant, the steel work is up for a major office building at the front of the plant and east of the present administrative area.

Expansion is under way on the Brody Building at the ECU School of Medicine. In fact, out in the medical district, sidewalk superintendents have plenty to keep them busy.

If you want to see dirt piled up, visit the interchange being constructed at the new U.S. 264 highway and U.S. 258 intersection just south of Farmville. The fill for the interchange is almost complete. It involved hundreds of trips by drag pans to create the hills on each side of U.S. 258 which will be connected by bridges to provide a safe traffic interchange.

If all that isn't entertainment enough for the average sidewalk superintendent wait awhile. In a few years the ECU library addition and the Pitt County Memorial Hospital addition will be under way. So too, will the U.S. 264 northwest bypass of Greenville, which will involve construction of several interchanges and overpasses.

Construction work can be inexpensive entertainment ... and the best is ahead.

Commentary

A Sore Thumb

David Broder

WASHINGTON — In a generally serene and hopeful world picture, one irony stands out like a sore thumb. The Soviet Union displays its forbearance by tolerating experiments in democracy in Poland and Hungary, while the United States shows its self-restraint by allowing democracy to be throttled in Panama.

President Bush says "there's a high frustration level" he feels at the inability, after two years of trying, to rid the hemisphere of Manuel Antonio Noriega, the drug-running Panamanian strongman. He's right to feel frustrated, but he and this country also ought to feel angry and embarrassed about what's happened. It's the absence of such feelings, both in this capital and among the voters, that disturbs me.

A few weeks ago, after the U.S. government had passively watched the Organization of American States (OAS) duck another deadline for dealing with Noriega, I started asking knowledgeable people why the United States, with all its power, has been so ineffectual in dealing with this tinpot dictator.

The answers I heard from members of Congress of both parties and officials of the Carter, Reagan and Bush administrations who have dealt or are dealing with the Panamanian problem, were, in composite, a shameful story of ineptitude. And then, by chance, last weekend I came across an essay by Margaret E. Scranton of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock, which laid out the picture in clear terms.

In the paper she prepared for the American Political Science Assn. meeting in Atlanta, she said that, "U.S. attempts to oust Gen. Noriega failed because...policy-makers operated under a mistakenly overconfident assessment of U.S. influence...and underestimated (Noriega's) power position and capacity to resist U.S. pressure."

Almost everything I heard from my interviews tended to bear out her conclusion. Elliott Abrams, the assistant secretary of state for Latin-American affairs in the Reagan administration, said: "The Reagan administration made a fundamental mistake in taking on Noriega without being ready to win. We decided on confrontation before we agreed on what we would do to take him out...and when he called our bluff, we had to back down."

Rep. Sam Gejdenson (D-Conn.), who comes at the question from a much different perspective, said that his congressional subcommittee learned that when the Reagan administration ordered economic sanctions against Noriega in 1987, "they had never sat down...and done a bottom-line accounting of what it would cost him. The exemptions they granted were enough for Noriega to live on. They didn't come down hard enough to dislodge him."

But these are, in a way, the easy answers. As Scranton points out, long before the Reagan administration turned on Noriega, the United States helped create him. We aided him to set up a private army and a private supply line to Central America when he was helping us sustain the contras — another folly. When he started moving drugs and laundering money with the same network, we first looked the other way.

Later, when we indicted him for drug trafficking and tried to force him out of power, some of our Latin friends and allies could not see anything but another example of American imperialism. Even now, the fact that this guy is throttling democracy by the throat doesn't cut as much ice with them as the fact that he's standing up to the big brother of the north.

Republicans like Sen. Dick Lugar (R-Ind.) and Rep. Robert Lagomarsino (R-Calif.) argue that Bush's policy of international pressure will eventually pay off, if only we're patient. But it's hard not to suspect that Abrams is right when he says that Noriega "views the OAS with contempt."

Unhappily we have also given him reason to view the United States with contempt. He has negated our military power by implied threats to sabotage the Panama Canal and has shown he can easily survive our ineffectual economic sanctions and diplomatic protests. It is more than two years since a mob of Noriega supporters attacked the U.S. Embassy and four months since Noriega set his thugs on the victorious opposition candidates and negated the results of the Panamanian election.

Only now has the United States responded by withdrawing its ambassador. That's a joke.

Back in May, Bush said that, "If we fail to send a clear signal when democracy is imperiled, the enemies of constitutional government will become more dangerous. And that's why events in Panama place an enormous responsibility on all nations in the democratic community."

Nice words, but so far unsupported by action. Does no one give a damn?

An Anthem To Resilience

George Will

TREBLINKA, Poland — The earth here is unquiet. Wind and rain, and insects and small burrowing animals stir the sandy soil, bringing to the surface small white and gray substances. They are flecks of compressed ashes, and bits of bones. In a circle 15 feet in diameter, a visitor to this site of a Nazi death camp sees on the ground parts of an adult's finger and a child's rib.

Recently an American delegation was here and at other Holocaust sites to receive artifacts from the Polish government. They will be permanent exhibits at the Holocaust Memorial Museum that will open adjacent to the Mall in Washington in 1992.

One such artifact is freight car 11688. Thanks to meticulous German record-keeping, meticulousness necessary for an administrative task as complex as genocide, we know that this 27-foot cattle car was used on the 60-mile shuttle — trains of 60 such cars, each car carrying 100 Jews — between the Warsaw ghetto and Treblinka.

Some said that literature itself would be the final victim of the "final solution," that imagination must flag and words must fail in attempts to encompass it, that silence is the only possible response. Not true. There can be sermons in stones, as in the shattered bricks and masonry that are the shards of the Warsaw ghetto, taken for the Museum from just a few inches below the surface of rebuilt Warsaw.

From Majdanek are coming canisters that contained Zyklon-B gas pellets, blue stains from which are still on the walls of the gas chambers. Also coming are 2,000 of the 820,000 pairs of shoes piled to the rafters of Majdanek barracks. More than 10,000 artifacts have been received from survivors in America and elsewhere in response to an appeal. They will be sifted for suitable displays in a building designed by the firm of I.M. Pei, a design of solemn commemoration but also evoking the industrial nature of the crime.

It has been said that we make our buildings, and then they make us. The Museum will make memories for rising generations, expanding their consciousness of the awful possibilities of human action. Thus it will be, fundamentally, a museum serving philosophy. It will start from extreme particularity — shoes, bricks, canisters, an event: Hitler's war against the Jews. However, it will stir visitors to the most general reflections on the nature of man and (hence the Museum's proper place on the Mall) the great questions of governance.

The cooperation of Polish authorities with the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council has been overshadowed by the controversy concerning the establishment of a Catholic convent at Auschwitz, in a building originally used to store Zyklon-B. Cardinal Glemp, who wants to abrogate the agreement by which the convent was to have been removed by now, is a useful anachronism. He is a living museum exhibit of lumpen anti-Semitism (Jews are cosmopolitan outsiders, they control the mass media, they are responsible for anti-Semitism). Lumpen anti-Semitism made possible the seizure of power by virulent anti-Semites.

Without questioning the good motives of the nuns, who wish to pray for all victims, Jewish leaders rightly see the convent as yet another act having the effect of diminishing the Holocaust, sinking it back into the stream of history by blurring its monstrous clarity. That clarity is a function of the Holocaust's particularity: All the resources of a modern state were turned toward the destruction of one people, the Jews.

Yes, others were killed. But if there had been no Jews in Europe, there would have been no Holocaust. There would have been no Hitler. No Treblinka.

At the peak of its frenzy, Treblinka was the worst of the Nazi works. In an area you can walk across in 10 minutes, they probably killed more people than live today in Cincinnati. Here, there was not, as there was at Auschwitz, an atom of demonic utilitarianism in the form of slave labor for industry. Here, the slaughter was single-minded.

At Treblinka one sees...nothing. And everything. Nothing, in that the Germans tried to erase every trace of the camp. All that are here are memorials — rough-hewn stones for each Jewish community annihilated — and ashes and bones. And a silence. A curator says birds do not sing here. I believe him.

But here you also see everything. Treblinka is the starkest testimony to the radical evil that gives the Holocaust its stunning uniqueness, its apartness from all other human experience. The radicalism was in its furious focus on Jews.

There would have been no Holocaust if there had been an Israel — a haven. Standing in the doorway of a prisoners' barrack at Auschwitz-Birkenau, it is stirring to see far across the camp, through the stubble of brick chimneys that are all that remain from any wooden barracks, the blue and white flag of Israel borne by young Israeli visitors.

Architecture, it is said, is frozen music. The Museum will not be a dirge. It will be an anthem to the resilience of a people, and of people.

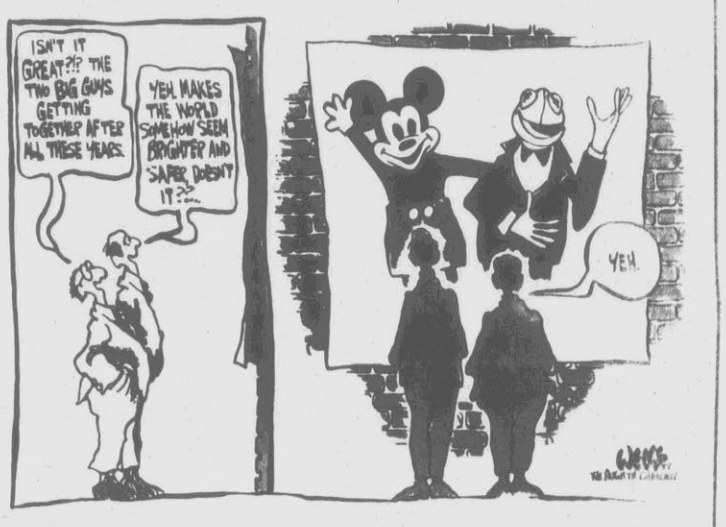
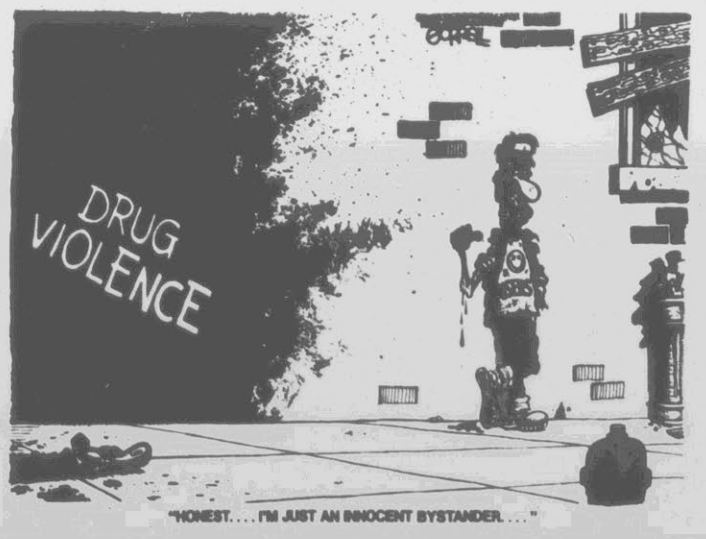
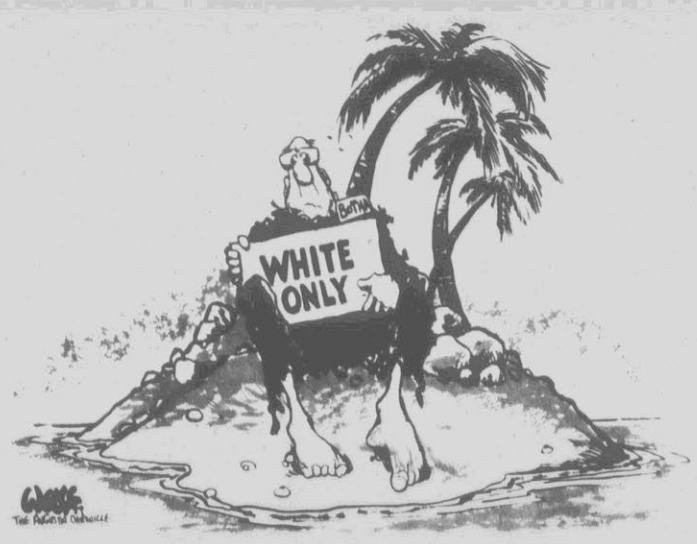
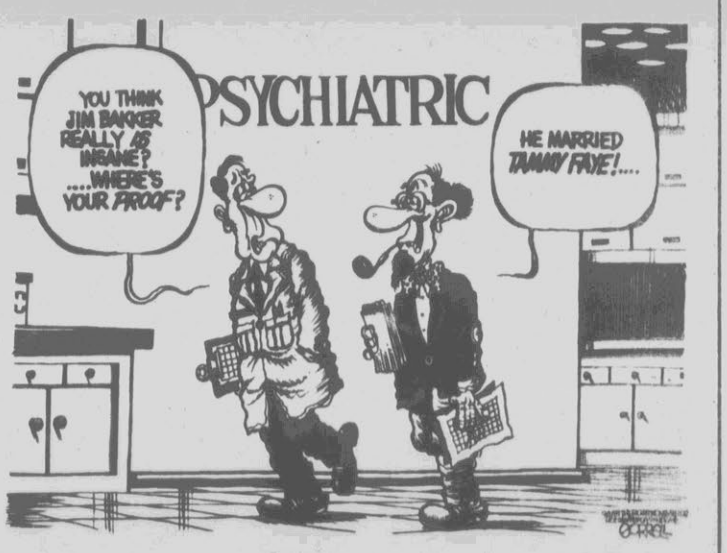
A Look At The World From The Cartoonists' Corner









Numbers Grow In Hungarian Refugee Camps

By Alex Bandy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUDAPEST, Hungary — The number of East Germans waiting in shelters swelled to nearly 7,000 Saturday as more refugees poured into Hungary in hopes of being included in a mass migration to West Germany.

Seventy refugees fled from the camps to Austria overnight, but Hungary was forced to open two new makeshift shelters to accommodate the estimated 200 East Germans who continue to arrive in Hungary each day.

There are now almost 7,000 East Germans waiting for word that Hungary will become the first East bloc government to help the citizens of another communist nation go west, Hungarian Red Cross leader Csilla von Boeselager said Saturday.

They were being housed in tent communities and boarding houses in Budapest and in a summer camp taken over by nearly 2,000 refugees on the shores of Lake Balaton.

Refugees who talked to reporters Saturday appeared hopeful they could leave early next week. They were reacting to reports from Hungary's Communist Party President Rezso Nyers and West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher that the refugees will be taken to West Germany soon.

"We can pack our few things together any moment and leave," said one East German who refused to give his name. "Let's hope it's soon."

Red Cross officials who requested anonymity said it was still not clear whether the refugees would be taken in buses, trains, or their own cars.

Austrian railroad officials said more than a week ago that they had 50 rail cars ready to go if they got word that a "freedom train" would take the East Germans from Hungary across Austria to tent cities in Bavaria.

The East Germans have ridden a roller coaster of emotions in the past 10 days. Initial optimism gave way to disillusionment when top Hungarian officials said the situation might take weeks to resolve.

Hungary has been caught between the two Germanys in the crisis. It is anxious to prove to Bonn that Budapest has a new commitment to Western concepts of human rights, but fearful of deepening an ideological rift with the hard-line Communists in East Berlin. Under a long-standing bilateral agreement, Hungary is obliged to return home East Germans fleeing to the West.

The camps, meanwhile, have celebrated at least two baptisms and one wedding. Andras Kovacs, an official at the largest Budapest facility, said in an interview that the unidentified bride at one wedding was so grateful for the shelter she received that she gave her bouquet to camp officials.

Six thousand East Germans have fled over the border with Austria since Hungary began dismantling fortifications along the divide in May. Seventy more arrived in Austria early Saturday after trudging through territory that still contains barbed wire, flares and other remnants of the Iron Curtain.

Red Cross officials noted the number was down from the 100 or so who arrived the night before, and they attributed the decrease to growing optimism in the camps that the refugees will be taken to West Germany.

Britain Says Bomber Will Be Released

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Britain said Saturday it will free an Iranian convicted on bombing charges after nine years in prison. Iran has indicated it would like to exchange the Iranian for a jailed Briton.

The Foreign Office said it will release Kourosh Fouladi, a former doorman at the Iranian Embassy who was convicted in 1982 after a car bombing attempt and sentenced to 10 years in jail. Authorities said two of Fouladi's accomplices were killed in the explosion in West London.

In August, Deputy Foreign Minister Mahmoud Vaezi of Iran linked Fouladi's case with that of Roger Cooper, a Briton who has been imprisoned in Iran without trial since 1985 on suspicion of spying.

However, Foreign Office Minister William Waldegrave said earlier this year there was no provision in British law for exchanging Fouladi for Cooper.

A British Foreign Office official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Iranian's release "has absolutely nothing to do" with Cooper.

A spokesman for the Home Office, speaking about Fouladi's release, said Saturday: "He was convicted and sentenced to 10 years which he has now served, taking into account normal remission which is available to any prisoner. He will now be deported to Iran."

Britain had been trying to improve ties with Iran, but relations soured after the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini issued a death threat in February against British author Salman Rushdie.

Trip To States Off For Primate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Roman Catholic primate Jozef Glemp, who has been at the center of a dispute over a convent at the Auschwitz death camp, has canceled a planned trip to the United States, the state news agency reported Saturday.

The PAP agency said the leader of Poland's Roman Catholic Church is postponing his visit because of "circumstances not favorable" for the trip. It did not refer to the controversy over the convent.

Glemp was to visit Chicago, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Detroit, Washington and Boston later this month.

The primate has been at the center of the dispute over the presence of Carmelite nuns at the site of the Nazi death camp. The convent is in a former warehouse just outside the camp site.

The Polish church did not meet a Feb. 22 deadline to move the convent to an interfaith center as agreed under a 1987 accord reached by Catholic and Jewish leaders.

Many Jews and others view the nuns' presence as an offensive intrusion of Christian symbols at a place where 2.5 million Jews were murdered by the Nazis during World War II.

Glemp's efforts to calm the dispute, which has brought protesters to the convent, backfired when he said the pact should be renegotiated.

The Bill Lewis era at East Carolina opened with a bang Saturday night in Ficklen Stadium as the Pirates romped to a 41-6 victory over Bowling Green University.

The Pirates, however, turned out to be their own worst enemy in the game, stopping themselves on a number of occasions with mistakes — the kind of mistakes that give coaches nightmares. Against a more formidable opponent, it could have been a disaster.

The Pirates were flagged for 13 penalties for 121 yards — just one penalty less than the school record. And two Pirate passes were picked off.

"We were terribly sloppy with penalties," Lewis said. "That has to be corrected. There is only one reason and that's lack of concentration."

There were, however, enough bright spots to make a difference — and the defense played quite well against Bowling Green's standard — and its weird PoeDitch Rat formation.

The formation, used on two series by the Falcons, spreads the field. Most of the linemen form up on the right side of the field, with one receiver there. The other backs and receivers go to the far left side, leaving only the center to snap the ball back to the quarterback, waiting in a shotgun situation. "We practiced it since the first day of practice," Bowling Green coach Moe Ankney said. "We planned to use it earlier, but we had such terrible field position in the first quarter. When we finally got some decent field position, we used it and got the field goal."

Lewis said the formation was very unusual and "it caught us completely by surprise. That came completely out of left field. It required some scrambling of our defense. We got out of the first series just giving up a field goal. We saw it and tried to formulate a plan. We couldn't communicate with them on the field. We did call a time out but it didn't give us enough time."

Even then the Falcons could not put the ball into the end zone, settling for a 36-yard field goal by Jason Zeller. And when they came back with it later, the Pirates were ready for it, stopping it cold.

For the most part, the Pirates were all over Bowling Green. The defense limited the running attack to just 57 yards, giving up 172 yards through the air as two Falcon quarterbacks connected on 20 of 40 passes. Two of those were picked off, one returned 68 yards for a touchdown by Chris Hall.

"This was a total team effort," Lewis said, "and I mean a TOTAL

Tar Heels Open With 49-7 Romp

Blount Rushes For 102 Yards

CHAPEL HILL — Senior quarterback Jonathan Hall provided the leadership, but a very young supporting cast drew many of the plaudits as North Carolina beat Virginia Military 49-7 Saturday.

North Carolina coach Mack Brown, who suffered through a 1-10 season last year, had 10 players in starting roles for the first time, including four true freshmen. Even so, the Tar Heels appeared to have VMI outmanned.

"I think it's obvious we had better players than VMI," Brown said. "That's something we need to understand because we have so many young guys out there. But we are an improved football team."

Among the freshmen on the field was linebacker Tommy Thigpen, who finished with nine tackles to lead the Tar Heel defense.

"All I could think of was that if I made a mistake, 50,000 people were going to see it," Thigpen said.

Senior lineman Cecil Gray said Thigpen's performance was the best he'd seen of a freshman at North Carolina.

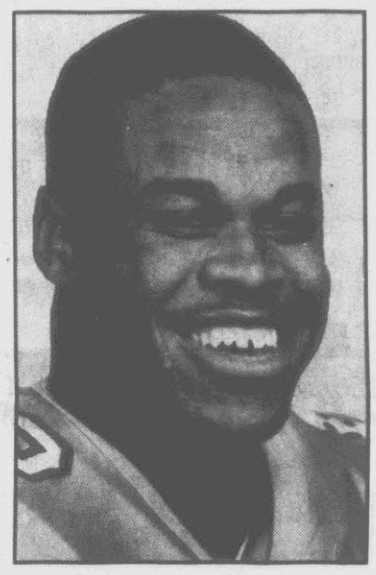
Still, it was Hall who led the way, completing 13 of 24 passes for 167 yards and two touchdowns before leaving after three quarters.

"We felt good about Jonathan Hall," Brown said. "We felt that in an opening ballgame he had a good command of the offense. He checked quite a bit and by and large he did an outstanding job of getting us in the right play at the right time."

The Tar Heels also ground out 318 yards rushing, led by Eric Blount, who had 102 yards and two touchdowns. Randy Jordan ran for 98 yards and another score while fullback Michael Benefield also scored two touchdowns.

Up 28-0 at halftime, North Carolina scored early in the third quarter on Benefield's 17-yard touchdown run.

With 6:30 left in the third quarter, North Carolina took possession of the ball at the VMI 47 and ran through the Keydet defense in four plays, taking a 42-0 lead on Jordan's 6-yard run.



Eric Blount

Blount's 33-yard run late in the third quarter gave the Tar Heels a 49-0 lead and capped a 75-yard, six-play drive.

In the first half, North Carolina opened with an 80-yard drive that set up Hall's 5-yard scoring pass to freshman Joey Jauch.

Defensive back Rondell Jones intercepted a Tony Douglas pass midway through the first quarter to set up Benefield's 40-yard touchdown for a 14-0 lead.

North Carolina went up 21-0 in the second quarter on Blount's 11-yard touchdown run.

Wolfpack Outguns Jackets

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

RALEIGH — Barry Anderson admitted it wasn't North Carolina State's best defensive showing, but two plays by the senior defensive back made the difference for the Wolfpack.

State outdueled Georgia Tech, 38-28, thanks in large part to plays by Anderson late in each half.

His end-zone interception in the final seconds of the second quarter gave the Wolfpack a 10-point edge at the half. Then with State holding a slim 31-28 lead, he also came up with a big hit, causing and recovering a fumble by David Stegall with just under seven minutes remaining.

"We were in a two-deep coverage," he said. "I saw them look to the guy streaking toward (the sideline). I got a late break on the ball so I knew there was no way I was going to intercept it, so I went for the hit.

"He caught it and got his feet on the ground. Then we made contact."

That contact got the Wolfpack the ball back and eventually led to a 4-yard scoring pass from Shane Montgomery to Mike Kavulic with 3:48 remaining that put the Wolfpack back up by 10 at 38-28.

"As a defensive team, I don't think we played too well," Anderson said. "They earned some things but also gave them some."

Still, Anderson's half-closing plays loomed large.

"I they they were very important," he said. "At the end of the first half, if they'd have gotten seven points, we would have gone into the lockerroom down.

"And from their standpoint, it would have pumped them up."

Still, Tech kept it close throughout, coming back again and again to stay within striking distance.

"The thing that surprised me the most was that we really didn't play that well defensively," Tech coach Bobby Ross said. "Offensively, we made some mistakes, but I thought that we kept fighting and coming back.

"It wasn't a real pretty game. The positive thing was we kept coming back."

Tech started a redshirt freshman, Shawn Jones, at quarterback, and while he struggled at times (three interceptions), he proved a threat both on the ground (41 yards rushing) and in the air (172 yards passing, one touchdown).

But Tech was done in by its own turnovers. Stegall's fumble came at a time when the Yellow Jackets had enough time (seven minutes) to slowly drive for the winning score and leave State with little time on the clock.

Still, Tech got one more possession with 3:22 to go, but could move no further than its 28.

"We know we're not invincible, but I think our defense gave a great effort," State coach Dick Sheridan said.

"We were fortunate that our defense came up with the big plays to get those turnovers back."

And when State got the ball back, it invariable ended up in the hands of Montgomery, who passed for 268 yards and three touchdowns.

The Wolfpack had particular success early with underneath passes.

"They didn't take (halfback) Chris Williams underneath," Montgomery said. "We were getting six and seven yards every time. We got a lot underneath.

"Then the linebackers started stepping up and we got passes to Mike Kavulic on the corner routes."

Kavulic ended up with five catches for 78 yards, while Williams had eight for 77.

Still, Tech never got too far down. Ken Swilling in-

Graf Rallies To Win U.S. Open Title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — It wasn't a Grand Slam. It felt just as good.

Steffi Graf won her third major tournament of the year Saturday, beating the heat and Martina Navratilova 3-6, 7-5, 6-1 in the U.S. Open final. The only blemish on the top seed's record in Slam events this year was a final-round loss to Arantxa Sanchez Vicario in the French Open.

"It's very difficult to play in the four tournaments and do the best you can," said Graf, who held a 5-3 lead in the third set of the final at Paris. "I'm very happy I won another three. That's incredible.

"There was nothing I could do about (the French). I was sick at the end of the tournament and I lost too much energy. At 5-3 in the third set, my cramps were so bad I couldn't do anything about it."

The match Saturday ended with an aceon a second serve by Graf, who then sprinted to the courtside boxes to hug her father and several others. She also signaled to a group of fans high in the stadium that had been chanting her name throughout the 1 hour, 50 minute match.

Graf has won seven of the last eight majors — the third woman to do so and first since Margaret Smith Court in 1969-70 — while Navratilova hasn't won one since the 1987 Open, when she beat Graf for the title.

"It was really just a matter of a couple of points here and there," said Navratilova, who received an enormous ovation from the crowd at the trophy presentation. "I'll keep trying until those points go my way.

"It's very difficult to play in the four tournaments and do the best you can. I'm very happy I won another three. That's incredible."

—Steffi Graf

"A half-inch can change a game; it can change a career," she added. "A half an inch and Boris Becker would be out of this tournament (instead of in the men's final). He's in the final and can go on and win the tournament. But a half-inch the other way and he loses in the second round."

The comeback victory, in temperatures above 100 degrees on the court, came less than 24 hours after Graf suffered leg cramps at the end of her semifinal match with Gabriela Sabatini. But, as usual, Graf was relentless Saturday, showing no signs of any lingering health problems.

"I knew it was not going to be that easy," she said. "I was feeling very confident after winning the second set. I gave it everything, and I said if I get cramps at the end, it doesn't matter.

"Yesterday, I thought I was going to lose it, I played so bad," Graf said. "I didn't see any way out of it."

Nor did it appear there were many ways out when Navratilova surged into the lead.

"She really had it all going for her," Graf said of Navratilova. "After such a tough match yesterday, I just hung in and gave it all I had."

It was enough, and Graf celebrated a near-Slam. Navratilova failed to win a major for the second straight year. The 32-year-old No. 2 seed was trying to become the oldest woman to win the Open and had rededicated herself with a stringent training regimen.

She even was up a set and a break, but wilted. Graf broke four of six service games in the second and third sets.

"There was no fatigue," Navratilova said. "I wish I could blame it on my body, but I can't."

Navratilova has been beaten by Graf the last three times they've met, although Navratlova holds a 7-6 lifetime edge. It was Graf's first win here over Navratilova.

"I know how to beat her," Navratilova said. "But I wasn't able to do it again. I didn't play the best tennis I can play. It's disappointing. I just handed it to her."

The first set went on serve through seven games. Graf had three break points in the third game, but Navratilova saved them and held with an ace.

She broke Graf in the eighth game at love and then held serve at love to take the opening set. Navratilova, serving superbly, hit 82 percent of her first serves in the set.

Navratilova blew a break point in the first game of the second set, then broke in the third game after once again easily holding serve.

Graf couldn't take advantage of two break points in the next game, but she did break in the eighth game to make it 4-4.

At 6-5 for Graf, Navratilova fell behind 0-40. She saved one set point, then put a backhand approach into the net.

It was the first set Navratilova had lost at this Open — she had at least one 6-0 set in each of her first five wins.

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Major Harris and Garrett Ford ran for second-half touchdowns Saturday as No. 17 West Virginia capitalized on a pair of turnovers and beat Maryland 14-10.

The Mountaineers, 2-0, trailed 10-0 at halftime but rallied with an interception and fumble recovery by safety Darrell Whitmore. Maryland, 0-2, lost to a Top 25 team for the second straight week.

After taking a 14-10 lead on Ford's 1-yard touchdown run with 9:34 left, Tim Williams fumbled on a punt-return attempt and Maryland's Dean Green recovered on the Mountaineers' 19-yard line.

Maryland got one first down but on a fourth-and-goal from the seven came up two yards short. Ricky Johnson, taking a swing pass to the right, was knocked out of bounds at the 2 by linebacker Steve Grant.

West Virginia's winning touchdown capped an 89-yard, 11-play drive that began after Whitmore recovered a fumble by Maryland's Barry Johnson following a 52-yard reception.

Harris, who completed 11 of 19 passes for 150 yards and rushed for 64 yards on 14 carries, pulled West Virginia to within 10-7 on an 8-yard touchdown run around right end with 9:08 left in the third quarter.

The Mountaineers touchdown capped a nine-play, 65-yard drive set up by Whitmore's interception of Neil O'Donnell's pass. O'Donnell completed 19 of 31 passes for 262 yards.

West Virginia rallied after being held scoreless for a half for the first time since Sept. 12, 1987, a span of 21 games.

Maryland outgained the Mountaineers 235-157 in the first half and opened a 10-0 lead on Dan DeArmas' 28-yard field with 3:15 left in the second quarter.

The Terps took a 7-0 lead when Ricky Johnson swept right, broke several tackles, and ran 46 yards for a touchdown with 2:21 left in the first period. It came three minutes after a 6-yard scoring pass from Harris to Adrian Moss was nullified by an offensive interference penalty.

Virginia Stuns Penn State, 14-6

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Virginia had more than Penn State on Saturday. Two Moores to be exact.

Shawn Moore threw two first-half touchdown passes to Herman Moore as Virginia upset 12th-ranked Penn State 14-6 and sent the Nittany Lions to their sixth loss in seven games.

Penn State, coming off its first losing season in 50 years, managed only a pair of second-half field goals by Ray Tarasi. The Nittany Lions needed a touchdown and 2-point conversion when they began their final drive on their own 20. But Penn State stalled at the Virginia 23 on a fourth-down incomplete pass with 26 seconds left.

"I'm disappointed but not discouraged," Penn State coach Joe Paterno said. "We're not good enough right now to beat Virginia. I don't think it's a crushing defeat. It's a disappointment certainly. You always like to start the season with a good, solid win."

Shawn Moore completed 14 of 25 passes for 194 yards and two touchdowns for Virginia, 1-1, which lost to Notre Dame 36-13 last week. Herman Moore caught four passes for 73 yards.

"He's not pretty at times, but he gets the job done," Cavaliers coach George Welsh said of Shawn Moore. "We can win with him."

Virginia had lost to Notre Dame last week in the Kickoff Classic.

"It helped to have a game under our belts," said Welsh, a one-time Paterno assistant.

Welsh said he was concerned when Virginia missed a field goal with 3:59 left in the game. "Usually that's the kiss of death."

Virginia drove 56 yards on 11 plays for its first score. A 24-yard touchdown pass capped the drive with 5:54 left in the first quarter. Marcus Wilson carried five times for 24 yards in the drive and caught a 7-yard pass.

The Cavaliers made it to 14-0 just 2:44 into the second quarter on a six-play, 64-yard drive capped by an 11-yard touchdown pass. Shawn Moore threw a 36-yard pass to Tim Finkelston that moved the ball to Penn State's 25.

Tarasi's 36-yard field goal closed Penn State to 14-3 at 4:30 of the third quarter. Tarasi kicked a 34-yarder with 1:53 left in the third.

Penn State running Blair Thomas gained 86 yards on 13 carries in his first game after a one-year layoff following knee reconstruction surgery. On the second field-goal drive, he gained at first down at Virginia's 21 but Paterno took him out.

"It was a hot day," Paterno said. "I wanted fresh legs in there. It's a long season. We've got 10 more games. On a day like this I wouldn't have intended for him to do more than that. I never thought Blair would carry more than 12-14 times in the game. He ran back punts, we threw the ball to him and he had a good active day."

MADISON, Wis. — Craig Erickson shook off a sluggish start to throw four touchdown passes, including two to Wesley Carroll, as No. 3 Miami of Florida routed Wisconsin 51-3 Saturday in Dennis Erickson's debut as coach.

Miami, in its first game since losing Coach Jimmy Johnson to the Dallas Cowboys, has won 43 of its last 44 regular-season games, including 23 of 24 on the road.

Carroll, with seven catches for 112 yards, caught second-quarter touchdown passes of 15 and 10 yards and set up four first-half scores with 122 yards in punt returns.

Erickson, who missed on nine of his first 10 passes, threw a 4-yard touchdown pass to Randal Hill with 14 seconds left in the second quarter, giving the Hurricanes a 34-3 halftime lead.

Erickson threw a 16-yard touchdown pass to Doyle Aaron in the third quarter to make it 44-3. Erickson completed 17 of 37 passes for 281 yards before Gino Torretta replaced him midway through the third quarter.

Wisconsin, playing before a sparse home crowd of 38,646, took a 3-0 lead on Rich Thompson's 38-yard field goal three minutes into the game.

Miami tied it three minutes later on Carlos Huerta's 28-yarder following a blocked punt by Bobby Harden.

Carroll set up the next four Hurricanes scores with twisting punt returns. His 34-yard return set up Huerta's 44-yard field goal that made it 6-3. Minutes later, Carroll was loose for a 36-yard return to the Badgers 24.

Leonard Conley carried six straight times, the last for a 1-yard touchdown that made it 13-3 Miami. Carroll, a junior college transfer from Northwest Mississippi, had another 20-yard return early in the second quarter and five plays later caught Erickson's 15-yard toss for a 20-yard lead.

Carroll returned another punt 20 yards to the Wisconsin 35 and caught a 10-yard touchdown pass from Erickson with 1:51 left in the half. Miami got the ball back with only 40 seconds to go but drove 52 yards as Erickson passed to Dale Dawkins for 44 yards and then found Hill for the touchdown.

Kevin Gibbs' 6-yard touchcodown with 7:57 left in the game capped the scoring.

Boston College.....10

NEWTON, Mass. — Pittsburgh's defense dominated Boston College as Carnel Smith scored on a 57-yard fumble return and Marc Spindler set up 10 points with a blocked field goal and a forced fumble for a 29-10 victory Saturday.

The 23rd-ranked Panthers built a 20-0 halftime lead before giving up their first touchdown of the season after allowing just two field goals in seven quarters.

Coming off a 38-3 victory over Pacific, Pitt, 2-0, spoiled the Eagles' season opener in the battle of independent schools.

Spindler, a safety-tackle, and Smith, an end, ganged up on quarterback Mark Kamphaus, giving Pitt a 20-0 lead 2:23 before halftime.

With a third-and-4 at the Pitt 38, Kamphaus was hit in the pocket by Spindler. The ball popped out of Kamphaus' hand, and Smith caught it in the air, running for the 57-yard touchdown.

After Brian Lowe's 30-yard field goal in the third quarter and Ed Toner's 1-yard touchdown dive 26 seconds into the fourth cut the lead to 20-10, Smith tackled Kamphaus for a safety with 9:06 left in the game.

Spindler also set up Pitt's first score, a 25-yard field goal by Ed Frazier 10:07 into the game. Spindler blocked Lowe's 50-yard field goal attempt, and the ball rolled all the way to the Boston College 17, where the Eagles' Kevin Lyles recovered. Frazier kicked his field goal seven plays later.

Frazier added a 20-yard field goal with 5:35 left in the first half. Pitt finished the scoring with 3:28 to play on Van Pelt's 5-yard touchdown pass to Henry Tuten.

Syracuse.....43
Temple.....3

PHILADELPHIA — Bill Scharr completed 14 of 20 passes for 154 yards and No. 13 Syracuse beat Temple 43-3 Saturday for its fourth consecutive victory over the Owls.

John Biskup became the first Syracuse kicker to miss an extra point in 11 years, ending the Orangemen's NCAA-record streak at 262. Syracuse, playing its season opener, had not missed since Dave Jacobs failed against Boston College on Nov. 18, 1978.

Michael Owens gained 91 yards on 15 carries and scored one touchdown. He also threw a 37-yard pass that set up another score and punted for 34 yards on a third-down quick kick. Rob Moore caught five passes for 116 yards and a touchdown.

Victor Lay completed 10 of 23 passes for 71 yards for Temple, 0-2. Lay became a starter after Matt Baker's separated his shoulder last week against Western Michigan.

Qadry Ismail's 56-yard kickoff return set up Scharr's 1-yard touchdown run on Syracuse's first drive. Greg Walker made it 14-0 later in the quarter on a 1-yard run after Owen's 52-yard run on a pitchout.

Bob Wright's 43-yard field goal pulled Temple to within 14-3 early in the second quarter and Fred Gunter blocked Biskup's 28-yard field goal attempt with 6:11 left in the half. But Temple failed to get a first down, punted and Scharr's 33-yard pass to Moore set up Duane Kinnon's 5-yard touchdown run with 1:47 remaining.

Following Biskup's missed extra point, Rob Thomson intercepted a Lay pass and returned it 45 yards for a touchdown for a 26-3 halftime lead.

KALAM[illegible]O, Mich. — Freshman Brad T[illegible]rew two touchdown passes [illegible]estern Michigan's defense held firm down the stretch Saturday, as the Broncos defeated Louisiana Tech 24-20.

The Broncos, 2-0, led 24-14 after three quarters. The Bulldogs, 1-1, scored with 5:02 left to play on a 32-yard pass from Gene Johnson to Bobby Slaughter, but Johnson's 2-point conversion pass failed.

Western Michigan was forced to punt on its next possession. Johnson drove Louisiana Tech to the Broncos' 25-yard line, then threw three incomplete passes before the Western Michigan defense stopped a fourth-and-10 swing pass six inches short of a first down with 1:18 remaining.

Tayles completed 18 of 36 passes for 316 yards for Western Michigan. Johnson was 17-of-43 for 245 yards for Louisiana Tech.

Mississippi Topples Gators

Morris Haunted By Former Roommate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Chauncey Godwin, a former quarterback, picked on a former roommate Saturday with two pass interceptions that helped Mississippi upset Florida 24-19 in a Southeastern Conference football game.

Godwin returned one interception 58 yards for a touchdown and set up another with a 19-yard return, both off former Mississippi high school star Kyle Morris.

The two roomed together during the 1987 Mississippi high school all-star game.

"Going down the sideline I looked at him (Morris)," Godwin said. "I saw him there, then he was blocked, and that was it."

Morris, who also was charged with a fumble on a bad pitch that Ole Miss recovered, was booed by the crowd of 70,014 from late in the second quarter until the end of the game.

"He had a tough day with the crowd on him," Godwin said. "I hope he bounces back, because I know he's a good guy."

The Rebels, 2-0 overall and 1-0 in the SEC, also used a 28-yard fake punt pass from Charles Childers to fourth team defensive back Gerald Vaughn to set up another touchdown.

All Ole Miss scoring followed turnovers in the season-opening loss by the Gators.

It was Mississippi's first victory over Florida since 1973, ending a string of three losses in the series the Rebels lead 9-7-1.

Emmitt Smith, who rushed for 117 yards to crack the 100-yard mark for a school-record 15th time, scored Florida's touchdowns on a 5-yard run early in the final quarter and a 2-yard plunge with 1:37 left.

John David Francis kicked two field goals of 36 and 34 yards, but missed from 51 and 29 yards.

Kentucky.....17
Indiana.....14

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Alfred Rawls tallied two touchdowns and rushed for 107 yards and Kentucky's defense stopped Indiana on a late drive to the 1-yard line to post a 17-14 victory Saturday.

Rawls, a senior tailback from Pitts, Ga., scored on a 67-yard run in the first quarter and caught a 22-yard pass from Freddie Maggard for another touchdown in the second quarter.

Kentucky's margin of victory in the season-opener for both teams came on a 47-yard field goal by Ken Willis with 8:18 left in the third period.

But the heroics went to Kentucky's defense after Indiana gained possession on the Kentucky 20 on Dave Ane's recovery of Al Baker's fumble with 8:26 left in the game.

Three plays later tailback Anthony Thompson went up the middle for eight yards to the 9-yard line to give Indiana a first down. A 1-yard run by Thompson and two carries by quarterback Dave Schnell set up a fourth down inside the 1-yard line.

Thompson got the call for a dive over the middle, but he was greeted in midair by linebacker Craig Benzinger and safety Ronnie Robinson as Kentucky regained possession with 5:19 to go.

Rawls came the the rescue for Kentucky with a six-yard run to the 13 on a third-down situation for a first down.

Kentucky's drive stalled at the 19, but a roughing penalty on linebacker Troy Mason on Bill Hawk's punt with one minute left kept the ball in Kentucky's possession, which ran out the clock.

Thompson, who finished with 117 yards on 24 carries, scored on a 10-yard pass and 1-yard run.

Nebraska Routs Huskies; Va. Tech Ties Gamecocks

LINCOLN, Neb. — Ken Clark, who played only the first 20 minutes, rushed for 168 yards and one touchdown as No. 4 Nebraska overcame five first-half turnovers Saturday and beat Northern Illinois 48-17.

Leodis Flowers added two touchdowns for the Cornhuskers, 1-0, who were tied 17-17 at halftime and scored on their first four possessions of the second half.

Northern Illinois, 1-1, recovered two Nebraska fumbles in the first quarter, including one by Morgan Gregory on a punt return that was covered by Mike Jordan at the Huskies 47. Adam Dach went over from the 2-yard line nine plays later.

Clark left with a sore knee about five minutes into the second quarter. He scored Nebraska's first touchdown on a 2-yard run on the Cornhuskers first possession of the game.

Nebraska, which had 557 yards of offense and allowed 174, went ahead 17-7 as Gregg Barrios kicked a 28-yard field goal and Flowers scored on a 5-yard run in the second quarter.

Northern Illinois tied the game 17-17 aided by two Nebraska turnovers. Nebraska's Richard Bell lost another punt and Northern's Paul Rogan recovered at the 34. Dach scored on a 17-yard run. Cary Caliendo, whose brother Chris plays defense for Nebraska, then recovered an errant pitch at the Conhuskers 20 and John Ivanic kicked a 36-yard field goal with 20 seconds left in the half.

Nebraska scored on all three of its third-quarter possessions to go back on top 38-17. Gerry Gdowski threw an 11-yard touchdown to Monte Kratzenstein, Flowers ran for a 4-yard touchdown and Mickey Joseph threw a 12-yard touchdown to Chris Garrett.

Chris Drennan kicked a 55-yard field goal, equaling a school record set by Paul Rogers against Kansas in 1969 and tied by Billy Todd against Kansas in 1977.

Fourth-string quarterback Keithen McCant ran 53 yards to set up Mark Dowse's 10-yard touchdown run with 1:41 left.

Oklahoma.....33
Baylor.....7

NORMAN, Okla. — Backup quarterback Chris Melson scored once and directed two other first-half touchdown drives Saturday as No. 8 Oklahoma beat Baylor 33-7.

Oklahoma, 2-0, gained 338 yards, all rushing. The Sooners defense held Baylor, 0-1, to 206 yards, only 56 on the ground. The Bears made three first downs in the opening half as Oklahoma went ahead 28-0.

Steve Collins, Oklahoma's starting quarterback, broke the pinky on his right hand on the game's first play, and Melson finished the four-play series. Collins returned on the next possession and led Oklahoma to a touchdown in 11 plays, but wasn't able to return.

Melson, a third-year sophomore, led Oklahoma to a score on his first full series, which was capped by a 19-yard run by Mike Gaddis. Gaddis had scored the Sooners' first touchdown on a 1-yard dive.

Midway through the second quarter, Melson took the Sooners 56 yards for a score and made the big play himself, going 44 yards on an option to the Bears 5. Leon Perry scored two plays later from the 1.

Melson's 1-yard dive on the next possession made it 28-0.

