

Closest Nomination Race Since 1952 Shaping Up

By STEVE GERSTEL
KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — President Ford and Ronald Reagan dueling for key delegates Saturday and top campaigners in both camps claimed new recruits in the race for the Republican presidential nomination.

Reagan's vice presidential candidate, Richard Schweiker, claimed 13 new delegates from home-state Pennsylvania ready to vote for a Reagan-Schweiker ticket.

But Drew Lewis, Ford's state chairman, said "there's now way he can name 13 names. If he names 13 names, he won't have them Wednesday night when they call the roll."

Following a quickly called meeting of the Ford supporters in the Pennsylvania delegation, Lewis said Ford would get 90 of the state's 103 delegates on the first ballot and added that one previously uncommitted would switch to Ford today. He did not mention any name.

Gil Carmichael, Ford's top man in Mississippi, said the state delegation will crack the unit rule — possibly at a meeting today — and that Ford will pick up 16 votes now in the uncommitted list. Carmichael said "that will put him over the top."

The latest UPI tabulation showed Ford with 1,124 first ballot votes — only six short of the 1,130 needed for nomination. Reagan had 1,035 and 100 were listed as uncommitted.

Ford claims 1,135 first ballot votes, not including any from Mississippi. Reagan claims he will get at least 1,140 on the first ballot.

Ford picked up another delegate Saturday when Odin V. Carlson of New York City, a Ford supporter, was named to replace Reagan delegate Susan M. Muldoon, who died.

Ford, the first nonelected president in U.S. history, and Reagan, the conservative challenger from California, are locked in the closest race for the GOP nomination since Dwight Eisenhower edged Robert Taft in 1952.

With two days left before the 31st Republican Convention opens, delegates from throughout the country began arriving in Kansas City. Many state delegations — including the pivotal Mississippi group — planned to hold pre-convention caucuses today.

Flying from opposite coasts, Ford and Reagan planned to reach the convention city today and take personal command in the final days of their sometimes bitter campaign for the GOP nomination.

Ford spent a leisurely Saturday. He held final talks with aides and then went golfing with three old friends in Washington. Reagan remained in virtual seclusion at his Californian ranch.

Although Ford's backers are confident of first ballot victory, they did not ignore the possibility of being stopped short on an initial roll call. And some expressed fears of a second vote.

Among them were two leading Ford supporters from Connecticut — former state GOP chairman J. Brian Gaffney and House Republican Leader Gerald F. Stevens.

"His majority is very delicate," Gaffney said. "If he doesn't get it on the first ballot, I think he's had it."

Stevens said, "I feel it's critical that the President makes it on the first ballot."

Former Defense Secretary Melvin Laird, a close friend and longtime Ford adviser, said, "I am confident beyond any doubt that the President will be nominated on the first ballot."

Laird, saying he was not privy to any special information, said he felt Ford would narrow the group of vice presidential candidates to four — Vice President Nelson Rockefeller, former Treasury Secretary John Connally, Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee and Reagan.

But Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska said a close adviser had asked Ford to drop Connally from consideration. He did not identify the adviser. There were persistent reports that Connally might no longer be under consideration.

Schweiker said he was confident that Reagan would not dump him as his running mate despite the dismay of conservatives over his selection.

"When I first met with Gov. Reagan he made it abundantly clear that he was picking a team to go all the way to November," Schweiker said. "I trust Ronald Reagan."

At the same time, Reagan's campaign manager, John Sears, pushed his proposal that would force Ford to reveal his choice before the nomination roll call begins. He planned to present it to the convention rules committee today.

Semicolons And Commas

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — It was close, but semicolons lost and commas won Saturday in the Republicans' rules committee.

The Republican National Committee had drafted a preamble to its rules. It spoke of the GOP as the party open to all, with appeal from the four corners of the nation.

But H. Joseph Beard, a North Carolina delegate on the rules committee, did not like the punctuation. He told the committee the preamble had too many semicolons and colons and not enough commas or "ands." He proposed several changes to make the rhetoric flow more smoothly.

At first, the committee seemed taken aback. It had been ready for rules battles, and here was somebody talking about punctuation.

On the first voice vote on Beard's amendments, chairman Kent McGough announced the "noes" carried. On a reconsideration, McGough announced he could not tell. On a count of hands, McGough announced Beard, and proper punctuation, had won the day.

East Comments

By BETTY SANDERSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Dr. John East, ECU political science professor and delegate to the Republican National Convention, said yesterday that he was "very pleased with the final platform" adopted for the GOP convention.

East served as a member of the platform committee in Kansas City, Mo., for the past week and will serve as a Reagan delegate from North Carolina this week.

"I was very pleased with the number of planks we got accepted," East stated via telephone. "The platform committee goes back to the convention Monday. I will be out here the rest of the week as a delegate."

"We didn't get much sleep,"

East said of his platform duties. "For the last two nights (Thursday and Friday) we went to bed at 3:30 (a.m.) and got up at 6:30."

He added that he was having a good time and had enjoyed working with the national media.

"It's been fun with the national media covering this so carefully. They've been very pleasant and very fair (in their coverage)."

He noted that much time had been spent in Ford-Reagan fights during the past week.

"There has been a lot of debate and interest centered on issues involved in the platform," he said. "There was a lot of jockeying between Ford and Reagan delegates, testing one another."

"The people I have talked to here don't think it really means much," said East of rumored attempts to place James Buckley's name into nomination. Such a tactic would probably be used to allow delegates to change their votes from the legal first ballot requirement.

"I think we're going to nominate either Reagan or Ford," he continued. "I don't think it (Buckley's nomination) could have a lot of impact, as most delegates are locked in for Ford or Reagan. I don't know what the uncommitted will do, because they are such a diverse group. The main group of delegates here is so overwhelmingly committed already, but he might get the necessary support for nomination."

The fighting came at the end of a day of quiet on most fronts but Lebanese predicted the Christians would follow their capture of Tal Zaatar with new

Fifth High-Fever Death Reported

BOYNTON BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — Health officials reported a fifth death Saturday among 25 elderly patients stricken with a undiagnosed high-fever illness that swept through a nursing home earlier this week.

Among the 20 patients of the Boulevard Manor Nursing Home still suffering from the ailment, only one was reported in serious condition, Dr. John Howell, assistant director of the Palm Beach County Health Department, told a midday news conference.

Hoyles Defends Loan

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Harlan Hoyles, a Democratic candidate for state treasurer, said Saturday his campaign loan at the prime interest rate from a Raleigh bank was obtained in a "regular" manner.

Hoyles, presently deputy state treasurer, borrowed about $115,000 from First Citizens Bank of Raleigh to finance his race for the nomination against state Rep. Lane Brown of Stanley County.

Still Some Migrant Violations

RALEIGH (AP) — Even though migrant labor law violations are down in eastern North Carolina, federal investigators have found that "a substantial number" of migrant crew leaders are still violating federal laws.

According to a recently completed U.S. Department of Labor investigation in Cumberland, Harnett, Wayne, Duplin, Sampson and Johnston counties, investigators found that record keeping violations are still common.

Baby Raccoon Opens Zoo Area

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — Spunky, a fluffy baby raccoon, was the star of the ribbon cutting ceremony Friday at the North Carolina Zoo's new $10,000 one-acre Children's Contact Area.

The yellow ribbon across the entrance was twisted together with sticky marshmallows.

Breece Worried Over Legalities

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — State Rep. George Breece says legal questions over the financing of his campaign may cost him his bid to unseat Secretary of State Thad Eure, who has held the post 40 years.

The 31-year-old legislator from Fayetteville apparently violated campaign finance laws by contracting with his own advertising and consultant firm to purchase billboard space at a discount rate.

WOUNDED CONGRESSIONAL CANDIDATE—Democratic candidate for Congress Jimmy Hatcher arrives at the Duplin County Hospital Friday for treatment of his left arm and shoulder where he was wounded late Thursday by a shotgun blast. Orders Desegregation For Kinston Schools

KINSTON, N.C. (AP) — Kinston, N.C. has been ordered by a federal judge to completely desegregate its public schools this fall—even at the risk of causing "white flight."

In a ruling Friday, Chief Eastern District Judge John D. Larkins of Trenton found that the town has been operating two school systems—one virtually all black, one all-white.

His ruling that the town must use any means necessary—including busing—to desegregate the schools was the result of a lawsuit brought last year by several black parents.

Larkins granted a preliminary injunction, blocking discrimination by the defendant school officials.

The plaintiffs had charged that the city school administration discriminated against blacks by operating elementary schools that were identifiable by race.

And although the defendants did not contest the basic facts in the case, they argued that they had operated the system "in good faith," free from unlawful segregation.

The defendants also argued that desegregation would cause white parents to take their children from public schools and that mandatory busing would cause segregation.

"The fear or fact of white flight is not a permissible justification for the failure to take the necessary steps to desegregate the schools," Larkins ruled.

He ordered the school system to submit a written report on the racial breakdown of each school by Oct. 15.

Three Bloodmobile Visits To Launch New Blood Year

The Pitt County Bloodmobile will launch the new fiscal year this week with three important visits, it was announced by Mrs. Ruth Taylor, executive secretary of the Pitt Red Cross.

Mrs. Taylor said that the Bloodmobile will be at the Moose Lodge for visits on Monday and Tuesday and at Burroughs Wellcome Co. for a Wednesday blood drive.

Monday's visit is scheduled from 11 a.m. until 5 p.m., she said, while Tuesday's Moose Lodge drive will be from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

Wednesday's schedule at Burroughs Wellcome also calls for a 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. effort, according to Mrs. Taylor.

She said that the county program needs at least 200 pints of blood per day during the three-day program in order to meet the heavy needs anticipated during the upcoming Labor Day period. Blood usage is expected to be high during this time of year, she reported.

Mrs. Taylor noted that a Blood Committee has been formed to coordinate program activities during the year and will be functioning during the upcoming drive. Bob Whitchard and Mrs. Sue Smith are serving as committee co-chairmen.

The quota for the new year has been set at 3,194 pints of blood. Mrs. Taylor said, nearly 800 more than last year.

Bitten Man Searches For Dog's Owner

Environmental Health officials of the Pitt County Health Department are trying to locate the owner of a dog which allegedly bit a Danville, Va. man according to Willie Pate, director of environmental health at the Pitt County Health Department.

"Dr. Walter C. Fitzgerald contacted us and asked for our help in locating a person by the name of Barbara Yaggar whose dog bit him July 29 at Duck, in Dare County. Dr. Fitzgerald had to start taking the anti-rabies shots Friday, August 13, but he can stop taking them if we can locate the owner of the dog to find out if the dog has had rabies shots," Pate said.

Anyone having any information concerning the address or where Ms. Yaggar can be located are requested to contact the Pitt County Health Department.

Former POW

Denied Speech

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A former prisoner of war says he has been denied an opportunity to address the Republican National Convention on the issue of POWs and MIAs in Vietnam.

Raymond C. Schrupp of Fayetteville, a delegate to the convention in Kansas City, said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., initiated efforts two months ago to have Schrupp deliver a five-minute speech at the convention.

Schrump, a retired Army lieutenant colonel, said convention officials have instead asked him to lead the Pledge of Allegiance at the beginning of next Thursday's convention session.

Schrump supports Ronald Reagan for the GOP presidential nomination and he feels his rejection as a speaker is due to the struggle between Reagan and President Gerald Ford for the nomination.

"I'm satisfied that they (convention officials) don't want this brought before the convention floor," Schrupp said before leaving for Kansas City last week.

A convention official told Schrupp the demands for floor time and the need to accommodate television networks were the reasons Schrupp could not be scheduled earlier than next Thursday.

George Dunlop, an aide to Helms, said he thinks politics is a factor.

"The Ford people are running the convention. The whole coalition of conservative leaders are trying to get things we all stand for and the Ford people are trying to sweep them under the rug," he said.

Schrump said he has been critical of Ford's handling of the MIA issue but he said the speech he has prepared does not criticize anyone.

"I just want to speak for those people who can't speak for themselves," he said, referring to the servicemen whose fates in Vietnam are still unknown.

"There's no politician that's going to speak for them."

Kidnaped Girl Reveals Role As Prostitute

LEXINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Mildred Nanette Wayne, 17, spent 10 days in a Lexington motel working as a prostitute, entertaining as many as 15 men in one night.

For two days last week, Miss Wayne told a Davidson County Superior Court jury a story of being forced to work as a prostitute, fearing she would be killed if she left the motel. She said she finally escaped by crawling under a fence near the motel.

The manager of the motel, Gerald Dermont Conrad, 47, of Rt. 1, Thomasville, was convicted Friday of kidnapping Miss Wayne. He was sentenced to 25 years in prison.

Miss Wayne told the jury she left her home in St. Louis, Mo., because of family problems. She hitched rides with truck drivers in an attempt to get to Florida, where she hoped to get a job as a singer. Instead, she wound up in Lexington in early May.

She stopped at Conrad's motel, the Shangri La on Interstate 85, and talked with him about her family problems. She testified Conrad told her she could make money working as a prostitute and she said she agreed to the arrangement because she was afraid of Conrad.

She said she believed Conrad "would have cracked my skull" if she had tried to escape.

"It all seems like a fantasy — all of those men and everything that happened," Miss Wayne said Friday after Conrad was sentenced.

She said she felt sorry for Conrad and his family. "I can't hate them no matter what happened," she said.

Miss Wayne told the jury her room was watched at the motel and Conrad told her he had connections with local law enforcement officers. She also testified that she was taken to Wilkes County one day to have sexual relations with men at a poker game.

"They (prostitute's clients) are the scum of the world and most of them are married men," she said Friday.

Miss Wayne, one of 11 children, said she had run away from home before but did not have a criminal record.

"I had never been involved in anything like this before I came here. They (defense attorneys) tried to say I had but I hadn't," she said.

Miss Wayne said she had hoped to be a singer because she had sung in church and school choirs and "any other place I could."

"I'm very interested in the church — I know God forgives sins. That's why I couldn't do what I've done again; that's why I don't want to."

Miss Wayne said she hoped to return to St. Louis to "see if things will work out at home" and possibly to study music.

She said people in Lexington have tried to help her and "I've got something now that I didn't have when I came here — friends. Real friends."

"They're interested in me because I am me, not for my body or to make money off me or anything like that. This has been so different for me; I've never been the center of anybody's attention."

NEW TRAIL—Leslie Van Houten, 26, a member of the Charles Manson "family," has been granted a new trial for the Frank and Rosemary La Bianca killings for which she was convicted in 1971. Van Houten was granted a new trial Friday by the California State Court of Appeal. (AP Wirephoto)

Cape Sunworshippers

By NIKKI FINKE
Associated Press Writer
TRURO, Mass. (AP) — No-body seemed to notice when a small group of sunworshippers stripped to the buff on this Cape Cod beach Saturday to protest a federal ban on nudity, but park rangers were taking notes.

Four citations were written as a few devotees of all-over tans left the fun and headed for home.

About 600 sunlovers from as far away as Michigan and Maryland came to Head of the Meadow Beach, some to strip, some to look and some who stumbled there by accident.

The turnout was a disappointment to the Free the Beach Committee, which expected at least 4,000 protesters to cast off their clothes in the sun, as they did at a similar demonstration last year.

The stripping was slow and embarrassed as couples and families threw furtive glances from blanket to blanket to see what their neighbors were doing.

"I think a lot of people were uptight about showing their bodies in front of all the rangers," said one long-time nudist who regularly sunbathes on Cape Cod. "The officials really put a damper on things."

Organizers pleaded with the crowd to "loosen their shackles" and throw off their clothes, but nobody budged. The turning point came when the out-numbered nude side of a tug of war game started to lose the contest.

Slowly, men stood up, took off their clothes and joined in the struggle. The bare bottoms won.

The tension broken, about 100 people stripped. Uninhibited children played in the sand, while their nude parents slapped volleyballs and tossed frisbies.

But it wasn't all fun and games for a handful who left the beach and were met by a team of park rangers, citations in hand.

One New York couple was followed to their car by Ranger Howard Overton, who pushed the citation in their faces and told them a $25 fine was the penalty for violating the government ban on nudity at the Cape Cod National Seashore.

"It was the most embarrassing, humiliating thing that has ever happened to me," said the middle-aged man. "I never thought it would happen on Cape Cod or at a national seashore."

Lawrence Hadley, superintendent of the seashore, said he told his rangers "do what the situation demanded."

If that means issuing citations, then that's up to the rangers, he said.

No Way To Type Ah Wee Ah Ni Da

NEW YORK (AP)—The son of an Indian from North Carolina has no official first name because the New York Health Department's Bureau of Vital Records refuses to register a name in Cherokee letters.

Vernon Perkins and his wife claim their civil rights have been violated. To department personnel, the letters are undecipherable as Japanese or Chinese. The Perkins pronounce them as Ah Wee Ah Ni Da.

The bureau wants them to Anglicize the name because it has no typewriter to tap out the Cherokee alphabet. The Perkins say they will take the matter to court.

None of their other three children was given Indian names. Perkins, a carpenter, says he was late to recognize his heritage.

Perkins was born in Fayetteville, N.C., 33 years ago. His ancestry is a tribal mixture of Cherokee and Waccamaw. He was married in 1963 to his wife, Maria, a Thiano Indian born in Puerto Rico.

Urgent Warnings On Prescription Drugs

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — For the third time this week, the Food and Drug Administration is urgently recalling a prescription drug that could be lethal. Two of the drugs were involved in labeling mixups and the third was found to be unexpectedly dangerous.

More than 29,000 bottles of Pyribenzamine hydrochloride, an antihistamine prescribed for allergies, are being pulled off the market because some may mistakenly contain the powerful stimulant Ritalin.

The FDA said it could prove fatal if a patient accidentally took Ritalin at the maximum dosage recommended on the antihistamine bottle's label. To date, no injuries have been associated with the mixup.

The bottles containing a total of 2.9 million tablets were distributed east of the Rocky Mountains between Jan. 16 and April 4. The manufacturer, Ciba Pharmaceutical Co. of Summit, N.J., is alerting the nation's doctors and pharmacists of the recall.

The Pyribenzamine tablets are light blue and stamped with the number 33. The Ritalin tablets are peach colored and carry the number 34.

Directions on the Pyribenzamine bottles call for a maximum daily dosage of 12 50-miligram tablets. One bottle was found to contain 20-mg. tablets of Ritalin. Twelve such tablets would constitute eight times the average daily dosage for the stimulant drug, the FDA said.

Earlier, the FDA had announced that Cooper Laboratories of Wayne, N.J., was recalling 5,153 bottles of the heart drug Quinaglute Dura Tabs because of a similar labeling mix-up.

One bottle was found to contain Aminodur Dura Tabs, a drug used to treat bronchial asthma and emphysema. The Quinaglute tablets are white and smooth, while the Aminodur tablets are pale yellow and scored so that they can be split in half.

Scout Leader Dead

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — The doctors told Stanley Austin Harris in 1908, when he was 25 years old, that he had heart trouble and would die within three months.

He died Friday at the age of 93 after becoming an internationally known Boy Scout worker. He had been the scouts' national director of interracial activities. That ailment 68 years ago in Frankfort, Ky., turned out to be only a bad case of indigestion, he recalled last year, before leaving Boone, N.C., for a retirement community near Greensboro.

Harris still was hiking two miles a day before he left for Greensboro. Only recently did he start carrying a cane.

He died in a hospital in Greensboro. Funeral services will be held at 4 p.m. Sunday at the United Methodist Church in Boone.

In that same 1908 he formed a Boy Scout troop in Frankfort, two years before the founding of the Boy Scouts of America.

In 1917 he organized the first black Boy Scout troop. Three years later, he organized the first Indian troop.

Harris was awarded an honorary degree in humane letters by Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. He was the first white man to receive such an honor from the predominantly black school.

Harris retired from professional scout work in 1967. He had lived for decades in Boone.

Marijuana Seized

BURLINGTON, N.C. (UPI) — Acting on an informant's tip, Alamance County authorities Saturday seized 154 pounds of marijuana and arrested two men on drug possession charges.

Det. Capt. David Wilson of the Alamance County Sheriff's Department identified the two suspects as Harry James Anderson, 29, of Mebane and Caldwell Parker, 30, of Burlington. Both men were charged with possession of marijuana with intent to distribute.

British Navymen were nicknamed "limeys" because they ate limes to prevent scurvy.

The mixup could be fatal to a heart patient who took the wrong drug for several weeks, the FDA said, but no injuries have been reported.

The Cooper drugs were distributed east of the Rocky Mountains between March 26 and 29. The manufacturer is alerting doctors, pharmacies, hospitals and other health professionals, asking them to return supplies coded R60978 and to notify patients.

The third recall, listed as a public warning because of imminent hazard, involved the drug Triazure taken by patients suffering from extremely severe cases of the skin disease psoriasis.

The FDA said the drug causes blood clots in the veins and arteries, and has been associated with one death, one patient whose leg had to be amputated, and six other injuries of varying degrees of severity.

The manufacturer, Parke, Davis & Co., agreed to remove Triazure from the market, recall all existing supplies, alert doctors and pharmacists, and advise doctors to monitor patients closely for the next month after Triazure therapy has been discontinued.

Orders Evacuation Of Basse-Terre

POINTE-A-PITRE, Guadeloupe (AP) — Authorities ordered the evacuation Saturday of the town of Basse-Terre after eruptions of the Soufriere volcano worsened on this French island in the Caribbean.

Basse-Terre, an administrative capital with 14,700 residents, becomes the third community evacuated since the volcano's activity increased in intensity on Thursday.

Officials decided to evacuate Basse-Terre after a team of volcano experts from Paris said they saw little chance that the eruptions will cease in the next few days. But the experts added there was little probability the volcano would begin a major eruption in the near future.

Black Leaders Arrested

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) — South African security police have arrested between 20 and 50 black leaders in an effort to halt racial rioting which has killed 41 persons in the past 10 days.

The government would not disclose the number of persons arrested under security law provisions, but the Johannesburg newspaper Beld put the figure at 50. Other newspapers reported 20 arrests.

Resembles 'Legionnaires Disease'

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — A priest and a musician, who attended the 41st International Eucharistic Congress of the Roman Catholic Church last week, have been hospitalized with viral pneumonia symptoms that closely resemble "Legionnaires' Disease."

The mysterious illness killed 24 persons who attended the American Legion convention here July 21-24. The official death toll was reduced from 27 Friday after autopsy results disclosed three of the victims died of pneumonia.

USS Snook Ships In Early

PERTH, Australia (AP)—The U.S.S. Snook, the first American nuclear-powered submarine to enter an Australian port, slipped into its berth an hour early Saturday, avoiding demonstrators who had come to protest the ship's arrival.

Naval officials acknowledged that the early arrival had been planned to avoid the protesters.

Demonstrators waited at Gage Roads, four miles from the docking facility on Garden Island, and at the gates of a causeway connecting the island to the Australian mainland five miles away. But the ship was in its berth before they appeared.

Banks Dominated By Business

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The 12 regional Federal Reserve Banks that regulate member banks across the nation are dominated by banking and big business interests, a report by the staff of the House Banking Committee said Saturday.

"The nation would be better served by making the Federal Reserve System truly independent of big business and banking, freed of its built-in conflicts of interest," said Committee Chairman Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis.

Each of the district banks has nine directors to represent three different groups with an interest in the banking system—the banks themselves, big business and the public.

Class A directors are elected by the member banks in the region and, by law, are supposed to represent banks of various sizes. The report said 30 of the 36 such directors now in office have held leadership positions in state and national bankers associations. In five districts, it said, the state bankers' associations select them.

Class B directors, also elected by member banks, are supposed to represent borrowers from the world of commerce and agriculture. In practice they are picked from big business, the report said, leaving small businessmen and family-size farmers unrepresented.

Class C directors are named by the Federal Reserve Board of Governors in Washington and are supposed to represent the public. The report said 29 of the present 36 directors in this class are executives or directors of corporations, mostly big ones, and nine are former directors of individual banks.

Among all 108 directors in the system, the report said, only two are members of minority groups. None come from organized labor or consumer groups, it said, and all 108 are men.

No women, according to the report, have held any of the 1,042 directorships that have been available since the system was set up in 1913.

Applies For Crop Disaster Relief

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Agriculture officials from Mecklenburg and Lincoln counties have applied for federal disaster relief because a drought has dried up farm crops.

A spokesman for the National Weather Service said there is no real relief in sight for the drought, which has affected much of North Carolina.

Phil Haas, chairman of the Mecklenburg Agricultural Extension Service, said the drought has done millions of dollars of damage to crops in Mecklenburg, Lincoln and other Piedmont counties.

Gaston and Cabarrus counties have also been hit by the dry weather, but they have not filed for disaster relief.

Wiley Jones, Mecklenburg County executive director of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said the federal relief package sought by his office would include surplus government oats. The oats would be used as livestock feed crops, which have been hard hit by the drought.

Agricultural officials say the damaged feed crops might mean livestock would be sold at a younger age, possibly driving up meat prices in a long-range effect.

Jones said the federal relief would also include five per cent emergency loans administered by the Farmers Home Administration.

Jones said the relief application had to be approved by the state before being sent to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

A spokesman for the weather service said Charlotte has received seven-tenths of an inch of rain since July 5. The normal rainfall for July is 4.5 inches.

Dispute Over Female Decoys

DETROIT (UPI) — A judge and the police department are locked in a dispute over the use of female police decoys to prosecute men soliciting sexual favors from prostitutes, with the judge releasing all defendants in such cases.

Traffic Court Judge William C. Hague's questioning of a woman police officer Friday brought a fuming Police Chief Philip G. Tannian to the courtroom for a first-hand look at the situation.

Equipped For Coming 4 Years

On Tuesday thousands of area voters will join other North Carolinians in choosing the candidates for various state and local offices representing the Democratic and Republican parties.

For the Democrats there will be an almost bewildering array of candidates including five who are seeking to lead a Democratic return to the governor's mansion.

There are some good men seeking the governorship, and we think highly of several of them.

One of the candidates stands out in our minds however, and we think that this man is particularly qualified to lead North Carolina for the next four years. That man is Jim Hunt of neighboring Wilson County.

Hunt has served as lieutenant governor for the past four years and we don't doubt it has been a particularly trying four years, serving with a governor from the opposing party.

But that fact has been a blessing for Hunt and, hopefully in turn, for the entire state. Since the Legislature was heavily Democratic, it fell on the shoulders of the Democratic lieutenant governor to deal with members of his own party. Thus Hunt has had responsibilities and obtained vital experience in the affairs of state government that no one else could have, outside of a sitting Democratic governor.

What's more, Hunt has handled this unusual responsibility extremely well. He has taken a situation that could have degenerated into constant bickering and skillfully developed it to the point where affairs of government went smoothly on—even during a time of severe recession in North Carolina and the nation.

So now we have a man who is very well prepared for the governorship; more so than most in recent decades. And Jim Hunt is ready and willing to put the experience he has gained during his term as lieutenant governor to work for the benefit of all of North Carolina.

We feel he is genuinely concerned about the needs and welfare of every North Carolina citizen and will put his experience to work in the interest of all of us.

We don't feel that Eastern North Carolina has fared well during the Holshouser administration. We don't expect Hunt to show favoritism to this area of the state. All we expect of him, or any other governor, is that he take eastern needs into account and treat our area fairly. We think Jim Hunt can be depended upon to do this.

Some of the Hunt literature which we received had this quotation attributed to him:

"I guess it sounds naive, but I really believe a man's purpose is to try to make the world a better place, to give people better opportunity."

That sums up the Jim Hunt we know, and we would strongly recommend to Democratic voters that they cast their ballots for Hunt for governor on Tuesday.

Sunday Morning Notes

North Carolina's brush with Hurricane Belle brought back memories of a series of hurricanes which swept across North Carolina in the 1950s.

The first, and perhaps most remembered, was Hurricane Hazel in 1954 which moved inland across Eastern North Carolina and included Pitt County in its swath.

That and other hurricanes ripped up roofing, overturned tobacco barns and brought hundreds of trees and limbs crashing down on power lines so that many people were without electric power for days.

Susan Quinn of The Daily Reflector staff, says that she was born about the time of that storm and her mother has told about bringing her home as a baby to a house without electric power.

Susan's aunt and uncle, Rufus and Thelma Crumpton of Kinston, tell the story of their mobile home at Atlantic Beach. The Crumptions were at the beach home when the warning came to evacuate. They immediately closed up and drove to the mainland.

Upon their return they found the rising waters had lifted the mobile home and carried it some distance from its original site. The home was relatively undamaged, however, and when the Crumptions entered it they found things pretty much as they had left them. That included a full cup of coffee which had been left on a table. During the mobile home's uncertain journey not a drop of the coffee had been spilled.

A young girl entered the O'Herron for Governor headquarters at Five Points. The office had been given away eye shades with the O'Herron name printed on the bill.

ALVIN TAYLOR

"Excuse me," she asked Susan McIntyre, the office worker. "I got an eye shade from you a few days ago. I'd like to get one for my friend outside. She paused and then explained, "He's shy."

The shy one didn't get an eye shade. Seems they had been all given away.

A prospective bride we know says she has a fool proof system for picking out her china pattern.

"My mother told me to envision the plate on an early morning with scrambled eggs on it."

That would eliminate some patterns we've seen.

Lawton Nisbet of Interstate Securities says he was visiting in an office of the Cherry Building (old Proctor Hotel).

Looking down on nearby building he noticed that grass was growing on the roof of one of them.

There ought to be a story in that, Lawton suggested.

A Blue Collar Mayor

By KEN FRANCKLING

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI) — When Mayor Humphrey J. Donnelly III isn't busy as the city's official greeter and goodwill ambassador, you can find him trimming hedges, fixing broken windows or mopping a barroom floor.

This city, known for its expensive racing yachts, wealth and opulent mansions built by barons of industry, has a blue collar mayor.

He's a maintenance man for the local power company.

Donnelly also works part-time at a local tavern seven mornings a week, cleaning up after the previous night's patrons.

He has a wife and six children to support.

Now in his fifth year as mayor, Donnelly, 46, sees his working class background as a bonus.

"I'm very fortunate that I get along with most aspects of the city. I think being able to relate to the average person — being one — is an asset," he said.

But he still beams with pride

A Boom For East Carolina?

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Economists in state government are convinced that a boom is coming for Eastern North Carolina in terms of economic development.

The focus, some experts believe, will be the area around Greenville — with particular attention to foreign trade.

Several key factors are cited by those economists: the location central to state ports to the east and transportation to the population centers of the Piedmont sections of several coastal states; livability; and progressiveness among them.

But the principal drawing card is East Carolina University which is becoming for the eastern part of the state what the Research Triangle Park has developed into for the central part — a concentrated academic and research community which industry finds attractive for several reasons, including availability of research facilities and talent, and a community of individuals with whom their top-level employees can relate.

The boost will be even more emphatic, say some, when the East Carolina medical school gets underway, broadening the scope of the university community even more.

"You can watch for an international development movement of major proportions in that area," says Lloyd O'Carroll, economic advisor to the state's General Assembly.

Moving Ahead

Leadership in the Greenville community is already moving ahead to lay the framework for that growth.

In mid-September a workshop will be held at East Carolina University to nail down the working organization for a Coastal Plains World Trade Club affiliated with the North Carolina Trade Association.

A three-member steering committee of Ed Walker and Mrs. Janice Buck of Greenville, and R. M. (Bob)

Sickles of Washington are at work on those matters.

Dr. James Bearden, dean of the school of business at East Carolina told the organizational gathering of those interested in forming the World Trade Club that it is "an idea whose time has come . . . we have a role to play" in meeting problems such as the world food shortage.

Other chapters in the state World Trade Association function in Hickory, Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill, Charlotte, and the Piedmont Triad area.

On The Run

Samarkand Manor at Eagle Springs in Moore County has been the scene of a lot of running over the years — most of it juveniles committed to the training school there running to get away.

A recent Saturday, the children were running in force — but not away from the school.

Fred King, ex-marine who just took over directorship of the institution, is a jogger — three to five miles every day.

He soon found a parade of youngsters dogging his steps as he followed his fitness routine: out the tree-lined entrance, up the highway, down the dusty roads, and home again.

Not all could keep up the pace. Mrs. King joined the procession driving a pickup and giving the fallouts a lift.

King soon found out most of the students wanted to take part, and had to rotate that privilege from cottage-to-cottage due to the numbers of children.

But a 10-mile marathon for everybody on Saturday turned out students, staff, townspeople to watch the mass marathon and awarding of trophies to the top three.

A month ago the school was averaging 10 to 14 runaways per day — enough to cause the community to demand some action. King says the figure is now two per month — and they stay on the edge of the campus. Probably figuring if they run, King will just jog after them.

THE INSIDE REPORT

No Peace At Kansas City

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

KANSAS CITY—The possibility of success for the latest audacious maneuver by Reagan campaign manager John Sears, remote though it is, underscores the chronic weakness of President Ford's candidacy and nearly obliterates hope for a quiet convention.

The Sears proposal to require Mr. Ford to name his running mate in advance of presidential balloting was clearly a ploy to set up a test of strength on the convention floor most advantageous to Ronald Reagan. Thus, that the rules change has any chance whatever points up this gloomy fact of political life for Mr. Ford: even though he needs only a handful of votes to clinch the nomination, a substantial number of delegates think twice about giving the President a totally free hand in picking his running mate. That displays astounding weakness for an incumbent President.

While Mr. Ford almost certainly will be nominated, the hope for a quiet and easy victory—so high two weeks ago when Reagan appeared to have destroyed himself by selecting Sen. Richard Schweiker for Vice President—is gone. The Sears play may insure a ferocious floor fight next week, extending the bitter struggle between the Ford establishment and Reagan's outsiders through at least Tuesday night.

Sears has confided to friends that his proposed vice-presidential rules change is the delayed second stage of his Schweiker rocket. But others high in the Reagan campaign, having learned of the rules proposal only late last week, see it as a depseration move by Sears after Schweiker's failure to unlock Reagan delegates in the Northeast.

Sears, notorious for shielding his moves even from colleagues, may well have had the second stage in mind without telling anybody. Whether he did or not, however, there is no doubt that some maneuver was essential to maintain any hope for Reagan. Our count shows Mr. Ford about 80 delegates ahead of Reagan with only about 80 uncommitted delegates left.

Accordingly, Sears had to concoct a test vote, with two goals: first, to show Reagan sentiment among conservative delegates bound by primary election laws in North Carolina, Kentucky and other states to vote for Mr. Ford in presidential balloting; second, to provide a rallying point bringing the wavering Mississippi delegation—and its wavering chairman, Clarke Reed—back into the Reagan camp.

