Chinese Forces Launch Heavy Attack On Viets

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — In the heaviest fighting of the 6-day-old border war, Chinese forces launched fresh attacks on a Vietnamese-held mountain highway that links Hanoi with Vietnam's northeast border, reports from Peking said today. A Chinese government official in Peking said today that China's "punishment" of Vietnam is not finished.

Japan's Kyodo news service reported. The unidentified official reportedly said China will not back down leaving the military situation as it is. As fighting raged around the highway 50 miles inland, three Chinese infantry divisions pushed 12 miles into Vietnam in Quang Ninh Province, closer to the South China Sea, fighting for every mile against tough opposition, intelligence sources in Bangkok said. This attack force is believed to number as many as 30,000 men and is said to be backed by tanks.

The three divisions were expected to try to cut off east-west Highway 4, which is 12 miles farther south, and then may swing inland to attack the north-south Highway 1, the lifeline between Hanoi and Vietnamese troops concentrated around the town of Lang Son.

Japan's Kyodo news service, in a dispatch from Peking, quoted Western military sources as saying the Chinese on Wednesday stepped up their assault on the mountain highway north of Lang Son, a strategically situated town 12 miles south of the border crossing that was named "Friendship Gate" in times of friendlier relations between the two countries.

The sources were quoted by Kyodo as saying the Vietnamese were fiercely resisting the attack.

The Soviet news agency Tass, in a report today from Hanoi, charged that the Chinese intend to annex many Vietnamese areas they have captured. The Chinese have disclaimed any intention to seize territory.

The invasion route the Chinese followed is a river valley stretching from China southwest into Vietnam. The intelligence sources described the area as "rugged and mountainous." After cutting Highway 4, the Chinese commanders could decide to swing inland and try to cut Highway 1 south of Lang Son. That highway is the lifeline between Hanoi and the Lang Son front.

Heavy fighting has been reported for several days around the border village of Dong Dang, seven miles from Lang Son.

Commissioners OK Plan For Fire Waste Disposal

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer
Pitt County Commissioners, at an emergency meeting yesterday, gave their approval for solid wastes resulting from a fire at the Coastal Chemical Corp. plant earlier this week to be disposed of at the county's Allen Road landfill.

Board approval came after State agencies involved in the environmental and health aspects of the fire gave their approval to the plan and recommended that the solid residue from the fire — including the remains of the building as well as the chemical containers — be buried in the inactive landfill.

O. W. Strickland, who heads the Department of Human Resources' Division of Health Services solid waste control branch told commissioners, "We're asking ... talking about solid waste ... that the residue left over from the fire, the building and containers," be disposed of at the county landfill. He added that the material would be buried 10 to 14 feet deep, four feet above the highest water table in a pit lined on the bottom and all sides with a six-inch layer of lime.

The lime, Strickland said, would neutralize any chemical residue.

Saying it would require a half to three-fourths of an acre of land, Strickland added that three test wells would be installed around the area to monitor water quality.

"All parts of State Government are in agreement," with the proposal, Strickland emphasized. The disposal of the contaminated waste is, he added, "going to be an expensive, difficult job."

The fire at Coastal Chemical, which distributes farm chemicals, including toxic pesticides and herbicides, in a 100-mile radius of Greenville, was reported about 4 a.m. Monday.

The first concern of officials at the scene was that the smoke generated from the burning chemicals would create a health hazard, so the area around the fire scene was ordered evacuated.

It is, however, the solid waste from the fire, and the chemical-laced water from the thousands of gallons used to fight the blaze and the runoff from melting snow and rain, that presents the biggest problem.

William Buffaloe, head of the N.C. Department of Agriculture's pesticide division indicated that the contaminated water now contained in diked areas at the site present a greater disposal problem than the solids.

"Liquids," he said, "cannot be planted in the sanitary landfill."

"In regard to the compounds we have in this fire," Buffaloe said, "in many cases they are highly toxic," even more toxic than those involved in a 1971 fire in Farmville. But he added, the chemicals which burned at Coastal will degenerate faster than those involved in the Royster fire in Farmville.

"We feel real good about the compounds we are facing," Buffaloe said.

Saying the water contained at the site is being treated with soda-ash in an effort to degrade the highly toxic substances, Buffaloe told commissioners that a deci-

GNP Climbed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A strong surge in consumer spending heated up the nation's economy late last year even more rapidly than analysts had expected, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the value of U.S. economic output increased at an annual rate of 6.4 percent in the fourth quarter, an exceptionally strong performance.

A month ago, in its preliminary report, the department said the growth rate was 6.1 percent in the October-December period, a sharp increase from the 2.6 percent rate in the third quarter.

Since then, however, the economy has shown a few signs of slowing down, and many economists now believe a recession is likely by the end of the year.

Overall, the gross national product — the market value of all goods and services produced by the economy — increased $76 billion to an annual rate of $2.2 trillion, the department said.

Cutback By Refineries

By JEAN-CLAUDE BOUIS

Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Citing the cutoff of Iranian oil exports, several U.S. oil companies have announced cutbacks in production to conserve available crude oil, a move that could further reduce the flow of gasoline to neighborhood pumps.

Shell Oil Co. said Wednesday the cutback will involve all refined products. Shell announced a 5 percent to 8 percent cutback in the amount of crude going into its refineries, beginning March 1.

Atlantic Richfield Co. said it would soon have to limit sales of some petroleum products.

"It is more responsible to allocate now than wait for the summer driving season to spring the news. Spreading the limited supply around is the proper way to deal with a shortage," ARCO Vice Chairman W.F. Kieschnick said Wednesday. He gave no details on his company's allocation plans.

The Phillips Petroleum Co., which already has reduced gasoline deliveries to its dealers by 15 percent, announced that it would double that reduction to 30 percent, according to today's editions of the New York Times.

Texaco and Continental Oil Co. are among other companies already allocating gasoline. In addition, Exxon, Gulf and other large suppliers of crude oil also have cut sales to refineries in order to conserve the product.

Meanwhile, Libya raised its oil prices by 5 percent "across the board" Wednesday, a spokesman for Occidental Petroleum Corp. said.

The spokesman, who asked that his name not be used, said the increase was "around 68 cents per barrel across the board and that averages out to about 5 percent."

biggest customers of crude oil.

Two other members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, Abu Dhabi and Qatar, last week raised some of their prices by 7 percent.

There has been virtually no rise in consumer prices as a result of the special increases by OPEC members because not much oil is involved. But should OPEC decide the market will bear higher prices, it could speed up its graduated 14.5 percent general price rise scheduled for this year.

Until March 5

Greenville citizens who are not registered to vote have until Monday, March 5 to get their names on the books in order to cast a ballot in the April 3 utilities bond referendum.

Margaret Register, supervisor of the Pitt Board of Elections, informed those residents that the elections office on E. Second Street here is open until 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Miss Register, noting that the deadline is at 5 p.m. on March 5, added that residents can also register at the three library facilities in Greenville.

Russian Agents' Role Described

WASHINGTON (AP) —

Despite Soviet denials, a confidential State Department cable says Soviet advisers played a large role in the events which led to the fatal shooting of U.S. Ambassador Adolph Dubs in an Afghan hotel room, according to a published report.

Soviet advisers gave hand signals that began and halted the gunfire Feb. 14 as Afghan police stormed the Kabul hotel room where Dubs was being held by a group of Islamic terrorists, according to the cable quoted by the Washington Post in today's editions.

Dubs' body was found in the room after the exchange of gunfire between police and the terrorists. The State Department has said it does not know which side fired the fatal shots.

The 14-page cable obtained by the newspaper said at least three Soviet advisers played "operation roles" in the unsuccessful Afghan attempt to rescue Dubs.

After the 40-second volley of gunfire, Afghan "police snipers across the street continued to fire until two Soviet advisers gave hand signals to cut it off," the newspaper quoted the cable as saying.

Before the firing began, "One Soviet adviser helped to arm an Afghan policeman. Two other Soviet police advisers and (Soviet embassy security officer Sergei) Bakhturin went out to the balcony. The tall, senior Soviet adviser then made hand signals from the balcony, presumably positioning the snipers across the street," the newspaper quoted the cable as saying.

State Department spokeswoman Sue Pittman said Wednesday night she could not comment on the newspaper report.

The State Department filed protests with the Afghan and Soviet governments over their handling of the incident.

Personal Dedication In Learning Field Cited In Accreditation Visit

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

"You may be the one person who is a good influence for some child, and don't ever forget that," veteran educator Dr. Madeline Tripp remarked to educators and parents assembled at Ramada Inn Wednesday for the opening session of a two-day accreditation committee visitation to Greenville's elementary schools.

Emphasizing the importance of dedication and personal caring as equal to proper training and facilities, Dr. Tripp, a consultant with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, delivered the keynote address at the inaugural event preceding visits by individual committees to city schools and the central office.

"Teaching is an awesome responsibility," she said, "a frightening responsibility at times. Teaching is exciting but also awe inspiring when you realize that what happens to a child can depend on you.

"And," she reminded teachers, "at the age of six or seven whatever a teacher says is right in the eyes of children. Later," she added, "all that changes, but it is a truth in early years."

Dr. Tripp touched on changes in schools since she first taught in 1924. "Then, if a child didn't have two parents living, you could assume that one was dead. But in 1979's it's a totally different story. You don't ask too many questions now." Reminiscing nostalgically for a brief time, Dr. Tripp recalled that in her early years of teaching "the cultural arts were neglected. We had what we called drawing, and the media center was a library then. We didn't have one, of course, but we called it a library anyway, and the high school did have one."

Among points relative to good education she stressed were the need to have trained teachers and good facilities. "Good training and facilities do make a difference," she remarked.

Looking at the structure governing the concept of self-study manuals which have been prepared by the individual schools for the past two years, Dr. Tripp noted that among things determined by such studies were "what kind of things are the responsibilities of schools to the community, and on the other hand, what kind of things are the responsibilities of the community to the schools."

Court-Observing Plan Organized For County

A group of Greenville citizens has initiated a court observing project for the Pitt County judicial district.

In a public meeting recently, a steering committee was established to publicize the merits of a court monitoring organization, according to Elaine Warshawer, League of Women Voters representative who will chair the group.

She said that as part of a drive to involve more citizens, the committee will also develop a speakers panel to provide programs in response to requests from clubs. The group has adopted the slogan, "You Can Be a Watcher."

Local steering committee members represent the American Civil Liberties Union,

Business and Professional Women's Association, the Pilot Club, and the Women's Political Caucus. Also represented are St. James United Methodist Church, the East Carolina University Political Science Club, and paralegal programs of Pitt Technical Institute.

The chairperson pointed out that the emergence around the country of court watching groups coincides with the growth of population and crime rates, and subsequent increase of the court docket load.

Observer systems, she said, seek to assure the courts of citizen interest in its problems and progress, as well as to point out areas of needed reform and improvements.

Leadership Conference Scheduled For March 3

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Woman's Editor
MURFREESBORO — The Governor's Conference on Leadership Development for Women in Regions Q and R will be held here Saturday, March 3, on the campus of Chowan College.

Governor James B. Hunt Jr. is convening regional leadership conferences in accordance with his commitment to provide leadership development opportunities for women. The regional conferences are a follow-up of the statewide Leadership Conference held in Raleigh in May. The nine statewide conferences are including speakers and workshops for individuals who desire to develop their personal leadership skills.

The March 3 conference theme is "Leadership and Citizen Responsibility."

These conferences are being cosponsored by the N. C. Council on Women's Organizations, the Council on the Status of Women and the Governor's Office of Citizen Affairs.

State Senator Helen Marvin of Gaston County will be the keynote speaker for the conference. She is serving as chairperson of the N. C. Council on the Status of Women, is a member of the N. C. Women's Forum and the Governor's Advocacy Council on Children and Youth.

Sen. Marvin received her B.A. in political science and history from Furman University in South Carolina and M.A. in government from Louisiana State University. She has studied on a graduate level at UNC-CH, UNC-C, the University of Vermont, University of Oslo in Norway, earning an A.A. in political science, American history and economics.

The conference will also include six workshops and is expected to attract approximately 200 women from a 15-county area.

Workshop topics and leaders are: "Coping With Stress," Dr. Sam C. Williams, coordinator of adult services, Pitt County Mental Health Center; "Understanding Leadership Styles," James L. Rees, professor of speech and drama, East Carolina University; "Assertiveness Training," Dan Kelly, W. B. Jones Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center, and Betsy Kelly, Pitt County Mental Health Center; "Creative Life Planning," Jim Wordsworth, vice president and personnel director, Belk Tyler Stores; "Women and the Law," Regina Moore, attorney; and "Building Positive Self Image," R. Clayton Lewis, dean of students, Chowan College, Vicki Tolston Boykin, executive director, Tar River Lung Association, Pamela M. Hall, Chowan College sophomore, Carolyn F. Mitchell, guidance counselor, Murfreesboro Middle School, and Rosemary Royce, family nurse practitioner, Roanoke-Chowan Mental Health Association.