Baylor's only touchdown came in the third quarter on a 2-yard pass from Brad Goebel to Alonzo Pierce.

Colorado.....45
Colorado St.....20

BOULDER, Colo. — Eric Bieniemy ran for 156 yards and three touchdowns Saturday, leading No. 9 Colorado over Colorado State 45-20.

Colorado, 2-0, trailed 17-14 midway through the second quarter but scored on four consecutive possessions for a 38-20 lead.

Both teams lost their starting quarterbacks. Colorado State's Kevin Verdugo aggravated a shoulder injury late in the first half, and Colorado's Darian Hagan was sidelined in the third quarter by a bruised right forearm.

After Ken Culbertson's field goal tied the score, Jeff Campbell's 66-yard run set up Bieniemy's 6-yard touchdown that put the Buffaloes ahead 24-17.

Colorado went 61 yards following the second-half kickoff, with J.J. Flannigan scoring on a 14-yard tightroping run down the left sideline. The drive was kept alive when officials assessed personal-foul penalties on both teams on a third-down play. Defensive personal fouls bring an automatic first down.

Colorado State, 0-2, closed to 31-20 on Mike Brown's 38-yard field goal but Colorado drove 61 yards and backup quarterback Charles Johnson dived 2 yards for a touchdown and a 38-20 lead.

Bieniemy, who earlier went 44 yards for a score, capped the scoring by diving for a 9-yard touchdown midway through the final quarter.

Washington.....19
Texas A&M.....6

SEATTLE — Washington unveiled its new one-back, short-passing offense Saturday and, with Cary Conklin doing the passing and Greg Lewis doing most of the running, beat 15th-ranked Texas A&M 19-6.

The Huskies scored only one touchdown, a 22-yard pass from Conklin to Mario Bailey in the opening quarter, but their new-look offense was a major success against a quality opponent. John McCallum kicked four field goals for Washington: from 35, 36, 36 and 37 yards.

Washington's defense, last in the Pacific-10 against the run last season when it gave up an average of 201 yards, held Texas A&M without a touchdown. Layne Talbot kicked a pair of field goals — from 32 and 27 yards — for the Aggies points.

Conklin completed 23 of 37 passes for 224 yards with no interceptions. Lewis had 29 carries for 133 yards. Texas A&M was held to 266 yards, only 77 on the ground.

Aggies quarterback Lance Pavlas completed 18 of 32 passes for 189 yards with one interception. Highly-touted Darren Lewis led Texas A&M's running attack with 52 yards on 15 carries.

Auburn.....55
Pacific.....0

AUBURN, Ala. — Alexander Wright caught four long touchdown passes and Auburn piled up 586 yards in total offense Saturday night as the fifth-ranked Tigers routed Pacific 55-0.

Wright caught scoring passes of 78, 73 and 60 yards from quarterback Reggie Slack, who completed 9-of-10 passes for 252 yards and four touchdowns in limited playing time. Wright also grabbed a 41-yard touchdown pass from Frank McIntosh, Slack's backup.

Auburn (1-0) totally dominated Pacific, which dropped to 0-2. The Big West Conference team, which hasn't had a winning season since 1977, was held to just 92 yards total offense.

Wright, a senior receiver who ran track for Auburn in the spring, set a new Southeastern Conference record for receiving yards in a game with 263. The old mark of 239 was set by Carlos Alvarez of Florida in 1969.

Auburn scored on the first play of the game. Wright caught a pass on the left sideline and raced 78 yards for a touchdown.

The Tigers scored two more times in the opening period. Stacy Danley capped a 58-yard drive with a 2-yard dive, and Wright caught a Slack pass across the middle and outran several Pacific defenders for a 65-yard score.

In the second quarter, Slack tossed his third touchdown pass, a 7-yarder to Chris Gray which increased Auburn's lead to 28-0. Slack was then replaced by McIntosh, who threw a 41-yard scoring pass to Wright on his first play.

Auburn's starters returned to the field to begin the second half. Once again, Wright caught a long scoring pass on the Tigers' first play, this one a 73-yarder from Slack.

Win Lyle added 41- and 23-yard field goals in the third quarter, and Darrell "Lectron" Williams dove over from the 1 with just 20 seconds left in the game for the Tigers' final score.

Virginia Tech.....17
S. Carolina.....17

But he won't be one of those questioning his decision to call on Collin Mackie to kick a 33-yard field goal with 52 seconds left to gain a 17-17 tie with Virginia Tech on Saturday night.

"I think it was the right decision," Woods said. "We had a chance to get it back, but we let them out of a hole. It was the right thing to do."

Virginia Tech coach Frank Beamer also said Woods' decision was probably the correct call.

"We sure as heck weren't playing for a tie," he said. "I kinda agree with Sparky. He only had one timeout remaining.

"I think he made the exact right decision. If I had the decision, I might have made the same decision."

After rallying to tie it at 14-14 at halftime, Virginia Tech took its first lead on Mickey Thomas' 26-yard field goal with 2:53 left in the third period.

South Carolina did not get past the Virginia Tech 45-yard line after that until its final drive, which began at its 47 with 2:00 left on a humid evening before 71,824 at Williams-Brice Stadium.

Quarterback Todd Ellis drove South Carolina to the Virginia Tech 16 with three straight completions — two to split end Robert Brooks. But South Carolina got no closer as Ellis tossed three straight incompletions, including one that was just off Brooks' fingertips in the end zone.

Neither team threatened after Mackie's field goal. Both teams are now 1-0-1.

The Hokies had one early threat in the second half, driving to the South Carolina 1. But the Gamecocks rose up to stop tailback Vaughan Hebron on fourth down to end the threat with 11:47 left in the game.

The Gamecocks had one chance to get the ball deep in Virginia Tech territory late in the game when Myron Richardson fumbled a punt. But Eros Sanchez recovered for the Hokies at the 5 with 4:44 left.

Virginia Tech quarterback Will Furrer hit 16 of 33 passes for 212 yards — his second straight week he's thrown for more than 200 yards.

But Hokies were hurt by the loss of tailback Jon Jeffries. Jeffries scored both Virginia Tech touchdowns and rushed for 59 yards before going out with an apparent knee injury with 4:37 left in the third period. He did not return.

Running back Harold Green, who rushed for 160 yards last week, led the Gamecocks with 129 yards on 21 carries. Ellis hit 10 of 23 passes for 136 yards and one touchdown. Ellis was sacked six times — including the final play inside the South Carolina 30.

South Carolina scored two first-quarter touchdowns in less than a five-minute span to go up 14-0. But Virginia Tech used two 81-yard drives in the second quarter to tie it at halftime.

Missouri.....14
Texas Christian.....10

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Junior college transfer Kent Kiefer tossed a 6-yard touchdown pass to Jim White early in the fourth quarter as Missouri battled back to beat Texas Christian 14-10 Saturday in the Tigers' debut under new coach Bob Stull.

Missouri rallied in the final half after Texas Christian ran and passed for 308 yards the first two quarters. The Tigers rolled 66 yards to their winning touchdown after covering 80 yards to score in the second quarter.

Kiefer completed 18 of 28 passes for 226 yards with three interceptions in rallying Missouri to its fourth straight season-opening win and 10th in its last 12.

Allen Scores Three TDs; ASU Stuns Deacons, 15-10

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Terry Allen scored three touchdowns in the first half, including a 73-yard scoring dash, that sparked 10th-ranked Clemson to a 34-23 victory over No. 16 Florida State Saturday night.

Freshman linebacker Wayne Simmons also scored on a 73-yard run after intercepting a Peter Tom Willis pass that propelled Clemson into a 21-0 lead early in the second quarter.

Allen, who sat out Clemson's opener because of disciplinary reasons, had scored Clemson's first two touchdowns on 1-yard runs. He finished with 130 yards on 20 carries.

Although the Tigers, now 2-0, led only 7-0 at the quarter, they totally dominated Florida State through the early going, racking up 148 yards of offense before the Seminoles got their initial first down.

Florida State (0-2) closed to within 21-7 when Dexter Carter scored on a 2-yard run with just 1:34 left in the half, but Allen answered with his 73-yard burst to give the Tigers a 28-7 lead.

Bill Mason kicked a 28-yard field goal on the final play of the half to pull Florida State to within 28-10.

The Seminoles drove 77 yards on the opening kickoff of the second half to chop their deficit to 28-16 on Paul Moore's 1-yard run. Willis, who passed for 242 yards in the game, was sacked looking for a receiver on the 2-point attempt.

Florida State threatened again on its next offensive series, but Moore fumbled at the Clemson 17 after a 20-yard run.

Clemson's Chris Gardocki, who kicked four extra points, added field goals of 29 and 26 yards in the final quarter.

Clemson, which avenged a 24-21 loss to Florida State a year ago that was set up by a fake punt, visits Virginia Tech next Saturday while Florida State travels to LSU.

Duke.....41
Northwestern.....31

DURHAM — Billy Ray passed for 295 yards and four touchdowns and Roger Boone became the first Duke back to rush for 200 yards in 17 years Saturday night as Duke held off Northwestern for a 41-31 victory.

Ray completed 18 of 27 passes in his second game as a Blue Devil. He has passed for 636 yards and six touchdowns in leading Duke to its 1-1 start.

Boone carried 24 times for 201 yards, the first such effort since Steve Jones gained the same amount against Wake Forest in 1972.

Ray hit Boone with a 16-yard touchdown pass to stretch Duke's lead to 34-16 with 14:54 left to play, but the Blue Devils fell into the same defensive lapse which plagued it last season and gave up a lot of points in the final quarter.

Northwestern drove 81 yards in 14 plays, scoring on Bob Christian's 12-yard run with 9:46 left. Bob Griswold caught a two-point conversion pass from Tim O'Brien to cut the deficit to 34-24.

The Wildcats went 54 yards on their next possession and scored on Christian's 30-yard run with 6:36 left. Ira Adler's conversion kick turned out to be Northwestern's final point.

Boone gained 30 yards on a first-down run from his own 30, and Duke finished the drive with Chris Brown's 1-yard run with 3:25 left. Northwestern drove to Duke's 28, but an O'Brien pass was intercepted by Rodney Dickerson at the 5.

Northwestern took opening kickoff and drove from its 28 to Duke's 30, but Adler missed a 47-yard field goal.

Duke went 69 yards following the change of possession and scored on Ray's first touchdown pass, a 16-yard play to Clarkston Hines, whose Atlantic Coast Conference career record now stands at 24. The Blue Devils missed the extra point.

Boone's 5-yard touchdown run early in the second quarter moved Duke to a 12-0 lead, but it missed the two-point conversion pass.

Thomas Honco recovered a Duke fumble to set up a 41-yard field goal by Adler with 7:58 left before halftime.

Eddie Sutter intercepted a Ray pass and returned it 21 yards to Duke's 38. The Wildcats drove 36 yards for Adler's 18-yard field goal with five seconds left before halftime. Northwestern reached Duke's 2 before the defense stopped it on three successive plays.

ASU.....15
Wake Forest.....10

WINSTON-SALEM — Senior cornerback Keith Collins recovered a fumble and intercepted a pass — both in the end zone — to preserve Appalachian State's 15-10 victory over Wake Forest on Saturday night.

Both efforts came in the second half as the Mountaineers took advantage of six Demon Deacon turnovers.

Collins' final heroics came with 1:19 left after quarterback Phil Barnhill led Wake Forest (0-1) on a last-gasp drive from its 28 to the Mountaineer 22.

Throwing over the middle to split end Ricky Proehl, Collins stepped in front for a game-saving interception.

Early in the second half, Appalachian State (2-0) rode similar big plays on both sides of the football to take and briefly maintain a 9-3 lead.

With 9:58 left in the third quarter, Ritchie Melchor took a pitch untouched along the left sideline, then cut back to evade two potential tacklers for a 67-yard TD run.

On the ensuing Demon Deacon series, split end Steve Brown dove to snare a 47-yard pass from Barnhill. The effort moved Wake Forest to the Mountaineer 2, but Collins recovered a Anthony Williams fumble which bounced into the end zone.

The game's lone sustained drive covered 61 yards in eight plays, capped when Barnhill completed a 28-yard touchdown pass to Proehl with 2:45 left in the third quarter.

Wake Forest's 10-9 edge held up until Proehl signaled for a fair catch of a punt, fumbling at the Demon Deacon 25.

The contest was tied 3-3 at halftime.

Salazar's Hit Keeps Cubs In 1st

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Luis Salazar has had his share of thrills in baseball but when he drove in the winning run in the 10th inning Saturday he "jumped up and down like it was the World Series."

Salazar, who singled home the tying run with two out in the eighth inning to magnify an error by St. Louis right fielder Tom Brunansky, doubled home the winner two innings later, giving the Chicago Cubs a 3-2 victory over the Cardinals.

"I've had a lot of thrills with Detroit in 1987 and San Diego in 1984," said Salazar, who entered the game at third base in the sixth inning after Vance Law was lifted for a pinch batter. "Those teams were exciting, but it was nothing like today."

Salazar, who came to the Cubs in a four-player trade with San Diego on Aug. 31, called it "a big, big victory,"

So big that it kept the Cubs, who were in danger of falling out of first place, on top in the tight National League East, stretching their lead to 1½ games over the Cardinals.

With one out in the 10th, Andre Dawson drew a walk off Ken Dayley, 3-2, the fourth St. Louis pitcher, and scored when Salazar followed with his double into the right-field corner.

Paul Assenmacher, 3-3, the fifth Chicago pitcher, was the winner with one hitless inning.

Trailing 2-1, the Cubs tied it in the eighth with an unearned run. Dwight Smith led off with a single, the fifth hit off Jose DeLeon. Right fielder Tom Brunansky held the ball as if to dare Smith to try for second. Smith took the dare and was safe when Brunansky's throw was wide for an error.

Frank DiPino relieved and struck out Mark Grace. Dan Quisenberry retired Dawson on a grounder but Salazar, acquired in a trade with San Diego late last month, followed with a single that scored the tying run.

Dwight Smith, who squeezed home Chicago's first run in the first inning, led off the eighth with a single to right and took a big turn. Brunansky held the ball as if to dare Smith to go to second. Smith broke and was safe when Brunansky threw wide for an error.

"I was waiting, waiting," said Brunansky, who singled home the tying run in the sixth inning and scored the run that put the Cardinals on top 2-1. "I guess I waited too long. I was either going to throw behind him to first or ahead of him to second. When he broke, he made the decision for me. One more step and I would have thrown behind him, but he broke and it was unfortunate for me."

Smith called it "an instinct play. I saw him holding the ball, I knew it was wet out there and he was deep, so I took a chance and won."

Chicago's Rick Sutcliffe blanked the Cardinals until the sixth when Pedro Guerrero singled with one out and took second on a wild pitch as Terry Pendleton struck out. Brunansky singled to score Guerrero with the tying run, stole second and scored on Jose Oquendo's single.

Braves.....2
Reds.....1

CINCINNATI — Tom Glavine pitched a three-hitter over eight scoreless innings as the Atlanta Braves snapped a five-game losing streak Saturday with a 2-1 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Glavine, 13-8, surrendered a single and double to Todd Benzinger and a single to Joe Oliver. He was relieved by Dwayne Henry after walking pinch hitter Barry Larkin to start the bottom of the ninth.

The Reds scored on Henry's wild pitch and an RBI single by Luis Quinones that extended his hitting streak to 17 games. Eric Davis forced Quinones and then stoll second nut Henry got his first National League save by striking out Benzinger and Oliver.

At 23, Glavine is the youngest Braves left-hander to win 13 games since George Stone, also 23, won 13 in 1969.

Reds starter Tim Leary, 8-13, lost his fourth in a row and his record fell to 2-6 since coming to the Reds from the Los Angeles Dodgers on July 18. Leary struck out 11, most by a Cincinnati pitcher this season, but the Reds have scored only five runs in his six losses.

Leary gave up only one run four hits but two of them came in the fourth inning. Jeff Treadway led off with a single and advanced to third on Lonnie Smith's double to right. After Dale Murphy walked, Treadway scored on Darrell Evans' sacrifice fly. Treadway's hit extended his career-high hitting streak to 15 games.

The Braves added what proved to be the winning run off John Franco in the ninth. With one out, singles by Jeff Blauser and Andres Thomas put runners at first and third and Jody Davis hit a sacrifice fly.

Pirates.....8
Mets.....5

NEW YORK — Bobby Bonilla hit his second home run of the game with one out in the 12th inning and Dann Bilardello and Jose Lind singled home unearned runs as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the New York Mets 8-5 Saturday.

New York, which entered the game trailing first-place Chicago by 2½ games and St. Louis by two, had rallied from a 5-1 deficit to tie the score on Howard Johnson's two-run homer in the eighth.

After reliever Jeff Innis, 0-1, struck out Andy Van Slyke to start the 12th, Bonilla hit a 1-1 pitch for his 22nd home run. It was the fourth time in his career that he hit two homers in a game.

One out later, Gary Redus was safe on third baseman Johnson's throwing error. Redus stole second and scored on a single by Bilardello, who took second on thw throw home and scored on Lind's single.

Dorn Taylor, 1-1, pitched two scoreless innings for the victory and Bob Patterson pitched the 12th for his first major-league save.

The Mets failed to score in the 10th after getting a runner to third with no one out. Johnson drew a leadoff walk from Doug Bair, stole second and continued to third on catcher Bilardello's throwing error. After an intentional walk to Darryl Strawberry, Kevin McReynolds struck out.

Strawberry took second without drawing a throw and the Pirates intentionally walked Dave Magadan to load the bases. But the runners held on pinch hitter Tom O'Malley's shallow fly to left and Kevin Elster lined to short to end the inning.

With Pittsburgh leading 5-3, Juan Samuel led off the Mets' eighth inning with a walk off reliever Bob Kipper and Johnson followed with his 34th homer. Fourteen of Johnson's home runs have been hit from the seventh inning on.

Pirates starter Jeff Robinson had an RBI single in a two-run second inning and a two-run homer off David Cone in the fourth to give the Pirates a 5-1 lead. Robinson pitched five innings and allowed seven hits and three runs — only one earned because of two errors by third baseman Bonilla, who hit his first homer in the third inning.

Cone yielded five runs and eight hits in four innings.

Astros.....4
Giants.....1

HOUSTON — Mike Scott pitched a three-hitter and became the National League's first 19-game winner as the Houston Astros beat the San Francisco Giants 4-1 Saturday night.

The Astros, who began play tied with San Diego for second place, defeated San Francisco for the second night in a row and cut the Giants' lead in the NL West to five games.

Scott, 19-8, didn't allow a hit until Will Clark's triple with one out in the fourth inning. The Giants didn't score until the ninth when Brett Butler walked, stole second and came home on Kevin Mitchell's two-out single, his 116th RBI of the season. Scott had retired 12 batters in a row before walking Butler.

Houston scored twice off Kelly Downs, 3-6, in the first inning. Gerald Young drew a leadoff walk, tok second on Downs' wild pitch and scored on Kevin Bass' one-out double. Glenn Davis struck out but Glenn Wilson singled to score Bass.

In the second inning, Steve Lombardozzi and scored on a single by Scott to make it 3-0. It remained that way until the eighth when Houston scored a run off Jeff Brantley on Bass' single, two wild pitches and Davis' infield out.

Expos.....6
Phillies.....5

MONTREAL — Andres Galarraga doubled with two out in the ninth inning and scored on Hubie Brooks' single, giving Montreal a 6-5 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies on Saturday night and lifting the Expos back into third place in the National League East.

Yanks Bombed By A's, Streak Ends

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — The New York Yankees' nine-game winning streak ended the way it began — between blowout losses to the Oakland Athletics.

But while they were never in their previous loss to Oakland, a 19-5 humiliation in New York, the Yankees and rookie Clay Parker were matching zeroes with Oakland's Mike Moore before a routine fly ball was lost in the sun by left fielder Mel Hall with two out in the sixth inning to open the floodgates to the A's 7-0 victory Saturday.

"Parker was pitching a strong game but we caught a break with that fly ball," said A's manager Tony La Russa, whose club is now 27-7 in day games at the Oakland Coliseum and 43-14 overall in the daylight.

Parker, 4-5, took a one-hitter into the sixth before Tony Phillips led off with a single off the glove of first baseman Don Mattingly. After Mike Gallego sacrificed and Rickey Henderson grounded out, Lansford hit what looked to be an inning-ending fly to short left.

Hall charged in and waved off shortstop Alvaro Espinoza, then lost the ball at the last second and it fell for a double as Phillips scored. Jose Canseco hit the next pitch for his 13th homer, breaking an 0-for-13 slump.

"The ball was out of the sun, then it was in the sun, then it was out of the sun, then it was in the sun again," Hall said. "I guess I was just waiting for the sun to move. At least I didn't get hit in the head, if that's any consolation."

Dave Henderson hit his 11th home run with two out in the seventh and Rickey Henderson hit his 11th off Jimmy Jones in the A's three-run eighth.

"This is as low as I've been all season," said Parker. "I was determined to shut these guys out. It was a pitching duel, and I was determined to stay even."

Moore, 17-9, broke a personal three-game losing streak with his third shutout and sixth complete game of the season. He walked two and struck out three. The 17 victories matches his career high with Seattle in 1985.

The Yankees put runners at second and third with one out in the first on Espinoza's bloop double, a walk to Mattingly and a wild pitch. However, Hall grounded back to Moore, who trapped Espinoza in a rundown for the second out. Steve Balboni hit a sharp grounder to deep short where Gallego back-handed the ball and threw out Balboni.

In the Yankees' fifth, Roberto Kelly singled with one out and went to third on Randy Velarde's two-out single. Velarde was wild pitched to second but Moore escaped by retiring Steve Sax on a grounder to second.

"I'd rather take an out on the first or second pitch over a strikeout any time," said Moore, whose 154 strikeouts are fifth in the American League.

White Sox.....13
Tigers.....3

DETROIT — Detroit right fielder Scott Lusader tied a major-league record by committing three errors in Chicago's seven-run first inning and the White Sox snapped the Tigers' seven-game winning streak 13-3 Saturday.

Lusader, fighting the sun and a turf made soggy by heavy overnight rains, committed two fielding errors and one throwing error. He is the eighth major- league outfielder to commit three errors in an inning and the first in the American League since 1925.

The last Tiger outfielder to commit three errors in an inning was Hall of Famer Harry Heilmann, who did it in the first inning on game May 22, 1914.

Winner Melido Perez, 9-14, yielded three runs and eight hits in 6 1-3 innings. Detroit starter Jeff Robinson, 4-5, left the game with a sore right elbow after throwing 11 pitches. He walked the first two batters, both of whom scored, although Edwin Nunez completed the second walk.

Steve Lyons was intentionally between strikeouts by Sammy Sosa and Ron Karkovice, loading the bases. Ozzie Guillen singled to right scoring Boston. When the ball got past Lusader for his third error, Lyons went to third and Guillen continued to second. Johnson, up for the second time in the inning, singled them home for a 7-0 lead.

Guillen doubled and scored on Johnson's single in the Chicago third and Lou Whitaker hit his 28th home run in the Detroit third. Whitaker added an RBI double in the seventh but the White Sox scored five times off Frank Williams in the eighth on Boston's RBI single and Lyons' first career grand slam, his second homer of the season.

Royals.....3
Twins.....1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The minute Bret Saberhagen woke up Saturday morning and looked outside, the Minnesota Twins were in deep trouble.

"It was rainy and kind of gloomy, just like the weather during the 1985 World Series, and I got really pumped," Saberhagen said after pitching three-hit ball for eight innings and leading Kansas City to a 3-1 victory over the Twins.

Striking out six and walking one, Saberhagen improved his record to 18-6, second in the American League only to Dave Stewart's 19 victories. He also lowered his league-leading earned run average to 2.47.

All day long, he kept thinking about 1985 when he won the Cy Young and World Series MVP awards and the Royals beat the St. Louis Cardinals four games to three.

"I went out on the porch this morning and watched it mist and it seemed just like the weather when we played the Cardinals," he said. "I knew this is the kind of weather I like to pitch in. It kept reminding me of the '85 playoffs and World Series, and that's what we're striving for."

The weather had nothing to do with it, said Minnesota Manager Tom Kelly.

"Saberhagen had a super curveball and he got it over, and a good fastball moving in and out," Kelly said. "The only ball we hit real good was (Randy) Bush hit one foul and (Greg) Gagne hit one to right field t[o] Jim Eisenreich caught.

"He was in complete control of the game."

Bo Jackson drove in all three runs with two doubles as the Royals remained 3½ games behind Oakland in the AL West.

"I'm not going to let anything or anybody get in my way to try to win the pennant. I'll do what I have to do to get there," Jackson said.

Jeff Montgomery pitched the ninth for his 17th save, completing a combined four-hitter.

Kevin Seitzer opened the Kansas City first with a single and went to second when George Brett hit a one-out single. Jackson then doubled into center to score both runs.

Willie Wilson singled in the third, went to second on an infield out and made it 3-0 on Jackson's second double.

Martina Wins Fans' Hearts

But Open Title Slips Away

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Martina Navratilova may have taken over as the sentimental favorite of the tough New York tennis crowd. But, as she learned again Saturday, that and a buck will get her to midtown on the subway.

Navratilova let slip a 4-3 second-set chokehold on Steffi Graf and wound up losing 3-6, 7-5, 6-1 in the final of the U.S. Open, despite winning over most of the fans who cheered wildly for her longtime friend and rival, Chris Evert, before Evert made her exit from the game on the same stadium court earlier this week.

"Maybe it's because the fans have just me left," Navratilova said. "We certainly played long enough to win a lot of hearts, and now that she's gone, there are no divided loyalties anymore. So I suppose I should thank her for that."

But more than her fans, what Navratilova coveted and Evert already has is a fifth (and sixth) U.S. Open title. And she began her trip Saturday against Graf — whom Navratilova beat in 1987 for her fourth title — as though the destination was never in doubt.

Navratilova, who turns 33 later this month, cruised through the first set against such little resistance that when the 20-year-old Graf managed a return winner in the midst of a game in which she herself notched four service winners, she stood and glowered at her smaller, sweat-soaked opponent.

And two points after Graf's affront, Navratilova ran off a string of 11 straight points for the set.

With at least one holdover from earlier in the week still shouting "Let's go, Chris!!" Navratilova broke Graf in the third game and steamrolled to a 4-3 lead when she moved to the baseline to serve — then promptly forgot how close to winning she was and how to get there.

"I've been there many times, but I haven't been there for a while," Navaratilova said. "And it was like relearning something because I hadn't been there. It was more like trying to do something from memory than instinct."

Graf, on the other hand, responded like a shark to the first trickles of blood in the water. She gave up just one point in breaking service to pull even at 4-4, then defended her own with a knifing, short-angle shot at the net to save a break point and set up a second-set victory.

"At the point at 4-4, it's virtually match point, because the next game I won at 40-15, so you figure that I was one point from winning the match," Navaratilova said. "That's about as close as you can get."

Indeed, she got no closer the rest of the way.

Martina Navratilova was two games away from Open title

Graf did change her skirt two games later. They both disappeared into the tunnel for another change of clothes several games into the third set, but nothing else about the match changed the rest of the way. Graf's whipsaw forehand continued to find the mark and Navratilova's increasing desperate gamble at the net did not. When it was over, Navratilova slammed her racket to the court, but then graciously began acknowledging the thunderous applause raining down all sides of the steep-walled stadium.

And promised to return.

Becker, Lendl Meet In Finals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Ivan Lendl plays for the U.S. Open championship Sunday.

So what's new?

Lendl joined Boris Becker in the final round of the Open Saturday, defeating Andre Agassi 7-6 (7-4), 6-1, 3-6, 6-1 and tying a tournament record held by the legendary Bill Tilden.

On Sunday, Lendl plays in his eighth consecutive Open final, matching the mark Tilden established from 1918-25. He goes for his fourth crown against Becker, the first German in more than half a century to play for the American men's championship.

Lendl claims all his previous Open success won't mean anything Sunday.

"I'm trying to win the Open," he said. "Past records don't make any difference now. We start at 0-0. It doesn't matter what happened before."

The top-seeded Lendl struggled early against Agassi, trailing in the first set and battling back to force a tiebreak, which he won 7-4. The set took 1 hour, 15 minutes as both players stayed at the baseline.

"I played well in the first set, then mentally lost it," said Agassi, who went quickly in the second set. The American won the third before Lendl put him away in the fourth.

"I was a little inconsistent. Ivan is the type of player that if you give him an opportunity, it doesn't take him too long to take advantage of it."

Lendl holds a 7-6 career edge over Becker but has lost their last three meetings, including the semifinals at Wimbledon in July when the German was on the way to his third All-England title.

"I'll have to return his serve," Lendl said. "If I return enough, I'll have a good chance."

Becker reached the final by beating Aaron Krickstein 6-4, 6-3, 6-4 and then decided that he's finally figured out the puzzle of the Open, where his grass court success at Wimbledon has never counted for much on the punishing hard courts of Flushing Meadows.

"I've learned my lesson here," Becker said after advancing to the final.

"You almost have to love it here. You have to forget the distractions here: the planes, the heat, the noise of the spectators. It's difficult to play, but you just have to go out and have fun, like (Jimmy) Connors has done for the past 18 years."

Fun for Becker was becoming the first German since 1937 to reach the men's final here. The only other time that happened, Baron Gottfried von Cramm lost the U.S. National championship to Don Budge. The Nationals changed to the Open in 1968.

Despite his success at Wimbledon, Becker had never made it to the final of any other Grand Slam event until Saturday. "This is definitely a big moment for me," he said. "I guess that's why the match was difficult."

Elliott, Miller Start Up Front In Miller 400

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Their names include Kulwicki, Miller, Schrader, Trickle and Wallace, and they have come from the Midwest to make their mark in a sport that for many years seemed to be the exclusive domain of Southerners.

Whether they are rookie drivers or veterans on NASCAR's Winston Cup trail, all say they have not been treated like outsiders since they arrived from America's heartland.

The biggest problem the Midwesterners cited was one experienced by many teams on stock car racing's premier circuit — finding enough money to help them reach and maintain success.

Butch Miller is the latest arrival. A 38-year-old driver from Coopersville, Mich., Miller spent two decades racing on short tracks in the Midwest. He won the American Speed Association championship in 1987 and 1988 before taking a crack at Winston Cup racing on a shoestring budget this year.

Miller will start second in Sunday's Miller 400 after qualifying just .004 seconds slower than defending Winston Cup champion Bill Elliott.

The Chevrolet Lumina that Miller is driving initially cost him $400. The car had been wrecked by Ricky Rudd, and his team elected against trying to repair it.

"They threw this car out in the junk pile and Butch Miller went and bought it for $400," said Miller, who is taking part in the seventh of his 11 planned Winston Cup races this year. "It was a good deal for them because they got $400 for a piece of scrap, and I got a nice race car for $400.

"I've run this car in every Winston Cup race I've been in this season except for Daytona."

Alan Kulwicki, a native of Greenfield, Wis., was the top Winston Cup rookie in 1986 and now is an established, well-financed veteran.

"I was probably treated better than I expected to be when I first got here," said Kulwicki. Kulwicki said there are more drivers in the Midwest who have the ability to compete on the Winston Cup circuit, but they cannot afford to get started.

"It takes a lot of money to run these cars, regardless of where you're from," said Kulwicki, who has won four poles this year. "A lot of guys have the ability, but not all of them are going to get the chance because of the money involved."

Kulwicki and two Missouri natives — Ken Schrader of Fenton, Mo., and Rusty Wallace of St. Louis — are the most successful of the Midwest transplants.

Wallace is in his sixth full season on the circuit and has won 15 races, including five this year. He was second in the 1988 points championship and is No. 2 again this year.

Schrader, in his fifth year of Winston Cup competition, has captured just one race but has collected more than $2 million in winnings.

Schrader said rookies like Miller, no matter how successful on other circuits, find the going tough in NASCAR racing.

"Everything you learned on all those short tracks and what-not, you have to unlearn when you get here," he said.

Miller agreed.

"I thought I was a pretty smart racer, and I actually found out how stupid I was," he said. "I learn so much every race. This is much more difficult.

"I expected to run good right off the bat, but it hasn't happened."

Dick Trickle, a 47-year-old grandfather from Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., is the oldest rookie on the circuit. A winner of more than 1,000 feature races on short tracks throughout the Midwest, Trickle got the call for a Winston Cup ride this year when Mike Alexander, who was replacing the injured Bobby Allison, got injured himself and was slow to recover.

Trickle has translated his substitute job into a successful campaign. In 21 races, he has finished in the top five on four occasions, won more than $206,000 and put himself in 18th place in the season points chase.

Trickle led second-day qualifiers Saturday and will start 21st in his Buick Regal in Sunday's 400-lap race at Richmond International Raceway, a .75-mile, D-shaped layout.

Several drivers who did not make the top 20 in Friday's first round of time trials elected to stand on their speeds, including Richard Petty. His speed did not stand up, though, and he had to take a provisional starting position to get into the lineup. Petty will start 35th.

Hamilton Holds Off Ellis To Win Commonwealth

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Rookie Bobby Hamilton held off pole-sitter Tommy Ellis over the final 21 laps and won Saturday's Commonwealth 200, his first Busch Grand National victory.

Hamilton, who started 29th in the 36-car field, averaged 92.040 mph in his Buick on Richmond International Raceway's 0.75-mile, D-shaped layout.

The victory was worth $13,095 for the 32-year-old driver from Nashville, Tenn., and was his fourth top-10 finish in 23 events this season.

"We thought we'd be two years in winning our first Busch Grand National race," Hamilton said.

All was not lost however for Ellis, the defending Grand National points champion who was running before a hometown crowd. Ellis, who came into the race 15 points behind leader Tommy Houston in this year's title chase, regained the top spot by nine points with five events left.

Rick Wilson was leading on lap 171 when his Oldsmobile and the Buick of Harry Gant spun in the fourth turn and slammed hard into the retaining wall. Gant's car burst into flames, but he escaped injury. Both cars were damaged beyond repair, and the race had to be halted for six minutes to clean up the wreckage.

"Somebody blew a motor or something and put something down on the track," Wilson said. "I hit it, but I just couldn't save the car."

Hamilton beat Ellis back to the start-finish line after the caution flag flew, and when the race was restarted and went back to green on lap 179, Hamilton and Ellis were followed by Kenny Wallace, Rob Moroso and Jack Ingram.

Wallace finished third, followed by Moroso and Dale Earnhardt.

Ellis now has 3,359 points and Houston has 3,350. Ingram is third with 3,268, three points ahead of Moroso.

"Maybe I'll feel better about the points tomorrow," Ellis said. "But right now, I feel bad about not winning the race."

Sullivan, Mears On Front Row

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. — Danny Sullivan is trying to salvage his season and Rick Mears is chasing his fourth CART Indy-car championship heading into Sunday's Texaco-Havoline 200.

It was a repeat of last year's front row.

Sullivan, who missed two races earlier this season and was slowed down in several others because of a broken right forearm, earned his first pole of the season and 10th in his last 24 tries as his opening round track record 130.474 mph went unchallenged.

Mears, who trails series point leader Emerson Fittipaldi 155-122 with just three races remaining, took the outside position on the front row with Friday's lap of 130.125.

Michael Andretti, tied for third with Italian driver Teo Fabi with 125 points, was next at 128.793, followed by Arie Luyendyk of The Netherlands 128.616 and Fittipaldi 128.470.

Fittipaldi was in Miami, Fla., Saturday, where his 14-year-old daughter Juliana underwent surgery for a kidney blockage. A team spokesman said the Juliana was resting comfortably in a Miami hospital and that the Brazilian driver would be back in time for Sunday's 50-lap, 200-mile race, which he won in 1986 and 1988.

Texas Tech Pulls Upset; S. Miss Falls

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUBBOCK, Texas — Senior James Gray scored two touchdowns and rushed for a career-high 224 yards as Texas Tech upset 20th-ranked Arizona 24-14 in the Red Raiders' season opener Saturday night.

Backup tailback Anthony Lynn provided the game-clinching touchdown from 3 yards out with 8:11 to play as the Red Raiders of the Southwest Conference overcame an early 7-0 deficit to trip the Wildcats of the Pacific 10.

Arizona 1-1 opened its season last week with a 19-3 victory over Stanford.

Gray turned in the second-best rushing performance in Texas Tech history, second only to James Hadnot's 268 yards in 1978. He carried 34 times.

Tech had 378 yards rushing, its best figure since 1986.

The Red Raiders struck for two touchdowns in a 51-second span in the second quarter to take a 14-7 halftime lead.

Arizona took a 7-0 lead on quarterback Ron Veal's 1-yard run early in the second quarter. Veal set up the score with passes of 21 and 19 yards.

Gray retaliated with a 26-yard scoring run to cap an 80-yard drive as Tech tied the score at 7-7 with 3:06 to go in the half.

Tech defensive end Marcus Washington recovered David Eldridge's fumble at the Wildcat 23, and Gray scored two plays later on a 14-yard run, bringing his school-record career touchdown total to 34.

The Red Raiders missed another chance on the final play of the first half when Arnulf Mobley blocked Lin Elliott's 40-yard field goal attempt.

In the first half, Tech drives that stalled at the Arizona 29-, 17-, 26- and 10-yard lines failed to produce points.

Gray gained 163 yards on 21 carries in the first half.

Arizona's Mario Hampton tied the game 14-14 with a 2-yard scoring run in the third period but Elliott's 29-yard field goal, set up by Gray's 20-yard run, gave Tech the lead in the fourth quarter.

The Red Raiders lead the series 26-4-2.

tercepted Montgomery early in the third quarter when the Wolfpack was in the shadow of the Yellow Jacket end zone.

Montgomery was looking for tight end Todd Harrison, but Swilling read it perfectly, picked it off on the run at the Tech 5 and took it the distance untouched. Scott Sisson added the point after to pull Tech within 17-14 with 11:32 remaining in the third quarter.

State came right back, driving 56 yards to score on a 5-yard run by Tyrone Jackson. Damon Hartman added the extra point for a 24-14 lead.

Jones brought the Yellow Jackets right back, with the score coming on a 5-yard pass to Jerry Mays. Sisson's kick made it 24-21.

The teams then traded touchdowns again, with State scoring on a 21-yard pass play from Montgomery to a wide-open Williams, who found a seam in Tech's zone down the left sideline.

Hartman applied the point after and State was back up by 10, 31-21, with 12:26 left in the final period.

Tech again marched back, moving 45 yards in six plays after a 41-yard kickoff return by T.J. Edwards.

The score came on a 13-yard score by Mays, who dived over the right corner of the end zone to earn the six points.

Sisson got the point-after for a 31-28 score.

Turnovers hurt the Wolfpack early in the opening half, but ended being a key late in the second quarter.

A Montgomery interception and an Anthony Barbour fumble killed early State drives and helped the Yellow Jackets move out to a 7-0 lead.

Mays gained 12 yards off right tackle on the next play to put the ball at the State four.

Two plays later Stefen Scotton banged in from two yards out. Scott Sisson added the point after and Tech led 7-0 with 8:50 left in the first period.

State came back to narrow the gap to 7-3 on its next drive, moving 57 yards in 10 plays for a 45-yard field goal by Hartman with 4:21 remaining.

State opened the second quarter with a long drive for another score to gain the lead.

The march bogged down inside the 10, but after an incomplete pass on a third-and-goal play at the eight, Tech was whistled for having too many men on the field, giving the Wolfpack a second chance.

From there, Montgomery kept it himself on the option for a 4-yard scoring run after faking the dive to Varn. Hartman's kick put State ahead, 10-7.

Two plays later, tight end Todd Harrison fumbled after catching a short pass. Tech's Kenneth Wilson recovered, but the Yellow Jackets' possession was short-lived.

Three plays later, State's Joe Johnson tipped a Jones pass and Vinson intercepted, returning it 41 yards to the Tech eight.

Thanks to a pass interference call in the right corner of the end zone against Jay Martin, State kept the drive alive and scored on a 5-yard pass from Montgomery to Varn with 1:29 remaining in the half. Hartman added the extra point and State led 17-7.

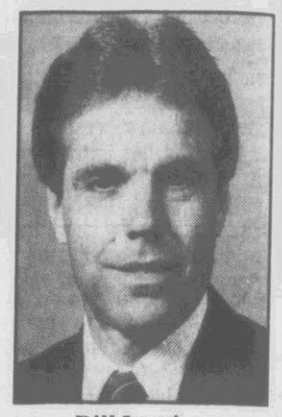
Sunday Notebook:

East Carolina coach Bill Lewis was a happy realist as he sat down to face the media after picking up a 41-6 win over Bowling Green in his first game as the Pirates' head coach Saturday night.

"It's important that as we celebrate this, and we'll celebrate it for the next few hours, that we keep it in perspective," he said. "It's the first step in a long season.



Bill Lewis

"We have one game under our belts. I don't think you can gauge anything this early. There are so many questions you can't answer until you play."

But better a first step forward than a stumble at the gate.

ECU rolled over the Falcons, building a 31-6 halftime lead en route to the victory.

Offensively, the Pirates picked up 401 yards on the ground and another 111 in the air. Defensively, they kept Bowling Green out of the end zone, limiting the Falcons to two field goals.

So, sure, it was an impressive win and a nice way for Lewis to begin his first season. But remember, the Pirates also looked impressive last season in their opening game, a 52-13 romp over Tennessee Tech.

Granted, Tech was a I-AA team and Bowling Green a Division I-A competitor, but the similarities in the game is important to note.

Still, Lewis seemed neither overly excited nor upset with the situation. There were no grins from ear to ear or head-shaking disappointments. Instead, there was just the Pirates' new coach, calmly answering reporters' questions.

From the way he coaches to the way he answers a question, Lewis is straight up with no frills.

Did he ever dream of how his first game at ECU would come out? Was there a perfect scenario he played out in his head all summer long as he awaited opening night?

"I didn't have any dream of what would happen," he said. "I didn't sit there and say it was going to happen this way or that way.

"As we got into the hours close to the game, there were so many little things — final meetings with players and coaches — I actually found myself not nearly as nervous as I was at other times. Once we got here on the field, it was a typical ballgame."

Still, this one is in the books. The Pirates opened strong, played a lot of people and put on a good show for a crowd of 33,413 fans.

"It feels awfully good," Lewis said. "That's why we play this game, to be successful. It was an exciting atmosphere to see the number of people up there."

Last night was for celebrating, but today the Bucs begin preparations for the rest of the season, beginning with a road trip Saturday to face an improved Cincinnati team, then a home-date with I-AA Illinois State.

Time for step two. Be careful.

Study Reveals Graduation Rates

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — No more than one in five athletes graduate at colleges with major basketball programs, according to a federal study.

The study, reported in Sunday editions of The New York Times, said that graduation rates among football players were not much better.

The General Accounting Office report, which has not been published, indicated that 35 of 97 schools surveyed for basketball had graduation rates of 0 percent to 20 percent among players, the Times reported. Only four schools had such comparable rates for the entire student body.

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Joel Logan, whose missed extra point led to a tie, kicked a 34-yard field goal with four seconds left to give Mississippi State to a 26-23 upset Saturday night over 18th-ranked Southern Mississippi.

Mississippi State, a one-touchdown underdog, got the ball with 1:18 to play and drove 46 yards in four plays to set up the winning kick. A 38-yard pass from Eric Underwood to tailback Kenny Robert was the key play.

Winning for only the third time in the last 13 games of the series, Mississippi State, a 1-10 team a year ago, improved to 2-0, while Southern Mississippi, an upset winner over then sixth-ranked Florida State last week, fell to 1-1.

Chuck Davis kicked a 35-yard field goal with 2:55 to play to give Southern Mississippi a tie. But unlike a week ago, the Golden Eagles couldn't come up with the big drive when needed.

Mississippi State, which yielded big chunks of the yardage most of the night before a record crowd of 34,189, took a 23-20 lead with 11:47 remaining when Underwood sprinted 28 yards on an option. But Logan missed the extra point.

After trailing 14-13 at halftime and 17-13 midway in the third quarter, Southern Mississippi mounted a seven-play, 66-yard drive capped by Rickey Bradley's 12-yard touchdown run for a 20-17 edge with 25 seconds left in the third quarter.

Bradley also ran 1 yard for a second-quarter touchdown and Davis kicked field goals of 22 and 33 yards for Southern Mississippi.

Jerry Bouldin's 96-yard kickoff return for a touchdown after Bradley's first TD gave Mississippi State a 14-10 lead.

Pirates Roll Past Falcons In Opener...

team effort. I'd like to congratulate every player on this team. I think they did an outstanding job tonight."

But, Lewis was not totally convinced that all was rosy in the Pirate camp. "We do not have a real gauge on what kind of season we are going to have. What we do have is a game, a win, under our belts. This is just the first step in a long season."

Pirate quarterback Travis Hunter picked up right where he was expected to. Hunter connected on eight of 15 passes for 90 yards and one touchdown. He also rushed three times for 56 yards. The 90 through the air moved him to 2,540 career yards, moving him into second place on the all-time list as he moved past John Casazza. He is now taking aim at Carl Summerell's all time record of 2,859.