Lacking in ideological content and tracing its lineage to Machiavelli, the Sears play was not the ideal mechanism to weld a conservative coalition against Mr. Ford. When Sears unveiled it Monday before the Ford-dominated rules committee of the Republican National Committee, the few Reaganites there—including the steadfast Gov. James Edwards of South Carolina—were less than enthusiastic.

Nevertheless, Sears is pressuring a Ford weak spot: distrust by conservative delegates over his vice-presidential preference. Mr. Ford's political lieutenants report that uncommitted delegates resist endorsing Mr. Ford until they are certain he will not choose Secretary of Commerce Elliot Richardson, Sen. Charles H. Percy of Illinois or some other liberal.

This could conceivably be the lever to pull back Mississippi's Reed, who endorsed Mr. Ford and tipped his state's delegation to the President in outrage over the Schweiker shock. Reed abstained Monday afternoon when the Sears rules proposal was considered in the national committee's rules committee. Uncomfortable in the Ford camp, Reed might back Sears when the convention's rules committee and the convention itself consider the change.

All this points up the Ford campaign's inability to

To the editor:

One of the main goals of the League of Women Voters at the local, state and national level is the promotion of a more informed electorate through the publication and dissemination of non-partisan information on candidates. During this election year the thrust of our organization is a major effort to focus on issues rather than images.

Since the inception of the Greenville-Pitt County League of Women Voters in 1969, we have held candidates' forums and published candidates' questionnaires prior to primary and general elections on a regular basis. This year we changed the format of our questionnaire in order to elicit more definitive answers from the candidates because we firmly believe that voters have a vested interest in knowing exactly how the candidates stand on various issues.

Due to the nature of the questionnaire published in the Daily Reflector, we wish to make clear the procedure which was used in compiling it. All of the candidates were sent questionnaires along with explanatory material. These packets were sent via registered mail, return receipt requested. Candidates who did not return the material as the publication deadline approached were called with reminders on two or three occasions. Thus, we can only conclude that candidates who failed to reply did so clearly of their own volition.

Yours truly,

Anti-Inflation Policy Rapped

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — The Committee for Economic Development describes itself as nonpolitical and non-partisan, but implicit in its most recent economic report is severe criticism of recent anti-inflation policy.

That policy, pursued by both Presidents Nixon and Ford, justified high unemployment and low production as necessary in the battle against rising prices. The CED reports, by its Research and Policy Committee, suggests the policy has failed.

Demand restraint, relying on unemployment and idle industrial capacity, it states, "has contributed to plunging the economy into severe recessions without bringing the inflation of prices and wages to an end . . ."

More effective, it argues, would be federal policies aimed at increasing supplies and stimulating investment and keeping unemployment under 5 per cent, and relying less on the Federal Reserve and monetary policy.

You do not need to study that position to realize that it is one often associated with the labor movement or academe or Democrats or, in general, the more liberal sphere of intellectual and political life.

CED members, however, are largely practical, hard-nosed, pragmatic business executives, the hierarchy of American corporate life, plus some university presidents—"the establishment," often identified as conservative and Republican.

Idle industrial capacity and idle manpower, the CED reports, is wasteful. To fight inflation with deliberate unemployment is as bad, it says, as deliberate inflation to relieve unemployment.

And so, it recommended, "the President, in his annual economic message, propose a specific program with a projected timetable for reducing inflation, for maintaining a steady and sustainable growth of real output, and for returning the economy to high employment."

Fiscal policy, or government spending (or lack of it) and taxation, should be stressed more, and the role of monetary policy, which involves money supply and interest rates, should be diminished.

A reader of the report doesn't need any underlying or boldfaced type to help remind him that the policy being offered contrasts on point after point with the policies pursued over the past few years.

Unemployment, for example, rose to 8.9 per cent of the civilian labor force in May 1975, the highest level achieved since pre-World War Two days. We were told it was needed if we were to return to stability.

Industrial capacity sank drastically to around 70 per cent as we fought the battle against inflation. Factories closed or reduced their staffs. Investment in more

For Reagan, When Boys Had Better Stop Being Mere Boys Or Connally

By GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N.J. — If President Ford were to solicit the vice-presidential choices of Republican voters across the nation, as he has the choices of convention delegates, he would discover that two men dominate the preferences of the GOP rank and file — Ronald Reagan and former Secretary of the Treasury John Connally.

In a nationwide survey completed Monday, Reagan is the choice of 27 per cent of Republicans for the No. 2 spot while Connally is the choice of 21 per cent.

Next is current Vice President Nelson Rockefeller, selected by 12 per cent. Rockefeller is followed in the balloting by Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee with 7 per cent and Secretary of Commerce Elliot Richardson with 6 per cent. The remaining five persons on the list (from a list of 10) receive 5 per cent of the vote or less.

These are Secretary of the Treasury William Simon, Sen. Edward Brooke of Massachusetts (who has since withdrawn his name from consideration), Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, CIA Director George Bush and Ambassador to Great Britain Anne Armstrong.

Reagan has already announced that his running mate would be Sen. Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania and Reagan backers have introduced a resolution that would require Ford to name his vice-presidential choice before the convention votes for the presidential candidate. However, Ford has said he will not announce his running mate until the time of the convention.

The President recently sent letters to 350 GOP mayors and elected officials to ask their views on a vice-presidential nominee. Previously he had asked the opinions of all 4,518 delegates and alternates to the convention as well as all Republican members of the Senate and House. The President is expected to report the results of his canvass in the near future.

Here are the questions asked in the nationwide Gallup survey: "Suppose Gerald Ford is the Republican candidate for President. Which one of the people on this list would you like to see as his vice-presidential running mate? And who would be your SECOND choice?"

Here are the first choices of Republicans nationwide:

Vice Presidential Choices Of Republican Voters
Reagan	27%
Connally	21
Rockefeller	12
Baker	7
Richardson	6
Simon	5
Brooke	5
Rumsfeld	4
Bush	3
Armstrong	3
Undecided	7

Where Would Reagan Support Go?

While many Republican party strategists support a Ford-Reagan ticket in the belief that this would help unite the party — recent test elections reveal a record defection of Republicans to the Democratic side — Reagan has thus far rejected the idea of taking the No. 2 spot behind Ford.

If the assumption is made that Reagan is out of the running for the No. 2 spot, which of the remaining candidates would emerge as the top choice of Republicans?

To determine this, Reagan's vote in the survey was distributed to the other candidates on the basis of second choices. Connally emerges on top with 28 per cent of the vote of Republicans nationwide. Next is Rockefeller with 20 per cent. Rockefeller is followed by Baker with 9 per cent, Simon with 8 per cent and Richardson with 7 per cent.

Here is the new list with the Reagan vote distributed:

Vice Presidential Choices Of Republican Voters (With Reagan vote distributed)
Connally	28%
Rockefeller	20
Baker	9
Simon	8
Richardson	7
Brooke	6
Rumsfeld	6
Armstrong	4
Bush	4
Undecided	8

Vote of Independents

The choices of voters who align themselves with neither major party — the independents — are vital in view of the GOP's minority party status.

Among independent voters, Reagan and Rockefeller are in a virtual tie — Reagan the choice of 20 per cent and Rockefeller 19 per cent. Baker is next with 12 per cent followed by Connally with 10 per cent. The others on the list receive 8 per cent of the vote or less.

The results reported today are based on interviews with 334 Republicans and 403 independents out of a total of 1,356 adults, 18 and older, taken in person in more than 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period Aug. 6-9.

A Conservative View

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

KANSAS CITY — All week long, the contending Ford and Reagan forces have been loitering around the Muehlebach Hotel like a couple of teen-aged gangs on the prowl. At this writing, they have preserved a surface gentility, but the deeper hostility could erupt any time. One longs for some authoritative voice from the sky that would speak with thundering command: Knock it off! Cut out the kid stuff!

No such Olympian imperative is likely to be heard. Boys will be boys. Snips and snails and puppy-dogs' tails, that's what this crowd is made of. Both sides are hungering for black eyes and bloody noses. The Kansas City hosts, eager to please, have provided every amenity save one: We need a political infirmary for the bandaging of wounded sensibilities.

A plague on them all. What is this national party's sole purpose? What is its immediate reason for existence? Why, sir, its purpose is to defeat Jimmy Carter in November and to hang onto the White House for another four years. And what has become of this purpose? It has not been heard from lately. It was last seen somewhere west of Topeka, riding into the distant sunset. Heaven knows when it may return.

The Ford people are so infernally dumb! It would have cost them nothing at all, when it came to organizing this convention, to have made a few gestures of conciliation to the Reagan folks. But, no. With snickers and winks and nudges, the Ford managers undertook to rig the entire convention, starting with the assignment of hotel rooms, so as to fire up the opposition. The Reagan crowd, stung by a series of deliberate snubs, cannot justly be condemned for striking back.

Conciliation? Compromise? Unity? These old virtues have been exiled. They cannot find room in the jam-packed hotels. The stiff-lipped Reaganites are standing on principle; and they

Alice Nickens Wanted Only To Be A Teacher

WINTON, N.C. — "When I first started to school," recalls Alice Nickens, "we had no windows to see out of, no running water, no indoor toilet, and we carried our lunch to school in a tin bucket. After I began teaching in 1922 we still had to go to school every morning and make a fire with wood or coal.

"And in the winter the children came to school with their little hands almost frozen, and mine would be aching so I could hardly rub theirs."

Many Hertford County folks call her "Miss Alice." A gentle, soft-spoken black woman, she taught school in the county for more than half a century. She retired in 1970 and since has worked as a substitute teacher, taught adult education classes and helped launch a reading program in the county.

"I keep thinking I'll run an ad in the Hertford County paper," she says, "and invite all the people I ever taught to a party. But I don't know what I'd serve them except water, there'd be so many. I would just like to shake their hands."

Nickens has spent all her life in Winton, where black and white people have lived side by side for generations. She speaks proudly of her roots in the town. "My father owned a grocery store down the street — it's been family-owned for 100 years. It was the only place in the county that sold textbooks."

She began teaching because "that was the best opportunity for Negro women. I made 30 dollars a month and out of that I gave my mother ten, I gave my brother who was in Howard University ten, and out of the ten I kept I managed to save a little. I had the instinct to save because I remember seeing my mother so strained for money. There were 13 children in our family.

at opportunities to meet famous people who visit Newport frequently. Like Queen Elizabeth, who spent seven hours here last month.

He concedes it is impossible to sandwich countless government functions and public appearances into a normal work day.

He keeps a spare suit in his locker at Newport Electric Co., work clothes at City Hall and a little of each in the trunk of his car to avoid showing up somewhere inappropriately dressed.

Most of his allotted five-week annual vacation — earned through 20 years service at the power company — is eroded in one-and two-hour segments he takes off to appear at local festivities and conventions, cracking a few well-timed jokes to set visitors at ease, hoping they will soon return.

Donnelly, an easy-going chap who goes by the nickname "Harp," says he has an understanding boss. "As long as the work gets done there is no problem."

He gets along so well with the upper crust in this social-minded seaport they made him an honorary member of the Ida Lewis Yacht Club and the Spouting Rock Beach Association, a private beach better known as Bailey's Beach, where the high and mighty have basked in the sun and salt air since the early 1900s.

He gets a kick out of the latter membership. "It's funny in a way because I used to swim there when I was a kid and got thrown off," Donnelly said.

"In Newport you have the wealthy, the Navy and just plain regular folks. There are more of us regular people here than anybody else. The goals are the same regardless of what group you are from," he said.

"A better Newport is everybody's goal."

will fall on principle, too. They will drown in principle. They will never surrender.

But this is folly. What gets you is that when it comes to issues of true principle, the differences between Ford and Reagan are infinitesimal. No significant distinctions can be found. Both gentlemen believe in limited government, individual freedom and strong national defense. Both are dedicated to the free market and the enterprise system. Their instincts and attitudes are compatibly conservative.

It is therefore stupid — stupid, silly and sophomoric — for the warring factions to exhaust themselves in fratricidal quarreling over the wording of a phrase or the framing of a paragraph. A plank on the Panama Canal is a case in point. The business of racial-balance busing is another. In the long haul, it is immaterial what the Republican platform declares on these issues. The Republicans' purpose, again, is not to win paragraphs but to win the presidency. They ought to send out a posse to bring the purse back.

To be sure, the GOP must present an ideological image in contrast to the Democratic image, but under the nebulous rules of American politics, that is as much as one can ask. The purists who demand conservative purity are purely mistaken. They dream of a realignment in the British fashion, but this is quazy illusion. The United States Congress is not the House of Commons. The two legislative bodies are fundamentally different in both structure and tradition. Americans are not wedded to party discipline, but to party anarchy.

One hears talk of walk-outs, mass defections, rebellion and desertion. It is rumored that if Reagan is denied the nomination, a rump faction, bellowing like a bull moose, will charge from the convention hall. This is probably hot air — we heard the same thing from the Taft forces at Chicago in 1952 — but there could be something to it. Until his bizarre anointment of Richard Schweiker, Reagan had his herd under fair control. Now they are pawing and bellowing and rolling their bloodshot eyes.

Maybe the Republicans will pull it all together. Maybe a gentle spirit of peace, brotherhood and amity will descend. Maybe the two gangs will beat their switchblades into WIN buttons. But as we head for the opening gavel, don't bet your bottom dollar on the prospect.

Sewing At Home, And The Initial Investment

One of the ways to save money during these inflationary times is to sew your own clothes, but it's not one of the ways I care to bother with. I won't claim that I can't even sew on a button. I can, that is, if I don't have to worry about matching it up with a buttonhole. But beyond that, I'm pretty inept.

I did try my hand at sewing once. I made a shirt for my father. Unfortunately, I got tired of it after the first sleeve, so now he uses it as a rifle warmer. Then I decided that I would make some draperies, but somehow I measured wrong, and we ended up with antique satin cafe curtains.

My final sewing venture was a dress. I was okay until I put in the zipper. When I got finished, the dress zipped from the waist to the hem. The only way I could wear it was to put it on upside-down — one leg through the neckline and the hem wrapped around my throat with a shoestring.

After that I gave up. And Phillip has never let me live it down. The other night we were at a friend's house playing bridge, and our hostess came out in a marvelous creation that had slits up the sides. It even had a slit up the back.

"Jen," I whispered. "I think your zipper split."

"Oh no," she said loudly and proudly. "It's suppose to be that way. I made the dress, and I got tired of it before I put the zipper in. I figured, 'Who needs a zipper?' So I just put a button at the neckline. Smart, huh?"

"It sure is," my husband piped up. "Just think of that, Gail. Jen's trying to save money by sewing. That's fantastic."

Yeah, fantastic. Jen's husband, Joe, mumbled, choking on his own enthusiasm.

"You don't sound too excited about the whole thing," I said.

"You wouldn't either, not if you had to buy the sewing machine."

"Well, you've got to spend money to make money," Phillip said. "Think of that sewing machine as an investment."

"Some investment. Jen insisted on buying the most expensive machine in the store. I could have bought part interest in Saks Fifth Avenue for what I paid for that machine. It's got so many attachments for making sewing easy that Jen can't even decipher the instruction booklet."

"I'm sure that, eventually, you'll consider it a bargain," Phillip said.

"Right. That dress is the only thing she's made. It's a real bargain — if you happen to be Jackie Onassis. I figure that, counting all materials, that dress cost me $864."

"You're so picky," Jen snapped. "You're going to stifle my creativity."

Joe didn't answer. He was too busy staring at the gap in the back of her dress.

U.S. Experts Can Find Inconsistencies In Soviet Foreign Policy

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Russian foreign policy, from time to time an issue in presidential elections, has become in recent years a mixture of weakness and strength, of firm determination in one country and uncertain resolve in another.

Sometimes, as in relations with China, fear or ambition are factors in foreign policy decisions. Sometimes ideological determination has forged policy, as it did in Angola. And sometimes stubbornness and short-sightedness have been obstacles. Relations with Japan, for example, have been strained for years because of Russia's refusal to return islands off Japan's northern tip that were occupied during World War II.

This assessment of Russian foreign policy emerges from more than 30 interviews with U.S. State Department officials, CIA officials, Commerce and Treasury Department experts in Russian affairs, and academics who specialize in the Soviet Union. Most insisted on off-the-record interviews.

Although the Soviet Union is a superpower, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has argued that its military and economic strength "is uneven; the weaknesses and frustrations of the Soviet system are glaring."

An aging leadership — conservative, orthodox and fearful of change — is largely responsible for Russia's foreign policy shortcomings, in the U.S. government view. The two principal leaders — Leonid Brezhnev, secretary general of the Communist party, and Premier Alexei Kosygin — are 69 and 72, respectively. They have been in power a decade. The average age of the ruling Politburo is just over 65. The youngest member is 58.

U.S. officials acknowledge that American foreign policy also suffers from uncertainties and poor judgment. But they argue that U.S. policy decisions usually adhere to global goals — détente, support of capitalist or non-Communist regimes, protection of U.S. business.

The United States warned that détente was endangered by Russian support for the Marxist Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA), which won the Angolan civil war this year by defeating two Western-backed factions.

Nevertheless, Russia won an important ally in Angola, while the United States lost influence in black Africa.

Russian influence among Third World nations was demonstrated this year at the United Nations Trade and Development Conference in Nairobi, Kenya. The Soviet Union led a movement among poorer nations to defeat a U.S. proposal for an international resources bank.

Another Russian success, U.S. officials say, was the USSR's decision to strengthen relations with India by sending military aid at a time when the United States was criticizing Indira Gandhi for assuming authoritarian power.

On the other hand, in North Africa Russia has tried not to take sides in the conflict between Algeria and Morocco over Sahara Desert territory, although Algeria is a longstanding ally. Russia is trying to purchase phosphate from Morocco — ruled by a monarchy in contrast to Algeria's revolutionary government.

The preoccupation with Peking has led Russia into costly competition with China in Africa, Asia and other Communist countries. An example was Russian support of the pro-American regime in Cambodia just before that regime fell in April 1975 to Communist rebels backed by the Chinese. Russia's growing armed might has reached a point "of rough equivalence" with the United States, says Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld. But nearly 500,000 Russian soldiers are stationed on the China frontier and therefore aren't figured in the comparisons of U.S. and Russian military strength.

Here is a rundown on Soviet foreign policy problems in some other areas of the world, as seen by U.S. officials:

Europe — U.S. officials say disagreements between Moscow and the Communist parties of Italy and France are more apparent than real. But the Russians are concerned that Eastern European Communist regimes will be influenced by Western European Communist parties — specifically by their insistence on independence from Moscow.

Romania and Yugoslavia already follow cautiously independent foreign policies. There are signs Poland and East Germany might do the same.

Middle East — The Russians haven't been expelled from the region, but their influence has diminished, particularly in Egypt, which canceled a friendship and cooperation treaty with Russia last spring. The Russians have not been successful in attempts to woo Jordan, Saudi Arabia and other pro-Western Arab countries.

A sure sign of Russian weakness in the Middle East has surfaced in the Lebanese civil war. Syria turned to the United States to help achieve a settlement because only the Americans can deal with all the parties — Christians, Moslems and Israelis.

Asia — Russia gave Indonesia's Sukarno more than $1 billion in aid in the 1960s, when he was clearly on the decline. When Sukarno was overthrown in 1966, the new regime turned away from the Soviet Union and carried out a violent anti-Communist purge.

Latin America — Russian financial support of Cuba for more than two decades is a major foreign policy success. But there have been problems elsewhere. Most recently, Russian support for the Peronist government in Argentina backfired with the overthrow of that government by the military.

Vatican Calls Situation 'War'

ROME (AP)—Churchmen and local officials in Communist-dominated parts of Italy are engaged in what the Vatican calls a "war" over facilities from schools to cemeteries that have long been run by religious authorities.

The Vatican newspaper Osservatore Romano reported recently that hundreds of church-owned nursery schools were forced to close down because Communist-dominated municipal authorities cut off traditional state subsidies.

"Now it is necessary to use this word — war," the paper said. "The Communist escalation against Catholic educational and welfare institutions is in full swing. The phenomenon is spreading quickly in the 'Red' regions."

Dead, Missing In Korean Floods

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Floods and landslides caused by three days of torrential rains have left 21 persons dead and 31 missing in two provinces east of Seoul, the national police reported today.

In the town of Wonju, 60 miles east of the capital, 16 inches of rain since Thursday touched off a landslide early today that smashed eight houses. Many of the missing were presumed buried deep in the mud.

Strikes Stunted Job Picture

WASHINGTON (AP) — Strikes helped stunt the nation's industrial growth in July, limiting production increases to the smallest margin in nine months, the Federal Reserve Board says. That's bad news if you're looking for work.

The industrial sector accounts for about one-third of the nation's jobs, and slow growth there creates a dampening effect on the creation of new jobs.

FBI Man Pleads Guilty

WASHINGTON (AP) — An FBI section chief is awaiting sentencing after becoming the first bureau official in history to plead guilty to a criminal charge of corruption.

John P. Dunphy entered the guilty plea Friday as part of an agreement with Justice Department prosecutors involved in a broad probe of alleged financial corruption and other abuses of power within the FBI. Dunphy was fired from the bureau Thursday.

Checking Into Roselli Murder

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI will try to determine whether mobster John Roselli was murdered because of his Senate testimony about CIA plots to kill Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro.

Atty. Gen. Edward H. Levi late Friday "authorized the FBI to enter the Roselli homicide case," said Justice Department spokesman Robert Havel.

Roselli's body was found stuffed in a chain-wrapped oil drum in Biscayne Bay off the Florida coast last weekend.

Nuclear Operations Curtailed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission says it is sharply curtailing operations at new nuclear power plants and banning further plant construction until it re-evaluates environmental dangers posed by fuel reprocessing and handling of atomic wastes.

While the NRC action will not affect those nuclear plants already producing electricity, it places a moratorium on new construction and limits newly constructed plants to producing only 1 per cent of their capacity.

Louisiana Scrambles For Movie Dollars

By KEN DAVIS
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Knee-deep in the mad scramble to lure movie dollars to the Southeast, Nick Pallacia, who headed the two-year-old Louisiana Film Commission, figured he had an idea that would have box offices bulging.

What with "Jaws" snapping up dollars by the millions, Pallacia wanted to shoot a sequel right on location in southern Louisiana.

He could see it all — a giant home-bred alligator running amok in the swamps, an absolute natural for all manner of technicolor mayhem among the Cajuns in their pirogues.

While the pirogues splintered and the Cajuns swam for their lives, Pallacia figured, millions of bucks of Hollywood cash would be piling up along the bayous.

"Money is the object of this thing," he said of the way Louisiana and other states in the Southeast woo movie producers with greedy abandon, spending thousands in hopes fellow citizens will pocket millions.

Phil Oakley, who took over from Pallacia a few weeks back, agreed. "It's a lucrative business," he said.

Oakley said Louisiana spent $100,000 in fiscal 1974-1975 to attract eight movie and television films. This, he said, brought $6.1 million to state business and provided 5,800 temporary jobs.

The take in the 1975-1976 fiscal year for the same output was about the same. "It will be about double this year," said Oakley. "The income to the state should be around $12 to $14 million."

Georgia, which got into the scramble in 1972 with Gov. Jimmy Carter doing the pushing, leads the pack.

"Georgia has worked hard and done an excellent job," said Oakley. "It has 15 to 16 movies a year. I wouldn't be surprised if it does 20 this year."

"You know they turn out those Burt Reynolds things about three a year. I'll bet Reynolds has fought every cop and every alligator in Georgia by now."

Ed Spivia, director of the state's tourist division, said that in the last three and one-half years, movie companies have reported spending between $40 and $50 million in Georgia. The state budgets $50,000 to $60,000 a year attracting that money.

"In New York and California," said Spivia, "you have to go through all kinds of red tape to arrange a movie, while in Georgia there really isn't that kind of hassle."

Oakley put Louisiana in second place to Georgia. "Florida probably won't admit it," he said, "but it is running third."

At the moment, Florida is crowing over Georgia. It captured "Mean Dog Blues" for filming at Apalachee Correctional Institution in the Florida Panhandle. The script puts the action in a Georgia prison.

"We have gotten our revenge from Georgia," said Joe Hennessey, Florida economic development director.

Georgia laughed earlier. Its officials talked the producers of "The Longest Yard" starring Reynolds into filming at the Reidville, Ga., prison.

The catch was, "The Longest Yard" was about football-playing prisoners and guards in a Florida prison. Just to add to the rankle, Reynolds, the movie's star quarterback, once was a halfback at Florida State.

Georgia successfully stresses the freedom from hassle for movie producers, but Spivia admits it can't work 100 per cent.

During the filming of "Bingo Long," which is set in the 1930s, a merchant on the town square tried to trade Bingo for bicentennial. He painted "1776-1976: Happy Birthday America" on his storefront window. Spivia happily reported the movie company got around the problem with a court order that allowed them to stack bales of hay in front of the store.

South Carolina takes the low road to Hollywood. It has no budget for selling movie producers, but even without a program the state got "Midnight Man" starring Burt Lancaster. It was filmed at Clemson University in 1973.

information specialist for the state's ETV network. "They spent about $15,000 a day and stayed about two weeks. Other movies are shot around the state with smaller budgets."

Alabama has just begun to fight for movies, but Mobile sneaked one from under New Orleans' blandishments, a spooky film about visitors from another world called "Close Encounters of The Third Kind."

Perhaps one reason Pallacia never sold that alligator epic for Louisiana was that Steven Spielberg, the "Jaws" director, is calling the shots on Mobile's movie and Richard Dreyfuss, one of the stars of "Jaws," is before the cameras.

This hectic southeastern hunting for cinema cash just shows how times have changed. Back in the 1940s, Gov. Jimmie Davis of Louisiana, strumming and singing "You Are My Sunshine," used to go to Hollywood to make movies.

way we did; their books come so easy. So many children today get everything their hearts desire — watches before they can even tell time. What do they have to work for?

"They have so little to do. They don't have water to draw out of the well, horses to feed, cows to milk. What are they going to do when they get home except look at television or play in the street?"

Nickens believes today's children have more opportunity to learn with the new teaching methods and facilities that have been introduced over the years. "But I don't feel we have the same quality of home life to back up the good teaching. A child gets his inspiration to learn at home even from the time he's two or three. And if he has it in him to learn, he will learn, black and white. But he has to get the spark at home.

"Children don't respect their teachers the way they used to. Years ago all I had to do with a child who was acting up was just look at him and shake my head and he'd quieten down. Now they act like they haven't heard you. It doesn't have anything to do with race. Whatever children grow up with, that's the way they'll do. "And the language the children use has so changed, so much of it is just terrible, and they don't care who hears them. When all that mess came out about Watergate and I found out the kind that was being talked in the White House, I decided it's nationwide, not just Hertford County."

The county schools integrated in 1970. "I think we handled integration beautifully," she says. "I felt it was fair and right we all go together because I certainly believe we'll be in the same heaven together. I never heard anything of a black and white heaven.

"But I do feel it would have been better if we'd have started with the children in the primary grades because the young children are so loving and they don't see skin color. I don't believe we'd have had any of these affairs like we had in Boston if we'd have started when the children were young. It's the parents who are always such die-hards about things."

Besides teaching, Nickens heads up money-raising drives in her community for the cancer society and the heart fund, and she works in a county campaign to improve reading skills. "I've begged books from the libraries and taken them to families with lots of children." She has also helped sponsor a special "reading hour" at the Winton library on Sunday's for children ages two to six.

Nickens says her hobby, outside of teaching, is "helping people. But teaching has always been my true calling. Something still comes over me every time I open a classroom door. And I'm never happier than when I hear some child in Murfreesboro or Ahoskie or Winton nudge his mama and say, 'Mama, there goes my teacher.'

"I remember on my birthday the children would sing me 'happy birthday' and hope all my wishes would come true. I'd always think that if they would grow up to be good citizens and have love in their hearts for each other, all my wishes would come true. I wanted to teach them those things more than anything I could teach them in a book."

Watered Gas
Stalls Engines

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — About 25 motorists discovered during rush-hour traffic recently that water and gasoline don't mix.

The motorists were stranded when their engines conked out within a mile of the station where they had bought gas.

Apparently water had leaked into one of the station's underground gas tanks when a new shipment was unloaded during a heavy rain a few days earlier.

The stranded cars were towed to nearby service stations where their gasoline tanks were drained and engines flushed.

A spokesman for the watery gas station said customers were reimbursed for their expenses.

Wants 'No' To Powered Bone

By BERNARD BRENNER
WASHINGTON (UPI) — A national consumer coalition plans to ask a federal court to block a temporary Agriculture Department order letting processors put powdered bone in meat products such as hot dogs, it was learned Saturday.

Ellen Haas, consumer coordinator for the Community Nutrition Institute, said the decision to file a suit came when Agriculture officials failed to meet a Friday night deadline for voluntarily withdrawing the bone regulation.

The CNI joined the Maryland attorney general, Rep. Margaret Heckler, R-Mass., and six other consumer groups in formally asking Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz on July 30 to withdraw the regulation on grounds it should not have been issued without time for public comment.

Leaders of the coalition said at the time they would take their case to the federal courts if Butz failed to act by Aug. 13. The controversy involves a process for mechanically deboning meat.

Agriculture officials claim that if the process is cleared for permanent use it could eventually add as much as one billion pounds of meat annually to consumer supplies by rescuing beef or pork now lost in hand deboning—and could be produced without health hazards.

Officials said the ground bone in the meat could help consumers by adding calcium. They said it is crushed too finely to be detected by taste or texture.

D.L. Houston of the Agriculture Department said Friday a response to the petition was "still under consideration." Houston said the department had a responsibility to produce a detailed response to the lengthy complaint and could not be bound by the deadline announced by the consumer group.

Ms. Haas, however, said it "looks like our request has been denied." Other Agriculture officials had said earlier they believed the temporary bone regulation was legally "sound."

Last April, after quietly and informally allowing use of the process for about a year under instructions given to government meat inspectors, the department issued a formal temporary regulation letting processors use the mechanical deboning system pending public consideration of a permanent regulation.

Revival Today

The seventh in the series of "Revival for Justice" is being conducted today at Arthur Chapel F.W.B. Chapel at 7:30 p.m.

Gift Of Antiques To Sally-Billy House

One of the largest gifts of American antiques to be presented to the state has come through a continuing effort by the North Carolina Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

A valuable collection of furniture and accessories has been presented to the state for use in the Sally-Billy House, a restored federal style plantation house that forms part of the complex comprising Historic Halifax. Historic Halifax is operated by the historic sites section of the Department of Cultural Resources.

The house derives its name from its first residents, William Ruffin (Billy) Smith and his wife, Sarah (Sally).

Grace J. Rohrer, secretary of the department said, "We are most grateful for this gift, carrying on as it does a tradition of involvement with Historic Halifax on the part of the DAR. This involvement began in 1914 with the acquisition and restoration of the Constitution-Burgess House.

"Only through such generous gifts are we able to maintain the state's 23 historic sites in a form in which the public can find a full measure of pleasure and appreciation.

Michael O. Smity, furnishings curator for historic sites, outlined the items needed to reflect the tastes of Roanoke Valley planters between 1800-1840.

Mrs. John B. McLeod, state regent, and Mrs. Evelyn M. Todd, chairman of the Sally-Billy House committee, took Smith's plan in a fund-raising effort that resulted in such items as a late 18th century slate-front desk from Surry County. The first piece acquired by the DAR, the desk is typical of those used by many planters in North Carolina, but is unusual in being made of curly maple.

Another of the more outstanding pieces of furniture is a Hepplewhite-style sideboard in mahogany decorated with light wood string inlay. The piece is from Maryland and dates from about 1790.

The purchase of the sideboard was made possible by donations from Dr. C.T. Smith of Philadelphia and members of the Smith family, descendants of William Ruffin Smith, who lived in the Sally-Billy House from 1835 until 1845.

Early 19th century acquisitions which followed were:

—A Sheraton-style secretary of New Hampshire origin dating about 1820.

—A New England maple candlestand.

—A cherry Sheraton-style four drawer chest from Forsyth County.

—A Hepplewhite-style walnut table from Guilford County.

—A pair of Sheraton-style card tables in mahogany from Philadelphia.

Among the accessory items in the collection are a fine pair of blown-glass candleholders with cut star decoration; an unusual pine box used originally on a wagon; a woven coverlet in red and beige from Alamance County with its original fringe; an English bone china tea set with polychrome and silver-resist decoration; and a pair of hollow-cut silhouettes from Virginia.

The one English piece of furniture acquired, purchased in honor of Mrs. McLeod, is a piano made by Broadwood of London around 1815. Records show that the Smith family owned a piano while living in the Sally-Billy House.

World Jamboree, Singer Roy Clark On PBS This Week

A unique view of the 14th World Scout Jamboree held in Lillehammer, Norway last August is presented in the documentary NORDJAMB, Monday, August 16 at 7:00 p.m. on Channel 25, Greenville.

This ultimate scouting experience begins in a huge camp in a Norwegian meadow with 17,000 scouts from around the world. The one-hour color film follows one scout, 17 year-old Jim Kleyla of Miami, Florida, who paid his way to the Jamboree with money earned by bagging groceries at a local supermarket.

NORDJAMB presents the story of the Jamboree in very human terms with no narration and minimum commentary by Kleyla as he meets scouts from many countries. In this international gathering with nearly 100 nations represented, language barriers are overcome by a contagious sense of camaraderie and understanding.

Jim Kleyla's experiences range from trading everything from shoes to tee shirts to learning about Nordic life at the Maihaugen outdoor museum. Other life styles of scouts from London to Tokyo blend in a montage of native dances, costumes, food and language.

The highlight of the Jamboree is a 16-mile hike through rugged Norwegian mountains. The scouts are divided into international patrols of eight with no regard for language barriers. The patrols, equipped with map and compass, traverse the wilderness and discover that the challenge of the outdoors, more than anything else, brings them closer together.

Nordjamb is a production of WPBT-TV Miami and is made possible by a grant from the Burger King Corporation.

After the concert was over, country-western great Roy Clark said he'd been nervous, but you'll never guess it watching the program. Roy joins Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra on EVENING AT POPS '76 today at 8:00 p.m. and on Tuesday, August 17 at 9:00 p.m. on Channel 25 Greenville.

Blue ruffles flouncing at his wrists, the Clark shows he is master of almost everything with strings — guitar, banjo and fiddle.