The conference's goals and objectives are: create public awareness of the necessity for leadership development and citizen leadership responsibility; encourage personal development; identify and define leadership; stimulate leadership training; and encourage follow-up activities.

The day's activities will begin with registration from 8:30-9:15 a.m. followed by the opening session and introduction of workshop speakers from 9:30-10:15. The first workshop will be conducted from 10:30 until noon followed by luncheon from 12:15 to 1:45. The recognition of elected officials will be held. Special guests expected to attend are Jane Patterson, assistant secretary for personnel and programs in Gov. Hunt's administration, and Juanita Bryant, state conference director. The second workshop sessions will be held from 2:30-3:30 p.m. Each participant may choose two workshops to attend, plus an alternate.

The Regional Coordinating Committee members in addition to Mrs. Bryant are Christine B. Farrior and Doretha Rose, chairmen of the Murfreesboro conference, Helen Simpson, regional coordinator for the conference, and Neoma C. Gurganus, regional secretary.

Members of the Steering Committee, who planned the conference, are Faye S. Lilley, Johnnie Perkins, Virginia M. Hart, Alice J. Nickens, Frances G. Rowell, Lauretta Parker, Ella W. Thompson, Kay H. Flythe, Rachel N. Pittman, Edith Brown, Dorothy H. Brown, Barbara Dixon, Jean J. Darden, Nancy M. Talk To Husband About Children

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Joe and I have been married before. We have a wonderful marriage and I love him dearly. Joe has five grown children and six grandchildren. We entertain them often. I go out of my way to make them feel welcome and loved, and Joe has often expressed his appreciation for the way I treat them.

I have two grown, unmarried children. We have a great relationship. They are sensible and well-mannered and I'm proud of them.

However, whenever my children visit us, which isn't often because they live out of town, Joe becomes unfriendly and sulky. He finds fault with them constantly. He usually retires to his bedroom early without even a goodnight. You could describe his behavior as rude. My children must sense his unfriendliness because they seldom come to see us now. I've told Joe how unhappy I am with his behavior, but he insists he is not rude or unfriendly. Meanwhile, the situation remains unchanged.

Should I change my attitude toward HIS children in an effort to show him how unfair he's being to mine?

JOE'S BEWILDERED WIFE

DEAR WIFE: No. Instead, get Joe to talk out his feelings about your children, and try to find out why he's so rude and unfriendly to them.

Your solution—to fight fire with fire—could cause your wonderful marriage to go up in smoke.

DEAR ABBY: My husband wants me to try group sex, but I just can't see having anybody in bed with us. He says he doesn't see anything wrong with making our lives a little more exciting, and this is one sure way of doing it.

What is your opinion of this?

LONE STAR STATE

DEAR LONE: Three's a crowd. Especially in bed.

DEAR ABBY: I've never seen a problem like mine in your column. I'm a 33-year-old normal man except that I have absolutely no hair on my chest, arms or legs. And that is where I want hair the most. I have plenty of hair on my head and a thick growth in my pubic area, so I know I can grow hair, but I'm so ashamed of my hairless body I avoid going to the beach.

Is there some kind of treatment I can take to promote the growth of hair where I want it? I am miserable in my hairless state. I want to be like the other guys.

HAIRLESS IN HILO

DEAR HAIRLESS: End your misery by seeing an endocrinologist (a gland specialist). In the meantime, paste-on hair for chests is available in some of the better men's shops. It's true! Would I lie to you on George Washington's birthday?

New Methods Suggested For Cooking In Microwave Ovens

By JEANNE LESSEN
UPI Family Editor
Eula Boardman arranges vegetables like a still-life before cooking them in a microwave oven.

Mrs. Boardman, of Wichita, Kan., and Benicia, Calif., says her method yields better results than the conventional method using a covered casserole, adding a tablespoon of water and stirring at least once.

She says placement is particularly important with such vegetables as broccoli, cauliflower and asparagus because thin portions cook faster than thick, dense ones. So she places tender florets and asparagus tips toward the center of cooking utensils and the thicker, denser stems toward the outer edge so they finish cooking at the same time.

Mrs. Boardman became an expert on microwave cookery about four and a half years ago when her brother, then an appliance dealer, delivered an oven to her home in a San Francisco suburb but forgot the booklet that came with it. She was looking for ways to make cooking easier after suffering permanent motor disability in an accident.

When utility companies and libraries couldn't answer her questions, she began experimenting. Eventually she began conducting seminars in California for other oven owners. She expanded her work to other states following a recent move to Wichita with her husband, Wesley, a computer analyst.

She is currently a consultant to the California Frozen Vegetable Council, which processes 85 percent of the frozen lima beans, broccoli, Brussels sprouts, cauliflower and spinach sold in the United States. Mrs. Boardman says frozen vegetables cooked her way retain better texture and flavor than those cooked conventionally.

Before cooking she defrosts the vegetables in their boxes or poly bags on 50 percent power until they are crunchy and flexible enough to allow ice crystals and liquid to be removed. She then cooks the vegetables in a tightly covered container, using the high power setting for everything except lima beans, for which she prefers 30 percent power.

Mrs. Boardman's favorite microwave utensils are oval, round or ring shapes because they permit even microwave penetration. She uses tube pans to achieve the same results with casseroles and meatloaf. She converts 8-to 11-inch rounds to rings by either leaving the center empty or placing a small ramekin in the center and arranging the food around the outer edges. She says this eliminates the need for stirring and turning food during cooking.

She compensates for the absence of browning by topping meat, fish or poultry with such things as prepared sauces or salad dressings, fresh parsley, sliced fresh fruit or vegetables, bread crumbs or combinations of shredded or chopped vegetables.

Since nature doesn't provide many uniform shapes in raw foods, Mrs. Boardman preforms or pre-cuts uneven foods before cooking. For example, she rolls fish fillets and large pieces of meat and slices carrots.

If food takes longer to cook than your recipe or your oven's manufacturer recommends, she says, maybe the oven is not getting enough power.

She recommends a separate 110-volt line for microwave ovens because other heavy users of electricity on the same line — refrigerators or freezers, for instance — draw power away.

She also said the amount of power coming into a home varies slightly during periods of heavy usage. The more people using electricity at one time, the less there is for each individual and the slower an oven cooks.

Mrs. Boardman's suggestions for converting regular recipes to microwave include:

— Reduce liquid ingredients 20-25 percent, the smaller amount for a clear liquid such as water and the larger for buttermilk or others containing solids.

— Reduce oil content 10 percent; oil intensifies heat.

— Increase leavening agents such as baking soda and baking powder 10 percent because a microwave oven works so fast these products don't have their full amount of time to act.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

A mother of a high school junior was lamenting the other night about the cost of class rings. She ended her argument against them by saying, "Does anyone ever know what happens to them?"

I know. Class rings are what you take off every time you wash your hands the first week you have them . . . and after that are never seen again.

Class rings are what are lost before your check for them clears the bank.

Class rings are what makes the strange noise in your washing machine and what you paid $26 to a washer repairman to retrieve from under the pulsator.

Class rings are what you wear to bed and your hands swell and everyone panics and gives you advice on how to get it off and when you lather up your hands with soap, it falls off into the commode.

Class rings (belonging to boys) dangle from chains in cleavages of girls as a promise of commitment against the day when both of you pass Tragedies of Shakespeare and are ready to make a life together.

Class rings (belonging to girls) dangle from the first ; knuckle of the baby finger of boys who say they'll wear them forever, and are later found in their gym bag.

Class rings are what you take the plumbing apart for when you don't know how to put the plumbing back again and discover the class ring in the glove compartment of the car.

Class rings are the mark of identity and camaraderie when sighted by a stranger who says, "Hey, I see by your ring you went to Farnsworth High," and you say, "No, this is Rucknell's ring," and discover they're both alike.

Class rings are what were thrown into a drawer when mood rings came out.

Class rings are what college freshmen leave home along with the letter sweater when they go away to college.

Class rings are what multiply, grow feet and appear in the knife and fork drawer, the sewing basket, tied to a blind cord, and in the corner of the bathtub.

Class rings are what are discovered quite by accident by a mother who rubs her fingers over it gently, slips it on her finger, and for a moment relives that time of her life when the end of an era was sealed with a ring.

Answer In Organized Effort

The story of the Boat People is an old one; told so many times the welcome mat is wearing thin among countries who have taken them in.

Sympathy remains; as does a conviction there must be a better way.

If we accept the opinion of some American spokesmen, who claim those most-threatened by the fact of close American ties during the war have already been taken in, there remains multitudes who are running away from conditions they find intolerable. It could be their appetites for a freer life were whetted by that U.S. presence during the years of war. At any rate, they continue to appear on coasts of Asiatic nations in their overcrowded craft seeking a safe harbor.

It is a tragedy which a group of governments

(the United Nations?) would find easier to resolve through an organized effort rather than the separate refugee services now provided.

An alternative might lie in the leasing of one of the 700-plus islands in the Philippines; providing the essentials for building towns and farms and an economic base.

Among those self-imposed exiles are all the skills and experience and training capable of building a social structure of great value to any host government.

Truly, it would appear to us the loss of such people would be of real concern to Vietnam....so great a concern that their leadership might resort to that solution decided upon by East Germany: fencing them in.

Lost Kingdom And A Jetliner As Well

Not only has the Shah of Iran lost his kingdom, but he has lost his jetliner as well.

The crew of the Boeing 707 flew the aircraft back to Tehran and presented it to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's government.

It was a symbolic final blow to the Shah who seems to have few supporters these days.

No tears should be shed for the Shah, however. He had the income and the opportunity to establish a people oriented government in Iran, and failed to do so.

The Buck Stops In Homes

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Enough of the aloof, retiring physician who remains above it all, honoring some ancient oath not to draw public attention to the profession.

The time is here for health professionals to take the lead in informing and educating the public about health problems, and helping communities reach decisions on what to do about those, says Dr. Hugh Tillson, North Carolina's new director of the public health division of the Department of Human Resources.

Recently arrived from Portland, Oregon, Tillson is spending his first six months on the job avoiding public appearances and speeches, choosing rather to meet with health care providers and knowledgeable people as he becomes acquainted with conditions.

Six months, he says, of "listening and talking rather than prioritizing and pronouncing. Priorities, after all, have to be felt by the people who will implement the change... not by me," Tillson says.

Find Out

For above all else, Tillson sees the need for local people to involve themselves in finding out what their own problems are, then moving to meet them head-on. "But the problems will never be solved completely; only replaced by others."

One priority he is already sure of, however, is that given the choice between dollars for a new top-level bureaucrat in Raleigh and a top-drawer public health nurse working in the field, he will pick the nurse.

"That is where the real public service takes place.... What we must have is an awareness that the buck stops at the local level — not in Raleigh," Tillson is convinced.

Neither is it up to local public health departments to be service delivery agencies. Only when no alternatives are available should those agencies actually provide the services. Otherwise, it is the local agency's responsibility to pinpoint the service needs and assure delivery from whatever source.

"Should government do everything in health care? No. The role is not to be the provider, but to assure, promote and protect the public health," Tillson argues.

And while carefully avoiding trying to fix the priorities for local health agencies, Tillson is still convinced that high on everybody's list will be adequate care for pregnant mothers and infants.

BILL NOBLITT

"Where should our resources go? Obviously, into services likely to address future problems before they occur." That doesn't mean abandoning the present generation of problems. Services for the elderly and middle aged must go forward. "But we have to attempt to stop the continued production of babies that don't have their best chance at a decent life," he feels.

Don't Care

What of the likelihood that most mothers suffering malnutrition and ignorant of decent health care likely don't know about — or even care about — doing things differently?

"Then we must reach them where they are and convince them otherwise. No mother wants to have a child that is less than the best. Perhaps the individual is not generally concerned with health problems, but at child-bearing time, she is most receptive."

"How to reach them? Most decisions are made over the clothesline in conversation with neighbors or relatives. That's where change must begin to take place.... talking to one another," Tillson says.

What of a sizable public opinion that tax dollars aren't really helping the situation, and some of the people at stake don't really want help anyway?

"Such people are not a majority. People of good will exist everywhere and really want to help when the problem can be identified and results seen," Tillson finds. Now it is up to public health officials and private physicians together to "shout the message from every hill, roll up their sleeves, and go to work."