"He got us off to a really good start," Lewis said of Hunter performance. "A lot of credit should go to Travis and (offensive coordinator) Mark Richt. They were so prepared for tonight's game and they executed with near perfection."

Hunter came out of the blocks firing. The Pirates took over after a punt at their own 44 and Hunter promptly hit fullback Michael Rhett for 15 yards. He then went to tight end Charles Freeman for another eight. On the next play, he ran for 16 more yards to the 17. Then, he hit Walter Wilson in the end zone for the score, a 56-yard drive in just 1:19. Robb Imperato's extra point was wide, however, and ECU settled for a 6-0 lead.

Then, the problems took over for the next few series. A dead ball personal foul after the Pirates had reached the Falcon nine yard line set them up in a first-and-goal situation at the 24 and they had to settle for a 36-yard by Imperato with 8:21 left, upping it to 9-0.

On the next series, a holding penalty on first down and an illegal shift call on the next play set up a first and 25 which the Pirates failed to overcome.

Then, early in the second period, Hunter was picked off, turning it over at the ECU 37.

But on the next play, a Pirate rusher bumped Rick Dackin's arm just enough to throw off his aim and Hall stepped in front of the receiver to pick off the ball at the ECU 32 with only the end zone in front of him, 68 yards away.

Bowling Green got a 32 yard kickoff return and a 15-yard personal foul was tacked on that, giving the Falcons the ball at the ECU 49. They went to their spread formation but it moved them only to the 18, and Zeller kicked the first of his two field goals, making it 16-3 with 7:42 remaining in the half.

ECU was quick to answer, driving 70 yards on just eight plays. Hunter ripped off 33 of the yards himself and Rhett went the final seven yards over right tackle for the score. Chad Grier, in to replace Hunter, who got the wind knocked out of him on the touchdown play, tossed the ball to Rhett for the conversion, making it 24-3 with 3:32 left.

A Junior Robinson punt return of 40 yards set up the Pirates once more before intermission. His run brought the ball back to the 22 and on the first play, Willie Lewis took a quick pitch from Hunter and went around the left side for the score, upping the lead to 31-3 after Imperato's kick with 2:57 still left in the period.

Bowling Green drove from its own 27 to the ECU 18 before failing to move it and settling for a 37-yard field goal by Zeller with four seconds left.

ECU took a comfortable 31-6 lead into intermission.

Penalties once again slowed the Pirates on their initial possession of the second half, but on the next series, they drove 83 yards on just six plays. Former Rose fullback David Daniels ripped off 16 yards on first down and then took an 11-yard pass from Hunter. Denell Harper added nine more but Daniels was stacked up for no game. He made up for it on the next play, however, dashing 21 yard to the 26. From there, Harper broke away to go for the final touchdown, and Imperato added the PAT to make it 38-6.

After giving up an interception on the next series, the Pirates added a 36-yard field goal on the following series, driving from their own 27 behind Grier's quarterbacking to score with 14:18 left in the game.

Game Note:

Willie Lewis led the Pirate rushing with 90 yards on 11 carries.

Defensively, Donald Porch and Derrick Fields were each credit, unofficially, with seven tackles, while Adrian Barnhill added six.

On the negative side, Joe Bright suffered a knee injury and will be lost for the season while George Koonce also was injured and his status is uncertain, but he likely will miss some time. Both play defensive end, further weakening that position. Earlier James Singletary was lost for academic reasons.

East Carolina returns to action on Saturday, traveling to the University of Cincinnati for their first road contest.

Bears, Bengals Clash To Highlight NFL's Opening Day

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Chicago Bears have a funny habit.

Every year since 1985, they have won a big game at Soldier Field to start the season.

Every year since 1985, they have lost a big game at Soldier Field to end it.

This time, they start with the Cincinnati Bengals, who happened to come within 34 seconds of winning the NFL title last season.

Since Joe Montana hit John Taylor in the end zone to win the Super Bowl for San Francisco last January, the Bengals have been beset with problems — Stanley Wilson's drug suspension, holdouts, Boomer Esiason's sore shoulder, Tim Krumrie's broken ankle and the post-victory general malaise.

"It's a powerful thing," Coach Sam Wyche says. "Every team that goes to the Super Bowl warns each team the following year about this thing. You end up losing a sense of urgency about it. You're not neglecting anything. There's just a different urgency to get things done."

In Cincinnati's case, the letdown extended to the front office, which has never been liberal with its money. Guard Max Montoya, tight end Rodney Holman and wide receiver Eddie Brown were holdouts up to the final week of training camp.

Krumrie, the All-Pro nose tackle who broke his ankle in the Super Bowl, will play for the first time Sunday.

Chicago, meanwhile, enters the season free of quarterback controversy for the first time since its Super Bowl year. Jim McMahon's trade to San Diego took care of that, leaving Mike Tomczak to stand on his own.

Only 18 of the 47 Bears who will dress Sunday were on the 1985 team and 18 are in either their first or second years. Mike Ditka and Bill Tobin have rebuilt well — with the help of a 24-0 record over Green Bay, Tampa Bay and Detroit, they're 52-11 in regular-season games since the title in 1985.

But they're also 1-3 in playoff games and Ditka was unhappy about the preseason, in which Chicago was 2-2. But h's also reasonably confident about h team.

"We stunk in the preseason, but we won't stink once the season begins," he says.

• San Francisco (10-6) at Indianapolis (9-7): The 49ers, of course, finished strong last year, winning seven of their last eight, including two playoff games handily and that 20-16 Super Bowl. But the Colts were almost as good, going 8-2 after a 1-5 start and were 9-4 in games in which Chris Chandler started at quarterback.

Chandler, in his second year, is now the full-time starter. But Eric Dickerson is complaining about his offensive line, hurt by holdouts and injury.

The 49ers are trying to break precedent — they've lost the opener following their last two Super Bowl victories and are seeking to become the first team in a decade to repeat. One of the incentives is that they consider themselves a new team without Bill Walsh, who turned over the head coaching job to George Seifert.

"I think we have a fresh attitude this season. We don't have that carryover," says Joe Montana, who has been through the post Super-Bowl letdown twice before.

• New York Giants (10-6) at Washington (7-9) (Monday night): Joe Gibbs has been planning for this game since last April, viewing it as the first step back from Washington's post-Super Bowl slide. He was planning, however, to have a healthy Doug Williams instead of Mark Rypien, who is the third different quarterback in three years to start the season for Washington.

The Redskins also unveil the two new heavy-duty backs acquired in the off-season, Gerald Riggs from Atlanta and Earnest Byner from Cleveland.

The Giants have beaten the Redskins five of their last six non-strike games, including twice last year, once in the Monday night opener. This is the fourth straight time the Giants open on Monday night.

They open without Joe Morris, lost for the season with a broken foot — the only Morris on the field will be his brother Jamie, who plays for the Redskins. Ottis Anderson, resurrected at 31, will do a lot of the work in a new one-back set backed up by Lee Rouson with George Adams and Maurice Carthon at fullback when the Giants move to two backs.

"We have some great backs," Adams says. "Everyone was prepared to do the same things Joe could do."

• Dallas (3-13) at New Orleans (10-6): "We have a long way to go," says Jimmy Johnson, who took over America's Team in the coup that toppled Tom Landry, the only other coach in Dallas' 30-year history.

Johnson has spent two weeks sifting through other teams' rejects in an effort to find defensive linemen and linebackers who can stop someone and offensive linemen to protect Troy Aikman. If Aikman lasts the season he looks like he might be worth the $11 million he got for being the No. 1 pick.

He gets one break — New Orleans' best pass rusher, Pat Swilling, just signed and may not be in top form. But if the Saints can run at all, they should keep the ball away from Aikman and Herschel Walker, who may play fullback in the absence of the injured Broderick Sargent.

• Houston (10-6) at Minnesota (11-5): Perhaps the two most talented teams in the league and certainly the two most enigmatic. This could be a preview of the Super Bowl, or a meeting between perennial wild-card teams.

This one may turn on whether Wade Wilson is on — Aikman, who's still learning, riddled the Houston secondary last week, atlhough Jerry Glanville was trying different combinations. Bubba McDowell, a rookie who has won the free starting job, is a terror on the blitz, but vulnerable in the air.

But one of Wilson's prime targets, tight end Steve Jordan, just signed this week and Anthony Carter is in camp but unhappy, making Wilson's targets a big questionable.

• Seattle (10-6) at Philadelphia (10-6): The Eagles enter the season as a team with expectations, which was verified by Coach Buddy Ryan, who said after making his final cuts: "This is the first time that we've had to cut anybody since I've been here that I've thought could go somewhere and play and play well."

The Seahawks have some expectations themselves — in an AFC West that's relatively weak, they're the favorites to repeat. Rookies Elroy Harris and Derrick Fenner help the running game, but the defense is suspect, which may be a delight to Randall Cunningham, although Cunningham says he doesn't feel quite ready yet.

• Cleveland (10-6) at Pittsburgh (5-11): Until 1986, the Browns had never won at Three Rivers Stadium. Now they've beaten the Steelers three straight games there and have won six straight overall against Pittsburgh.

The Steelers may have had their best draft since 1974, when they got the nucleus for four Super Bowl winners. They'll start three or four rookies — running back Tim Worley, safety Carnell Lake, guard Tom Ricketts and, if he's healthy, wide receiver Derek Hill. "Do I feel stronger about this team than I did last year? Yes," says Coach Chuck Noll.

Cleveland was 1-4 in preseason and has new coach Bud Carson believing he may have inherited a dog for Cleveland Stadium's Dog Pound. One move he may have to make is putting Hanford Dixon back at cornerback.

Coe Leads By One

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Ore. — Canadian Dawn Coe retained her one-stroke lead midway through the second round of the Cellular One-Ping LPGA Golf Championship on Saturday.

The leader bogeyed the second hole and had a birdie on the ninth, shooting par on the other seven holes on the front nine.

The temperature approached 90 for a second day on the par-72, 6,258-yard Riverside Golf & Country Club course, but was tempered by gusty winds.

Coe was followed at 3-under by Patti Rizzo, Patty Sheehan and Amy Benz.

Coe, 28, of Lake Cowichan, British Columbia, shot a 68 Friday to take the first-round lead.

Coe's previous best finish was third, which she has done twice, the latest this year at the Corning Classic. She's 43rd on the 1989 earnings list at $62,233, about $10,000 short of her career best.

On Friday, Rizzo and Benz shot a 1-under-par 71, while Sheehan was 1 over at 73.

George Mason Kicks Pirates, 6-0

George Mason dominated play as it took a 6-0 soccer victory over East Carolina University Friday evening.

The loss was the third straight for the Pirates, and their second against Colonial Athletic Association competition. George Mason climbs to 3-0 overall, 1-0 in the league. The Patriots are ranked 15th in the nation.

Mark Pulisic and Adrian Reynolds each scored twice for the Patriots. Pulisic's two came in the first half and Reynolds' in the second.

Wilmington Nips Greenville Christian, 3-2

WILMINGTON — Wilmington Christian Academy slipped past Greenville Christian, 3-2, in a non-conference soccer match Friday evening.

Wilmington scored first, getting two first half goals. John Lindsey scored the first at the 37:40 mark and Jess Long added the second with 5:29 showing.

Greenville's first goal came with just 1:39 left in the half on a penalty kick by Jeff Allen.

Long added the deciding goal at 28:42 for Wilmington, while Allen scored again for the Knights with 2:33 showing.

The Knights took 10 shots on goal as compared to 18 for Wilmington. GCA goalie Chris Langley had 20 saves while Wilmington's Darrell Henderson had eight.

Now 0-2, Greenville will open its conference schedule at Falls Road on Tuesday.

Rozelle Modifies New Crowd-Noise Rule

NEW YORK (AP) — NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle modified the league's crowd-noise rule, giving referees the power to penalize teams who fail to run plays after the noise lessens.

Rozelle, who also urged referees to be careful in their use of the rule, made the change under his authority to interpret the playing rules. Adopted last March, the rule was used in four of 59 exhibition games.

Mets' Gooden To Make Return This Week

NEW YORK (AP) — Dwight Gooden says he feels fine and the New York Mets expect him to pitch in relief next week.

Gooden, who has been sidelined since July 3 with a muscle tear in his shoulder, threw 58 pitches in a four-inning simulated game on Friday.

Gooden said Saturday there was no pain or stiffness and he felt he was ready to go.

"I thought it went much better than his first simulated game," pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre said. "I was pleased with his performance. He was up near 90 miles per hour."

Manager Davey Johnson said Gooden would throw lightly on Sunday, and if all went well, would be available to pitch in relief on Tuesday.

Before going on the disabled list, Gooden was 9-4 with a 2.99 earned-run average.

Nettles Will Play, Manage In Senior League

NEW YORK (AP) — Graig Nettles, former captain of the New York Yankees, will manage and play for the St. Lucie Legends of the Senior Professional Baseball Association this winter.

Nettles, now 45, played for the Minnesota Twins, Cleveland Indians, Yankees, San Diego Padres and Atlanta Braves in his 21-year career. He batted .248 with 389 homers and 1,300 RBIs. He is 24th on the all-time home run list.

He hit 20 or more home runs 11 times and his 319 home runs as a third baseman is an American League record.

Dolphins' First-Round Pick Still Unsigned

MIAMI (AP) — Miami Dolphins officials met for more than three hours Saturday with rookie Sammie Smith but were unable to reach a contract agreement with the NFL's only unsigned first-round draft choice.

"We will continue to talk on an ongoing basis," said Tim Robbie, Dolphins' vice president for public affairs.

The meeting followed a breakthrough 90-minute session Friday night, when Smith and Dolphins owner Joe Robbie met face-to-face in negotiations for the first time since early June.

"This is a positive step," Smith said then.

Smith, a running back from Florida State, was the ninth player taken in the draft. His last reported salary demand was $2.65 million for four years. The Dolphins' last reported offer was $2.44 million.

The Dolphins and Smith's agent, Mike Moye, both indicated a willingness to compromise on those figures, Smith said earlier in the week.

Miami opens its season Sunday at home against Buffalo. Smith is ineligible to play because rosters for the game had to be set by Saturday.

Lusader Ties Record For Errors

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit right fielder Scott Lusader tied a major-league record by committing three errors in an inning Saturday.

Lusader, fighting the field sun and a soggy turf — the result of heavy overnight rains — made two fielding errors and one throwing error as the Chicago White Sox scored seven runs in the first inning.

Lusader is only the eighth major-league outfielder to commit three errors in an inning and the first in the American League since 1925.

The last Tiger outfielder to commit three errors in an inning was Harry Heilmann, who also had his problems in the first inning of a game May 22, 1914. Heilmann was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1952.

Farmville Golf and Country Club

Danny Griffis scored a hole-in-one recently while playing at the Farmville Golf and Country Club.

Coe Faces Decision After Sour Loss

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BARCELONA, Spain — Sebastian Coe, in what may be his final major international track and field meet, lost a controversial race to Abdi Bile of Somalia, and Cuban Ana Quirot ran the third-fastest women's 800 ever at the World Cup on Saturday.

Bile, 1987 world champion, won the men's 1,500 meters in 3 minutes 35.56 seconds after a bumping incident with Coe, two-time Olympic gold medalist from Britain who may soon be retiring.

The British team protested the race, although Coe asked them not to, but a jury ruled in Bile's favor.

"He wants to play the gentlemen," Coe's father and coach, Peter, said.

On a perfect day for running — clear skies and cool temperature — the 26-year-old Quirot capped an undefeated season by winning the women's 800 in 1 minute, 54.44 seconds.

Only Czechoslovakia's Jarmila Kratochvilova, with the world record of 1:53.28 in 1983, and the Soviet Union's Nadezhda Olizarenko, with 1:53.43 in 1980, have run the 800 faster than Quirot, 1987 Pan American Games champion.

The bumping occurred as Coe and Bile came around the final turn.

"I feel I was keeping my lane and I didn't interfere with Coe," Bile said. "But all of a sudden, I felt a hand grab me and push me away."

Despite the push, Bile kept running hard and beat Coe by about 1½ meters.

"I am confident I did not interfere with Coe's performance," Bile said.

Peter Coe and the British team coach, Frank Dick, disagreed.

They insisted that the British team file a protest, claiming that Bile impeded Coe's progress.

Coe, however, did not want to protest, and when his father and Dick suggested the idea, he pushed them away angrily. He did admit, however, that "I got hemmed in."

"There will be no protest," he said.

But Coe was in the minority, and the team protested.

The referee rejected the protest, and the British team appealed to the Jury of Appeals. About 1½ hours after the race, the six-member Jury rejected the appeal, and the original result stood.

Despite Coe's protestations, Ward said the British protested because "this is a team competition. It's not up to Seb. It's up to the team manager."

Coe, who will be 33 on Sept. 29, is expected on Thursday to announce his future plans, probably retirement.

He is scheduled to run the 800 Friday at London and compete in the Commonwealth Games early next year. However, he plans a career in politics, and indications are that he will announce his retirement at the news conference on the eve of the meet in the Crystal Palace.

Quirot followed the fast early pace set by 1988 Olympic champion Sigrun Wodars before whipping past the East German around the final turn and winning by seven meters.

Lyudmila Veselkova of the Soviet Union set the old World Cup mark of 1:57.48 in 1981.

East German Cornelia Oschkenat won the women's 100-meter high hurdles in 12.60, the fastest in the world this year and a meet record, for her second straight World Cup title. Her time broke the mark of 12.67 by Grazyna Rabsztyn of Poland in 1979.

Silvia Costa of Cuba won the women's high jump with a meet-record 2.04 meters (6 feet, 8¼ inches). She then made three unsuccessful attempts at a world record 2.10 (6-10¾). In breaking the meet record of 2.00 by Stefka Kostadinova of Bulgaria in 1985, Costa produced the best outdoor jump of the world this year.

Harris Sets 2 Records As Williams Rolls, 40-23

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Burlington Cummings wide receiver Jamie Harris started off on the wrong foot, dropping the first two balls that came his way. But the senior knew what to do with a baker's dozen.

Harris caught 13 passes for 253 yards — both state records — Friday night as the defending 3-A champs defeated Burlington Williams 40-23 to highlight the third weekend of prep football across North Carolina.

While Cummings was running its record to 3-0, two other defending state champions came away losers.

High Point Andrews put together a 95-yard touchdown drive midway through the third quarter to break open a defensive struggle and lead the Red Raiders to a 14-0 triumph over previously unbeaten and defending 2-A champion Thomasville.

Meanwhile, 3-A Smoky Mountain broke Swain County's 13-game road winning streak by blasting the defending 1-A champs 38-0. Quarterback Eric Moore and receiver Chas Mathis combined for three first-half touchdowns.

Two key games were staged between teams ranked in The Associated Press' 4-A poll.

Top-ranked and defending champion Richmond County, which routed Fayetteville Pine Forest 61-3 last week, struggled to a 17-7 victory over No. 6 Fayetteville 71st. The Raiders, 2-0, were called for 12 penalties totaling 115 yards.

In Greensboro, fifth-ranked Page carved out a 9-7 victory over city rival and No. 8 Grimsley.

Second-ranked Asheville Reynolds, 3-0, rolled up some large numbers again Friday night. The Rockets had 506 yards of total offense in its 70-0 victory over North Buncombe. Reynolds has outscored opponents 159-8 in three games.

Ditto for eighth-ranked Rocky Mount, a 57-16 winner over Southern Nash. The Gryphons had 464 yards of total offense and won despite two kickoff returns for touchdowns by Southern Nash's Dennis Alston. The junior scored on returns of 87 and 91 yards.

Cummings and seven of the other 3-A teams ranked in the AP poll were all winners. Second-ranked Bertie and fifth-ranked Lexington had open dates.

Harris and the Cavaliers have now won 18 straight dating back to the 1987 playoffs. Junior signal caller Donnie Davis had an impressive night along with Harris, completing 18 of 26 passes for 379 yards.

Harris broke the old state record of 10 catches in a game set by three players and edged Eben Frankenburg's 1983 mark of 226 receiving yards while at Hillsborough Orange.

Fourth-ranked Statesville looked impressive again in its 28-0 victory over Davie County. Quarterback Donnell Chambers completed nine of 16 passes for 279 yards and two TDs.

Sixth-ranked South Iredell also ran its record to 3-0 with a 33-0 victory over Central Davidson. The Vikings have outscored their opponents 110-6.

In 2-A, Wallace-Rose Hill's 54-0 victory over Southern Durham may propel the Bulldogs to the top spot after Thomasville's loss. Wallace-Rose Hill's shutout was one of five recorded by the top 10 2-A squads.

Sixth-ranked Forest Hills had 527 yards of total offense, getting 292 yards on the ground from Lonnie Leak, in its 62-7 victory over Mount Pleasant.

Wake Forest-Rolesville downed No. 8 Fuquay-Varina on a last-second kickoff return. The Bengals thought victory was in hand after a Barry Coats 43-yard field goal with 14 seconds left gave them a 10-7 lead. But Romas Lucas took a lateral from Mark Jones and raced 81 yards with the ensuing kickoff as time ran out.

Five of the state's top 1-A teams fell, including top-ranked Swain County. Also losing were fourth-ranked St. Pauls, fifth-ranked Swansboro, seventh-ranked East Montgomery and 10th-ranked South Stanly.

The state's longest losing streak still stands at 31 as Surry Central had the night off.

Tigers Cash In On 'Skins Miscues

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

ROBERSONVILLE — Roanoke shot itself in the foot more times than it could afford and Williamston's Tigers were only too happy to exploit the Redskins' misfortune.

Williamston used every break it could get en route to a 27-13 high school football win over the Redskins in a matchup of former conference rivals from Martin County Friday night.

"We felt like we had to take advantage of every opportunity," Tiger coach Harold Robinson said. "Your football team needs to make its own breaks. It's a county rivalry and there's a lot more at stake than just winning and losing."

Five fumbles, inexperience and a key injury provided Roanoke, which moved from the 2-A Northeastern to the 1-A Tobacco Belt Conference this year, with its own burial.

With sophomore quarterback Marcus Crandell out with a shoulder injury, Roanoke coach Dock Ayers moved receiver/back Jimmy Brown, last year's starting quarterback, in as a replacement. It also meant a move on defense as Brown had to change from linebacker to safety.

The switch necessitated a change in offense as Crandell throws the ball well, while Brown is more option oriented.

"It's more or less putting in a new offense, which I think contributed to the turnovers," Ayers said. "We let adversity get us down."

The turnovers killed scoring drives, while the inexperience allowed two big plays for the Tigers that in the end turned out to be the difference in the ball game.

With Williamston leading 7-6 late in the second quarter, Tiger quarterback Jim Bob Bryant, who up to this point was 0-4 in passing, hit a wide open Ted Biggs on a fade pattern down the right sideline.

Biggs went untouched 66 yards for the score leaving Roanoke's Artazius Mason, a first-year player, trailing behind. Treyhey Mainer misfired on the extra-point try, but Williamston still led, 13-6 with 2:27 left in the opening half.

Roanoke went nowhere on its next possession, bringing on the punt team. Boris Brown mishandled the snap, gathered the ball off the ground for an instant and then lost it again as he was gang-tackled by a host of Williamston players.

John Ogelsby came up with the loose ball in the end zone for a touchdown with 18 seconds left in the half. Mainer provided the point after and the Tigers went into the locker room comfortably ahead, 20-6.

"Every big play tonight happened to a new player," Ayers said. "I feel bad for those kids. Inexperience was the key."

So instead of leading 7-6 at the half, Williamston went in with a two-touchdown lead.

Roanoke got within 20-14 midway through the third quarter, driving 51 yards for a score as Levy Jones went around left end for a 14-yard scoring run with 5:18 left in the period.

The drive was keyed along by a holding penalty against Williamston on a fourth-and-13 play at the Williamston 48 that kept the ball in the Redskins' hands.

On the ensuing kickoff, Williamston's Shelton Slade faked a reverse to Biggs, which fooled half the Roanoke cover team. Slade then took off running down the left sideline. He made it all the way to the one before tripping himself up just short of the end zone.

With a chance to put the Tigers back up by two scores, Bryant fumbled on first and goal at the one and Roanoke recovered.

The Redskins moved quickly to the 40 before suffering a fumble of their own on a handoff.

"I thought we were in good shape when we got within six points (20-14)," Ayers said. "Then we got the ball (after the Williamston fumble) and got a couple of good plays and then turned it over again.

"When you're not playing well, you get bad breaks," Ayers said.

Williamston gladly took the break, driving 40 yards to score on a successful sneak by Bryant from the one. Mainer's kick made it 27-14.

Everett, who led Williamston with 52 yards rushing, got the Tigers on the board early in the game when he scored on a four-yard run at the opening of the second quarter.

Jones answered for Roanoke with a four-yard scoring run of his own on the next possession. The drive was keyed by a 46-yard run by Boris Brown. The two-point conversion run failed, though, leaving Williamston ahead, 7-6.

Roanoke moved the ball early on, but gave the ball away on its first two possessions.

"They stopped themselves in the first quarter," Robinson said. "It wasn't anything we were doing."

But when Bryant hooked up with Biggs on the pass play, it opened the Redskins' defense, allowing Williamston more running room.

"You've got to take what they give you," Robinson said. "They were giving us a good cushion. We had the hitch. We faked the option and ran the fade."

Roanoke falls to 0-2 and returns to action at home Friday against North Pitt. Williamston, 1-1, hosts Greene Central Friday.

Rampants Muscle Past Eastern Wayne, 39-0

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

Rose's John W[illi]ams put the clamps on Eastern Wayne quarterback Brodie Gruver

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

It was a simple case of total domination.

The Rose High School football team, relying on a decided advantage in size and strength up front, extended an incredible regular-season winning streak to 24 straight games with a convincing 39-0 non-conference victory over Eastern Wayne Friday night at Percy Daniels Field.

A hard-charging Rampant defense constantly harassed promising but green sophomore quarterback Brodie Gruver and his offensive companions and the Warriors exited with zero total yards and a 1-2 record.

Rose, which visits 3-A power Bertie next Friday, climbed to 3-0.

The Warriors, who came out throwing, had limited success with screen passes and draw plays, but a slew of negative plays — 20 in fact — proved devastating.

Eastern Wayne was sacked for a whopping minus 70 yards rushing and had 70 yards through the air. Gruver completed six of 14 passes, but had two costly interceptions.

"We ran stunts on them and the defensive line came at them hard," said junior tackle Joe Rowe, who recovered a pair of fumbles, one of which he hauled in for a touchdown. "They didn't come hard at us, and we were stronger."

On the flipside, the Rampants piled up 270 yards of total offense with the bulk of the damage coming on the ground. Four running backs collected over 40 yards each, led by bullish senior fullback Tye Fickling with 66 yards on seven carries.

Senior tailback Maurice Hines, listed as doubtful due to a separated shoulder suffered in last week's win over Jacksonville, was called on midway the first quarter and provided an offensive spark with 65 yards on seven carries and three touchdowns.

Hines fumbled into the end zone on his first carry but came back to score on runs of 3, 11 and 37 yards.

Starting tailback Andre Perkins finished with 42 yards on 10 carries while junior reserve Anthony Love racked up 41 yards on just three carries.

Testing the airways was not as prosperous with quarterback Columbus Grice hitting only three of 12 passes for 22 yards.

"We just didn't get a lot of things done as far as finesse as we wanted to, but I think our power game as far as running right at them was fairly successful," Rose coach Chip Williams said.

Special teams again played a big role for Rose. The Rampants recovered a mishandled kickoff, returned a fumbled punt for a touchdown and twice swarmed in to bury Warrior punter Marty McAlduff after an off-target snap from center.

Rose pushed inside the Eastern Wayne 10 on its first two possessions but was turned away without any points. However, the Rampants hit paydirt on their next four possessions to mount a 25-0 cushion by intermission. A pair of third-quarter touchdowns capped the scoring.

With large holes opening up, Perkins, Grice and Fickling ran at will on the Rampants' initial drive but an illegal forward pass negated a Joel Daughtry touchdown and Eastern Wayne took over when a fourth-and-10 pass was broken up by Derrick Coleman in the right corner of the end zone.

Gruver drilled two successive passes to get a Warrior drive brewing but Blake Stallings came up with an interception and returned it 33 yards to the Eastern Wayne eight.

Again, the Warriors slammed the door and regained possession when they smothered Hines' fumble on fourth-and-goal from the four in the end zone.

After forcing a punt, Rose needed only two plays to score with Hines rambling 37 yards. The PAT kick failed.

Eastern Wayne mishandled the ensuing kickoff and Rowe came out of a pile with the ball. A pair of completions highlighted a 32-yard drive, capped by Hines' 3-yard plunge with 2:14 left in the first quarter. The run for two points was stopped.

The Rampant offense quickly returned after a Warrior end-around was foiled, resulting in a 10-yard loss and a fumble. A pass interference infraction set up Fickling's 14-yard blast up the middle. Again the run for two points failed.

With the aid of a couple of nicely executed screens and two Rose penalties, the Warriors put together a drive that reached the Rampant 13 but Terry Miles intercepted a Gruver pass and scooted 72 yards to the Eastern Wayne 18.

Hines eventually barreled in for the score on fourth-and-3 from the 11. Felix Robinson tacked on the PAT kick for a 25-0 lead with 8:09 left in the half.

A misfired punt attempt and a fumbled punt led to the two Rose third-quarter scores. Lowe scooped up a fumbled punt and ran 39 yards then Robinson added the kick for a 32-0 lead. A snap over McAlduff's head resulted in a 32-yard loss and put the Rampants within eight yards of the goal line. Perkins went in for the score on fourth and 2 and Robinson added the kick.

Big Plays, Conley Sack Panthers

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

BETHEL — D.H. Conley used a couple of big plays, a pair of Andy Fassett field goals and took advantage of some North Pitt kicking problems to build up a 27-0 lead and coasted to a 40-18 cross-county victory over the Panthers Friday night.

The win was the second in a row for the Vikings after a season-opening loss. For North Pitt, it was their third straight defeat.

Not that the Panthers rolled over and played dead in the game. Not hardly.

They fought back and cut the lead to 27-12 at one point and appeared to have shifted the momentum back in their direction. But once again, the Vikings used the big play to score two quick touchdowns and put the game out of reach in the third period.

"I knew (North Pitt) wouldn't quit and they didn't," Viking coach Steve Craft said. "I thought our kids played well in the first half, but (North Pitt) came back in the second half and got back in the game.

"Then, we picked ourselves back up and got two quick scores. I feel good about the way we responded."

After scoring their second touchdown, the Panthers stopped the Vikes and got the ball back on a fumble at the Conley 27 — putting themselves in good field position to draw even closer.

But the Viking defense bowed its backs and would not bend this time, taking over on downs at the 18.

Two plays later after gaining nothing, Scott Seymour hit Junior Farrow on a fly pattern, and when Dante Short went for the ball, Farrow snatched it away and went 82 yards untouched to the end zone.

Two plays after the kickoff, Paul Merritt intercepted a Randy House pass and returned it 22 yards to the 23, and a 10-yard holding penalty added to that started the Vikings from the Panther 13.

Pushed back to the 30 on a clip, Seymour again went to Farrow in the end zone, giving Conley a 40-12 lead with two minutes to go in the third period.

"I don't think the big play is the key for us. I think we can drive the ball, too," Craft said. "We can get the big play, but I think we can play control football.

"I did get worried there in the second half, though. I thought we got tired — getting clips and face-masking against you is a sign of being tired."

North Pitt's Stuart Ennis said he was convinced that Conley was a good football team.

"They executed their offense quite well in the first half and they shut our offense down," Ennis said.

"At the half, we just talked about pride instead of trying to make adjustments. I didn't feel that they were doing anything we hadn't expected. They were just executing. I said forget about the first half and play the second and I think we did that. There were just a few plays that made the difference."

The game threatened to dissolve into chaos late. Conley's last four first downs all came on penalties, two personal fouls against the Panther defense, and two unsportsmanlike conduct penalties against — steady now — the North Pitt band.

Yep, the band!

"Technically, he's right about the call," Ennis said later. "But that's all I'll say about it. I appreciate all the support we get from the band."

"That's a point of emphasis," Craft said of the calls. "The bands aren't supposed to be playing and making noise when the team is over the ball. Still, I think they let things get out of hand late."

The two flags came when the North Pitt band hammered away on the drums as Conley approached the ball on two late plays.

North Pitt had the first scoring opportunity in the game as Mike Clark fumbled just two plays into the contest and Terry Johnson recovered at the Viking 37. But the drive fizzled at the 28 and Conley got it back.

Clark ran 10 yards on first down and Terry Williams added 11 on the second. Clark then took the ball over left tackle on the next play and dashed 51 yards for the first Viking touchdown with 6:52 left on the clock. A bad snap negated the PAT try, leaving it at 6-0.

After holding, a short punt gave Conley the ball on the 37. But their drive stalled at the 18 and Fassett came on to boot a 35-yard field goal with 2:24 left, making it 9-0.

Another short punt returned the ball to Conley at the North Pitt 49. Seymour hit Hal Conger for 19 yards to the 31 and from there Clark again went over left tackle for the touchdown. Fassett added the PAT to make it 16-0 with just seconds gone in the second quarter.

Three plays after the kickoff, Merritt intercepted a North Pitt pass and returned it 24 yards to the six. A procedure penalty on third down left the Vikes facing a third and goal from the six and a pass fell incomplete. Fassett then kicked a 13-yard field goal to up the lead to 19-0 with 8:22 left.

Conley got it back at its own 45 and once again drove. Clark ripped off 36 yards on second down to the 19. On second and goal from the 10, Seymour's pass was batted by Short but came down in the hands of Martin Patrick at the one. Williams cracked over from there on the next play for the score and when there was another bad snap, Seymour hit Merritt for the PAT to make it 27-0 with 2:30 left in the half.

North Pitt then took the opening kickoff of the second half and drove 60 yards for its second score. House hit Reggie Daniel for 22 yards on the big play and a 13-yard face mask call put it on the 13. Two plays later, Daniel took it in from the five with 9:11 left. A two-point try failed, leaving it at 27-12.

Then, after recovering a fumble, it appeared North Pitt might be turning it around — only to give it back on downs and see Conley score two quick touchdowns to put it away.

North Pitt's final score came late in the game. Taking over at the 17 after a fumble, the Panthers scored on fourth down when House's pass bounced off a defender into the hands of Quentin Moore in the end zone. Again, a two-point try failed, setting the final 40-18 margin.

Clark led the Conley offense with 18 carries for 166 yards while Wiggins had six for 102 to pace North Pitt. Seymour was four of eight passes for 140 yards, while Farrow had two catches for 112 yards.

Conley returns home on Friday to host Farmville Central while North Pitt travels to Roanoke.

Rams Stun Hawks; Unbeaten Jags Rally

Ayden-Grifton Blanked By Plymouth; Washington, Jamesville Triumph

LA GRANGE — Greene Central's defense put the clamps on highly touted running back Tim Smith and host North Lenoir Friday night and came away with a stunning 21-6 non-conference victory.

The Rams, now 1-1, limited Smith to but 47 yards on 17 carries and held the Hawks to 88 total yards of offense.

"Defense was definitely the key to the ball game," Greene Central head coach Spence Grantham said. "The kids just did an excellent job. We were smaller but our quickness gave them a lot of trouble.

"We felt like we had to try to stop Smith and (Terrance) Outlaw. We wanted to take the halfbacks away and take the outside away from them."

Keying the Ram defense were junior Dana Edwards, who shifted from noseguard to tackle, with four unassisted tackles and three assists, senior linebacker/tackle Brian Bostick, senior outside linebacker Jimmy Hardy, junior tackle/linebacker Jason Thomas and freshman tackle Marvette Shackleford, who was credited with six assists.

Greene Central grabbed a 7-0 lead at the 2:28 mark of the first period when quarterback Mike Dail kept the ball on an option to right side and slipped from the two.

A 45-yard ramble by Timmy Wilkes, who finished with 118 yards on 18 carries, highlighted the drive after the Rams took over on their own 30 after a punt.

A Greene Central fumble on its one set up North Lenoir's only score. The Ram defense held for one play but Smith cracked through on a second-down run. The kick failed leaving the count 7-6 with 2:32 left in the first half.

However, fleet senior John Dixon answered quickly by taking the ensuing kickoff back 93 yards down the left sideline, springing loose after key blocks by juniors Rand Murray and Erick Barfield. Hardy's kick sent the Rams to halftime with a 14-6 edge.

Dixon closed out the scoring with a 13-yard run with 5:33 left in the third period. Hardy's kick again was true.

North Lenoir, tied for seventh in the latest Daily Reflector Top 12 poll, slipped to 2-1.

The Rams travel to Williamston next Friday night.

Farmville Central.....32
Louisburg.....18

LOUISBURG — Rasel Daniels scored two touchdowns and ran for 100 yards as fifth-ranked Farmville Central held off upset-minded Louisburg for a 32-18 non-conference high school football victory Friday night.

The Jaguars struggled against winless Louisburg before breaking away in the fourth quarter thanks to a three-yard touchdown run by Anthony Foreman made it 32-18.

Parker

Farmville got on the board first when LaMont Parker tackled Brian Edwards in the end zone for a safety with 6:18 remaining in the opening quarter.

Shortly thereafter, Parker caught a 14-yard scoring pass from quarterback Morris Foreman following the free kick to the Farmville 38. The two-point conversion run failed, making it 8-0.

Daniels added a nine-yard touchdown run. Anthony Foreman ran in the conversion for a 16-0 Jaguar lead.

Louisburg got right back into the game with two touchdowns in the second quarter, thanks to a pair of scoring passes from Edwards.

Edwards hit Adrian Perry for a six-yard touchdown, but the conversion pass failed. The touchdown was set up by an interception.

Edwards then connected with James Terrell on a 55-yard scoring play with eight seconds remaining in the half.

Louisburg went ahead briefly in the third quarter Edwards hooked up with Perry again, this time for a 30-yard scoring pass following a Jaguar fumble at the Louisburg 45. The kick failed but Louisburg still led 18-16.

Farmville came right back to take the lead as Daniels scored on a nine-yard run and then added the two-point conversion run to make it 24-18.

Foreman's scoring run in the final period added to the cushion.

Farmville also had four interceptions, including two by Morris Foreman.

Farmville moves to 3-0 on the year and travels to D.H. Conley Friday.

PLYMOUTH — Shawn Walker passed for 202 yards and three touchdowns as seventh-ranked Plymouth blanked Ayden-Grifton, 27-0, in a non-conference matchup of 2-A high school football teams Friday night.

Two of Moore's scoring tosses went to Kip Hicks, both in the first half. Walker hit Hicks from seven yards out for the first touchdown and the two then hooked up for a 50-yard scoring play in the second quarter to make it 13-0.

Curtis Brown added a 14-yard touchdown run later in the first half before Walker closed out the scoring with an eight-yard toss to Chris Kelly in the fourth quarter.

In the third quarter, the Chargers missed a chance to get on the scoreboard after moving to the Plymouth one, losing yardage and eventually turning the ball over.

Also, Ayden-Grifton's Rashid Williams had two punt returns for touchdowns called back by penalties.

Ayden-Grifton falls to 1-2 and has an off-date next week before taking on East Duplin Sept. 22.

BAYBORO — Washington High School rolled to a 28-6 victory over Pamlico County Friday night after spotting the Hurricanes a 6-0 lead.

Pamlico broke the ice in the second period scoring on a 17-yard run by Craig Mozzell to take the 6-0 lead, but after that, the Pam Pack took control of the game and charged into the lead.

Before the half ended, Washington got on the board and moved ahead. Lamont Cox evened it up on a 14-yard run and Riley Youmans added the PAT kick to give the Pam Pack a 7-6 lead.

Bell

Two more Washington runners got into the end zone in the third quarter, raising the score to 21-6. Brian Jones scored on a 1-yard plunge while David Williams hauled in a 31-yard pass from Jones for the other score. Youmans, who was four of four on the night, added both extra points.

Rod Gorham closed out the scoring in the final quarter, scoring on a 39-yard run.

Damien Moore led the Washington offense with 116 yards on 14 carries. Williams added 54 yards on nine lugs. Mozzell paced Pamlico with 16 carries for 81 yards.

JAMESVILLE — Jamesville rallied for a pair of second-quarter touchdowns and went on to defeat visiting Chocowinity 28-18 in a non-conference football meeting of the two Tobacco Belt Conference schools Friday night.

Chocowinity got on the scoreboard first, scoring on a 1-yard plunge by Eric Newkirk, giving the Tribe a 6-0 lead.

Williams

But Jamesville came back before the quarter ended to take the lead. David Bell, who connected on 12 of 21 passes for 180 yards, found Alexander Moore in the end zone for the touchdown. Keith Basnight then added the two-point conversion giving the Bullets an 8-6 lead.

Chocowinity fought back and regained the lead, 12-8, on a 1-yard run by Jonathan Dixon. But again, it was short-lived as the Bullets bounced back to score twice before halftime.

Curtis Whitehurst got the go-ahead score on a 40-yard pass from Bell, making it 14-12. Moore then intercepted a Chocowinity pass and returned it 45 yards for the third Jamesville tally. That made it 20-12 at the half.

Both teams added touchdowns in the third period. Chocowinity struck first on a five-yard run by Mike Laws, trimming the lead to 20-18, but Jamesville put the game away on a 38-yard run by Basnight. Bell then threw to Moore for the PAT to finish off the scoring.

Basnight led Jamesville's effort with 112 yards on 20 carries. Whitehurst caught three passes for 74 yards while Anthony Selby had seven catches for 71 yards.

Jamesville goes to 1-2 on the year while Chocowinity slips to 0-3. The Bullets travel to Southwest Onslow on Friday while Chocowinity visits Camden.

Lloyd Back In NBA After Ban Is Lifted

HOUSTON (AP) — Lewis Lloyd, who was reinstated by the NBA following a two-year ban because of a drug violation, said he wants to move quickly in negotiations with the Houston Rockets.

Lloyd, who played for the Rockets for four seasons before being kicked out of the league 2½ years ago, was reinstated Friday by Commissioner David Stern.

"I'm just happy to get another chance," Lloyd said. "When I heard the news, I wanted to scream.

"You learn things as life goes on and, hopefully, I'm trying to deal with my disease one day at a time."

As for playing with the Rockets, Lloyd said, "My intentions are to be in Houston."

After watching Mitchell Wiggins get reinstated six weeks ago, then have trouble agreeing on a contract with the Rockets, Lloyd said he hopes to sign a contract next week.

Steve Patterson, general counsel for the Rockets, said he hopes negotiations with Lloyd can be expedited.

"We look at Lew as one more piece to the puzzle," Patterson said. "Lew has already expressed an interest in getting a contract finalized and I would anticipate that we'll sit down early next week and try to get it done. We'd like to be able to do something before we go out to the league meeting (on Thursday)."

This summer the 6-foot-6 guard has been working in John Lucas' drug-recovery fitness program and sharpening his game.

Lloyd, 30, was banned by the NBA in January 1987 when he failed a league-administered drug test. He was in and out of the Continental Basketball Association for the next two seasons.

Recruiting Notes

Richmond County boasts two of the top high school football prospects in the state in quarterback Mike Thomas (6-4, 207) and tight end Oscar Sturgis (6-6, 215).

Both are big-time prospects who will be the object of intensive recruiting attention over the next few months.

Thomas has been a three-year starter and led Richmond to the state 4-A title last year. He is also a punter, averaging 42 yards a kick last year.

Last year, he had 2,200 yards in total offense, 1,507 through the air. Richmond, though, throws only an average of about 11 times a game.

He is also a top baseball player, having hit over .400 last year.

Sturgis wants to play both basketball and football in college. He caught 29 passes for 417 yards a year ago. He was also the Raiders' most valuable player.

Sturgis and Thomas are both listed among the best 65 players in the Atlantic Coast Conference area by The Poop Sheet. Sturgis is also one of only five players listed in the Southeastern Evaluation Top 200 list.

Other North Carolina players listed by the SEA include: Brevard running back Dean Lytle (6-3, 217); Fayetteville Smith running back Sebastian Small (6-0, 190); Asheville Reynolds linebacker William Collins (6-3, 210) and South Mecklenburg offensive lineman Roge Purgason (6-4, 260).

Small and Collins are also two of three North Carolinians chosen to the 1989 Blue Chip Report Super 225 Team.

Small, who is already off to a fast start this season and had 236 yards rushing Friday night, will be one of the South's most highly recruited running backs, according to Blue Chip.

Collins had over 1,000 yards rushing at fullback last year and totaled 106 solo tackles on defense. Among his listed college choices are Tennessee, Georgia, Clemson, North Carolina State and North Carolina.

The other choice to the team is Burlington Cummings wide receiver Jamie Harris (6-1, 175), who played on last year's 3-A state championship team.

He caught 58 passes for 932 yards and nine touchdowns.

The Charlotte area also has a number of the state's top running back prospects in Independence running backs Shawn Chamblee (6-1, 220) and Mario Grier (5-11, 215). Another top Charlotte-area back is Charlotte Catholic's Vee Hood (6-3, 185).