Clark flat-picks his way through a complicated, lively "Alabama Jubilee." Then he switches to the banjo for "Foggy Mountain Breakdown," the theme song from the movie Bonnie and Clyde, and practically starts a dueling banjo contest with himself. "Orange Blossom Special" comes next with Roy changing to the fiddle. Smiling slyly, Clark introduces the number with his special humor. "I hesitate to play this before serious musicians who practice six, maybe seven hours a day," he grins. But when it's over, the audience roars with applause. There's more, too, including a ferocious and intense solo rendition of "Malaguena."

EVENING AT POPS '76 is a production of WGBH-TV, Boston and is made possible by a grant from Martin Marietta Corporation

A Tribute To Wildlife

The National Wildlife Federation, the nation's largest conservation education organization, pays a special Bicentennial tribute to American wildlife in its new 1976 Conservation Stamp series.

The stamps, familiar to millions of Americans since their first appearance in 1938, feature full-color paintings of 36 animals and plants that have played an important role in America's history and development.

Represented on this year's stamps are favorite animals like the grizzly bear, bison and mountain lion, such birds as the bald eagle and cardinal, fish like the coho salmon and rainbow trout, and familiar trees like the sugar maple and redwood.

On March 20, 1938, the first set of stamps was presented to the world's then-most-famous-stamp collector—President Franklin D. Roosevelt. The President's enthusiastic reaction gave the stamp program a great boost and started in motion a modern-day conservation success story. Since that time, more than six billion wildlife stamps have been mailed out by the Federation.

Because of the prestige of the stamp series, the Federation has no trouble enlisting the services of leading wildlife artists like Roger Tory Peterson, Guy Coheleach, Don Eckelberry, Arthur Singer, Charles France and Chuck Ripper. Watercolors are the preferred medium for the stamp paintings and every detail is carefully checked for scientific accuracy.

To display the stamps, the Federation also has printed a Conservation Stamp album which tells the story behind each subject on the stamps, a practice inaugurated by the NWF in 1939.

The wildlife stamps traditionally have been a prime fund-raising tool for the non-profit, non-government conservation group. Last year, contributions from wildlife and nature lovers to the stamp program raised more than $500,000 to finance educational activities.

While most people use the stamps to seal letters and envelopes, others use them on party decorations, place mats and desk boxes. Teachers put them on homework papers to commend good students and many philatelists collect the annual Conservation Stamp album.

Among the many animals and birds that have graced the stamps, the white-tailed deer is the best-loved animal and the cardinal is the favorite bird, according to responses from contributors to the stamp program. Both of these creatures are included in the 1976 Bicentennial tribute to America's wildlife.

In recent years, the Federation has issued special stamps to supplement the annual program. These special sheets, some of which have been issued at Christmas time, have featured endangered species, songbirds and butterflies.

Historic Survey Planned For Town Of Hamilton

Dr. Larry E. Tise, Director of the N.C. Division of Archives and History, has announced that beginning in early 1977, the Division will conduct an historic survey and inventory of the Martin County town of Hamilton. Dr. Tise notes that Hamilton is on the list for study for the National Register of Historic Places and that the inventory will provide the data upon the basis of which a judgment can be made as to whether (1) the town or a portion of the town should be nominated to the National Register as an historic district or (2) a series of individual nominations of outstanding buildings is more appropriate. The project will produce a publication containing an inventory of historic places, photographs, an analysis of the architectural development of the town, historic data, suggestions for preservation planning and other pertinent information.

The project is being undertaken in cooperation with the Historic Darden Hotel Foundation, Inc. of Hamilton which has agreed to underwrite the costs of producing the inventory publication. Dr. Tise praised the excellent work of the Darden Foundation in promoting preservation in Hamilton.

At the present time, Fort Branch and the Darden Hotel in Hamilton are listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The Darden Hotel has recently been sold by the Darden Foundation to Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Riley, Jr. who intend to adaptively preserve the building for use as a period restaurant. In commenting upon the Darden Foundation's efforts with regard to the Darden Hotel to Sam Johnson, President of the Foundation, Dr. Tise stated: "The results you have produced with the Darden Hotel are especially commendable, for purchasing and reselling a historic property with a restrictive covenant, together with such an adaptive use, provides the state with an excellent example of progressive preservation work at its best."

Any old photographs, maps, letters, ledgers, contracts, deeds and similar materials concerned with the history of Hamilton will be very helpful to the persons conducting the survey. Particularly useful will be any materials concerning carpenters, contractors, builders or documents relating to the construction of any buildings. Architectural pattern books that may be in the hands of local citizens or descendants will, likewise, be valuable in tracing the architectural development of the town.

Materials of this nature made available to the Division of Archives and History will be very carefully handled, maintained and returned to the owners. In the case of photographs which the surveyors may use, eight by ten enlargements of each photograph will be made and one enlargement returned with the original to the owner. Persons having any such information pertaining to the history of the town of Hamilton are requested to contact Mrs. Beth M. Craft, Secretary-Treasurer of the Darden Foundation, Hamilton, N.C. 27840.

Poetry Society Meets Saturday

Members of the North Carolina Poetry Society will hear a reading of dramatic monologues in blank verse during their Saturday, August 21 meeting at the Great Smokies Hilton in Asheville.

Virginia L. Rudder, newspaper columnist, poet and author of After the Ifaluk and Other Poems will read and discuss her poems at the 12:30 luncheon.

The society's morning session will be devoted to a series of workshops directed by various poets. John Moses Pipkin of Greensboro will conduct a workshop entitled "Language in Love Poetry"; Ann Deagon of Greensboro will discuss "The Poet As Woman" (how women matter) and Ellen Turlington Johnston of Mooresville, will talk about "Humor In Verse".

Registration begins at 9:30. A business session, conducted by President Rebecca Rust of Raleigh, is scheduled for 10:00. The public is invited. Reservations for the luncheon must be sent to Henry Reeves, P.O. Box 143, Belmont, N.C. 28012. The cost is $5.

Iredell Papers Being Published

By PEGGY HOWE

A man who served as the first North Carolinian on the United States Supreme Court and who was intensely outspoken in his defense of independence in the subject of a book recently published.

The first volume of a series of four, the Papers of James Iredell is off the presses and now available from the Historical Publications Section, N. C. Department of Cultural Resources.

Edited by Dr. Don Higgenbotham of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Vol. I offers intimate glimpses into late 18th century life in North Carolina.

A native of England, James Iredell sailed to America in 1768 at the age of 17 to take the position of His Majesty's comptroller of customs at Edenton. Volume I begins Feb. 10, 1767, when James, with the help of his uncle, secured the position of comptroller in the colony.

In addition to that post, his long public life in eastern North Carolina included serving as attorney general and as a member of the Council of States. He was on the United States Supreme Court from 1790-1799.

Throughout the Revolution, James Iredell was outspoken in his defense of independence. A prolific letter writer, he carried on correspondence with many noted history makers such as Josiah Martin, Archibald Neilson, Richard Caswell, Thomas Burke, Samuel Johnston, Henry E. McCulloh and Nathaniel Dunkinfield.

Iredell's political essays and treatises are important as explanations of the American Whig positions, and correspondence with family and friends provides insight into late 18th century life in North Carolina.

Volume I concludes with late 1777, when Iredell was elected a state judge.

Volume II, expected to appear in the fall, will include Iredell's correspondence through 1783. Volume III will conclude his correspondence, and Volume IV, to be edited by Dr. John S. Semonche of the UNC-Ch Law School, will be a collection of Iredell's legal papers. (Vol I of "The Papers of James Iredell" is now available for $16 from the Historical Publications, Department of Cultural Resources, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, 27611.)

'Facing South' Expands

"Facing South," the weekly Sunday column which began running in this newspaper several weeks ago, continues to expand in growth in the number of newspapers in which it is featured, according to Jennifer Miller, Chapel Hill coordinator for the column.

Designed to feature images of the South — through vignettes on people, places and events, "Facing South" is now being carried by 28 newspapers in six Southern states. Distribution of the column includes weeklies as well as small and large dailies.

Ms. Miller indicates the founders are pleased with the growth of the column's syndication and notes there is still a need for adding contributor writers for the column.

Persons who may have material to be considered are asked to contact Ms. Miller at: Facing South, The Institute for Southern Studies, P. O. Box 230, Chapel Hill, N.C. 27514.

Director Named

The Board of Trustees of the Mint Museum in Charlotte has appointed Milton J. Bloch as the museum's director.

Bloch, currently director of the Monmouth Museum, Lincroft, N.J., will become director effective September 13.

The Mint, with a staff of 30, has an annual budget of half a million dollars and operates the Mint, the Museum of History, the Hezekiah Alexander homesite, and St. Mary's Chapel.

Graffiti Or Folk Art?

PAMLICO YOUNG FOLK ART... Two examples of graffiti, or young people's contemporary folk art, were photographed on the sides of a tin boat shelter along a pier at the fishing village of Vandemere in Pamlico County. The two examples, at top, reveal a fine touch in a comically realized picture of a cross-eyed tongue-out stick figure with a thatch of curls. The other could very well be a tall walking squid surrounded by primitive hieroglyphics. An inscription reveals the drawings are the handiwork of "the class of '76." The bottom photograph is an example of accident art. Photographed at the same spot as the student work, it depicts a design created by the accidental dripping of different colored paints on pier boards. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Seven Artists Exhibit

Seven artists are having an exhibition of their work in western North Carolina for a two day period, Saturday and Sunday, August 28 and 29.

The show, being held at the studios of Philip Moose, Herb Cohen and Jose Fumero, is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on the two days listed.

The studios are located three and one half miles south of Blowing Rock on Highway 221, the Linville Road. Signs will be posted to direct persons attending.

The seven and the media in which they will show are: Jack Brewer, glass; Jose Fumero, drawings and fabrics; Mitsuko Kambe, jewelry and metalsmithing; Herb Cohen, pottery; Pablo Fumero, stitchery; Philip Moose, painting; and Walter Soellner, jewelry and metalsmithing.

The public is invited to attend the exhibition and sale. Refreshments will be served.

Art, History Grants Received

The N. C. Department of Cultural Resources has received federal grants totalling more than $300,000 to extend 200 public service jobs for artists and historic site workers, department secretary Grace J. Rohrer announced earlier this week.

The jobs range from groundskeeper at a state historic site to manager of a professional theatre company. They were originally funded by earlier grants to the department under Title VI of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) and were scheduled to end this summer.

Newly funded under CETA Title II, the jobs are now extended through September, the end of the federal fiscal year.

The shift from Title VI, which provides emergency jobs in high unemployment areas, to Title II, which deals with public service jobs, means that more emphasis will be placed on training CETA workers in new, marketable skills.

An important provision of the grants requires the cultural resources department to seek permanent jobs for its CETA employees.

While individual cities and counties in the United States have made use of CETA funds for local programs, Mrs. Rohrer said that only in North Carolina are these funds being put to use in statewide programs in the arts.

While CETA artists have been actively sharing their work with North Carolinians in 62 counties, the historic site workers have enabled the cultural resources department to keep its 23 historic sites open to the public, despite a limited budget.

One of the new CETA grants, administered by the N.C. Arts Council, is for $215,717 and will extend 135 positions in the visual and performing arts and in arts administration. Painters, sculptors, musicians, dramatists and other artists are already being sought to work in dozens of community arts councils and local theatres.

Hiring under this grant is limited to unemployed residents in Cabarrus, Catawba, Cleveland, Edgecombe, Henderson, Iredell, Randolph, Robeson, Rowan, Surry, Union and Wilson Counties.

The other grant is for $91,340 and extends 65 positions in the department's Historic Sites Section. Hiring under this grant is limited to residents of Beaufort, Brunswick, Cabarrus, Chowan, Craven, Halifax, Iredell, Lenoir, Mecklenburg, Montgomery, Moore, New Hanover, Person, Washington and Wayne Counties.

Although many of the CETA positions are filled, some vacancies do exist. Interested individuals should contact the local Employment Security Commissions, where more detailed information will be available.

"I'm a redneck.
"I'm a Texas lover,
"I'm a redneck..."
— From the song "Redneck"
by Vernon Oxford

By KENNETH F. ENGLADE
DENTON, Tex. (UPI) — Rednecks. If you are one of the tribe, enjoy it. If you aren't, fake it. You may have to live with them for awhile.

Americans are making a cult of redneck worship. It's a fad stretching from New York to San Francisco, from Chicago to Miami. On the Washington cocktail circuit it's called "hick chic." Blue denim, western hats and boots are fashionable.

says Dr. James W. Lee, an educator by profession, a folklorist by avocation and a redneck by birth.

Lee, who teaches modern British literature to graduate students and will take over the Department of Graduate Studies at North Texas State University in September, grew up as the son of a mail carrier in the small community of Leeds, Ala.

"My parents honky-tonked and I went with them because nobody could afford babysitters." Later, he said, he and the other children shied away from the typical country-style night on the town because it labeled them as rednecks.

"We spent our time trying to get as far away from it as we possibly could," Lee said.

"When the young people started to do the redneck act, I got interested in it. I've always been interested in folklore," he said.

Lee is a recognized expert and a speaker in demand in the area. One of his talks is about redneck women and is subtitled
"Mothers and Others."

While some of those who turn up at sophisticated parties on the coasts wearing tight, faded jeans and western shirts have never been near a farm or a ranch, the scene in Texas is quite different.

"You have the honest-to-God rednecks whose dress — which is now being affected by the young — has been worn by goats and sheep in honky tonks for as long as I can remember.
And then you have the pseudo rednecks," Lee said.

The pseudo rednecks, Texas style, encompass those who have no legitimate claim to the "redneck" title even though the term now includes any member of the working class.

"These are the hippie slash rednecks," Lee said. They joined the movement when the hippie fad began to fade.

If a cross section could be drawn, the pseudo redneck would be someone who drinks Coors or Lone Star beer, the latter from the foot-tall bottles called "longnecks."

"They listen to Steve Fromholtz, Michael Murphey and Jerry Jeff Walker. They drive an old pickup — fully restored — wear turquoise jewelry, would like to have boots by Charlie Dunn and a hat from Texas Hatters," Lee said.

The real redneck was born that way and will die that way.

"Every generation had a nostalgia craze, but this won't pass away among the (real) rednecks," Lee said.

The real redneck, according to Lee's profile, drives a new pickup truck but aspires to a Cadillac. "If he has a second car more than likely it will be a '62 Impala with the doors wired up."

The real redneck also:
— Listens to Willie Nelson

"or anything that comes over the country music station";
— Drinks any brand of beer

("It all comes out of the same horse"), Jack Daniels whisky straight or mixed with cola; — Watches all televised football games;

— Honky tonks when he goes out ("the chances are much greater he'll get flat ass drunk");

— Likes his wife "pure and virginal" even though he is not averse to "fooling around" before he decides to settle down;

— Regards the CB radio as a status symbol second only to a Cadillac.

The genuine redneck's ultimate hero is John Wayne.
"Everybody out there is doing John Wayne or (rodeo champion) Larry Mahan," Lee said.

Lee said redneck women also have recognizable traits that mesh with their culture.

"While the redneck male is interested in money and masculinity, the redneck female is interested in money and femininity.

"They want to be good wives and good mothers. They want to take a wild country boy and settle him down. They want to be good mothers. The feminist movement has no appeal among the working class."

In Texas, the rednecks and pseudo rednecks coexist and even mingle. They go to the same concerts and some of the same bars. But the real rednecks also have their own honky tonks which the pseudo rednecks seldom visit. They are places where beards and long hair are suspect, although the real rednecks seldom make an issue of the pseudo redneck's tonorial styles in the mixed bars.

Lee, who has sported a full beard for 10 years, said it never stops him from going into the honky tonks lining the highways around Dallas and Fort Worth. However, he said the practice is not without its potential for danger.

"Texas rednecks tend to be polite and about 90 per cent of the time there's no trouble. As long as you can say, 'Hi, how yew?', you aren't going to get into trouble."

"I just smile and become extremely country and everything is fine. That's not to say one won't break your face, but if you're polite..." Lee said, letting the sentence dangle.

The Palmer Method

Mysterious Factor Prevents Palmer From Tourney Lead

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer
BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Something happened. Some small, almost insignificant, mysterious thing occurred. And, except for the little item that will remain a mystery until and if Arnold Palmer decides to identify it, the aging, still-dynamic, slope-shouldered charger from Latrobe, Pa. could be leading the 58th Professional Golfers Association national championship. "Something happened, something that I don't want to go into," Palmer said. "I don't want it to become part of the whole thing. It was something I had no control over. "And I let it get to me. "I let my mind dwell on it. "I made a mountain out of a molehill and I couldn't regain my composure." That was on Friday. The 46-year-old living legend had just birdied the eighth hole at the Congressional Country Club course. That put him one under par for the tournament and among the leaders. His vast army of followers were all but delirious. Was he going to do it? Was Arnie, at last, going to win the PGA? Was he poised to break a three-year victory famine? It wasn't to be. He three-putted the ninth hole for a bogey. He played his back nine in 42. And he finished with a horrendous 76 — a score bad enough to prompt some slamming around in the locker room — and was 13 strokes back at 147. Palmer rallied Saturday with a 68, including birdies on two of his last four holes. It put him at 215, five over par, going into Sunday's final round of the only important tournament he hasn't won. But for the 76, and the thing that triggered it, he could be leading. "I don't want to refer to it," he said at least twice. "It's just something that happened to me." "The only thing I know," said Doc Giffin, Palmer's administrative assistant and longtime friend, "is that three-putt. That's the only thing he's mentioned, at home or any place else. It just got to him and he couldn't get it out of his mind." "It's not my game that needs working on, it's my head," Palmer said at the time. Now he doesn't want to talk about it. His 68 Saturday represented his best round in the PGA since 1966. And it put him in better position than he thought. "I'm pleased with the way I played," he said after finishing his round some three hours ahead of the other leaders. "But I am not optimistic. I have nothing to be optimistic about. I'm five over par. Except for those last 10 holes Friday, which I played eight over, I might be optimistic." A few minutes later he completed a mass interview with scores of eager reporters then paused to look at the big leader board showing the relative position of the pacesetters. They were backing up. At that time only Gil Morgan and Charles Coody were under par. "Only two under par? Is that right?" Palmer asked, his eyes going wide. "You're kidding. Hmmm. That's interesting." About that time Coody bogeyed. His scoreboard number changed from red to blue. "Now that's one under par. Morgan," Palmer said and sipped a beer with a thoughtful expression. "Well. Hmmm. Well." A hint of that eye-squinting famous smile appeared. "It's a funny game. Five over par might not be bad. "Anything can happen."

LeDoux Is Done

UTICA, N.Y. (AP) — Moments after disposing of Scott LeDoux with his powerful right hand Saturday, former heavyweight champion George Foreman was talking about another shot at the title he lost to Muhammad Ali two years ago in Africa. "Right now, I want to be champion, really champion," Foreman said in his dressing room as he dabbed at a bloody nose. Foreman ended the nationally televised fight with a flurry of punches at 2:58 of the third round. After the fight, Foreman talked about his future. "I'll fight anybody who will fight George Foreman. I want a top contender, someone in the top 10 who I haven't beat. I think that is Muhammad." Foreman said he is considering an offer to fight Britain's Joe Bugner. But he said he wanted the toughest fighter he could find. "I want to stay active," he said. "I am ahead of my schedule as far as coming back," the former champion said. "The

Morgan Holds Slim Lead As Rain Halts PGA Play

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Surprise leader Dr. Gil Morgan lost three strokes to par but clung with drowning desperation to a precarious, shrinking one-shot lead Saturday in the storm-interrupted, incomplete third round of the PGA National Championship.

Morgan, an obscure, nonpracticing optometrist from Wewoka, Okla., was one of 24 players stranded by a violent thunderstorm that struck the Congressional Country Club course at 5:09 p.m., EDT, and forced a suspension of play just as the national television coverage was beginning on this, the last of the year's four major international golf championships.

A hour and seven minutes later, officials decreed the heavy rains—which pelted the Maryland hills of suburban Washington D.C., in the company of dancing lightning and gusting winds—had made the course unplayable.

The players who failed to complete their rounds—and they included such challengers as Charles Coody, David Graham and defending champion Jack Nicklaus — will resume play from the point they were interrupted at 7:30 a.m., EDT, Sunday.

The final round of 18 holes will be played immediately afterward — weather permitting. More thundershowers are forecast.

The 29-year-old Morgan, who had a four-stroke lead when the day's play began in sweltering heat, lost three strokes to par over his first 11 holes of the third round. He was three under par for the tournament and playing the 12th hole when play was held up.

Coody, a former Masters champion who marks his play with an assortment of nervous mannerisms, had pulled to within one stroke. He was two under par after 13 holes. Graham, a slender Australian who won the rich Westchester Classic less than a month ago, was one under par after 15 holes.

Nicklaus, holder of a record 14 major professional championships and the pre-tourney pick to gain a record-matching fifth PGA title here, was three strokes off the pace. So were veteran Don January and young Tom Kite. All were at even par, Nicklaus through 13 holes, January and Kite through 12.

The suspension of play, to be completed Sunday, was one of several options open to officials. They could have washed out the entire round, wiping out the scores on all completed rounds, and replayed the entire round from the start on Sunday. They could have ordered two rounds Sunday. They could have gone to single rounds Sunday and Monday.

They were prompted to their decision by the fact that 52 players in the final field of 76 had finished play.

Arnold Palmer was one of them. And despite a horrendous 76 in Friday's round, he wasn't out of it. The 46-year-old living legend, still the most popular figure the game as known, thrilled his vast gallery Saturday with a 68 that included a 25-foot birdie putt on the final hole.

That effort, marking his best score in the PGA since 1966, gave him a 54 hole total of 215, five over par.

"I still think a score of 280 is going to be very good," said Palmer, who would have to shoot a 65 to make that mark. "It may not be good enough, but I'll take it right now."

Of those who completed their rounds, Dave Stockton, who denied Palmer the 1970 PGA crown — one of several times he's come close in the quest for this one major title that has eluded him — was the leader. Stockton just beat the storm to the white, Mediterranean-style clubhouse with a one-under-par 69 that gave him a 211 total, one over par.

Lee Elder, the nation's leading black professional who created a sensation when he became the first of his race to play in the Masters, was next with a 70-212. Journeyman tourists Joe Porter and John Schlee followed, each with 70-213.

Morgan, who has yet to win in three full years of tour activity, started play in sweltering heat with a four-stroke advantage. He managed to retain the top spot only because others backed up.

Morgan had to one-putt for par on the first hole. He threeputted for bogey on the second. He made a scrambling par on the third. He bogeyed the fourth. The good doctor, licensed to practice in two states, fought his way to pars on the next five holes, but bogeyed the 10th.

But Kite, alone in second at the start of the day's play, and Tom Weiskopf, the first round leader, also fell victim to the woes and worries, pressures and problems of a major championship.

Kite opened at two under par. He birdied the second but lost the stroke on the next hole. He made double bogey six on the next one, bogeyed the next and drifted back in the pack.

Weiskopf, that enormously talented man who has come so close so often, lost four strokes to par in three holes starting on the second. He took 15 strokes—one of them a cold shank—to play three holes that have a par of 11. He, too, was out of it.

January, that 46-year-old comeback artist who won the Tournament of Champions earlier in the season, made six consecutive pars starting out, remained one under par to that point, then bogeyed the seventh.

Nicklaus made par on his first eight holes, birdied the ninth, but gave the stroke back again with a bogey on the next hole.

Coody got it to two under par early in the round, bogeyed the fifth and sixth, then rallied with birdies on the ninth and 10th. Graham moved up with birdies on the 12th and 13th.

Nicklaus was one of the first to leave the course, heading for cover when the storm was still approaching and well before the siren had sounded calling play.

He heard the rolling thunder after his approach shot on the 13th and said, "That's it." Coody, one of his playing partners, persuaded him to putt out and finish the hole, pointing out that "it's just thunder—we haven't seen the lightning."

Just as they finished the hole a flash appeared against the dark, lowering skies.

"I saw that one," Nicklaus said and began the long trek to the clubhouse.

Moments later play was called.

Tennis Women Concur On Test

By STEVE HERMAN
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The top-seeded women in the U.S. Clay Court tennis tournament agreed Saturday that a genetic test of chromosomes is reasonable to determine whether a player is, in fact, a woman. "I think that's right," said Lesley Hunt, the women's No. 1 seed here. "In the Olympics they have to do that, and if there are any queries, that's a logical way to resolve it."

The U.S. Tennis Association ruled earlier Saturday that the test would be required of all women players entered in the U.S. Open Tennis Championships at Forest Hills, N.Y., next month.

"We feel that will set the precedent (for future tournaments)," said USTA President Stan Malles.

The ruling involved the status of Renee Richards, 41, who underwent a sex-change operation and now wants to be allowed to compete at Forest Hills as a woman.

Dr. Richards was formerly

Dr. Richard Raskind, an ophthalmologist. She won the women's singles competition at the La Jolla tourney in California last month.

Miss Hunt acknowledged there was talk of some women withdrawing at Forest Hills if Dr. Richards is allowed to compete.

"I think they all should pull out," the blonde Australian said. "If she's accepted, then one other person is out. If she passes the chromosome test, then she still should have to get a computer ranking to qualify for the tournament."

Second-seeded Cynthia Doerner, Miss Hunt's doubles partner, agreed. "She should have the sex test, and if she does, it's only fair we all do."

Mrs. Doerner said a chromosome test to determine whether a player is actually a woman is "fair enough. Obviously, we are all going to pass it and he's (Dr. Richards) not."

Miss Hunt added, "If he passes the chromosome test, I'll play him."

Renee Richards

USTA Decides Women To Undergo Chromosome Tests

NEW YORK (AP) — All competitors entered in the women's division of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships will be required to undergo sex determination tests, the U.S. Tennis Association said Saturday.

The action stems from a bid by Renee Richards to compete as a woman in the Open which gets under way at Forest Hills, N.Y., Sept. 1. Before a sex change, Renee Richards was Dr. Richard Raskind, an ophthalmologist and a leading player in the men's 35-and-older category. Dr. Richards is 41 years old and stands 6-foot-2.

In a two-paragraph statement, the USTA said that "persons competing as women in the U.S. Open Tennis Championships will be required to undergo sex determination tests (sometimes referred to as the chromosome test) as used by the Olympics."

"While the USTA is sensitive to and respects the rights of individuals to live as they may choose, it believes that the entry into women's events at the U.S. Open, the leading international tennis tournament, of persons not genetically female would introduce an element of inequality and unfairness into the championships," the statement said.

As Dr. Richards, she won a women's singles tournament at La Jolla, Calif., last month, beating the top seed, 20-year old Robin Harris.

Tournament officials in La Jolla did not learn of Dr. Richards' sex operation until the tourney was completed. She has been accepted to play in the women's division of a South Orange, N.J., tournament.

In a statement released through World Tennis magazine recently, Dr. Richards claimed she was now recognized as a woman "in the eyes of the law."

Dr. Richards has said she would pursue her right to play in the women's competition at the U.S. Open "in whatever way necessary."

Sprinter Protests Training

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Sprinter Brenda Morehead, who was forced out of the recent Olympics with a hamstring injury in her right leg, said here Saturday that her difficulties in the games were due to a sharp change in training ritual imposed by her Olympic coaches.

In her first public appearance since she pulled up lame in the second heat of a 100-meter qualification race, Miss Morehead said she had indications of pain in the leg prior to the actual injury.

"They (Olympic coaches) knew what we were supposed to do, but they did what they wanted to do," she said.

"There was no individual contact by the coaches with me."

Alex Ferency, head coach of the U.S. Olympic girls team, had criticized her attitude during the games in Montreal, saying she had "caused quite a little problem for us."

big thing is, I'm listening." He said he had been worried by LeDoux' prematch confidence.

"He was loud-mouthing me. He called me a fool. He was mean to me. So I expected him to come right at me. But instead he started counter-punching me a lot. He did a real good job of it."

"He was extremely smart. He didn't go for any of my stuff," Foreman continued. "I had a tough time with this guy. He had my nose bleeding. I couldn't believe it. I think he can beat a lot of guys who can't punch as hard as I can."

Before the fight, the Minneapolis boxer had taunted Foreman, saying the former champion didn't know how to fight. After the bout, a subdued LeDoux blamed his loss on a mistake.

"I got myself knocked out," LeDoux said. "I pulled down. I pulled into something."

"He zigged when he should have zagged," said one of LeDoux' cornermen. "He didn't even see it coming."

Yanks, 5-4

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Ken Holtzman scattered eight hits and Roy White had four extra weeks of football home run of the season, leading the New York Yankees to a 5-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins Saturday in a nationally televised game.

Holtzman, 10-8, became the fourth Yankee pitcher to reach the 10-victory plateau this season. Dave Goltz, 9-12, took the loss.

White, whose sixth inning solo homer proved to be the winning margin, also two doubles and a single. He scored twice and drove in one run.

It was the fifth consecutive victory for New York and the ninth loss in the last 11 outings for the Twins.

OAKLAND (AP) — Vida Blue pitched a five-hitter and Sal Bando drove in three runs Saturday to lead the Oakland A's past the Boston Red Sox 7-3 for the A's eighth consecutive victory.

Blue, 11-10, struck out nine and did not walk a batter.

He retired the first 11 batters he faced before Fred Lynn hit his eighth homer of the season in the fourth inning. The only other Boston hit over the first eight innings was a bloop single by Butch Hobson in the sixth. He was erased when Rick Burleson grounded into a double play.

Burleson and Doug Griffin singled with two out in the ninth and Lynn doubled them both home, but Blue ended the game by getting Carl Yastrzemski to line back to the mound.

Texas, 4-3

CLEVELAND (AP) — Lenny Randle's run-scoring single in the 10th inning carried the Texas Rangers to a 4-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday.

Jim Kern, 8-6, walked Jeff Burroughs to open the 10th, then yielded a single to Danny Thompson before Randle slapped the game-winning hit to left.

Steve Foucart, 8-6, was the winner, giving up only one hit in 32-3 innings of relief for the Rangers.

Burroughs had four hits, including his 12th home run of the season, and drove in three runs. Rick Manning had four hits for the Indians.

CHICAGO (AP) — Ray Burris stopped Los Angeles on four hits and George Mitterwald drove in both runs with a single and a sacrifice fly as the Chicago Cubs beat the Dodgers 2-0 Saturday.

It was the fifth consecutive victory for Burris, 10-11, who faced only 29 batters — two more than the minimum. He struck out one, walked none and had the batters repeated hitting grounders as he recorded his fifth complete game.

Mitterwald's two-out single in the first against Doug Rau, 10-10, drove in Bill Madlock, who had doubled. His sacrifice fly with the bases loaded in the sixth scored Rick Monday with an unearned run.

The Dodgers' Jim Lytle got an infield hit in the first inning but was caught stealing. Steve Garvey opened the fifth for Los Angeles with a bunt single. After Ron Cey hit into a forceout, Burris got Leron Lee to ground into a double play.

Bill Buckner got the Dodgers' first hit to the outfield, a two-out single in the seventh. Bill Russell singled to center in the eighth for their eighth hit.

Reds Stopped

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets took advantage of three walks by Pat Zachry in the first inning to score twice and held on behind the pitching of rookie Nino Espinosa and reliever Skip Lockwood to beat the Cincinnati Reds 2-1 Saturday.

Espinosa, 2-2, worked the first 61-3 innings. Lockwood then retired all eight men he faced to register his 14th save.

The loss was only the third in the last 17 games for the Reds, who still lead the National League West by 13½ games. The second-place Dodgers were beaten by the Chicago Cubs 2-0 Saturday.

Bucs Rally

HOUSTON (AP) — Mario Mendoza's double with two out in the ninth inning drove home Richie Hebner with the winning run Saturday as the Pittsburgh Pirates rallied to defeat the Houston Astros 5-4.

With one out in the ninth and Houston leading 4-3, Dave Parker reached first on Rob Andrews' error. He scored the tying run on Hebner's double, then Hebner came home on Mendoza's bad-hop double off Houston reliever Gene Pentz, 3-3.

Dave Giusti, 3-3, picked up the victory with two scoreless innings in relief of John Candelaria and Bob Moose.

Bob Watson had provided Houston with a 4-2 lead in the sixth inning when he hit a grand-slam homer off Candelaria, who had pitched a no-hitter against Los Angeles in his previous start Monday and who allowed just one hit over the first five innings.

BALTIMORE (AP) — A grand slam home run by Lee May and a two-run blast by Reggie Jackson helped Baltimore to an early 8-0 lead and the Orioles held on to beat the Chicago White Sox 8-6 in the rain-delayed opener of Saturday's twin-night doubleheader.

Jim Palmer, with 31-3 innings of relief help from four pitchers, became the league's first 16-game winner.

ATLANTA (AP) — Right-hander Harry Rasmussen hurled a four-hitter and Keith Hernandez drilled a two-run single, sparking the St. Louis Cardinals to a 4-0 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday night.

The way Rose High School football coach Dave Bumgarner looks at it, his Rampants have four extra weeks of football practice—or at least, they had it.

Those four weeks came last fall when the Rampants went all the way to the 4-A State Football Championship, a four-week campaign beyond the regular season.

"Those four weeks really helped us," he said. "We've gotten much further along in a lot of ways because of it."

While there are still three weeks left before the start of the 1976 grid wars, Bumgarner feels that his offensive unit is progressing well. He's somewhat worried about some phases of the defense and the punting game, but he feels they are going to come along.

"I'll knock on wood, but I have to say things have gone extremely well so far," he said as this week's drills came to a close.

The biggest problem continues to be numbers. "This has hurt us. There are practices when we have key people missing, mainly due to work," Bumgarner expects this factor to lessen as the time for the opening of school draws closer; with vacations and summer jobs ending.

"We have 22 players who look darn good," the coach proclaimed. "While the defense and the punting game are causing us some worries, we have some good defensive players. They are trying hard."

The offense, right now, is ahead of the defense, an unusual situation in the Rampant camp. "Usually the defense is way ahead. Last year, it was all we could do to score in a scrimmage. But this year, we've been scoring pretty well."

Despite the fact that Bumgarner is looking for another banner year for the Rampants, he must replace most of the starters from last year's team. Only Cliff Randolph and MacDonald Blount return from last year's offense. "I'd have to say Mac is our best running back right now," the coach said. "And his experience is the big factor there."

Jeff Aldridge currently is leading in the quarterback battle, is doing a good job running the offense and throwing the ball. "We scored four or five times on passes in our last scrimmage," Bumgarner said.

"Both Randolph and Marc Conway are doing a good job catching the ball from the end positions."

The other running back could go to either Robert Williams or Mike Joyner. Curtis Little currently is holding down the fullback slot.