Rhodesia May Make It

WASHINGTON — Rhodesia declared its independence on Nov. 11, 1965. Prime Minister Harold Wilson delivered a piece of resounding prophecy. Rhodesia, he said, would be "brought to its knees" within two weeks.

Scarcely a day has passed in the ensuing 13 years that some oracle has not foreseen Rhodesia's downfall. Economic sanctions, domestic inflation, the loss of world markets in tobacco and chrome, the ordeal of stepped-up guerrilla warfare, the steady erosion of white population — Rhodesia thus far has survived them all.

Now the beleaguered country is looking forward to national elections beginning April 20 and extending over a period of two weeks. Terrorist forces, it is grimly assumed, will make every conceivable effort to intimidate the voters, but Rhodesia's own security forces should be able to maintain order as polls are moved from place to place. An estimated 2.5 million men and women over the age of 18 are expected to vote for a new biracial government to take office under a new constitution.

The devout hope, if not the likely prospect, is for order. The hope is that a responsible, multi-party parliament will be democratically elected, that the transition will be effected in relative peace, and that the born-again Zimbabwe will become an island of pro-Western civility in the chaotic, Marxist seas of Angola and Mozambique.

Our own government ought to be supporting this prospect in every possible way. It is incredible — simply incredible! — that the Carter administration should be hesitating about sending American observers to oversee the election. Of course the United States, and Britain too, should be lending a hand toward a peaceful, democratic solution of the Rhodesian problem.

It is objected that the prospective government will not embrace the terrorist forces of Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe. But this is by their own choice. Both guerrilla leaders have rejected absolutely the idea of democratic elections. They have repeatedly proclaimed their desire to seize power at the point of a gun. They will not attend a joint conference of the several factions involved in a solution. It is a peculiar hospitality that would invite them to enter this court of equity with bloody hands.

It is further objected that under the new constitution, whites would hold 28 percent of the legislative seats for at least the next ten years. But this objection carries a hollow, hypocritical ring when it comes from American mouths. Following our own independence from Britain, our founding fathers denied the vote absolutely to blacks. It took 80 years and a civil war to give our blacks the 15th Amendment, and it took 100 years after that before the amendment became generally effective. Who are we to lecture Rhodesia about the purity of internal political institutions? Rhodesia is moving steadily, responsibly from darkness and tribalism toward full participation in the parliamentary mainstream. These evolutionary things take time.

Under the International Security Assistance Act of 1978, the United States is committed to an abandonment of economic sanctions if the Rhodesian government takes two steps — if it demonstrates its willingness to negotiate fully and in good faith at an all-parties conference, and if it conducts free elections "with observation by impartial interna-

George Would Be 248

By SAM HARTZ

WASHINGTON (AP) — Today is Washington's Birthday, not to be confused with last Monday, the federal holiday. George may have understood such things. He wasn't born on either of those days, but on Feb. 11.

Thus, Washington could have three birthday celebrations. Or four, if you count Feb. 12, 1798. It's all a bit puzzling, but the first change stemmed from England's adoption of the Gregorian calendar in 1750. Washington had been born under the Julian or "old style" calendar on Feb. 11, 1731. The switch moved the date 11 days.

So after that, was his birthday on Feb. 22? Yes, in most places, but not in his hometown of Alexandria, Va. The good citizens there stuck with tradition and celebrated on the old date, Feb. 11. George went along.

But perhaps Alexandria residents didn't know that Washington, through his secretary, had sent word in 1792 to Thomas Jefferson about his birthday preference.

"T. Lear has the honor to inform Mr. Jefferson that the president considers the 22nd day of this month as his birthday, having been born on the 11th, old style," wrote Tobias Lear.

Washington's diary contains this entry, seven years later:

"Feb. 11 (1799) — 'Went up to Alexandria to the celebration of my birthday. Many maneuvers were performed by the uniform corps and an elegant ball and supper at night.'"

On Feb. 22, 1797, an even more elegant ball was held in Philadelphia, then the seat of government. The attendance was 12,000.

What about Feb. 12, 1798? Because Feb. 11 fell on a Sabbath that year (no dancing), the Alexandria celebration was moved a day. Noted the obliging Father of his Country.

40 Years Ago Today

Authorization of a $34,839 Work Project Administration's Project by the Federal Government yesterday to carry on a drainage sidewalk and alley project here will greatly improve the conditions surrounding Greenville. Mayor M. K. Blount declared today.

The project will be completed with small cost to the city, as labor will be the greatest expense, and the WPA pays for all of this. In addition, the agency will pay for part of the materials.

Although it was announced from Washington that it was a street project, Mayor Blount explained today it was chiefly a drainage program, on which the city officials have been working for some time.

It will, however, include 12,000 linear feet of sidewalk. The project will also entail 1,320 linear feet of alleys.

Other work included in the program follows: construction of a concrete box culvert; 5,300 linear feet of storm sewer pipe, and re-cleaning 23,000 feet of ditches.

In addition to providing many needed improvements to the city of Greenville, it was also pointed out that the project will provide work for a number of laborers this spring.

THE GALLUP POLL

Cool To Tax-Credit Plan

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. — If Congress is going to come to the aid of parents trying to finance a college education for their children, students themselves would prefer that this aid be in the form of expanded financial aid programs rather than income tax credits.

By a 53-41 percent margin, college students across the nation, interviewed in a special Gallup Poll of the college population, vote for tuition help rather than tax credits.

In so voting, students put themselves at odds with the general public. In a nationwide Gallup Poll of adults, conducted last April, the public favored tax credits over expanded tuition aid by 51-34 percent.

Financial aid for students from middle-income families is an issue that has assumed great urgency in recent years. Middle-income parents have found that inflation has made it more and more difficult to finance a college education for their children — a comparative luxury which has become increasingly available only to students from lower-income families, because they are most likely to receive the available financial aid, and those from upper-income families who don't need the aid.

Student opinion on this issue is notable for its unanimity. Among virtually all demographic groups, majorities vote for tuition aid rather than tax credits. However, two groups are more emphatic in their feelings than the rest of the college population. Among non-white students and those who describe themselves, politically, as left-of-center, six in every 10 say they would prefer tuition aid.

Most closely divided on the question are seniors. While freshmen, sophomores and juniors pretty much reflect nationwide opinion, seniors are evenly divided with 49 percent favoring tuition aid and 48 percent tax credits.

The issue of tuition aid vs. tax credits was joined last year in the Congress when the Carter administration presented a bill that would have provided expanded financial aid under a variety of programs. However, Congress did not act on the bill before it adjourned.

Although that particular bill would have liberalized financial aid through such programs as educational grants, college work-study jobs and guaranteed loans, proposals that would have allowed tax credits of up to $250 per student were being formulated in both Houses. In fact, under the Senate version, credits would have increased to $500 in 1980 and included elementary and secondary school students.

A tax credit is subtracted directly from the amount of money owed to the government as opposed to a tax deduction which is subtracted from the total income on which taxes must be paid.

For his own part, President Carter warned last year that he Letters submitted for Public Forum must be limited to 300 words.

To the editor:

I am taking means of a letter to commend our Fire Departments, Rescue Squads and Police Departments, the State Highway Patrol, Civil Defense workers, church groups, industrial and many more concerned and dedicated people that worked Monday during the fire at a local chemical industry.

Thousands of people could have lost their lives or seriously been injured by the dangerous situation. When the alarm was given, all departments moved swiftly to the area to protect the lives, limbs and property of many. It's gratifying to live in a county and community, the cities and towns nearby: our Fire, Rescue, Police, State Troopers are well-trained personnel that have attended schools that prepared them to combat situations such as the fire: explosives-chemicals.

Our County Fire Marshall Mr. Bobby Joyner surely deserves great credit for the manner in which he conducted the operations in a dangerous situation. I am sure that this letter will speak for thousands of citizens who appreciate the good job done by all that assisted at the fire. We must always be thankful to the ones that are on duty 24 hours a day to answer the calls for emergency help and assistance. Such are the ones who answered the call.

Deny Consumers Overextended

By JOHN CUNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — The "Overextended Consumer exists only in the realm of economic myth," announced Citibank this week, while conceding that total consumer debt now exceeds $1.148 trillion, a record high.

The debt charts follow "a normal path," it comments. Debt expansion is not out of line with previous experience," it maintains. It has been "fueled by the rapid growth of consumer income," it explains.

"Consumers typically step up the pace of their borrowing during periods of rapid economic growth," it assures us. And, it continues, "there's no evidence to substantiate" over-extension.

When Citibank speaks, millions listen, including those in the White House. It's research is respected, it's opinions are followed. But Citibank also makes it's money by lending. Credit is its business.

And, since almost all of us are borrowers, credit is also the business of consumers. Hence, humbly stated, here are some reasons why consumers may disagree with Citibank — why they may feel over-extended.

—In 1951, reading from Citibank's own charts, extensions of installment credit (mortgages excluded) as a ratio of disposable income was 10. By the second quarter of 1978 it had risen to a record 19.

—In 1960, again based on Citibank charts, the ratio of installment credit repayments to disposable income was about 28.5. In 1978 it reached and exceeded 34 percent.

—These heavier burdens come despite increases in take home pay. Though wages have risen, the percentage of take home pay that must go to repay installment debt has risen even faster.

—Federal Reserve Board figures show that total consumer debt, which includes home mortgages, amounted in 1965 to only a bit over 25 percent of net worth. By the beginning of 1978 it had topped 50 percent.

—Many families are dependent on two incomes, and have in fact been allocated credit based on total household income, even though one of those jobs may be somewhat tenuously held and subject to layoff.

—It is true that rather than buying frivolously, consumers have used credit to buy durable goods. But they still have to pay for them.

The level of credit may be in line, as Citibank states. But that is only one explanation for all the credit being offered and accepted. A loan well used takes a load off the shoulders, but it can feed them too.

The conflict between Citibank's view of credit — call it debt — and the popular view of the over-extended consumer, might distill down to an essential difference of view between lender and borrower.

Some borrowers of late seem to have the worried looks and sagging shoulders of people who carry a burden, which is hardly the perspective from which to comment on the nation's economic health.

Surprised In Touring Fayetteville State U.

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A federal civil rights official says he was "surprised and disappointed" at the conditions he saw while touring predominantly black Fayetteville State University.

David S. Tatel, director of the civil rights division of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, made the comment during a tour of three predominantly black University of North Carolina campuses Wednesday.

Tatel and other HEW officials were told by Fayetteville State educators that offices and classrooms were overcrowded and laboratories poorly equipped.

Dr. Roy Barrett, chairman of Fayetteville State's division of physical and life sciences, said the physiology laboratory at the school was "not adequate for a high school."

"I was surprised and disappointed," Tatel said after the tour. "I hope a way can be found to improve that situation."

The HEW officials also visited N.C. Central University in Durham Wednesday morning and Winston-Salem State University in the afternoon. They were scheduled to visit N.C. A&T University today.

The officials are on a three-day tour of eight UNC campuses to gather information that will help them assess the university's latest desegregation plan.

"We can certainly learn more about these schools (here) than we could sitting in Washington," Tatel said.

HEW officials accompanying

Tatel on the tour were Mary Berry, assistant secretary for education in the civil rights office, Colleen O'Conner, HEW director of public affairs and at least two HEW attorneys.

The tour was prompted by a meeting in Washington two weeks ago involving five chancellors of the predominantly black campuses and federal officials. The chancellors defended the state's desegregation plan.

would veto any bill that included tax credits.

Here is the question asked:

"Congress is now discussing ways to increase financial aid to college students. One plan would increase tuition aid and expand existing student loan programs for students from middle-income families. The other plan would provide tax credits which would enable parents of students to deduct the amount of the credit from their tax bill. Which would you prefer, the plan which would increase tuition aid and student loans or the plan which would provide tax credits for parents of students?"

City Counts 3 Accidents

An estimated $6,500 property damage resulted from three traffic collisions investigated by Greenville Police yesterday.

Investigators reported an 8:43 a.m. collision at the intersection of Tenth and Charles Streets involving cars driven by Gloria Bullock Cox of Route 1, Winter-ville and Kathy Osborne Kinlaw of Route 7, Greenville.

Damage from the mishap was estimated at $1,000 to the Cox car and $2,500 to the Kinlaw vehicle.

Drivers involved in a 12:15 p.m. mishap at the intersection of Memorial Drive and Greenville Boulevard were identified as Thomas Latane Butler Jr., of Route 4, Simpson, Thomas Talmage Phillips of Route 1, Franklin, and Clara Harding Barnhill of 605 Vance St.

Officers, who charged Butler with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety, set damage at $500 to the Butler truck, $1,500 to the Phillips truck, and $600 to the Barnhill car.