The Poop Sheet has only five Northeastern-area players listed among the top 140 prospects in the ACC area in Edenton Holmes offensive lineman Robert Holley (6-2, 285); Northampton East running back David Perry (5-11, 175); Northampton East wide receiver Terry Williams (5-10, 160); North Lenoir running back Tim Smith (6-0, 175) and Northeastern (Elizabeth City) tight end Derrick White (6-6, 240).

Other players of note include Marion McDowell quarterback Jason Van Dyke (6-2, 190); Durham Jordan offensive lineman Randy McGeorge (6-5, 270) Garner defensive lineman Chris Thompson (6-4, 230); Wilmington Hoggard defensive lineman Billy Lofton; Concord quarterback Jimmy Hitchcock (6-1, 185); Fayetteville 71st running back Marc Bronson (5-9, 175); Central Cabarrus running back Natrone Means (6-0, 208); Chapel Hill tight end Bernardo Harris; Wilmington New Hanover tight end David Stokes (6-3, 225); Concord defensive back Edmond O'Neal (6-1, 185); Wilmington Hoggard offensive lineman Josh Schouten (6-7, 290) along with Newton Conover offensive linemen Heath Woods (6-4, 285) and Scott Woods (6-4, 290).

Locally, North Pitt's Reggie Daniels has made the adjustment to running back quite well for the Panthers. Daniels (6-3, 190) moved to halfback this year after three years starting at end. So far this year, he has 264 yards on 39 carries to lead area running backs.

Rose running back Maurice Hines (6-1, 205) injured a shoulder in Friday's 13-6 win over Jacksonville.

He is expected to see spot action against Eastern Wayne this Friday, leading into a big matchup the following week against Bertie.

How quick Hines recovers from that injury and gets back in the lineup will determine how much recruiting interest he gets. Also a standout baseball player, Hines will likely wait until spring to announce his college choice.

Other area players who figure to get interest from Division I-A schools include Farmville guard Kevin Wade (6-6, 290), North Pitt defensive end/fullback Malcolm Wiggins (6-1, 210) and Rose guard Boris Newton (6-2, 245).

Charles Winslow (6-0, 190), a quarterback/defensive back from Green Run High School in Virginia Beach, Va., lists ECU, along with Syracuse, North Carolina State, Clemson and Tennessee as potential choices.

North Edgecombe quarterback Orlando Whitaker (6-0, 170) has a good chance to break the North Carolina high school career touchdown record of 55 set last year by Chuckie Burnette. After two games this year, Whitaker has a total of 46 scoring passes.

He lists ECU, along with N.C. State, Clemson, South Carolina and North Carolina. His brother, Jeff, is in his first year playing basketball at ECU after attending Chowan for the last two seasons.

Offshore Weather Aids Pier Fishing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rough weather along the North Carolina coast has made offshore fishing nearly impossible but has caused pier fishing to improve, pier operators say.

"It's rough offshore. It's been blowing northeast since Saturday and no boats have been out," said Andy McCann of Nags Head Fishing Pier.

"The wind has made the water rough, but it also makes the fish start biting," McCann said.

There have been some puppy drum, gray trout, flounder and lots of big spot caught along Nags Head, he said. Some yellow belly spot have also been caught and McCann expects it to go on through the weekend.

At some other North Carolina piers:

Carolina Beach

According to Fred Phelps Jr, the rough weather has caused fishing to pick up along the Carolina Beach Fishing Pier.

"It's rough weather, and that's good for us. The fish usually come in rough weather," Phelps said.

Fishermen are starting to catch a lot of blues, puppy drum, Virginia mullet and spot along the Carolina Beach pier, he said. Spot in particular are biting at night, Phelps said.

There have also been some flounder, spanish and two king mackerel caught, he said.

Swansboro

John Dudley of Dudley's Marina says before the high winds set in Sunday, the fishing was good at Swansboro, especially for speckled trout.

"It's been bad since Sunday. The northeast wind hit us Sunday and we haven't had good fishing since," Dudley said.

There have also been some dolphin in close and plenty of spanish mackerel, he said.

"If that hurricane doesn't get too close to us, we should be back in shape this weekend," Dudley said.

Wrightsville Beach

Things are quiet alond Crystal Pier, says George Fokakis, the pier's operator. There have been a few spanish and blues early in the morning and late in the afternoon, he said.

Tuesday night two king mackerel were caught. One weighed 36 pounds and the other 14, he said. Also, an 8 pound sheepshead was caught on the pier, Fokakis said.

Topsail Island

Fishermen were catching a few flounder, spot and whiting along the Jolly Roger Pier, said pier operator Hardin Crouch. Some tarpin have been sighted, he said, but none have been landed on the pier. A big school of popeye mullet was also sighted.

"There is lots of bait in the water. The weather is getting cooler and we really are looking for things to pick up in the next few days," Crouch said.

Pelican's Roost

There was live baiting Tuesday night for spanish mackerel along the Hatteras Inlet. Spanish were caught in excess of 7 pounds and blues were being caught at 7-7½ pounds, said Tom Blevins, an employee at the Pelican's Roost.

"There are lots of summer flounder, but you would have trouble finding legal ones. A lot of them have been about 12 inches long," he said.

As along most of coast, no one is fishing offshore at Pelican's Roost.

"Nobody is going offshore because the sea is running high," Blevins said.

Mattamuskeet Duck Hunts

The Mattamuskeet National Wildlife Refuge has set its duck hunting date for this season.

In addition to the regular hunts, a special youth hunt will be held on Nov. 24 and 25 for youths up to age 15. It will include a safety program, a tour of the refuge and the standard orientation. The actual hunting will begin on at 1 p.m. and end at sunset on Nov. 24.

Parents of any youth wishing to participate should sent their name, address and birthdate on a 3x5 card and mail it to Youth Hunt, Mattamuskeet National Wildlife Refuge, Rt. 1, Box N-2, Swan Quarter, N.C. 27885.

Each of those selected may bring a companion of the same age group, and an adult 21 or older must accompany each youth in the blind, but will not be allowed to hunt. Each youth must have successfully passed a state-approved hunter education course and must present a card, certificate or letter from their instructor stating such.

Regular hunts will be held on Dec. 15-16, 19-20, 22-23, 26-27, 29-30, Jan. 2-3 and 5-6.

Individuals wishing to apply should sent name, address and birthdate on a 3x5 card to Mattamuskeet Hunt, Mattamuskeet Refuge, Rt. 1, Box N-2, Swan Quarter, N.C., 27885. They should also list, in priority order, three choices of the two-day hunts. Hunters may bring one or two companions of their choice, but hunter education training and certification is required for all hunters under age 16.

A lottery drawing will be held at Refuge Headquarters on Oct. 4 at 1 p.m. to draw for all hunts. Hunters who are drawn will be notified by mail, but unsuccessful hunters will not be notified. Only one application is allowed and those who enter more than once will be disqualified.

Hunters may also register for a standby lottery prior to 5 a.m. on the day of each hunt.

For more information, contact the refuge office at 926-4021.

Can Man Avoid Upsetting Balance Of Nature?

By Bill Schulz
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Man so dominates the planet that he cannot avoid managing the world's wildlife, a veteran wildlife biologist says.

Even a decision not to manage "is now a management decision," said Jack Randolph, assistant director for the Virginia Department of Game and Inland Fisheries.

"There's not a piece of land we're looking at that does not come under man's management decision review," he said.

That's due, at least in part, to what man already has done to the land and its animals, he said.

"We have completely and totally upset the balance of nature because we have eliminated the former predators," he said. "We have a rule, 'Bad to man and good to man.' If it's bad to man it goes. If it's good to man it stays."

Animals, he said, would have an entirely different view of what happened to them than the general public looking at conservation today. If they could write their own history, animals would depict it as a holocaust, he said.

"The big villain in it would not be the hunter and the trapper, because he's a natural predator they've dealt with throughout their life," Randolph said. "It would be the guy who's paved over their habitat and destroyed their future forever. ..."

Hunting or trapping of legal limits under modern conservation practices actually helps preserve species. It maintains balance within a habitat and prevents wide swings in animal populations that would occur if nature were allowed to try to repair man's damage by herself, he said.

If that was allowed, he said, one change would be "the awful amount of trauma that animals will experience on the road from here to there." Reproduction would drop off, he said, and "what causes the reproduction to drop off is stress."

He said the difference between the trapper and hunter and "the anti-trapper and anti-hunter" is that trappers and hunters have joined wildlife biologists in their concern "with the quality of the animal's life, while anti's agonize over the quality of the animal's death."

He said that in publications 60 years ago, "they predicted the end of all furbearers, with pictures of mountains of all these skins and pelts and everything else."

"Those catches then were not as big as the catches now," Randolph said.

And that's because of good management.

The goal, he said, is to maximize the carrying capacity of the land without exceeding it.

"When animals get beyond the amount of the carrying capacity of the habitat, they get in trouble, and so do we," Randolph said. "We have habitats and we have carrying capacities."

6 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ◇

If you follow the rubrics in deciding how to tackle a hand, you will sometimes find yourself facing conflicting ideas. For instance, how would you tackle the trump suit here. Should you first lead toward the short trump hand, or toward the hand with two honors? At the right time, both approaches have their merits. In this case, however, forget about bromides and use common sense.

While there is something unpalatable about opening with a demand bid on a suit missing two of the three top honors, South has a three-loser hand and to open anything else could lead to impossible problems later. When North raised and Blackwood elicited the information that an ace was missing, declarer decided to gamble that partner held one of the high spades for the three-spade raise.

After winning the diamond in hand, declarer should have no problem about how to go about making his contract. There is no loser in the plain suits, so only a 4-0 trump break could endanger the contract. With a reasonable amount of care, declarer can nullify that distribution no matter which defender has the long trumps.

Declarer should lead the queen of spades to the second trick. If the cards lie as in the diagram and West wins the ace, East will show out on the first trump. So declarer comes to hand as soon as he can and runs the nine of trumps for the marked finesse. If West shows out on the first round of trumps, declarer can get to dummy with the ace of hearts for the marked finesse against the ten. Either way, declarer can lose no more than one trump trick.

Take Each Step Carefully In Buying A House

By Reader's Digest
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Buying a house is probably the most expensive purchase you'll ever make, o don't rush into it.

There are many things to consider and the whole procedure can be tressful. In the process, it's easy to overlook the obvious. Here are some ips to keep in mind when looking for a house.

What to Consider

– Check local newspapers to get an idea of what is available. Visit rokers; they can tell you which homes are on the market and provide up-o-date information about local mortgage lending activity. But keep in mind rokers are paid by the sellers and have their interests in mind first. For xample, a broker might downplay a house's faults.

– Shop for your house in a stable or improving neighborhood. Make cer-ain you feel comfortable with the people, prices, and lifestyle of the area. Establish that it is free of industrial odors, flooding, noisy traffic and other nnoyances. Be wary if many neighborhood houses are for sale or rent. In a ew development, find out if the sidewalks, sewers and street lights have een paid for or will be assessed later. Ask owners about the builder's will-ngness to fix problems.

– Don't buy a house that is bigger or more expensive than those around it; resale could be difficult. It may be better to buy a slightly rundown house in a higher-price area and fix it up.

When You Find A House

– Check the asking price of a house against the prices of similar houses in the same area. Consider getting an appraisal to guide you in making an offer.

– Have an engineer inspect the house to determine its soundness and the adequacy of its heating, plumbing, wiring and insulation. Get a written report and an estimate of what it will cost to correct problems. The seller might reduce the asking price or offer to share expenses.

In addition:

– Check water pressure and the fit of doors and windows.
– Make sure the gutter down spouts lead water away from the house.
– Look in the basement after a rain for signs of water seepage.
– Find out what is under the carpeting.
– Unless the home owner can present recent certification that the house is free of termites and other pests, have a professional check it.

Besides a house's price and physical condition, you should also consider how close it is to public transportation, shopping, recreation centers, schools, churches, hospitals and fire and police departments. Even if you do not need all these facilities their availability may affect the value of the house. Also, find out about zoning restrictions, tax rates and the most recent assessment.

The Process of Buying

Whether or not you use a broker, hire a lawyer or an escrow company experienced in real estate in your area. For a fee of no more than 1 percent of the price of the house, a lawyer or escrow company will draw up the purchase agreement, arrange for a title search, execute the closing and record the deed of sale.

Don't sign a "binder" to purchase the house without advice from your lawyer. The "earnest money" you put up secures your right to purchase the real estate at the agreed-upon terms for a limited amount of time. Be sure the agreement says your money will be returned to you if the deal does not go through.

The contract for sale, which usually entails a down payment, is drawn up by the seller's lawyer but should be reviewed by your lawyer. The contract should be made conditional on your being able to obtain mortgage financing.

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — A transparent tape for tough projects.

Manufacturer's claim — That this tape is durable, water resistant and virtually invisible ... that it easily conforms to almost any surface ... that it can be used for mending torn pages and sealing envelopes ... that it will handle vinyl and plastic jobs outside the house, such as a child's pool or beach balls ... that it is good for book spines and board games ... that it will come in handy when moving, especially for sealing boxes ... that its uses include weathersealing window cracks, gaps and other openings ... and that it is available in a new dispenser which cuts the tape when the cover is closed with a downward motion.

THE PRODUCT — A steam wallpaper stripper.

Manufacturer's claim — That it is faster and easier than the wet-and-scrape method and far less costly than renting a steamer for every project ... that it uses directed-steam to loosen wallpaper adhesive ... that the steamer is held against the wallpaper for 10 to 15 seconds to loosen the adhesive ... that the product is lightweight and easy to control ... that a special design allows the operator to work in any position, from narrow spots in the bathroom or kitchen to ceilings and other out-of-the-way places ... and that it has a durable, easy-to-clean plastic housing.

THE PRODUCT — A primer coating to control bleeding from certain woods.

Manufacturer's claim — That this product is fortified with polyurethane to prevent the passage of wood stains into the final coat ... that it will not mask the texture of the wood's natural grain ... that it is highly resistant to blistering and peeling ... that it contains a special fungicide to make the dry film resistant to mildew ... that it is environmentally safe and conforms to all government specifications ... and that it is also recommended as the first coat under all custom colors using light and medium light bases.

Manufactur's claim — That, even if you are on a ladder, precise measurements can be saved, with the product's digital memory storing them until they can be written down ... that the 16-foot tape, besides the digital conveniences, has all standard features including a ¾-inch metal blade, 16-inch markings, an automatic lock and a power retract ... that it is made of durable plastic ... and that it operates for up to a year on two standard triple-A batteries.

THE PRODUCT — A water filter that requires no installation.

Manufacturer's claim — That it can be mounted on a cabinet, countertop or wall ... that it removes lead and other contaminants from drinking water ... that it requires no electricity to use ... that it has clean simple lines that blend with any kitchen or bath decor ... that the conventional aerator is replaced with a special diverter-aerator ... that tubes from the aerator carry the water to and from a pre-filter for maximum filtration of rust and sediment in the water ... and that the water goes through two other filters that reduce organic chemicals, lead and other heavy metals.

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang
THE ASSOCIAGTED PRESS

Q. — We are thinking of having a new lavatory put into our master bedroom in the space now occupied by a large walkin closet. Can we use a toilet which has a power flush, such as is found in most business establishments?

A. — First, to get it straight, you apparently mean a bathroom rather than a lavatory, which is merely a sink, although the word is sometimes mistakenly used for a bathroom. As for a power flush mechanism, it requires very strong water pressure, not always available in residential areas. You will have to ask a local plumber if such pressure can be used in your locality. Your town authorities also can advise you, not only whether the pressure is available but whether the local codes permit that type of installation.

Q. — Is it possible to clean brass with regular ammonia? I seem to recall my grandmother using some kind of ammonia mixture for that purpose.

A. — Mix equal parts of household ammonia and water. Soak the brass object in the mixture for about an hour, then take it out and rub it vigorously with a clean cloth. Brass is likely to tarnish after a period of time unless it is coated with lacquer or a paste wax. This is especially true of brass which comes into contact with human skin, such as a doorknob. The ammonia-water mixture just mentioned may not work if the brass is heavily tarnished. If it is, try two parts of vinegar with one part of lemon juice and go through the same procedure as above, including the coating with lacquer or paste wax.

Q. — Our old coffee table has never been finished. I want to apply lacquer to the top — the kind that comes in a spray can. Since coffee and other hot beverages will be used on the table, will the lacquer withstand the heat?

A. — Yes, but only to a degree. The best way to keep the top from getting, damaged is to put some kind of coaster under a container of beverage whether it be hot or cold.

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, remover, bleach, pumice and rottenstone are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending $1 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y., 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Trees Enhance Home, Property

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COTTAGE GROVE, Ore. — Trees can do a lot to enhance your home and property, but proper selection is important, says Phil Hahn, director of forestry research at Georgia-Pacific Corp.

"Small- to medium-sized trees planted at the corners of a home can give the illusion of extending the width of a narrow house," says Hahn. "Japanese maples and gray birch are excellent choices because they won't outgrow a small or single-story home."

Because of their full shapes, red maples, honeylocusts and other shade trees are used to accent tall houses and provide contrast to square homes. Trees of various heights at maturity often are planted in rows to break the rooflines of long, low houses.

Elderly Numbers Rise

BOSTON (AP) — America's elderly population, 65 and over, is expected to reach 60 million over the next 40 years.

This means double the current number of elderly, including an unprecedented number of those 85 and older. Medical experts say skyrocketing medical costs and shortage of nursing home beds means more elderly will get health care at home.

According to Lifetime Corp., a supplier of home health care personnel and services, 32 percent of those over 85 now get home health care and generally prefer it to being institutionalized. The firm says the aging population and efforts by insurers to reduce hospital stays will boost the home care market to nearly $10 billion next year.

Foyer Is Welcome Space In Home

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A foyer should be a welcoming space that introduces visitors to the house and simplifies the logistics of entering, exiting, greeting visitors and receiving packages and mail.

To do all these tasks well, it takes practical surfaces, functional furniture and decoration in harmony with the rooms to which it connects.

No foyer is complete without a mirror and surface for placing objects, and the next logical addition is a place to sit down, says Beverly Ellsley, a designer in Westport, Conn.

"It would definitely make sense to have also something welcoming like a vase of flowers," adds Ellsley.

If your house does not have a foyer and you want one, there are several possibilities, says Thomas Hills Cook, senior interior designer at Armstrong World Industries in Lancaster, Pa. You could build a small one-story vestibule onto the front of the house. The new space will conserve heat as well as provide a place to greet people.

Another way to get a foyer without adding on is to screen off the area around the door by building a full or half wall or by placing a piece of furniture — finished on both sides — between the door and the rest of the room. Faux or real architectural columns and tall bookcases are also useful as a means of screening off the entryway, while also providing storage.

It's hard to visualize how a free-standing wall or a large piece of furniture will affect the layout of the room. So try out your idea by making a craft paper or cardboard dummy in the projected size and shape, suggests Cook.

Paper carton material is usually available free from the supermarket and for the relatively small trouble and expense, the dummy piece can reduce the risk of adding something permanent and expensive which you don't like.

If the small area you've created seems confining or claustrophobic, mirror one wall or hang a mirror on it. Use concealed cove lighting where ceiling meets wall to create the illusion of natural light. Another idea if there is room is to create a small niche for a piece of furniture or a decorative statue on a pedestal. Light this alcove from below or above.

Lighting for a foyer can be accomplished with recessed spotlights, track lighting, wall sconces, a ceiling fixture or a combination of these.

Since the area is usually merely a pass-through, you can often afford to be more extravagant and daring than in larger, more lived-in rooms.

"It's a lot less expensive to put marble down in a 6-by-8-foot foyer than in a 17-by-22-foot room," said Ellsley, who added that "above all else, foyers are places to use exuberant color or wallpaper with which you can get a bit of drama quickly."

Ellsley recently had a mural executed in the foyer of an 18th-century-style home. The painting reflected the surrounding countryside and among its motifs was a leafy tree that continued up the stairs to the second floor.

If you live in an apartment with a windowless foyer designated by the builder to serve as a dining area, forget it.

"Most people would prefer not to eat a meal in a tiny windowless room," said Ellsley. Instead, use the space as a foyer and find another place for dining.

It's typical in traditional homes for the foyer to be situated between the living room and dining room. In that case, emphasize a color in the foyer that is present in both the other rooms, suggests Cook.

If the living room is mostly beige, add red accents in pillows, window treatment, upholstery fabric or floor covering. In the dining room choose a fabric or wall covering with red in it. Then create a red foyer. It's dramatic and the result will be a cohesive design that unites the three rooms.

"You may not be able to live with a red living room, but a red foyer is fine," said Ellsley.

For practicality, select a hard-wearing floor which can withstand tracked-in mud, snow and rain. A traditional idea for foyer floors that has withstood the test of time is white and black squares or diamonds in vinyl or ceramic tiles.

Regulators Put Five S&Ls Up For Sale

By Dave Skidmore
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators put five more large savings institutions up for sale and said they hope to complete the multibillion-dollar deals by the end of the month.

The five, all with total assets of $9 billion, are located in Texas, Pennsylvania, Kansas, California and Florida.

"Due to the structure of the sales, we anticipate lengthy negotiations with prospective investors should not be required," said David C. Cooke, executive director of the Resolution Trust Corp., on Friday.

The new agency, created last month to dispose of failed S&Ls, controls more than 270 thrift institutions. So far, it has closed 14 small S&Ls, transferring their deposits to other institutions or paying off customers directly.

The RTC was originally planning to spend about $5 billion by the end of this month on S&L resolutions, but, with Friday's announcement, is increasing the estimate to $8 billion, according to Alan Whitney, a spokesman for the agency.

It has $20 billion to spend by the end of September, and any money not earmarked for rescue deals will be used to replace high-cost deposits in failed, but still-open, thrifts.

On Aug. 30, the RTC invited offers on five other large institutions, two in Texas and one each in Maryland, Illinois and Ohio. But, negotiations on those S&Ls are expected to take longer than the five put up for sale Friday.

The latest institutions offered are:

—University Federal Savings Association, Houston, with $2.6 billion in assets and 362,890 deposit accounts.

—Hill Financial Savings Association, Red Hill, Pa., with $2.6 billion in assets and 295,520 deposit accounts.

—Peoples Heritage Savings, Salina, Kans., with assets of $1.8 billion and 101,268 deposit accounts.

—Pacific Savings Bank, Costa Mesa, Calif., with assets of $1 billion and 46,898 deposit accounts.

—Freedom Savings and Loan Association, Tampa, Fla., with $1 billion in assets and 148,102 deposit accounts.

Also on Friday, the RTC announced it had closed three small institutions, one in Texas and two in Louisiana, transferring the deposits to commercial banks. All three thrifts will reopen their offices on Monday under the name of the banks taking over the deposits.

The three S&Ls, followed by the names of the banks, are: American Federal Savings Bank, Austin, Texas, with $33.7 million in assets, NCNB Texas National Bank; Elmwood Federal Savings and Loan Association, Harahan, La., with $58 million in assets, First National Bank of Commerce, New Orleans, and Enterprise Federal Savings and Loan Association, Marrero, La., with $65.7 million in assets, Whitney National Bank, New Orleans.

Comptroller Seeks Tougher Capital Rule

By Dave Skidmore
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The chief regulator of national banks proposed a new capital rule that he says will discourage banks from making risky investments, but a rival regulator accused him of trying to weaken the standard for most banks.

Comptroller of the Currency Robert L. Clarke, whose agency regulates about 4,000 federally-chartered banks, proposed Friday a 3 percent minimum capital standard, or leverage ratio, as part of a larger risk-based capital rule that takes effect at the end of 1990.

Capital put at risk by bank and S&L owners acts as a buffer, absorbing an institution's losses before federal deposit insurance kicks in. One of the key reforms in savings and loan legislation enacted last month was an increase in S&Ls' required capital levels.

Current rules require commerical banks to hold 6 percent capital against their loans and other investments. However, under new rules taking effect Dec. 31, 1990, banks will have to work up to 8 percent capital.

But they won't have to have hold any capital against such nearly riskless assets as cash and government securities and they will get a break on capital for investing in residential mortgages.

To prevent banks from using the risk-adjustments to severely reduce their overall capital, Clarke on Friday proposed a 3 percent minimum standard, or leverage ratio.

However, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Chairman L. William Seidman, whose gency insures bank and S&L deposits, is pushing for a 6 percent leverage ratio as a floor beneath the 8 percent risk-based standard.

Seidman, speaking to a group of lawyers and accountants, said weak standards helped cause the savings and loan crisis and Clarke's proposal would in effect weaken the standard for 90 percent of the nation's banks.

"It's rather clear in my mind that ... changing standards to reduce capital did not work out well in the last experiment when we tried it," Seidman said, referring to a regulatory decision in the early 1980s to reduce S&Ls' capital.

However, Clarke maintained his proposal was stricter than current rules and said setting the leverage ratio too high would negate the risk-adjusted standard, removing the incentive banks have to move into less speculative investments.

He told reporters at a briefing that his position is supported by both the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board, which regulates bank holding companies.

Under the comptroller's proposal, about 800 of 13,500 state and federal banks nationally will have to raise capital or restructure their portfolios, compared with 475 that are short now. Clarke estimated more than 1,000 would fall short under Seidman's proposal.

The three bank regulators — the comptroller, the Fed and the FDIC — have traditionally coordinated their capital policies. Clarke said a common standard is desirable, but he was not committed to achieving an agreement before adopting rules for national banks, probably by the end of the year.

That raises the possibility that stricter rules would apply to state-chartered banks whose primary regulator is the FDIC, putting the state banks at a competitive disadvantage.

Economic Analysts Predict Slower Rate Of Borrowing

By John D. McClain
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Americans will continue to borrow for the remainder of the year but at a slower pace, analysts say after a government report that consumer debt fell in July for the first time in 2½ years.

"Consumer borrowing has slowed down and will continue to be slower than it was for two reasons," Larry Chimerine, senior economic adviser for the WEFA Group in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., said.

One reason is that consumer spending is weaker, particularly on durable goods, big-ticket items that people generally finance with loans, Chimerine said.

"And secondly, the high debt levels for many families has discouraged people from borrowing more and, even when they spend, they are being forced to pay more cash," he said.

The Federal Reserve reported Friday that consumer debt in July fell $280 million, a seasonally adjusted 0.5 percent annual rate of decline. It was the first drop since borrowing fell 3.4 percent, or $1.63 billion, in January 1987.

Although it increased, borrowing also was slower in June than previously thought, the Fed said. The pace was revised downward Friday from 5.1 percent to 4.7 percent, or $2.72 billion.

Sandra Shaber, an economist with The Futures Group here, said the decline in borrowing in July, although temporary, reflects a cautious consumer.

She said consumer credit should pick up, but added, "I don't think we should expect any major boom in consumer spending."

Ms. Shaber noted that automobile sales, which were down in June, had begun to rise in July and advanced a "hefty amount" last month, so August consumer credit should be expected to increase.

But many analysts don't expect the August pace to continue because it was driven in large part by end-of-model-year incentives and announced 1990-model price increases.

Auto loans, which represent a major portion of consumer debt, fell in July for the second straight month, down 6 percent after a 2.3 percent decline in June.

The Fed said auto loans dropped $1.46 billion in July after falling $549 million in June. Auto loans had risen 4.5 percent in May and 3.3 percent in April.

Borrowing for mobile homes declined for the sixth straight month, down $60 million or 3 percent on an annual basis.

Bank and credit union loans not secured by real estate also dropped, $26 million or 0.2 percent on an annual basis. That compared with advances of 2.5 percent in June and 7.2 percent in May.

The only category to show an increase was revolving credit, which includes credit cards, but even that rose at a slower pace than in previous months.

The Fed said revolving credit rose 8 percent. to $1.27 billion. It had advanced 20.1 percent in June and 13 percent in May.

The various changes left total consumer debt in July at a seasonally adjusted $700.57 billion.

Train Service Supported

RALEIGH (AP) — Supporters of passenger train service between Raleigh and Charlotte say providing two round trips daily could be key to the operation's success, but Amtrak has agreed to only one trip so far.

"It's very important," A.J. Howard Clement III of Durham, chairman of a task force appointed by Gov. Jim Martin, said. "I think that is crucial to the success of the whole endeavor, that we have one-stop service, to be able to go and come back in the same day."

The rail passenger committee recommended two round trips daily.

State officials plan to use the money from a $9 billion highway construction bill approved by the 1989 legislature to revive passenger train service between Charlotte and Raleigh. The service, with stops in Durham, also would extend to Selma, Wilson and Rocky Mount to connect with Amtrak's Palmetto.

Study Suggests Alternative Farming Is Wave Of Future

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — Alternative farming techniques, which have begun to sink roots in North Carolina, are successful, better for the environment and can be highly profitable, a national study shows.

"The bad news," said John Pesek, chairman of the National Research Council's committee on alternative agriculture, "is that relatively few farmers are benefiting from these systems."

Federal price supports, he said, make it economically unfeasible for many farmers to experiment with alternative crops and methods.

The council recently completed a four-year study of alternative techniques that emphasize farming naturally instead of using fertilizers, pesticides and hormones. The council's 400-page report was released last week.

"These same federal policies that are discouraging implementation of more productive, environmentally benign farming practices are costing U.S. taxpayers billions of dollars each year," he said.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture, which helped pay for the study, embraced its results yesterday.

In North Carolina, alternative farming is supported by some farming groups, such as the 400-member Carolina Farm Stewardship Association in Pittsboro.

John Parker, an assistant to the president of the Farm Bureau, said much more study needs to be done on the economic impact of alternative farming before farmers can abandon their chemical fertilizers, pesticides and herbicides.

"This approach is more newsworthy than realistic at this moment," he said.

Katharine Havel, coordinator for the Carolina Farm Stewardship Association, said farmers don't need to wait for any more studies.

"You can't argue with success," she said, noting that farms of up to 200 acres in North Carolina are profiting from alternative methods.

Richard Harwood, a member of Pesek's committee, said farmers may be poised for the third revolution in agriculture. The first two, he said, were the arrival of mechanized farming in the early 1900s and the "Green Revolution" after World War II.

The Green Revolution was prompted by the introduction of synthetic fertilizers and pesticides that greatly increased the amount of crops produced on each acre.The chemicals also reduced the amount of labor required.

Paul F. O'Connell of the USDA's Cooperative State Research Service, said that to succeed without chemicals, a farmer must be a skillful, full-time manager. Because it requires a major change in a farmer's way of life, He said that the next revolution will come in small steps rather than a great leap.

On the other hand, Hess said, there may be no better time than now to start a major effort in alternative agriculture. The widespread concern about chemicals in food, the fear of groundwater contamination, and farmers' eagerness for new techniques have combined to set the stage for a third revolution, he said.

Alternative agriculture encompasses more than farming without chemicals. According to the council, alternative farms generally involve diversified, genetically improved crops; livestock raised without routine doses of antibiotics; and innovative pest controls.

Housing Shortage

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee's housing shortage will only get worse if current construction trends continue, with one in five people hard-pressed to find a home by the end of the century, a study says.

A Tennessee Housing Development Agency report estimates the present shortage of 153,589 housing units in the state will grow to 569,244 units by the year 2000.

That doesn't include 288,806 units statewide that are now at least 50 years old that will likely need extensive repair and renovation to remain usable, said Lynda Loviza, the agency economist who prepared the study.

The current statewide housing deficit of 153,589 units means that 7 percent of housing needs are unmet, she said. By the end of the century, when the study estimates there will be almost 2.5 million households in the state, the 594,244 shortfall will be 23 percent.

Agency spokeswoman Patricia Smith said there are currently no specific plans for meeting those future needs. The study was designed to project "what the needs are," she said.

The agency funnels funds into construction mostly through bond sales with federal backing, although a new program financed through a tax increase in real estate transactions has provided $6.2 million in direct agency funding to 50 projects in 29 counties this year.

Ms. Smith said there is a "large supply of expensive homes" now in some areas that have a shortage of more modest dwellings.

The study is based on projections of population growth — from 5,021,009 in 1989 to 5.5 million in 2000 — and a decline in the average household size — from 2.39 persons in 1989 to 2.12 in 2000.

Soviets To See Market

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Soviet Union is sending three representatives to participate for the first time at the International Home Furnishing Market in High Point.

The market will be held Oct. 19-27.

Charlie Greene, president of Classic Gallery Group in High Point, said the Soviets are sending a delegation from several Soviet industries to the market.

Greene also said the Soviets have shipped a wall size free standing display for use at the market. The display will feature Soviet materials available for distribution in the U.S., he said.

Plant Competition

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Winston-Salem will run up against some stiff competition in its bid for a $1.2 billion computer-chip plant.

Officials in both San Jose, Calif., and Austin, Texas, have confirmed that there cities — one in the heart of Silicon Valley and the other to a major computer research consortium — are in the running.

Greensboro officials acknowledged that they have submitted a location and incentive package for the plant to the state.

The plant initially would hire about 2,000 workers, adding up to another 2,000 within four years. The operation would make silicon computer chips called DRAMs, which stands for dynamic random access memories.

Employment Boost

MAXTON (AP) — Management at the Campbell Soup Co. plant in Maxton say a companywide restructuring may double production at the plant and boost employment by 30 percent.

Dennis Krupinski, manager of the Maxton plant, said the effects of the restructuring announced in August by Campbell Soup are starting to take shape at the local plant.

Krupinski has been talking with executives from Campbell's Camden, N.J., headquarters, trying to work up a plan to increase production and expand product lines at the Maxton site.

The move follows Campbell's announcement it will close its original plant in Camden, three other U.S. factories and five overseas factories. Production will be shifted to other Campbell plants, such as the Robeson County plant.

Campeau Corp. Puts Bloomingdale's Up For Sale

By Mark Potts
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Bloomingdale's, one of the nation's best-known department store chains, was put up for sale Friday as part of a planned restructuring by its debt-ridden owner, Canadian real estate and retail conglomerate Campeau Corp.

The surprise announcement set off a flurry of speculation over who might buy Bloomingdale's, which is expected to fetch a price of more than $1 billion, most likely from a foreign retailer or a group including its current management.

The announcement also raised serious questions about the overall financial health of Toronto-based Campeau, which has been struggling under billions of dollars of debt since winning Bloomingdale's and the other chains owned by Federated Department Stores in a takeover battle with R.H. Macy & Co. 18 months ago.

The proposed sale of Bloomingdale's is the latest sign of an upheaval in the department and specialty fashion store industry, which has seen many well-known chains put up for sale, file for bankruptcy or encounter serious financial problems in the past couple of years — in some cases as the result of a wave of leveraged buyout deals that has swept through the industry.

In the past few months alone, such well-known names as Macy's have been reported to be having financial problems, while tony Bonwit Teller and B. Altman have filed for bankruptcy protection. Locally, Woodward & Lothrop Inc. briefly was put up for sale last year, while Garfinckel's changed management in a major financial restructuring that bailed out a tottering leveraged buyout of the Washington chain. In Richmond, Miller & Rhoads filed for bankruptcy court protection six weeks ago.

But the news that Campeau is being forced to sell Bloomingdale's, its crown jewel, came as a particular shock. The 17-store chain, known affectionately by industry insiders and customers alike as "Bloomies," is considered one of the United States' premier retailers, a leader in setting trends in fashion, style and merchandising from its base in Manhattan's Upper East Side almost since its founding in 1872.

"I don't think there is another retailer anywhere in the world that has as much panache attached to it and as much cachet around the world as Bloomies," said Kurt Barnard of Retail Marketing Report, a trade publication.

While Bloomingdale's itself is not thought by industry analysts to be in financial trouble, its parent company certainly is. Canadian financier Robert Campeau has run into mounting financial problems in recent years as he has tried to assemble a retail and shopping center empire that includes such names as Abraham & Straus, Burdine's, Jordan Marsh and Ralph's supermarkets, with Bloomingdale's at its center.

But Campeau has had to go heavily into debt to finance his acquisitions — including the $6.6 billion purchase of Federated Department Stores in April 1988 and the earlier purchase of Allied Department Stores — and has been spinning off assets in recent months to keep ahead of his interest payments. Campeau has sold the Brooks Brothers, Ann Taylor, I. Magnin and Filene's chains, among others, to raise money, but as recently as July, Campeau estimated the company's debt at $9.5 billion.

"The fact that Bloomies is the one being sold underscores the seriousness of the Campeau financial situation," Barnard said.

Campeau said in a statement Friday he had decided to sell Bloomingdale's because the chain is largely a self-contained operation that "has the least in common" with the company's other eight department store chains — and "offers the best opportunity to most effectively reduce the company's leverage with a single transaction." The Wall Street firm of First Boston Corp. was retained to handle the sale.

In addition, the Campeau board will meet on Tuesday to consider the terms of a possible $250 million cash infusion from the Toronto-based developer Olympia & York Developments Ltd., which currently holds an 11.8 percent stake in Campeau Corp.

Bloomingdale's has stores along the East Coast from Boston to Florida — including one in Tysons Corner and another planned for White Flint — as well as in Illinois and Texas. Its sales last year were just under $1.2 billion.

By general reckoning in the retail industry, a department store's value is about equal to its annual sales, but that rule of thumb may be conservative with a store as famous as Bloomingdale's, analysts said. At Campeau's annual meeting in July, Robert Campeau estimated that Bloomingdale's might be worth as much as $2 billion — although he also said at the time he had no plans to sell the chain.

The list of possible buyers for Bloomingdale's is virtually endless, retail industry analysts said. "Everybody would look at it," said Stacy Dutton, of Morgan Stanley & Co.

Among the names being mentioned as possible buyers Friday were May Department Stores Co., whose holdings include Washington's Hecht Co.; The Limited Inc., the big specialty fashion retailing chain whose chairman, Leslie H. Wexner, has long coveted a string of department stores; and Dillard Department Stores Inc., a highly regarded Little Rock, Ark.-based department store chain that was rumored last year as a possible buyer for Woodward & Lothrop.

But analysts said Friday that the buyer of Bloomingdale's might be more likely to come from overseas. Japanese, British and West German store owners have begun moving into the American retailing business in recent years, and Bloomingdale's might be particularly attractive to these companies, analysts said, because of its international reputation.

One inside bidder already has emerged: a group of its top managers, led by Chairman Marvin S. Traub, according to a press release put out by Campeau. But the Traub group would have to buy the company using a debt-heavy leveraged buyout, and Barnard said, "Isn't the leveraged buyout type of operation precisely the type that broke Campeau's back?"

Barnard is not the only analyst who has raised questions about whether retail companies — which are particularly susceptible to ups and downs in the economy — can successfully operate under large debt loads.

Division Dropped

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Southeastern Savings Bank announced the discontinuation of its separate mortgage division, formerly known as Biltmore Mortgage Co., and the inauguration of full service residential mortgage origination in its 25 banking branches.

The focus of the company on an on-going basis will be support and development of its branch offices, with increased emphasis on deposit acquisition, consumer lending, equity lines and residential permanent and construction mortgages.

The move will mean the elimination of 43 positions between now and Dec. 31. All affected employees have been notified. Separate loan-production offices in Raleigh, Knoxville and Laurinburg will be closed, while loan production in larger cities served by Southeastern will be transferred from separate loan-production offices to branch offices themselves.

Southeastern Savings Bank Inc. is a stockholder-owned, federally insured financial institution with 25 branches in 20 North Carolina communities.

Martha Seighman, as 'Bubbles,' is a clown for all ages in Washington, N.C., where she works with everyone from 4-H'ers to the elderly

Mrs. Seighman, right, has been a clown for 18 years. Above, as 'Bubbles,' she helps Clough Boyd celebrate her 100th birthday.

Her Life As A Clown

'Bubbles' Fulfills A Lifelong Dream To Delight Others

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Clowning is Martha Seighman's delight, and has been for 18 years.

Mrs. Seighman (pronounced Seefman) was fascinated by clowns during her childhood in the Galveston, Texas area, her college years and her days teaching music in the public schools of Texas. So she collected anything with clowns involved.

But only a few years after giving up teaching and becoming a wife and mother of three sons, she became a clown herself. Today, 18 years after her debut at a public library in Wharton, Texas she still has her clown collection — thousands of items ranging from inexpensive light switch plates and spoon rests to costly limited-edition statuettes of Emmett Kelly Jr.

More important to her, however, are the memories she has collected while being a clown. At times she has been paid, at times she has volunteered, but she has served as a clown in each of the communities where she and her family has lived.

Over the years, her outfits have changed in color and design. Her makeup technique has evolved. Her prop collection has grown. But the good nature and love of people that prompts her to clown is virtually the same as when she first began when grown sons Jerry Jr., Thomas and Charles were toddlers.

It all began in August 1971 when she and her friend Sandy Anderson visited a story hour at the public library of Wharton with their children.

"We came away saying to each other, 'That was all right, but we could spice it up, do it better,' Mrs. Seighman said. "So we volunteered to lead the next story hour. And during the week, we decided we'd be clowns.

"Sandy was pregnant at the time and she decided she didn't want to bother with making an outfit. But I got busy and sewed up a brown, orange and yellow polka-dotted suit big enough to fit over my clothes.

"I went to the library that day with white shoe polish on my face and lipstick on my lips and cheeks.

"The shoe polish flaked off before I wanted it to and the lipstick stayed on three days too long. But we had a great time. The children loved us and my clowning career was born."

Mrs. Seighman had become Bubbles the Clown, available for birthday parties, grand openings, weddings, pet shows and other community events. "Anywhere there was a crowd of people, I was likely to be there in my clown outfit," she said.

For the next Christmas parade, she made outfits like hers for each son and they all marched. By the next Christmas, she'd also sewn one for husband Jerry, so he could parade with them.

Over the next several years, the family lived in several Texas cities, transferred by her husband's company. But everywhere they were went, they mixed easily into civic activity, largely because Mama was a clown.

Charles still joins his mother occasionally for a clowning appearance, donning his duds to become "Fizz."

And it was Charles, who made his mom — indeed, his whole family — famous last December.

Last fall, he saw an appeal on cable TV's "Nick At Night" to send in a letter describing "How My Life Is Like A Sitcom." It didn't take him long to think, "Yes,

Their Love Lasted Through Horrors Of Revolution

By John Pomfret
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONG KONG — In 1933, Elizaveta Kishkina fell in love with the dashing Chinese revolutionary Li Lisan. From their romance sprang a tale of suffering and love that spans the gulag of Josef Stalin and the labor camps of China's Cultural Revolution.

Purged twice in China and jailed in the Soviet Union, Li died in the custody of China's Red Guards in 1967. Mrs. Kishkina and their two daughters lived on.

For her marriage with Li, Mrs. Kishkina spent nine years in Chinese prisons and lost her voice because Communist authorities, who accused her of being a Soviet spy, prohibited her from speaking for nine years. Her daughters, prosecuted also for espionage, were imprisoned for two years each.

After Deng Xiaoping came to power in 1978, Mrs. Kishkina, thinking political purges had ended, planned to live out her years in peace in Beijing. But now her adopted country is caught in another bloody campaign, this time to crush a movement for freedom. Mrs. Kishkina wonders whether China will turn on her and her family again.

"Of course we are afraid for the future," she said in the living room of her Beijing apartment. "When you have seen what I have seen, you can never rest peacefully."

The story of this Soviet-Chinese clan covers more than seven decades. For Mrs. Kishkina, it is a tale of dashed hopes in a glorious socialist future and of the instincts of a mother protecting her family.

"In the end," she said as she smiled at her 15-year-old grandson, Peter, "we only have each other. The politicians come and go, but we have survived."

'In the end we only have each other. The politicians come and go, but we have survived.'

Lisha

For Li, it is a sad story of a revolutionary manipulated by his superiors and of love for one's country overcoming political beliefs and fierce pride.

"He was a broken man. He had been used up by the revolution and by the leaders," Mrs. Kishkina said. "All he wanted was to live in peace but they wouldn't even allow him that."

Mrs. Kishkina, a 75-year-old woman who goes by her Chinese name, Lisha, lives in a three-bedroom apartment in the western section of Beijing. Comfortably furnished with a fluffy couch and a small but ornate Russian samovar, it is high-class by Chinese standards.

Lisha is a woman of sparkling gray eyes who greets guests with cookies and cakes. She speaks excellent Mandarin with a thick accent, giving her joviality an air of Russian mystery.

Lisha was born in 1914 into a Ukranian aristocratic family that had fallen on hard times. When she was 6 her father died and her mother packed up the family and moved to Moscow, where three years earlier the Bolsheviks had seized power.

As a young girl and a teen-ager, Lisha believed strongly in the revolution. In the late 1920s, when Soviet leaders issued the call to develop Siberia, Lisha was one of the first to sign up.

The bands of Soviet youth lived a hard life, fighting swarms of insects in summer and fierce snows and frosts in winter.

"In France, they say lovers can live on kisses and cool water," Lisha said. "As revolutionaries, we lived on ideology and strong tea."

In 1933, she returned to Moscow and enrolled at a part-time school. That year she met Li Lisan.

Li was a shell of a man. A gifted labor organizer, he had risen quickly through the ranks of the fledgling Chinese Communist Party and in 1928, with the help of Soviet agents, was appointed its head.