The line shows some inexperience. Most of those starting this fall will probably have seen JV action last fall. They include guards Frager Sanders and Franklin Clark, and tackles Jay Cox and Larry Speight. Gene Pittman and David Murray are battling for center.

"Rocky Butler could be a candidate for any one of the line spots," Bumgarner said. "And we have some others who could figure in, too. They include Burney Fleming, Neal Flake and some others."

On the defensive side, all but Butler and Gary Porter have to be replaced. Derek Brewington is moving from end to guard, and he currently is recovering from an injury, but should be ready for the opener.

A newcomer, David Northrop, who has just moved into the area, is looking very good at linebacker, the coach said. Bryant Morton and Larry Boyette, both out for the first time, are also looking good behind the line.

The secondary appears to be a question mark. Mike Shank, Greg Lassiter, Jule White, William Staton, Randolph and possibly Ronnie Chapman could see playing time here.

As far as the kicking game is concerned, Brewington is back to handle the kickoffs and placements, and looks solid there. The punting game, however, is still unsettled. Wright Hooks, Bill Collier, Aldridge, and White are all working off the snaps.

Bumgarner's charges will continue two-a-day drills this week. They will hold a scrimmage on Monday evening, and work light a few times, then gear up for a trip to Fayetteville South View on Friday, winding up twice daily workouts.

After that, the polishing work will continue until the opener in Goldsboro on September 3.

Riddick, Other Olympians Repeat Montreal Feats

VIAREGGIO, Italy (AP) — Steve Riddick won the 100-meter dash, beating Italian Pietro Mennea and fellow American Houston McTear, at an international track and field meet Saturday night.

Riddick, who was timed in 10.27, got off to a good start, began to fade at the end but still maintained enough momentum to lunge ahead of Mennea and McTear. Mennea was timed in 10.35 and McTear at 10.39.

Guy Druet of France repeated his Olympic triumph and won the 110-meter hurdles. Druet was clocked in 13.51, beating Americans Charles Foster and Willie Davenport, an Olympic bronze medalist. Both Americans were clocked in 13.61.

Other American winners were Mac Wilkins in the discus, Al Feuerbach in the shot put, Arnie Robinson in the long jump, Fred Newhouse in the 400 meters, Jim Bolding in the 400 hurdles and Cyndy Poor in the women's 1,500 meters.

Wilkins, the U.S. Olympic discus gold medalist, won with a toss of 215 feet, 2 inches, well ahead of Italian Moreno Bordini's throw of 173-4.

Feuerbach won the shot with a toss of 64-1, and Olympic gold medalist Robinson won the long jump with a leap of 26-1½.

Newhouse, Olympic silver medalist, led a 1-2-3 American sweep of the 400. Newhouse was timed in 45.11, followed by Herman Frazier in 45.76 and Robert Taylor in 45.84. Bolding won the 400 hurdles in 49.38, beating American Quentin Weeley, who was timed in 51.18.

Miss Poor won the 1,500 meters in 4:08.40, only 45 one-hundredths of a second ahead of Gabriella Dorio of Italy. American Francine Larrieu was third in 4:09.22.

Mike Boit of Kenya won the men's 800 meters in 1:45.07, more than two seconds ahead of American Mark Belger, 1:47.36.

Tom Woods finished second behind Hanspeter Abeggler of Switzerland in the high jump. Abeggler leaped 7-1¼, and Woods settled for 7-0¾.

Debra Sapenter finished third in the women's 400 meters behind Irena Szewinska of Poland and Pyrio Hagman of Finland. Miss Szewinska was timed in 50.40, Miss Hagman in 53.39 and Miss Sapenter in 52.18.

However, this year's team will be missing quarterbacks Gene Dotson and Rod Lanning, who have graduated.

Tying for the quarterback position are sophomores Marty Crosby and Mike Condon and senior Joe Sumrall, who made two late-season starts in 1975.

Another sophomore Alvin Perkins, held first team listing at tailback at spring drills, but senior Andrew Johnson is a possible starter if he recovers fully from knee surgery, which forced him to miss the final nine games last fall.

Davidson, Two Others, Start SC Campaigns

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
(First of a series)

Of the other nine—football schools in the Southern Conference, East Carolina will not meet three of them this year. None of these three will be eligible for the title, nor will any game played by them count in the standings.

The three are Davidson College, Marshall University and the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga. In addition, games played by Western Carolina, the other new member, will also not count in the standings, but they appear on the ECU slate.

Davidson expects to field a better team this year, while Marshall and UTC both feel that they may be on the verge of getting things really in order to be a power in the conference when they come into full membership.

For the Wildcats, however, this will be the final year in the league as they and three others, ECU, William & Mary, and VMI all bow out after this year.

Davidson
Coach Ed Farrell is looking for better things out of the Wildcats of Davidson this year. The schedule is more what Davidson is aiming for in its program of Division II status. There are still some tough ones, however, as the 'Cats open up with strong Colgate.

Still, the coach feels that Davidson can be a winner on its level.

The Wildcats will operate out of the wing-T offense and use a 5-2 defensive scheme. Again this year, the team will be young, as there are only 15 juniors and seniors on the team. But there is experience because of the heavy use of freshmen last year. A total of 22 players return who saw some starting duty last season, and only the offensive halfback slot lacks experience.

The offensive line should be improved. Jay Kopel (6-4, 202), Phil Toye (6-2, 235), and Jack Summe (6-1, 218) all have experience and will see much action at tackle. Nicky Guy (6-0, 220) and Chip Howell (5-11, 215) return at the guards, with Luis Abreu (6-1, 225) back at center.

Terrell Rhye (6-1, 215) played a lot last year at fullback and is expected to battle with Page Walley (6-0, 225) for the starting spot. Bob McCarthy (6-0, 170) and Sid Osborne (6-2, 188) appear to be set to square off for the quarterback slot.

Mike Harris (6-1, 191) saw some starting action at split end while Larry Cries (6-3, 210) and Ron Cannon (6-1, 220) are the top candidates at tight end. Cannon moves in from the defensive end spot.

Mike Peskosky (6-2, 209) and Chris Crosby (6-0, 190) look like they will hold down the defensive end positions, with Frank Fields (6-0, 230), Mark Wilfley (6-4, 204); Mike Sheridan (5-11, 215) and John Huie (6-5, 215) all working at the three inside positions.

Linebacker may be the strongest position on the team with Paul Andrews (6-0, 205) returning for a third year. He'll be joined by Cliff Hester (5-10, 200) and Jerry Taylor (6-0, 220).

In the backfield, Joel Golmont (6-1, 175) and Lee Wilder (6-0, 165) will be at the corners, with Jim Nichols (6-0, 178), Chris Boslet (6-0, 183) and Landis Wade (5-10, 165) at the safeties.

"We just find a few freshmen who are ready to play early in the year," Farrell said, "if we are to be on our way to a successful program. And we've got to get strong leadership from our juniors and seniors."

Marshall

If Marshall's hopes for the year appear to be "fuzzy," you won't find supporters of the Thundering Herd unhappy. When they speak of "Fuzzy" they are talking about John (Fuzzy) Fillier, who goes into his senior year as the number one major college career pass receiver in the country. The 5-11 split end has a school record 127 receptions, including 54 last year.

He's just one of 18 starters who return to this year's Herd.

The quarterback position belongs to sophomore Paul Kuzio, who was a safety last season. He took over the number one job from part-time starter Bud Nelson during the spring. "He's quick, a better than adequate passer and knows how to make the decision on the option," Coach Frank Ellwood says of the 6-0, 181-pounder.

Still, he's expected to get pressure from Nelson and south paw Larry Berkery, who played spring baseball and missed the drills.

Three other starters last year have moved to new places. Mike Sprouse went from fullback to inside linebacker; Dan Wells from tackle to guard on offense, and Mike Kesling from middle guard to offensive tackle.

Inside linebacker Bill Yanosky leads the defensive crew. He's been the leading tackler on the team for the past two years.

The Herd returns a total of 27 lettermen, 18 starters, and they have a fine incoming freshman class.

"After I took over last year, they asked me how much improvement we expected, and I told them 100 per cent. Well, they won one game the previous year, and we won two this year, so I guess I delivered. This year, though, we do expect to see a lot of improvement. We're on the right track now."

Marshall does not play anyone in the Southern this year, however, playing mostly opponents from the Mid-America Conference.

Chattanooga

Former pro football player Joe Morrison is looking forward to his fourth season as coach of the UTC Moccasins. Last year's team finished with a 5-5-1 record, but won four of its last six games.

"I believe our program has turned the corner during those games," Morrison said. "I saw an enthusiasm I haven't seen before."

A total of 35 lettermen return for the Mocs, with eight starters back on offense and six on defense.

Quarterback Doug Elstad, who'll be starting for the third year, heads the last of returnees. He's joined by a veteran line led by center Garfield Wells, and tackle Pete Pullara.

Top defensive starters include Stan Robbs, Phil Saville and Tim Collins, all linebackers.

The schedule gives some problems with four of the first five on the road, and the lone home game a visit by Western Kentucky, co-champ of the Ohio Valley Conference last year, and NCAA Division II runner-up in the playoffs.

Two Southern foes are on the list, Western Carolina and The Citadel.

"We don't enter the season without problems," Morrison said, "but we have a lot less than we've even had in my previous three years. If we get started quickly, this could be a very good season."

Roger (Not Quite) The Dodger

Dallas Cowboys' quarterback Roger Staubach holds his son, Jeff, one-and-a-half years old, on Roger's return to Dallas Friday. Roger also displays the bandage over his left eye that covers nine stitches. Staubach was struck by another Cowboy quarterback Clint Longley in the cowboy dressroom at Thousand Oaks, Cal. Thursday. Longley left camp shortly thereafter. Head coach Tom Landry said Longley will be accommodated by a trade as soon as possible. (AP Wirephoto)

NEW YORK (AP) — Leon Wagner, a good-hit, no-field outfielder in the 1960s, has made a smooth transition to the silver screen, batting 1.000 in hit movies.

Wagner, tagged with the nickname "Daddy Wags," had stops in San Francisco, St. Louis, California and Cleveland during a 12-year major league career in which he batted .272 and hit 211 home runs.

Now his addresses are Hollywood, Calif., and "on location." Wagner did commercials and a couple of television shows before landing a construction worker's role in John Cassavetes' "Woman Under the Influence."

"I made a couple of grand for one week," said Wagner, speaking by telephone from Hollywood. "The movie was nominated for an Academy Award, and I said: 'Wow, if I never do another one, at least I did a heavy one.'"

But he did do another movie, landing a sizable role in "The Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars & Motor Kings" — a film about a barnstorming black baseball team in 1939. The movie stars Billy Dee Williams, James Earl Jones and Richard Pryor.

Wagner, 42, whose top baseball salary was $47,000, said he grossed $10,000 for eight weeks work on "Bingo Long."

"Maybe it'll be nominated for an Academy Award," he said. "I'd rather do one heavy movie a year than three karate movies and a couple of 007s."

The movie has been well received, which doesn't surprise Wagner.

"We had the same camera crew that shot 'Jaws,'" he said. "We knew the crew was hot." Looking for a 1930s atmosphere, the "Bingo Long" crew went to Atlanta but Wagner said the area "was too modest, so we moved to Macon, Ga."

"It was great there," he said.

"The Count" Beats The Jinx And Beats The Phillies for 13th Win

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

Baseball players are generally a superstitious lot, and going for victory No. 13 on Friday the 13th—against a team like the Philadelphia Phillies, no less—would be enough to cause most pitchers to tread softly.

Not John Montefusco. "It's my lucky day," said the flamboyant hurler known as The Count, who allowed just six hits in pitching the San Francisco Giants to a 3-0 victory over the Phils, raising his record to 13-9.

"Heck, I got 13 strikeouts five or six times in the minors. This is my anniversary with my girl friend. I went to the track yesterday and they parked me in space No. 13.

"It's my lucky number."

Elsewhere in the National League, the Cincinnati Reds beat the New York Mets 7-3; the Chicago Cubs edged the Los Angeles Dodgers 3-2 in 15 innings in the opener of their doubleheader before bowing 8-7 in the second game; the Montreal Expos blanked the San Diego Padres 6-0 in the first game of their doubleheader and then lost 4-3 in the nightcap; the St. Louis Cardinals shut out the Atlanta Braves 8-0, and the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Houston Astros 8-5.

Reds 7, Mets 3

Another player who is not bothered by superstitions is Reds shortstop Dave Concepcion—he wears No. 13 on his back.

And on Friday the 13th, he pounded a pair of home runs, a double and a single to help the Reds beat New York.

The rest of the Reds offense came from George Foster, who drove in four runs with his 27th home run of the season and a pair of singles to raise his season total of runs batted in to 106, easily tops in the majors.

Cubs 3-7, Dodgers 2-8

Chicago took the opener when Rick Monday scored from third on a wild pitch by Charlie Hough with two out in the 15th inning. Monday had singled with two out and gone to third on a single by Jose Cardenal.

The Cubs appeared headed for a sweep, leading 8-6 in the ninth inning of the nightcap, but they couldn't hold on.

Expos 6-3, Padres 0-4

Steve Rogers, 5-10, pitched his third shutout of the season, stopping the Padres on six singles in the opener. Warren Cromartie and Ellis Valentine had two-run singles for the Expos.

The Padres gained a split when Brent Strom and Butch Metzger combined for a six-hitter. Ted Kubiak's two-run single was the big hit of the game for San Diego.

Cards 8, Braves 0

Hector Cruz' three-run double capped a six-run outburst in the fifth inning that backed the eight-hit pitching of Pete Falcone, 9-11. Cruz drove in another run in the seventh with a sacrifice fly.

Pirates 8, Astros 5

Manny Sanguillen's two-run homer capped a three-run uprising in the eighth inning that clinched Pittsburgh's victory. A single by Richie Zisk and a triple by Rennie Stennett preceded Sanguillen's second home run of the season.

Oilers Suffer From Sickness

By The Associated Press
HUNTSVILLE, Tex. (AP) — The Houston Oilers canceled a scheduled afternoon meeting Friday after several players were stricken with what was described as a mild stomach disorder.

Among those missing a brief morning workout were quarterback Dan Pastorini, tackle Greg Sampson, cornerback Zeke Moore and defensive end Albert Burton.

Several other players participated in the drill despite reporting symptoms that included vomiting and diarrhea.

The Oilers meet the New York Giants in exhibition play Saturday night in the Astro-dome.

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Sam Jankovich, assistant director of athletics at Washington State University since 1971, has been named director of athletics.

WSU President Glenn Terrell said Friday that Jankovich will immediately succeed Ray Nagel, who resigned to become director of athletics at the University of Hawaii.

Nettles' Grudge Busts Twins

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Graig Nettles seems to keep a grudge along time. It's been six years since the Minnesota Twins let him go, and he hasn't forgiven them yet.

"You bet I enjoy hitting against Minnesota," says the New York Yankee third baseman. "They are the ones that told me I couldn't hit left-handers or play third base. They gave up on me."

The Twins no doubt have been sorry many times over that they dismissed one of the American League's premier infielders, but Friday night they were even sorrier.

Nettles continued to make them pay for their mistake by driving in five runs with two homers as the Yankees beat the Twins, 9-3.

Nettles' power show eased the way for Ed Figueroa's 15th victory and evoked the obvious comment from Minnesota Manager Gene Mauch.

The victory, coupled with Baltimore's 5-2 loss to the Chicago White Sox, improved the Yankees' lead in the American League East to 11 games over the Orioles. In other American League games, the Detroit Tigers nipped the Kansas City Royals 3-2; the Oakland A's blanked the Boston Red Sox 20; the Milwaukee Brewers stopped the California Angels 20 and the Texas Rangers edged the Cleveland Indians 2-1.

White Sox 5, Orioles 2

Bill Stein drove in two runs and Rich Gossage and Dave Hamilton pitched Chicago over Baltimore with a combined seven-hitter. The Chicago pitchers got strong defensive support from center fielder Chet Lemon, who made four sharp catches of line drives to left center and snared another hard drive to short center.

Tigers 3, Royals 2

Doubles by Tom Verzyer and John Wockenfuss with two out in the seventh inning propelled Detroit over Kansas City. After Wockenfuss' double broke a 1-1 tie, the Tigers added a run in the seventh on Rusty Staub's RBI single. It proved to be the winning run when the Royals scored in the bottom of the ninth on a double by George Brett off Vern Ruhle and a single by John Mayberry off reliever John Hiller.

A's 2, Red Sox 0

Mike Norris and Rollie Fingers combined on a four-hitter and Oakland feasted on three Boston errors in the fourth inning to beat the Red Sox and close to within seven games of Kansas City in the American League West.

The defending division champions, who were 12 games behind the Royals a week ago, got only four hits off Reggie Cleveland, 6-6, in winning their seventh straight game.

Brewers 2, Angels 0

Rookie Jerry Augustine pitched a four-hitter to lead Milwaukee over California. Augustine's victory improved his season's record to 5-8 and gave him three triumphs in three appearances against the Angels this year. It was only the fourth complete game in the 24-year-old left-hander's major league career.

Rangers 2, Indians 1

Toby Harrah's sacrifice fly in the ninth gave Texas its victory over Cleveland behind Jim Umberger's strong pitching. Umberger scattered eight hits in posting his eighth triumph against nine defeats. Loser Dennis Eckersley, 7-10, pitched brilliantly in defeat, striking out a personal high of 14 batters.

defenseman Ron Plumb to a new five-year contract, according to officials of the World Hockey Association club.

Plumb, a No. 1 draft choice by the Boston Bruins in 1970, had two years left on his existing contract.

Discoveries Re-Write History Of Biblical Times

EDITOR'S NOTE — Suddenly, ancient Near East history must be revised. Scholars had thought that Egypt and the kingdoms of Mesopotamia were the great powers of the area. Now a third great civilization is coming to light.

By EDWARD MAGRI
Associated Press Writer
ROME (AP) — Thousands of clay tablets found in Syria last September are providing dramatic new information about biblical times.

A team of Italian archaeologists from Rome University unearthed the tablets and fragments of tablets 13 feet below the surface of an arid expanse of Tel Mardikh, south of Aleppo. There were 15,000 tablets in all.

Because of the tablets, ancient Syria is beginning to be recognized as a rival of ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia in the history of civilization. Prof. Giovanni Pettinato, 41, language expert who has been reading the tablets, says they shed light on the history of the Jewish people.

The tablets cover a 150-year period, from 2400 to 2250 B.C. They place Ebla, a city until now only briefly mentioned in ancient Middle East inscriptions, firmly on the map as the center of a vast and civilized kingdom. For decades this kingdom dominated an area extending from the Red Sea north to what is now Turkey and east to Mesopotamia.

The Ebla empire had been lost to history until the Italian team, led by Prof. Paolo Matthiae, 36, dug out the tablets, many of them records from Ebla's royal palace.

David Noel Freedman, a University of Michigan biblical archaeologist who has worked with the Italians, described the importance of the tablets in these terms: "It is as if we had ignored that Rome existed and suddenly find out about it and the Roman empire."

The tablets reveal an unknown language, what the Italians have called Eblaite, akin to the biblical Hebrew that was spoken more than 1,000 years later.

Among the most precious tablets is one containing a vocabulary of Eblaite and Sumeric words, including an explanation in Eblaite of how the Sumeric words are pronounced. The Sumerians, a non-Semitic people who flourished in southern Mesopotamia about 3000 B.C., are credited with developing the cuneiform system of writing. The influence of the cuneiform system is found in the writings of the great Semitic cultures that developed in the area, blending their cultures with the Sumerian culture.

Eighty per cent of the tablets are accounts of economic and commercial transactions. The others include international treaties, military reports, religious texts, descriptions of rites and sacrifices, and stories of creation and the great flood.

Pettinato says that scanning photographic copies of the tablets in his Rome office he has read the names of Abraham, Ishmael, Israel, Esau and Saul hundreds of times. A dozen times he came across the name "Daudum" — David.

Finding the name of David in the tablets is significant because King David is the only one carrying the name in the Bible. Until now, there had been no firm evidence that David had been used elsewhere in ancient times.

"We wondered why the Bible calls judges the rulers before the kings. Now we know that in Ebla, the leaders of the conquered cities were called judges," Pettinato says.

Even the name "Hebrew" has something to do with Ebla. The tablets tell of a dynasty of six kings in Ebla. The one that spread its influence most widely is called King Ebrum or Ibrum.

The commercial accounts report that Ebla was exporting textiles, metals, marble and timber over a wide area. Among the importing points the tablets list the biblical sites of Hazor, Megiddo, Gaza and also "Urusalim" — Jerusalem. Sinai also is listed.

A La Siya, the ancient name of the island of Cyprus, is listed as an export point for copper.

The third millennium is the era of the pyramids. Most historians have maintained that Egypt and the kingdoms of Mesopotamia shared the conquests and the glory of that time, alternating in control of the vast area between them.

Now the Ebla tablets tell of a third power competing for domination of the many small states in Palestine and Syria.

The Italian archeologists, assisted by Afif Bahnassi, director general of Syrian antiquities, are planning more excavations.

Last year they dug out only three walls of the room where most of the tablets were stored. About 1,000 tablets were found in another room.

"We dare hope we may find the royal library after having found the archives," Matthiae says.

Matthiae said the tablets had been stacked vertically on wooden shelves. They vary from the size of the palm of a hand to the size of a large brick. When troops led by King Naram-Sin of Akkad, the great Mesopotamian state, conquered Ebla in 2250 B.C., they looted the palace and set it afire.

The wooden shelves in the archive room burned, but the baked clay tablets were undamaged by the flames, although many broke when they fell to the floor.

Then the wind started to pile dust over the ruins, sealing the precious tablets under a small hill that grew up over the centuries.

"When we saw the room and the mass of tablets we had the feeling as if the librarian had locked the door and left yesterday at 5 o'clock," recounts Matthiae's wife, an archeologist who works with her husband. "That's when we got hysterical."

The tablets are now neatly packed in 100 boxes in the Museum of Aleppo. Freedman says they are worth at least $15 million.

The Ebla tablets list the queen after the king in the power hierarchy. The king was assisted by two prince-ministers and by a council of elders.

A tablet recorded an international treaty, the oldest known in history, between Ebla and the city of Assur over the establishment of a free trade area. It included a variety of commercial and legal provisions, including some for crimes.

In case of rape, the treaty stipulated, the punishment was death. But with a rather male chauvinist slant the woman needed first to prove to two male judges that she had been a virgin and had resisted the rapist.

The biggest tablets have up to 3,000 lines, half on each side.

Matthiae says the greatness of Ebla and its kingdom is reflected in an inscription from Mesopotamia that quotes Naram-Sin after his conquest of Ebla: "The city that had never been conquered from the time man was created."

Police Chief Prefers A Slower Pace He Found Serving Smaller Town

By THOMAS J. SHEERAN
CLINTON, N.J. (UPI) — The other cops back in Newark where he was chief of detectives think Joseph Manghisi flipped his lid.

Manghisi is still a chief all right, but his force no longer numbers in the hundreds. It's more like six officers, two part-time officers and four crossing guards.

"Don't forget the crossing guards," said Manghisi, who fled the city last spring.

Today, 51 and balding, Manghisi is chief of police of Clinton, population 1,900.

In Newark Manghisi was chief of a 272-man detective force with a fat budget and extensive facilities. In Clinton, as he describes it, he operates out of "two cigar boxes back to back."

"They think I'm crazy," Manghisi said.

Newark was the big time. Only last October Manghisi headed the security detail during President Ford's visit which arrested a man with a knife who was accused of threatening the President's life. "They say, 'In Newark you had it made'—in other words just sit back and push buttons," Manghisi said.

But, after 28 years on the Newark force, Manghisi is convinced he made the right move.

"I'm a small town boy at heart," he says. "I'm 10 years younger and five pounds lighter, but I'm still bald."

The chief took an $8,000 pay cut from $23,000 in Newark to $15,000 in Clinton. However, he will begin drawing a half pension from Newark in October.

"I'm a new person," Manghisi said. "I think the main difference is that the pace is different. There's not as much violence. There's nobody getting their head bashed in."

Clinton's crime problems are minuscule compared to Newark. There was not a single homicide in the town last year. Newark had 154.

"It's quite a friendly town. People stop by and visit at the office. I have direct contact with the people there and when I go on patrol."

Manghisi rides patrol daily now, sometimes in uniform. He often find himself working long hours to make up for the lack of extra manpower.

Clinton's total annual police budget is only $30,000. The 1,400 members of the Newark force were budgeted at $20 million, with a major chunk of that allocated to Manghisi's detectives.

"I'm really not a chief here, I'm more like a patrolman," Manghisi said. "The rank never meant that much to me. It just came and I accepted it."

Manghisi decided to take the job in Clinton after a friend told him the town was looking for a police chief. His family still lives in Newark's Vailsburg section but they plan to move to Clinton later this year.

Clinton does have its problems, especially with break-ins, and the town is growing.

"We may get some city problems," Manghisi said. So all of Manghisi's officers have visited Newark's police headquarters to get the feel of a big city police force. Several have gone on narcotics and robbery stakeout duty with Newark detectives.

"The fellows out here like to have the taste of being a city policeman, but I think you can appreciate the job in any place," Manghisi said.

The change from big city to small town has led Manghisi to a pet theory.

"I think America should be made up of small towns instead of big cities. I think big cities become unwieldy."

Gambling Ship Pays For Relief

By KATE WEBB
MANILA (UPI) — An anti-gambling law imposed with martial law four years ago shuttered the once free-wheeling private casinos in the Philippines.
But out in Manila Bay today floats a "Robin Hood" gambling ship, launched by the government to raise money for flood relief.
It is raking in up to $1 million a day from foreign tourists and wealthy Filipinos in a program publicized to "take from the rich and give to the poor."
Moored in Manila Bay during fair weather and docked in the busy south harbor area during the monsoons is the MV Philippine Tourist, open for around-the-clock gambling with roulette, black jack, baccarat, dice and slot machines.
The converted cruise ship of 1950s vintage was launched with considerable fanfare last New Year's Eve by President Ferdinand E. Marcos and his wife Imelda. Celebrities on board included Asia casino emperor Stanley Ho and film star Gina Lollobrigida.
Enrique Razon, president of the operating company, Manila Bay Enterprises, (Ho is a minority shareholder), won't say how much the casino is collecting. But estimates are that 700 to 900 gamblers are dropping up to $1 million a day.

The proceeds go directly to the president's office. The money is destined, the government says, for Manila's sorely-needed flood relief program.
The government-permitted gambling follows a pattern set by Ali Sidikin, mayor of Jakarta in neighboring Indonesia. It is intended as a tourist attraction bringing in foreign currency.
But the operators have a lingering headache over how to allow foreigners to take some or all of their winnings out of the country without the casino becoming a foreign currency drain. At the moment the ruling is a flat no.
In an effort to ensure that the casino doesn't milk the poor or give the government a bad image, civil servants and military personnel are barred.
Entry stipulations are stiff. Local patrons (80 percent of the regular gamblers) must pay $625 a year for a boarding pass or prove they paid taxes on a $6,250 annual income.
Foreigners need only a passport.
So financially successful has

the casino proven, despite a slow start bugged by poor air conditioning and entry regulation muddles, that seven months after the opening there is talk of towing the ship to the port city of Cebu and bringing a new and bigger casino in for Manila Bay.
In the meantime, the government is adding a new VIP deck and cocktail lounge.

Modern-Day Economics On Grain Plains

By DAVE BARTEL
Associated Press Writer
The great continental migration is winding down now, the annual march of men and machines that follow America's ripening grain.
Custom cutters, they are called, the gypsies of the fruited plains.
"It can be a pretty hectic life," said Ralph McElroy, observing his 30th year of following the harvest. "We work 14 hours a day when the weather is good and there's enough work to make you plenty tired by bedtime."
"It's a tough way to make money sometimes," he said, his eyes scanning a field of stubble, "but there's something about it that draws you back each year."
Custom cutters are the men who hire out, with their combines and trucks, to harvest other farmers' wheat. McElroy and his crew of seven work in practiced cadence to break down their equipment - three huge combines - after a short stay on one prairie farm, load them on trailers, haul them northward to the next farm, set them up for business, then move along again, a summer-long ride on a merry-go-round.
This year the carnival atmosphere was further brightened by the second-largest American wheat crop on record, 2.04 billion bushels, just a shade off last year's bumper 2.1 billion bushels. And that was despite early drought losses in parts of the southern plains that threatened to make it a glum year indeed.
Every summer more than 18,000 men and 8,000 combines begin their long march on the Texas plains in May and move field-by-field to the Canadian border in August.

For many custom cutters it can mean assembling and then tearing down a seven-ton combine dozens of times during the 1,200-mile journey up the same trails where herds of longhorn cattle once plodded to market, now seeded in about 75 million acres of wheat.
"It's one of the harder parts of the job," McElroy said, joining his youthful crew in heaving a 16-foot combine header, which resembles a riverboat paddle, onto a truck bed and bolting it down.
The traveling harvest crews surged to importance following World War II as the nation expanded its wheat crop and demand accelerated for machines to cut the grain in less time.
Economics and efficiency dictated a sharing system for the combines that now cost $30,000 or more and are used only once a year by most farmers. The result has been a booming business for entrepreneurs like Ralph McElroy, who found a way to fill the need and also make money.

Kansas agriculture officials estimate custom cutters harvested 60 per cent of the 1976 wheat crop in the state and, though the figures drop off outside major wheat-producing areas, the U.S. Department of Agriculture said its last survey in 1971 showed about 35 per cent of all Great Plains wheat was harvested by the traveling crews.
For thousands of farmers, the custom cutter has become the difference between having a wheat crop tucked safely away in an elevator or left helpless at the mercy of the plains' tempestuous weather.
"If a farmer has 1,000 acres of wheat he can't possibly cut it all with one combine, but he can't afford to buy three or four machines to do it," McElroy said. "So they hire guys like me to cut it as fast as possible and get it out of the fields."

With the three machines, McElroy's crew can cut 200 acres of wheat in one day. He is paid about $8 an acre plus a bonus for every bushel over 20 an acre and a fee for trucking the grain to the elevator.
On a good day in a good field, McElroy can earn up to $3,000 but he then must subtract expenses such as machinery payments and repairs, insurance that can cost $10,000 for the harvest season, fuel, which can cost $6,000 or more a month, as well as the cost of paying, feeding and housing his crew.
McElroy's crew of seven is typically heavy with young people, high school kids and college students who get a summer of outdoor work and go home with about $600 in their jeans.

Tis biggest risk is the same as the farmer's - weather. Rain can force him and his gang to sit idle for days at a time earning nothing while expenses nibble steadily at his income.
McElroy, a former school teacher and football coach now in his 50s, has invested more than $150,000 in his three combines and three big grain trucks, which he also uses to cut the wheat on his own farm in Kansas. At times he has considered selling the business and investing the money for a comfortable, work-free retirement.
"I've thought about it," he said as the sun slipped into a cloudbank in a final blaze of orange and crimson. "Maybe someday I'll do it, but a man has to do something useful. Besides, I just like to cut wheat."

Wine Heritage Due Hungarian

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — Americans can thank a Hungarian immigrant, Agoston Haraszthy, for many of the fine domestic wines we drink today.
According to "Entertaining With Wine," (Rand McNally) Haraszthy had become a successful wine grower in Sonoma, Calif., by 1861. He was commissioned by the state legislature that year to travel to Europe to collect cuttings from the best vineyards there. He returned with some 300 grape varieties for fellow vintners throughout California — cuttings which became the foundation on which much of the American wine industry is still based.

Swing-Wing Wonder Weapon Goes Into Production

After-Hours School In Japan A Big Business

By KOICHI ISHIYAMA

TOKYO (AP) — About half of Japan's junior high school pupils spend their after-school hours going to another school, to learn to pass the tests to advance to the "right" higher schools and eventually the "right" job.

Education ministry officials say they don't know how many after-school schools, called "juku," there are in Japan because they are "not legally recognized institutions."

But a recent poll in a city near Tokyo showed 52 per cent of sixth graders, 61 per cent of seventh graders, 53 per cent of eighth graders and 57 per cent of ninth graders attend such schools. Two out of 10 junior high school pupils take additional lessons at home from private teachers hired by their parents, the survey showed.

Those who rise to the highest positions in Japan's government and business generally come from a small group of elite universities, and entering those universities is considered easier for students from prestigious high schools. This makes the "shiken jigoku" — examination hell — a way of life in this nation of 110 million people.

The ordeal is primarily for boys since Japanese business and government are still mainly a man's world.

Harue Yajima, 35, mother of a fifth grade boy who attends a juku, said, "Though I oppose the competitive examination system, it is how the social framework is set up and I feel pity for my child if he lags behind on the social ladder of success."

Even if I am criticized as a shallow-minded parent, I can do nothing about it," she added.

Her son, Goro, who has a home tutor besides attending the juku, said, "Since I started going to the juku, my grades improved quite a bit." But, he added, "I just don't have time to play."

Juku sessions are usually are two hours, twice a week, with tuition averaging 5,000 yen ($17.50) a month.

"I think the recent prosperity of juku is an inevitable consequence of the Japanese educational system," said Shin Iriye, 53-year-old headmaster of Shingakusha, a well-known juku in Osaka, in central Japan.

Requirements for entering private juku include close-cropped hair, a pledge, "I want to get into (X) high school," an initiation fee of 30,000 yen ($100) and 10,000 yen ($33) monthly tuition.

Its program is spartan and thorough. Just before entrance exams, the students are housed in a hotel for last-minute cramming. Iriye takes personal responsibility for training them day and night. Then he charts a plane to take them to the high school they seek to enter.

As they march in to take the exams, Iriye shouts to his students, "Everyone will pass. Never forget to fight to the end. Fight, fight."

So far this year, 30 per cent of his students have gained entrance to high schools famous for their high rate of admissions to prestigious universities.

"Some people criticize me, saying it is absolutely mad to have cramming and use a chartered plane, but it is a good investment if you want your children to go to a private university," Iriye said.

Meanwhile, a medical research group in Asahikawa, Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island, said it found that of 25 children who suffered stomach ulcers over the last two years from heavy mental stress in cramming, most go to a juku.

Prof. Masayoshi Namiki, 47, the group's chief, warned, "If such ulcer conditions continue because of long, extremely keen mental stress, they will become chronic and very hard to cure. Children should be left alone to do things more freely."

Taking Courses In Pet Care

HACKENSACK, N.J. (UPI) — Students at Bergen County Technical and Vocational High School in New Jersey are going to the dogs — and cats.