An estimated $200 damage resulted to each of two cars involved in an 8:05 a.m. collision at the intersection of Dickinson Avenue and Clark St.

Drivers of the vehicles were identified as Andrew Grover Peaden of 2710 South Memorial Dr., and William Allen Brann of 1302 Allen St.

Simpson Adopts A Housing Code

SIMPSON — A minimum housing code was adopted by members of Simpson's Town Council earlier this week, making the Pitt County incorporated community one of the few of its size in eastern North Carolina to have such a code.

The code, which will entail the hiring at an early date of a part-time building inspector, was formulated under the auspices of a state law outlining applicable housing code measures.

Mayor John McDonald, and councilmen Galloway Thompson and Jim Telfair constitute the town's council which acted on the minimum housing code prepared with the assistance of John Crew, a Community Development Project Advisor from the Dept. of Natural Resources with headquarters in Washington.

Crew stated that at the present time, Simpson was involved in a federal community development program, but that adoption of the minimum code had no specific ties with the federal program. "It does in effect, accommodate and parallel the federal program requirements," Crew stated, "and for that reason it is a good and helpful provision. The code gives the mayor and council members the authority to require houses to be repaired, when necessary, to meet a certain level."

Crew indicated that although generally most small communities do not have such a code, that more communities in the 21 county eastern North Carolina area served by the Washington office are considering such a measure.

Pond Yields Body Of A Missing Girl

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — The body 10-year-old Tammy Kearns, who had been missing since Monday, was found Wednesday night in a pond near the girl's home by rescue workers.

Rescue workers said they found the girl in about two feet of water in the three-acre pond. She was five to 10 feet from the shore, workers said.

The girl was last seen by her family Monday when she went outside her home to play in the snow.

Volunteers began dragging the pond on Tuesday and worked through Tuesday night and all day Wednesday. The child was found about 8:30 Wednesday night.

Randolph County authorities had concentrated their search on the pond after a red and white cap belonging to the girl was found frozen in the ice.

Authorities said fire trucks pumped about half of the water from the pond, estimated at 30 feet deep in places.

Randolph County fireman Bill Black said rescue workers had planned to call of the search until morning if they had not found the girl by midnight.

"It's too bad it had to end this way," Black said.

Lacy Kearns, the girl's father, said she was last seen when she went out of the family's house Monday afternoon to build a snowman. About a foot of snow fell in Randolph County on Sunday.

More than 80 sheriff's deputies, National Guardsmen, rescue squad personnel and other volunteers combed an area within five miles of the Kearns home Tuesday in hopes of finding some clue to her whereabouts. The search moved to the pond after the cap was found there on Tuesday.

Kearns said he saw footprints to the pond but thought they were made by one of Tammy's two brothers. He later said the youngster could have taken some corn to the pond to feed some ducks at the pond.

ERA Backers Vote To Kill Referendum Measure

GOING HOME — U.S. Marine Sgt. Ken Kraus, 22, of Lansdale, Pa., who was released by Iranian authorities Wednesday night, is escorted by Moslem gunmen at Tehran airport Thursday morning to board an evacuation flight carrying him to Frankfurt. Sgt. Kraus had been abducted by gunmen from his hospital bed in Tehran where he was being treated for wounds incurred during the recent attack on the U.S. Embassy in Iran. (AP Laserphoto)

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Backers of the equal rights amendment, defeated in their push for ratification this year, voted to kill a bill Wednesday that would have authorized a statewide referendum on ERA.

The House Constitutional Amendments Committee rejected the non-binding referendum proposal on a 12-3 vote. It was sponsored by Rep. John Jordan, D-Alamance, an ERA opponent.

"The pro-ERA folks do not want to know what the majority of folks think," said Jordan.

Several ERA supporters opposed the referendum, saying legislators should decide ERA and that the issue was too emotional to put to a vote of the public.

"This idea that we've got to submit every constitutional issue to the voters is to me inconsistent with representative democracy," said Rep. Henry Frye, D-Guilford.

Although the ERA-ratification bill was killed last week in a Senate committee, the House panel has another ERA-related measure to be considered next week.

That is a proposed amendment to the North Carolina state constitution which would — like ERA — prohibit discrimination on account of sex.

Offered by ERA opponent Rep. Vernon James, D-Asheboro, it has attracted support from some panel members who opposed Jordan's bill.

"If we're going to let our people vote, I'd like for them to vote for something substantial, like an amendment to our state constitution," said Rep. Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth. "Most of the objections to ERA, in the letters I've gotten, were to giving our power to the federal government. I'd like to see if that's the case."

In other legislative action: Absentee Voting Reports from State Elections Director Alex Brock about the abuses of the absentee voting system caused a Senate committee to delay action on a bill that would have authorized absentee voting in alcoholic beverage elections.

Instead, the Senate Election Laws Committee decided to study the problem of absentee voting abuses and attempt to formulate legislation to correct it.

The House has already approved the bill that would allow absentee voting in alcoholic beverage elections. Sponsor Rep. Mary Nesbit, D-Buncombe, said voters should be allowed to vote by absentee ballots in all elections or none at all.

But Brock told the committee that allowing absentee voting in alcoholic beverage elections would increase the abuse.

He said some politicians and party workers solicit voters to register for absentee ballots, even though these voters do not plan to be out of town.

The politicians are then able to influence these votes because the ballots are cast away from the polling place.

Patrol Cars A bill that would reduce the number of unmarked state Highway Patrol cars on the road was approved by a Senate Law Enforcement and Crime Control Committee and sent to the full Senate.

The bill calls for the number

Primary Care List Readied

The results of two months of research designed to locate and identify all primary care physicians in Eastern North Carolina were presented to the Eastern Carolina Health Systems Agency Governing Body Feb. 14 here.

The primary care manpower study, which includes the most current and accurate information of its kind in the state, identifies 10 and a half of eastern N.C.'s 29 counties as Health Manpower Shortage Areas and 23 of them as Medically Underserved Areas. These 1979 figures are improvements over the 1976 figures of 15 of the 29 counties and 27 of 29 counties respectively.

The Governing Body voted to accept the findings which, after acceptance by federal agencies, will make those counties designated HSMAs or MUAs eligible for National Health Service Corps physicians, health personnel scholarships and loan repayments, and preference as sites for rural health centers and Health Underserved Rural Area (HURA) monies.

The body also voted to approve two Section 1122 proposals: construction of physician's office space at Washington County Hospital and completion of shelved-in-space for relocation of specific services at Wilson Memorial Hospital Inc.

Two proposed uses of federal funds also were endorsed: residency training in general pediatrics at the East Carolina University School of Medicine and an operations grant for Neuse Mental Health Center.

National Guard Offers Enlistment Bonus Plan

A new enlistment bonus program designed to enlist young men and women in the 514th Military Police Co., the local National Guard unit, was announced by Capt. Leon Wright, unit company commander.

Wright said that at present, the 514th MP Co., which trains at the National Guard Armory on Airport Road, has openings in the military police, communications and equipment technician field.

The Greenville commander said that under the new program, qualified men and women between the ages of 18 and 36 will be offered a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Upon completion of basic training and MP training, the first portion of the bonus will be paid in the amount of $750. After returning from training, $200 will be paid after the satisfactory completion of the second and third years of service and $350 following the fourth year of service.

To be eligible for the enlistment bonus, Wright mentioned, an individual must enlist in the National Guard for a period of six years, have never previously served in any component of the Armed Forces, be a high school graduate by the beginning of the training, pass the written tests and physical, and meet other normal enlistment criteria.

After basic and advanced training are completed, the individual will return to Greenville and continue training with the local unit, he said.

Wright said that persons interested in further information on the program should contact SFC George L. Pleasant at the armory or call him at 752-5693.

Neil Armstrong Flying Again

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Former astronaut Neil Armstrong is back in the sky.

Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon, set new altitude and climb records for business jets during flights at Kitty Hawk, N.C., Learjet company spokesman Jim Gregory said Wednesday.

The new jet piloted by Armstrong climbed to an altitude of 51,000 feet in a little over 12 minutes, Gregory said, adding that the flight at that altitude was sustained for 90 seconds.

The plane took off from First Flight airstrip at nearby Kill Devil Hills where the Wright brothers made history's first manned powered flight on Dec. 17, 1903.

The records, set Monday and Tuesday, were sanctioned by the National Aeronautics Association, Learjet spokesman Jim Gregory said.

Prince Likes 'American Way'

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles says the American way of managing workers should be a model for British business managers.

The 30-year-old heir to the British throne on Wednesday blamed British management for many of the nation's industrial troubles. "Unions are not impossible to deal with," he said.

COASTAL LANDSCAPE — Vast stretches of empty beaches on North Carolina's Outer Banks looked like this windswept scene in Buxton as snow brought in on gale-force winds over the recent weekend added a frigid touch of winter splendor. (J. Foster Scott photo, DCTB)

Cleaner Cigarettes 'Helpful'

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer
BOSTON (AP) — Newly discovered microscopic evidence shows the death rate from lung cancer will probably decline in coming years because smokers have switched to cleaner cigarettes, researchers say.

Their study found that the cigarettes being smoked in the 1970s cause far less cancer-linked lung damage than those of the 1950s, which contained more tar and nicotine.

Cells in the lungs of recent smokers had at least 10 times fewer pre-cancerous abnormalities than those of men who smoked 15 years ago, they said.

"We were all astounded at the findings," Dr. Oscar Auerbach, one of the researchers, said in an interview.

The average cigarette smoked now contains far less tar and nicotine than those available in the 1950s, the researchers said. Indeed, the highest-tar brand on the market today delivers less tar than the lowest-tar brand smoked before 1954.

Despite the improvements, however, the doctors warn that smoking is still dangerous and should be avoided.

About 100,000 Americans are expected to die this year from lung cancer caused by smoking.

The study, conducted at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in East Orange, N.J., was published in today's edition of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The doctors examined samples of lung tissue taken from 445 men who died from causes other than lung cancer between 1955 and 1960 and between 1970 and 1977.

They looked for abnormalities in the cells of the lining of the bronchial passageways. These changes are believed to be an early warning of future lung cancer.

They found that among men in the 1950s group who smoked more than two packs a day 22.5 percent had these changes in their lungs. However, only 2.2 percent of heavy smokers who died in the 1970s had these abnormalities.

The differences also were dramatic among lighter smokers. For instance, 13.2 percent of those who puffed 20 to 39 cigarettes a day in the 1950s had cellular changes, compared with 0.8 percent in the later group.

The doctors found no abnormalities in the lungs of non-smokers.

"We feel that in time, this will presage a decrease in the incidence of lung cancer," said Auerbach.

However, the researchers said they could not predict how soon the drop will come or how large it will be.

They noted that the progression from abnormal cells to lung cancer takes many years.

"Thus, everyone who has been a habitual cigarette smoker for 25 years or longer must be smoking cigarettes with less tar and nicotine than those formerly smoked, and a large proportion of smokers have deliberately selected brands with reduced tar and nicotine," the researchers wrote.

The new study did not examine other ailments linked to cigarette smoking, such as emphysema, throat cancer, heart attacks and ulcers.

No School If Not Shot

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Junior high school students who could not prove they had been immunized against red measles were kept out of school Wednesday in an attempt to curb a measles outbreak.

In an enforced isolation, 627 students either stayed home, were sent home or were kept at school until officials could contact their parents.

Twenty-nine youngsters in Mecklenburg County have come down with red measles in the past few weeks. But no new cases have been reported since last Friday, and health officials say that may be a sign the outbreak is waning.

Last week, school officials identified nearly 2,000 junior high school students who had no record of immunization. Letters were sent to those students' parents telling them to provide proof of a vaccination, or their children would be suspended.

Parents of several hundred students sent in information confirming their children's immunization, but 627 students were without that proof.

'John Doe' Has Left Hospital

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Lawrence B. Stewart left Pitt County Memorial Hospital this morning 147 days after he entered as a comatose John Doe. Stewart, 41, is being transferred today to the Deaton Home, a long-term nursing facility in Baltimore, Md.

"The bureaucracy kept him here this long," Ed Hackett, Hospital Patient Representative. "It's taken this long to get him certified for Medicaid assistance through the State of Maryland, which was ascertained to be his birthplace and probable home Oct. 18, 20 days after he entered.

Stewart apparently walked into the path of a truck near Wilson Sept. 28 and suffered brain damage which warranted his transfer to Pitt Co. Memorial for neurological study and treatment. He has not recovered from the coma and has been a patient, not in critical care, but on a regular nursing floor most of the time he was here. His bill as of midnight Feb. 20 was $15,863.

