The regular business meeting night, April, 12, 1919, was taken for the Inter-Society Debate which is held annually between The Sidney Lanier Literary Society and The Edgar Allan Poe Literary. The debate was held at 8.30 p.m in the Assembly Hall. The various members of the two societies met at their assigned places and marched into the auditorium. The Poe's sat on the West side, which was beautifully decorated in Red & white. The Laniers sat on the east side amid their colors of gold and green. The stage was effectively decorated with the Society banners and pennants. The time was spent before the debate in singing and cheering. The Poe Society had beautiful songs, composed by Miss Davis.

At 8:30 O'clock the marshals led the debators down the aisle, amid a burst of applause. Misses Jernigan and Elliot, - affirmative - were seated on the east stage, and Misses Fugua and Hensley neg occupied the west side. Misses Hines and Bertotti presided.

The debate throughout was very interesting and very close. The rebuttal was very amusing, since Miss Elliot used some pretty strong language, and Miss Hensley closed with a "filibuster"

President Wright was called forth to render the decision of the Judges. The entire audience were in suspense, and when Mr. Wright called Miss Hester pres. of E.A.P. to come forward and take the cup, the crowd went wild. The negative won unanimously.