They're taking a course in the care, feeding and grooming of household pets. Curriculum includes shampooing, clipping dogs in the latest styles, nail trimming, feeding, handling and learning about the papers indentifying and registering blue-blooded beauties.

In the beginning, students work on their own pets, then those of teachers, friends and neighbors who want cuts and pedicures for their pets at bargain rates.

BY WELLINGTON LONG

BONN, West Germany (UPI) — The Germans tried furiously but never achieved the wonder weapon that Adolf Hitler wanted to use against the British in World War II.

But 30 years after that war, the Germans and the British together, with the cooperation of the Italians, finally have developed a swing-wing aircraft that many dubbed "the wonder weapon" even before it went into serial production.

The Tornado, as the three governments have nicknamed their multirole combat aircraft (MRCA), will fly just under the speed of sound at tree-top level and twice the speed of sound at higher altitudes.

On July 29 the three governments gave the go-ahead for serial production.

The first Tornados should become operational by 1980.

Britain's Royal Air Force eventually will acquire 385 of the planes, the West German Luftwaffe 324 and the Italian Air Force 100.

Each fully-equipped aircraft will cost about 48 million marks ($19 million) at today's prices. The three governments hope they can keep that price stable or perhaps even bring it down a few dollars by selling another 200 Tornados to Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark and Norway.

Even so, the project will cost Britain about $7.25 billion, West Germany $6 billion and Italy $2 billion.

The Tornado's capabilities reflect the changed posture of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

When the West Germans led an international consortium in the purchase and construction of the Lockheed-designed F104 Starfighter 20 years ago, NATO was following a policy of massive retaliation. The Starfighter was to serve as a medium-range atomic bomber.

Since then NATO has switched to a policy of flexible response. This means the West would meet any Soviet attack first by conventional means to try to avoid a nuclear exchange.

The supersonic Starfighter was never meant to provide close support to an army. Tornado, on the other hand, was designed with just that role in mind.

With terrain-following radar guiding the plane automatically, and the pilot able to vary wing span from 28.2 feet to 45.6 feet, it will be able to underfly enemy radar and antiaircraft defenses at altitudes of between 100 and 200 feet and at just under the speed of sound to deliver bombs right on the battlefield.

The two-man crew — the pilot and a systems operator — must rely on that automatic system to carry them safely through an enemy's defenses which may be as much as 60 miles deep.

Pilots say riding the Tornado on such ground-hugging raids will be worse than being aboard a bucking rodeo horse.

Ideally, the plane should stay aloft for two hours on one load of fuel. The governments admit the eight prototypes already flying fall far below that goal, but they express confidence consumption can be brought down and time aloft improved before the plane goes operational.

Turbo-Union, a British company owned 40 per cent by Rolls-Royce of Britain, 40 per cent by MTU of West Germany and 20 per cent by Fiat of Italy, will build all of the turbofan engines in Britain.

The British Air Corp., Messerschmitt-Boelkow-Blohm and Aeritalia each will build the planes ordered by their own governments.

Probably another 350 firms, in the three countries and in the United States, will supply components.

The governments estimate the project, at its peak, will provide 70,000 jobs — 35,000 in Britain, 27,000 in West Germany and 8,000 in Italy.

Free-flowing space is achieved in the Neptune, an attractive contemporary plan, by the generous use of glass to draw daylight and by the expansive two story living room that fronts the plan.

Comprising three bedrooms and two baths, the design benefits from a visual increase of space and has the feel of a home with far more than its 1500 sq. ft. of living space.

Vertical lines mark the exterior, a study in simplicity that would approach starkness except for the warmth of natural wood that layers the facade.

Entry is into the living room, an immediate introduction to the airy interior. Reaching up two stories to double its volume, the room chooses a wood-burning fireplace and tall expanses of glass for its front wall. A coat closet is set at right of entry for convenience.

An eat-in kitchen and formal dining room fill the area to the rear of the living room. Given the dining space in the kitchen and the sliding glass doors that link patio with dining room, the dining room might be used as a family room if desired. The kitchen is a self-contained work center that

On the first level, two bedrooms are set apart from the living areas, with closets and hallway acting as buffers. Tucked between the rooms is a full bath, only steps from the living room for use as a guest

One of the most carefully designed elements of this appealing home is the master bedroom. The sole occupant of the second level, the bedroom merits a private bath with double sinks. The bedroom door can be closed for privacy or opened to overlook the

Keep Exterior Of Old Building

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures

There is a lot of interest now in reviving old buildings for their architectural importance. But you don't need to live in the past just because you want to preserve something old, says architect and interior designer Kenneth Walker of New York City.

"You can do anything you want inside of an historical home — take down the walls, if you like, but the exterior really is in the public domain, so nothing should be changed," he says. Walker works with landmark commissions and the National Historical Trust and he would "probably gut the inside of such a building because he wouldn't want to live in a museum."

Walker, a member of the Historical Buildings Committee of the American Institute of Architects, points out that people can educate themselves about old buildings. There are many sources that provide this kind of information. In addition to the National Historical Trust, there is the American Institute of Architects and many regional sources, such as landmark commissions, that one might contact. Local public libraries and building departments can often direct people to proper sources if they don't know how to go about it.

Other logical steps may be taken, he explained. If a house is Victorian, there is a Victorian Society of America that might be contacted. The Society of Architectural Historians has a regional news letter.

Some interiors — for example, old country court houses — may have more architectural merit than their exteriors and should be preserved "because the public has access to those areas," he says.

But he considers it dishonest to reproduce Colonial architecture in public buildings. "Reproducing the past just for a facade is dead wrong," says Walker, who has done a number of restorations now in use as offices, stores and showrooms.

In a Colonial town there should be certain restrictions in terms of materials, set-back, the way landscapes should be treated in relationships to other buildings, and so on, but "why build false images" such as new Colonial buildings — for example, banks of red brick with cupolas. Twentieth-century architecture would do more for such towns, he maintains.

In making an important name for himself in redesigning stores — he has just done the new Burdines store at Clearwater, Fla. — Walker has succeeded in "breaking up traditional mixes." A woman can walk into a store and know it accommodates her lifestyle. She can identify with it and her shopping experience is not a chore.

"A store is a living theatre. You should be encouraged (by proper planning) to walk through many departments and see everything available. It should be a pleasant experience," he says.

He takes into account the traffic flow (it should be easy and clear), dramatic displays and lighting contrasts and organizes the merchandise in a clear way so a customer can shop on her own, a "gentle way of helping yourself which many fine stores are encouraging."

Smaller stores are taking a leaf from bigger operations. In fact, Walker's firm, a multi-disciplinary design organization, has devised a news letter for small stores — store planning by mail service — and he is planning a monthly handbook which updates ideas on lighting, fixtures and security, all aspects that are valuable to a small store and the things they can afford.

Walker, a graduate of Harvard's Graduate School of Design, earned his Master's Degree in Architecture there, and has received many awards for graphic design, industrial design and interior design.

His contemporary designs for homes have been acclaimed for clean, simple lines with character and flair that reflect an individual's lifestyle.

His offices, converted from a "raw and gutsy" manufacturing space with its big beams and massive windows, use a partitioning system that permits easy re-grouping of mobile dividers that define work stations. Overhead ducts were painted bright red and treated as delineators of traffic patterns below.

If you have looked at any new house models in recent years, the chances are that many of the interior walls and ceilings were made of gypsum wallboard.

This product falls into the category of dry wall materials; that is, it is applied in preset or "dry" form, unlike those, such as plaster, which are applied wet and then harden into place. Tough paper coverings enclose gypsum plaster, a mixture of pulverized rock, hydrated pulp and a chemical binder. These coverings are generally white, but can be obtained in a large variety of decorative finishes.

Gypsum wallboard is so widely used these days because it is relatively inexpensive, with emphasis on the word relatively. Because of this, it is as popular in do-it-yourself installations as in new home construction. To assist those who have never used it and may want to do so in the future, here are some tips regarding its use:

1 — It should be installed across studs and joists, tackling the ceiling first, then the walls.

2 — It can be cut by drawing a sharp knife across the face side, using a straight-edge as a guide. Place the board on a table or sawhorse so that the scored side is face up and right on the edge. Snap it downward, which breaks the core. Turn the board over and, again using the knife, cut the paper on the other side.

3 — It can be installed vertically or horizontally, the horizontal application being preferred in most cases, the vertical when the height of the wall is greater than 8 feet, 2 inches.

4 — Joints are covered with a special tape and then a compound. This includes an em-bedding coat to bond the tape and two finishing coats over the tape. In sanding down the area to make it level with the surrounding surface, do not over-sand, as this may outline the joint after the wallboard has been painted.

5 — Nailheads are covered with the joint compound, then sanded as above.

6 — A primer-sealer is recommended under the finishing paint.

7 — A primer-sealer is also necessary if the wallboard is to be covered with wallpaper. This is a precautionary measure should you ever wish to remove the wallpaper at a later time. Without the primer-sealer, stripping off the wallpaper will tear the gypsum board covering.

8 — While toggle bolts or screw anchors can sometimes be used if you wish to hang anything to a gypsum board wall, it is as well to nail or screw right through the wall to the studs if the object to be hung is heavy.

9 — If the wallboard is damaged later, small mars can be patched with patching plaster. If a large section is damaged, it should be cut out and replaced.

10 — Remember that there are many different kinds of gypsum wallboard for specific purposes, among them one with a predecorated vinyl facing, another that is water resistant, and one with an extra strong fire resistance sometimes required under special circumstances, although ordinary gypsum wallboard is itself fire resistant.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find the answers to 35 problems in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," available by sending $1 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N. J., 07666.)

Q. Friends in Florida gave us a Chinese Hibiscus. Will it grow in Charlotte? (Mrs. W. R., Charlotte)

A. The Chinese Hibiscus is not winter-hardy in areas outside tropical zones. This evergreen shrub, often used for hedges in mild climates, is a woody plant. Although closely related to our hibiscus (Rose-of-Sharon, the Mallows), it will not tolerate low temperatures. Grow it outdoors in a flower bed in summer; indoors as a pot plant in winter. Give all hibiscus full sun. You may need supplemental light in winter. (Henry J. Smith, extension landscape horticulturist)

Q. How do I get rid of lespedeza in a fescue lawn? (T.A., Garner)

A. Spray with Silvex when the lespedeza is young—three to four leaf stage. If you allow it to mature, as most people do, it is very hard to kill. Also, by the time it matures—flowers and sets seed—it has already shaded out the fescue. When this occurs, reseed those thin lawn areas in the fall. (Carl Black, extension agronomist)

Q. What are the little worms ruining my rose buds (particularly a first prize tree rose and a kordes perfecta) and what should I do about them? (W. G., Huntersville)

A. Tobacco budworms infest many ornamentals at this time of year because their populations are high and much of the tobacco has been harvested. Roses, geraniums and petunias are particularly susceptible. Eggs are laid on the buds by moths. The worms which hatch in a few days burrow into the bud quickly. Sevin should be applied at weekly or even shorter intervals to give adequate control. (Jim Baker, extension entomologist)

Q. I know what a white pine is, but what is a black pine? (L. G., Mocksville)

A. Black pine may be a local common name used for some native pine, such as pitch pine in North Carolina or lodgepole pine in the Western United States. Generally speaking, Austrian pine, Pinus nigra or Japanese black pine, Pinus thunbergii, both imported species, are referred to as black pine. Both of these exotic species do well in coastal areas where salt spray is a problem on vegetation. (William M. Stanton, extension forest resources specialist)

Provide Gift Of Self-Help

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A guest sermon delivered 25 years ago in a local church, which challenged the congregation to help the less fortunate people around the world to help themselves, has developed into an international organization.

World Neighbors, with headquarters here, is now operating in 29 developing nations where the average annual per capita income is less than $250.

Beginning with only a few volunteers, it now has more than 700 paid and 2,000 volunteer nations working to help people raise more food, plan their families, improve their health and start small-scale industry.

World Neighbors started when Dr. John Peters, then a professor of philosophy at Oklahoma City University and now president of the organization, spoke at a large church on April 22, 1951. Following the service, a group volunteered their support to organize the kind of self-help program he suggested.

It is supported entirely by donations from individuals, churches and organizations and neither solicits nor accepts government funds, according to Peters.

Using the slogan, "A Hand Up, Not a Handout," it enables people in a community to help themselves, sometimes through a series of "revolving loans," Peters explains.

The organization seldom sends Americans or others to serve as leaders in development programs. Instead, it searches out qualified and dedicated local leaders and, with them, works out needed and wanted projects.

"The people of World Neighbors have always thought of themselves as 'earthworms,' working from the bottom up to prepare the soil for development," Peters said.

"Our basic guidelines are simple. We go where the need, and therefore the peril, is greatest. We work only at the village level, with the man in the rice paddy, the man so often bypassed in the huge foreign aid schemes.

"Material aid is kept to an absolute minimum," he added. "Tools, seed, fertilizer and raw materials are usually purchased by the people."

The money needed to begin a project is loaned to villagers. As they increase their income — from increased crops or small industries started with revolving loans — they repay what they borrowed. The money is then loaned to their neighbors and the process is repeated.

A women's organization in Guatemala received a World Neighbors revolving loan to purchase and plant potatoes. From an acre and a half they harvested 24,000 pounds by using improved seed potatoes, fertilizer and pest control measures.

Each member of the group received 500 pounds for her own family. Another 250 pounds went to the village church, and 2,800 pounds were set aside for next year's seed crop.

From the sale of the remaining potatoes the women purchased some needed equipment, put $100 in savings and with the balance repaid their loan — $118 plus interest.

"When we go to a village, we ask the people how we can be of help," Peters points out. "This approach often comes as a surprise to villagers such as a group in South India who commented, 'Never before in our lifetime has anyone, especially strangers, asked us what we want to do. We have always been told.'"

Simple Magic In Poor Man's Club

By HERMAN CHAN
HONG KONG (UPI) — Fingering a deck of cards and aided by a tiny sparrow, a wrinkled old Chinese astrologer in the "Poor Man's Nightclub" peered from behind an oil lamp, telling a girl with sad eyes she would be a prostitute in her next life.

From a stall next to them blared a taped American top-40 tune.

The poor and the wealthy by the hundreds were rubbing shoulders in a gaggle of rickety stalls and mobile shops outside the Temple of Tin Hau, the Queen of Heaven, where fishermen once paid their respects before setting out to sea.

But as the bespectacled old fortune-teller recalled after finishing with his shaken client, the Poor Man's Nightclub cropped up some 30 years ago and the temple today is visited by only a faithful few.

The "club" is 40,000 square feet of dirt-cheap shops mobbed by Chinese and tourists alike. They come to eat seafood or dog meat, get their fortunes told or barter for bargains in an outdoor bazaar.

The 65-year-old astrologer, Tang Kwong, has been telling fortunes here every night for more than 20 years, since arriving in Hong Kong from China.

Before dispensing with the sad-eyed girl and collecting his $4, he had picked up his oil lamp, shining it in her face.

"I can see from your fierce eyes and your sinful soul that you were not a good person in your last life," Tang told her. "Your forehead is a bit narrow, meaning it is difficult for you to find happiness in your present life. You are to be reincarnated to suffer as a prostitute in your next life."

Then he opened a cage and released his "holy" sparrow to pluck a card from a table with its beak. The card offered advice from the bible of Chinese Taoism. The girl could escape evil by diverting it to luck.

There is fascination in the contrasts of the Poor Man's Nightclub.

A merchant in the stall next to Tang's sells rice and seafood, staples of the Chinese diet for centuries. A few feet away vendors offer girlie magazines, cassette tapes, records, watchbands, western-style clothing and transistor radios in a variety rivaling a department store.

The stalls range from sturdy push-carts and wooden tables to simple sheets of canvas spread on the ground.

In the daytime the area is a public park. As dusk falls, the transformation into the nightclub begins. Hissing over-sized kerosene lamps light up the square and the throngs of vendors take their posts.

Each night the poor come to eat in the stalls. The food is cheap since the vendors pay no taxes on the plots they occupy.

Succulent seafood such as shrimp and crab fresh from the sea sell for only $1 per dish. A plate of steaming barracuda is $2.

Some menus offer dog meat. "We have provided cheap meals for the 'Kalfong' (neighborhood people) for more than 25 years," said Lam Chun-shing, a food vendor. "Although our food prices have tripled with rising living standards over the years, our customers still show up almost every night."

Other vendors offer delicacies ranging from noodles with beef or chicken to roasted chestnuts, baked eggs, baked potatoes, steamed sweet corn and steamed sugar cane. Prices per serving range from 10 cents to 50 cents.

The Chinese are avid eaters of dog meat, a practice outlawed by the Hong Kong government. But out of deference to tradition, police turn a blind eye to dog meat sales at the Poor Man's Nightclub.

As Lam explained it, "Many Chinese believe that dog meat will give them extra warmth and energy in winter."

"In winter, there are special stalls where dog meat is sold," Lam added. "The menu might say mutton, but it's actually dog meat that is being served."

The club has become a big tourist attraction. Years ago prices were jacked up for foreigners. Today they pay the same as the Chinese, if they know how to barter.

Bartering is the style here, whether customers are Western or Chinese.

"It's a tradition," one vendor said. "We have to give the customers a fair chance to haggle or they would think we are dishonest."

Like the junks crowding the harbor, the Buddhist temples dotting the island and the bar girls jamming the watering holes, the Poor Man's Nightclub is a slice of Hong Kong that has been around for a long time.

DEA Course Provides Agents With Special Skills

EDITOR'S NOTE — They come away from the Drug Enforcement Administration's course in narcotics fighting with new police skills, and something more — a special understanding that drug abuse is the common problem of many nations.

By JOHN O. KOEHLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — International narcotics pushers are facing increasingly effective pressures from a little-known United States aid program - the training of foreign police officers as skilled narcotics agents.

Reports from U.S. embassies indicate that the training program made possible the seizure during the past year of more than a half-billion dollars worth of narcotics which might otherwise have reached the streets of America.

The drugs were confiscated by graduates of a six-week course run by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), the narcotics enforcement arm of the Department of Justice. The DEA, because of long drug enforcement experience in this country, has developed perhaps the most sophisticated narcotics investigation training program in the world.

The biggest success came in Chile, where narcotics officers trained by DEA caught seven cocaine chemists between November 1975 and January 1976. More than 450 kilograms (about 992 pounds) of cocaine worth $225 million retail were seized.

Last February, Lt. Mario

Jimenez Alfaro of the Colombian Department of Security, who had graduated just weeks before from the DEA's Washington training school, was in charge of a group making the largest known marijuana seizure in history - 80 tons. Estimated U.S. street value: $48,626,000.

The embassy in Bangkok, Thailand, reported huge drug hauls by U.S.-trained officers of the Police Narcotic Suppression Center. U.S. officials also reported cocaine valued at $19,935,000 seized in Bolivia, Argentina, Brazil and Costa Rica by DEA-trained agents.

"The monetary value of these seizures," said DEA Administrator Peter B. Bensinger, "are particularly noteworthy when compared with the $2,258,040 the U.S. government spent on the training of foreign police officers in 1975."

The program was expanded in 1975. Between 1972 and 1974, the total training budget was $2,931,500.

Bensinger said DEA's chief aim is cooperation with authorities abroad to eliminate sources of supply affecting the United States.

Foreign police officers first expressed interest in learning the techniques of drug law enforcement in 1969. The Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs (BNDD), the forerunner of DEA, accepted 20 officers from Brazil, Chile, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala and Venezuela in its two-week training school for U.S. officers.

Congress authorized appropriations in 1973 for a small unit within the BNDD National Training Institute, established a year earlier, to help in training of foreign officers. A six-week Advanced International Drug Enforcement School was formed and has graduated 556 officers. In addition, courses are conducted in foreign countries. The mobile teams have trained 7,364 foreign police officers since 1969.

Robert M. Stutman, international training division chief, said his 25 instructors - selected from DEA's more than 2,000 special agents - are all college graduates.

Students are chosen from candidates proposed by the various foreign police forces.

First consideration is given to officers already assigned to narcotics work, customs officials and policemen who are instructors at their own academies. Each group taking the course is from a single area of the world, to minimize translation problems and cultural differences.

A typical class, No. 17, graduated June 25. It included 27 officers from Thailand, The Philippines, Nationalist China, South Korea, Indonesia and Malaysia. All but one student understood English.

Special Agent Thomas G. Martin, chief of the instructor team, said the class began with "country reports," designed not only to acquaint the students with narcotics problems of the various countries but also to break down any barriers between nationals whose countries have traditionally viewed each other with suspicion.

"You realize quickly that we have a common problem, the scourge of drug abuse, and that we all speak the common language of policemen," said Maj. J.D.H. Sihombing of the Indonesian National Police Directorate of Narcotics, who delivered his country's report.

Asst. Supt. Hassan K. Lam-bok, of the Malaysian Central Narcotic Bureau (CNA), traced the history of his nation's opium problem to Chinese and Indian laborers brought in by the British during the 19th century.

Both Malaysia and Indonesia have made capital punishment the maximum penalty for drug pushing.

The first two weeks of the DEA course are devoted to understanding international drug traffic patterns, identifying narcotics and investigating drug deaths.

To aid agent instructors, the DEA used Capt. Frank Raasch, a pathologist at the San Diego Naval Hospital and an expert on narcotics and narcotic deaths. Some of his color slides of drug deaths and autopsies made even a few seasoned officers queasy to the point of leaving the classroom.

Narcotics investigations, according to Raasch, are probably the most difficult of all criminal detective work.

"When you have a murder, the police find a body and can look for clues. When a burglary is committed, the victims report it and police can go to work. But the narcotics victim, who is the addict, never complains."

Much of narcotics enforcement work, therefore, depends on undercover investigation, the use of informants and watching street buys. Thus, undercover techniques, surveillance of suspects and the use of electronic equipment such as body transmitters and special automobile tracing gear took up an additional two weeks.

Class 17 then split into four sections for field training. One group visited Kansas City and Wichita, another went to San Francisco and Sacramento, a third to Seattle and Spokane and the fourth group was sent to Baltimore, Atlantic City, N.J., and New York City.

During the field trips, the officers visited local police departments, customs facilities, courts and prosecutors' offices. They observed narcotics enforcement operations in the streets.

While attending the school, the officers are encouraged to build working relationships with their counterparts from other countries. Since officers from the same region of the world are in one class, their similar cultures and mutual problems, such as trafficking routes, can be the basis for future international cooperation.

To maintain the relationships established among themselves, the students have formed an International Alumni Association. Run by DEA graduates, the group's activities are administered by DEA personnel.

At a graduation ceremony for Class 17, Rep. Tom F. Railsback, R-Ill., expressed congressional appreciation to the students for helping to curb the narcotics problem which, he said, was costing the U.S. $17 billion a year.

Responding for the class, Capt. Elpidio C. Natividad of the Philippines Customs Police said the course work "made us realize that we are all brothers in the war against narcotics."

'Deadly' To Mosquitoes

BELTSVILLE, Md. (AP) — A Department of Agriculture scientist says that a tiny parasite, a nematode called "Reesimermis Nielsen," is the deadly enemy of many kinds of mosquitoes, including those that carry encephalitis and malaria.

Dr. William Nickle has been raising the nematodes in enormous quantities in his laboratory at the Agricultural Research Center here and watching them go to work on hundreds of thousands of mosquito larvae.

The parasite, a worm-like creature a fraction of an inch long, swims on the top of water where the mosquito larvae are growing. Once the parasite touches a larva it emits a glue that sticks to the larva.

Then, Dr. Nickle says, the nematode bites a hole in the larva and crawls inside it. The glue hardens and seals the hole.

Inside, the nematodes thrive on the larva in typical parasitic fashion. After a few days, the parasite cuts another hole in its host and emerges into the water. The second hole does not harden. The essential fluids of the larva drain out and the larva dies.

The parasite, which is harmless to humans, might well prove to be the logical alternative to DDT and other pesticides for the control of mosquitoes, Nickle said.

NOSEY TOMATOES? — The unusual growths on these tomatoes, seemed similar to noses according to Willard Finch of Winterville, so he drew faces on them to give them personalities.

Finch said that each tomato grown on one of his tomato vines has had the peculiar nose-like growth. (Reflector photo by Tommy Forrest)

Losers Suffer In Self-Esteem

CORTLAND, N.Y. (UPI) — Lawrence Martin, associate professor of physical education at State University College at Cortland, N.Y., says it's really true — winning or losing doesn't count as much as how an athlete plays a game.

He cited research showing sports competition reduces feelings of aggression for winners, but for losers the case is not as clear. Losers, further, suffer a loss to self esteem.

Martin says while sports do appear to be a healthy release for limited aggression, winning and losing must be de-emphasized.

Young athletes, he adds, must be taught to take satisfaction in a good performance — regardless of winning or losing.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Leroy Merritt of Ayden. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Riley Cox Sr. of Greenville.

The Rev. Travis W. Owen, pastor of the church, officiated at the candlelight, double ring ceremony.

A program of nuptial music was presented by Mrs. Bill T. Norris, organist, and Mrs. M. Eugene Tyson, vocalist. Mrs. Tyson sang "Of Love, I Sing," and "The Greatest of These is Love." For the benediction, she sang "The Lord's Prayer."

The church of the church was decorated with a fifteen branch candelabra, draped with jade greenery. Twenty branched tree candelabras, holding white tapers with white gladioli and assorted summer flowers were used on each side, with nine branched tree candelabras filled with flowers on each side of the larger trees. Standards of jade greenery were used as accents throughout.

The couple knelt on a white satin pillow in front of the altar, draped with garlands and accented with multi-colored daisy nosegays. After receiving their vows, the couple lighted the unity candle, symbolic of their union.

The bride, escorted and given in marriage by her father, wore a formal length white organza gown designed with a V-neckline adorned with French alencon lace beaded with pearls. The empire bodice was entirely overlaid with the lace which extended over the shoulders and trimmed the cuffs of the full bishop sleeves. "A couple of weeks ago, I related my sky diving experience in this column. It was mentioned that I was scheduled for my second jump. I did take my second jump, but the ending, or landing, was a little different," said Mrs. Etsil Gordon of Greenville.

"I had a good exit from the airplane and a good chute opening. I was actually more aware of procedures the second time and determined to be a little less starry-eyed and work towards skill.

"It was a perfect day, sunny, very little wind — everything was bright and clear as I watched the earth from my special vantage point at the end of a parachute. The air current changed slightly and I quickly saw I was not going to land anywhere near the drop zone. I was beginning to come down in a congested area with the landing field to my left bordered on one side with low growing shrubs and tree stumps and the runway to my right," recalled Mrs. Gordon.

Continuing she added, "My best bet at a reasonable landing was just on the other side of the runway. My chute was responding well in spite of the low wind velocity and the ground crew was giving me good directions.

"At this point my concentration was on steering my chute. My body was beginning to get tense and I knew that I had to relax. It really became a mental conflict between making myself aware; yet becoming relaxed enough for a good landing. This is the reason it is imperative that you look at the horizon, especially for beginners like me, instead of the ground. Your mind and body loses its perspective when you watch the ground and you automatically tighten your body making it rigid."

"This is exactly what I did and so I landed with a whop — on my spine. I knew immediately when I landed that I had an injury — the intense pain engulfed me. I rolled slightly and within a few seconds, I knew I had broken my back. Somehow through the fog of pain, I knew I could feel my arms and legs and thought I'd better not move.

"Many of the parachute club members are military personnel and are skilled at first aid. They were great — they called the Mount Olive Rescue Squad which took me to Wayne Memorial Hospital. There I was x-rayed and after some medical treatment, I was transported to Pitt Memorial."

"I was very lucky — from the moment of impact, I received proper medical treatment and my injury, even though, it could have been permanently disabling, is stabilized and healing just fine.

"I hope this article doesn't turn someone away from sky diving. I am furious with myself for having made such a stupid mistake, for I still believe that in spite of this seemingly dangerous activity, if procedures are followed, it is a safe sport," she said.

"It will be sometime before I can jump again and I would like to, just to prove to myself I can do it right, if for no other reason. My jumping supporters have dwindled from the original 20 percent to maybe two per cent and my medical advice has been not to do it again.

"I haven't made a final decision, but I do know that I am still glad I did it and would do it over again — except this time, I'd land on my feet."

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

The world is full of thrill seekers.

There are the people who endure the isolation and physical discomforts to climb mountains. There are the people who challenge the rapids in small rubber boats. There are those courageous men and women who jump over cars on bikes, and canyons in human rockets.

Me? I ride in taxicabs.

I've been doing it for more than 30 years and have had more than my share of adventure. Do I have a death wish? Of course not. So, why do I do it? Because they're there.

I rode my first cab in Chicago back in 1943. As a teenager, I had won a summer scholarship to Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern. I climbed into a cab at the depot and as it lurched away from the curb, the force threw my suitcase into my kidney, causing me great pain. During my entire trip, my feet never once hit the floor. I knew then I would never have to question or prove my courage again.

The odd thing about people who ride in cabs is they are never given the honor that other heroes are afforded. No one appreciates the fact that you are only mortal. You bleed. You perspire. You experience fear. You have a will to live.

Looking back, I have had some memorable moments in taxicabs. There was the time a driver in Philadelphia was tailgating the car ahead of us at 55 mph while reading his resume to me hoping I could get him a job in advertising somewhere. (I'm rather proud of that one because when the car in front of us slowed down and my glasses landed on the dashboard, not once did I cry out.)

There was a cab ride in Los Angeles I shared with a businessman whom I had never met before. We were helplessly tossed together so intimately in the back seat, we discussed our china pattern.

I have also endured the Grand Prix of taxi riding: a ride from the center of New York to Kennedy airport — in 20 minutes.

In Chicago recently, I climbed into a cab and immediately my throat closed up and I couldn't breathe for coughing. When I tapped on the glass, the driver informed me the battery was leaking acid.

Actually, it was a more humane way to travel in a cab, but I missed the adventure.

SHOPPING LIST CAN BE HELPFUL

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — To save time, money and energy, make a list before you go shopping and stick with it, advises Joan L. Bonnett, University of Illinois Extension family economics specialist.

To make an effective list, she suggests: jot down the items you need as you think of them; organize items according to their location in the store and according to the location of stores where you shop; decide how much you can spend for the items; write out sizes and colors wanted if that information is needed.

Tugwell-Gidley Vows Exchanged On Saturday

Miss Mary Elisabeth Gidley was married to Jeffery Paul Tugwell Saturday afternoon at St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The Rev. Lawrence Patrick Houston Jr. officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Russell Gidley of Greenville. She was given in marriage by her father. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Tugwell Jr. of Farmville.

A program of wedding music was presented by Mrs. Iris Caldwell, organist, and Lewis Byrd, Gidley, brother of the bride, guitarist.

The bride wore a formal length gown of white organza over taffeta, designed with a high neckline encircled with scalloped floral Venice lace. The fitted bodice featured a sheer yoke with an overlay of schiffli-embroidered organza in a V-shaped bib effect outlined in the floral Venice lace.

Her full, sheer shepherdess sleeves also featured the schiffli embroidery and Venice lace. The fitted cuffs were trimmed in ruffled organza and tiny floral Venice lace daisies. Lace daisies also encircled the modified empire waistline. A deep ruffle flounce of embroidered organza bordered in the Venice lace edged the full skirt and attached chapel length train.

She wore a fingertip illusion mantilla edged in the scalloped floral Venice lace to complement her gown, and carried a bouquet of phalaenopsis orchids and Stephanotis tied with satin ribbon.

Mrs. Warren Flowers of Richlands, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. She wore a gown of blue pima cotton printed with white tulips. It was designed with a scoop neck, ruffled cap sleeves and empire waist. The gathered skirt ended in a deep ruffle and the waist was tied with white grosgrain ribbon. She wore a white garden hat and carried an arm bouquet of silk tulips.

Bridesmaids were Miss Becky Smith, Miss Andrea Williams and Miss Lisa Williams, all of Greenville, and Mrs. Rod Tugwell of Raleigh, sister-in-law of the bridegroom. Their dresses were identical to the honor attendant's. Milton Tugwell Jr., father of the bridegroom, was best man.

Ushers were Rod Tugwell of Raleigh, brother of the bridegroom, Dale R. Gidley Jr. of Mount Holly, brother of the bride, Mike Tyson of Greenville, cousin of the bridegroom, Adrian S. Lineberger Jr. of Fairfax, Va., and Chuch Herring of Stantonsburg.

A reception, given by the bride's parents, was held following the ceremony at the church. The bride's table was covered with satin overlaid with embroidered linen. An arrangement of stock, carnations and butterfly roses flanked by silver candelabra and burning tapers centered the

A smaller table was covered with satin and held the four tiered wedding cake.

The guests were greeted by the parents of the bridal couple. Pouring punch and serving cake were Mrs. Walter Arsenau, Mrs. Ashby Jordan, Mrs. Edwin Wilkerson and Mrs. J. B. Smith. Mr. and Mrs. William Flanner presided at the guest register, and good-byes were said by Mr. and Mrs. Travis Flanagan and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gaskins.

A wedding breakfast honoring the couple was held Saturday morning at the Candlewick Inn.

Following the wedding rehearsal, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Tugwell, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin E. Tugwell and Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Tyson Jr. entertained the couple with dinner at the Colonial House, Farmville.

The bride is a cum laude graduate of East Carolina University. The bridegroom is currently enrolled in the School of Pharmacy at UNC-Chapel Hill.

After a wedding trip to the coast, the couple will reside in Chapel Hill.

COME FOR DESSERT!
Dario's Torte Beverage
DARIO'S TORTE

The specialty of a South American friend.

2 tablespoons butter
Finely crushed dried ladyfingers
6 large eggs, separated
1 cup finely grated unblanched almonds
1 cup sugar
Grated rind of 1 orange
2 tablespoons orange juice
Dash of salt

Spread the butter over the inside surface of two round layer-cake pans (each 9 by 1½ inches); dust each with 1 tablespoon of the ladyfinger crumbs. Beat egg yolks until thickened and lemon color; gradually beat in the sugar until thick and ivory color. Fold in 1 cup ladyfinger crumbs, the almonds, orange rind and orange juice. Beat egg whites with the salt until stiff; stir a large spoonful into the egg-yolk mixture; fold in remaining egg whites. Turn into prepared pans. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — about 25 minutes. Turn out on wire racks; cool. Fill and frost as desired; the contributor of this recipe fills the torte with apricot preserves and frosts it with whipped cream — both the preserves and cream flavored with orange liqueur.