Hackett said this is not the longest time for a single hospitalization at Pitt Co. Memorial, but it is the longest a patient totally dependent on public assistance has been kept.

ERA Boycott Enjoys Federal Court Support

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal court decision upholding the right of a women's group to push a boycott against states that have not ratified the proposed Equal Rights Amendment leaves the 15 affected states susceptible to the additional loss of millions of dollars in convention money.

The National Organization for Women already has induced many groups ranging from labor unions to governmental units to deny their convention business to the states that have declined to approve the amendment.

The boycott appears to have cost those states millions of dollars, particularly such popular convention sites as Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., and Miami.

It was this loss of money that prompted Missouri to file suit, charging NOW with violating the Sherman Antitrust Act and contending that NOW is "taking states economic hostages with the ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment as the ransom."

But U.S. District Judge Elmo B. Hunter ruled Wednesday in Kansas City that the boycott is not an antitrust violation because its aim is not to increase profits and because it takes place in what is essentially a political context.

NOW reported Wednesday that 480 organizations with 40 million members are supporting the boycott by declining to hold conventions in Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Utah and Virginia.

Although 35 states have approved ERA, four have voted to rescind that action. The Justice Department has said it is up to Congress to decide whether they can rescind earlier approval.

To be added to the Constitution, the ERA, which would ban discrimination based on sex, must be ratified by 38 states before June 30, 1982. The original deadline had been this March 22, but that was extended by Congress.

Prize-Winners In Speech Event

Wellcome Middle School held an oratorical school contest Friday, with speakers incorporating the theme, "In My Youth, I See."

Woody Leggett was awarded the first place prize. Second place winner was Mark James, with third place winner Clyn Morris. Fourth place honors went to Veveca Pulliam.

The winners will compete in the local Optimist Oratorical Contest March 3 at Oakmont Baptist Church, Greenville.

Davie County Craftsman Wants His Work To Last

By CAROLYN DARKEN
Salisbury Evening Post
MOCKSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — In an era when everything from yo-yos to refrigerators is built with "planned obsolescence" in mind, Davie County artist George Hairston wants his work to last.

"I think all of us feel we would like to be remembered and make a contribution to the present," the tall, wiry artist said. "What I'm trying to produce here is a tangible record of the county's history and accomplishments and put it in a main building, where it can be public property."

"I really wanted to leave in this area a lasting monument to the people and this seemed like the best place to start."

The place is the Davie County Courthouse, where Hairston spends at least 40 hours a week in a chip-littered basement, pounding and gouging away at carvings destined for courthouse offices, doorways and walls. Hairston's work for the courthouse has been produced since he joined the county Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) program last September.

Hairston concentrated on art courses at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, but left college in 1966, disillusioned with painting.

"I was formally trained as a painter," Hairston said. "But there are so many people doing that and there's something about wood that's more familiar, more suitable to my personality ... I can release a certain energy in woodcarving that I've never found an outlet for before."

"Lots of times, when I go home for the day I'm shaking and soaked with sweat ... there's just something finicky about painting on cloth, though," he added.

Hairston discovered the medium with the strength, durability and expressiveness he was looking for in the 1960s, when he began a five-year apprenticeship with a California sign-carver.

"I started woodcarving when I got a job working for a sign shop in Santa Cruz," Hairston said. "I started it just as a job, but as I learned, I really began to enjoy myself."

As an apprentice, he started out roughing out backdrops on signs, then graduated to cutting letters and eventually, designed and carved his own signs.

By the time he returned to his native county in 1976, he had developed an interest in architectural carving — the decorative and functional carved mantels, stairways and paneling popular with wealthy families in the 18th and 19th centuries.

"With the advent of industrialization, this kind of woodcarving died out," Hairston said. "The woodcarvers who knew how to do it died off and woodwork machines began mass production."

But even the most sophisticated machinery can't capture the individuality and detail of hand-carved wood, and interest in the craft has revived in recent years, Hairston said.

"The interest in restoration these days is probably one factor in the revival," he said. "And part of the popularity now may be a reaction to industrialization. There's a renewed interest in the traditional ways of doing things. Woodcarving is something that just can't be done with a machine ... in fact, it takes several years of practice to begin to be proficient at it."

"What I'm trying to do now is create a market for architectural carving ... it's something of a challenge to try to revive a craft that died out 100 years ago."

While Hairston is finding an increasing appreciation for woodcarving, he said it's not an easy way to make a living.

Before he signed on with the one-year CETA program, he sold much of his work at craft fairs and through private commission for customers all over the eastern United States.

"I still do some commission work in my private time," he said. "It's a good way to work with some interesting people, but you're going to have a limited audience for a work that's in a private home."

And, of course, private commissions afford less freedom than do the carvings Hairston is completing for the county.

"I didn't really know how much I would be producing when I started," Hairston said. "But now I feel that just about every place I could put woodwork in the courthouse will be covered up. There were no real instructions about the kind of carving I would be doing ... they left that up to me."

Several of Hairston's carvings are already on display in the courtroom — the rest will go up just before his program expires in September. "I wanted to sort of go out with a bang," he said.

In addition to his work for the county, Hairston has agreed to carve some signs for the town of Mocksville and conducts demonstrations for school groups and clubs.

"I went to school in the 50s and felt almost totally unprepared to understand anything about art," Hairston recalled. "By exposing some of these students to art, I'm hoping they can see it isn't such an unusual thing, that it can really be an important part of their lives." And just as he wants his art displayed in public, Hairston draws ideas from his carvings from Davie County residents themselves.

"In warm weather, my office turns into a sort of social gathering place," he said. "People are in and out all of the time ... of course, everybody has a comment to make on what I'm doing ... a lot of times I get ideas that way."

Other ideas for carvings come from school children.

Several carved panels show Davie County plants and flowers like dogwood and arrowroot. Others, with a judicial theme, include a gavel, sword of justice and tablet symbolizing the Ten Commandments.

Transco To Ask Retrial

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A Texas-based natural gas pipeline company which supplies customers in North Carolina says it will seek a new trial to overturn a $25.7 million judgment against it.

Transcontinental Gas Pipeline Corp. (Transco), of Houston, was hit with the judgment in a suit filed by two agricultural cooperatives.

Farmers Chemical Association Inc., an agricultural cooperative in Hertford, filed the suit charging that Transco failed to deliver natural gas during gas shortages in recent years. Farmers Chemical was joined in the suit by C.F. Industries Inc., a Long Grove, Ill., cooperative.

The case went to trial last November in U.S. District Court in Charlotte, and the jury decided that Transco had broken its 20-year contract with the two cooperatives by failing to supply promised natural gas.

The jury awarded the cooperatives a judgment of $23.8 million for revenues lost during the cut-off period. But the jury said Transco had not committed fraud.

Last Friday, U.S. District Judge James B. McMillan handed down a final verdict in the case last Friday. He overturned the jury's decision on fraud and added about $1.9 million in interest charges against Transco.

A Transco spokesman said the company would file a motion for a new trial with McMillan.

"We will file that within the next 10 days," said Barbara Johnson, a Transco spokesman in Houston. "If Judge McMillan turns down our motion for a new trial, then we will file an appeal with the Fourth Circuit Court in Richmond."

Because of McMillan's ruling overturning the jury's original decision that Transco had not committed fraud, Transco could face a civil fraud allegation in a new trial.

Pitt Center Host To Area Workshop

The Pitt County Mental Health Center was host Friday to a Reimbursement Workshop for area directors, finance/business officers and reimbursement personnel from 14 mental health centers in the eastern region of North Carolina.

The workshop sessions were designed as an effort to assist and stimulate reimbursement programs, according to Tony Sanders, business manager for Pitt County Mental Health Center.

According to Ancel Harrison, accountant for the Eastern Regional Office of Human Resources, division of Mental Health and Mental Retardation, an total reimbursement program that is thoroughly planned, comprehensive in content, totally supported by all staff, and enthusiastically executed by administrative personnel will provide large dividends in the continuing flow of non-tax dollars for operational budget.

During the workshop, the groups discussed, studied and considered guidelines for interviews, management guidelines and key points for consistency among centers, as well as forming a task force to develop guidelines for reimbursement procedures in the eastern region.

Both Sanders and Sandra Jones, reimbursement officer at PCMHC, made presentations to the group.

Those attending the workshop from the county office included Dr. Stephen Creech and Dr. Sam Williams. Boyd Gillis, chief reimbursement officer for the Department of Human Resources, division of mental Health and mental retardation for North Carolina, also participated in the conference.

Coordinator To Speak On Radio

Dr. Omar Dye, coordinator of Children's Services, Pitt County Mental Health Center, will be the guest speaker on "Mental Health Matters" Sunday, Feb. 25, 1:06 p.m., on WNCN-AM.

Dr. Dye will discuss the parenting sessions to be offered at the Center beginning Feb. 27. The ten-week classes will be available for parents, expectant parents, and other interested persons. Dr. Dye will also comment on the various services available to children, adolescents and families at the Center.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS ISSUES DON'T HAVE TO BE FOREIGN!

The East Carolina University Division of Continuing Education is pleased to announce a special lecture/discussion series to be held on campus on eight consecutive Thursday evenings. The series is entitled GREAT DECISIONS 1979 and features the following ECU faculty and topics:

- "The Technology Explosion: How to Harness It For Physical Change?"
Dr. James Joyce, Associate Professor, Physics
- "Trade and the Dollar: Coping with Interdependence"
Dr. Umesh Gulati, Professor, Economics
- "NATO and the Russians: Will the East-West Balance Hold?"
Dr. Bodo Nilsen, Professor, History

KROGER SAV-ON.....A WHOLE LOT MORE THAN JUST ONE STORE

THE CLOCK, of course, is a very important piece of equipment in a basketball game. This reporter has always wondered how some schools get along with half the lights on their clock burned out. Up until last Friday night, a difficult-to-read clock had been considered an aggravation, but it came into play in a very real sense in the finals of the Eastern Carolina Conference tournament and may have affected the outcome of the game.

Most of you who follow high school basketball already know that second-seeded North Lenoir knocked off first place Farmville Central in that game by a 51-49 score on a last-second basket by Dexter Rouse. According to the way this reporter, and many others, including Farmville coach Mike Terrell, read the clock, that shot was way late.

The Jaguars got a pair of free throws from Donald Freeman with 54 seconds left to knot the score at 49-49. The usually run-and-gun Hawks decided to slow the ball down as they brought it into the front-court and they passed it around as the final minute ticked away.

Hawk coach Jerry Walton signalled for his team to call time out, and after the referee blew his whistle, the clock showed "0:04." Actually, however, there were nine seconds left in the game. You see, the middle two lights on the top row of the single seconds digit were burned out. Thus, the "9" looked like a "4."

"I misread the clock," Terrell admitted after the game. He sent his players back onto the court in a zone defense, thinking the Hawks would pretty much have to rush a shot after throwing the ball in from their own baseline.

The Farmville defense surprised Walton, who knew that nine, and not four, seconds remained. Walton had been watching the clock to signal his players to call time, and he began to signal them with 12 seconds left. When the stopped clock showed just four, he knew something was wrong.

"We checked with the timer and found out there were nine seconds left; that was the first thing we checked," he said. The Hawks went back onto the court to check Farmville's defensive alignment and then called another time out to set up a play.

"I was surprised to see they had gone back in a zone like that," Walton said.

Terrell explained, "If I had known there were nine seconds left, I would have gone to a man-to-man defense. I knew with four seconds left, they would try to shoot the ball quick."

The Hawks passed the ball into forward Johnny Wiggins, about 20 feet out, to the right of the key. He took a couple of slow dribbles and threw it to Rouse, who drove down the lane and layed it in with two seconds showing. Too little time for Farmville to counter.

Two things led to the mistaken clock reading by the Jaguars. First, obviously, were the burned out lights. Then, there is the fact that the Southern Nash gymnasium has only one clock.

Sports writers watch the clock about as much as anybody during a basketball game, getting the time of baskets, time outs and such. A school with just one clock, or one that is nearly unreadable due to burned out lights, is an aggravation.

It is also, in some cases, a factor in a ballgame. This is not to say Farmville Central would have won the game if Terrell had known the correct time, but the final seconds of a basketball game are so crucial, a coach and his players are entitled to know exactly how many are left.

Csonka May Rejoin Miami

MIAMI (AP) — National Football League free agent Larry Csonka and the Miami Dolphins are apparently reconciling and talking money and health as Coach Don Shula reorganizes his staff.

Shula said Wednesday that he and owner Joseph Robbie met earlier in the week with Csonka, 34, who helped lead the Dolphins to back-to-back Super Bowl championships in 1972 and 1973.