Li was picked because his belief that China's revolution would begin in its cities matched those of Stalin. When it became apparent that Li was wrong and that the revolution was occurring in the countryside, under the leadership of Mao Tse-tung, Li was sacked and given refuge in Moscow.

Lisha had been hoping to continue her studies and Li gave her the encouragement she needed. The two began seeing each other and soon had a simple marriage in line with their political beliefs.

In 1936, Lisha was accepted by the Moscow Pedagogical Institute for Foreign Languages, majoring in French. But her husband's political problems had just begun.

In the late 1930s, a Stalinist purge targeted Li and he was accused of being a "Japanese spy and a Trotskyist." He was jailed from 1938-39.

"It never crossed my mind to leave the man," she said. "In that way, I was very traditional. Revolutionary love to me was not free love, it was love with a higher purpose."

The day before Lisha's last exam in 1941, Nazi Germany invaded the Soviet Union. The couple fled Moscow and settled in a small city on the banks of the Volga River. In 1944, they had the first of their two daughters, Ina. Another one, Alla, would follow five years later.

Li began to show signs of homesickness.

"He was a proud man and the first purge had hurt him deeply," Lisha said. "But he loved his country more than himself so he went back anyway. He threw his political beliefs away and went back to work for a new China."

The couple set up house in Harbin, a city in China's Northeast. For hundreds of years, Chinese and Russian cultures had met and melded there and Lisha felt at home.

In 1949, with the Communist victory against the Nationalist Chinese complete, the family moved to Beijing.

"Now that was a shock," she said with a laugh. "There was nothing Russian about Beijing at all."

Li moved through a variety of posts, settling as the nominal head of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the state-run union. From one of Stalin's puppets, he was transformed into one of Mao's.

"He was happy enough just to be home," Lisha said.

Life was difficult in the poor country in the 1950s, but the family escaped the early political campaigns. Still, the Communists' habit of purging and jailing the best and the brightest in their country weighed heavily on Lisha.

Bubbles' A Delight To Young, Old

living with Bubbles The Clown and her craziness does make our home life good situation comedy material." He fired off a letter and soon received an acceptance and a request for more information.

Soon a filming session was scheduled right in the Seighmans' home. A film crew of 11 arrived in Washington and stayed two days.

"The crew they sent was wonderful," Mrs. Seighman said, "very professional in every aspect of their work, and at the same time fun-loving and friendly. They took our house apart and made dozens and dozens of takes and retakes.

"A skit written to fit our family came with them, along with someone famous to be our co-star."

Eve Plumb, who played middle daughter Jan on "The Brady Bunch," was the only actor in the skit other than the Seighmans.

"They gave us an experience that few families in the nation will ever have," she said. "We wouldn't take anything for it," Mrs. Seighman said.

On the December night the show was broadcast, all the Seighmans were glued to the tube. Their segment was included with skits by a family in Iowa and another in New York. The media was on hand. Would the Seighmans become grand prize winners?

Yes! Charles received $10,000 and shared it with his entire family.

"The first call we got was from my dad in Garrison, Texas," Mrs. Seighman said. "I was thrilled to hear from him, thrilled about it all."

During the five years Mrs. Seighman has been in eastern North Carolina, she has served as the adult advisor of a Washington area Clown Club, started for 4-H'ers. This group grew out of a workshop she conducted for the 4-H Club.

Always in clown gear, she attends the monthly Saturday Night Jamboree at the Washington Redmen's Club. This is a social event, usually a dance, held regularly for physically and mentally handicapped people from throughout the region. She serves on the advisory board for this project.

She clowns during the Beaufort County Special Olympics annually and seldom misses a Belhaven Fourth of July celebration. She also volunteers weekly at both Beaufort County Memorial Hospital and the Beaufort County Home. And she's available for parties, weddings, festivals, any gathering of people who want a clown in their midst.

Just as she loves to log her clown experiences in numerous scrapbooks for that purpose filled over the year, Mrs. Seighman loves to tell of her clowning fun.

"One of my favorite experiences since I've been in Washington," she said, "was being literally picked up while in my 'Bubbles' outfit in the parking lot of Washington Square Mall.

"I had just finished an appearance there and was on my way home. But instead this limosine full of people in wedding attire picked me up and transported me to a wedding.

"I loved every minute of it," she said. "And when it was over, instead of having them take me back to my car, I got the limosine chauffeur to bring me home so my husband and sons could see 'Bubbles' alight from such fine wheels.

"But wouldn't you know it? None of them were around to watch.

"I did get copies of some of the wedding pictures with me in them, though. More jewels for my scrapbooks."

Reflecting on the transformation she undergoes when she becomes "Bubbles," she said "I'm pretty uninhibited anyway," she said. "I like to have fun. But I'm more outgoing when I put my ladybug nose and my bubble-covered suit on. Then I'm not Martha any more. I'm 'Bubbles.' And I love it."

"I have Mondays — the day I usually go to the hospital and the nursing home — when the last thing I want to do is get out of the house and go somewhere. But "Bubbles" always shows up when she's said she would. So I go. And the people I get to be with make me glad I did."

Foyer Is A Welcoming Space

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A foyer should be a welcoming space that introduces visitors to the house and simplifies the logistics of entering, exiting, greeting visitors and receiving packages and mail.

To do all these tasks well, it takes practical surfaces, functional furniture and decoration in harmony with the rooms to which it connects.

No foyer is complete without a mirror and surface for placing objects, and the next logical addition is a place to sit down, says Beverly Ellsley, a designer in Westport, Conn.

"It would definitely make sense to have also something welcoming like a vase of flowers," adds Ellsley.

If your house does not have a foyer and you want one, there are several possibilities, says Thomas Hills Cook, senior interior designer at Armstrong World Industries in Lancaster, Pa. You could build a small one-story vestibule onto the front of the house. The new space will conserve heat as well as provide a place to greet people.

Another way to get a foyer without adding on is to screen off the area around the door by building a full or half wall or by placing a piece of furniture — finished on both sides — between the door and the rest of the room. Faux or real architectural columns and tall bookcases are also useful as a means of screening off the entryway, while also providing storage.

It's hard to visualize how a free-standing wall or a large piece of furniture will affect the layout of the room.

Pharmacists Should Exercise Same Discretion As Doctors

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I just read the letter from that poor woman who was embarrassed when a pharmacist asked her in a loud voice — with several other customers present — if she was pregnant. (She was not — just overweight.) I can't tell you how many pharmacists seem to be insensitive to their customers' privacy. I've been asked just about every question imaginable in front of other customers concerning the five prescription drugs I take regularly, including: "Is that for low blood pressure or premenstrual swelling?" and "What do you take Norpramin for, bulimia or depression?"

One poor woman waiting in a crowd at a different pharmacy was told, "Now, do not take these pills orally — they're for vaginal insertion only." And at still another pharmacy, a man was asked whether his lesions had cleared up with his last prescription of Zovirax — a well-known remedy for herpes.

Abby, I hope you will print this so that pharmacists who recognize themselves will be more sensitive to customers' privacy in the future. As part of the medical profession, they should exercise the same level of discretion required of doctors and nurses. — Blushing In Santa Cruz

Dear Blushing: Everyone in the medical profession should take a short course in "Discretion and Privacy" when dealing with patients. Read on:

Dear Abby: If you think an insensitive pharmacist can cause humiliation, listen to this: I am a 62-year-old male. I had an appointment to see a urologist who officed with several other doctors in a large clinic with one central desk. The waiting room was the size of a small auditorium, and it was filled with patients.

I approached the desk and gave my name to the receptionist — a large, imposing woman who looked like a wrestler. In a very loud voice, she repeated my name, then said, "Yes, I see your name here — you want to see the doctor about IMPOTENCE, right?"

I was stunned, but recovered my composure sufficiently to reply in an equally loud voice, "No, I've come to inquire about a sex-change operation — and I'd like the same doctor who did yours." — Nameless In Gainesville, Fla.

Dear Abby: I know my children meant well, but I am brokenhearted.

My husband died suddenly of a massive heart attack. He was only 52. Our married children, bless their hearts, thought they were doing me a big favor, so my daughter-in-law invited me to spend the day with her at their summer place, and while I was there, my daughters were busy at my house cleaning out the place of everything that belonged to my husband!

When I returned home, there wasn't a trace of anything my husband had owned. It was as though he had never lived there!

Abby, his clothes, his books, his seashell collection — even the "hat tree" in the entrance way with all the funny hats he so enjoyed wearing — were gone!

Maybe one day I would have put all his things away, but I wasn't ready for that yet.

Please print this so other well-meaning people will not make that mistake. — Still Hurting In Wisconsin

Dear Hurting: You have written a very important letter. How generous of you to write while you are still hurting to let others know that only the person who has suffered the loss of a mate can know when he or she is ready to let go of the familiar belongings that surround him or her.

No one should be rushed. It's a very personal decison that only the remaining mate can make.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

She carried a cascade bouquet of white and pink rosebuds, stephanotis and baby's breath interspersed with pink and white bridal streamers.

A reception was held at the Greenville Country Club. A rehearsal was given Friday night by the bridegroom's parents at the Hilton Inn. Friends of the bride's parents gave a bridesmaids luncheon and a dance prior to the wedding.

A Sense Of Adventure Calls Her Rock Climbing

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

Throughout the years I have eliminated from my life one sport after another. It began with skiing, when I didn't see the wisdom of pursuing any type of recreation where an ambulance was parked at the bottom of the hill. Synchronized swimming didn't do it for me either, as my best feature is my nose and I don't necessarily need a nose plug attached to it.

I discovered tennis to be a sport that attracted people you couldn't trust. One minute, they smiled when your serve tipped the net and shouted, "Take two." The next, they purposely slammed a ball into the opposite court from where you were standing waiting for it.

People who hop on a luge and bounce along out of control at 80 mph on a sheet of ice are just real strange. And besides, my stomach sticks out ... even when I lie on my back.

You may now add rock climbing to my list. I remember the first time I saw a rock climber on television. He weighed about 38 pounds and for no reason began to scale a perfectly vertical slab of rock. If I had Velcro hands and Robert Redford was hosting an Amway party at the top, you couldn't have gotten me to do that.

You can imagine my surprise when I read a story the other day that said climbers are now using artificial walls to "eliminate environmental damage."

I care about this planet as much as the next person, but how many people do you know who go out on Sunday and hang onto a piece of rock with their fingernails? Five? Ten? Twenty? Are we talking crowds here? There couldn't be more than a handful with that kind of guts, and that doesn't exactly add up to rock gridlock.

There are fears that go with every sport — fear of having your bowling ball bounce into the next lane ... fear of knocking your tennis ball into the club dining room ... fear of having a leg cramp playing Goony Golf ... and fear of being the only person ever to ride a chair lift all day without getting off once. But rock climbing! I didn't figure on being afraid I'd destroy the environment. I would prefer to wonder what would happen if you reached for a little "bolt" to hang onto the rock and it turned out to be a snake's head. What happens if you get halfway up and your shoestring comes untied?

I'm sorry, but I want a sport where I can show my broken nail to someone without having it be my last words. As for adventure — appearing in aerobics in a yellow leotard is as crazy as I want to get.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

TIPS ON BUYING MATTRESSES

A furniture magazine took a survey of home owners and was surprised to find how little was known about mattresses in general--especially considering how important mattresses are to everyone's health and comfort.

So, first, this week, let's look at the fundamental types of mattresses. One basic type is the innerspring, which is made of coil springs encased in padding. (And remember, the number of coils is less important than the way they're assembled) The other major basic type of mattress is the foam mattress made usually of urethane foam or latex foam. There are advantages to each, and we'd be happy to show you the advantages and discuss them with you.

Next, when it comes to the foundation or box springs for your bed, it's usually NOT a good idea to use a new mattress with an old box spring, or vice versa. Your mattress and foundation are a team and should match in appearance and performance.

Another piece of good mattress advice is to go less by the outside look of a mattress and more by what's inside it. A reputable furniture dealer, such as us, will steer you right.

A final piece of advice is not to give the kids worn out bedding. They especially need good support. And for all your bedding, and other furniture needs, we invite you to shop here.

Gregory is leading an anti-drug campaign in Shreveport, La., where locals turned a drug-ridden park into a playground

Dick Gregory Recruits Soldiers For A New Cause: War On Drugs

By Linda Ashton
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHREVEPORT, La. — Dick Gregory doesn't leave an audience laughing anymore.

The one-time stand-up comic still delivers jokes to warm up a crowd, but the full-time social activist soon takes over with cold, harsh exhortations.

Today it's drugs. Says Gregory: "We want our neighborhoods back. I think there will be violence. You have to be willing to die. We want people who'd be willing to die, but not willing to kill."

Gregory became a diet guru after dealing with fasting as a weapon of political protest in the cause of civil rights. He joined ranks with Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X and took to the latter's message of being willing to die for freedom.

In personal terms, he has brought his once-300 pounds down to 150. Commercially, he has parlayed his liquid diet plan into a multimillion-dollar business.

Here in Shreveport, he has converted a small neighborhood park, once overrun by dope dealers and shabby with neglect, into a joyful, child-filled bunker against the narcotics siege.

He is waging war against, among other things, the head shops that provide the paraphernalia of the drug culture.

"His motives are not genuine," says Jim Willis, the owner of Pipes Unique. "He's looking for publicity to sell his health food. You can't buy a front page ad, but he stays on the front page.

"I think it's real unfair."

Gregory denies ulterior motives.

"I'm here to protect my America and my children," he says. "I'm here for the same reason people go to war."

He's recruiting some famous soldiers.

Coretta Scott King, wife of the slain civil rights leader; her son, Martin Luther King III; dancer Ben Vereen, and the Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, all have been drawn to A.B. Palmer Park.

From a pop-up tent, Gregory coordinates anti-drug protests, basketball games and gospel sing-alongs. All the while, the potential for violent confrontation might be just across the street or around the corner for anyone who takes up his banner.

"There's a new hero in Shreveport and it's not the drug pushers," says Gregory, 57. "It's the movement."

But it is Gregory who is the new hero of Cedar Grove, the black community terrified by an all-night riot in September 1988. Behind the riot was drugs.

Here, the self-described statesman dispenses power and self-reliance by showing people what they can do cooperatively.

Almost nightly, he marshals his forces to march by crack houses and buyers' corners, singing hymns. "No more yard and garage sales," their sandwich boards proclaim.

It's heady stuff for people who only weeks ago were afraid to venture into A.B. Palmer Park because the unsavory element had conquered the playground.

"When we got to the park we found thousands of needles," Gregory says. "Now we find bubble-gum wrappers."

In late summer, the park is vibrant. Women escape the pressing heat on folding chairs under the bright blue awnings supplied by Good Samaritan Funeral Home. One women reads from her Bible and her listeners chime in with religious tunes.

Two basketball games are going at once while parents keep a watchful eye from the bleachers around the baseball diamond. The cinder-block clubhouse is packed with folks playing board games, pool and ping-pong or sitting in front of the giant fans. The city agreed to open the swimming pool.

"The level of fear among residents has gone down quite a bit," says the Rev. Joe Gant, a local Baptist. "Dick Gregory has served as catalyst. Dick Gregory has made us more aware of the problems. Even when Dick leaves we will be organized."

Conservative Shreveport isn't accustomed to the national attention. Located on the Red River along the Old Texas Trail, the city is regionally known for North America's largest rose garden and a Double-A Texas League baseball team.

Gregory concedes Shreveport was an odd place to land, but he says, "We didn't pick this town, the town picked us."

Gregory's choice of this city of 200,000 in northwestern Louisiana raised suspicions it was an attempt to register black voters before the 1990 mayor's race or a scheme to promote his health products.

"I think it's human nature," says Assistant Police Chief Doug C. Perdue. "He's a celebrity, a multimillionaire. It's difficult for us to understand why a millionaire that could be anywhere would come down and help us."

Gregory arrived in Shreveport on June 6 to set up a corporate account at Security National Bank, a minority-owned bank run by his friend, Wesley Godfrey. At the bank, Gant told him about a neighborhood plan to recapture A.B. Palmer Park.

So the self-described agitator decided to stay. He enlisted some help from the Rev. George Clements, a Catholic priest from Chicago, and both went on a 40-day solid food fast to draw attention.

Gregory staged demonstrations at two Shreveport head shops, refusing to leave until he was arrested and the stores agreed to withdraw their glass pipes, popular for smoking crack or cocaine, from public display.

He was arrested and fined seven times in four days in June.

Helping him in Shreveport are three of his 10 children.

Christian Gregory, 19, is often the overnight man keeping the vigil at A.B. Palmer Park. He lies in the cluttered, screened tent, talking on the phone or watching TV in the muggy summer night.

"All night long there are knocks on the door from drug addicts," Gregory says. "One night it was a drug dealer. It's almost like they come here to confess."

Perdue says Gregory is "focusing attention on the drug problem, the way it's affecting the American family. What Mr. Gregory has done is what we have been unable to do. I'm glad he's here."

Perdue has no statistics to determine whether Gregory has sent Cedar Grove dope dealers packing or just underground.

Population To Double

BOSTON — America's elderly population, 65 and over, is expected to reach 60 million over the next 40 years.

This means double the current number of elderly, including an unprecedented number of those 85 and older. Medical experts say skyrocketing medical costs and shortage of nursing home beds means more elderly will get health care at home.

According to Lifetime Corp., a supplier of home health care personnel and services, 32 percent of those over 85 now get home health care and generally prefer it to being institutionalized. The firm says the aging population and efforts by insurers to reduce hospital stays will boost the home care market to nearly $10 billion next year.

Large Numbers Of Visitors Endanger Wilderness Parks

By David Foster
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ENCHANTMENT LAKES, Wash. — These sparkling alpine lakes live up to their name. Hikers often say they half-expect to see an elf behind the next granite boulder or a gnome crouched under a lakeside larch.

Wilderness ranger Elizabeth Goulet knows better. There is more likely to be another hiker behind that boulder, she says, and a trash pile under the tree.

At the moment she's inspecting one careless camper's jetsam: 10 freeze-dried meal wrappers, a penlight battery, a jar of instant coffee, an empty sardine can, a camp-stove burner and a tube of bug repellent.

Usually Goulet would be fuming, but today she's all smiles. The litterer also discarded an envelope with his name on it, so a Mr. Martinez soon will be getting a package in the mail. His own trash. Sent C.O.D.

Rangers here in the Alpine Lakes Wilderness of the Cascade Range savor such moments as they try to keep visitors from loving the wilderness to death. Most are more considerate than Martinez, but sheer numbers take their toll.

"It's becoming almost what we call urban wilderness," Goulet says. "We manage it so much for people that we sometimes lose sight of managing it for its wilderness value."

The U.S. Forest Service, which administers this wilderness area, has resorted to an entry permit system to limit the number of campers in the Enchantments.

It's part of a growing trend. National parks, where the focus is on accommodating visitors, have struggled for years with the balance between letting sight-seers in and maintaining a place worth seeing. But wilderness areas, traditionally less used and less intensively managed, are catching up fast.

A Colorado State University survey found that 28 percent of the nation's 474 wilderness areas now limit recreational use with methods such as entry permits or restrictions on stay length or camping. Still more are considering such moves. The survey said recreational use is increasing or stable in all but 3 percent of the wilderness areas.

In Washington, the fast-growing Seattle area promises more pressure on the Alpine Lakes Wilderness, which already sees more visitors annually than Mount Rainier National Park.

"We have a very high outdoor ethic," says Forest Service spokesman Ron DeHart in Seattle. "People want to do more than look at the mountains. They want to get out in them."

Many choose to do it in the Enchantment Lakes, which occupy a small corner of the 306,000-acre Alpine Lakes Wilderness. Here, a dozen crystalline lakes sit in a basin of glacier-scoured granite, all hemmed in by jagged peaks. The basin's lower reach features trees gnarled by the elements, meadows of heather, and tarns with names like Talisman and Leprechaun. The upper basin is starker, a haunting landscape of rock and snow.

No one knows the area better than Bill Stark, 78, and his wife, Peggy, 72. They named many of the lakes and have made a pilgrimage here every year since 1959 from their home in nearby Leavenworth.

"When we first went up, it looked like nobody had ever been there," Bill Stark says. "Then we started seeing subtle signs of use. Then not-so-subtle signs."

Hikers trampled a growing network of trails across the basin. Lush beds of heather became matted down, and wads of toilet paper blossomed everywhere. "People are pigs," Stark says.

By the late 1970s, a summer weekend could see 300 people in the basin, creating a less-than-enchanting situation for everyone.

The Forest Service tried to minimize damage. Toilets were installed in 1966. The use of horses was restricted in 1972. Guided groups were banned in 1976. And dogs, which chase wildlife and disturb other campers, were prohibited in 1982.

The permit system was established in 1987, limiting the number of campers to about 60 on any given day. The permit period runs from June 15 to Oct. 15, and popular summer weekends are booked solid within a few weeks after permit applications are accepted March 1.

The permits detract from one value of wilderness: the opportunity to escape society's regimentation.

"Wilderness implies freedom, and you can't get that freedom with the permit system," Goulet concedes. "But you couldn't get it here anyway, because without the permits, there would be crowds of people."

A few campers each week sneak in without permits, risking a $50 fine from one of the five rangers patrolling the Enchantments. But most visitors seem to respect the aim of the permit system.

"This is a really special place. Whatever it takes to keep it special is worth it," says hiker Hal Zimmer, 39, on his seventh trip to the Enchantments.

The permits are inconvenient, says hiker Jeff Merkel of Philadelphia. His partner waited in line two hours at the Leavenworth ranger station for one of the limited number of permits reserved for "walk-in" business.

But Merkel doesn't mind, considering the alternative: "There would be people all around the place. You might as well be at the Jersey shore."

The permit system is working, Goulet says. The crowds are gone, giving rangers a chance to start replanting some eroded, overused campsites.

It is still not Goulet's idea of true wilderness.

"The ultimate wilderness would be taking an unaffected area and blocking it off to everybody," she says. "I wouldn't have to go see it. Just knowing it was there would be enough, knowing that there's an area we haven't messed up."

But there is also value to an "urban wilderness" like the Enchanted Lakes, she says, "a place where people can sense what the land was like before we got here."

It gives people a taste of nature, and if it is not totally wild, visitors can at least make believe.

First Concert Hall For Pei

By Andrea Weisgerber
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — The Morton H. Meyerson Symphony Center is I.M. Pei's first concert hall — a once-in-a-century opportunity, and the world famous architect knows he may never have a chance to do it again.

"There aren't that many concert halls built in this world," the 72-year-old designer said.

But would he do another?

"I tell you, you know, never say never, 'No, I don't know,' but I don't think I would be seeking it as much as I once would, because I have done it."

Pei, whose buildings include the John F. Kennedy Library in Boston, the East Wing of the National Gallery of Art and the new Louvre in Paris, speaks lovingly of the new Dallas symphony hall and the opportunity it presented to him.

"I would have to say that this is one of the great buildings that I have had the fortune to design," he said. He received a $10 million commission for the Meyerson Center in 1982.

Pei likes the feel of the 2,065-seat music chamber. It is more vertical than horizontal, and he says it lends intimacy to the room.

The public areas outside the music chamber presented the greatest design challenge for Pei. The lobby area curves around the music chamber in a series of pieces of circles, overlooked by glass that curves and sweeps the area. "I haven't done a work that has had such a complex geometry," he said.

Ieoh Ming Pei was born in China. His creations fuse environment with structure.

He attributes his rise in architectural circles to his first big break in 1969 — the commission for the Kennedy Library.

With the addition of the symphony hall, there are six Pei buildings in the Dallas area — the ARCO Tower, One Dallas Centre, City Hall, the Allied Bank Tower and the Field Research Center for Mobil Oil Co. Only Boston and nearby Cambridge have more Pei structures: 10.

Concerns Expressed Over Plans To Redo Old Naples

By Mary Beth Sheri...
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAPLES, Italy — On the Street of Small Hope, a forgotten Italy lives on.

Plump women hawk contraband cigarettes. Sewing machines whir in ...atshops ...amr... ...milies gather around suppe... ...es just a few feet from their beds.

"Here, nothing ever changes," notes shopkeeper Antonio Vecchione, gesturing to the crumbling golden tenements lining Naples' 16th-century Spanish Quarter.

...ecently, a dramatic proposal fro... a business group has put in question the future of the Via Speranzella (Street of Small Hope) and the rest of Naples' vast, dilapidated historical zone.

The proposal, which envisions restoring or replacing thousands of apartments, has prompted charges that one of Europe's biggest historic areas could be erased and its occupants forced out.

The city has not yet said how much of the plan it will approve. However, the proposal's powerful backers — and its critics — believe it has a good chance of becoming reality.

"We must intervene," declares Enzo Giustino, president of the business group, known as "The Kingdom of the Possible." "The city runs the risk of being left behind by history."

Neapolitans are intensely proud of their city, known for its songs, its dark blue bay and its history, illustrated by medieval castles and graceful palaces from the 15th to 18th centuries.

But while Italy has become one of the world's biggest industrial powers, Naples has remained dogged by unemployment, organized crime and corruption. Its narrow streets are choked with traffic; thousands of families live in dark, one-room apartments.

"The Kingdom of the Possible" argues that only a dramatic step by the private sector can save the cultural heritage, livability and economy of the 1,780-acre historic center.

"The Italian state is the weakest in the world," Giustino contended in an interview. "It can't solve these problems by itself."

Four years ago, Giustino, a construction executive and top official of the Italian employers' association, assembled a coalition of some of the city's most powerful forces — banks, construction firms and state-owned businesses.

They enlisted dozens of architects, economists and sociologists to study the historic center of the city of 1.2 million. Last year, their 700-page proposal was presented to the Italian premier in Rome and local officials.

Cultural groups were outraged.

Their biggest objection: The proposed demolition of at least 663 apartments to make room for parks, and the vast alteration or destruction of 21,066 others to make room for more modern apartments.

"It would mean rubbing out a part of our history," protested Guido Donatone of the national preservation group Italia Nostra.

From a hillside, he pointed to the patchwork of gray and brown roofs in the Spanish Quarter, named for the troops encamped there when Naples was under Spanish rule in the early 1500s.

"This would all be skyscrapers," he said.

Actually, the proposal would leave the renovation of the Spanish Quarter to an architectural competition.

The plan calls for keeping the character of most historic neighborhoods. The exteriors of some buildings would be preserved while apartments inside are rebuilt, for example, and others would undergo extensive to minor restoration.

But critics still fear the project would become dominated by speculators, who in the past have covered Naples' hillsides with anonymous concrete apartments.

Giustino disagrees with that conclusion, saying his group has presented all its ideas publicly.

Critics also maintain the plan would force out artisans and shopkeepers and prompt a rush of yuppies.

Their concern is a proposal to finance the $7.4-billion project by charging the owners of the apartments, assisted by state or local funds.

"This has a social cost that is not quantified," said Maurizio Barracco, a director of the cultural group Naples 99. "How many people will have to leave?"

Despite the objections, the city is now drawing up renovation proposals. Its urban planning chief, Maurizio Cardano, said, "We see the possibility of harmonizing their project with ours.

"We have a kind of strange attitude in Italy," he added. "We preserve everything without discrimination."

He added that improved living conditions were often more important than preservation — a view shared by people in the Spanish Quarter.

"This is really degraded," said a dark-haired woman, indicating the street outside her toiletries shop. "It should all be knocked down."

Shopkeeper Vecchione said he favored rebuilding but expected little change.

"They haven't done it yet, I don't think they ever will," he said with a shrug.

The Cargo Cult Of Vanuatu

By Peter O'Loughlin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TANNA, Vanuatu — Each morning the men of Jon Frum Village, at the foot of the smoking and rumbling Yasur volcano, raise the American flag and pray the Americans to come back to this primitive South Pacific island.

In a hut beside the flag pole is a crudely lettered board declaring it to be Jon Frum Custom Movement Headquarters.

"We believe the Americans will come and bring us cargo," said Jonas Malman, a villager.

"Jon Frum is a spirit, he will bring the cargo."

The islanders say Jon Frum is a spirit who appeared as an American soldier in World War II and handed out supplies to the people of Tanna, one of the chain of islands that make up Vanuatu. No trace of a Jon Frum has been found in U.S. military records.

The villagers live in grass huts, have no electricity or running water and few posessions. But they have never forgotten the Americans in World War II and the fabulous cargoes of clothing, vehicles, soft drinks, gum, candy, cigarettes and canned food they brought with them on their way to fight the Japanese.

The people of Jon Frum Village and thousands more on this densely jungled island of 17,000 Melanesians believe if they can find the right magic the Americans will return and bestow them with wealth, meaning cargo.

The Jon Frum movement is one of several so-called cargo cults that exist in Melanesia, a group of islands stetching from New Guinea to New Caledonia.

They believe the cargo they see arriving by ship and plane was sent to them by their ancestors. But white man's magic has kept them from getting it.

Cults like the Jon Frum Society are always on the lookout for help from a powerful man who may have strong magic.

One cult on Tanna worships the Duke of Edinburgh, the husband of Queen Elizabeth II, and believes he originally came from Tanna. They think he has the power to help get them cargo.

In New Guinea, a cult sought to buy President Lyndon B. Johnson because they had been told he was the most powerful man in the world. Since his name was on all the Johnson outboard motors they used on their canoes, they saw little reason to doubt the claim.

The Jon Frum movement is one of the oldest of Vanuatu's cargo cults. Its origins are obscure. Some anthropologists say it may actually date back to the 1930s and could have arisen as a reaction to missionary efforts to abolish traditonal customs such as polygamy and drinking kava, a potent local brew.

The movement got a powerful boost during World War II when many Tannese were sent to other islands to work for the Americans who used the islands, then called New Hebrides, as a staging base in their Pacific campaign.

When the Tannese saw black American soldiers handling cargo and getting food and supplies like the white man they were impressed by their magic.

At this time, according to studies of the cult, the Tannese believe Jon Frum reappeared as a black medical corpsman.

The movement adopted the Red Cross as their insigna. They planted dozens of wooden red crosses at the foot of their volcano in the hope this would encourage the return of Jon Frum and the cargo.

After the Americans moved on, a Tannese declared himself king of America and built a crude airstrip in the jungle with a bamboo replica of a control tower and "radios" made of tin cans and string hoping to at-

Seidelman's New York Films

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Growing up in Philadelphia, Susan Seidelman didn't think much about filmmaking. Chases through Independence Hall never popped into her head. Neither did love scenes at the Liberty Bell.

But by the time she had started film school at New York University, Seidelman was an aspiring director on the lookout for material: Manhattan was there for the taking.

"I think New York is as big a character as the actors in my films," said Seidelman, the director of "Smithereens," "Desperately Seeking Susan" and the recently released "Cookie," all based in New York.

"The diversity of people that live here... Below 14th street, you have SoHo, which is artsy. Nearby is Wall Street, which has lawyers and stockbrokers. Nearby you have Chinatown and then Little Italy, where you can still see people hanging out in the stoops and talking on folding chairs."

Proudly calling herself a New York filmmaker, Seidelman's first impressions of the city came through movies, especially the 1961 adaptation of Truman Capote's "Breakfast at Tiffany's." She related to stories of women moving to New York, finding small apartments and doing their best to start a new life.

In her own films, Seidelman is attracted to characters such as Susan Berman in "Smithereens," Madonna in "Desperately Seeking Susan" and Emily Lloyd in "Cookie": women struggling to find themselves under layers of hair, makeup and clothing.

"I think they are looking for independence or individuality. There is something about those girls that's incredibly similar. The way they dress, even though they're trying to be outrageous, is similar," Seidelman said.

"We're living in a time when we're influenced by pop culture and the idols of our day. They're rebellious, but in an acceptable form."

"Cookie" stars Peter Falk as mobster Dino Capisco, on parole after serving 13 years for labor racketeering. Lloyd plays his rebellious, gum-chewing daughter and Dianne Wiest her mother.

The film was not Seidelman's creation — the script was written by Nora Ephron and Alice Arlen — but the director saw simililarities to her earlier films and her life.

"You can draw a line from Wren in 'Smithereens' to Madonna in 'Desperately Seeking Susan' to 'Cookie.' Those women are cousins," Seidelman said. "I was a Cookie when I was growing up. I had different clothes and different hair, but I felt the same way."

"Smithereens," was an underground favorite in 1982, appreciated more by critics than the general public. "Desperately Seeking Susan," a quirky comedy starring Rosanna Arquette as a suburban housewife who gets amnesia and trades identities with a bohemian pop singer (Madonna), was a surprise hit.

"I was nervous about 'Desperately Seeking Susan,'" Seidelman said. "I knew it was going to rely on the tone, whether the audience would go along with her running into a pole and getting amnesia."

Next came "Making Mr. Right," Seidelman's only film to take place outside New York, starring Ann Magnuson as a woman who falls in love with a robot (John Malkovich). Filming went smoothly and the subject seemed right for the box office, but "Making Mr. Right" flopped.

"I had much more fun making 'Mr. Right' than 'Desperately Seeking Susan.' It was the warmest atmosphere I ever worked on. But I've learned that there's no correlation between the mood on the set and the box office. We were all in Miami, living in the same hotel together. It was a little like camp."

Directing, Seidelman has learned, can be a full-time job. Three years ago, she happened to pick up a copy of Fay Weldon's quirky novel, "The Lives and Loves of a She-Devil," the story of an ugly woman who alters her body and her life to seek revenge on a philandering husband. A week later, the book was finished and her wheels were spinning. The film version, starring Meryl Streep and Roseanne Barr, is due for release at the end of this year.

"When I go into a bookstore," Seidelman said, "part of me is looking for pleasure and part of me is thinking what would make a good movie. A lot of books, before they're published, go out in manuscript forms to the studios.

"I was surprised how easily I got the rights to 'She-Devil.' It came out in 1983 and I didn't read it until three years later. Now I see it in the best-seller racks."

An excellent British film version of the book was shown over PBS channels two years ago.

Out in the streets, too, Seidelman lets nothing get past her, catching moments of people's lives and storing them for future films.

"I was walking downtown and this guy and girl were obviously having a fight. She has probably locked him out of the apartment. In my mind, I'm assuming they live together," she said.

"He was down below and she was up on the third floor, tossing his record albums, pulling them out of the covers and throwing them down in the street like Frisbees. You had all these shattered record albums on the street — what a great image!"

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Men tend to look for young, attractive mates and women for older mates with good financial prospects, according to a researcher who says that overall, kindness and intelligence are the most-sought traits.

"When I first found these sex differences in samples within the United States, people were skeptical that they would be found across cultures," said University of Michigan psychologist David M. Buss. "I was skeptical as well. But after the data from 37 cultures were analyzed statistically, I was surprised at how pervasive the sex differences were."

Buss directed the International Mate Selection Project in which 50 scientists studied more than 10,000 people from 37 cultures in 33 countries to rate the desirability of 31 characteristics in a mate.

"Men worldwide place greature value on mates who are young and physically attractive," he said. "Women prefer mates who are somewhat older, have good financial prospects, and are ambitious and industrious."

Kindness and intelligence were even more important to both, said Buss.

Among other findings of the five-year study, to be published this month in the journal Behavioral and Brain Sciences:

—Western European and North American men preferred mates at least a year younger than themselves, those from Greece, Iran, Colombia and Bulgaria wanted mates three to four years younger, and Nigerian and Zambian men preferred women six or seven years younger.

—British and Zulu women put the least value on money-making ability, while American women considered finances important but not critical.

—Men from 23 of the 37 cultures considered marrying a virgin more important than did the women, both sexes in Taiwan, Israel, China, India, Indonesia and Iran held chastity important, and most Western Europeans found it irrelevant.

NEW YORK (AP) — Summit Books says it has acquired the U.S. and Canadian rights to publish a book by Boris Yeltsin, a member of the Soviet Union's Congress of Deputies.

Yeltsin formerly was a secretary of the central committe of the Communist party , a candidate member of the Politiburo and, most recently, mayor of Moscow.

The book, as yet untitled, is to be completed later this year and is scheduled for publication in early 1990. Summit says Yeltsin will "write about his origins, his political journey from Sverdlovsk to Moscow, his family, his work, and about his rise in the party."

The Historical Mystery Of The 'Devil's Backbone'

EDITOR'S NOTE — Could a Welsh prince and his followers have settled in the heartland of America three centuries before Christopher Columbus reached the New World? That's the stuff of local legend in southern Indiana. While most scholars debunk the theory, a lot of questions remain unanswered and much of the evidence has disappeared.

CHARLESTOWN, Ind. — On a rugged bluff overlooking the Ohio River, a site known locally as the "Devil's Backbone," natural debris accumulated over the centuries shrouds a historical mystery.

Popular legend says that there lie the remains of a large stone fort and a lost colony of Welshmen who sailed to America three centuries before Christopher Columbus.

In 1799, early settlers found six skeletons wearing breastplates with a Welsh coat of arms. Indian legends told of "yellow-haired giants" who settled in Kentucky, southern Indiana, southern Ohio and Tennessee — a region they knew as "the Dark and Forbidden Land."

Archaeologists, debunking the legend, say better evidence indicates native American Indians once conducted a vigorous trading network nearby and buried their dead on the bluff.

The site and its shadowy history has lain virtually undisturbed since 1940, when the U.S. Army purchased 10,000 acres to build a munitions plant.

The Department of Defense is expected to relinquish almost 900 acres as part of a cost-cutting plan. The state of Indiana will have the first option to buy.

Both the Charlestown Chamber of Commerce and the state Department of Natural Resources have called for a state park on the land, which includes the peninsula 3 miles east of Charlestown.

"The older folks told children not to scale its walls, that the devil had put a curse on the place," wrote Margaret Sweeney in her 1967 book, "Fact, Fiction and Folklore of Southern Indiana."

"In spite of the warning, many youngsters invaded the stronghold and came away with broken bones, bruises, cuts or even completely bewitched for investigating 'Old Scratch's quarters.'"

Fourteen miles upstream from Louisville, Ky., the craggy hill rises abruptly from the Indiana shoreline. Fourteen Mile Creek runs behind the hill, creating a narrow strip of land where it flows along the larger river.

The peninsula is less than 20 feet wide at the top and falls off abruptly on either side to the Ohio River and the creek. The resulting pear-shape bluff has a flat top of 5 to 7 acres that is almost inaccessible.

The earliest survey of the area, by state geologist E.T. Cox and his assistant, William Borden, in 1873 revealed a prehistoric fortification on the hilltop. An artificial limestone wall, 150 feet long and 75 feet high in some places, stood along the front and one side of the hill where the cliffs could be scaled, Cox said in his report.

The walls no longer exist, the area's early settlers having carried the huge, unmortared stones away to build foundations, bridges and fences seen throughout the county's rolling countryside.

Local legend says the walls were built by followers of Prince Madoc, who led an expedition away from his native Wales in the late 12th century and was never seen again. Oral tradition says they landed in America, settling briefly in Tennessee before moving on to Kentucky and southern Indiana.

"In my opinion, you couldn't find a better legend than this," says Dana Olson of Jeffersonville, an amateur historian and author of "Prince Madoc: Founder of Clark County, Indiana."

"You've got princes and kings, and gold and silver, and wars. It would make a great movie."

Olson's book says Madoc was a son of Welsh King Owain Gwynedd and one of his brightest naval commanders. Madoc's skills and curiosity took him to France, Spain, Venice and other Mediterranean ports — and on at least two trips to the Americas in the period from 1165 to 1169.

When Gwynedd died in 1169, his sons began to feud over the throne. A disgusted Madoc, looking for more tranquil surroundings, sailed from Lundy Island south of Wales with three of his brothers and 10 ships.

They are listed as missing in Britain's ancient maritime logs.

Legend says they landed in Mobile Bay in 1170 and traveled up the Alabama River to where it meets the Coosa River, close to Alabama's borders with Georgia and Tennessee.

According to Cherokee tradition, they settled there and intermarried with native Indians, building five stone forts in the Chattanooga area. Treasure hunters have found Roman coins, European oil lamps and goblets among the forts, Olson says.

However, excavations conducted by the anthropology department at the University of Tennessee concluded one of the structures, known as Old Stone Fort, was built in the third century A.D. by an Indian culture that would have predated Madoc.

No Welsh artifacts were found to substantiate the persistent Madoc legend.

"In professional archaeological circles, it's kind of pooh-poohed," says Steve Cox, curator of the Tennessee State Museum. "There's no archaeological evidence. That's really all that we have to go on in the prehistoric period."

The legend says the Welsh Indians were forced out of Tennessee by the Cherokee Indians. Three separate northerly routes took them into Kentucky and the Ohio River Valley.

American Indians apparently first spread the tale of a race of White Indians who lived in the Falls of the Ohio area, where Madoc's followers may have established their largest settlement.

George Rogers Clark, the founder of Clarksville, Ind., first heard the story from Tobacco, a chief of the Piankeshaws. He told of a great bat-

Dillsboro, Tiny Tourist Mecca In A Carolina Valley

By Angela Griffin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DILLSBORO, N.C. — Dillsboro is a tiny tourist mecca tucked away in a Western North Carolina valley flanked by the foothills of the Great Smoky Mountains. Its past and future has been shaped by the railroad.

The town's destiny may have been shaped as early as 1886 when summer guests first arrived to vacation in the relaxed atmosphere of the quiet small town. They came solely by rail in the beginning, and the railroad played a significant role in the town's development.

At a time when many railbeds are being abandoned in favor of other means of transportation, the railroad continues to play a part in the growth of the town.

The Great Smoky Mountains Railway, begun in 1988, brings back the excitement of the passenger train — and it brings people. About 600 people a day board at Dillsboro depot.

Other businesses are springing up in town, following the lead of the railroad, such as The Switching Yard Sandwich Board and Railroad Emporium, a specialty sandwich shop. Railway officials also plan to expand the train business to include a dinner train.

The train, which has always been a part of the town, does not detract from the quaint, homey atmosphere natives of the area have struggled to maintain.

Named for Col. A.B. Andrews of Raleigh, president of the Western North Carolina Railroad, and incorporated in 1889, Dillsboro currently has 187 residents. Those residents are celebrating the town's centennial this summer, many by growing traditional centennial beards such as the one worn these days by town manager Herb Nolan.

Nolan, though not a native, can answer almost any question about the town. He can tell you about the town dog, Brownie, who is kept well fed by a number of town residents who also make sure the roaming mongrel has good veterinary care. The dog has become such a part of the town he even receives Christmas mail from tourists whose hearts he has won.

There is also the story about how Wade Wilson, mayor of 12 years, became mayor without running for election.

"Since we hold non-partisan elections," said Nolan, "the man running for mayor was running unopposed and he wasn't well liked. So people wrote in votes and elected Wade."

Wilson didn't want the job, but after four days he realized he had to take the job in order to resign from it. "He obviously liked it," said Nolan.

You will find no empty store fronts in Dillsboro. Business is thriving, mostly geared to tourists but many remaining open year-round. Places such as Enloe Market Place offer food, clothing, art, crafts and gifts. The market place was designed to keep the character of the adjoining Enloe House, another of the town's historic sites.

The growing bed and breakfast business has seen new places open as owners of the Squire Watkins Inn and Dillsboro Inn restored old historic homesites and opened them to the public.

Crafts play a major role in the success of the town. Tourist cottages were turned into craft shops back in the 1930s during a revival in Appalachian crafts.

One of the most successful businesses in town today is located in the same cottages on Front Street. Dogwood Crafters, a craft co-op of more than 100 crafters from a 100-mile radius, surpassed $1 million in sales last September. The co-op annually does about $250,000 in business. With only two paid employees, it is run by the co-op volunteers.

Town crafters do not sell in the co-op to provide a variety for the shoppers. The large number of Riverwood Craft Shop artisans make their goods in their shops and sell in the new Oaks Gallery.

Tourism is the industry in this town and most of the 59 in-town businesses are running 15 to 25 percent ahead of last year, said Nolan. He contributes much of that factor to the increase in attention brought on by the railway.

The town operates off a $40,000 general fund. City limits run about 2 miles in length and three-fourths of a mile in width, said Nolan. Town boundaries have been expanded twice recently, taking in land town officials hope to see developed.

There are more than 400 parking spaces in the town, with the railway providing off-street parking for those riding the excursion trains that run the 67 miles of track twice daily. Parking in Dillsboro, as in any growing town, is at a premium on busy days.

The Tuckasegee River also plays a major role in the town's ability to attract tourists. The river runs the full length of the town and is home to one of the oldest continuously operating powerhouses in the eastern United States.

The town has plans to build an access area to the river for rafters and canoers on land donated by the Nantahala Power and Light Company, which recently sold out to Duke Power. The access area will sport a park and launch site for use by water sportsmen.

Jackson County Tourism Authority promotional specialist Tamera Crisp, whose office is in Dillsboro, said whitewater sports is a growing industry in the area. The river, the train and historic sites such as The Jarrett House, which offers enticing homestyle meals, are just some of the things that make Dillsboro a delight to tourists.

Merchants of the small town have worked together for the last few years to keep business thriving during slower winter months. They now hold a December Christmas Luminaire, which lights up the little town with Christmas spirit. It is just one more attraction the steadily growing town has to offer.

tract planes to land, as they had seen them land at U.S. air bases.