Country Cousins Suffer From City Vultures

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1976 by Chicago Tribune N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I am wondering if other farm families have this problem with city relatives. We almost have to put locks on everything when they come to visit.

The city folks are so antique-crazy, they tear the boards off the barns, pick up fence posts and go snooping through the cupboards to see if maybe we've got some old, beat-up brass or copper pots they can make into lamps.

They are always asking how old things are and if we know where they came from. We wouldn't mind if they waited until we discarded something, but I can be sitting on a rocking chair, and they'll ask if I'm ready to throw it out.

They think everything they see at a farm house is an antique. We try to tell them, "Maybe so," but that some things we still use ourselves, and if not, we might want to save them for our children.

They make fun of their country cousins, but I wonder what they think if we came to their homes and stood over their belongings like a bunch of vultures.

FROM IOWA

DEAR FROM: They'd probably think you were grasping hayseeds with bad manners, when in fact they are grasping urbanites with no class.

DEAR ABBY: My mother-in-law must have at least 200 pictures standing around. They're on her mantle, piano, television and every table in the place. Her walls are also covered with them. All are pictures of her children when they were babies and in various stages of childhood. I have never seen such clutter in my life.

Should I tell her that no one cares to see a baby picture of her 35-year-old son naked and on a fur rug? (The "baby" is my husband.)

Don't tell me that if I don't like the looks of her house I shouldn't visit her, because my husband is one of those devoted sons who thinks he has to run over there nearly every night, and he drags me with him.

How can I tell her it's time she updated her collection?

ANONYMOUS, PLS.

DEAR ANON: It's your mother-in-law's home, and apparently she enjoys the collection, so if you don't, keep your eyes closed. And your mouth as well.

DEAR ABBY: John and I were married in 1970. It was the second time around for both of us. Because of interfering relatives, including eight children and in-laws on both sides, who did everything they could to break up our marriage, we were divorced three years later. The problem is, we still love each other.

Despite all the unpleasantness, we forgave each other and continued what has always been a wonderfully loving relationship. We are in our mid-50s and feel ridiculous sneaking around to be together.

John says, "Let's say to heck with everything, sell our houses, move 1,000 miles away from all the relatives and enjoy the years we have left!"

Neither of us has to work, and our financial situation is good. Should I put myself first for once in my life and remarry John? Or keep up a house for my remaining unmarried daughter?

TORN

DEAR TORN: Your John is a man after my own heart. Remarry him and move away from both your families. Don't worry about your unmarried daughter. She's probably due to leave the nest soon anyway. Enjoy your lives. It's always later than you think.

Elvin Wants American Kids Know Their Music

By JOHN MOODY
NEW YORK (UPI) — Elvin Jones says if the big money men would give him the time, the place, and the cash to teach kids about music, he'd take care of the rest of the jazz.

It's not that Jones, one of the outstanding jazz drummers in the world, can't support himself with his music. He can, and does, and he and the rest of the Elvin Jones group recently showed that at the Village Vanguard.

But Elvin thinks other kids should have the same chance to understand the music of their country that he did.

"When I was in school, they used to play march music — you know, like John Phillip Sousa stuff — all the time. I grew up on that. And when you grow up on music, it comes to you naturally," he said, sipping juice as he prepared to go back on the Vanguard stage for a second set.

"I think every American kid should know about the music of his land. If the government would find some money for a place, a jazz center, we could teach them. We could call it Duke Ellington Hall and make it the national showplace of music. It's as easy as eating a piece of pie."

Jones just may be able to pull off his plan to get a government subsidy for a national jazz center. He has already established himself in the Washington power circles as a "goodwill ambassador" for the U.S., recently returning from a tour of Eastern Europe.

"In Yugoslavia, we played before 50,000 people in a big band shell. They just sat there and listened and soaked in the tunes. They were the best audience I think I've ever had."

But Jones, like other jazz artists who've performed overseas, said he sensed the real message of the music wasn't getting through.

"The Russians and those folks can't really understand jazz. They're too up tight, not that loose," he grinned. His pet project is never far from his mind, and he uses that last point to move to his pitch.

"And it occurs to me that maybe our own kids might grow up to be up tight, too. That's why I think a jazz center would be good."

"You see, I go on tours for the government, to bring our music to people all over the world. But once you get past the governments and the regulations, you're just dealing with people, and they love it."

The Vanguard crowd also loved Jones — and they got the message.

Jones, saxophonist Pat LaBarbera (late of Buddy Rich's band), David Williams on bass and the semi-spastic guitarist Ryo Kawasaki ran through a half dozen jazz pieces with a feeling of ease and mellowness.

"Jazz is America's own music," Jones said, "and we're the only ones who really get it on. So shouldn't we teach our kids about it?"

Listening to him work, and wondering if thousands of other, undiscovered Elvin Joneses are roaming the streets in search of meaning, there is only one answer.

Estate Has 'City' Name

WICHITA, KAN. (AP) — A sign reads: "Welcome to Kenyon City. Mayor Bill Kenyon. Population: 11."

Kenyon City is not really a city. It's the five acres of land occupied by Kenyon and his family.

The idea of calling the family estate a city came to them six years ago when Kenyon and his family moved into the area.

"Well, we were 11 city folks who didn't know the first thing about country living. We decided to make a fun project out of something that could have been a drag," Kenyon said.

"My daughter and I both wanted to be the mayor," he said, "so I waited until she went on a trip to Hawaii to hold the election. I won 5 to 3."

"We've even got a key to the city," he added. "It's about a foot long and covered with aluminum foil. We present it to all visiting dignitaries. We present it to about anybody

Built A Clinic To Lure Doctor

By PIET BENNETT
Associated Press Writer
MARCELLUS, Mich. (AP) — Residents of this Cass County farming town have dipped into their wallets to provide a $60,000 clinic they hope will bring them a doctor.

"The community has shown about as graphically as it can that we want a doctor ... What more could be done, I don't know," says Don Moorman, owner of the weekly Marcellus News.

Despite some inquiries, the clinic stands empty. And hopes of finding a new doctor or two for Marcellus may never be realized.

Competition for physicians is keen. Nationally, about 1,600 communities are seeking new doctors. In Michigan, about 125 towns want them.

"If I had about 2,000 doctors show up tomorrow morning and if they were the right kind of doctors, I could find jobs for all of them by tomorrow night," said John A. Doherty, executive vice president for the Michigan Health Council.

The Council has placed about 1,500 doctors and nearly 500 dentists in Michigan communities since 1958.

But Doherty estimated that right now nearly 125 Michigan towns seek doctors and nearly 2,000 physicians are needed.

Doherty said he feels sorry for Marcellus, a town of about 1,100 since that town will need "some sort of exceptional effort" to attract a new doctor.

He said a major problem for Marcellus is its distance from a hospital. "There are not many people in the United States who are interested in being a solo doctor and that far from a hospital," Doherty said.

"There's great competition. I would not say that it's an easy road," agreed Ronald R. Cripps, a Farm Bureau employee heading the Marcellus drive to find a new doctor.

Cripps said Marcellus was 13 miles from the nearest hospital, at Three Rivers. There is another hospital in Paw Paw about 14 miles away and one in Dowagiac, about 18 miles off.

"Doctors tend to want a job where they can work eight hours and go home. It's not always possible in a small town," Cripps added.

Still, Marcellus fares better than some towns. It still has one doctor.

Your Daily HOROSCOPE

from the CARROLL RIGHTER INSTITUTE

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The morning is good for thinking of spiritual outlets by which you can improve yourself. In the evening think in terms of how you can build up your abundance by changes that are apparent.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Look to a wise person you know who can point the way to greater happiness. Plan to extend and expand your activities.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Concentrating on ethical and spiritual values can be most inspiring in the morning. Later engage in recreational activities you like.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Know what your personal aims are in the morning and how best to go after them. Plan how to improve your position in business.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Concentrate on improving your reputation in the morning. Also, plan how to become more successful in business.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Use different tactics where some problem of long-standing is concerned and get it solved wisely. Make the evening a delightful one.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Use good judgment in the morning instead of relying so much on your hunches, which are not too accurate now. Engage in favorite hobby later.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Be more willing to make the changes that friends desire of you today. Keep promises you have made to others. Relax at home tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) The early part of the day is fine for doing a favor for one who has been loyal to you. Don't neglect important civic matters.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Engage in creative activities early in the day. Show more concern for mate who is irritated. Visit long-time friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Some new ideas you get in the morning can be put in operation very nicely. Don't neglect important correspondence.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Show more understanding for others. Enjoy spiritual talks that are inspiring early in the day. Take it easy tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Give more time and effort to a practical affair early in the morning. Entertain friends and relatives in the afternoon. Show that you have poise.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will be one of those very active persons who can learn a great deal by doing. Direct education along banking or big business lines. Be sure to give good spiritual and religious training to set this life on the right path.

Your Daily HOROSCOPE

from the CARROLL RIGHTER INSTITUTE

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Until late afternoon you would be wise not to take any chances where money, property or possessions are concerned, or you could have an unnecessary loss. Evening finds you in a more practical frame of mind and you are able to accomplish much.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Take care you do not over-spend in the morning and then you can be very sociable in the evening. Consult with an expert where financial matters are concerned.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Persevere where personal aims are concerned even though they seem difficult to gain early. Later, all works out to your benefit.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Don't neglect your work even though you may be worried. Later, all clears up and you are in a position to gain rewards.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) A good friend will not come to your aid until evening, so wait until then before asking for it. Think along more constructive lines.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Don't look for favors from big-wigs during daytime when they are under pressure, but evening is fine for that. Don't upset routine matters and lose out where it counts the most.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) First carry through with important work at hand; later, look into the new and promising. Go to right sources for information you need now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Pay pressing bills and get your accounts in order. Try not to argue with a loved one in the morning, then the evening is fine.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Try not to argue with an associate regarding some contract you may have in the morning. By afternoon all works out to your satisfaction. Don't let that civic problem annoy you. You understand later how to handle it properly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Cooperate more with co-workers during day and you reap benefits later. Take treatments that improve health and your looks. Don't be taken in by one who is jealous of you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Make the daytime more productive through fine efforts on your part. Relegate pleasure to the evening. Study budget and make necessary changes for more efficiency.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) If you are quiet about some annoying situation at home in the morning, by evening it will all blow over and everything is fine again. Being forceful with anyone could have dire results.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Be careful in motion during the day. Devote the evening to hobbies you like. Exercise care in speech or big arguments could ensue.

WE S-T-R-E-T-C-H CARPET WITH A POWER STRETCHER NOT A KNEE KICKER

READY FOR THE MARKET . . . Mrs. Sandra Singleton packs cured tobacco in a tobacco packing guide, the final harvesting step before taking tobacco to the warehouse auction floor.

TRUCKER . . . or driver of the tractor drawn flatbed trucks taking tobacco from field to barn is Mike McClanahan. A '76 graduate of D.H. Conley, he plans to enter the Army.

EVERYBODY CHIPS IN . . . at the barn site to get a load of tobacco wheeled into position at the end of the automatic looper belt, which uses a sewing machine technique to place leaves on the sticks.

Tobacco Harvesting At Its Peak

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

Methods of harvesting tobacco have changed dramatically in the past 20 years. But one thing hasn't changed. Harvesting tobacco is hot, rushed, sweaty work during the summer weeks when Pitt County's major cash crop stands fully grown, ready to be "put in," to use the colloquial phrase used for the harvesting process.

This year, because of earlier heavy summer rains, the tobacco harvest season is running just a little bit later than it normally does. At this time (the middle of August), tobacco farmers in Pitt County and eastern North Carolina and their labor force are working on an almost around-the-clock schedule to get the green gold leaves primed while it's at its peak.

Two local farmers, Robert Allen and Karl B. (Brownie) Manning, farming on the Allen Road just west of Greenville, are typical of Pitt County farmers whose every waking moments are directed to harvesting and preparation of tobacco for sale on the Pitt County markets.

Mrs. Allen, speaking for a busy husband, said "Robert is tending about 50 acres of tobacco. We're pleased with our crop this year, and with the prices tobacco is bringing on the market now." (Prices in mid-August are averaging about $1.12 per pound).

Mrs. Allen pointed out that "these prices are needed, what with farming costs up as they are now." Besides the basic cost of sophisticated equipment such as mechanical harvesters and the upkeep on this equipment, Mrs. Allen said "we're paying $20 to $25 a day for labor, and there's gas costs and oil for curing."

Manning, who has 22 acres under cultivation, has gone one more step mechanically. "This year is the first time I've used automatic loopers," Manning said.

His method of "breaking," or priming leaves from the stalks in the field, is a cross between the old method and the new. Manning uses tractor pulled flat bed trucks for the four "breakers" to put the leaves in. The newest method is mechanical harvesters where the people "breaking" or "priming" the leaves sit. The old method, now seldom used, is that of a mule-drawn single flatbed truck enclosed by "tobacco curtains" of burlap.

Even more up to date is the completely mechanical harvester, which is operated using only a driver. The all-out mechanized system of harvesting, however, is not currently widely employed.

In Allen's case, the Long Mechanical Harvester he uses seats four breakers, a driver and three workers who arrange the leaves in a metal frame. When the frame is filled a tractor picks it up and takes it to a bulk curer. The bulk curer type of curing barn, a metal building smaller than the conventional oil fired tobacco barn, is becoming more widely used each year.

Conversations with several local farmers indicate they are pleased with the poundage they are realizing from this year's crop. Although the dry spell followed by a heavy period of rain delayed the filling out of this year's crop at an early date, it all seems to have worked out for a fine, heavy crop of good quality tobacco.

"I'm going to average about 2,500 pounds an acre,"

Manning said. "That's a pretty good crop."

To get this full growth, Manning did not have to use an excessive amount of fertilizer. "For one thing, this field (he indicated the about six-acre plot we were in) is planted behind soybeans. I used a thousand pounds per acre of 8-16-24 fertilizer and followed it up with 200 pounds an acre of 14-0-14 top dressing."

On Thursday, August 12, the four young male primers working for Manning agreed "the hardest part is past," referring to the fact they are now breaking leaves from higher on the stalk. It's still hot work, all day spent in a half-bent posture, breaking four or five leaves from each stalk, cramming them between the legs or under an arm until a big bundle is accumulated and placed stems out on the bed of the truck.

"This morning is not too bad," Robert (Rif Raf) Rouse, a young man in his early 20s, remarked. "The morning dew washed off some of the tobacco gum. That helps."

For the trucker in this field, Mike McClanahan, this will be his last tobacco season, at least for some time. The '76 graduate of D. H. Conley has been accepted into the Army's Special Forces and will begin basic training on September 28.

One striking factor about most of the labor force doing summer work on tobacco farms is their youthfulness. Three of the girls working on the automatic looper on the Manning farm — Pam Manning and Carol and Cathy Vandiford, are all rising sophomores at D. H. Conley. It's not at all unusual to discover that many of the young people putting in a long day's work are in their early teens.

As August moves into the second half of the month, the annual wind-up of the tobacco harvest is taking place in Pitt County and all across eastern North Carolina. This is the time farmers have worked toward since the sowing of plant beds early in the year.

All indications point to another bumper tobacco crop, with enough of the "golden weed" produced to assure smokers, chewers and dippers there'll be plenty to meet all their needs.

MAKING NIGHT PLANS . . . During a brief break in the field, two primers (or breakers), Thomas (Fuzzy) Hopkins (left), and Robert (Rif Raf) Rouse, talk about their plans for the night when the long day's work will be done. Hopkins sports a Marilyn Monroe T-shirt.

Her Own Plane

HARVARD, Ill. (AP) — Working every night and weekends for some two years, Susan Dacy, a 17-year-old high school senior, has restored a Stearman, a biplane last built in 1943.

Miss Dacy comes from an aviation-oriented family.

Her father is an airplane mechanic. Her three brothers all have planes and her sister, who is nine, is planning to build a Sopwith Camel, an observation and pursuit plane of World War I vintage.

Miss Dacy has 10 hours in the Stearman out of her 135 solo hours as a pilot.

TULSA (UPI) — Drilling for gas and oil is at a high level in western Canada, according to the Oil & Gas Journal. The industry publication says the average number of active rigs rose to 221 during the first quarter, a jump of 25 per cent from the comparable period last year. Higher energy prices and improved exploration incentives were given as the reason for the increase.

17th Century Warship Being Brought To Life By Sweden

By PHILIP M. STONE

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — The 17th-century warship Wasa spent 333 years at the bottom of Stockholm harbor. Now she is beginning to stand proud.

Salvaged in 1961, the Wasa was mounted on a specially-built concrete pontoon and towed to the Wasa shipyard. It is housed in an aluminum shed with very high humidity to protect the ship's wood. Restoration work won't be completed until about 1980.

"Some Swedes don't really understand we have something here unique in all the world. The Egyptians have the Pyramids; we have the Wasa," said Lars-Aake Kvarning, curator of the Wasa Museum.

About 445,000 persons visited the Wasa in 1975 and so far about $10 million — half from the state — has been spent on preservation and restoration. Salvaging costs were donated.

It was a bright sunny day just after Vespers, Aug. 10, 1628, when the Wasa, King Gustav II Adolf's 64-cannon flagship, began its maiden voyage from near the Royal Palace. She took three years to build but sank within 30 minutes.

The king was not aboard and history does not record what he said when told of the disaster. But he was not happy. Numerous legal hearings were held to assign blame, but in the end no one was held responsible.

Modern theorists believe the Wasa sank in 100 feet of murky waters because the cannons, which weighed 74 tons, were too heavy and the ballast was only 120 tons when it should have been at least 400 tons.

The tourists who flock now to the aluminum shed cannot gain an overall picture. They walk on landings constructed around the ship's edge, and since restoration is still going on they are not allowed aboard. They cannot get far enough away for an overall picture.

The Swedish Parliament, however, in one of its last acts before the summer recess, gave approval to research building an appropriate new home for the Wasa.

Kvarning recently took two visitors, dressed in hardhats, raincoats and boots, through the Wasa and into the hold.

The Wasa is wet, every inch covered in an oily preparation sprayed nightly through automatic sprinklers installed throughout the ship. Some 90 per cent of the ship is oak and tons of polyethylene glycol over the years has prevented the wood from drying too quickly, warping or cracking. The humidity is for the same purpose.

The Wasa is supported by a steel cradle with thousands of iron bolts fitted in place of old ones. About 16,000 construction parts were salvaged, with the main restoration principle being to use original parts as much as possible.

The aluminum shed already has been extended once for the Wasa's length, but it is not tall enough to contain full masts. From figurehead to stern the Wasa was about 200 feet, at her widest point 39 feet and the mainmast was about 158 feet high.

"I've been with the Wasa 12 years and I'm just as fascinated now as I was when I started," Kvarning said.

"Because of all the money spent on her, there is some talk it is all a mistake. They don't realize how unique she is. There is nothing else like the Wasa. She is the number one thing to see in Scandinavia," he said.

Salvaging the Wasa has given historians an insight to life aboard, and for most crew members it was glum.

Soldiers and sailors had no beds, but slept on the planks of the gun deck. The ship's officers, however, did have cabins with simple bunks in the five-story poop. Among food items salvaged were salt fish, salt meat, flour, butter, fresh water, and rum.

Until the ship actually left the archipelago, it was each man's responsibility to provide his own food. On the open sea provisions were provided as part of the crewmember's pay.

Two items that took a long time to place in the jigsaw puzzle were pieces of wood each with a round hole in the middle. Kvarning said his workers finally figured out the boards belonged on the bow and were the ship's toilets.

The Wasa was built to take 437 men, but when she sank, 300 soldiers were not aboard. Skeletons of 18 men, women, and children were found, suggesting families were allowed on board while the ship was in home waters.

In 1664 and 1683, a total of 54 cannons were salvaged by using a diving bell, but then the Wasa was forgotten until 1956 when she was rediscovered. After much preliminary work it took two years to bring the ship out of the mud and onto the surface.

Archaeologists discovered 24,000 objects, most of them wood, but also leather, textiles, gold, silver, copper, bronze, brass and cast iron.

The Daily Reflector TV SHOWTIME

For The Week Of August 15-21, 1976

A Fairy Tale Comes True

TOGETHER — The Captin and Tennille, one of the country's most popular singing duets ("Love Will Keep Us Together"), will host their network TV special on Tuesday, Aug. 17 (8:30-9:30 p.m.) on ABC Channels 3W-12.

It could only happen in a modern-day fairy tale. A young couple goes into a tiny studio in the San Fernando Valley and cuts a passionate love song embracing the romantic idealism of their relationship. Since they don't know who to send the record to, they decide to spend $250 and press 500 records to send to radio stations in Calif. The Captain, Daryl Dragon, is responsible for playing all the instruments and arranging the track, while his girl friend (now his wife), Toni Tennille, has done all the vocal parts.

This happened in September, 1973. Since that time, the song, "The Way I Want To Touch You," has become a legend in Los Angeles, at one point becoming a top-ten seller at big retail outlets, and all without the aid of a major record label or formal distribution.

Now the tremendously popular duo will host their first television program, "The Captain and Tennille Special," Tuesday, Aug. 17, 8:30 to 9:30 p.m., on ABC Ch. 3-12. This is actually a prelude of what's to come when their own series premieres this fall.

Joining them on the special area Academy Award-winning actor and comic artist Art Carney and country music star Roy Clark, a skilled comedian and the winner of numerous music industry awards.

Daryl Dragon and Toni Tennille have had impressive careers apart from their recent success story. A native Californian, Daryl has worked with Brian Wilson and the Beach Boys for years, concentrating primarily on arrangements for the group. He is the son of well-known symphony conductor Carmen Dragon, and his father's influence is evident in much of Daryl's work. Daryl arranged all of the songs on their hit album, "Love Will Keep Us Together," and he and Toni wrote the bulk of the album's material.

Toni Tennille, originally from Montgomery, Ala., has been singing all her life, and prominent among her varied credits are her work as backing vocalist on Elton John's "Caribou" and a stint as the only "Beach Girl" (she played the piano) ever to tour with the Beach Boys.

The Dragons have recently purchased a home in the Pacific Palisades — "the first home we ever owned" — where they live with 2 pet English bulldogs, Broderick and Elizabeth. The dogs will also be featured on the special.

It is unlikely that the Captain and Tennille will ever have to press their own records again, but it's nice to know there's still a place for fairy tales in the computer read-outs of today's record industry.

Kansas City Is Big Enough

As delegates and newsmen start swarming into Kansas City this weekend they may very well be asking themselves . . . why Kansas City? Actually, there is no logical explanation. Rather, it's all part of a very complicated mechanism that started about 15 or 16 months ago.

It happens every four years in the spring . . . like a ritual dance. Not the mating step of the ruffled grouse, not a pagan rite, but the quadrennial search for a city where the Republicans can hold their nominating Convention.

Why the dance? It all sounds simple enough. Just find a city . . . there must be plenty which would want the honor, prestige and publicity of having a presidential nominee chosen in its hometown. Not necessarily so.

By the time all the considerations are sifted out by both the party picking the city, and the city picking the party, there really isn't all that much choice.

First of all, there's logistics. The Republicans need at least 20,000 hotel rooms . . . that eliminates Durham and Richmond. Then there's the Convention hall. The party wants to seat every delegate on the main floor. And, they need plenty of work space in and around the hall for the media.

Besides hotel rooms and the Convention hall, there are the other crucial headaches for the Site Selection Committee . . . money and politics.

Politics: The Committee always looks for a receptive climate (political, not necessarily meteorological). Is the mayor or the governor of their party? If demonstrators cause trouble, what will be the policy of the police?

This time, as always, there were even more subtle political decisions to be made. Los Angeles and San Francisco both wanted the Convention. Would President Ford allow his party to hold forth in Reagan's backyard? Not hardly.

Then there's the money. After Miami hosted both conventions in 1972 and spent close to two million dollars sprucing up the city, arranging special bus transportation for delegates, police overtime, and after-convention cleanup, the city fathers stated that they "never wanted to see another convention again." Furthermore, delegates are notoriously known to be small tippers — definitely not big-spenders — much to the despair of bell hops, car-parkers, and waiters.

So, after trips to about 13 or 15 cities, the Republicans decided last Sept. on Kansas City, even tho it is thousands of hotel rooms short and delegates and newsmen will have to be housed in Topeka and St. Joe . . . an hour's drive from the arena.

Why Kansas city? President Ford wanted it there. "And that's the truth." As Lily Tomlin's Edith Anne would say.

Confusion Reigns Still In Montreal

Sounds of machinery and furniture being moved are constantly heard now. People continue to fill the boxes cluttering the hallways while thinking that somehow there seemed to be fewer materials when all arrived here a month ago. And they reflect on how quickly the XXI Olympic Games became history.

Outside, 50-foot trailer trucks seem to be everywhere in sight, and in less time than one might have believed possible, the first of the fleet is tightly packed and heading for the ABC studio facilities in Hollywood, with another due to depart for the same destination several hours later.

This was Monday, Aug. 2, the day after the Games had officially ended, and Operation Move Home had started at the ABC television center, which ABC Sports had used as its home while providing millions of Americans with the thrills of the Olympics.

And, despite all the noise and tumult created by 60 individuals moving and packing equipment, television production continued inside. Less than 36 hours remained until ABC Sports delivered its final chapter of the XXI Olympic Games, a two-hour in-depth assessment of what actually took place during the past 14 days and what it all means to the future of the grand quadrennial event.

Thus, some video tape machines continued to roll for the Tuesday night telecast, while other were wheeled out of the center and lifted into one of the waiting trailers. To those operating and directing in the video tape rooms, then, it was work as usual, only with fewer co-workers around.

For those whose work schedules dictated that they leave Montreal on Sunday or Monday, an obvious monumental problem was avoided by the network's expert Mary Gonzales, who was brought there from New York to facilitate departing flight arrangements. And for those remaining, she was still much in demand, her desk a popular gathering spot.

Some of the more than 400 ABC employees who had been working there wouldn't leave until the end of this week, when the entire center has been cleared of equipment and machinery that was brought up in early June.

Another railer had been moved around in position for loading, although it seemed that hardly a dent had been made in material to be loaded and shipped to Kansas City for the network's coverage of the Republican Convention.

In the background, the Olympic theme, "Bugler's Dream," is blaring, with production personnel unaffected by what is happening around them.

Causes Toothache

Feel like you're paying through the teeth for dental care? The sixth "Consumer Survival Kit," airing Sunday, Aug. 15, at 5 p.m. on UNC-TV, helps you get to the root of the problem by offering the viewer a "conscientiously applied program of oral hygiene and regular professional care."

NEWS MEN — CBS News Correspondent Walter Cronkite (foreground) will be anchorman for CBS News' extensive coverage of the Republican National Convention, Monday, Aug. 16 thru Thursday, Aug. 19, at the Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., on CBS-TV. Working with Cronkite will be (l to r) Correspondents Bill Moyers, providing analysis, and Morton Dean and Mike Wallace, reporting from the convention floor.

Disney Owl Can't Fly, Doesn't Hoot

"The Owl That Didn't Give a Hoot," an animal adventure story, airs on "The Wonderful World of Disney" Sunday, Aug. 15, from 7 to 8 p.m., on NBC-TV.

While taking snapshots of wildlife in a local wooded area, young Johnny Fredericks (David Potter) finds an abandoned baby Great Horned Owl and takes it home. What starts out as a rescue operation soon blooms into great affection for the tiny owl. Against the advice of his parents (Marian Fletcher and John Fetzler), Johnny decides to keep it as a pet and names the owl Harriet, after a close resemblance to his dad's aunt.

Harriet is a great subject for Johnny's camera as it grows, but as an owl, she is far from perfect. She can't fly, she sleeps at night and has not once uttered what might be mistaken for a hoot.

Her greatest talent is one for mischief. "Helpful" Harriet manages a nice dance with the vacuum cleaner, helps with the day's laundry (from the inside of the washing machine) and develops an acute taste for cucumber and onions.

Afraid to release the owl to the wild because of its inability to fend for itself, Johnny takes it upon himself to teach Harriet to hunt and to be like the other Great Horned Owls so that he may set her free.

Not until the owl's natural instincts are aroused as a result of an encounter with a rattle-snake, however, does she fly. It seems that Harriet never flew before because she never had to.

But this accomplishment brings about a problem when Harriet flies around town, creating havoc everywhere. To compound matters, a neighbor, Sam Miller (Hyde Clayton), blames her for the death of his prize racing pigeons.

When a male Great Horned Owl pays a courting call to Harriet, Johnny realizes that now Harriet must decide what is best for her — the domestic life of a pet or the life nature originally had planned. And so he does not close the gate to Harriet's pen.

There is a surprise ending to this delightful adventure tale, so typical of the humorous yet whimsical productions that have made that wonderful world of Disney such an integral part of our lives.

FORMER POLICEMAN TO PRODUCE SERIES

Don Ingalls, a former policeman turned writer-producer, is producing "Serpico," the one-hour drama series to premiere on NBC-TV in Sept. David Birney stars in the title role of Frank Serpico, a New York Police Department undercover agent.

Ingalls wrote the screenplays for "Airport 1975," "Flood" and the soon-to-be-produced "Where's the Body?" He previously produced such series as "The Virginian," "The Travels of Jaimie McPheeters" and "Have Gun, Will Travel."

George Maharis, Stefanie Powers, William Windom, Andrew Duggan and Bobby Riggs guest-star in "The Game of Survival," a drama about a jet set slaying that puzzles the McMillans (Rock Hudson and Susan Saint James) on "McMillan & Wife," to be rebroadcast on the "NBC Sunday Mystery Movie" series Aug. 15, 8 to 10 p.m., on Ch. 6-7.

Ilia Astrov (Robert Wolders) a hot-tempered tennis pro, is suspected of slaying wealthy Bay Area business magnate Ewing Webley (Duggan). When Astrov manages to elude a manhunt, Webley's son, Walter (Maharis), puts pressure on Mac (Hudson) via his father's newspaper, to find the slayer. But Mac's probe points to motives for homicide by Walter as well as by Webley's flirtatious widow, Rachel (Miss Powers).

John Schuck stars as Sgt. Enright and Nancy Walker plays Mildred. The cast also includes Windom as Astrov's manager, Ted Hoffenstein; Bobby Riggs in a cameo role as himself; Rodolfo Hoyos as ranch foreman Martinez; Tito Vandis as restaurateur Boravitch; Bryan O'Byrne as the butler; and Kenneth Tobey as Sgt. Halliday.

Portions of the drama were filmed on location in Pasadena, Mulholland (Los Angeles) and Lancaster, Calif. Harry Falk directed the William Driskill script.

Votes, Not Diamonds Were Her Best Friend

When Leonora Cohen hurled an iron bar through a glass case in the Tower of London room that housed the crown jewels, she was after something much more precious than diamonds or rubies. Votes - votes for women - were her target.

Mrs. Cohen is now 102, and looks like a genteel grandma incapable of wielding anything more violent than a crochet hook or a knitting needle. So do Cicely Hale and Grace Roe, two other charter members of the British militant women's suffrage movement dramatized on "Shoulder to Shoulder," the Masterpiece mini-series on PBS Sundays.

The three women, now in retirement, retain vivid memories of their fight for enfranchisement, and their work for the Women's Social and Political Union, the organization founded by the Pankhursts, who figure prominently in the series.

"I was asked to smash windows in Oxford Street," recalls Mrs. Cohen. "But I didn't want to, so I went to the Tower of London." Sixty years later, she can still hear the epithet "scum of the earth" hurled at suffragettes by press and public, and bring back the sense of absolute terror of confrontations with the police in the streets.

Technically, she's still an undischarged prisoner. Actually, she's retired from a career as magistrate, unionist and committee woman, signs her letters "Centenarian" and urges visitors to "keep the torch burning."

Cicely Hale, Mrs. Cohen's junior by 10 years, also retains the same spirit she had back at the turn of the century when she worked as information officer for the WPSU. Now she's eager for women to do more with the vote they won, says there aren't enough women in the House of Commons, and rails against remaining prejudices against her sex in the professions.

She's particularly waiting for the day when women can serve as ministers in the Church of England. In the meantime, she's busy during retirement (she was a midwife, medical worker and a journalist) acting as a leader for the Girl Guides.

Grace Roe, one of the many suffragettes who were imprisoned and fed forcibly - a degradation not omitted from "Shoulder to Shoulder" - agrees that women haven't used their voting power sufficiently.

terrifying sequel to one of the most popular films of the last decade, has started filming in Hollywood for telecast during the 1976-77 season on ABC-TV.

Oscar Winner Ruth Gordon, Ray Milland and Patty Duke Astin head the cast of the two-hour drama. Miss Gordon will recreate her Oscar-winning role as the mysterious Minnie Castevet. Stephen McHattie, who won critical acclaim for his portrayal of James Dean last season, stars as Rosemary's now grownup son. Also starring are George Maharis, Donna Mills, Tina Louise and David Huffman.

Maude's Classy Neighbor

Every Monday night, Dr. Arthur Harmon walks through the front door of Maude and Walter Findlay's house with his conservative suit, classy tie and square, button-down mind. From that moment, you can bet there'll be fireworks — verbal ones anyway. After all, Maude's next door neighbor is not only a doctor, but seemingly a professional conservative whom "God sent" to equalize Maude's liberal views on everything from sex to china saucers.

Conrad Bain gives every appearance of having been born to play Arthur Harmon on CBS-TV's "Maude." Any other actor in this particular role would be unthinkable. A performer with excellent skill, Bain has done comedy and drama, Shakespeare and Simon with equal ability. In addition to his stage work, Conrad has been in such outstanding films as "Bananas," "Up the Sandbox" and "Lovers and Other Strangers."

In person, Conrad Bain is younger, more handsome and a much more delightful person than Dr. Harmon is, which means he has the ability to submerge his true self in his television role.

When he joined "Maude," he thought it would last no longer than thirteen weeks, at the most. "I'm ashamed to say I thought it was too sophisticated for a general audience to become addicted to. Happily, I was wrong."

Bain was born in Lethbridge, Alberta, Canada, and has an identical twin, Bonar. He became interested in acting while still in high school and began to actively pursue a theatrical career after college.

Four Reporters Go To The Republican Convention Floor

Four of NBC News' most experienced political reporters will be on the floor of the Republican national convention, beginning Monday, Aug. 16, at 7:30 p.m.

Two of the four — Tom Pettit and Catherine Mackin — were floor reporters at the 1972 conventions. The other two — Tom Brokaw and John Hart — had their first 'taste' of convention coverage when the Democrats convened in New York last month.