"We had the first discussion with him, then he went down and had the physical examination with Dr. Herbert Virgin," Shula said. "He's indicated his desire to sign with us."

The coach said Robbie and Csonka met without incident, despite some bitterness over the owner's having revealed Csonka's asking price when he joined the New York Giants.

Csonka had jumped from the Dolphins to the World Football League for an estimated $2 million in 1975, then signed with the Giants when the WFL folded. He gained just 311 yards last season.

"They sat down and talked," Shula said, adding that Csonka probably would pass the physical despite some knee problems. Csonka apparently wasn't negotiating seriously with any other teams, Shula said.

Miami may have an opening at fullback because Norm Bulaich has indicated he might retire this year.

The coach also revealed the signing of Bill Davis as director of pro personnel.

"This completes the reorganization of the staff," said Shula. He earlier had hired Dan Henning from the New York Jets to coordinate the Dolphins' passing game. Henning replaced Howard Schnellenberger, now head coach at the University of Miami.

"You hate to lose people like Howard and George, but I think we got two good men to replace them," the head coach added.

Davis, 40, former administrative assistant to Philadelphia Eagles Coach Dick Vermeil, will take over the job of George Young, who has been appointed New York Giants general manager.

The Youngstown, Ohio, native was an assistant to Denny Stolz at Michigan State, but said he wasn't involved in the NCAA recruiting violations that resulted in the Spartans' three-year probation.

Ray Harroun, driving a Marmon, won the first Indianapolis 500-mile auto race in 1911.

"There ain't no more upsets," winning Coach Bill Foster said Wednesday night.

"We never got the tempo the way we like it," losing Coach Bill Foster said Wednesday night.

"Everybody can beat everybody else, and that's the way it was tonight," said winning Coach Bill Foster.

"This is our first blowout of the year. All our other losses have been under 10 points, and this thing tonight really got out of hands," said losing Coach Bill Foster.

Coach Bill Foster's sixth-ranked Duke Blue Devils had lost five other games by a total of 19 points but this time they were blown out 70-49 by Coach Bill Foster's Clemson Tigers. Billy Williams scored a career-high 21 points as Clemson knocked Duke out of a first-place tie with North Carolina in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Clemson bolted to a 31-15 halftime lead and then used its "Tiger Pause" offense to keep things under control.

"We got some nice backdoor plays on it," said Clemson Coach Foster. "We didn't want to take anything but a layup or a foul off it (16 of Clemson's 23 baskets came on layups) and we were pretty patient with it. Our guys have a lot of confidence in it and we feel that we can use it pretty effectively on anybody."

Elsewhere in the Top Twenty, third-ranked Notre Dame crushed Oklahoma City 88-60, No. 8 Syracuse routed Niagara 120-82, No. 15 Temple defeated St. Joseph's, Pa. 76-68, No. 17 Georgetown edged George Washington 73-71 and No. 20 DePaul clobbered Valparaiso 104-76.

Notre Dame got a career-high 21 points from Orlando Woolridge and 14 rebounds from Bill Laimbeer in crushing Oklahoma City. The Irish rolled to a 21-8 lead and had a 43-25 halftime bulge.

Syracuse had no trouble with Niagara after 6-foot-11 Roosevelt Bouie scored nine points in the first five minutes. The Orangemen roared to a 33-10 spread and upped it to 66-27 at halftime. The victory was the 16th in a row for Syracuse and 44th in a row at home and it was pure murder.

Walter Montford scored 26 points and Keith Parham added 19 to lead Temple over St. Joseph's as the Owls clinched first place in the East Coast Conference.

Steve Martin, who scored 20 points, sank two free throws with 13 seconds left and enabled Georgetown to hold off George Washington. Three other Hoyas were in double figures.

DePaul scored the first 10 points against Valparaiso and the Blue Demons were on top 33-12 midway through the first half. Gary Garland paced the winners with 22 points and Mark Aguirre added 20.

Elsewhere: —Larry Gibson's jump shot at the buzzer gave Maryland a controversial 54-53 triumph over Wake Forest. Coach Carl Tacy of the losers claimed Maryland used more than five seconds to get the ball inbound prior to Gibson's winning shot.

—Oklahoma was upset 66-65 by Iowa State on Jon Ness' 20-foot jump shot with 44 seconds left but the Sooners, bidding for their first Big Eight title in 30 years, retained a one-game lead when runnerup Kansas State blew a five-point lead in the final five minutes and bowed to Missouri 67-63.

—Central Michigan whipped Ohio University 80-62 and took over sole possession of first place in the Mid-American Conference when Toledo lost to Miami of Ohio 72-68 in overtime. At the other end of the standings, cellar-dwelling Western Michigan lost to Bowling Green 99-86 and Coach Dick Shiltz was informed his contract would not be renewed.

—Wayne Robinson's 22 points helped Virginia Tech beat West Virginia 73-61 and James Ray had 28 as Jacksonville downed South Carolina 79-68.

—Two of New England's best teams won handily. Rhode Island, 19-6, trounced Baltimore 98-61 behind Shy Williams' 21 points and Ernie Cobb scored 25 points and Joe Beaulieu added 24 as Boston College, 21-7, drubbed Boston University 99-84.

—In the Southwest Conference, Billy Allen, the coach's son, scored 23 points as Southern Methodist beat Texas Christian 89-77 and earned a sixth-place tie.

However, said Coach Sonny Allen, "The win gives us momentum going into the playoffs and anything can happen."

After all, there ain't no more upsets.

Duke Only Top 20 Loser

Marriage Makes Pro Tour Tough

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) — The thing about being an "old married lady," says 22-year-old Nancy Lopez, is you worry more about hamburgers and bologna than you do about your putting stroke.

"It's nice being married, but it's tougher," said the vivacious starlet of the ladies' pro golf tour. "You just naturally worry about your husband. I'm not too concerned about Tim getting enough sleep — he works 'til midnight. I worry about his getting enough to eat."

"He eats too much bologna. He's always going to those fast food places and gorging himself on junk. He's big on McDonald's — loves hamburgers and French fries. I'm not much of a cook, but I'm learning. When I'm at home, I see he gets steak and meat loaf — something that will stick to his ribs."

Lopez, a bride of six weeks, was in New York Wednesday to add to her bulging bank account and cache of trophies and she talked effusively about her dual role as housewife and sports competitor.

Sensation of the 1978 Ladies Professional Golf Association, winner of nine tournaments and a record $189,813, she ended a whirlwind courtship on Jan. 6 by marrying Tim Melton, a Harrisburg, Pa., TV commentator, whom she had first set eyes on six months before.

They met at the Lady Keystone Classic in Hershey, Pa., — the tournament that snapped Nancy's five-tournament winning streak.

They were married in a log cabin church in Medford Lakes, N.J., the home of the bridegroom's parents, and then they whisked off for a week's honeymoon in Hawaii.

"We played only six holes of golf," Lopez said. "It rained most of the time we were there."

Although Melton is a trim athletic specimen — 6-foot-3 and 210 pounds — Nancy has to spot him strokes on the golf course. He is a 20-handicap, and that's fudging a bit.

Lopez was in New York to receive the Seagram Seven Crowns of Sports Trophy and an accompanying $10,000 check. The golf award is based on computer rankings. Lopez beat out Jane Blalock and JoAnne Carner.

She says she's put on eight pounds, but weight isn't the main problem for the young golfing whiz from Roswell, N.M., who in her first two starts of the new season lost in the first round of the Triple Crown Match Play Championship in Palm Springs, Calif., and finished in a tie for ninth last week in a tournament in Miami.

"My right arm bothers me — it's a strained muscle or something. The doctors are looking at it," she said. "But my trouble at Miami was my putting. I missed two-foot putts. That's something I never do. Putting is my game."

Nancy said she plans to cut down on her tournament schedule, playing no more than 20 events compared with 25 last year, in order to spend more time with her husband and avoid competitive fatigue.

"I put too much pressure on myself last year," she said. "I tried to do too much after I got going on that winning streak. By the time I got to Hershey I was dead tired. I don't want that to happen again."

"I don't want to be away from Tim too long at a stretch. Only once during the year do I play three tournaments in a row. Also, it's important that I keep myself mentally sharp."

Maravich To Sit Out Year

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — All-star guard Pete Maravich says New Orleans' sorry 19-42 record contributed a lot to his decision to sit out the rest of the National Basketball Association season with an injured left knee.

"If we were 42-19 and in the midst of the playoffs, I'd chance the odds," Maravich said following the announcement Wednesday that he would immediately begin rehabilitating the knee for next season. "But now, it's ludicrous to play on it anymore."

Maravich tore ligaments in the knee while making a fancy, between-the-legs pass against Buffalo on Jan. 31, 1978. Although he underwent surgery last spring, he played in 41 Jazz games and the NBA All-Star game this year but had to wear a two-pound brace on his knee.

During the 1978-79 season, Maravich scored his 15,000th career point and he now ranks 17th in NBA scoring.

"My right knee has atrophied some more — another half inch," he said. "That makes the left an inch and a half smaller than the right knee. I lack the muscle structure to support the knee, and there's a great degree of possibility something else could go wrong."

Maravich said waiting until May 1978, to have the operation probably kept him from reaching peak condition last year. And he said playing in three games while New Orleans still had a shot at the playoffs probably compounded the problem because his knee ballooned with fluid each time he played.

"I shouldn't have come back at all to play those three games," he said. "It was idiotic on my part. I don't know what goes through an athlete's mind — facing the lions no matter what the circumstances are."

He said the decision to sit out the remainder of the NBA season came after a meeting Tuesday with Dr. Ken Saer, an orthopedic surgeon.

"They just felt it would be best to rehabilitate my knee," he said.

Kings Ride Ford To Win Over Milwaukee

By The Associated Press
How bad are the Kansas City Kings with new rookie sensation Phil Ford?

"The first two minutes of the fourth quarter he was on the bench and we didn't get a shot. That's how bad we are without Phil Ford," Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said Wednesday night.

Luckily, Ford played 44 minutes in the Kings' 133-117 rout of the Milwaukee Bucks and, when he wasn't scoring 26 points, handed out 22 assists, matching the club record set by Oscar Robertson in 1961 and again in 1966 when the Kings were the Cincinnati Royals.

In other National Basketball Association action, the New Jersey Nets shocked the Phoenix Suns 123-112, the Detroit Pistons knocked off the Philadelphia 76ers 106-99 in overtime, the Seattle SuperSonics edged the New Orleans Jazz 96-94, the Boston Celtics nipped the Golden State Warriors 101-97, the Atlanta Hawks crushed the Portland Trail Blazers 106-83 and the Denver Nuggets defeated the Indiana Pacers 114-109.

With Ford responsible for 70 of Kansas City's points, the Kings posted their 13th consecutive homecourt victory, the longest streak in the 31-year history of the franchise.

Nets 123, Suns 112
Bernard King and John Williamson scored 26 points apiece and New Jersey hit its first nine shots of the fourth quarter. Playmaker Eddie Jordan added 18 points, 12 assists and five steals for the Nets. Paul Westphal led the Suns with 25 points and Alvan Adams scored 24.

Pistons 106, 76ers 99
M.L. Carr hit two baskets to spark a 15-8 overtime barrage that provided Detroit with its fourth straight victory. A tip-in by Steve Mix with one second left in regulation time forced the extra period.

In the overtime, after Carr and Philadelphia's Maurice Cheeks exchanged baskets, the Pistons ran off four straight baskets by Bob Lanier, Carr, Leon Douglas and John Long to put the game out of reach. The Pistons finished with six men in double figures, topped by Long's 23 points and Carr's 20.

SuperSonics 96, Jazz 94
Gus Williams scored 20 points to lead Seattle over crippled New Orleans, which played without leading scorer Pete Maravich and Spencer Haywood. Williams scored 14 points in the third period when Seattle took control. New Orleans was led by Jim McElroy's 37 points and 29 from Aaron James.

Celtics 101, Warriors 97
Player-coach Dave Cowens sent Boston ahead on a 20-foot jump shot with 27 seconds remaining and finished with 20 points. The Celtics scored the last eight points after trailing 97-93 with 2:29 left. Cowens' jumper broke a 97-97 tie and Bob McAdoo made two free throws for Boston's final points.

Cowens, who benched himself and made McAdoo the starting center last week, played 36 minutes. He entered the game late in the first period after McAdoo drew his third personal foul.

Hawks 106, Trail Blazers 83
Wayne Rollins blocked a club record 12 shots and Terry Furrow led a balanced attack with 19 points. The Blazers played in the Hawks' practice uniforms because of a baggage mixup.

Portland's Maurice Lucas led all scorers with 29 points.