Others built copies of refrigerators, opening the doors several times a day hoping to find cold beer the way they Amercians had done.

The British and French who jointly governed the New Hebrides until 1980 outlawed the cult and frequently jailed its leaders.

But the Jon Frum movement continues to flourish on this dark, rugged island dominated by the smoking 900-foot volcano, whose ash is slowly choking large areas of once-productive coconut plantation around the village.

Friday is the cult's sabbath and followers meet at Sulphur Bay. They dance and drink kava on Saturday night. By Sunday they are too tired to go to the missonary church.

Jon Frum's followers expect him to return each Feb. 15, but they don't know which year and they don't get despondent when he doesn't appear.

Chief Isaac Wan, headman of the Jon Frum village, tells visitors that Christians waited a long time for the Redeemer.

'Devil's Backbone'

tle between the Red Indians and White Indians on the Ohio River's Sand Island where all the White Indians were slain.

Maj. John Harrison, among others, has told of an extensive graveyard in that area, where thousands of human bones were buried in such confusion as to suggest a battle. The graveyard, if it existed, has been washed away.

Some of Clark County's earliest settlers reportedly found ancient coins and European armor, some bearing the Welsh coat of arms. All of that armor has disappeared.

Clark found some skeletons adorned in armor that he thought were ancient Welshmen and jotted down his findings in his personal memoirs, Olson says. A copy of this book, in Clark's own hand, was stolen years ago from the Jeffersonville public library.

"Baird's History of Clark County" says that a tombstone, with the date 1186, was found in Jeffersonville in the 1800s. Early pioneers reportedly found native Indians throughout the interior who could converse in the Welsh language.

A skull taken from Sand Island in the 1800s was pronounced by a Dr. Beckwith as "not that of an Indian." Beckwith's qualifications are not known.

None of the evidence has been scientifically examined or confirmed. In fact, virtually all of it has mysteriously disappeared.

"I wish I could reproduce everything that's been found or that it had been put in a museum," Olson says. "There are no museums here."

Without such proof, archaeologists and other experts have their doubts.

"Where you find prehistoric or human occupation you normally find a range of evidence, such as refuse, garbage, settlements, villages, sites, artifacts," says Gary Ellis, senior archaeologist for the state of Indiana.

"There just isn't any. Most of it is rumor."

More likely, Indian scholars say, the stone fort was built by native American Indians.

"A lot of people don't like to believe the Indians could have stacked rocks that size, but there's evidence around the country they did things like that," says Donna Calhoun of rural Scottsburg, who is writing a history of Indians in southern Indiana.

Ray White, tribal chairman of the Miami Indian nation, suggested the coins, lamps, armor and other artifacts could easily have traveled inland via the Indian trading network. A diary Calhoun uncovered during her research locates an Indian trading post 1½ miles east of Charlestown.

Yet Olson says the evidence supporting the legend is overwhelming.

"What something like this does is alter the apple cart of history," Olson says. "Anytime you get all this and put it before all these people who've got degrees in anthropology, it really turns the table. They don't know how to combat it, so they say, 'No, this is a myth.'"

An archaeological overview done in 1984 predicted the research value of Devil's Backbone could be quite high. Under federal law, any Indian mounds and artifacts must be protected from development there.

They could provide a unique look into southern Indiana's early beginnings.

Or, they could lend credence to a legend and shatter accepted theories on the discovery and exploration of America.

"We need somebody to go into Charlestown and just do a survey," White says. "They really need to find out what's there.

"It's bound to tell something about the early, early Indiana history, before what they're teaching in the schools. It's very important."

Florida Pitcher Plant Bog Lures Flower-Lovers and Botanists

By Frances Coleman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SILVERHILL, Ala. — It wasn't until Mac and Minnie MacCartee set their property on fire that they found the treasure that had been waiting for them beneath years' worth of underbrush.

The MacCartees are owners of a rare Gulf Coast pitcher plant bog which has attracted the attention of botanists and flower-lovers from throughout the country.

They have owned the 45 acres of land on which it is located since 1971, but didn't realize the wildflower bog existed until about 1974, a few years after they had built a five-acre lake.

"We burned it because we were worried about the kids getting bitten by snakes when they went down there to fish and swim," Mac MacCartee said. "And when spring came, we noticed the wildflowers coming up."

And what wildflowers they were: thousands of pitcher plants, orchids, lilies, black-eyed Susans, bachelor's buttons, goldcrest and blazing star covering the gentle slope around their lake.

The display of colors begins each year in March and lasts until the first frost in late autumn, changing from week to week.

"To us, it's pretty all the time," MacCartee said. "But I think it's prettiest from the first week in August until the end of September, when you get the fall blooms.

"And in April and May, it's pretty too. Those are the times you get you full blaze of color, fall and spring."

Botanists have told the MacCartees that their flower bog, which stays constantly moist from springs underneath, is part of a system of coastal bogs in Mississippi, Alabama and northwest Florida.

Many of the region's bogs have been drained and destroyed by farm and urban development.

"We invited some biologists out here in the mid-1970s and they told us what we had here," Mrs. MacCartee recalled.

"When one of them took a look at it, she was all excited, and before I knew it she was bringing groups out here."

Since then more and more groups of flower lovers have visited the MacCartees' property, located between Silverhill and Fairhope not far off County Road 48 on the eastern side of Mobile Bay.

It has also begun to attract the attention of the media. Southern Living magazine, for example, has visited twice and will be back once more for an article and photographs that it plans to run in 1990.

The Nature Conservancy magazine has also sent a photographer to take pictures of the pitcher plant bog, which the MacCartees said biologists tell them is one of the few maintained flower bogs on the coast.

In addition, in spring 1990 about 200 garden writers have scheduled a visit to the Baldwin County bog.

The bog is not visible from the road nor is it open to the public, but the MacCartees will allow groups of six or more people to tour it if they make reservations.

They are adamant about the need for appointments.

"We don't want to lose our privacy. We live here," Mrs. MacCartee said. "That's why it's absolutely by appointment, and to groups only."

"We don't want it to be a commercial deal," her husband added. "By doing it this way, we get only the flower-lovers."

Mrs. MacCartee said she has already booked groups into 1990.

The couple call their place Minamac Wildflower Bog, a combination of their names that they coined when they lived in Maryland and needed a name for their dairy farm.

The MacCartees had honeymooned in Foley and Gulf Shores in 1952 and returned to Baldwin County to live in 1971. In the years since they discovered their wildflowers, they have continued to burn the bog each January to encourage the annual floral display.

"Burning improves a bog," MacCartee said. "The flowers have already dropped their seeds, and we do a fast burn that doesn't cook the ground."

The lake and bog cover a total of between seven and eight acres, and after this winter, when he clears and burns more acreage across the lake, the total will rise to 10 or 12 acres, he said.

"We have the same type of flowers on the other side, but until I burn over there the only way you can see them is to walk back in there," MacCartee said.

He has built wooden walkways for visitors to tour the wildflower bog, but other than that and the yearly burning, the bog requires little maintenance.

The MacCartees refrain from picking the exotic plants, and they will not let their visitors pick or dig them, either.

They said they knew little about bogs before discovering they owned one.

"The way we've learned a lot of things about it is by listening to the biologists who have come here," he said.

"They tell us it's unusual that it's on a hillside. Most of them are in a bottom."

An article in American Scientist magazine titled "The Gulf Coast Pitcher Plant Bogs" said the bogs are also referred to as shallow freshwater marshes. Their survival, according to the author, depends on "an increasingly rare combination of saturated soil and frequent fires."

They are characterized by a proliferation of the tubular-leafed, carnivorous pitcher plants.

Furniture On Show

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — An exhibition Sept. 23-Dec. 31 at the Minneapolis Institute of Arts, "The American Craftsman and the European Tradition, 1620-1820," compares European and American furniture, glass, silver and ceramics.

The 122 objects on show represent a broad range of decorative arts — from famous icons of American art to furniture from early New Mexico, Canada and the Mississippi River Valley which has rarely been exhibited in art museums.

After its showing here, the exhibition will be shown at the Carnegie Museum, Pittsburgh, April 14-June 10, 1990.

Umbrellas On Display

NEW YORK (AP) — Sunny summer days are the time to face "A Rain of Talent: Umbrella Art," an exhibition at the American Craft Museum here, through Sept. 24.

Featured in the show are 35 functional umbrellas, according to the museum, "transformed by potters, sculptors, ceramists, architects and fiber artists" who have created "their personal interpretation of the umbrella." The installation includes a display suspended over the museum's main stairwell.

HOW TO PAY FOR COLLEGE WITH A LITTLE HIGH MATH:
2+2 = $17K

If money is the only thing keeping you out of college, the Army has a way to get you there. Enlist in the Army for two years for selected skill training and earn $17,000 for college.

Then serve as a soldier in the Army Reserve or National Guard and use your monthly drill pay ($100-120) to defray expenses while you attend the college of your choice.

After two years in an Army Reserve or National Guard unit, you'll then have the option of staying in the unit or being maintained in a stand-by status.

Two years' active and two years' Reserve. It adds up to getting to college faster. See an Army Recruiter.

Mike Cross To Be Guest Performer In Symphony Concert

After more than 20 years of increasingly being in the forefront of popularity as a North Carolina entertainer, Mike Cross still maintains a boyishly happy sense of surprise about his success.

"I've been incredibly fortunate to make a living at playing music, because there's no logical reason why I should be able to do it, starting out so late, not having any idea of how to perform before an audience."

Despite his wide public acceptance and acclaim, Cross maintains that he has "a tin ear and a scratchy old voice that behaves only about half the time. Sometimes I come home at night and I'll lie back in bed and think — 'I just can't believe all those people came out see me storm around on stage for a couple of hours.'"

Perhaps a trained music analyst might concede that Mike Cross does have a scratchy voice and a tin ear. Yet, like Judy Canova or Louis Armstrong, for example, Cross possesses that certain quality we call charisma — a state where a performer's appeal far surpasses the element of perfection in talent.

Chances are that the continuing and growing appeal of Cross' presence on stage is in a great measure attributable to his attitude. "From the beginning, even when I was unsure of myself, my main concern was to establish a rapport with my audience. I've always wanted people to leave a show of mine saying, 'Boy! I sure had a good time.'"

Coming To Greenville

At 8 p.m. on September 20, Greenville audiences will have an opportunity to hear Cross perform in Wright Auditorium on the East Carolina University campus. In that concert, he will be guest artist in a program offered by the North Carolina Symphony. The program will also include Bizet's "Suite No. 1 from Carmen" and the Wolf-Ferrari overture to "The Secret of Suzanne."

"I have played in Greenville eight or nine times over the past years," Cross said, "mostly at the old Carolina Opry House. But this will be my first performance in Greenville with the North Carolina Symphony."

Commenting on developments that led him a couple of years ago to broaden the scope of his performances by appearing with a large group like the symphony, Cross talked about "the joy I discovered in working with an ensemble instead of performing alone. I soon found out that it was a wonderful, entirely new experience for me. Instead of concentrating only on my own voice in performance, I learned to appreciate all the different voices created by an orchestra.

"I think of performing with the North Carolina Symphony as somewhat equivalent to the many covered dishes one encounters at a church dinner. So many people are contributing different, enchanting sounds. I really love being a part of ensemble playing. The musicians in the orchestra are a fine bunch of folks who care deeply for music."

About the man who will conduct the N.C. Symphony in the Sept. 20 Greenville concert, Cross said "James Ogle is a superb conductor. He is an animated person who loves being in the middle of the excitement of making music and he has a way of conveying his excitement to everyone around him. He's certainly been an inspiration to me."

Valued Collaborator

Cross gives credit to Michael Kinzie, a musician who has over a span of years lived and worked in Greenville as the person "who made my working with the symphony a possibility.

"Mike is not just a talented musician," Cross said, "he's also a super person anyway you look at it. When discussions were first made about my appearing with the symphony, all of us faced some real obstacles. The orchestra did not have arrangements of my material, and I certainly did not know how to transcribe my simple arrangements to the complex requirements needed by an orchestra.

"When this dilemma was presented to Mike Kinzie, he said 'no big problem.' He took my own arrangements of material and with his little pen and reams of paper went to work. It amazes me that anybody can take a few notes and change them into pages of scores needed for an orchestra. In my book, Mike is something of a genius. He deserves credit for making my performing with the North Carolina symphony an achieved fact instead of a daydream."

Of the 15 songs Cross is scheduled to perform on the Sept. 20 program, eight are programmed to be played with orchestra accompaniment — all arranged by Kinzie.

Music Replaced Golf

When Mike Cross claims he came to music late — he is speaking in relative terms — that is, music captivated him in his early 20s while he was a student at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

"All my early life, my great addiction was golf," Cross said. "I was a hard-core golfer from about the time I was 10-years-old. My big dream was to go to college and play golf on a scholarship. Then something happened. I fell in love with a high school sweetheart and decided I'd better think of something more solid and financially secure so that she'd marry me. Maybe I'd study to be a doctor.

"The early sweetheart and I broke up during my freshman year at UNC. I'd given up on a golf scholarship and had even sold my clubs, so I figured that I had to find something to replace both golf and the girl," Cross said.

A decision to become involved in music came about somewhat by chance. "The gist of what happened was that I got sick during a snowstorm in my junior year in college. So I spent the night in a friend's dormitory room and it turned out my friend's roommate had a guitar. That in turn led to my friend's roommate spending two snowbound days teaching me simple basic chords and songs."

Dominated By Music

Cross admits "from that moment on music has dominated my life, something I've been obsessed by — absolutely. And I have no regrets.

"Music for me," Cross said, "is a part of life that you cannot define in words, in concrete physical terms. It has power, different kinds of power, I am convinced, for each individual. For me personally, it constantly brings to the fore the realization that it's wonderful to be alive, to be responsive to many subtle moods that are all part of the joy of living."

Cross majored in English and Western philosophy. "I never studied music formally, yet my own concept of music equates to the ancient Greek idea that music is vital in expressing emotions related to certain types of events. They believed in music to fulfill a need when going into battle, music to express the magic of love, of happy times like celebration parties. They were subconsciously aware of the powerful forces that music can evoke, and since first discovering music for myself, I can understand how right they were."

Traditional music from Ireland and Scotland has long been favorite musical forms for Cross. "In recent years, however, I've become more and more intrigued by symphonic music, and especially with Baroque music. I find the beauty and intricacies in the interplay of this music tremendously pleasing, a source of inspired musical listening pleasure."

At first, only a handful of students and alumni in Chapel Hill showed up faithfully when Mike Cross played at a local club. As time passed, however, and as word of the appeal of his music spread, Cross began to be in demand for concerts in North Carolina, then farther afield.

Eventually, he mastered playing the fiddle — "violin when I play with symphonic groups". His early specialty — which remains a staple part of his performing, is comprised of bottleneck blues, fiery Irish jigs and a wealth of his own original music.

In addition, Cross has a natural gift of storytelling colored by backwoods humor. "My love of storytelling comes naturally from my early environment," Cross said. "Although I was born in Tennessee, my family crossed the mountains into North Carolina when I was only a little tot and settled first at Boone, then in the town of Lenoir, where I grew up. People in western North Carolina dearly love storytelling and it has rubbed off on me."

A Sampling Of India's Culture To Be Presented Friday

A dancer performs a classical Indian dance

Text by Jerry Raynor

The first 400 Greenville and area residents to arrive at the Willis Building prior to 7 o'clock Friday evening will have an opportunity to sample a wide choice of the rich culture of the ancient Southeast Asian country of India.

"We encourage anyone interested in India and its diverse culture to attend," said Dr. Mohammed Ahad, professor at East Carolina University. "It is free and open to everyone."

The first in a series of four Community Round Table presentations, the 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. event has as its theme "Indian Immigrants: Culture and Values."

"This program, generously funded by the North Carolina Humanities Council," Dr. Ahad said, "is designed to give people in our area some idea of immigrants from different cultures through art, artifacts, music, and dance."

Dr. Ahad pointed out that in past years Pitt County was a primarily agricultural oriented location, but that has changed dramatically in the past few years.

"Rapid population growth that has taken place in the expansion of East Carolina University, including the medical school, together with the establishment here of large industrial corporations such as Burroughs Wellcome, have led to an increasing influx of foreign born professional, technicians and business people in the local area."

He added that the growth in the arrival of immigrants "has brought about for the first time immigrants becoming part of a non-cosmopolitan American cultural environment.

"These roundtable programs," he said, "will hopefully lead to a better mutual understanding and interchange between the new arrivals and those who have always lived here through exchange of cultural ideas being presented in the community round table discussions."

Other Community Roundtable programs to be held at Willis Building at later dates will focus on immigrants and cultures of Hispanic, Chinese and Arabic origins.

Dr. Ahad is coordinator of this initial program in the series.

The Friday program will begin with brief words of greeting to the audience by Dr. Richard Eakin, chancellor of ECU; Mrs. Alice Barkley, director of the N.C. Humanities Council; Greenville Mayor Ed Carter, and Dr. Emilie D. Henning, dean of the ECU School of Nursing.

After the welcome by these four, a video tape of the festivals of India, produced by the Indian Information Services, will be shown.

Next will be a panel discussion moderated by DiAnne Bowen, cohostess of the WNCT-TV Channel 9 Carolina Today program.

The panel will feature three participants — the scholar Dr. Paramatma Saran, an associate professor of sociology of Baruch College, the City University of New York City; Dr. Avtar Singh, professor of sociology and anthropology at ECU; Mrs. Usha Gulati, a local resident who is an entrepreneur and social worker, and Dr. Jose F. Caro, professor of endocrinology in the School of Medicine, ECU.

After about half an hour allocated to remarks by the panel members, members of the audience will be given an opportunity to ask questions and to make comments.

"Some of the things most people want to know about India include the significance of the dot that many Indian ladies wear on their forehead; why certain Indians wear turbans and grow beards; the custom of arranged marriages in India; information on Hindi, the national language of India, and beliefs about karma, or reincarnation," Dr. Ahad said.

"I think the art and entertainment we have scheduled as the concluding part of this round table will please people, give them a brief look at Indian culture" Dr. Ahad said.

"We will have, for example an art show on the walls of art by Lydia Jasty. There will also be a display of Indian artifacts which tell much about our culture.

"Dance will be well represented," Dr. Ahad said, "with Mrs. Lajju Patel performing one of the classical dances of India. A second dance performance will be an Indian folk dance by a group of girls to be directed by Pregna Mehta. All these people are area residents who belong to the Indian Association of Eastern North Carolina."

Ahad said that two musicians "from Raleigh will perform Indian music on two traditional instruments, the sitar and the tabla."

Ample parking is available at the Willis Building, located at the corner of First and Reade Streets.

Those attending are asked to arrive a little early in order that everyone can be seated and ready for the program's 7 p.m. beginning.

American Indian Week Celebrations In N.C. Set For Sept. 17-23

RALEIGH — Indian Heritage Week in North Carolina will be held Sept. 17-23 to recognize and celebrate the achievements and contributions made by native inhabitants of the state.

The week will begin with an Indian Heritage Week Festival at Town Creek Indian Mound at Mt. Gilead on Sept.17. Ceremonies will begin at 1:30 p.m. with a pipe cermony and will continue until 5 p.m.

Ray Oxendine, principal of Purnell Swett High School in Pembroke, will be the featured speaker. He will be joined by other speakers, including Rep. Pryor Gibson of Wadesboro, as well as Indian dancers, Indian artists and craftsmen, and Indian traders. Films will be shown.

A special one-day-only postal cancellation stamp will commemorate the event.

North Carolina has the largest Indian population east of the Mississippi River with more than 65,000 Native Americans comprising six tribes — Cherokee, Coharie, Haliwa-Saponi, Lumbee, Meherrin and Waccamaw-Siouan — and three major urban concentrations in Charlotte, Fayetteville, and Greensboro.

Writing Poetry Said As Rewarding As Mountaineering

By Jeff Barnard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKEVIEW, Ore. — Once he started writing poems out by the juniper trees and bitter brush of the high desert, John Daniel didn't feel he had to scale the sheer granite walls of Yosemite Valley anymore.

"The great attraction of creative writing is that it is exhilarating," said Daniel. "It's as exciting as rock climbing or mountaineering. Both are an ascent. When you climb a mountain, you often start in the dark and reach a peak where the whole landscape is revealed to you."

Tall and rangy at 41, with a beard and short hair flecked with gray, Daniel was sitting in the dark mess hall of Camp Cottonwood in the mountains west of Lakeview, where he spent two weeks this summer directing an arts camp for kids.

His path to writing was far from direct.

"I didn't get into it through the academic chute," he said.

He bailed out of Reed College in Portland before graduating, though he was valedictorian at his high school in Bethesda, Md.

"I majored in drugs, self-doubt and confusion and I didn't last long," Daniel said.

It wasn't until he had refused to be drafted in the Vietnam War, studied classical guitar, set chokers on a Weyerhaeuser logging crew, trusted his life to a rope on the rock walls of Yosemite Valley and peered into boxcars as a railroad detective in San Francisco that he started thinking of himself as a writer.

"I really owe it to the railroad," he said.

In 1970, he landed a job as a "railroad dick" with the Transcontinental Freight Bureau in San Francisco. His job was to see that shippers were shipping the freight they said they were. He spent weekends rock climbing at Yosemite.

After two years, he wanted out of the city, so he transferred to Klamath Falls, located on the eastern slope of the Cascades and the edge of eastern Oregon's high desert.

"I would walk around the yards a little bit and crack a few cars," he said. "I worked three hours a day for about five years."

The job gave him the time to begin writing seriously, concentrating on short fiction.

"I also had these impulses that weren't stories," he said. "I thought maybe they were poems."

To concentrate on writing, Daniel quit the railroad in 1978 and moved into a cabin on a ranch owned by his friend Roger Hamilton, now a Klamath County Commissioner. He stayed there four years, teaching writing part-time in the Lakeview schools.

"What I found myself writing about was the landscape: the sage and junipers, stoves and the weather," Daniel said. "It was in that landscape that I came to myself as a writer.

"I had led a shiftless life. Roger Hamilton's ranch was the first time I stayed in one place through the turning of the seasons so I could come to know it."

His work, "December in the Oregon Desert," looks humbly at that landscape:

"This space could wear out eyes and ears and leave you wandering wild as sage, your pale skin cured red, reading signs in antelope bones, following a prophet tumbleweed over snow and snow to some barefisted peak where you shiver in the spell of a scatter of stars one bright as the next."

In 1982, Daniel left the desert after winning the Wallace Stegner Fellowship to Stanford University. There he lived in a cottage on Stegner's place, studied and then taught writing. Last year Daniel's poems were published as the book "Common Ground," and he returned to the Northwest, moving to Portland with his wife, Marilyn, who is an environmental engineer with the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality.

Stegner wrote of Daniel, "Reading through his poems is like a long unhurried walk out of doors. They heal like fresh air and balsam."

Poet Denise Levertov added, "Daniel's work makes us realize that our unique task is not, as we have mistakenly assumed, to master our world, but to respond to it."

Daniel uses his writing to clarify his ideas and his life.

"In the first phase you have to stand in humility before what stands inside of you," he said. "When it comes to the point where it is out there, the second phase comes in. It's like a sculpture. It needs you to consciously model it.

"I think it's presumptuous of you to know how it turns out. Your little poem can be smarter than you are."

Through many of Daniel's poems runs a continuing amazement that out of the universe there would have happened this planet Earth, with a stinging natural beauty that has become his religion.

"What disturbs me about Christianity is their certainty of things," Daniel said. "What I find fascinating is the great uncertainty of evolution. What an adventure. What a poem. Evolution is the greatest poem.

"Emily Dickinson said in her terse way that 'Beauty is Nature's fact.' That makes sense to me. She was a scientist in her way."

Indian Heritage Celebration Set

CRESWELL — Pettigrew State Park is sponsoring Indian Heritage Week, September 20, 21, 22, and 23. Lake Phelps' artifacts will be on display along with all four of Pettigrew's recovered canoes.

Lake Phelps' 31 foot, 2,380 year old canoe was recovered from the lake in the spring of 1986. Even though Pettigrew State Park possesses longer and older canoes in Lake Phelps, this particular canoe presently is the oldest and longest recovered Indian dugout canoe in North Carolina.

The public is invited to visit any day. However Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday are school group days. Because of the response from schools last year, the event has expanded this year to three days to accommodate more students.

Classes will be rotating to stations of various stages of Indian life. Subjects of these stations include projectile point construction, cooking, hunting, pottery decoration, canoe construction, jewelry, and agriculture.

On Sept. 24 certain stations will be open for the general public.

Dr. David Phelps of East Carolina University's Archaeology Department will be giving a lecture on the artifact discoveries and research at Lake Phelps. He will be available to examine visitors' private artifact collections and explain the item's use and age. Exhibits will be open from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A Handy Afghan Book

A COLLECTION OF AFGHANS. By Pat Trexler. Kansas City, Missouri. Andrews and McMeel. Paper. $8.95.

Fifteen pages of splendid color photographs of afghans add a big splash of color to this convenient how-to book covering more than 20 distinctively different patterns for creating aghans.

Text for the book, drawn from the writings of needlework expert and syndicated columnist Pat Trexler, covers thorough instructions for making afghans in a wide variety of familiar and not-so-familiar designs.

They cover patterns of traditional classic nature, as well as ones for afghans appropriate for babies, and even plaid and fishermen patterns.

Additionally, "A Collection of Afghans" includes an informative section on the history of afghans, a history of knitting and crocheting along with a helpful reference section.

The ample spread of black and white illustrations showing the required steps for each pattern discussed are large and clear, thus making it easy for even a novice to follow directions.

Aside from being useful and colorful touches in home and personal decorations, afghans have become cherished items to pass from generation to generation as family heirlooms.

One outstanding advantage of a specialized publication like this one is that it obviates the necessity of purchasing a large, expensive volume covering many fields of textile creations. Here, in one easy-to-handle small book is the essential information anyone interested in making afghans will need.

If the book, due for distribution at the end of September, cannot be found in a local book store, a copy may be ordered by sending a check or money order for $9.95 ($8.95 for the book and $1 for postage and handling) to: Andrews and McMeel, 4900 Main Street, Kansas City, Missouri, 64112.

Time's Achievements

The passage of time has brought the satisfaction of fulfillment realized in a growing range of musical achievements in Mike Cross' career. His record of achievements encompasses numerous network radio and television appearances, hundreds of concerts ranging from ones presented in Boston's Symphony Hall and an outdoors musical festival in California to dates in college towns.

To date, he has recorded eight albums including "Prodigal Son" released two months ago. "Just now," Cross said, "I'm in the process of working on a new album to be titled 'The Best of Mike Cross'. I'll be working with Barry Poss, a gifted producer who moved from Canada some years ago to be with Sugar Hill Studios in Durham, which handles my record output."

The years too have added the blessings of a family. Cross is married to the former Cindy Gooch, "a Chapel Hill girl whose family has been around the area for something like six generations.

"We have two sons. Will, who is 11 and Patrick, our younger, who is four." When asked if he was attempting to guide them toward the possibility of a musical career, Cross said "Cindy and I are neither encouraging nor discouraging the boys. We feel that time will lead them to their own inclinations, their own decisions."

Three years ago they bought a house "out in the country outside Chapel Hill. It's delightful being there. I love landscaping, but time has only permitted me to plant a few shrubs. I did manage to build three little fish ponds which the boys enjoy.

"Cindy, too, has little time to devote to being outside. She runs the sound system for my shows. That, coupled with housework and being a mother, leaves her time for our lovely yard. But," he added, "she always finds time to cut roses for the house. Roses are her great love.

"The prospect of playing in Greenville with the North Carolina Symphony is exciting," Cross said. "I've always loved the reactions I've had from Greenville audiences and I hope this time will be as great as other time I've played there."

Writers To Meet Tuesday

The first meeting in September of members of the Greenville Writers Club will take place at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the home of Jerry Raynor, 2106 Pendleton Street.

An Exhibition Of Portraits At NCMA

By Anna Upchurch
N.C. MUSEUM OF ART

RALEIGH — The legends, histories and personalities behind the faces in 15 portraits in the collection of the North Carolina Museum of Art are brought to light in a new exhibition, "Facets of Faces: Functions of Portraits," on view through June 17, 1990.

Most of the paintings have not been on view at the museum recently, and six of them will be exhibited for the first time. The portraits were selected from the museum's collection of American and European paintings, chosen because they illustrate the uses of portraiture to symbolize political power or to demonstrate religious devotion or social status.

The exhibition also shows visitors how portraits can convey information about the artist, as well as the social-historical context of the period during which the work was executed.

For example, the exhibition contrasts two state portraits of a boy king and a prince of the church. The five-year-old child in a 17th-century French painting based on a composition by Hyacinthe Rigaud is King Louis XV at the moment of his accession to the most illustrious throne of Europe. Regal pose, superb robes, and sumptuous symbols of power emphasize the status of young Louis, who is depicted with the scepter, crown and sword of Charlemagne. Little is revealed, however, about the child himself.

In contrast, the portrait of "Cardinal Muzio Gallo" by the 18th-century Austrian artist Anton von Maron shows that public taste and artistic styles had changed subtly. Painted to commemorate his appointment as cardinal, Gallo's potrait is a political statement, too; as a cardinal of the Catholic church and as Archbishop of Viterbo, Gallo was a powerful political figure.

Maron uses a luxurious setting and rich robes to convey the stature of the cardinal in a manner similar to the Louis XV portrait. However, emphasis has shifted subtly in the interim. Maron now reveals something of the personality in his direct and unflinching gaze and self-assured, thoughtful expression. Visitors who have seen this portrait on view in the Museum's Italian gallery have often remarked on the illusion of texture achieved by Maron in the lace, fur, gilt and jewels of the cardinal.

"Louis XV" is exhibited in a magnificent frame recently restored by the museum's conservation staff. This frame and several others in the exhibition are believed to be period frames, dating to the creation period of the paintings. Frames on the "Self-portrait" of Jacques-Louis David, the "Portrait of Lucrezia de Medici (1545-1561)" by Bronzino, and on "The Countess of Cassel and Her Son as Venus and Cupid" by Francois de Troy have all been restored by the conservation staff.

An excellent example of an 18th-century costume portrait is on view in the exhibition. The "Portrait of a Young Man with a Turban" by Vittore Ghislandi, an Italian artist, has been newly restored by the museum's conservation staff for the exhibition and is on view for the first time since the museum moved to its new building six years ago. Costume portraits, which showed everyday people dressed in exotic clothes from far away lands, were popular in 18th-century Europe.

Two 15th-century panel paintings from the Museum's collection are rare examples of German donor portraits. In the Medieval period, wealthy individuals often commissioned religious art that included representations of themselves as a pious act to obtain divine grace or favor.

The paintings included in the exhibition were originally two wings of a large altarpiece donated to their parish church by the von Laubenberg family.

The figures of Caspar von Laubenberg, his wife Anna von Freiberg, and their six children are portrayed much smaller than and clearly subordinate to the larger saints above them. The inscriptions on the panels ask the saints to intercede in prayer for each family member.

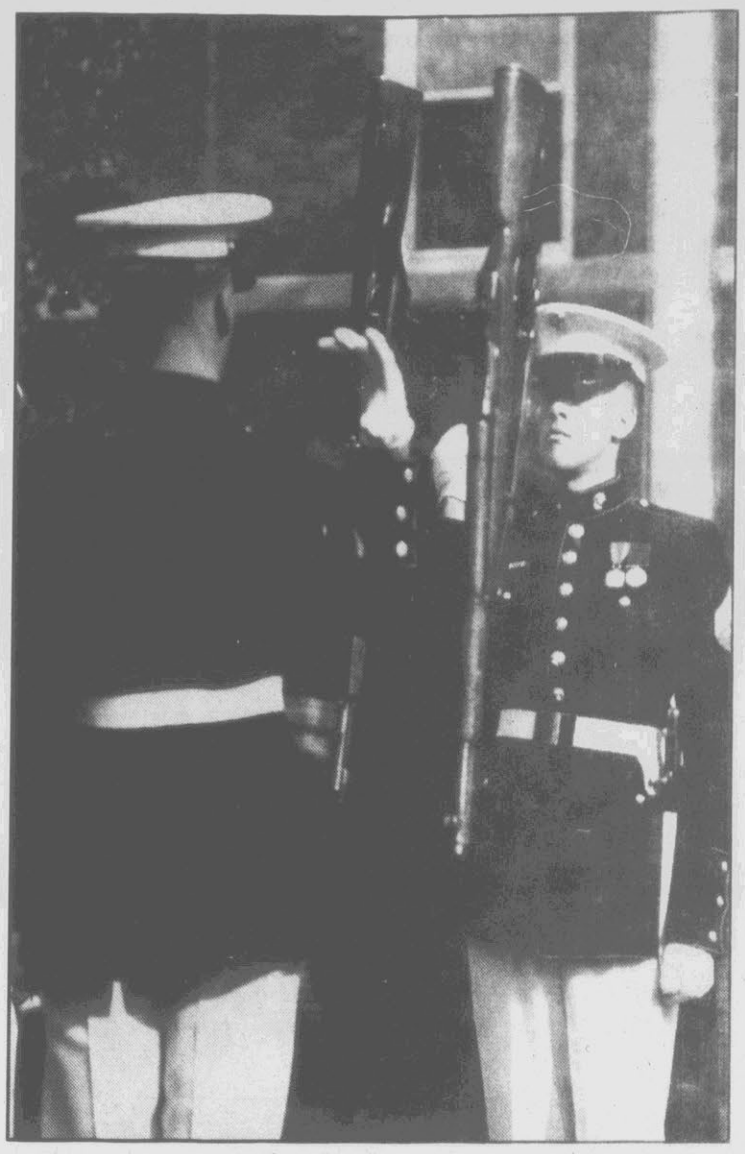
An earlier portrait of "Captain Job Jansz. Cuyter and Family," painted in 1659 by Dutch artist Nicolaes Maes, shows the family members informally grouped and linked together by their poses and gestures. The artist provides much information about the family in this painting; the city of Dordrecht, their home, is shown in the background, the father's occupation as a sea captain and merchant is indicated by the ship to which he points, and the children hold different objects that may provide clues about the family for the viewer to interpret.

Andrew Wyeth's "Sea Dog," a portrait of a seaman painted in 1971, is also included in the exhibition.

"Facets of Faces: Functions of Portraits" was organized by guest curator Jackie Champion for the Mary Duke Biddle Education Gallery at the museum. The exhibition is accompanied by a guide which discuss other portraits in the Museum's collection and by a children's guide to portraiture. A copy of the adult guide in Braille text and a cassette recording of the guide are available for vision-impaired visitors. Guided tours of the exhibition may be arranged by calling the museum at 833-1935, ext. 145, two weeks in advance.

The exhibition is supported by state funds and by contributions administered by the North Carolina Museum of Art Foundation.

The North Carolina Museum of Art, located at 2110 Blue Ridge Boulevard, houses the art collection of the State of North Carolina. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays; 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Fridays; 12 noon to 5 p.m. Sundays; Closed Monday. Admission is free.



Marines carry out precision drills with a M-1 rifle

Marine Corps Ceremony At MCAS And New Bern

MCAS, CHERRY POINT — The United States Marine Corps Battle Color Ceremony is being presented at the Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point and in New Bern, both on Sept. 19.

The first performance will begin at noon at Cherry Point with the second performance at New Bern High School at 7:30 p.m.

The ceremony will open with a 15-minute drill and concert exhibition known as a "concert in motion" set to a mixture and popular and patriotic music.

This is to be followed by the Silent Drill Team in its 10-minute drill routine. Precise drill movements are carried out with M-1 rifles with fixed bayonets, executed without verbal commands. The climax is a performance that includes an intricate series of tosses executed in unison.

The next segment is the march of the color guard onto the field with the national color and multicolored streamers.

The ceremony concludes with the presentation of colors and the playing of the National Anthem, with units then pass in review to the playing of the Marine's Hymn.

A painting by artist Kip Gerard at East Gallery

East Gallery Show

An exhibition of pottery, watercolors, etching, and handmade paper by three North Carolina artists will be on view at East Gallery this month. The show opens Monday and will be up through October 10.

Tom Cooper will present pottery along with the watercolors of Kip Gerard and the etching and handmade paper of Jacque M. Williams.

A resident of King, Cooper is a longtime potter. He began his career at the age of eleven. He has studied in Maine and has participated in shows throughout the East Coast. His work has appeared in such publications as Ceramics Monthly and American Crafts.

Gerard of Chapel Hill paints and teaches watercolor. His work reflects a realism of form contrasted with the images of shadows. In this show Kip has scenes from his summer in Belize. His paintings are represented in collections of Glaxo, NCNB and Wachovia.

Wilmington artist Jacque McKnight Williams seeks to have her art reflect her thoughts, feelings, and visions, working in paper and expressing her views through etching.

Ms. Williams is an award winner in both local and state exhibitions.

Wildlife Portraits In Tarboro Exhibition

TARBORO — An exhibit of "Wildlife Portraits" by Wilmington Artist Patsy McAuley opens today in the Hobson Pittman Memorial Gallery of the Blount-Bridges House in Tarboro. A reception will take place from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m., free and open to the public.

Born and raised in Rocky Mount, Pasty McAuley has had a love of animals since she was a child.

"I'd dig a little hole, line it with moss, flowers and ferns, and sprinkle water to keep it moist. Then I'd cover it with glass and arrange moss around the edges." She would paint for hours, often using unusual materials, such as worn-out window shades instead of expensive canvas.

After years of experimenting with different styles and techniques, Mx-Auley has settled into the realistic style. Her painstaking technique requires as much as 170 hours on a single painting.

McAuley's paintings contain a variety of subjects found in nature. She prefers to paint animals as part of the landscape, somewhat camouflaged as they are in nature. The artist is largely self-taught, although she has worked with the late Alan Jones.

Among her awards are the best in shows in the N.C. Wildlife Federation Art Show; the Millbrook Art Show, Raleigh; Kinston Art Fair and Azalea Festival Art Show, Wilmington.

Her work has been published in several national magazines. Her wood duck print was selected as Art Print of the Year by the Maryland-Delaware Nature Conservancy in 1985.

McAuley was received second place in the Ducks Unlimited Artist of the Year competition in 1984. Many of her prints are owned by Hardee's in Rocky Mount, which underwrote her first edition of prints.

The exhibit will remain in Tarboro until October 29. Museum hours are Mondays- Fridays, 10 a.m. until 4 p.m., Saturdays-Sundays, 2-4 p.m. Admission is free. For more information call 823-4159.

NCMA To Exhibit Polish Art Works

By Anna Upchurch
N.C. MUSEUM OF ART

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Museum of Art has finalized an agreement with the National Museum of Poznan in Poznan, Poland, to organize jointly an exhibition of paintings from the Poznan museum.

The exhibition will be on view at the North Carolina Museum of Art in the spring of 1992.

Announcement of the exhibition was made jointly by Dr. Richard Schneiderman, director of the N.C. Museum of Art and Dr. Henryk Kondziela, director of the Poanan museum. Dr. Kondziela earlier visited in Raleigh to finalize negotiations.

The exhibition will comprise 54 paintings from the late 19th and early 20th century by 21 Polish artists who were active at the turn of the century.

The vital, nationalistic spirit and rich cultural heritage of Poland are evident in these colorful canvases, many of which are similar in style to the works of European and American Impressionist masters.

The exhibition in North Carolina will be the first time many of these works will be exhibited outside Poland.

The National Museum of Poznan is a complex of 10 buildings housing some 200,000 objects that include works of fine art, decorative arts, graphic arts and artifacts of Polish history.

Poznan, located in western Poland, is the country's fifth largest city with an estimated population of 570,000.

Located on the banks of the Warta River, it is a center of metallurgical, chemical, textile and food processing industries known for its annual industrial and commercial exposition.

The city is the capital of the province of Poznan and is one of Poland's oldest cities, dating to the 10th century.

The North Carolina Museum of Art is located at 2110 Blue Ridge Boulevard in Raleigh and houses the art collections of North Carolina.

Merchants From India Thrive In Rio Grande Enclave

By Joel Williams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAREDO, Texas — The border's blurring effect on language and culture is apparent in signs sprinkling Laredo's crowded downtown shopping district: "Madre India," "Ropa Hindu," "Bombay Connection" and "Casa Hari."

In the past decade, an enclave of merchants from India has established itself in the nation's most Hispanic city. Spanish and English meld with Hindi, Sindhi, Gujarati and other tongues from the Indian subcontinent.

On the back wall of Ramesh Tewani's Madre India No. 2 jewelry store on Zaragoza Street is a prominent figure of Ganesh, the Hindu god of good luck. Tewani came to the United States from India, and moved to Laredo in 1977, about the same time other Indians began converging on the border city.

"What brought me to the U.S.? Business," said Tewani, who sells gold and Italian jewelry. "The Mexicans come and they buy gold from me in large quantities."

His 20-year-old son, Mohan Tewani, runs the Madre India No. 1, featuring high-fashion costume jewelry, just a few blocks down the same street.

More than 90 percent of their business comes from Mexicans who survey the retail selections before making their own large wholesale purchases, say the Tewanis and other Indian merchants on Juarez and Zaragoza streets. They say they found success in Laredo and spread the word to other Indians.

Many of the Mexican customers smuggle the goods into Mexico to get by their country's tariffs and trade restrictions, the Indian merchants say.

Mayor Aldo Tatangelo, a retailer, remembers a wave of Indians "just coming and coming and coming" in the early 1980s to set up a gold trade.

"I call it the 'Gold City,' because there's so much gold in there. The Indians are good in jewelry. It's very important to them, and they've got good connections with the factories in Italy."

Tatangelo estimated that jewelry stores, now dominated by Indians, sell as much as $500 million in gold to Mexicans shopping in Laredo. Others have moved into other lines, including cheaper jewelry, electronics and clothing.

As a result, more than a few Indians live in the fashionable Del Mar "C" and Regency Park neighborhoods on the city's north side.

While the Indian immigrants have adapted to the U.S. and Mexican cultures, there is also an effort to preserve some of their roots.

The India Association of Laredo's 33 families meet regularly for a dose of culture. On Sunday, Aug. 13, they met at Ramesh Tewani's house for a "katha" or thanksgiving prayer session. Afterwards, they raised the Indian flag to celebrate India's independence day. A letter sent to members, written in English, concluded with the message: "Viva. Indian Independence."

Association President Kishin Rupani, owner of Dayasons Costume Jewelry & Gifts, said the group helps maintain a close-knit community. Indian singers and entertainers touring the United States sometimes are paid to make side trips to perform at members' homes. The association usually meets at homes because there is no Indian temple or movie theater.

As with most immigrants, however, identification with the new country increases with the time here, particularly among the young.

Mohan Tewani has a shrine in the back of his store, but is unsure of the names of Hindu gods revered there. "My father would be the expert on that."

Command of the various native languages also is weakening.

"Ultimately, they have to blend in with the society," said Rupani's daughter, Soma, a banking and finance major at Laredo Junior College.

"Actually, we are Americanized in a way, but we're more conservative with dating and things like that," said Soma Rupani, 21. "You've heard of the arranged marriages? You have to stay within your community."

Andy Lakhiani moved to Laredo four years ago after nearly being killed by an armed robber in his former shop in Dallas. Nearly every square inch of his small store, Casa Hari on Juarez Street, is packed with plastic necklaces, earrings, scarves, gold-filled jewelry, perfumes, sunglasses, clocks, purses and other merchandise destined primarily for south of the border.

Lakhiani, originally from Bombay, said his three children "don't recognize Indian culture" but he doesn't care. "It's good to be aware of roots, but you have to adapt, you have to blend in," he said as a radio behind the counter played music from a station broadcasting from Mexico.

Harold Bradley Is A Prolific Nashville Performer

The Associated Press/Mark Humphrey

String player Harold Bradley is a veteran 43 years performer

By Joe Edwards
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Actress Sissy Spacek, after recording the soundtrack to the 1980 movie "Coal Miner's Daughter," handed guitar player Harold Bradley a note.

"Pick them strings, guitar man. Loved working with you," it said.

Bradley did pick. And pick. And pick.

In the city known worldwide for its guitar players, Bradley has been the most productive. Chet Atkins is more famous, and Roy Clark helped popularize the term "picker," but Bradley has been more prolific.

In a career spanning 43 years, the 63-year-old Bradley has played in literally thousands of recording sessions. No one in Nashville, perhaps no one else anywhere, comes close to matching his output.

"My career sounds like a lie, but it's really happened," Bradley says calmly in a manner that belies the fervor with which he plays.

Twelve of the records on which he played with Elvis Presley became million-sellers. Just a few of the other singers he's accompanied include Willie Nelson, Marie Osmond, Roger Miller, Loretta Lynn, John Davidson, Patsy Cline, Tom Jones, Buddy Holly, the Everly Brothers, Hank Williams, Conway Twitty, Charley Pride and Joan Baez.

He's played on movie soundtracks such as "Pink Cadillac" and "Smokey and the Bandit II" in addition to "Coal Miner's Daughter."