Lee Hanna, Vice President, Television News, said, "NBC News' floor teams have nationally provided an extra dimension to NBC's overall convention reportage. An indication of how heavily we rely on our floor reporters is the fact that in 1972, NBC Control switched to them more than 250 times during its 36-hour-two-minute-long coverage of the Democratic National Convention in Miami Beach, and more than 100 times during its 18-hour-23-minute-long coverage of the Republican National in the same city." (The four floor reporters that year were Mackin, Pettit, Douglas Kiker and Garrick (Utey).)

Tom Pettit, who has virtually swept the field in news awards as a correspondent, has been assigned to the NBC News Bureau in Washington, D. C., since last year. He took on that assignment after a decade of covering news for the network in Los Angeles. This year he has been covering statewide trends and issues in the states holding Presidential Primaries. Pettit began picking up awards — two Emmys and a Peabody among them — about six months after the premiere of "First Tuesday" in 1969, the TV news magazine to which he contributed many investigative reports.

Catherine Mackin has been NBC News' Congressional correspondent since Jan., 1974. She gained nationwide recognition in 1972 as the first woman television floor reporter at the national conventions. TV critics describe her as a "superb interviewer," "apparently unflappable" and "star of the show."

Tom Brokaw has been the network's White House correspondent since 1973 and is anchorman of "NBC Saturday Night News." He covered the resignation of Nixon and Gerald Ford's succession to the Presidency.

John Hart, anchorman of "NBC Sunday Night News," was with CBS for 14 years before joining NBC last year, and anchored the "CBS Morning News" from 1969 to '73.

Thereafter he offered commentary on a regular basis on the morning show and anchored special reports for CBS.

Loren, Newman Star In A Comedy-Drama

Academy Award winner Sophia Loren and Paul Newman star in "Lady L," a comedy-drama filmed on location in Switzerland and Paris, to be colorcast as the "CBS Late Movie," Monday, Aug. 16, at 12 a.m. on Channel 9-11. Oscar winners David Niven and Peter Ustinov co-star in the 1966 MGM release which is based on Romain Gray's novel.

Miss Loren was named "Best Actress" in 1961 for her role in "Two Women." David Niven won the "Best Actor" Award in 1958 for "Separate Tables." Peter Ustinov was "best Supporting Actor" in 1960 and 1964 for his roles in "Spartacus" and "Topkapi."

Louise (Miss Loren), who works as a laundress in Paris at the turn of the century, meets Armand (Newman) when he takes refuge after robbing a bank. Louise learns that he is an anarchist who robs the rich to give the poor. She falls in love with him, and during the course of aiding him in his anarchistic plots, she meets wealthy aristocrat Dicky Lensdale (Niven). Louise soon finds that she must choose between them.

"Lady L" was produced by Carlo Ponti. Peter Ustinov wrote the screenplay and directed the film.

'Today' Is Life Saver

It appears that Dr. Henry Heimlich's appearance on NBC-TV's "Today" saved a human life.

On the program he described his "Heimlich maneuver" — the simple way of saving the life of anyone who is choking on a piece of food — that must be carried out in a hurry, because anyone choking will be dead in four minutes.

Mrs. John Bonney of Fairfield, Conn., watched Dr. Heimlich's demonstration. Later, as she was dining at a Connecticut restaurant with her daughter, her daughter began choking.

Mrs. Bonney wrote to "Today": "I knew what to do because of your program, but because of my age — 75 years — I didn't have the strength. A man at the next table to us jumped up and put his hands over mine and forced the particle of food out." Mrs. Bonney said her daughter recovered in moments.

(To do the Heimlich maneuver, put your fist against the victim's abdomen at the point above the navel and just below the rib cage, and give a short, sharp, upward thrust. The food particle is instantly expelled.)

"WHAT'S HE DONE?"

On a recent airing of "The Tonight Show," Johnny Carson questioned the way so many young comics pick questionable material. "I really find it hard to believe a performer when I watch a 19-year-old kid sing 'I've Gotta Be Me' or 'My Way.' At his age, what's he done?"

MOTORCYCLE MOBBED — Richie Cunningham, played by Ron Howard (l), commiserates with Fonzie (Henry Winkler) over the heap of the Fonz's motorcycle, found destroyed by vandals — they think — in "Motorcycle," an episode of "Happy Days," airing on Tuesday, Aug. 17 (8-8:30 p.m.) on ABC Channels 3W-12.

Reverend Is Paul Revere's Descendant

"Listen my child and you shall hear, another tale of Paul Revere." Well, that's really not the way it goes, but when you talk with William Christopher, it's what you want to say.

Christopher, who so aptly plays the Rev. Mulcahy on CBS-TV's "M*A*S*H," is a direct descendent of the American Revolution hero, Paul Revere. "Being related to Revere isn't really a big deal," he says, "but it does give me a sort of pride about this country and our family's part in it."

"Paul Revere was a remarkable man. He was very physical, a strong guy. He was a leader in the guild movement. He wasn't up in politics. Had he been, he might have been a governor or a strong political leader. He was a craftsman who spent a great deal of time figuring the best ways of making things out of silver. He cast bells and learned how to make gun powder. He was also an inventor. In fact, he made the wooden teeth George Washington wore. Paul Revere had a strong physical presence which led him to be a leader without getting involved in politics."

Being Reverend Mulcahy is a big responsibility for Christopher, the great, great, great, great, great, great nephew of Revere. "It's not an easy role for me," he said, "especially since I'm not a Catholic. Actors are not fully aware of what taking on a series like 'MASH' includes when they do the pilot."

"Perhaps if someone had said you are going to be on a series which will run five years or more and have eight central characters, I could have projected what effect it would have in advance, but no one really imagined 'M*A*S*H' would be as big as it is. Some really wonderful things have happened to me because of the show. I never thought that I would be asked to speak to high school assemblies. It's such an honor to have a chance to 'rap' with kids."

It's an honor for kids to 'rap' with a direct descendent of one of America's most illustrious heroes too. Particularly during this Bicentennial year.

GOOD THINGS FOR GENTLE PEOPLE

If anyone seems an unlikely candidate for the title of American's reigning cult hero, it's Henry Winkler. There is absolutely nothing in his background, be it personally or professionally, that could have prepared him for the acclaim he has received for his portrayal of Fonzie in "Happy Days," seen Tuesdays (8-8:30 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

Winkler grew up in New York City, the son of wealthy parents, and - before he decided to become an actor - he toyed around with the idea of becoming a child psychologist. When he graduated from an exclusive Manhattan private school, his yearbook stated that "Henry Winkler leaves with dramatic foreshadowings."

While attending graduate school at Yale, he developed a serious interest in the theatre and after receiving his Masters Degree, he headed for New York and an acting career.

After co-starring in two films, "Crazy Joe" and "The Lords of Flatbush," he heeded the call, "Head West, young man." Once in California, he quickly garnered guest parts on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," "The Bob Newhart Show" and appeared in a pilot of "Friends and Lovers." The part of "The Fonz" was given to him on his birthday.

Winkler says that Fonzie is his fantasy. "Henry Winkler is the reality of the situation. Fonzie is my job, not my life."

Because of his concern about his fans identifying him so totally with Fonzie, he limits his personal appearances for the show. There are only four planned for this year.

In defense of Fonzie, he says, "Kids want to live up to something, and Fonzie has a clear-cut set of standards. They like that. For all this wisecracking, Fonzie is basically a moral person and his personal resources as a tough street kid allow him the liberty to do what he thinks is right, even if everybody else disagrees.

For all his gal-type fans, Winkler's love life is a source of constant fascination. He's single, always has been and says he plans to stay that way for a while. He lives alone in a Hollywood apartment and dates beauties such as Jamie Lynn Bauer of "The Young and the Restless." He freely admits that he likes pretty women "but I like brains to go along with beauty."

'Paint Your Wagon' Returns

Lee Marvin, Clint Eastwood and Jean Seberg star in "Paint Your Wagon," a rousing, earthy tale of the Gold Rush days based on Lerner and Loewe's hit Broadway musical, on "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," Aug. 15, 9 p.m. to 12 midnight, on Channel 3W-5-12.

"Paint Your Wagon," an Alan Jay Lerner production, co-stars Ray Walston and Harve Presnell and features the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band. The film was directed by Josh Logan from a screenplay by Lerner, with adaptation by Paddy Chayefsky.

The musical score (which includes "I Talk to the Trees") is by Frederick Loewe and Alan Jay Lerner, with music for additional songs by Andre Previn.

In the story, Ben Rumson (Lee Marvin) is a hard-fighting, hard-drinking, happy-go-lucky prospector whose partnership with a young man simply called Pardner (Clint Eastwood) becomes very complicated when they decide to share a wife (Jean Seberg), since she can't choose between them.

The brawling comedy becomes even wilder when the otherwise womanless town of Rumson's Creek imports six French "ladies" under the dubious guidance of Rotten Luck Willie (Harve Presnell); a straight-faced family arrives and objects violently to the local morals (or lack thereof), and the gold strike runs out.

WESTERN MOVIE — Clint Eastwood, Jean Seberg and Lee Marvin (l-r) star in "Your Your Wagon," the Lerner and Loewe comedy hit about the Gold Rush on the "ABC Sunday Night Movie," Sunday, August 15 (9-12 p.m.) on Channels 3W-5-12.

Super Sleuth Is Back

Tony Franciosa, starring in the title role of "Matt Helm" as the crack secret agent-turned-private eye, finds himself involved with an international black market operation in heavy munitions when he tries to protect a movie star whose life is endangered, in the special "Wednesday Movie of the Week" airing Aug. 18, at 11:30 p.m. on ABC Channel 3-5-12.

When the popular film actress finds her life threatened by an unknown source, she believes it to be the man who murdered her father years ago. Matt Helm is brought into the case through a mutual friend.

Matt's search for the source of present danger and long ago murder leads to a wealthy arms dealer, a secret government agency, an angry African patriot ready to kill for his country, a ship of death and a series of deadly revelations.

Through some of his television and movie roles, people now consider Tony to be a rich, swinging sophisticate like Matt Helm and the other characters he's portrayed.

"Nothing could be farther from the true Tony Franciosa," he said. "I am a working actor and my goals are to keep growing as an individual and as an actor. As a third generation American raised in New York's East Harlem, I am deeply appreciative that acting has given me an opportunity for a broad and continuing education. There has been travel abroad, I've met heads of state and have had other experiences that help make me feel at ease with these roles."

Tony first became interested in acting by accident when, at the age of 18, he landed his first part in a New York City YMCA production of "The Seagull."

Ross Stars In Movie

Katherine Ross, who co-starred in the hit motion picture, "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," appears again as Etta Place, a schoolteacher who fled the United States with two members of the Wild Bunch, in "The Most Wanted Woman," a special two-hour movie presentation to air on ABC-TV.

Also starring in "The Most Wanted Woman," which is currently in production, is Steve Forrest as Siringo, the Pinkerton detective who is obsessed with his desire to apprehend the beautiful fugitive, Hector Elizondo, who starred last season in "Popi," plays Pancho Villa. Other major roles are portrayed by Michael Constantine, Stella Stevens and Katherine Helmond.

The original screenplay by Richard Fielder, which takes place on the Mexican border in 1909, just prior to the Mexican Revolution, is directed by Lee Phillips for 20th Century-Fox.

'GWTW' Countdown

"Gone With the Wind," the panoramic Civil War drama, winner of 10 Academy Awards including the 1939 citation for Best Picture, will have its much-anticipated network television premiere in two parts - as a "Big Event" Sunday, Nov. 7 (8-11 p.m.) and Monday, Nov. 8 (8 to 10 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

This internationally acclaimed movie drama, which faithfully recreates Margaret Mitchell's best-selling novel of southern life during the strife-torn war years and the post-war era, features an all-star cast including Clark Gable, Vivien

Leigh, Leslie Howard, Olivia de Havilland and Hattie McDaniel. The film, produced by David O. Selznick and released through Metron-Goldwyn-Mayer, was, for nearly three decades, the top-grossing box office attraction in the history of the movie industry. The film, noteworthy in that its theme is rooted in one of the most crucial periods of our nation's history, will be broadcast as part of NBC's Bicentennial celebration.

In addition to winning the Academy Award as Best Picture of 1939, Vivien Leigh won the Best Actress Oscar.

Network Remains Open

For the vast majority of Americans, this week's television gavel-to-gavel coverage NBC and CBS are presenting, is a once-every-four-years occasion — something to watch and to meticulously digest, word by word.

But there are people who really don't want to sit and watch the proceedings from beginning to end. These members of the 'bored-with-convention-coverage' minority can take heart in the knowledge that there is a network for them. ABC, bless them, will present their own unique 'edited' version of Convention coverage, plus other regularly scheduled programs.

ABC News first introduced this 'unconventional' Convention coverage in 1968, as an alternative to the traditional gavel-to-gavel approach that has dominated television network Convention reporting since the 1950s. The idea won acclaim from critics and attracted many viewers.

Walter Pfister, Jr., ABC News Vice President, emphasized: "We will be on live for the significant and newsworthy Convention events — like the nominations, balloting and acceptance speeches."

"Most important, like any good newspaper, we have the

BEHIND SCREENS — While the Republicans meet in convention in Kansas City's Kemper Arena, which will air on ABC-TV, Monday, August 16 through Thursday, August 19, ABC News edited coverage of their activity will be broadcast to the Nation from the ABC-TV Control Room located in the recesses of the arena. From this room, constant communication is maintained between producers, directors, anchormen, floor correspondents, cameramen, remote units, technicians and others, to produce a tightly timed and well integrated news program.

flexibility to let an important story run long — to run beyond the scheduled broadcast time. And even more than newspapers, we have the flexibility go give the public immediate, live coverage of major developments as they happen, by interrupting regularly scheduled programs."

To bring you this edited programming are some 490 people — correspondents, camera crews, engineering and production staff, graphic artists, budget controllers, secretaries and even motorcycle couriers. ABC is also using 26 TV color cameras which will be deployed in the Convention arenas and at locations in the city where news is being made. To man these cameras are a dozen film crews who are on call 24 hours a day.

ABC believes, and rightly so, that their concept of edited coverage will give viewers the option to tune out the tedium of the TV medium.

The Combination Is Perfect

When ABC announced that they were scheduling another cops-and-robbers show last fall, the general feeling was: "Why?" Television needed another police show like it needed a nation-full of blown picture tubes.

But that was before ABC unveiled two undercover policemen named Dave Starsky and Ken Hutchinson. Within a matter of three segments, the fall season — which will always be remembered for its high number of disappointing new shows — had found a redeeming note in none other than "Starsky and Hutch" (seen Wednesdays, 10-11 p.m. on ABC-TV).

The show became not only a show that gained steadily in the ratings, but also gave a strong ray of hope that a cop show really could be entertaining as well as realistic.

It comes as no surprise, of course, that much of the show's success is attributed to the two actors who are currently being dubbed as the "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" of TV.

"Our relationship on the show has been good from the very beginning," David Soul admits. "It was just there." Soul plays the blonde, handsome detective, "Hutchinson." His partner,

HE'S NOT KNOCKING IT

Jamie Farr, Cpl. Klinger of "M.A.S.H.," is one actor who's achieved considerable fame and fortune from television who's not knocking it.

And, he does not knock his "Klinger" character, explaining, "The character will get tired of me before I do of it. I'll like it as long as they keep it fresh and believable, and they're doing that."

Lately, he has been trying a nightclub act, and candidly admits he's ranged from very good for 20 minutes to very, very bad for the next 20.

MARK SHERA — Is introduced in the regular role of J. R. Jones, a young cousin of Barnaby Jones, who joins the detective's private-investigation firm, when "Barnaby Jones" returns for its fifth season this fall (Thursday, 10-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Mark Shera Is A New Crew Member

Coming aboard the S. S. "Barnaby Jones" this season is one of the outstanding, up-and-coming young stars of today, Mark Shera.

Formerly Dominic Luca, the wisecracking hip cop of "S.W.A.T." fame, Mark has been cast as J. R. Jones, a nephew of the genial Barnaby. As he steps into the role of J. R., he sheds his policeman's uniform and dons the garb of a law student.

Changing from one series to another is no easy undertaking, especially for a relative newcomer, but if anybody can successfully accomplish this feat, Mark Shera can.

Says Shera: "It's a matter of one part leading to another. One of the reasons that I think I was cast as J. R. Jones was the quality of the character I played in 'S.W.A.T.' It's a different name, a different show, and a different character, of course, but there are a lot of similarities. They are both young, both Italian, both energetic and rash—the kind of guy who goes too far and must be brought down. One important difference is that J. R. is more intelligent. Plus, he's studying for the bar."

Now, let's take a look at Mark Shera. You'll find startling similarities. He's 29 years-old, Jewish, personable, ambitious, and has already established an impressive list of theatrical credits. In his first professional audition, he won the role of a disciple in "Godspell," playing that part in Boston for nine months, then advancing to the exhausting role of Jesus, a part he played for 3 years on the New York stage.

In "Godspell," he came to the attention of producers who cast him in a pilot, "Nicky's World." Even tho it didn't sell, it did win him a guest spot in "Kojak." Another guest appearance in "Gunsmoke" led him straight to "S.W.A.T."

That clean-cut quality that was so evident in his portrayal of Luca is still strongly evident in J. R. This can, in all probability, be attributed to the fact that Mark's just naturally a clean-cut, up-and-above-board guy. He's also a guy with a fantastic amount of talent and ambition.

Any other 'natural' qualities he's found easy to transfer to Luca and J. R.? "Yeah," he says with a broad grin, "I'm pushy!"

HOLLYWOOD — Greg and Cher Allman are homeless. Though they're living in a leased Malibu Beach home for the balance of the summer, the home Cher used to share with Sonny in the posh Hombly Hills section of Hollywood recently sold (for an amount in excess of $1 million) and when the beach home lease expires, the couple will have to find a new residence.

Rosemary Forsythe, the new Laura Horton on daytime's "Days of Our Lives," couldn't be happier with her new role. "I'd sort of let my career slide the last 18 months," the personable actress says, "and it feels good to find some new energies for my career."

Comedian-turned-actor David Brenner actually became a comedian when he decided there needed to be more laughter in the world. David stars in the new Fall series, "Snip," but originally decided to do comedy for just one year before "getting into a serious profession." His success, however, as a comedian made him decide to stay with it for awhile — which was a decision he made seven years ago.

Leigh McCloskey, the young actor who co-stars in the new series "Executive Suite" premiering this Fall, is more than just an actor. Although he has just had his 21st birthday, Leigh writes poetry, is an artist and an accomplished musician. In addition, he's an above average fencer!

James York is the newest cast addition to daytime's "General Hospital." And ironically, he got the role as Doctor Dante after he was spotted in a small role on "The Young and the Restless." Outside of his acting, Jim collects and refinishes antiques.

Telly Savalas, lensing eight "Kojak" segments in New York, is nursing a busted finger: a doorman accidentally shut one on him.

Betty Furness Is A Happy Newcaster

The national political conventions not only made Betty Furness famous, but truly changed her life. She says: "They made me who I am today."

In 1952 she won instant fame doing commercials for Westinghouse at the Democratic and Republican conventions in Chicago. This summer she's joined in Jim Hartz in presiding over the "Today" coverage of both conventions on NBC-TV.

"1952" was the first big year for television at the conventions, the year when people had their first TV sets. TV had covered the conventions for the first time four years before, but relatively few people owned sets. I had been doing those commercials for three years, but it was the impact of the conventions that made me famous. I had, literally, more air time than any candidate or speaker. I was on day and night, gavel-to-gavel. I worked right in Convention Hall and between commercials became totally fascinated with the world of politics and of TV news reporting."

In 1956 she was back at the conventions — Republican in San Francisco, Democratic in Chicago — and by then, she says, "I was considered part of the convention scene." In 1960? The same song, second verse — she was with the Republicans in Chicago, the Democrats in Los Angeles.

Wellman Featured

"The Men Who Made the Movies," a series featuring veteran Hollywood directors, spotlights William Wellman, Thursday, Aug. 19, at 9 p.m. on UNC-TV. Wellman, who died last year at the age of 79, was considered one of the film colony's most colorful characters.

A chance meeting with Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. at a hockey match in Boston Garden before World War I led to Wellman's emergence as one of the all-time great directors. Fairbanks was impressed by his dash and elan and when Wellman returned from wartime service, Fairbanks was instrumental in landing him his first movie job as a bit player.

Film clips from "Wings," Wellman's first triumph as a director and the first Academy Award winner for Best Picture of the Year in 1927, opens this week's segment of "The Men Who Made the Movies."

Kevin Dobson Stars In 'Stranded'

Kevin Dobson, familiar to millions of television viewers as Detective Bobby Crocker on "Kojak," stars in "Stranded," an action drama about a band of modern castaways who find themselves isolated from civilization after their airliner crashes in the South Pacific. The drama will be rebroadcast Friday, Aug. 20, 8 to 9 p.m., on CBS Channel 9.

Finding themselves on an apparently uninhabited island, the survivors begin to establish a crude settlement, only to discover that they and their flimsy huts are about to be assaulted by the lethal fury of a hurricane.

Dobson plays Sgt. Rafe Harder, a New York police detective who becomes the leader of the battered little group.

Lara Parker plays Crystal Norton, a young woman who masks her vulnerability with a crusty veneer. Marie Windsor portrays Rose Orselli, a housewife whose husband died in the crash. Devon Ericson and Jimmy McNichol play a young sister and brother whose father has been missing since the crash. Rex Everhart appears as a retired construction engineer who participates as a jack-of-all-trades. Erin Blount portrays Ali Baba, a shrewd, resilient black ghetto kid who was a stowaway on the flight.

(background) — face the wilds of a deserted South Pacific island, in "Stranded," Friday, Aug. 20 (8-9 p.m.) on CBS Channels 3N-9

Redd Is Alias Chicago Red

The series "Sanford and Son" (Fridays, 8 to 8:30 p.m. on NBC-TV) was named for its star — John Elroy Sanford, alias Redd Foxx, alias Chicago Red.

People began to call the personable actor Red when he was a teen-ager, singing and playing a washtub bass. Often, in the same circles, the late Malcolm X was called Red also. In order to avoid confusion, Malcolm became Detroit Red and Sanford (who had headed for Chicago from his native St. Louis at 13) became Chicago Red.

The surname resulted from his fox-like sly humor and saucy stage manner. Later, as a procomedian, he added an extra "d" and an extra "x." The result? Redd Foxx.

A street corner band which Foxx joined when he ran away from home launched Foxx on his career. The group won second prize on the "Major Bowes Amateur Hour" radio show — a week's engagement at a Newark, N.J., nightclub. When the group disbanded, Redd struck out on his own.

His first nightclub appearance was in Baltimore as a single, but from 1951 to 1956 he had an act with comedian Slappy White.

The late Dinah Washington persuaded Foxx to go to California, and when he was appearing in a Los Angeles nightclub he signed his first recording contract. He later owned his own club.

His first network television appearance was on NBC-TV's "Today" show with Hugh Downs in 1964. Downs had seen him in a club in San Francisco. Since then Redd has visited numerous TV shows. His plans now include motion pictures and records on which he will be featured as a singer.

Before signing to star in "Sanford and Son," Redd appeared for a year-and-a-half in the lounge of the Las Vegas Hilton. When the series is on hiatus, he goes on tour with his nightclub act. In December, 1972, he was a member of the troupe that went overseas with Bob Hope for Hope's Christmas tour to entertain the troops. As often as possible, he puts on shows in prisons.

Frequently, Redd will drop in unannounced at a local nightspot near his home and entertain. "I give thanks every day that I was granted the talent to make people laugh," the 54-year-old entertainer says.

Chancellor Was Arrested In 1964 Convention

When John Chancellor joins David Brinkley in the NBC News anchor booth at the Republican National Convention in Kansas City this year, he will doubtless think back to the 1964 Republican Convention in San Francisco's Cow Palace, when he was an unwitting participant in the convention proceedings.

At that time, Chancellor was one of NBC's agile "floor men," with a heavy transmitter pack on his back and a microphone in his hand. It will be remembered as the first convention from which a TV newsmen was forcibly evicted. Being a floor man at that convention had its hazards. In the midst of an effort by the chairman to "clear the aisle," Chancellor suddenly found himself singled out as a principal aisle traffic hazard and was literally arrested by Daley City police and convention sergeants-at-arms.

Having available to him instant communication with the NBC control center, Chancellor reported that he was being arrested, even though he had all the proper convention credentials to be in the aisles.

It was an unusual political convention experience and will be part of a few segment on American politics in "The First Fifty Years," NBC's special four-hour program commemorating its 50th anniversary.

Chancellor, on camera in view of millions of Americans, was hustled off the floor by the police. And he was able to describe his unusual arrest every step of the way.

Finally, as he was escorted out of the hall and disappeared from view, he realized that his broadcast was ending and closed with: "This is John Chancellor somewhere in custody."

Then cameras cut back to the NBC News anchor booth with its smiling occupants, Chet Huntley and David Brinkley. Brinkley said: "John, let us hear from you."

The moment was handled lightly by NBC, but it had serious import. Not too long after, the embarrassed Republican convention officials escorted Chancellor back onto the floor and publicly apologized to him and to NBC News.

Seeks Chest

A chest of incriminating documents from World War II is the prize sought by both sides — one trying to bury the evil memories of the past and the other trying to expose its villains, in the international spy thriller, "The Salzburg Connection," to be rebroadcast on "The CBS Friday Night Movies," Aug. 20, 9 to 11 p.m., on Ch. 9-11. Barry Newman and Anna Karina star in the film.

A vacationing American lawyer, Bill Mathison, finds himself involved over his head in a confusing succession of events during his stay in Austria. He and a newly-made widow, whose husband was murdered by neo-Nazi agents, search frantically for a chest of World War II documents that brought about the man's death.

WATCH OUT!

NBC's Peter Gambicini has learned that Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz will vote for Ronald Reagan on the first ballot at the Republican convention, a report that should startle the principal resident in the White House.

What's Inside A UFO?

If you've ever wondered who and what was inside those UFO's, you can find out for yourself Saturday mornings, 9:30 to 10 a.m., by watching "The Lost Saucer," on ABC-TV.

In this live-action comedy-science-fiction series, Jim Nabors and Ruth Buzzi star as androids, a married couple named Fum and Fi, who mistakenly land their spacecraft on Earth. They are discovered by 10-year-old Jerry (Jarrod Johnson), and Alice (Alice Playten), his 17-year-old baby-sitter, who are "transported" with joy when Fi and Fum offer them a lift home.

The kids are fascinated by all the buttons, dials and gadgets on the control panel, but even more by the androids' house pet, a 'dorse' — a lovable little beastie whose front end is equine and whose rear half is canine, thus combining man's best friends in one playful package.

Then, the breath-taking moment of lift-off for home... but the saucer's cyclic time vortex malfunctions and the group finds itself in another century, and unable to return to Earth until Fum can repair the machine.

The vortex can send saucer and occupants backwards or forwards in time, and thus propels Jerry and Alice and the androids into 'far-out' adventures in time and space. They encounter ecological problems of the future and strange animals such as the chickenphant (a cross between a chicken and an elephant). As if this isn't enough, there are also strange beings like the Little-nicks, tiny people whose needs are a minimal they managed to survive the droughts, famines and the pollution which human beings brought upon themselves on Earth.

"The Lost Saucer" is based on known premises and theories about the world of the future.

FERNWOOD TO GIBBSVILLE

ALAN YOUNG SIGNS

Alan Young, in his first acting role since his "Mr. Ed" series in 1966, has been signed to guest star on the "Saturday Night" episode of "Gibbsville," a new series to premiere on NBC-TV this fall.

PLANET ACTORS — Jim Nabors (l), who stars as Fum, the android visitor from another planet, and Ruth Buzzi (r), stars as his companion, Fi, on ABC-TV's children's program, "The Lost Saucer" televised on Saturdays (12-12:25 p.m.).

Other regulars on the series are Alice Playten and Jarrod Johnson, who are featured as the Earth youngsters who travel through time and space with the androids.

Is Giants' Secret

With so many superstars in the National Football League, it is inevitable that some of the better players do not gain a great deal of recognition. Pat Hughes is a linebacker of exceptional talent who just may be the best defensive player for the New York Giants, yet he also may be the best-kept secret in the Big Apple. The Giants challenge the World Champion Pittsburgh Steelers on Friday, Aug. 20, at 8 p.m. on ABC-TV.

To be the top-rated defensive player for the Giants, one has to beat out men like Jack Gregory, Spider Lockhart, Jim Files, Jack Mendenhall, etc. But to those in the coaching office who carefully study execution, Pat Hughes has truly emerged as a star.

But then, the Giants have had a long history of superb defensive standouts, men like Sam Huff, Andy Robustelli, Rosey Grier, Dick Modzelewski and Erich Barnes. If he continues to play as he has the last couple of years, you might add Pat Hughes to that list.

Through the past few seasons, the Boston University graduate has begun to gain notice from other teams.

"As each year goes by, I'm gaining more respect from the quarterbacks and the opposition as far as what they feel they can and cannot do on the weakside when I'm there," Hughes said candidly. "Of course, they're always going to try me. Nobody has conceded the fact that you can't run over there. As great as Dick Butkus was, they still tried to run up the middle. But he certainly discouraged them."

Pat was the ninth draft pick out of Boston University, where he illustrated his versatility by going both ways for three seasons as an offensive center and linebacker. But it was clear that his defensive potential was greater, as he was the team's MVP on defense this year, winning All-East honors.

In 1970, his first season, Hughes was a reserve behind veteran Greg Larson, and switched to outside linebacker in 1971 where he produced several solid late-season performances. He moved to weakside linebacker in 1972, getting two pass interceptions and two quarterback sacks, playing tough against the run. Last year, the youngster switched again to strongside linebacker and became the defensive signal-caller in the Giants' new system, grabbing two more interceptions.

It's not easy to have your name splashed across the sports pages, or to have every Monday morning quarterback singing your praises. But it may not be long before football fans realize his ability, and the important role for the new Giants that Pat Hughes plays.

HOORAY, CAROL!

Carol Burnett annually holds a press conference for high school newspaper editors — one reason she is so popular with the younger population — and one question was: Since Bob Mackie designed clothes for both she and Cher, why didn't he make the same clothes for her?

Miss Burnett giggled, and replied: "Well, it may be because she has long black hair and mine is reddish."

Trenton 200 Is Unusual Race

There are several reasons why the Trenton 200 is an unusual auto race. For starters, it's run twice a year during the USAC season. It is also a relatively short race, requiring the utmost in positioning and car performance. Finally, it is, almost without exception, an extremely exciting race, complete with heated arguments over gas allotments and innovative machinery.

CBS Sports will provide exclusive live coverage of the $100,000 race from historic Trenton (N. J.) International Speedway Sunday, Aug. 15, 4 to 6 p.m.

Ken Squier, CBS Sports motor sports editor, will be joined by David Hobbs, English driver who finished fifth in 1974 at Indianapolis and won the United States Formula 5000 title in 1970, for the commentary.

One of the competitors at the track will be veteran Wally Dallenbach whose career has been spotted by near-misses at the championships. Now driving a Sinmast-Goodyear, Wally often comes up with piston trouble during the most vital parts of a race.

In the last Trenton 200, the Basalt, Colo. native who is living in nearby East Brunswick, (N.J.), led during portions of the race, but fell out near the end when he ran out of gas.

Wally's worst luck seems to run in the Indy 500. In 1972, after his machine was bumped from the field, he moved over to STP stables where his machine caught on fire three times. He's driven many Granatelli cars and has been dissatisfied with most of them.

RACING — U.S.A.C. star Wally Dallenbach will featured on CBS on Sunday, August 15 beginning his Sinmast-Goodyear to the Trenton at 4 p.m. Speedway for the thrilling Trenton 200 to be

The 39-year-old, veteran enjoyed an excellent season during 1973 when he captured the Ontario 500 with an average speed of better than 159 miles-per-hour. He also captured the Milwaukee 200 and the Ontario 100, and finished second in the National Championship division in '71.

Other top names in USAC racing entered include A. J. Foyt; Gordon Johncock, winner of last year's shortened race; Johnny Rutherford, 1976 Indianapolis champion; upcoming Mike Mosely, who finished second in this year's Pocono 500; Bobby Unser; and Janet Guthrie, first woman ever to qualify for a USAC 500 miles event.

The race, which was run as part of a doubleheader last year and shortened before darkness set in, is run over a track that started as a half-mile dirt oval in 1950. Trenton Speedway was lengthened to a mile in 1937, converted to asphalt 20 years later, and became the present mile-and-a-half dog leg in 1969.

Victory Took Eight Years

It took eight years to happen, but when Don Bies finally won a golf tournament, it made the victory all that much sweeter.

Bies will defend his title in the Sammy Davis, Jr. Greater Hartford Open, taking place at the Wethersfield Country Club in Wethersfield, Conn., this weekend. Third round action will take place on Saturday, Aug. 21, from 4:40 to 6 p.m., and CBS will televise the final round Sunday, Aug. 22, beginning at 4:30 p.m.

For Don Bies, 1975 was the year that he could remove his name from the "non-winner" list and put it in the victory category. He defeated tough Hubert Green in a sudden-death playoff; with rounds of 65, 66, 67 and 69, Don was at 17 under par, and had to sink a dramatic birdie putt on the second extra hole in order to claim victory.

"I never really got depressed about not winning," claims the Cottonwood, Idaho native. "I always played pretty well. I didn't have any bad years. I finished well in some tournaments and I played consistently well in all of them."

But the win at Hartford made Don appreciate the finer things in a golfer's life — like a tournament victory.

"I may never win another one," he said simply. "But I've won one."

Bies was extremely close to abandoning the tour altogether. Having worked as a club pro at the Seattle Golf Club for ten years, he seemed extremely satisfied to spend his evenings at home with his wife, Marilyn, and their three children instead of in a Holiday Inn many miles away from home.

But the Seattle Club closed several months to undergo renovations in 1968, and Don decided to compete in some tour events. He ended up finishing fifth in the U. S. Open in Rochester and earned more than $30,000 in only 15 tournaments.

Since that time, he has won over $300,000 and has failed to qualify for only one tournament since 1968. But the sweetest sound that Don Bies has ever heard was when his name was placed before the title, "Winner of the Hartford Open."

PILOT SERIOUSLY INJURED

The designer of a small plane used in CBS-TV's "Spencer's Pilots" crashed and was seriously injured recently during filming of the series at Mission Bell Ranch, a private estate near Lancaster, California.

Pilot Ken Read was treated for head injuries at a nearby hospital. Cause of the crash was not determined, but witnesses said Read's engine apparently failed during a pass by the cameras and he hit a tree.