Nuggets 114, Pacers 109
David Thompson scored 30 points, including two key free throws, and Anthony Roberts had a season-high 17 points for Denver. Thompson connected on two foul shots with 2:25 left for a 105-102 lead and baskets by George McGinnis and Bobby Wilkerson helped Denver pull away.

Clemson Humbles Duke; Heels On Top

Wells Hits For Tigers

By GARY SEASE

Associated Press Writer

If it's lonely at the top, you won't hear any complaints from North Carolina Coach Dean Smith.

The Tar Heels took over sole possession of first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference Wednesday as Clemson humiliated sixth-ranked Duke 70-49 and knocked the Blue Devils from a tie for the league-leading spot.

"There ain't no more up-sets," said Clemson Coach Bill Foster, whose scrappy squad has licked both North Carolina and now Duke in noisy Littlejohn Coliseum. "Everybody can beat everybody else, and that's the way it was tonight."

To put Foster's comment in perspective, it's necessary to remember that Clemson was routed 83-58 last weekend in a visit to North Carolina State, the ACC's last-place team.

The victory assured the Tigers of at least a fifth-place finish in the league, and the loss by '21 points was the worst beating of Duke this season. The Blue Devils had lost five previous games by a combined total of only 19 points.

In another conference game, Larry Gibson sank a jump shot at the buzzer to hand Maryland a 54-53 decision over Wake Forest. Sophomore sensations Lee Raker and Jeff Lamp combined for 30 points to pace Virginia to a 44-40 victory over William & Mary.

Tonight's ACC schedule features N.C. State at North Carolina in a regionally televised contest that has taken on an added dimension with Duke's loss. Should the Wolfpack defeat North Carolina, another tie for first place would develop. A win by the Tar Heels would solidify their grip on first place.

Clemson, which improved to 17-8 overall and 5-7 in the ACC, used a delay offense with the nifty name of the "Tiger Pause" midway through the first half, and the Blue Devils were unable to speed up the tempo.

The Tigers, paced by Billy Williams' career-high 21 points, led by 16 points, 31-15, at intermission.

Duke, dropping to 19-6 and 8-3 in the ACC, was led by Mike Gminski's 13 points.

"We went to the pause offense because we were winning and it has been good to us the whole year," Foster said. "We didn't want to take anything but a layup or foul off it and were pretty patient with it."

Duke Coach Bill Foster agreed that Clemson's Tiger Pause cramped the Blue Devils' run-and-gun style.

"In the beginning, we felt like we wanted to get the ball going and we just failed to do so," Foster said. "We never got the tempo the way we like it."

In typical last-gasp style, Maryland snatched a victory from what seemed like the already closed and chewing jaws of defeat.

Larry Gibson sank a jump shot at the buzzer that bounced three times before falling through to give the Terps, 17-8 and 6-5, the triumph. But Maryland got a little help, including Guy Morgan's cold hand at the free-throw line where he missed his last three shots, the final one with three seconds remaining.

Wake Forest fell to 12-13 and 3-8.

"We've got 17 wins now and we've beaten five nationally ranked teams, so I hope we get national recognition now," Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell said in a pitch to the pollsters. "Wake Forest is a good basketball team — they are no slouches."

Lee Raker tossed in 16 points, including 12 in the first half, and Jeff Lamp, the ACC's leading scorer, added 14 to lead Virginia to a victory over a William & Mary squad that refused to surrender. Virginia, now 17-8, took the lead for good, 18-16, on a pair of free throws by Lamp, but William & Mary, now 9-16, challenged at every step and pulled to within three points with 4:45 left.

NCS Stars Top Awards

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State athletes have cornered the market on Amateur Athletic Union awards for the state this year with football star Ted Brown and women's basketball All-American Genia Beasley taking the top two trophies.

Swimmer Dan Harrigan made it three-of-four for the Wolfpack athletes by picking up an award. Duke's Ellison Goodall took the fourth award.

Brown and Beasley are the winner of the 1978 Teague Awards, which go to the top male and female athletes in the state each year. Harrigan is the winner of the Louis Fisher Award, while Goodall won the Willis Casey Award. The latter two awards annually go to outstanding members of AAU in the state.

'Big' No Longer Beautiful To Many Communities

By D'VERA COHN
United Press International
For many American communities, big is no longer beautiful. Towns and cities once romanced housing developers. Now many fend them off with regulations aimed at curbing growth.

"People are saying: 'We're overwhelmed. We want to stop this,'" said Bonnie Newman of the Forum on New Hampshire's Future, a private group spreading the growth control gospel.

One reason is basic economics: they don't want to pay for the new schools and sewers that development demands. Others hope to preserve the picturesque charm that lured the new arrivals in the first place.

The list of growth control communities stretches from Boulder, Colo., to Brookhaven, N.Y. Some limit the number of building permits they will issue annually. Others refuse to give water service. Still others require home builders to keep lots as large as two acres.

A 1975 University of North Carolina survey found 300 planning districts — cities, towns and regions — had enacted growth controls. Professor David Godschalk says the number has shot up since then.

"Growth management is something that's not going to go away," he said.

Growth controls are a child of the 1960s, born of rapid population shifts and the environmental movement. They also represent a change in values that added "quality of life" as a building block for the American dream.

Challenged in the 1970s by court suits, inflation and a stagnant economy, the limiting actions have been tempered, but upheld.

Nor are growth controls for everybody. Godschalk's survey found them most common in states like California and Florida, which have skyrocketing populations.

In New Hampshire, which has a population growth rate second only to Florida east of the Rockies, an estimated 50 communities voted on growth controls at town meetings last year.

Londonderry, N.H., has seen its population grow from 2,000 to 14,000 and taxes doubled in the past decade. Last year, Londonderry put a lid on the number of building permits it issues each year. Officials complained other services were being neglected to pay for new schools.

"It has put a tremendous burden on the taxpayer," Selectman Donald Babin said.

Boulder, Colo., tried to curb large developments in 1976 by limiting the number of building permits it issues annually. Boulder rewards developers who save the city money by giving bonus building permits to new housing located near existing services.

The San Francisco area community of Petaluma, whose pioneer growth control regulation is now a model, has set boundaries on how far it will extend municipal services.

Growth controls have also found a home in other thrifty-conscious New England towns that don't want to see volunteer fire departments and individual septic tanks replaced by salaried full-time firemen and costly sewer systems.

The environmental movement also contributed to the ranks of no-growth advocates.

Increasing numbers of communities in Suffolk County, on the eastern end of New York's Long Island, have enacted stiff regulations setting minimum lot sizes for homes. The area has virtually no sewers, and officials claim new growth will endanger the water supply in the nation's fastest-growing county.

"We just finished a study for the Environmental Protection Agency, and it showed that the water quality is being impaired

Sod House Has Its Advantages

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — When Jurgen Petersen built his house, he wanted it to "fit into the land." It does.

His house is built into the back of a hill and sports a sod roof.

All the unknowing eye sees on the road near Chapel Hill is a slightly elevated lawn, marked by a stovepipe and what looks like a large, modern playhouse.

The playhouse is actually Petersen's entryway, and the living quarters are down a flight of stairs. The back wall is glass.

"You feel as if there is no world outside," Petersen said. "Everything is in here."

"Even at night, you cannot here any noises from the road," said his wife, Elfriede.

Petersen, who is originally from Denmark, designed and built the house himself. He called in only a few key professionals — an electrician, a plumber and a plasterer. He had to hire a crane and operator to lift the house's 100 massive oak beams into place. The project took over two years.

Petersen wanted the sod roof because of its soundproofing and insulating qualities. Because the earth stays at a fairly constant temperature of 55 degrees, having an entire wall built into a hillside provides insulation that no amount of cellulose can match.

"We noticed last summer that it never went above 78 degrees in here," Mrs. Petersen said.

Since they moved in Feb. 4, Petersen said, the furnace has not come on once during the daytime. To decrease even nighttime use of the furnace, Petersen is installing an airtight wood-burning stove in the main room. "A fireplace is to sit around. It won't heat the house," he said.

The house also uses several passive solar devices for winter warmth and summer cool. The floor of earth-covered Mexican tile absorbs sunlight and retains the warmth even after sunset, Petersen said.

Except for one cinderblock retaining wall built into the hillside, the house is constructed entirely of wood.

Land May Be Uncle Sam's

ANGELS CAMP, Calif. (AP) — A Mark Twain story about a champion jumping frog put Calaveras County on the map, but now some folks here are a touch jumpy over a matter of who owns the land on the map.

Because a mining company failed to file patents on land, it seems the federal government may own the main drag of this Northern California mining community and nearby Alta-ville.

Atop the land sits City Hall, two churches, dozens of businesses, the city swimming pool and a statue of Mark Twain.

Bertha Walsh, a grandmother who operates an auto supply store on Main Street, says citizens ought to ignore the issue.

"After a 100 years, is Uncle Sam going to pull the land from under me? I've got squatter's rights," she said.

Dick Wilmshurst discovered the dilemma when he commissioned a surveyor to examine a lot he thought he owned and learned he didn't hold title to the property.

"Since then, I've discovered that my used car and new car sales lots are on public land, too," he said.

This week, Angel Camp's 3,000 residents are to discuss proposed legislation that would transfer title to some 50 property owners involved.

been no noticeable growth boom.

"We're afraid we might become a target for developers because neighboring towns have recently voted to increase their lot sizes," town clerk Roger Medbury said.

Longhini and Godschalk agree the more extreme growth controls — like a Boca Raton, Fla., cap on population that's been overturned in court and is now under appeal — will not survive economic realities.

They see the growth control advocates of the future as brokers, negotiating with developers to tone down their demands. Litchfield, N.H., recently traded approval of a housing development for the builder's promise to put in a road.

"On a piecemeal basis — orderly growth management — there may be some success," said Longhini. "There will be a success but it won't be total."

San Francisco area builder

But many courts have upheld controls that are backed up by well-documented long-range development plans and don't pull up the drawbridge against all newcomers.

"A quiet place where yards are wide, people few and motor vehicles restricted are legitimate guidelines," William O. Douglas wrote in a widely quoted 1974 U.S. Supreme Court opinion.

Some planners argue growth controls are doomed by economics.

"Two or three years ago, growth control was in," said Gregory Longhini of the American Planning Association. "Now inflation is in."

"If you're going to control growth in a community, it's almost like you're imposing your own recession on your economic base. There are powerful economic interests that are going to lose by this."

Others argue controls push housing costs up by restricting the supply.

A Santa Barbara, Calif., think tank recently charged coastal towns rushing to enact growth controls were ignoring the area's economic job base.

Southern New Hampshire has an estimated 2,000 job vacancies, many for skilled technical workers. Employers complain they can't fill the jobs because of a manpower shortage caused by growth controls on housing in nearby towns.

"They've brought all this industry in there and now the industry can't get the labor," former Gov. Hugh Gregg said. Then there's the problem of what happens when growth suppressed in one town spills over into another.

Rural Scituate, R.I., in December imposed a six-month ban on new subdivision construction even though there has Don Cartwright says some enthusiastic no-growthers of a few years back now are taking a second look.

"Some of those people are starting to realize you can't be all one-sided," he said. "You have to have places where people can live. We still have our share of problems, but they're not as bad as they were."

Common Conceptions On Common Cold Often Err

By KEVIN MCKEAN
AP Science Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Every-body's grandmother had advice on how to avoid or treat colds. Here are some common conceptions about colds and the evidence for or against them.

Cold weather causes colds. Studies in the arctic and in the tropics have failed to find a clear connection between mild respiratory viruses and extremes of climate or temperature. Researchers now think colds occur most often during the winter because that's when people are forced indoors where they can infect each other.

—You can catch cold by going out without a hat, failing to wear overshoes, getting soaked, overheated, and so forth.

Lab studies also fail to confirm these common beliefs. But doctors agree the physiological changes associated with stress help bring on infections. So if these are stressful situations, perhaps they do cause colds after all.

—The best way to avoid a cold is to stay away from people who already have them. Undoubtedly true but trickier than it seems. People who get colds are infectious to others for about a day before they show any symptoms. And scientists aren't sure how much contact is needed to pass a cold.

For example, in one University of Wisconsin study testing whether married couples could give each other colds, the infection was never passed if a couple spent less than 122 hours a week together. Any couple separated from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. five days a week are spending only 118 hours together.

—A hot toddy helps a cold.

One cold remedy is called the "two hat cure." The prescription is: hang your hat on the bedpost, get into bed with a bottle of your favorite spirits and drink until you see two hats. This is guaranteed to cure all symptoms until the following morning. Unfortunately, there is no cure for the "cure."