A few of the songs on which he's played include "Jingle Bell Rock," "Only the Lonely," "Stand by Your Man," "I'm Sorry," "King of the Road," "It's Such a Pretty World Today" and "Make the World Go Away."

For good measure, he played at the White House in 1978, accompanying country music stars Tom T. Hall, Lynn and Twitty who were invited by President Carter to provide some down-home entertainment.

This illustrious production came from a musician who taught himself how to play at age 15 and still practices an average of a couple hours a day. Even at age 45, he briefly took lessons in classical music.

"I love it," he says as he approaches a half-century of plucking the strings. "I love to practice. You have to practice. There is no end to being a good guitar player.

"It's like you've got this big jigsaw puzzle in front of you. You put a few pieces in and you get an idea of the picture. Then you realize there's more pieces on the outside so you keep trying to put them in. And you realize you can never fill in the whole thing."

Bradley, who does not sing, has been enterprising as well as busy. For sound effects, he once went to his car and got a pair of tire chains, returned to the studio and dropped them to the floor during the recording session for the song "Chain Gang."

He has no preference among the various electric or acoustical guitars, saying simply: "I prefer what I'm playing at the time. I like to play all of 'em."

An engaging man with volumes of scrapbooks and memorabilia about his career, Bradley believes versatility has been his helpmate as much as ability.

"I don't know that I am good. But I can offer experience. I've been very lucky to play a wide variety of music: country, big band, rock 'n' roll, gospel.

"If I played one kind, I wouldn't have been around this long. If I was a rock 'n' roll specialist, they would not have needed me on other recordings that required different abilities."

He also plays other instruments, joking that "I play two in self-defense, the banjo and mandolin."

He says his biggest thrills are those indescribable moments when musicians combine for special sounds in the studio.

"When something magic happens, you get a tremendous high. You can't turn creativity off and on like water. I've enjoyed that several times with several artists where it was such a marvelous music experience that you felt something great happened."

Bradley feels that he is still getting better except for his rock 'n' roll playing.

"To do that, you have to go out and play it," he said. "And I play a certain style, rockabilly style, pretty good. But to go out and play like Van Halen and those guys, no, I'll never do that. But he'll never come here and play the guitar, the bass guitar, the banjo, the mandolin, the ukulele. So it's kind of a tradeoff.

"What you're buying if you buy me is experience and intonation and ability."

For parents entertaining the whole gang can be a real "bear" until you take the whole gang roller skating. Then it's fun for everyone!!

Beaufort Buccaneer Relishes Pirate Role

By Ruthie Pipkin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEAUFORT, N.C. — Nobody likes having a pirate on the block.

Captain Sinbad got evicted from his own back yard after some picky neighbors in Michigan protested about the 17-foot-high pirate boat he was building there.

Even the Coast Guard stirred up trouble after spotting his twin-masted vessel — complete with six cannons, knee-shakingly high crow's nests and the skull and crossbones of the Jolly Roger — about 90 miles off the New Jersey shore. Against the captain's wishes, the stubborn sea patrollers insisted on boarding for a safety inspection, admitting only after combing the 36-foot-long brigantine that they'd wrongly suspected the pirate of running drugs.

And here in Beaufort, the peaceful coastal town where the buccaneer dropped anchor in 1972, people sometimes snicker when Captain Sinbad calls his female first mate Mr. Brown, in keeping with pirate lore.

To ordinary-minded outsiders, it doesn't make sense. And so the world continues throwing rocks at Ross Morphew's fragile fantasy.

But the 45-year-old son of a Detroit auto engineer who traded his original name for Captain Sinbad and his middle-class upbringing for a life of piracy learned long ago not to flinch.

"My mother says, 'My poor son reached the age of 12 and never went beyond it,'" Captain Sinbad said.

Who is this man whose very soul seems to center around a charade of another time?

His white hair is trapped in a short, neat braid, pulled back from a sun-blushed face that somehow escaped the leather curse that 23 years on a boat might bring. The pocket full of phony gold doubloons inside his white pirate's costume cast him more as the swashbuckling hero of a Walt Disney movie than a sea robber lusting for women and rum.

"People have a certain apprehension," Captain Sinbad says. "I try and show right away that I'm harmless."

Then it happens. Some unsuspecting landlubber sets a wobbly tennis shoe on Captain Sinbad's hand-crafted pirate ship and, trying to sound nautical, calls the captain Matey.

"Never call me Matey," Captain Sinbad barks, barring the gold-trimmed teeth that testify to the pirate's love of gold. "If you call me Matey again, I will have you flogged. It is Captain, or Sir."

But he can't mask the mirth hiding beneath his scorn and soon pushes even newcomers into active duty as he prepares to set sail. Captain Sinbad stands in the stern shouting orders through a brass speaking trumpet.

"Mr. Brown," he says, sounding slightly muffled.

From the ankles up, Lt. Terry Brown might have belonged to any boat, dressed in practical deck clothes and a plaited pony tail. But the brass buckles tied to her Topsiders give her allegiance away.

The lieutenant turns, plants her knuckles on her forehead in a pirate's act of servitude and smiles self-consciously.

"All square?" the captain asks.

"Well, we need to coil one more line," she says.

"Coil down."

Before the day ends, Captain Sinbad will attack a fat tour boat slowly cruising the waterfront, where his cannon fire will draw smiles and excited waves; he'll send a high-spirited visitor climbing to the crow's nest when his sword swings perilously close to the fleeing man's behind; he'll offer a round of grog — soft drinks or beer — from a cooler hidden inside a barrel marked scuttlebutt, and pretend to force a willing guest to walk an improvised plank.

"I've got an extremely vivid imagination," Captain Sinbad says. "The only way I've been able to keep it is to be isolated, to remain on the fringes."

How did he get from middle-class Michigan to Treasure Island?

At age 16, Ross Morphew followed his childhood fascination with swashbucklers to the British West Indies, where he learned sea sense the hard way and later picked up his adopted name. No matter that Sinbad was a character from the Arabian Knights — they would share the common thread of adventure.

But first his parents succeeded in getting their waterlogged son home to finish high school, where all the algebraic formulas in Michigan couldn't flush the salt out of his brain.

Too soon, he was building the boat that would blow into the zoning war. The Meka II — the name means stout and loyal companion in Hopi Indian — looks like she could have sailed past sea monsters and singing mermaids in the days when the world was still considered flat.

Actually, Captain Sinbad chartered waters in Florida and the Virgin Islands before settling in Beaufort. There he met Lt. Brown, who recently quit dishing out hush puppies and fried shrimp at a local restaurant to spend more time scrubbing, oiling, repairing and painting on board. "Pirating isn't cheap," Captain Sinbad says, explaining it costs about $68 an hour to run the Meka II.

Sometimes that forces the pirate to abandon ship and costume and slip into mainstream society for work at a local machine shop or boat yard. This summer, Captain Sinbad will also take hostages for two-hour sails (bounty is $25 a head) and teach youngsters how to build small boats in cooperation with the N.C. Maritime Museum in Beaufort.

But Captain Sinbad sees the romanticism dying in his adopted town. He says one day folks will lose tolerance for cannons firing in the harbor and drive him out. May be he's just showing battle scars from his Michigan scuffles, or may be he knows a pirate returns to the rolling sea.

Former ECU Student Jeanne Piland Sang With Santa Fe Opera

Mezzo-soprano Jeanne Piland, who studied voice with Gladys White in the School of Music, East Carolina University, was one of the star performers in the 1989 summer season of the Santa Fe, New Mexico Opera Company.

This was her first season with the famed Southwest company.

During July and August, Miss Piland sang the dual roles of Octavian and Count Rofrano in the early 20th century masterpiece comedy opera, "Der Rosenkavalier" with music by Richard Strauss and libretto by Hugo von Hofsmansthal.

The dual role of Octavian and Count Rofrano is generally considered to be one of the most demanding soprano challenges in the world of opera. Of her performance, Marc Shulgold, music critic of the Rocky Mountain News, wrote: "The Octavian of Jeanne Piland was a dramatic wonder: complex, sympathetic, funny, believable. Vocally, she was captivating, revealing no weaknesses through the long, demanding score. The demands of the trouser role, in which she must occasionally 'disguise' herself as a female, were met in a remarkably restrained performance."

Since studying at ECU, Miss Piland has preimarily based her career in Europe. She has sung with German opera companies in Dusseldorf and Hamburg, with the Zurich, Switzerland opera and with the Vienna, Austria opera.

In 1981, she made her debut at the La Scala Opera in Milan, Italy as Cherubino in "The Marriage of Figaro."

In America, Miss Piland has performed with opera companies in New York City, St. Paul, Baltimore and Cincinnati. Plans are now being made for a concert performance of "Rienzi" at Carnegie Hall.

Anonyma In New Deli Concert

The FolkArts Society of Greenville will present its second concert of the Fall '89 season with the appearance of Anonyma, a British duo who sing original compositions accompanied by synthesizers and guitars. They will appear at he New Deli on Tuesday at 9 p.m.

Anonyma is the combined talents of Anne Lister and Mary McLaughlin. Their music is a mixture of traditional music from the British Isles with more contemporary material and arrangements.

Anne Lister is best known as a songwriter. She plays guitar and synthesizer and has performed on her own and with various other musicians before teaming up with Mary in 1984.

Mary McLaughlin is an accompanist best known for her ability to sing inventive, haunting counter melodies and harmonies. A lead vocalist as well, she uses the synthesizer for texture behind the songs.

In the five years the two have worked together, they have traveled extensively around Britain. They are currently on their second tour of the United States.

They have released an album, Burnt Feathers.

Admission to the New Deli concert will be $4 for members of the FolkArts Society and $5 for non-members.

For more information contact Laura Lloyd at 756-4315.

Wearing Helmets Keeps You Safe

In 1970 there were only 56.5 million bicycles in use in the United States. Today that number has nearly doubled to almost 111 million bicycles. An increase in injuries and deaths has accompanied the rise in bicycle popularity. This safe bicycle rider sits more than 12 feet in the air, a bicycle helmet protects him from head injuries.

Q Recently we had a young woman from one of our local TV stations appear nude in "Playboy" magazine. This resulted in her being fired. I've heard that lots of women who've posed in the nude have paid the same penalty. My question: Does appearing nude in a magazine usually help or hurt a woman in her career or in establishing a career?—Michael Thomas, Phoenix, Ariz.

DorasioSygma

Kim Basinger, whose career took off after taking off

A It varies from case to case. The late Marilyn Monroe's modeling career was nothing until she began posing in the nude. Suddenly it took off rocketlike, launching her to screen stardom. "Playboy" executives point out that actress Kim Basinger, stockbroker Marina Verola, church assistant Jessica Hahn and dozens of the magazine's models have earned money, publicity and opportunity by posing artistically in the nude or seminude. On the other hand, there are hundreds of young women who have reaped relatively little pay or publicity by posing in the buff for publications of prurient content.

Q After the great actor Laurence Olivier died in July, many newspapers carried the words "Good Night, Sweet Prince" over his photo. Where does that quotation come from? I'm embarrassed at not knowing, so I will just leave my initials.—H.J., Hanscomb Air Force Base, Mass.

A "Good night, sweet prince, And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!" is a line from "Hamlet." In the Shakespeare play, the line is spoken by Horatio to the dead Hamlet. Olivier's portrayal of Hamlet on stage and screen was considered one of his most memorable. His screen performance in 1948 won him an Oscar as Best Actor.

Q I know now that he has been popular for years, but I've just "discovered" Mel Gibson of "Lethal Weapon" and its sequel. For those of us who've just tuned in on him, may we have the briefest of rundowns, including his age, height and family background?—M.F.T., Madisonville, Ky.

A Mel Gibson was born in Peekskill, N.Y., on Jan. 3, 1956, the sixth of 11 children. His father, the son of a former Australian opera singer, was a brakeman on the New York Central Railroad. Fearful that his older sons might be drafted into the U.S. Army and shipped overseas to fight in Vietnam, Gibson's father emigrated to Sydney, Australia, with his brood when Mel was 12. It was there that Mel's sister submitted an application in his name to the National Institute of Dramatic Art. Although he had no original intention of becoming an actor, Gibson was accepted by NIDA and, following graduation, joined the State Theater Company of South Australia. He learned the rudiments of stage and screen acting, hit it lucky in several Australian films—"Mad Max," "Tim" and "Gallipoli"—and thereby came to the attention of Hollywood.

Gibson weighs 160, is 5 feet 10, wears lifts when playing opposite tall actresses (like Sigourney Weaver in "The Year of Living Dangerously"). He has dark hair, blue eyes, is endowed with star magic and, since the box-office success of "Lethal Weapon 2," is said to be worth $10 million and up per picture. He and his wife, Robyn Moore, a former nurse, have five children and divide their time between Australia and California. Although Gibson regards himself as an "Aussie," he retains his U.S. citizenship.

Mel got a lift working with Weaver on Living Dangerously

Q Was Caspar Weinberger, Ronald Reagan's Secretary of Defense and now publisher of "Forbes" magazine, ever married to a lady named Janet Morgan?—C. Patrick, Cambridge, Mass.

A Caspar Weinberger has never been married to a Janet Morgan. His only wife, to date, is the former Jane Dalton.

AP/Wide World

Weinberger with his only wife, Jane, married 47 years

Q To whom are the White House correspondents referring when they refer to "the Mexican Jumping Bean" and "the Silver Fox"?—Bill Owen, Zephyr Cove, Nev.

A President George Bush, who is hyperactive, frequently is compared to a Mexican jumping bean, and First Lady Barbara Bush, known for her white hair and comforting wisdom, is sometimes called "the Silver Fox."

Q Is it true that the late comedienne Lucille Ball was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor?—Tina Kaufman, Camden, N.J.

A No. You obviously have confused the Medal of Honor, a military award, with the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian award. The Presidential Medal of Freedom was established in 1963 by John F. Kennedy to continue and expand Presidential recognition of meritorious service. On July 6, Lucille Ball was posthumously awarded a Presidential Medal of Freedom by George Bush. It was accepted at the White House by her husband, Gary Morton.

Miss America of 1989, who steps down next weekend, tells what the experience has meant to her

Timothy White

AP/Wide World

THIS YEAR HAS CHANGED ME

By Gretchen Carlson

THIS IS MY LAST SUNDAY AS MISS AMERICA. UNLIKE Cinderella, my clothes won't turn to rags and my coach into a pumpkin when my "reign" comes to an end next Saturday at midnight, but there will be a definite change in the life I lead—though not in my plans and aspirations.

For me, being Miss America has been a tremendously exciting, satisfying and broadening experience. I feel as if I have accomplished certain things for myself, for the pageant and for the causes in which I believe. I like to think that I've really grown in the job. I've become more self-aware. I've developed new communication skills. I've learned to get along with all types of people. I'm certainly more flexible and much more patient than I used to be.

Being Miss America is a very unpredictable job. You have to learn to enjoy the different situations and surroundings you're put into. Miss Americas make about 200 appearances a year—everything from celebrating International Pancake Day in the town of Liberal, Kan., to participating in sophisticated corporate gatherings in New York. You're on the go all the time, so you have to learn to be adaptable. You have to expect the unexpected: It seems to me that almost every day I discovered I was scheduled to make a speech I knew nothing about.

I also learned a great many things about America. I come of Swedish ancestry, with parents very involved in church affairs. They've often traveled abroad on church trips throughout Europe and the Middle East, and they always took their children—my two brothers, my sister and myself. So until I won the Miss America crown in Atlantic City, N.J., last September, I'd really traveled more abroad than in the United States.

COVER PHOTOGRAPH BY TIMOTHY WHITE

But I've never been ashamed of my patriotic feelings, and now I can say more than ever that I know what a great country and people we are. You really see a cross section of people of all ages and both genders, and it's fascinating to talk with them.

I suppose every Miss America has a special appeal to different categories of people, and I'm no exception. For instance, I noticed that in my case I seemed to be of particular interest to four groups:

• Short people. I'm 5 feet 3 and weigh 108 pounds, which makes me one of the smallest Miss Americas. (The first one, Margaret Gorman, who won in 1921, was 5 feet 1.) Lots of people seem to expect Miss America to be tall and "queenly." In fact, even my grandfather expressed doubt whether I had a chance because of my height.

But I've never found that being short was a disadvantage. I never felt bad about my height. In fact, half of the women in America are considered "petite"—that is, they're under 5 feet 4 inches. So, all of you small girls, take heart! Of course Miss America should be short!

• Scandinavian people. I'm of 100 percent Swedish descent—although that doesn't prevent my favorite food from being Japanese sushi. My hometown, Anoka, Minn., has many people of Swedish ancestry. I remember that when we were children, our grandparents always spoke Swedish when they didn't want us to understand something they were saying to our parents. Anyhow, on my Miss America tours, I found that quite often people of Swedish or other Scandinavian backgrounds were in the audience.

• People interested in education. Education is a major interest of mine. I always enjoyed school. My philosophy of life is to go all-out for whatever you do, and that includes schoolwork. The more educated you become, the more ignorant you realize you are. So it's a never-ending challenge. I believe that we're too lax with our educational requirements and that it will take more than money to solve our school problems—it will take concern and dedication. I guess many people share my belief in the need for education improvement; at least, many of them have told me so during my tours.

• Musicians. I play the violin and have been doing so since the age of 6. I originally wanted to be a pianist, but the teacher told my parents that my hands were too small. In the talent segment of the Miss America competition, I played Sarasate's Gypsy Airs—or at least a portion of it, since the time allotment didn't permit me to play it all. And, of course, on my Miss America appearances, I often get to play the violin.

Music is important to me; it isn't just a recreation. I have perfect pitch, and I've studied hard. I was taken twice, at ages 10 and 14, to play for Isaac Stern, who is a wonderful man and humanitarian as well as a great musician, while he was visiting Minneapolis. He was very encouraging. In fact, I hear that when he learned I'd won Miss America, he said, "I'm glad she's still playing the fiddle!"

I had an opportunity to go to The Juilliard School in New York on a scholarship, and I considered it seriously. But I finally turned it down because I simply felt I couldn't bring to music the complete dedication I would need to succeed. I felt it was simply too constricting, too competitive, and that I was into too many other things to give them all up. I've never regretted my decision, but I have to admit there are days when I still think about it and wonder a little. But I love music and always will. I learned discipline from music, and I have applied it to other things in my life. I always enjoy listening to music and meeting other musicians. It distresses me that fine arts always is the first thing they cut in school budgets. I'm going to fight that.

I'd like to say a word, if I may, about the Miss America competition itself. I think anyone who thinks it is in any way demeaning to women is simply misinformed. I think we have to get rid of our stereotypes and see the difference between out-and-out beauty contests and the Miss America Pageant, which showcases talent, gives awards in the form of scholarships and depends largely on the help of volunteers all over the country.

Through the years, the Miss America Pageant has reflected the changing status of women in society through the contestants who choose to participate. The contestants nowadays aren't beauty queens; they're women of today. They're intelligent, independent and want to succeed as individuals. Our whole nation has grown increasingly competitive over the years; women especially so. Thirty years ago, winning Miss America would have been an end in itself. Now it's a step to other things. I know that for myself it's just part of the path to my career.

What is that career? Well, before I began to prepare for the Miss America Pageant, I was at Stanford University majoring in organizational behavior. Now I want to complete my degree there and go on to law school. I plan to apply to Harvard Law, among others; I was raised in the Midwest, attended college in the West and now would like to attend law school in the East. That would really make me a Miss America!

But right now I'm getting ready for my last week and am preparing for my role in crowning Miss America of 1990. It has certainly been a wonderful year for me, and I'm sure it will be the same for her. I wish her the best of luck. And I wonder how tall she is going to be!

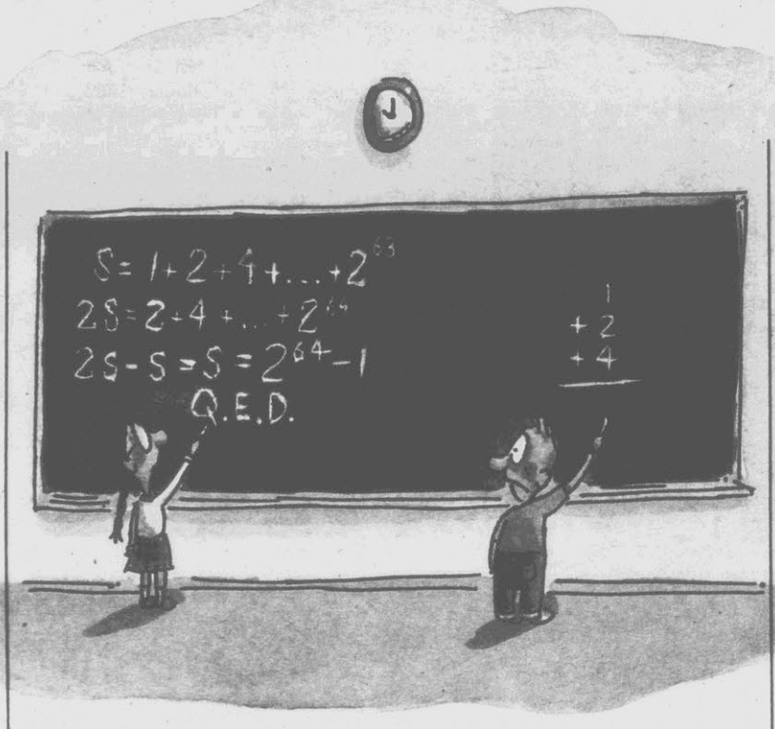
Phyllis George is shown when she was crowned as Miss America of 1971. She'll act as co-host with Gary Collins of this year's pageant, telecast nationwide on Saturday night.

Over the years, the pageant has reflected the changing status of women in American society

America's getting an F in science and math. So what? So plenty.

Why We Need To Understand Science



Ignorance of science threatens our economic well-being, national security and the democratic process. We must do better.

AS I GOT OFF THE plane, he was waiting for me, holding up a sign with my name on it. I was on my way to a conference of scientists and TV broadcasters, and the organizers had kindly sent a driver.

"Do you mind if I ask you a question?" he said as we waited for my bag. "Isn't it confusing to have the same name as that science guy?"

It took me a moment to understand. Was he pulling my leg? "I am that science guy," I said. He smiled. "Sorry. That's my problem. I thought it was yours too." He put out his hand. "My name is William F. Buckley." (Well, his name wasn't exactly William F. Buckley, but he did have the name of a contentious TV interviewer, for which he doubtless took a lot of good-natured ribbing.)

As we settled into the car for the long drive, he told me he was glad I was "that science guy"—he had so many questions to ask about science. Would I mind? And so we got to talking. But not about science. He wanted to discuss UFOs, "channeling" (a way to hear what's on the minds of dead people—not much it turns out), crystals, astrology... He introduced each subject with real enthusiasm, and each time I had to disappoint him: "The evidence is crummy," I kept saying. "There's a much simpler explanation." As we drove on through the rain, I could see him getting glummer. I was attacking not just pseudoscience but also a facet of his inner life.

And yet there is so much in real science that's equally exciting, more mysterious, a greater intellectual challenge—as well as being a lot closer to the truth. Did he know about the molecular building blocks of life sitting out there in the cold, tenuous gas between the stars? Had he heard of the footprints of our ancestors found in 4-million-year-old volcanic ash? What about the raising of the Himalayas when India went crashing into Asia? Or how viruses subvert cells, or the radio search for extraterrestrial intelligence or the ancient civilization of Ebla? Mr. "Buckley"—well-spoken, intelligent, curious—had heard virtually nothing of modern science. He wanted to know about science. It's just that all the science got filtered out before it reached him. What the society permitted to trickle through was mainly pretense and confusion. And it had never taught him how to distinguish real science from the cheap imitation.

Carl Sagan

All over America there are smart, even gifted, people who have a built-in passion for science. But that passion is unrequited. A recent survey suggests that 94% of Americans are "scientifically illiterate."

A prescription for disaster. We live in a society exquisitely dependent on science and technology, in which hardly anyone knows anything about science and technology. This is a clear prescription for disaster. It's dangerous and stupid for us to remain ignorant about global warming, say, or ozone depletion, toxic and radioactive wastes, acid rain. Jobs and wages depend on science and technology. If the United States can't manufacture, at high quality and low price, products people want to buy, then industries will drift out of the United States and transfer a little prosperity to another part of the world. Because of the low birthrate in the '60s and '70s, the National Science Foundation projects a shortage of nearly a million professional scientists and engineers by 2010. Where will they come from? What about fusion, supercomputers, abortion, massive reductions in strategic weapons, addiction, high-resolution TV, airline and airport safety, food additives, animal rights, superconductivity, Midgetman vs. rail-garrison MX missiles, going to Mars, finding cures for AIDS and cancer? How can we decide national policy if we don't understand the underlying issues?

I know that science and technology are not just cornucopias pouring good deeds out into the world. Scientists not only conceived nuclear weapons; they also took political leaders by the lapels, arguing that their nation—whichever it happened to be—had to have one first. Then they arranged to manufacture 60,000 of them. Our technology has produced thalidomide, CFCs, Agent Orange, nerve gas and industries so powerful they can ruin the climate of the planet. There's a reason people are nervous about science and technology.

And so the image of the mad scientist haunts our world—from Dr. Faust to Dr. Frankenstein to Dr. Strangelove to the white-coated loonies of Saturday morning children's TV. (All this doesn't inspire budding scientists.) But there's no way back. We can't just conclude that science puts too much power into the hands of morally feeble technologists or corrupt, power-crazed politicians and decide to get rid of it. Advances in medicine and agriculture have saved more lives than have been lost in all the wars in history. Advances in transportation, communication and entertainment have transformed the world. The sword of science is double-edged. Rather, its awesome power forces on all of us, including politicians, a new responsibility—more attention to the long-term consequences of technology, a global and transgenerational perspective, an incentive to avoid easy appeals to nationalism and chauvinism. Mistakes are becoming too expensive.

Science is much more than a body of knowledge. It is a way of thinking. This is central to its success. Science invites us to let the facts in, even when they don't conform to our preconceptions. It counsels us to carry alternative hypotheses in our heads and see which best match the facts. It urges on us a fine balance between no-holds-barred openness to new ideas, however heretical, and the most rigorous skeptical scrutiny of everything—new ideas and established wisdom. We need wide appreciation of this kind of thinking. It works. It's an essential tool for a democracy in an age of change. Our task is not just to train more scientists but also to deepen public understanding of science.

How bad is it? Very bad. "It's Official," reads one newspaper headline: "We Stink in Science." Less than half of all Americans know that the Earth moves around the Sun and takes a year to do it—a fact established a few centuries ago. In tests of average 17-year-olds in many world regions, the U.S. ranked dead last in algebra. On identical tests, the U.S. kids averaged 43% and their Japanese counterparts 78%. In my book, 78% is pretty good—it corresponds to a C+, or maybe even a B−; 43% is an F. In a chemistry test, students in only two of 13 nations did worse than the U.S. Compared to us, Britain, Singapore and Hong Kong were so high they were almost off-scale, and 25% of Canadian 18-year-olds knew just as much chemistry as a select 1% of American high school seniors (in their second chemistry course, and most of them in "advanced" programs). The best of 20 fifth-grade classrooms in Minneapolis was outpaced by every one of 20 classrooms in Sendai, Japan, and 19 out of 20 in Taipei, Taiwan. South Korean students were far ahead of American students in all aspects of mathematics and science, and 13-year-olds in British Columbia (in Western Canada) outpaced their U.S. counterparts across the boards (in some areas they did better than the Koreans). Of the U.S. kids, 22% say they dislike school; only 8% of the Koreans do. Yet two-thirds of the Americans, but only a quarter of the Koreans, say they are "good at mathematics."

Why we're flunking. How do British Columbia, Japan, Britain and Korea manage so much better than we do?

During the Great Depression, teachers enjoyed job security, good salaries, respectability. Teaching was an admired profession, partly because learning was widely recognized as the road out of poverty. Little of that is true today. And so science (and other) teaching is too often incompetently or uninspiringly done, its practitioners, astonishingly, having little or no training in their subjects—sometimes themselves unable to distinguish science from pseudoscience. Those who do have the training often get higher-paying jobs elsewhere.

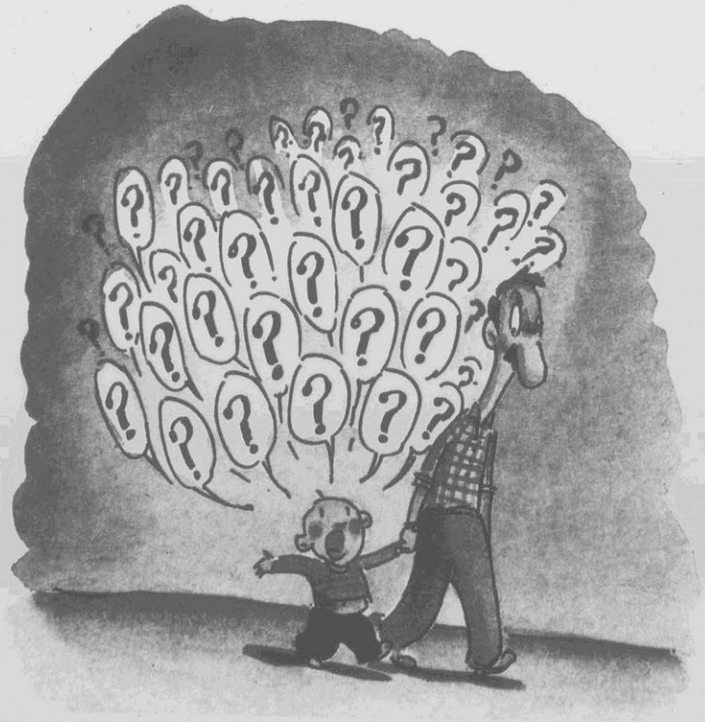
We need more money for teachers' training and salaries, and for laboratories—so kids will get hands-on experience rather than just reading what's in the book. But all across America, school-bond issues on the ballot are regularly defeated. U.S. parents are much more satisfied with what their children are learning in science and math than are, say, Japanese and Taiwanese parents—whose children are doing so much better. No one suggests that property taxes be used to provide for the military budget, or for agriculture, or for cleaning up toxic wastes. Why just education? Why not support it from general taxes on the local and state levels? What about a special education tax for those industries with special needs for technically trained workers?



American kids don't do enough schoolwork. The average high school student spends 3.5 hours a week on homework. The total time devoted to studies, in and out of the classroom, is about 20 hours a week. Japanese fifth-graders average 33 hours a week.

But most American kids aren't stupid. Part of the reason they don't study hard is that they've received few tangible benefits when they do. Competency (that is, actually knowing the stuff) in verbal skills, mathematics and science these days doesn't increase earnings for average young men in their first eight years out of high school—many of whom take service rather than industrial jobs.

In the productive sectors of the economy, though, the story is different. There are furniture factories, for example, in danger of going out of business—not because there are no customers but because few entry-level workers can do simple arithmetic. A major electronics company reports that 80% of its job applicants can't pass a fifth-grade math test—and that's an American, not a Korean, fifth-grade test. The United States already is losing some $25 billion a year (mainly in lost productivity and the cost of remedial education) because workers, to too great a degree, can't read, write, count or think. Parents should know that their children's livelihoods may depend on how much math and science they know. Now, while the kids are in school, is the time for them to learn. Parents might encourage their schools to offer—and their kids to take—comprehensible, well-taught advanced science courses. They might also limit the amount of mind-numbing TV their children watch.

What we can do. Those in America with the most favorable view of science tend to be young, well-to-do, college-educated white males. But three-quarters of new American workers between now and 2001 will be women, nonwhites and immigrants. Discriminating against them isn't only unjust, it's also self-defeating. It deprives the American economy of desperately needed skilled workers.

Black and Hispanic students are doing better in standardized science tests now than in the late 1960s, but they're the only ones who are. The average math gap between white and black U.S. high school graduates is still huge—two to three grade levels; but the gap between white U.S. high school graduates and those in, say, Japan, Canada, Great Britain or Finland is more than twice as big. If you're poorly motivated and poorly educated, you won't know much—no mystery here. Suburban blacks with college-educated parents do just as well in college as suburban whites with college-educated parents. Enrolling a poor child in a Head Start program doubles his or her chances to be employed later in life; one who completes an Upward Bound program is four times as likely to get a college education. If we're serious, we know what to do.

What about college and university? There are obvious steps similar to what should be done in high schools: salaries for teachers that approach what they could get in industry; more scholarships, fellowships and laboratory equipment; laboratory science courses required of everyone to graduate; and special attention paid to those traditionally steered away from science. We should also provide the financial and moral encouragement for academic scientists to spend more time on public education—lectures, newspaper and magazine articles, TV appearances. This requires scientists to make themselves understandable and fun to listen to. To me, it seems strange that some scientists, who depend on public funding for their research, are reluctant to explain to the public what it is that they do. Fortunately, the number of scientists willing to speak to the public—and capably—has been increasing each year. But there are not yet nearly enough.

Virtually every newspaper in America has a daily astrology column. How many have a daily science column? When I was growing up, my father would bring home a daily paper and consume (often with great gusto) the baseball box scores. There they were, to me dry as dust, with obscure abbreviations (W, SS, SO, W-L, AB, RBI), but they spoke to him. Newspapers everywhere printed them. I figured maybe they weren't too hard for me. Eventually I too got caught up in the world of baseball statistics. (I know it helped me in learning decimals, and I still cringe a little when I hear that someone is "batting a thousand." But 1.000 is not 1,000. The lucky player is batting one.)

Or take a look at the financial pages. Any introductory material? Explanatory footnotes? Definitions of abbreviations? None. It's sink or swim. Look at those acres of statistics! Yet people voluntarily read the stuff. It's not beyond their ability. It's only a matter of motivation. Why can't we do the same with math, science and technology?

By far the most effective means of raising interest in science is television. There's lots of pseudoscience on TV, a fair amount of medicine and technology, but hardly any science—especially on the three big commercial networks, whose executives think science programming means ratings declines and lost profits, and nothing else matters. Why in all America is there no TV drama that has as its hero someone devoted to figuring out how the Universe works?

Stirring projects in science and technology attract and inspire youngsters. The number of science Ph.D.s peaked around the time of the Apollo program and declined thereafter. This is an important potential side-effect of such projects as sending humans to Mars, or the Superconducting Supercollider to explore the fine structure of matter, or the program to map all human genes.

Every now and then, I'm lucky enough to teach a class in kindergarten or the first grade. Many of these children are curious, intellectually vigorous, ask provocative and insightful questions and exhibit great enthusiasm for science. When I talk to high school students, I find something different. They memorize "facts." But, by and large, the joy of discovery, the life behind those facts, has gone out of them. They're worried about asking "dumb" questions; they're willing to accept inadequate answers; they don't pose follow-up questions; the room is awash with sidelong glances to judge, second-by-second, the approval of their peers. Something has happened between first and 12th grade, and it's not just puberty. I'd guess that it's partly peer pressure not to excel (except in sports); partly that the society teaches short-term gratification; partly the impression that science or math won't buy you a sports car; partly that so little is expected of students; and partly that there are so few role models for intelligent discussion of science and technology or for learning for its own sake.

But there's something else: Many adults are put off when youngsters pose scientific questions. Children ask why the Sun is yellow, or what a dream is, or how deep you can dig a hole, or when is the world's birthday or why we have toes. Too many teachers and parents answer with irritation or ridicule, or quickly move on to something else. Why adults should pretend to omniscience before a 5-year-old, I can't for the life of me understand. What's wrong with admitting that you don't know? Children soon recognize that somehow this kind of question annoys many adults. A few more experiences like this, and another child has been lost to science.

There are many better responses. If we have an idea of the answer, we could try to explain. If we don't, we could go to the encyclopedia or the library. Or we might say to the child: "I don't know the answer. Maybe no one knows. Maybe when you grow up, you'll be the first to find out."

But mere encouragement isn't enough. We must also give children the tools to winnow the wheat from the chaff. I'm haunted by the vision of a generation of Americans unable to distinguish reality from fantasy, hopefully clutching their crystals for comfort, unequipped even to frame the right questions or to recognize the answers. I want us to rescue Mr. "Buckley" and the millions like him. I also want us to stop turning out leaden, incurious, unimaginative high school seniors. I think America needs, and deserves, a citizenry with minds wide awake and a basic understanding of how the world works.

Public understanding of science is more central to our national security than half a dozen strategic weapons systems. The submediocre performance of American youngsters in science and math, and the widespread adult ignorance and apathy about science and math, should sound an urgent alarm.

Carl Sagan teaches and does research at Cornell University. His Emmy and Peabody Award-winning TV science series COSMOS has been seen in more than 60 countries by 400 million people. Videocassettes of all 13 episodes will be available in stores later this year from Turner Home Entertainment. The accompanying book, "Cosmos," is the best-selling science book ever published in the English language.

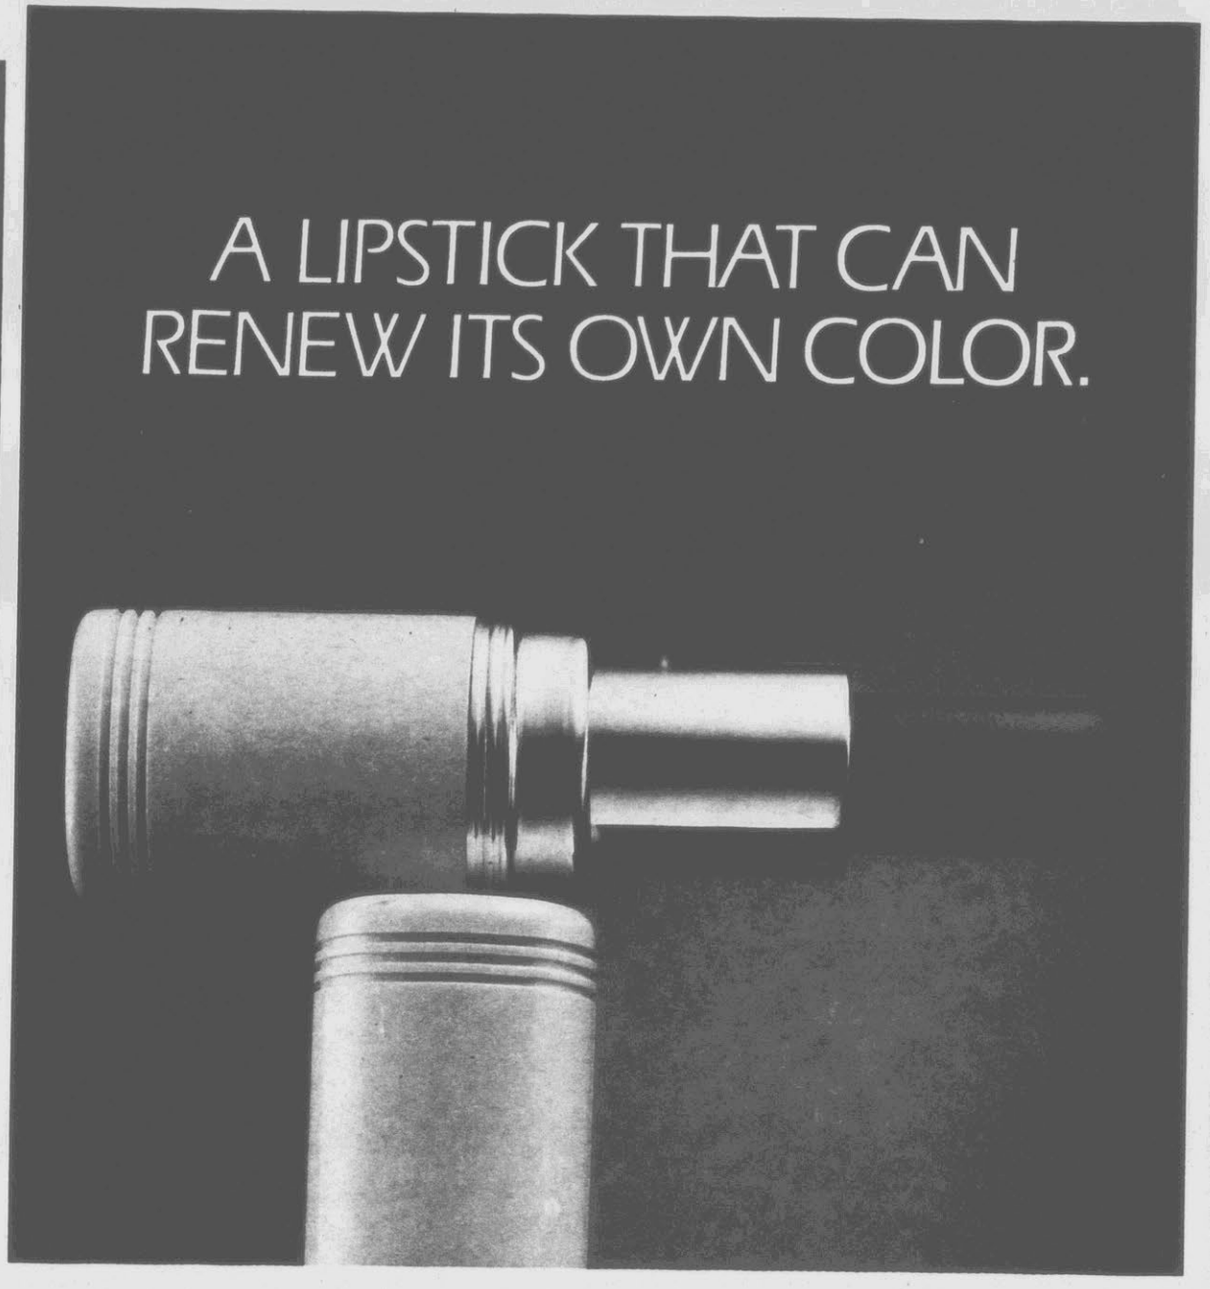
A time for healing: Willis and Lloyd

Bruce Willis wanted to get his part in In Country so badly, he was willing to audition for it, says producer Richard Roth. And no wonder. Based on Bobbie Ann Mason's book, this is the story of a 17-year-old Kentucky girl, Sam—played by British find Emily Lloyd—and her Uncle Emmett (Willis), who has never recovered from his experiences in Vietnam, where Sam's father was killed before she was born. Through their relationship, Sam tries to understand the war and get to know her father. And the movie—which takes place in 1984, just as the U.S. was beginning to come to terms with the war—is ultimately about healing. The book's ending, Roth says, made him cry. He hopes the movie will affect us as strongly. Warner.

Columbia

Bacon (l) with friend Michael McKean

• The Big Picture is a hilarious parody of the Hollywood scene, as a talented young director rises and falls and rises again. But Kevin Bacon, as the young hotshot whose raw ambition blinds him to everybody's needs but his own, gives us a guy we've all met somewhere, who could be in the fast lane anywhere. Columbia.



Now. A lipstick with color reserves—our color-trap system. Gives you hours of beautiful wear without re-applying.

As you wear it, the color looks continually refreshed, replenished, renewed. The color stays rich, with lasting shine that doesn't fade. Resists bleeding, too—no uneven, unsightly lips.

But there's more. Much more. Lots of luscious emollients make sure your lips never say dry. And with so many beautiful shades to choose from, you know you'll find your own perfect color.

Lasting Color. At long last.

POETS CORNERED

"When I tell you this series is about poetry, some of you are going to reach for the dial," says Bill Moyers at the beginning of Moyers: The Power of the Word. "Once upon a time, so would I," he goes on. "But then I discovered that love is like a red, red rose, and we are haunted by the road not taken...Poets told me these things. They told me what they felt about falling in love, leaving home, or seeing Magic Johnson do ballet with a basketball." On this series, Moyers brings on poets to talk about their work and read it. And whether you love poetry or never paid it any mind but want to learn more, these programs are full of pleasures for you. PBS.

Mothers and Daughters

The Joy Luck Club, Amy Tan's novel about immigrant Chinese mothers and their American daughters and their struggles with each other and the New World, was a sleeper hit. And the author is the perfect reader for her compelling story (Dove, $14.95).

Falling in love: Danson and Rossellini

One of September's best videos is Cousins, a warmhearted romance against a family background, starring Isabella Rossellini and Ted Danson, more appealing than you've ever seen him. Also try John Sayles' fresh and original Baby It's You, with Rosanna Arquette and Vincent Spano as teenagers from opposite sides of the tracks. And see Jacknife, with Robert De Niro and Ed Harris as Vietnam vets who struggle to deal with their memories, and Kathy Baker—who's going to be a big star one of these days—as Harris' sister and De Niro's love.

OLIVIER LIVES ON

Some of the greatest love stories of all time starred Laurence Olivier, who died in July, and all are available on video: Wuthering Heights, perhaps the actor's greatest romantic role, co-starring Merle Oberon (Nelson); Rebecca, co-starring Joan Fontaine (Key); Pride and Prejudice, co-starring Greer Garson (MGM/UA); and That Hamilton Woman, co-starring Vivien Leigh, Olivier's wife of 20 years (Nelson).

Also on video are Olivier's brilliant performances as Hamlet and Henry V (Paramount) and as Richard III (Nelson).