Setting For Film

An elegant old luxury hotel in New Orleans provides a temporary home for thieves — both the multimillion-dollar and the penny ante varieties — liars, romantic cheats, social climbers and one honest man who is trying to return the establishment to its former glory in "Hotel." The movie version of Arthur Hailey's sensational novel airs on "The ABC Saturday Night Movie," Aug. 21, 9 to 11 p.m., on Channel 3-5-12.

Rod Taylor, Catherine Spaak, Karl Malden and Melvyn Douglas star in the drama of people meeting in a time of crisis for each, with the grandeur of the St. Gregory Hotel serving as a battleground for their private wars and unexpected triumphs.

The crisis for the hotel itself comes about when the ruthless owner of a hotel chain (Kevin McCarthy) tries to take over the establishment and "modernize" it into mediocrity.

Rams Win Three Times

As ungrammatical football fans are won't to say, "Thirty-four and eight ain't band!" And 34-8 is the three-year record posted by Chuck Knox, coach of the Los Angeles Rams. In each of those three years the Rams finished first in the NFC's Western Division and not since the years of 1949-50-51 have the Southlanders finished on top in three consecutive seasons.

It is with confidence that Knox looks ahead to the '76 campaign which, as suits the Bicentennial theme, should be a "Spirited" one. Some of this spirit will be seen Saturday, Aug. 21, when the Rams lock horns with the tough Oakland Raiders. The clash will be aired on NBC, beginning at 9 p.m.

"The Rams have solid foundations," Knox remarked.
"Three years of hard work, learning and teaching experience have paid off in three straight Western Division titles.
This year will mark the greatest challenge this coaching staff has faced. Competition in the Western Division will be the strongest it has been in several years, certainly since we've been here. It will take a lot of hard work by the Rams to repeat. What's happened is history. The important things are to grow and work to get better both individually and as a team."

Earlier this year, Knox signed a new five-year contract agreement which carries mutual options for an additional five years, starting in 1981.

"Our agreement," noted Carroll Rosenbloom who acquired the Rams in 1972, "is tantamount to a 10-year contract, and Chuck knows that we hope he remains head coach as long as he wishes. Looking to the distant future, we want him to remain a key part of our organization even after he no longer wants to coach." Rosenbloom, by the way, offers an enviable record in the matter of hiring head mentors. Previous choices include Weeb Eubank, the late Don McCafferty and Don Shula.

Carroll revived pro football in Baltimore in 1953 after a previous franchise had been dissolved in 1950. During his 19 years in Baltimore, Rosenbloom fashioned teams which won the Super Bowl, three world championships prior to the merger and owned the NFL's best record from 1958 on. Under Rosenbloom the Colts recorded 16 straight winning years.

Rosenbloom works closely with Knox on a day-by-day basis with all decisions concerning the team. In view of the successes of the last three seasons, there probably will not be many noticeable changes in the Rams philosophy. The goal remains the same - win the division, thus earning a chance at the Super Bowl.

YVES SAINT LAURENT

The strongest statement for Fall 1976 in the young man's market is YVES SAINT LAURENT. The fabrics have a classic base:
flannels, herringbones, checks and plaids, BUT the look is strictly YVES SAINT LAURENT . . .
men's fashion in youthful elegance. We'd be happy to show you one.

Ask Them Yourself

Want to ask a famous person a question? Send the question, on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

FOR REP. MILLICENT FENWICK (R.-N.J.)

You said in a FAMILY WEEKLY article that if a working woman and her husband both retire and the husband is getting Social Security, the wife cannot get full benefits unless she divorces him. Isn't that a wrong statement?—Mrs. P.K., Bergen, N.J.

● It certainly is wrong, and I'm sorry. A retired working woman, marrying a retired working man, may receive either her own benefits or the benefits to which she is entitled as his wife, whichever is higher; but she cannot receive both.

A woman who has not worked, who was divorced after 20 years or more of marriage, and who receives benefits based on her ex-husband's salary, loses those benefits when she remarries. This tends to encourage some older couples to live together without marrying. Income taxes, on the other hand, have caused many young couples to delay marrying and even to divorce. When both are working for moderate wages, they must pay far higher taxes as a couple than they did when single. But this is not a Social Security question. Both questions were discussed in a long conversation, hence the confusion.

FOR FLORENCE HENDERSON

You've got such a beautiful complexion. What's the secret?—B.J., Ogden, Utah

● No soap (I use cleansing creams). Saunas (perspiring washes out all the impurities). Splashing my face with cold water (it tightens the pores). Plus a sensible diet, such as salads, protein, lots of tuna. No bread. If I want something sweet, I'll have ice milk. And I like yogurt.

FOR BROOKS ROBINSON

How did you become a right-handed fielder and batter when you are a natural left-hander?—Dennis Greiner, Altoona, Pa.

● I am a natural right-hander. But I broke my right wrist and collarbone when I was little. So when I started school, I began doing things left-handed. Now I eat left-handed and play tennis and Ping-Pong left-handed—but I play baseball right-handed.

FOR MR. BLACKWELL, designer

Do you believe the Women's Lib movement hurt women's fashions?—Mrs. B.Q., Orchard Park, N.Y.

● Definitely. Those women who shout about being sex objects are losers who have no sex appeal. They in turn produced the young revolutionaries responsible for much of the garbage known as women's wear these days. The misfits wanted other women to be as decrepit-looking as they were—and, as I look around, I get the feeling they succeeded.

FOR JO ANN PFLUG

Most celebrities glamorize their real names. Why didn't you?—William S. Pfriender, Glen Rock, N.J.

● Well, first of all, I see you've got one of those names, too! But to answer your question: my name may not slip off the tongue as easily as Smith or Jones, but it certainly is much more startling. I changed my name only once—when a publicity man asked me to become Jo Ann Kelly. Years later, I ran into that man again. He laughed and said, "I apologize. I'm glad you didn't listen to me."

FOR JANE BLALOCK, pro golfer

Who are more aggressive, male golfers or women golfers?—Jane Allen, Durham, N.C.

● The men golfers are a bit more aggressive, not because they're men but because of the high level of competition. On the women's tour, there are only about a hundred other players to compete against. The men have to compete against several hundred.

FOR ROGER STAUBACH

Is it true that your classmates at Annapolis gave you a silver rosary when you were graduated?—Ann Regan, Brighton, Mass.

● The rosary my classmates gave me had blue beads and a gold "Our Father" on it. They did not give it to me at graduation, but in my junior year, when I was awarded the Heisman Trophy.

FOR RICH LITTLE

How do the famous people you impersonate react to your impressions?—L.R., Los Angeles, Calif.

● Reactions range from all-out enthusiasm to an occasional "Is that what I really sound like?" Hubert Humphrey told me I did him so well that if he did run for the Presidency, he'd ask me to do his radio spots! But, when I met President Nixon years ago at a reception and did his voice and mannerisms, everyone broke up—except him. He couldn't recognize who I was doing.

FOR CLARENCE M. KELLEY, director of the FBI

What do you consider to be your biggest "headache" with the FBI?—Nelson F. Burch, Morgantown, W. Va.

● No headaches—but sometimes heartaches. This is a splendid organization made up of superb people, and it hurts to see them under such sustained and vigorous criticism. They may err on occasion, but these are errors of the mind—not the heart. I only hope our people can soon convince our citizens of this.

FOR THE "ASK THEM YOURSELF" EDITOR

Is Hedy Lamarr still in and out of the courts? I've always admired her, and wonder what she's doing now?—J.R., Green Bay, Wis.

● In 1966 Hedy was acquitted of shoplifting charges by a jury in Los Angeles. (She said she intended to pay and was seeking the manager.) In 1972 California sued Hedy for back taxes; she pointed out she was a New York resident. Also in 1972 Hedy lost a $21 million suit against the producers of her supposed autobiography, "Ecstasy and Me." (She claimed the book was libelous, shocking, scandalous, naughty and deliberately obscene.) Two years ago Hedy sued Mel Brooks for $10 million, charging he exploited her in "Blazing Saddles" without permission. Hedy recently said she's nearly blind from cataracts and applied for Social Security disability. She's 61, has had eye surgery, says her sight is "diffused, like a London fog."

Here we are in what is both an election year and our Bicentennial Year, and what we are hearing from our politicians indicates that they are carefully following Sen. Thomas Corwin's advice to James Garfield: "Never make people laugh. If you would succeed in life, you must be solemn, solemn as an ass. All great monuments are built over solemn asses."

But this has not always been the case with politicians—indeed, humor, wit and invective were for years the most enjoyable and edifying aspects of political campaigns and in our legislative halls.

Sometimes the wit was brutal, as when the all-time Insult Champion of the United States Senate, John Randolph of Roanoke, asserted that the selection of Richard Rush for the Treasury was: "The most unfortunate political appointment since Caligula made his horse a Consul." One of the rare occasions when Randolph's gift for invective was matched was when Sam Houston of Texas on the floor of the Senate remarked of Thomas Jefferson Green: "He has all the characteristics of a dog—except loyalty."

The undisputed Insult Champion of the House of Representatives was Speaker Thomas Brackett Reed of Maine. When the Democratic Floor Leader William M. Springer of Illinois declared in debate, "I'm right, I know I'm right, so I say with Henry Clay, Sir, I would rather be right than be President," Reed snapped, "The gentleman from Illinois will never be either!"

In the days before TV and radio, pols

"I was sent to this august body with very little opposition from the people, and I leave it with none."

—Sen. James Eli Watson had to meet the voters in person on the hustings, and the candidate who couldn't give as well as he got didn't last long. But even the superb Republican oratorical duelist, President Theodore Roosevelt, was occasionally bested by a heckler. Once during a campaign speech, he found himself being constantly interrupted by a drunk shouting, "I'm a Democrat!" Roosevelt finally paused and asked, "May I ask the gentleman why he is a Democrat?" The drunk replied, "My grandfather was a Democrat; my father was a Democrat; and I am a Democrat." Roosevelt then asked, "My friend, suppose your grandfather had been a jackass and your father had been a jackass—what would you be?" The drunk replied instantly, "A Republican!"

Presenting the All-Time, All-Around Greatest Insult Champions in Government

Please Listen With Respect!

Hecklers understand what most politicians do not—that brevity is the soul of wit. Take, for example, the Champion Male American Heckler who, when Earl Warren was seeking re-election as Governor of California and opened his address with, "I'm pleased to see such a dense crowd here tonight," interrupted with, "Don't be too pleased, Governor—we ain't all dense!"

These usually anonymous hecklers have provided much of the best campaign wit in America. For example, there was an unknown Arkansas lady who is the Champion Female American Heckler. When a Prohibitionist candidate, also a woman, became so overexcited about the joys of temperance as to declare, "In fact, I would rather commit adultery than take a glass of beer," this lady heckler shouted from the back of the hall, "Who wouldn't!"

The Wittiest American Woman in Politics was Nancy Astor, who left Virginia for London, where she became the first woman ever elected to Parliament. In her most famous exchange with Winston Churchill, she listened impatiently as he expounded views quite the opposite of her own. Finally, unable any longer to hold her tongue, she burst forth: "Winston, if you were my husband, I would flavor your coffee with poison." Immediately Churchill answered her: "Madam, if I were your husband, I should drink it."

In our Congress there is something called "Congressional courtesy" that is supposed to protect Congressmen from the grossest insults of fellow members. The Best Evader of Congressional Courtesy was a Republican Congressman, Henry Johnson of Indiana, who was ruled out of order for calling a Representative from Ohio a "jackass." Johnson apologized and said, "I withdraw the unfortunate word, Mr. Speaker, but I insist that the gentleman from Ohio is out of order." When the gentleman from Ohio demanded, "How am I out of order?" Johnson answered, "Probably a veterinarian could tell you."

The wit of politicians, however, is not limited to insulting and inciting one another. Indeed, the greatest service of wit is to defuse ugly political tensions. On one of the few occasions when our Congress was in the grip of religious prejudice, the terrible hatred against Mormons was being whipped up in the debate over whether Reed Smoot of Utah should be allowed to sit in the Senate since he was a Mormon, although he had only one wife. The vitriolic arguments were ended and the matter was settled in Smoot's favor when another Senator remarked: "I'd rather have a polygamist who doesn't polyg than a monogamist who doesn't monog."

In this election year we will suffer even more than usual from the after-dinner political speaker who must invariably respond to an introduction that is either too flattering or too insulting. The After-Dinner Political Speaker Champions were the Republican Senator from New York, Chauncey Depew, and Ambassador Joseph H. Choate. At a dinner, Depew introduced Choate as "America's most inveterate after-dinner speaker. All you need to do to get a speech out of Mr. Choate is to open his mouth, drop in a dinner—and up comes a speech." When Choate rose to speak, he said: "Mr. Depew says that if you open my mouth and drop in a dinner, up will come a speech. But I warn you that if you open your mouths and drop in one of Mr. Depew's speeches, up will come your dinners."

No other American politician has been as constant in his use of humor and wit as was Abraham Lincoln; and none, not even Adlai Stevenson, was more criticized for it. It was almost impossible for Lincoln to have a conversation, let alone make a speech, without telling at least one funny story to illuminate the point

Earl Warren: "I'm pleased to see such a dense crowd here tonight."

Heckler: "Don't be too pleased, Governor—we ain't all dense!"

he was making. When he was criticized by his own Secretary of the Treasury, Salmon Chase, for telling stories at Cabinet meetings, Lincoln replied: "They say I tell a great many stories. I reckon I do. But I have found in the course of a large experience that common people, take them as they run, are more easily informed through the medium of a broad and humorous illustration than in any other way. As to what the hypercritical few may think, I don't care."

Adlai Stevenson followed Lincoln's example. His speeches were leavened by levity and invigorated by invective, and he used his wit to set an example of courage (what Hemingway called "grace under pressure") during his two defeats in running for the Presidency. On one occasion he was reminded, he said, of James Eli Watson of Indiana who had been elected to the U.S. Senate by an overwhelming majority but was later defeated for re-election, also by an overwhelming majority. Stevenson quoted: "I was sent to this august body with very little opposition from the people, and I leave it with none." And on the other occasion Stevenson said, as Lincoln had once remarked, that he felt like the boy who had stubbed his toe: "It hurts too bad to laugh, and he was too big to cry."

If it wasn't for Winston, I wouldn't smoke.

I smoke for pleasure. That's spelled T-A-S-T-E.
That means Winston. Winston won't give you a new image.

All Winston will ever give me is taste.
A taste that's very real. If a cigarette isn't real, it isn't anything. Winston is for real.

Robert Redford's Struggle for Identity

"It's Tough for Anyone to Know Who He Is—For Me, It Seems Virtually Impossible"

Steve Shapiro/Transworld

"I fail to comprehend the fascination with certain details about me, such as whether I've dyed my hair or what my height is. Not long ago some reporter did a whole article on my height. With people starving all over the world, I think that is a pretty ridiculous thing to write about."

By Patricia Baum

The day we talked in his small, unpretentious New York office, Robert Redford was wearing a black turtleneck, jeans and tan Western boots. His casual clothes, his sun-burnished skin and his tousled reddish-blond hair, gave him a rugged outdoors appearance. I had expected a supremely confident and self-assured superstar. But as we talked I learned that Redford is as involved as anyone else in the endless search for his own identity.

FAMILY WEEKLY: How have you changed since becoming a superstar?

REDFORD: I'm more confused about myself. For one thing, I feel under pressure because of the demands on me. People come up to me and order me to stand in a certain place, put my arm around their sister, sign something for their wife. I have the constant feeling that things are expected of me—that I'm expected to arrive at eight and be handsome, dashing and sexy. So I find I have less freedom, space and quiet time by myself to put my life into proper perspective. It's tough enough for anyone to know who he is, and for me it often seems virtually impossible.

FW: How do you try to get in touch with yourself?

REDFORD: Well, I haven't gone into psychoanalysis. And I haven't been in any encounter group or mind-expansion program where I faced myself and screamed or asked myself if life is really a waterfall. Instead, I've chosen places to live where I feel I can best recharge myself and escape the pressures. At my home in Utah, I can find space and tranquility. And living part of the year in New York is good for me, too, because I can be more anonymous here than in any other city.

FW: What do you miss doing, now that you're so famous?

REDFORD: Watching people. To me, that is a great source of entertainment and amusement. But now they spot me first. And as soon as they recognize me, they become painfully aware of themselves and cease to act real. I find myself very attracted to people who don't know who I am. If a guy comes up to me and asks for some help and a conversation ensues, I enjoy that immensely and find it very refreshing.

FW: What prompted you to get a court order to stop one woman admirer from following you around?

REDFORD: She was absolutely incredible and amazingly resourceful—could have opened her own detective agency. Somehow she always knew where I was going to be and showed up—in my studio dressing room, at my hotel. She followed me all over the U.S. We didn't actually have much confrontation, although a couple of times she managed to reach me.

FW: Surely being so famous and desirable must give you some satisfaction. What do you enjoy about being a superstar and sex symbol?

REDFORD: I'm really thrilled with all the praise that goes along with my image. And I don't honestly believe there's a person in the world who wouldn't be. If someone comes up to me on the street and says sincerely and politely that he enjoys my work, it gives me great pleasure. I appreciate it all the more because I like to be able to flatter other people, too, and I know how difficult it is. I invariably bungle every compliment I try to lay on someone.

FW: Can you understand why the public is so interested in you?

REDFORD: It's hard for me to come to terms with it. I feel I'm not the same person as the one on the screen. The man that the public relates to is not really me. It's a very complicated issue, but I just feel there's a separatism there. And I fail to comprehend the fascination with certain details about me, such as whether I've dyed my hair or what my height is. Not long ago some reporter did a whole article on my height. With people starving all over the world, I think that is a pretty ridiculous thing to write about. [Nevertheless, to set the record straight, he's 5-11.]

FW: Considering the profession you're in, your 17-year marriage to Lola is unusually enduring. Why do you think it has been so successful?

REDFORD: We still can't get enough of each other! I think we feel this way because we have the same basic values. We both love nature and the outdoors. We find learning exciting and share the insecurity of not having had much formal education. And yet we're enough unlike to hold many opposing points of view. Lola, for instance, respects our political system, while I'm quite critical of it. So we can stimulate each other and argue rather artistically.

FW: Do you argue only about important issues?

REDFORD: No, it's totally unpredictable. We might fight over something trivial, like who will set the table or who left a wet rag in the sink.

FW: As the father of three, what beliefs do you have about raising children?

REDFORD: I think it's important to express affection and love for them as often as possible but also to treat them as real people. Don't use baby talk. Above all, don't overtrain and overteach. There is a limit to the amount of advice a parent should give kids. Many things they'll just have to find out the "hard way," which to me is often the most attractive and enjoyable way.

FW: What do you like most about your children?

REDFORD: I find them fun to be around because they're very aware and have terrific senses of humor. And I enjoy the challenge of trying to keep up with their enormous energy. We do a lot of outdoor activities together, especially skiing.

FW: How has your fame affected them?

REDFORD: They're fairly well adjusted now, but they've had a difficult time. For example, we can't do certain things together as a family, like going out to a restaurant, very easily. And their relationships with other children have been affected. Shauna and Jamie tend to be very guarded because they don't know at first whether the friendship is genuine or has some kind of angle. I'm sorry they think this way because it breeds a cynicism which I think is unhealthy.

FW: Turning to your film career—are acting roles of less importance to you than the overall impact or message of the film?

Continued

Redford and Lola, his wife of 17 years:
"We still can't get enough of each other.
... We can stimulate each other and argue rather artistically."

REDFORD: Many times this has been the case. I've turned down some really flashy and exciting parts to do films that more or less incorporate my own beliefs. Instead of acting in "Cuckoo's Nest," for example, I chose to produce and act in "All the President's Men," which was a much more meaningful film to me. In "The Candidate," I felt the role of campaign manager was a much more attractive one for an actor than the candidate himself, but it became clear that the interests of the picture would best be served if I played the candidate.

FW: "The Candidate" and several of your other films deal with competition and winning. How does this theme relate to your own background and beliefs?

REDFORD: When I was growing up in California, I was active in sports. There were very definite notions associated with athletic competition. One was that if you played it straight and with a smile and put your best foot forward and that foot had a shine on its shoes, you'd be all right. And what supposedly counted was not whether you won or lost but how you played. I found these assumptions to be totally false. I cared very deeply about winning and had a strong competitive instinct. As a child I used to have a terrible temper and would want to cry or throw the bat when I lost. Once I actually did throw my racquet in a tennis tournament, and it broke. The people booed, and I was disqualified for such a display. I felt like a total failure.

FW: On the screen you come across as both a woman's man and a man's man. In real life, are you equally close to both sexes?

REDFORD: No, I definitely favor women. It's been that way all my life, although I've had good male friends, and I've grown up in pretty much of a male chauvinist society, in which status depended on how tough you were, how fast your car could go and the command you had over your girl. But somehow I had female friends that were more substantial. And today there are more women than men in my life who I work with and rely on. I think that I tend to trust women more.

FW: What misconceptions and labels by the press and public bother you most?

REDFORD: I'm particularly sensitive about being labeled a WASP. Just because I have blond hair and blue eyes people see me as sort of an upper-class all-American. I don't feel part of that image at all. I'm much too troubled. I didn't grow up in a privileged neighborhood. I never liked school and didn't finish college.

FW: But people also associate you with rebel roles—the Sundance Kid, Jeremiah Johnson. . . .

REDFORD: That comes closer. I'm not as tough or durable as Jeremiah Johnson, and I'm not quite the outlaw that the Sundance Kid was, but I probably identify more with the Sundance Kid than any other character I've played.

FW: What is your attitude toward money?

REDFORD: First of all, I don't have anywhere near the kind of money people have been led to believe. I may do three or four films in a row and then go two years without doing any, so it comes in very erratically. I've never really been concerned with it. I've just always had a strong feeling it would work itself out even when I had none, and I've never made money a prime consideration in choosing my projects. Possessions, I believe, are unimportant and just as transitory as Christmas gifts. Under the tree they seem flaming hot; in a week they've already faded; and within two weeks they're usually broken or lost. The more material things you have, the more cluttered your life becomes. The only commodity I really trust is land. Private land is becoming scarcer and scarcer. I put most of my money into land and buy it whenever I can.

FW: In what ways do your home and ski resort at Sundance [Provo, Utah] embody the beliefs and values you've been discussing?

REDFORD: We've been striving to make the whole Sundance complex as natural and self-sufficient as possible. We're installing solar collectors for heating and windmills for electricity. We grow our own feed for stock and have our own vegetable garden. The overall intent is to be entirely free from the big companies and accumulations of capital which are so powerful and exploit the individual. And we want to offer a place where people can escape from their own artificial and synthetic surroundings. I know all this sounds a bit utopian, but I don't think it is wrong to strive for it, even if we fail in some ways. Instead of talking about my beliefs until I'm blue in the face, I'd rather try to make them work so that I can demonstrate them to others.

The Doctor Lets You In

Cool Health Tips for Summer Heat

Some "hot" hot-weather info: Your body has a neat way of venting heat. It sends hot blood from deep inside the body to just beneath skin surfaces, where the air can cool it. Then your skin "sweats," taking heat from the body as the water evaporates into the air. Tight binding clothes prevent the blood from circulating, so always wear loose, light (sun-deflecting) clothing during the dog days. To sweat, you've got to drink a lot. Ice-cold drinks are refreshing, but the cooling feeling is only temporary. Because they draw blood to the digestive tract area, in the long run iced drinks disrupt the body's cooling system, and you feel "hotter than ever." Likewise, cool showers are better than ice-cold ones. Icy water closes your blood vessels down, keeping the blood inside where the heat can't be dispelled. Setting your air conditioner in the 70's will do just fine as long as household humidity is pushed down to about 50. Humidity is the key—when it's low, your body thermostat will evaporate perspiration into the air. Sweat is what your body uses to get rid of heat. When you sweat, you lose salt—especially at the beginning of summer, when the sweat glands release more body salts. Dizziness, faintness, headache, nausea, stomach or muscle cramps after activity in hot weather may mean you're a candidate for salt tablets. The best kind are the coated ones which don't dissolve until they get past your stomach and into your intestines. They're less likely to cause stomach upset. But warning: If you have high blood pressure, salt pills can be downright dangerous. In fact, sweating can be a blessing for high blood-pressure victims. If you're taking blood-pressure medication, you may need less in a heat spell, so check with your doctor. Special tip: Tall gin-and-tonics have long been used in the tropics as "coolers." The aspirinlike component of the "tonic" makes you sweat, and the alcohol dilates the blood vessels to speed up the escape of heat. Of course, everything has its bad side, too: The tropics have produced a respectable number of alcoholics. —Irwin Polk, M.D.

If you smoke.

We're not telling you anything you don't know when we acknowledge that a controversy about smoking exists.

And since we're in the business of selling cigarettes, you obviously know where we stand.

If you don't smoke, we're not about to persuade you to start.

But if you do, we'd like to persuade you to try a cigarette you'll like more than the one you're smoking now.

We mean Vantage, of course.

Vantage gives you flavor like a full-flavor cigarette. Without anywhere near the 'tar' and nicotine.

That's a simple statement of truth.

We don't want you to misunderstand us. Vantage is not the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you can buy.

It's probably the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you'll enjoy smoking.

We just don't see the point in putting out a low 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you have to work so hard getting some taste out of, you won't smoke it.

If you agree with us, we think you'll enjoy Vantage.

People Quiz

By John E. Gibson

How Much Do People Trust Each Other?

(Read This and Find Out!)

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. People in small towns are more distrustful of strangers than city dwellers.
2. When it comes to trusting someone they don't know, people are much more inclined to trust a woman than a man.
3. Under some circumstances, almost everybody can be trusted.
4. The majority of Americans believe that most people can be trusted.
5. People frequently reveal the most about themselves to people they trust the least.
6. The degree of trust and confidence you have in the people you work with is a significant factor in determining how successful you're likely to be.

ANSWERS

1. False—according to a City University of New York survey, which compared the trust of the stranger in small towns to that in a large city. Investigators went from door to door in middle-class districts in both locales, claiming to be lost and asking to use the telephone. Results showed small-town residents much more willing to permit strangers to enter their homes. City residents in 75 percent of the cases interrogated the stranger by shouting through a closed door. In the towns, residents opened the door before questioning the person in 75 percent of the cases, and in no case was the door not opened at all.
2. True. A study of attitudes conducted by a team of university investigators showed that people were much more inclined to trust an unknown woman than an unknown man. It's also interesting to note that in other psychological studies women have been found to score significantly higher than men on measurements of altruism and concern for the welfare of others.
3. True. To see how honest and trustworthy people are under a humanly appealing situation, investigators in a leading city tacked a dollar bill and the following note on the wall of a downtown building at a crowded intersection near a bus stop: "Junior, I can't wait any longer. Here is your bus fare.—Mother."

True or False: People in small towns are more distrustful of strangers than city dwellers. (See No. 1)

Despite the throngs of passers-by, nobody touched the money.

4. True. The University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research made a broad-scale survey in which it asked people three questions: 1) "Generally speaking, would you say that most people can be trusted, or that you can't be too careful in dealing with people?" 2) "Would you say that most of the time people try to be helpful, or that they are mostly just looking out for themselves?" 3) "Do you think that most people would try to take advantage of you if they got the chance, or would they try to be fair?" The majority of Americans felt that most people could be trusted, that they would try to be fair and helpful in their dealings with others. It was found that the people who were most distrustful of others were those on the low-income, low-educational level, and that divorced or separated people also had high scores of distrust.

5. True. People tend to be most distrustful of strangers—people they know nothing about—yet studies show they will often reveal things to a stranger (in an airport lounge, on a train or shipboard) that they wouldn't dream of revealing to their closest friends.

6. True. Hampshire College behavioral scientists made a field study of the psychological effects of a trusting relationship with fellow workers and found that "the more a person trusts his work group and the others with whom he interacts, the greater his self-actualization will be." Self-actualization simply means making the most of what you are.

AMERICA'S GREATEST TREE SALE "EVER"

SUGAR MAPLE
(acer saccharum)

The largest of all maples, and its beautiful array of yellow and orange hues make it a sight to remember due to the foliage thickness — A very hardy northern and southern tree and will grow up to 60 feet. (shipped at 3 to 5 feet).

E. WHITE BIRCH
(betula verrucosa)

This beautiful tree has very delicate foliage with snowy white bark, and a compact form — It can be seen growing in all different climates and the multi-trunk (clump) effect can be obtained by planting two or more trees next to one another. It is also a rapid grower. (shipped at 3 to 5 feet).

RED MAPLE
(acer rubrum)

This is one of the most beautiful of all shade trees. Besides having brilliant scarlet red leaves in the fall of the year, it has another excellent trait — it is an extremely fast grower. It is very easily transplanted and many experts agree it will grow practically anywhere in the U.S.A. Grows to 60 feet. (shipped at 3 to 5 feet).

WEeping WILLOW
(salix babylonica)

This tree is the hardiest of all willows, and has clear golden yellow and green leaves. The leaves appear early in Spring and one of the last trees to lose its leaves. A "super fast" growing tree at the rate of 5 to 6 feet per year. An excellent buy. (shipped at 3 to 5 feet).

GREEN ASH
(fraxinus pennsylvanica)

This tree like the maple has no equal when it comes to its ability to survive hot and cold temperatures. A real rapid grower and matures into a fine, compact tree with beautiful dense green foliage. Grows to 40 feet. (shipped at 3 to 5 feet).

WHITE DOGWOOD
(cornus florida)

This beautiful flowering tree has large white blossoms and can be seen in all parts of the country. Its foliage is attractive all summer and has beautiful fall colors, as the red berries hang on most of the winter. Grows to 25 feet. (shipped at 3 to 5 feet).

(cercis canadensis)

This beautiful flowering tree is native to both the north and south and thereby extremely hardy. It blooms at the same time as the dogwoods and its gorgeous pink flowers form a lovely combination with the dogwoods. Grows to 25 feet. (shipped at 3 to 5 feet).

CHARLES O. FINLEY
"Kick the door down"

The controversial, outspoken owner of the Oakland A's, Charlie Finley, on how to succeed: "I'll not dispute the importance of a college degree, but the energy and willingness to work harder than the next guy is a great deal more important. And that's something that comes from within a man. I've never felt that the lack of a degree has blocked my drive to succeed. Culture is one thing, success is another, and I've always opted for the latter. Once you're on to something, don't look back and don't give up. Don't wait for opportunity to knock. Go out and knock on the door—kick it down if necessary. That's one thing they don't teach you in college, I wager."

CHAMPION SUE PIRTLE HAYS
The last unliberated sport

Is rodeo the last unliberated sport? Rodeo star Sue Hays talking: "Unlike other sports, women don't compete with men in rodeo because a 130-pound woman is not on a par with a 130-pound man physically. So, although legally we're allowed to compete in the same events, realistically it would be suicide. The only complaint I have," said the 23-year-old All-Around Girls Rodeo Association champion, who competed last year when she was eight-months pregnant, "is that men's rodeo guarantees a take-home purse of $60,000 to $80,000, while women have to settle for between $4,000 and $6,000." Are men and women on an equal par in any respect in rodeo? "Yes. Both sexes find that after 30, they just can't compete in the main events any more. We're all over the hill at 30."

University of Cincinnati, the country's second-largest municipal university talking: "Secrecy is one thing; confidentiality is another. No organization can function effectively without certain amounts of confidentiality in the proposals, steps and discussions leading up to its decisions. A case in point: The Nixon Government moved heaven and earth seeking to restrain "The New York Times" editors from publishing the Pentagon Papers, perhaps even by imprisonment. "The Times" won the right from the Supreme Court (under some continuing criminal risk) to resume publishing these assertedly "secret" studies of Vietnam War decisions. Yet the editors themselves surrounded their preparation of these stories with a secrecy and security the Pentagon might envy—renting a secret suite of hotel rooms, swearing each member of a small secret staff to total secrecy, confining them for weeks almost like prisoners, restricting their communications to an elite handful with the 'need to know,' setting the stories themselves on sequestered, closely guarded typesetting machines. Thus the ultimate challenge to 'official' secrecy was performed in

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY
By Richard Armour

HARK, HARK, THE BARK

I've never been bit by our neighbor's dog,
A huge and ferocious beast.
Should they cart him away to the nearby pound
I wouldn't object in the least.

I've never been bit by those gleaming teeth,
And I'm thankful that I have not.
But that dog has a bark that is extra-loud,
And my nerves from the sound are shot.

I'm waked from a nap in the afternoon,
I'm waked when I sleep at night.
I've never been bit, but of this I'm sure:
His bark is worse than his bite.

Visitor: "I suppose the new baby is fond of you?"

Father: "Fond of me! Why, he sleeps all day when I'm not at home and stays up all night to enjoy my company."

—Anne Dirckman

Some TV shows make a point of saying they were shot before a live audience. Does that mean that some shows are shot before dead audiences?

My 4-year-old son had rummaged up some old toys and asked me where they came from. I said they were Daddy's when he was small. My little one thought that over a moment and said, "I didn't know we had Daddy when he was small."

Prince Valiant

by Hal Foster

Our Story: "SO, YOU SELF-RIGHTEOUS HIRELING," SNEERS AJAXOS, "YOU DARE DRAW SWORD ON ME? FOR THAT YOU DIE!" BUT PRINCE VALIANT HAS NO INTENTION OF DYING. IF HE DOES NOT RUSH TO THE ATTACK IT IS BECAUSE HE IS STUDYING HIS ENEMY.

THERE IS TREMENDOUS POWER IN THOSE HEAVY SHOULDERS AND THICK ARMS. VAL CIRCLES TO HIS RIGHT, AWAY FROM THE POWER OF HIS STROKE.

BUT AJAXOS IS AN EXPERIENCED KILLER OF MEN. HE KEEPS PRESSING FORWARD. HIS POWERFUL STROKES BEGIN TO TAKE THEIR TOLL.

THE FIGHT SEEMS ENDLESS AND SOON VAL'S SHIELD IS SO BATTERED AS TO BE ALMOST USELESS, AND HIS SHIELD ARM WEARY. BUT AJAXOS' MOUTH HANGS OPEN, GASPING FOR BREATH.

SUDDENLY HE STEPS BACK AND LOWERS HIS BLADE "WHY ARE WE TRYING TO KILL EACH OTHER WHEN WE COULD JOIN FORCES AND PLUNDER BOTH CITIES?"

THIS IS AN OLD TRICK. VAL SEES THE MUSCLES OF ARM AND SHOULDER TIGHTEN, THE SWORD COMES UP.....