BOOKS

Success Story

John H. Johnson, publisher and founder of the first national and most successful black publication, Ebony (not to mention Jet and EM), is listed by Forbes magazine as one of the 400 wealthiest Americans.

In his autobiography, Succeeding Against the Odds (Warner/Amistad, $19.95), written with Lerone Bennett Jr., he tells of his life's journey from a poor boy in Arkansas to a welfare recipient during the Depression and, finally, to a formidable businessman who turned his interests in publishing, cosmetics and insurance into a $200 million empire.

Throughout, Johnson stresses the fact that if one believes in the American dream, one can overcome adversity and barriers, and succeed. The pervasive and compelling message of his book is that the dream still exists—and his life proves it.

RECORDINGS

Feinstein Takes New Tack

Café singer Michael Feinstein undertakes some surprising repertory in Over There, a compact disc (CD) issued by EMI/Angel. The 25 songs include such World War I stalwarts as "Oh! How I Hate To Get Up in the Morning" and "Keep the Home Fires Burning." Even more unexpected are a set of Cabaret Songs by Arnold Schoenberg and Three Early Songs by Kurt Weill. Feinstein sings them all in a straightforward, pleasing manner, and the piano accompaniments by Armen Guzelimian are equally direct and unpretentious.

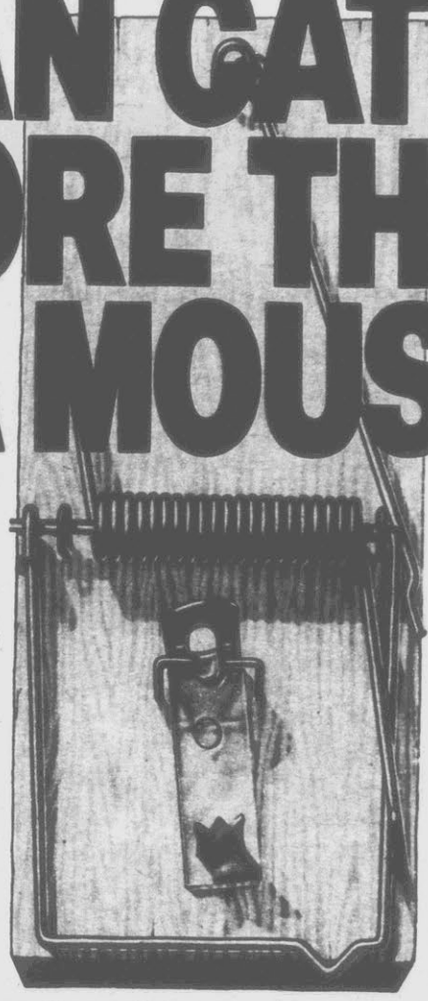
A TRAP CAN CATCH MORE THAN A MOUSE.

Lyme-disease tick
Magnified seven times



Mice can carry ticks that carry disease. Even dead mice.

When you pick up a trap, wherever it's been set, you may be picking up more than a dead mouse. There may also be disease-carrying ticks. And fleas. And mites. These parasites can carry serious diseases such as Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, Colorado Tick Fever, Tularemia, Typhus.

Recently, you may have read about Lyme-disease ticks carried by the white-footed field mouse. People bitten by the Lyme-disease tick can suffer temporary paralysis of the facial nerves, pain in the joints, and even severe neurological problems similar to multiple sclerosis.

So if you're a homeowner, be careful in your garage or in any barns or outbuildings you may have. While the mouse that carries Lyme-disease ticks has not been shown to enter homes, the ordinary mice found indoors can carry ticks that also may be as threatening.

Why use traps?

If a trap happens to catch a mouse, the only way for you to dispose of it is to go near it. And that may increase your risk of being exposed to ticks, fleas or mites that can remain alive—even on a dead mouse! Why take chances?

With d-CON bait products, you never go near a mouse.

If you have mice in your home, you'll feel more secure using d-CON bait products instead of traps.

All you do is set out the bait. Mice eat it, then leave and go off to die, without you ever having to touch them. Without you ever having to go near them. Or the ticks they can carry.

d-CON makes Mouse Prufe II—which can kill mice in just one feeding. d-CON also makes Ready Mixed and Pellets, which kill both mice and rats.

d-CON helps you in other ways.

We at d-CON understand that you might want more information about how to get rid of mice. Please write us at: d-CON, P.O. Box 4130-F, Westbury, NY 11592. We'll be happy to send you our brochure.

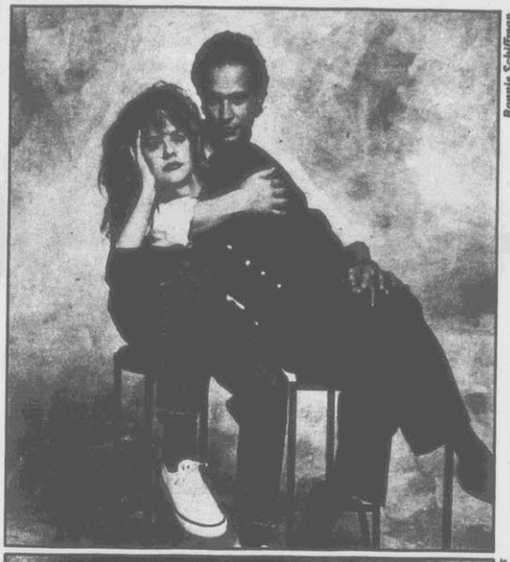
Hot Hollywood Summer



Bonnie Schiffman

Paramount Pictures

Two summer blockbusters were When Harry Met Sally, starring Meg Ryan and Billy Crystal (top), and the latest Indiana Jones, with Harrison Ford and Alison Doody

Before this summer is over, in another 10 days or so, the film industry will have shattered domestic box-office records by grossing more than $2 billion. Never before have so many summer blockbusters grossed so much money. The record is owing to the success of Batman, Lethal Weapon 2, Ghostbusters II, Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade, Dead Poets Society, When Harry Met Sally and Honey, I Shrunk the Kids.

Despite their profitability and popularity, it is highly doubtful that any of these motion pictures will win the prized Oscar for Best Picture of 1989 when Academy Awards voting time rolls around next March. Reason: All of these films were released before Aug. 1. According to Hollywood myth, two kinds of movies—comedies and summer releases, which are exhibited to attract out-of-school children—do not garner the votes of the middle-aged and elderly who constitute the majority membership of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. It's these "old folks," so the myth goes, who vote the Best Picture award to more serious film fare.

The major Hollywood studios are well aware of the custom and make it a point to release their most mature and so-called "quality productions" in the final quarter of the year. The practice not only takes advantage of the Christmas season but also conforms to Academy rules, which mandate that a film must be released before year's end if it's to be eligible for an Oscar.

Irony

In the past few years, China sent more than 40,000 of its best students to U.S. colleges to learn American ways and know-how. Now it has banned the sale in Beijing of U.S. newspapers and magazines to halt the spread of such diabolical American practices as democracy and private enterprise. To prevent ideological contamination from within, Communist leaders also advocate the restructuring of special political units in Chinese universities to reinforce the principles of Marxist education.

The Promised Land

Colberti/Picturesports

Soviet pianist Vladimir Feltsman and wife enjoy White House welcome after emigrating

If you were a Jewish citizen of the Soviet Union with the choice of emigrating to Israel or the United States, which would you select? Of the 20,162 Soviet Jews permitted to leave their native country in the first six months of 1989, only 613 chose to settle in Israel. Most of the others chose the United States.

According to Max Robinson, consul of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, about 36,000 Soviet citizens emigrated to the U.S. last year, 100,000 would like to depart this year, and 250,000 would be overjoyed to head for America in 1990. And those numbers constitute only the tip of the iceberg. If the Soviet authorities relax their emigration restrictions, the trickle of Soviet citizens to the U.S. will burgeon into a flood.

Irene Shapira, 27, a Moscow-based lawyer who serves on the executive staff of the Israel Friendship Association, which promotes the migration of European and Soviet Jews to Israel, says: "Based on my own experience, most Jewish people seeking to leave the Soviet Union want to go to America. But if they have no chance to do that, they will remain in Moscow or Leningrad."

In the throes of a deep business recession, at war with the Palestinians in the occupied territories and fighting internecine political battles, Israel, at this stage in its history, offers little prospect of peace and prosperity to those Jewish émigrés it so desperately needs. For them, the Promised Land is America.

Biographers Busy

Pete Rose, 48, colorful and controversial manager of the Cincinnati Reds baseball team—also allegedly an addictive gambler, a notorious lover and an unorthodox businessman—may go down in history as the subject of more biographies than any other ballplayer of his time. Three authors are hard at work preparing his life story for preservation in print. They are James Reston Jr., who's penning a Rose bio for Harper & Row; Roger Kahn, who's working with Rose on his autobiography for Macmillan; and Michael Sokolove, who's doing his Rose-thing for Simon & Schuster.

Common-Law Marriages Fading

There was a time in Colonial America when common-law marriage was recognized as legal virtually everywhere. A common-law marriage generally is one based not upon ceremony or compliance with legal formalities but upon the mutual agreement of two persons, legally competent to marry, to cohabit with the intention of being husband and wife.

Today there are only 13 states and the District of Columbia—each with its own provisions—wherein common-law marriage is held to be legal. They are Alabama, Colorado, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa and Kansas, as well as Montana, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina and Texas.

Two months ago, screen star William Hurt and New York Yankees outfielder Dave Winfield found themselves involved in messy common-law marriage suits. Sandra Jennings, a former ballerina, insisted she was Hurt's common-law wife and entitled to half his $10 million estate because she had lived with the actor for four weeks in South Carolina—where, she says, they considered themselves married—and she had borne him a son, now 6. Former flight attendant Sandra Renfro, mother of Winfield's 6-year-old daughter, charged in Texas that she was the ballplayer's common-law wife and wanted a divorce and the alimony that goes with it. A jury in Houston voted to recognize the common-law marriage, and the judge awarded Renfro $13,500 a month in temporary alimony and child support until the legal technicalities of the case were ironed out.

Experiment in Living

Trinity College of Cambridge University, founded by King Henry VIII in the 16th century, has been quietly conducting an experiment in coeducational living for the past three terms. It has permitted six young student couples of both sexes—some married and some not, some lovers and some friends—to share two-bedroom apartments on campus.

Apparently the experiment has been successful, since Trinity's administrators declared recently that all third-year students will be allowed to share quarters with students of the opposite sex. Queens' College, also at Cambridge, has considered following Trinity's experiment with one of its own, in which six of Queens' larger apartments would be prepared for occupancy by couples.

What My Daughter Taught Me About Love

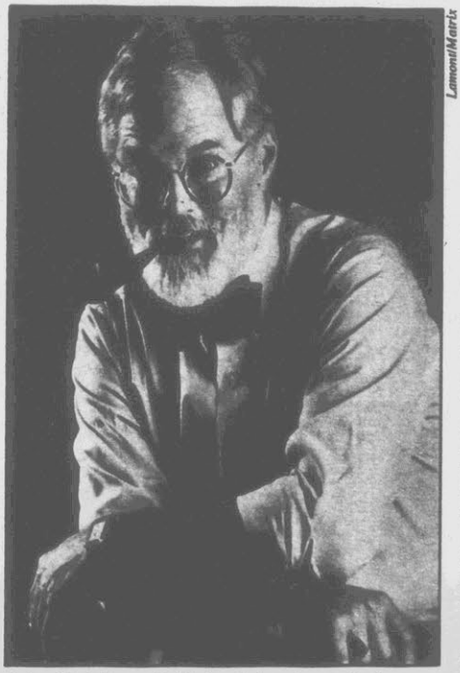
Robert Fulghum, author of the popular "All I Really Need To Know I Learned in Kindergarten," has written a new book of wry and moving observations on life. Titled "It Was On Fire When I Lay Down On It," the collection is published this month by Villard Books. Here, excerpted, are two pieces we especially liked.

THE CARDBOARD BOX IS MARKED "THE GOOD STUFF." As I write, I can see where it is stored on a high shelf in my studio. I like being able to see it when I look up. The box contains those odds and ends of personal treasures that have survived many bouts of clean-it-out-and-throw-it-away that seize me from time to time. It has passed through the screening done as I've moved from house to house and hauled stuff from attic to attic. A thief looking into the box would not take anything. But if the house ever catches on fire, the box goes with me when I run.

One of the keepsakes in the box is a small paper bag. Lunch size. Though the top is sealed with duct tape, staples and several paper clips, there is a ragged rip in one side through which the contents may be seen.

This particular lunch sack has been in my care for maybe 14 years. But it really belongs to my daughter, Molly. Soon after she came of school age, she became an enthusiastic participant in packing lunches for herself, her brothers and me. Each bag got a share of sandwiches, apples, milk money and sometimes a note or a treat. One morning, Molly handed me two bags. One regular lunch sack. And the one with the duct tape and staples and paper clips. "Why two bags?" "The other one is something else." "What's in it?" "Just some stuff—take it with you." Not wanting to hold court over the matter, I stuffed both sacks into my briefcase, kissed the child and rushed off.

"'Where's my bag?' Molly asked... 'You didn't lose the bag, did you, Daddy?' Tears puddled in her eyes. Uh-oh."



Lamont/Mairs

Robert Fulghum: He finds wisdom in small places

At midday, while hurriedly scarfing down my real lunch, I tore open Molly's bag and shook out the contents. Two hair ribbons, three small stones, a plastic dinosaur, a pencil stub, a tiny seashell, two animal crackers, a marble, a used lipstick, a small doll, two chocolate kisses and 13 pennies.

I smiled. How charming. Rising to hustle off to all the important business of the afternoon, I swept the desk clean, into the wastebasket—leftover lunch, Molly's junk and all. There wasn't anything in there I needed.

That evening, Molly came to stand beside me while I was reading the paper. "Where's my bag?" "What bag?" "You know, the one I gave you this morning." "I left it at the office, why?" "I forgot to put this note in it." She handed over the note. "Besides, I want it back." "Why?" "Those are my things in the sack, Daddy, the ones I really like. I thought you might like to play with them, but now I want them back. You didn't lose the bag, did you, Daddy?" Tears puddled in her eyes. "Oh, no, I just forgot to bring it home," I lied. "Bring it tomorrow, OK?" "Sure thing—don't worry." As she hugged my neck with relief, I unfolded the note that had not got into the sack: "I love you, Daddy."

Oh. And also—uh-oh.

I looked long at the face of my child.

She was right—what was in that sack was "something else." Molly had given me her treasures. All that a 7-year-old held dear. Love in a paper sack. And I had missed it. Not only missed it, but had thrown it away because "there wasn't anything in there I needed." Dear God.

"I think of all the times in this sweet life when I must have missed the affection I was being given"

It wasn't the first or the last time I felt my Daddy Permit was about to run out.

It was a long trip back to the office. But there was nothing else to be done. So I went. The pilgrimage of a penitent. Just ahead of the janitor, I picked up the wastebasket and poured the contents on my desk. I was sorting it all out when the janitor came in to do his chores. "Lose something?" "Yeah, my mind." "It's probably in there, all right. What's it look like, and I'll help you find it." I started not to tell him. But I couldn't feel any more of a fool than I was already in fact, so I told him. He didn't laugh. "I got kids too." So the brotherhood of fools searched the trash and found the jewels, and he smiled at me and I smiled at him. You are never alone in these things. Never.

After washing the mustard off the dinosaur and spraying the whole thing with breath-freshener to kill the smell of onions, I carefully smoothed out the wadded ball of brown paper into a semifunctional bag and put the treasures inside and carried it home gingerly, like an injured kitten. The next evening, I returned it to Molly, no questions asked, no explanations offered. The bag didn't look so good, but the stuff was all there, and that's what counted. After dinner, I asked her to tell me about the stuff in the sack, and so she took it all out a piece at a time and placed the objects in a row on the dining-room table. It took a long time to tell. Everything had a story, a memory, or was attached to dreams and imaginary friends. Fairies had brought some of the things. And I had given her the chocolate kisses, and she had kept them for when she needed them. I managed to say "I see" very wisely several times in the telling. And, as a matter of fact, I did see.

To my surprise, Molly gave the bag to me once again several days later. Same ratty bag. Same stuff inside. I felt forgiven. And trusted. And loved. And a little more comfortable wearing the title of Father. Over several months, the bag went with me from time to time. It was never clear to me why I did or did not get it on a given day. I began to think of it as the Daddy Prize and tried to be good the night before so I might be given it the next morning.

In time Molly turned her attention to other things—found other treasures, lost interest in the game, grew up. Something. Me? I was left holding the bag. She gave it to me one morning and never asked for its return. And so I have it still.

Sometimes I think of all the times in this sweet life when I must have missed the affection I was being given. A friend calls this "standing knee-deep in the river and dying of thirst."

So the worn paper sack is there in the box. Left from a time when a child said, "Here—this is the best I've got—take it—it's yours. Such as I have, give I to thee."

I missed it the first time. But it's my bag now.

Fulghum's List

What I am about to say fits in someplace between the Ten Commandments and Murphy's Law.

God, you will recall, invited old Moses up on a tall mountain out in the desert and handed him a couple of solid gold memos with some powerful words on them. Commandments. God didn't say, "Here are 10 pretty good ideas, see what you think." Commandments. Do it or take the consequences.

Murphy, at the other extreme, was the ultimate, good-humored human cynic who said that no matter what you do, it's probably not going to work out very well anyhow. Some people think that Murphy was an optimist.

As a middle ground, I offer Fulghum's Recommendations. Items not touched on by God or Murphy, really. And neither as ironclad as the first 10 or as despairing as the endless variations on Murphy. Note that there are only nine in my list. I'm still working on the tenth. Or the eleventh, for that matter.

1. Buy lemonade from any kid who is selling.
2. Any time you can vote on anything, vote.
3. Attend the 25th reunion of your high school class.
4. Choose having time over having money.
5. Always take the scenic route.
6. Give at least something to any beggar who asks.
7. Give money to all street musicians.
8. Always be someone's valentine.
9. When the circus comes to town, be there.

THE ASHTON-DRAKE GALLERIES

"Little Red Riding Hood"

A Premiere Grade doll handcrafted of fine bisque porcelain

My, what big eyes she has! Soon, she'll exclaim similar words to the cunning wolf who will devour the goodies and more, until a kindly huntsman arrives to save the day. Through the skill of an extraordinary artist, we feel almost as if this brave little girl is really alive.

"Little Red Riding Hood" is the very first issue in the Heroines from the Fairy Tale Forests collection by Dianna Effner. Produced under the hallmark of the Edwin M. Knowles China Company, "Little Red Riding Hood" represents the centuries-old tradition of classic character dolls that so often become cherished family heirlooms.

Premiere Grade Rating, Plus Investment Potential

The Ashton-Drake Galleries has reviewed "Little Red Riding Hood" against The Uniform Grading Standards for Dolls—ten strict criteria used to evaluate artistry and quality. "Little Red Riding Hood's" hand-cast porcelain head, arms, and legs are skillfully hand-painted in lifelike colors. Her head is socket-jointed so that it may be turned from side to side or tilted up or down. The doll's Old-World costume features a crisp white blouse, a lace-edged petticoat, a plaid jumper, and a white apron embellished with embroidered trim. Finely-knit hose and removable shoes complete the costume, except for her wicker basket of "goodies": a tiny loaf of "bread" and a jar of homemade "pickles." Each doll is hand-numbered and comes with a matching numbered Certificate of Authenticity. These fine characteristics have helped "Little Red Riding Hood" earn the Grading Standards' highest rating—Premiere Grade.

Considering her Premiere Grade certification, and the fact that she is the first issue in a prestigious Knowles collection, "Little Red Riding Hood's" investment potential seems just as promising as these exceptional closed-edition Knowles dolls:

Doll	Year of Issue	Issue Price	Current Value*	Dollar Increase
Knowles "Jason"	1986	$48	$700	+$652
Knowles "Heather"	1987	$48	$300	+$252
Knowles "Little Bo Peep"	1987	$58	$150	+$92

*As reported in a June, 1989 survey of prominent doll dealers.

Your Satisfaction is Completely Guaranteed

You may, without hesitation and for any reason, return "Little Red Riding Hood" to us at any time within one full year after you receive her. We will refund (or credit your account if you pay by credit card) your full purchase price, including postage, with no questions asked.

"Little Red Riding Hood" can be yours to cherish for only $68.00. But act promptly...this collectible doll is issued in an edition that will close forever in 1989. Once closed, the mold will be destroyed and no more will ever be made, so order today.

GUIDE TO Better Fitness

BY MICHAEL O'SHEA, PH.D.

Clemens/Int'l Stock Photo

Choose a fit, knowledgeable instructor.

Q I plan to begin taking aerobics classes this fall. How can I find a good instructor?

A If possible, find an instructor who has been certified by a governing body such as the International Dance Exercise Association (IDEA) or the Aerobics and Fitness Association of America (AFAA). However, since the aerobics industry has yet to implement a uniform standard for certifying instructors nationwide, there may not be a certified teacher in your area. In that case, here are a few tips on what to look for:

- The instructor or the program director should require medical clearance for all participants.
- The instructor should be certified in CPR and first aid.
- The instructor should have a background in anatomy and kinesiology, the physiology of exercise, and the care and prevention of injuries.
- The instructor should encourage class members to work at their own levels and provide a noncompetitive environment.
- The instructor should be fit and motivated.
- The instructor should explain the benefits of each exercise.
- The instructor should demonstrate proper form for each movement, as well as modifications for special cases, beginning and advanced participants.
- The instructor should have students check their heart rates periodically.
- The instructor should use music that is appropriate for the movements during class, and the volume should not be so loud that instructions cannot be heard.
- The instructor should have the class organized so there is a smooth transition of exercises, as well as a flow from floor to standing positions.
- The instructor should be willing to stay after class to answer questions.

Q What are amino acids? Should I take them to supplement my diet?

A Amino acids are molecular groups that bond together in the body to form proteins. There are 20 naturally occurring amino acids. Amino acids are categorized as "nonessential" (those that the body can make) and "essential" (those that the body cannot make).

Since the body is not able to produce all of the necessary amino acids, the remainder must be obtained through diet. In meeting the body's need for amino acids, there is no reason to believe that taking supplements has any advantage over ingesting dietary protein.

However, the dietary supply of amino acids should come from "complete" proteins. Complete proteins are those that contain the essential amino acids in the same ratio that those proteins occur in the body. Incomplete proteins are those that are low in one or more amino acid and have limited support for protein synthesis. Sources of complete proteins are eggs, fish, poultry, meat and milk products. Incomplete proteins are foods such as beans, nuts and corn. Incomplete proteins may be mixed to form complete proteins. A popular mixture is corn and soybeans.

The best way to get your amino acids is a well-balanced diet. If you eat right, there is no need to take amino acid supplements.

"Don't just tell your kids to get better grades . . . give them the tool that makes it possible!" —John Ritter

AN OPEN LETTER TO PARENTS OF COLLEGE AND HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS FROM JOHN RITTER

Dear Parent:

Your child's grades are a lot more than just a letter on a piece of paper. They are the single most important measure by which your child will be judged . . . by prospective colleges, graduate schools . . . even the first employer after college. Class ranking is also determined solely by grades. In short, grades are critical.

But getting good grades can be a source of tremendous pressure and anxiety . . . and poor grades can result in frustration, and even humiliation that can radically affect your child's self-esteem and personality.

That's why I'm convinced every high school and college student in America should get the video cassette seminar, Where There's A Will, There's An . . . A. Developed by Professor Claude Olney of Arizona State University, this seminar teaches students how to study "smarter" . . . not "harder" . . . and the results have been incredible. It shows them how to learn MORE in LESS TIME, with HIGHER RETENTION. His seminar is filled with specific techniques for studying, writing term papers, taking tests, increasing retention, and a lot more.

Your children's education is one of the most important contributions you'll ever make to their future. Don't just tell them to get better grades . . . give them the tool that makes it possible.

John Ritter

Professor Olney's Seminar may turn "C" and "D" students into "A" students . . . and that can radically affect the rest of their lives!

Really Paid Off For Our Athletes

Coach Don Robinson
1986 NCAA Champions

After attending Professor Olney's seminar, I was so impressed that I asked the Athletic Director if I could put my team through it. He was so impressed, he decided to put all our athletes through it . . . and I'm really glad. It's really paid off.

From a 0.8 GPA to a 3.5 . . . In One Semester

Amy Scheatzle
College Sophomore

My first year in college was a disaster. My GPA was 0.8 and I just figured I'd be a waitress the rest of my life. Then I took Professor Olney's seminar and my GPA jumped to a 3.5.

Daughter Didn't Have a Chance for a Good College

Steve Scott
High School Parent

After my daughter's first year in high school, my wife and I didn't think she had a chance for college. But after the seminar, her GPA jumped from a 2.1 to a 3.4. The fact that this could happen after one 3-hour seminar is nothing short of MIRACULOUS!

Flunked Out . . . To Straight A's

Chuck Pangrazi
College Senior

Before Professor Olney's seminar, I flunked out of college. Since his seminar, I've received 24 straight A's and not one B.

No Matter How Hard I Studied, I Couldn't Get Good Grades.

Carol Scott
High School Sophomore

When my father got the seminar tapes, I went from 3 B's, 3 C's and an F, to 4 A's, 3 B's and a C . . . in ONE TERM!

I Wanted to Make the Honors Program, But Kept Missing it.

Keith Miskin, College Junior

Before the seminar, I kept missing A's by just a few points. Now, I've not only made the Honors Program, I've gotten straight A's except for one B.

Where There's A Will . . . There's An A

Professor Claude Olney has been teaching at Arizona State University for 20 years, and was recently honored as Outstanding Undergraduate Professor of the Year. His Seminar has been so successful in improving students' grades, it has been reported by many of America's leading newspapers.

"My seminar works because it teaches students specific techniques for taking tests, writing term papers, memorization, retention, effective note taking and study techniques. I developed these techniques to help my sons who were initially rejected from college because of their bad high school grades. They began using these techniques their first year of college and both made the dean's list. If you have a VCR, I strongly recommend the Video Seminar, because the more senses utilized, the better the retention. The audio cassettes have also been proven effective by thousands of students."

BY JAMES BRADY

Paul McCartney

PAUL WAS ALWAYS THE CUTE one, baby-faced, boyish.

Now he's 47 years old, and it's 20 years since the Beatles performed live for the last time, and Paul McCartney is headed out on yet another concert tour.

Is it merely an exercise in nostalgia, the reluctance of an aging artist to surrender to the years, or does McCartney still have something to say to an audience half his age? It certainly isn't the money: Paul is often described as one of the richest men in the world. That may be an exaggeration, but he has done okay—thanks in part to his father-in-law, a prominent New York attorney.

Maybe it's simply that Ringo has been out there touring; that Mick Jagger and the Rolling Stones are again on the road; and that Paul can't just sit home with Linda and the kids, especially after having brought out a brand-new album, his first original one in three years. It's an interesting album, Flowers in the Dirt, with 12 new songs, four of them co-written by another talented musician from Liverpool, Elvis Costello. Paul, who played on Costello's recent album, Spike, says, "He has got a little bit of that style of John's [Lennon]. I think he was influenced by John."

Since the Beatles broke up, McCartney has done 17 albums. The man works. Earlier this year, he did a live phone-in with a Russian audience through the BBC, attracting five times as many calls as British Prime Minister Thatcher did on a similar show. Which may say something about the relative popularity of musicians and politicians.

The last time I talked with Paul, he was with his wife of 20 years, Linda Eastman. Paul was promoting a forgettable film called Give My Regards to Broad Street, a parody inspired by the nine days he spent in a Japanese prison for marijuana possession. To remember the incident, Paul began writing it down. The result was 20,000 words and the movie.

I wouldn't say that Paul and Linda, who is still tall and blond and very sleek, have settled down into a cozy middle-aged domestic mold, but it is very clear for them that the frenzy of the '60s ended a long time ago. Paul talks about the kids (they have three of their own, plus Linda's daughter by a previous marriage) and, in the notes publicizing the new album's song "We Got Married," gets a laugh out of his own advancing years: "The game is up, folks, on the puberty bit! So I got more interested in looking at my situation, which is marriage, and a lot of people I know are married and very happy with it, and it's not a shameful subject at all."

Not a deeply philosophical thought, but as commonsensical as a Beatles' lyric. P

BORN: June 18, 1942, in Liverpool, England.
PERSONAL: Married Linda Eastman in 1969; four children.
CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: With John Lennon and George Harrison, was in groups Quarry Men, Moondogs, Silver Beatles, 1956-60; also with Ringo Starr, was one of the Beatles, 1962-70; solo performer with Wings, 1971–.
FILMS: Include A Hard Day's Night, 1964; Help!, 1965.
ALBUMS: Include McCartney, 1971; Band on the Run, 1973; Wings Over America, 1976; Pipes of Peace, 1983; Flowers in the Dirt, 1989.

O'Neill/Sygma

Paul McCartney, the "cutest" Beatle, is now 47 years old. On Sept. 26 in Norway, he begins another world tour that will climax in the U.S.

BRADY'S BITS

I've often told about first meeting the Beatles in 1964 in the American Hospital in Paris, where they were getting their shots for America, and how they made a fuss over my small daughter, Susan, who was having a finger treated. Years later, when Paul and his wife Linda were out in East Hampton, on Long Island, visiting Linda's family's place near where I live, my other daughter, Fiona, came racing up on her bike to announce that Paul McCartney was down the road playing tennis. Fiona and Susan and the other kids were permitted to lie on the grass under the court's hedge, watching the play...so long as they didn't ask for autographs.

'Peaceable Kingdom' Stars Lindsay Wagner

By Robert DiMatteo

Let the grumbling commence. The 1989-90 TV season has arrived, and with it the dispiriting realization that the Big Three networks are taking few chances.

NBC has made the fewest changes. The most curious entry on the Peacock's schedule is "Sister Kate" (Sundays), a sitcom starring "Colbys" vamp Stephanie Beacham as an orphanage-running nun. "Nutt House" (Wednesdays), features the unredeemed zaniness of writer-producer Mel Brooks. The remaining new NBC series form what might be called an action block on Friday nights. "Baywatch" pivots on the daily dilemmas of Southern California lifeguards. "Hardball" is a two-man cop drama, but the cops are played by the appealingly burly, slightly worn John Ashton ("Beverly Hills Cop") and long-haired hunk Richard Tyson. Following "Hardball" will be "Mancuso FBI," in which flinty character actor Robert Loggia continues the role of a tough old G-man — a role that he originated in the miniseries "Favorite Son."

ABC has one of the two likely hits of the season. Called "Chicken Soup" (Tuesdays), it's a sitcom starring comic Jackie Mason, who is coming off a triumphant one-man Broadway show. Some people wonder if the show's ethnic humor will play in the heartland, but we think ABC has a hit on its hands. "Doogie Howser, M.D." (Wednesdays), the new effort from producer Steven Bochco ("Hill Street Blues"), is about a boy-genius physician. A good show in a tough time period is "Life Goes On" (Sundays). In the tradition of "Family" and "Our House," it's the warm tale of a working-class family with a son afflicted with Down's syndrome. Also promising is "Family Matters" (Fridays), a black family-sitcom spinoff of "Perfect Strangers," starring that show's wisecracking elevator operator, Harriette Winslow (Jo Marie Payton-France). And advance word on "The Young Riders" (Thursdays) is encouraging. Here's a handsomely produced Western about the Pony Express that features a passel of good-looking young actors.

CBS is betting on a battery of one-hour dramatic series. Miniseries star Richard Chamberlain returns to series TV in "Island Son" (Tuesdays), where he plays a dedicated doctor much like his Kildare of yore. "Snoops" (Fridays at 8) gives "Frank's Place" stars Tim and Daphne Maxwell Reid another chance to show their stuff, this time in an easy going "Hart to Hart"-style mystery series."Wolf" (Tuesdays at 9) features Jack Scalia as an ex-cop trying to piece his life back together. "Peaceable Kingdom" (Wednesdays) is a zoo-bound vehicle for Lindsay Wagner. "Top of the Hill" (Thursdays) is a "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington"-inspired drama for William Katt.

But CBS's biggest win of the season is sure to be its Monday night comedy lineup. Returning hits "Murphy Brown," "Designing Women" and "Newhart" will be joined by three newcomers, one of which, "Major Dad" (Mondays), is the only new show to rival "Chicken Soup" as a probable ratings winner. It stars Gerald McRaney as a hard-line Marine who falls in love with a liberal journalist (Shanna Reed). If the show doesn't settle for cheap shots, it could pan out nicely. Also being talked up is "The Famous Teddy Z," (Mondays), a new effort from Hugh Wilson ("WKRP in Cincinnati") starring Jon Cryer as a mailroom clerk who suddenly becomes talent agent for a big-name actor.

23rd CMA Awards

On Oct. 2, Anne Murray and Kenny Rogers will host "The 23rd Annual Country Music Association Awards" special when CBS broadcasts the show live from Nashville, Tenn. Murray, a Canadian, has won four Grammy Awards, two CMA Awards, three American Music Awards and more than 20 Canadian Juno Awards. Rogers has to his credit three Grammy Awards, 10 People's Choice Awards, 18 American Music Awards and five CMA Awards.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: I'm a great fan of actor Don Knotts. Where was he born? What TV shows and movies has he appeared in? — KELLY CLARK, CANTON, OHIO

Knotts, a five-time Emmy Award-winner for his portrayal of Barney Fife, was born July 21, 1924, in Morgantown, W. Va. A regular gig on "The Steve Allen Show" (1956-60) as one of the stable of comedians led to the role of the unforgettable Deputy Fife (1960-65). In 1970, Knotts hosted his own variety show for one season before landing on another popular TV sitcom, "Three's Company" (1979-84), appearing as the hapless landlord Ralph Furley. Knotts appeared in the Broadway production of "No Time for Sergeants" and made his screen debut in the 1958 film version. His other screen credits include "Move Over Darling" (1963), "The Ghost and Mr. Chicken" (1966), "The Apple Dumpling Gang" (1975) and "The Apple Dumpling Gang Rides Again" (1979). More recently, he has reteamed with pal Andy Griffith on Griffith's "Matlock" series.

Dear Michele: I recently learned that Bob Crane of "Hogan's Heroes" committed suicide, and John Banner, who played Sgt. Schultz, died of a heart attack. Is this true? Also, whatever happened to Larry Hovis who played Carter? — TIM WILVER, RIVERSIDE, PENN.

Crane died June 29, 1978, but it wasn't a suicide. He was bludgeoned to death in Scottsdale, Ariz., where he had been appearing in a regional theater production. To date, his murder remains unsolved. Banner, who played Sgt. Schultz, was visiting his birthplace of Vienna, Austria, when he died of an abdominal hemorrhage on his birthday, Jan. 29, in 1973. Hovis went on to become a regular on "Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In" (1968, 1971-72) and later was a panelist on the quiz show "Liar's Club." The 53-year-old comedian/writer also produced the 1985 game show "Anything for Money."

Dear Michele: My wife and I are having a disagreement I'm certain you can settle. I believe the actress who played Zelda, Shelley Long's sister in the movie "Hello Again," is the same actress who played GeneWilder's wife in the movie "Woman in Red." — TIM ECKERT, HOUSTON, TEXAS

Dear Michele: I have a $10 bet riding on piano-playing rock 'n' roller Jerry Lee Lewis' age. I say 58; my friend says 52. What year was he born? — JANICE FOSTER, CLINTON, TENN.

According to Variety's "Who's Who in Show Business," Lewis was born Sept. 29, 1935 in Ferriday, La. He'll be 54 in a couple of weeks.

Dear Michele: To whom was Elizabeth Taylor married when she adopted her daughter Maria? My friend says she was married to Eddie Fisher. I say she was married to Richard Burton, because Maria went by Burton's name. — JESSIE BRYSON, ASHEVILLE, N.C.

Taylor was married to Eddie Fisher when they adopted Maria (b. 1961) in 1962. But Fisher was persuaded to Burton adopt Maria in 1964, the year he and Taylor were first married. Maria, a former London-based model, went by the Burton name until she married talent agent Steve Carlson in 1982.

It was a hot and steamy summer night.
The mercury bubbled at 95.
The air moved slower than a fat lady on a tricycle. There was no escaping the oppression.
So I poured myself a tall one, took off all my clothes, and went to the video store to rent a movie.

No one even noticed I was in my birthday suit. Because the video store I went to was the Cable Video Store. Where you can rent a movie simply by pressing a couple of buttons on your remote control switch. Check it out. Call your cable company for a listing of our latest movies and details on how to subscribe.

Soap Scoop

The torch is passed for new 'Generations'

By Connie Passalacqua

There's a whole lotta shakin' goin' on at "Generations."

When new NBC Daytime VP Jacqueline Smith (formerly of ABC Daytime) started her job in June, she said "Generations" would be a heavy priority. She wasn't kidding.

Co-executive producers Sally Sussman (creator and head writer of "Generations") and Rudy Vejar (its director) have been stripped of their producing duties. The new executive producer is Jorn Winther, whom Smith worked with for years while he was executive producer of the then mega-successful "All My Children." After leaving "AMC," Winther produced the short-lived syndicated soap "Rituals" and cable specials. Sussman and Vejar will retain their writing and directing duties.

The first major cast change is the ditching of Barbara Rhoades, who nicely played alcoholic soap-actress Jessica Gardner (Jessica stars in the soap-within-a-soap "Tomorrow Is Another Day"). Jessica is now played by the much younger Linda Gibboney, who played conniving nurse Sybil Thorne on "AMC" and originated the role of Gina Capwell on "Santa Barbara," which is now played by Robin Mattson. Look for a more humorous Jessica.

We're sure there will be plenty more changes at "Generations" to report in the months to come. Back in her ABC days, incidentally, Smith made a name for herself by reviving shows. Her most spectacular success was with the almost-canceled "General Hospital."

• "Patch and Kayla ... Patch and Kayla ..." That has been the chant of the always-fervid "Days of Our Lives" fans for ages now. Over the last year or two, since the pair has married, it was occasionally accompanied by "are so boring ... are so boring ..." No longer.

Barbara Rhoades

First, as has been previously announced, Mary Beth Evans, who plays Kayla, is pregnant, and now so is her character. Second, the show has finally found a real monkey wrench for the pair – a woman named Marina from Patch's past. (Patch is played by Stephen Nichols.)

Marina will be played by the notably beautiful Hunter Tylo, an actress who was known originally as Deborah Morehart. Using that name, she played Robin McCall on "AMC" from 1985-87. Morehart/Tylo has a whining quality to her voice, but otherwise creates a strong presence.

Look for a whole lotta shakin' at "Days," too.

Richard Tyson (l.) and John Ashton welcome you to "Hardball," Fridays on NBC.

So Proudly We Hail

David Soul, Chad Lowe and Edward Herrmann will star in "So Proudly We Hail," a CBS movie about the rise of neo-Nazism in America. Soul plays Albert Ernst, a white supremacist who draws Billy Kincaid (Lowe) and his reluctant friends into his group. James Wagner (Herrmann) portrays a university professor whose theory on cultural differences is twisted to promote the group's cause.

Murder In Mississippi

The fact-based NBC movie "Murder in Mississippi," which will star Tom Hulce, Blair Underwood, Jennifer Grey and Josh Charles, retells the story of James Chaney, Michey Schwerner and Andrew Goodman, three civil rights workers who were slain by police and Ku Klux Klan members in Neshoba County, Miss., during the "Freedom Summer" of 1964.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, SEPT. 10

NFL Football (CBS, NBC)

Week 1 and NBC has the doubleheader. It's time for our annual NFL predictions. The Philadelphia Eagles, Chicago Bears, Los Angeles Rams, Buffalo Bills, Cleveland Browns and Seattle Seahawks should win their divisions. Wild cards will be the Minnesota Vikings and San Francisco 49ers in the NFC, the Houston Oilers and Indianapolis Colts in the AFC. We further predict that the Bears will win the NFC title, the Bills the AFC title, and that at the end of January, Bears coach Mike Ditka will get his second Super Bowl ring.

Tennis (CBS)

U.S. Open, men's finals live from Flushing Meadow, N.Y. Last year's final was a four-hour war between Ivan Lendl and Mats Wilander. Since winning the Open, though, Wilander has unraveled. "He's had a terrible year," says Tony Trabert, a two-time U.S. Open champ who is currently the top tennis analyst on CBS. "He keeps talking about his motivation or lack of motivation. I don't understand that. When you're playing, you ought to be able to play and to go full bore." (USA Cable will be carrying the women's doubles finals live.)

College Football (ESPN)

Wyoming at Air Force. For two consecutive seasons Wyoming has not only won its conference title, but has been undefeated in conference games.

It's A Week To Escape With Duffy And Hogan

By Robert DiMatteo

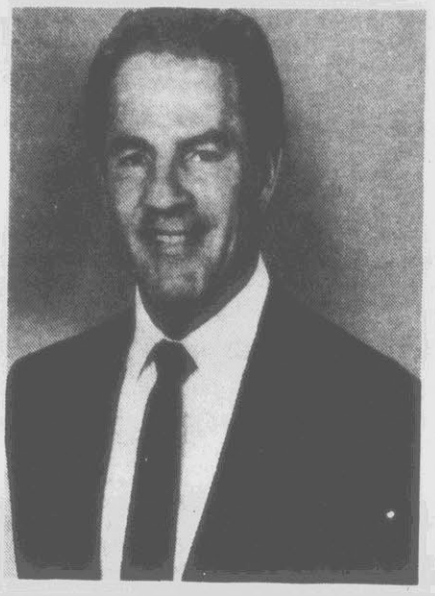
One more week, and the fall season begins. In the meantime, here are a few more warm-weather escapist offerings.

Thunderboat Row (ABC, Sept. 10) is a two-hour pilot for a series that didn't get picked up by ABC. This action-adventure has plenty of speed-boat chases up and down the Florida coast. It is a basicgood guys/bad guys situation: The head good guy is Chad Everett, who stars as the leader of a special unit of law enforcement agents whose job it is to curb the flow of contraband into the United States. Everett gets to play rough and ready in this water-logged crime drama.

A police detective tracks two frauds — a phony mail-order minister (Charles Durning) and a bogus psychologist (Michael O'Keefe) — who have attempted the "perfect crime" in Unholy Matrimony (CBS, Sept. 15). Patrick Duffy stars as the obsessive cop, a casting choice that delighted Duffy's legion of fans. Fans of more advanced acting can tune in for some of the supporting players, especially Durning ("Tootsie"), who could liven up almost any movie with his big, gruff presence, and O'Keefe, a good young actor ("The Great Santini") who seems to want more from his career than simple hunk status. The plot, by the way, is not without its twists and turns.

One of the surprise smashes of the 1986 season was "Crocodile Dundee," a good-natured little adventure about a contemporary cowboy from Down Under (Paul Hogan) who took New York (and a Yank reporter named Sue) by storm. The 1988 sequel Crocodile Dundee II (HBO, Sept. 10, 13 and 15) continues the exploits of Mick "Crocodile" Dundee — that lean, weathered-beaten Aussie who has probably done more for snakeskin than anyone on screen or off.

MONDAY



MONDAY FOOTBALL

Frank Gifford hosts ABC's "Monday Night Football" 20th Anniversary Special on Sept. 11, which will also see the season's first Monday-night game: the New York Giants against the Washington Redskins.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Richard Chamberlain, who launched his TV career as the idealistic young intern Dr. Kildare, has dusted off his stethoscope to play a doctor again. In the new CBS series "Island Son," Chamberlain is Dr. Daniel Kulani, a dedicated physician at a Honolulu hospital.

His character was adopted at birth by a native Hawaiian couple, so he has grown up the product of two cultures.

"From my Hawaiian parents, I get a sense of genuine simplicity and a reverence for life — a sense of oneness with nature and a deep respect for human nature," Chamberlain says.

The actor shares Dr. Kulani's love of the islands. He has lived in Hawaii on and off for more than a decade. "I've had a little place there for about 12 years. And I go back and forth. And every time I go there, I fall more deeply in love with the place. I'm nuts about Hawaii, and not just because of its beauty — but because the people have a very special quality. There's a kind of ease, a generosity of life that I really love."

Fans of Cloris Leachman's film roles — Frau Blucher in "Young Frankenstein" and Nurse Diesel in "High Anxiety" — are in for a treat this season when the actress portrays a wacky combination of the two in the new NBC comedy "Nutt House." Co-created by Mel Brooks, "Nutt House" focuses on the crazed employees and guests of a run-down hotel, appropriately named Nutt House.

Leachman plays Ms. Frick, the housekeeper who can't keep her hands off hotel manager Harvey Korman. Leachman insists, however, that Ms. Frick is a bit more realistic than Nurse Diesel or Frau Blucher.

"OK, she does have this thing for Harvey like I did in 'High Anxiety,' but we're not into bondage," Leachman jokes.

• SQUARE DEAL! You are asked to see that each of the four sides of the square at right totals exactly three. Indeed, had it not been for a slip-up whereby two of the amounts were transposed, the totals would be correct as is.

Switch seven-eighths with one and one-eighth.

1. Pink. 2. Red. 3. Orange. 4. Green.