—Stuff a cold, starve a fever.

This old English proverb is often misread as meaning you should eat when you have a cold and refrain when you have a fever. But language experts think the proverb was corrupted over the years and its original meaning was, "If you stuff yourself during a cold, you will die (starve) with a fever." They think the modern use of the word "starve" is a corruption of the Old English verb "steorfan," meaning "to die." In either case, the proverb seems to fly in the face of good medical advice because eating enough to maintain good nutrition helps the body fight infections.

—The best treatment for a cold is aspirin, fluids and bed rest.

This is still the standard advice and it makes a lot of sense — especially the bed rest. Aspirin cuts pain and fever, if any, and fluids may help thin congestion. But some doctors think a fever is therapeutic since cold viruses like to grow best at relatively cool temperatures. Moreover, some doctors recommend against aspirin because it increases the rate at which virus is shed in the mucus and may make you more contagious to others.

—Vitamin C.

Dr. Linus Pauling says a massive dose of ascorbic acid, or Vitamin C, helps stave off colds and cuts their symptoms. Most physicians don't agree. But some researchers have noted a brief dip in the ascorbic acid level of white blood cells when a virus infection first sets in. This may be why some people swear by the practice of taking massive doses of Vitamin C when they feel a cold coming on.

—Cod liver oil.

This is rich in Vitamin A, which the body needs in any infection. But most people who took it as children are glad cod liver oil doesn't still enjoy the same popularity as a cold remedy.

—A hot bath, hot herbal tea or hot chicken soup.

These make you feel better and may even be medically helpful. One group of researchers compared the effect of hot liquids on colds and found that chicken soup helped the most. In general, a hot liquid or bath helps you relax, raises your body temperature and help white blood cells reach the site of the infection faster.

—Ignoring a cold and going to work.

This is possible with a cold when you are not very sick. But if you have something, it is a no-win proposition — you can't infect coworkers if you're home in bed, but you can be terribly infectious to your family.

Parties On 'Happy Bus'

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The folks who travel to and from work on Bus Route 46, between St. Paul and suburban Apple Valley, say there's a constant party on their "happy bus."

"We know everybody else's business," says Jaci Ronay, 31, from Apple Valley, a legal secretary in St. Paul.

One patron, a housewares dealer, says she's peddled her products to other riders. Others claim they've sold grapefruit, cookies and pecans during the 50-minute ride.

Passengers exchange magazines, tell jokes and complain about the weather and the Minnesota Vikings.

With all that frivolity, commuters waiting at stops at Rosemount and Mendota Heights can almost hear the uproar as the bus emerges from the dark and pulls into view.

There's only one bus a day into St. Paul, the one leaving Apple Valley at 6:45 a.m. on the 21-mile trip. Ms. Ronay says if regular patrons don't show up one morning, "They have to bring a signed note the next time."

The Metropolitan Transit Commission rotates drivers periodically and the bus patrons help new drivers learn Route 46.

"We get new drivers every eight weeks, so I sit up front and act as navigator," says Vern Ewell, 39, who gets on the bus at the beginning of the route and rides it to his railroad job in St. Paul.

At 3:50 each afternoon, the Route 46ers gather at a downtown St. Paul bus stop for the trip home. Once when the bus was early and only a few people got on, the patrons persuaded the driver to go back to the Minnesota Capitol for those who missed the bus at the route start because it was early.

Before he moved to Rosemount, Larry Day took a Minneapolis-to-St. Paul bus to work. "Nobody would talk to anybody," recalls Day, 30. Recently, after his wife gave birth to a baby, Day was toasted by fellow riders on the "happy bus."

There are countless other advantages to the familiarity. If someone forgets a package, it's usually still on the bus the next day. And if a rider is dozing when he should leave the bus, other riders wake him in time.

Lesser Pleas Accepted To Prevent Testimony

ELIZABETHTON, Tenn. (AP) — To prevent four teenage girls from testifying about their rapes on the Appalachian Trail last summer, five men were allowed to plead guilty to criminal sexual conduct charges.

Coleman Ramsey, a district attorney general's office investigator, said Wednesday the pleas also were bargained to avoid a lengthy trial.

The girls, aged 16 and 17 from well-to-do Raleigh, N.C. families, will testify briefly without cross-examination at a Criminal Court hearing Monday before the men, all from the Roan Mountain area of Carter County, are sentenced.

"We talked with the girls' families at great length and they concurred on the plea bargains," prosecutor David Crockett said. "We're going to put on some proof Monday, mainly for the judge to determine whether the sentences should be consecutive or concurrent."

At an August hearing, the girls said the men came to their campsite near the North Carolina border June 15 and that they were repeatedly raped and forced at gun-point to have oral sex with men wearing handkerchiefs over their faces. One girl said she became pregnant during the three-hour assault and had an abortion.

Four of the men, three of whom are brothers, were to have been tried next Monday and the judge was to have ruled Wednesday on their motions to delay the trial and move it to another county.

David Jones, 22, who signed a confession, was to be tried in June. He pleaded guilty to first-degree criminal sexual conduct and two charges of second-degree criminal sexual conduct. Prosecutors recommended a 10-year sentence on the first charge and 4-10 year terms on the others.

The Legislature remodeled the state's sexual offenses laws last year and there no longer is a specific rape charge. First-degree criminal sexual conduct occurs when there is penetration against a woman's will. Second-degree covers fellatio and fondling against her will.

Billy Ray Johnson, 20, pleaded guilty to four first-degree charges with a recommended sentence of 15 years on each.

John Oakes, 42, pleaded guilty to two first-degree charges with a recommended sentence of 12 years on each. Gregory Oakes, 26, pleaded guilty to one first-degree charge a recommended sentence of 15 years. He also pleaded guilty to a charge of shooting into a tavern in an unrelated case last year with a recommended sentence of one year. Jerry Oakes, 24, pleaded guilty to two first-degree sexual misconduct charges with a recommended sentence of 15 years each. He also pleaded guilty to escaping the Carter County Jail last November with a recommended one-year sentence.

Crockett said charges of armed robbery and aiding and abetting sex crimes were dropped in exchange for the pleas.

previous day. Bills have been introduced in both the Senate and house to prevent funding by the State. There is considerable sentiment in the General Assembly against using tax funds for this purpose. Even last year only five votes kept such funding in the budget. There is a distinct possibility that the opponents to such an appropriation by the State might be able to remove this item of $2 and $3 million from the proposed budget.

See you next week.

To Decide Campus Union Role

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court has agreed to study a legal question the government says will go far in determining the role of labor unions on college campuses.

The justices said Wednesday they will hear a case in which the National Labor Relations Board and a teachers group seek permission for Yeshiva University's faculty members to form a union.

A federal appeals court last year ruled that the New York City school's 209 full-time faculty members held supervisory and managerial responsibilities and therefore are not covered by federal labor law.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said, "The issue here is the extensive control of Yeshiva's faculty over what courses are taught in the institution, who teaches them, the number of teaching hours required of the faculty, and the rank, salary and tenure status of other faculty members."

In overturning an NLRB order that had allowed the Yeshiva University Faculty Association to represent the faculty members in collective bargaining, the appeals court added, "When faculty members have such power...they are, in effect, substantially and per-vatively operating the enterprise."

The NLRB's Supreme Court appeal contends that the lower court ruling has created "uncertainty as to whether faculty bargaining units at other educational institutions are entitled" to exist.

If the appeals court decision is allowed to stand, government lawyers argued, "the stability of numerous established bargaining relationships" may be jeopardized.

Yeshiva, a four-year private university with 2,500 students attending four New York campuses, contends that its organizational set-up is unique because faculty members have more control over a wide variety of university affairs than at most schools. The appeals court ruling would have no effect on other universities or colleges, lawyers for Yeshiva claim.

Among other action taken by the nation's highest court Wednesday:

—It agreed to decide whether court-appointed lawyers, who defend poor persons charged with crimes may be sued for negligence by their clients.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled that lawyers in such circumstances cannot be sued. If that ruling is reversed, poor persons would gain enhanced legal rights, but courts could find it difficult persuading lawyers to serve as appointed counsel for the poor.

—Refused to enter a two-year legal fight over who enjoys the right to sell Elvis Presley posters. The justices left intact a federal court injunction that bars the Pro Arts poster company from selling a color poster of the late rock-and-roll star.

—Agreed to decide, in a case meaning millions of dollars to state treasuries and much to the financial independence of the nation's Indian reservations, whether state taxes may be imposed on items sold on reservations to non-Indians.

Find Sheriff Guilty On Corruption Count

By LORI COOKE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Wilson County Sheriff Robin Pridgen, convicted Wednesday on corruption charges in U.S. District Court, was scheduled to go on trial today, on charges of conspiracy to obstruct laws regarding gambling operations.

Pridgen and Wilson County Chief Deputy Tony Owens have been indicted on the charges by a federal grand jury.

Pridgen and Rudolph Baker were found guilty Wednesday by a jury of six men and six women after three hours and 15 minutes of deliberations.

The jury convicted Pridgen of violating federal anti-racketeering laws by accepting bribes to protect gambling and prostitution operations in Wilson County. He was also convicted of submitting false income tax returns. Baker was found guilty of conspiracy to violate anti-racketeering laws.

The jury also returned special verdicts against Pridgen and Baker. The verdicts make Pridgen's office as sheriff and Baker's interest in the Bel-Air Truck Stop subject to forfeiture. Assistant U.S. Attorney Jack Crawley said he did not know the procedure for taking the office away from Pridgen.

Pridgen did not speak to reporters after the verdict. His daughter, Bess Mercer, sobbed loudly as the verdict was read and during a polling of the jury. Each member of the jury said they found Pridgen and Baker guilty on all counts. Other members of the Pridgen family sobbed and embraced one another.

Outside the courtroom, Mrs. Mercer pounded on a wall as friends urged her to control herself.

Pridgen's attorney, J. Russell Kirby, said he had not decided on whether to appeal the verdict.

Baker said he was convinced after the verdict that "you can't get a fair federal jury — no way. This is the third time this has happened to me. They don't go for the facts — they're afraid the Internal Revenue Service or somebody will investigate them."

Dupree did not say when he would sentence the two. Pridgen faces 20 years in jail and a $25,000 fine on the racketeering charges and 18 years in jail and up to $30,000 in fines on the income tax charges. Baker faces 20 years and $25,000 in fines.

The verdict came in the seventh day of the trial after Crawley told the jurors in his final arguments that the atmosphere in Wilson County was being affected by the houses of prostitution which operated there.

"Deputies in uniform said they got free dates with prostitutes," Crawley said. "The sheriff's son said he visited these places. Sheila Smith, at the tender age of 16, was brought in to work and collected money for the madam."

In his summation to the jury, Kirby said Pridgen was in the situation of Christ before Pilate, when Pilate brought Christ and the thief Barabbas before a crowd and asked them to choose one to be freed.

"The Barabbases have already been turned loose," Kirby said, referring to witnesses who received immunity in return for their testimony.

Crawley said later that he found more similarity between the case and a different Biblical episode. He read a portion of the New Testament to the jurors in which Judas visited the high priest and arranged to betray Christ for 30 pieces of silver. "The 30 pieces of silver passed hands in Wilson County," Crawley said.

Crawley told jurors they might be concerned that prostitutes and operators of houses of prostitution were the main witnesses against Pridgen. But he added, "What other kind of people would be involved in this sordid mess? We could not bring you ministers, priests and rabbis."

He said witnesses such as Carol Mangum Ruffin, who said she was a madam of a prostitution operation at the Rainbow Court Motel, had nothing to gain by testifying against the sheriff.

"It was all over for her," Crawley said. "She said she paid her dues. Do you think it was easy for her to come in here and testify that four years ago she was convicted of running a prostitution operation?"

Crawley also referred to testimony by Barry Ruffin, co-owner of the Rainbow Court and Mrs. Ruffin's husband, that he called the sheriff's office when FBI agent John Martin showed up at his establishment.

"How much bolder and more brazen could a prostitution operation be than when an FBI agent shows up, you call the sheriff to run him off?" Crawley asked. "The magnitude of it was overwhelming."

Defense attorney John Clark of Wilson attacked the credibility of many of the government's witnesses. He said Gerald Frazier, who testified about activities at the Forest Inn, "might get out of this completely" in return for his testimony.

Sula O'Barr, who said she was the madam at the Forest Inn, "started the whole mess," Clark said.

Clark said Mrs. O'Barr would do anything to get Gerald Frazier and had admitted that she disliked him and once shot him. "She just wanted a captive audience," Clark said. "No one would listen if she just talked about Gerald Frazier, so she had to bring Sheriff Pridgen into it."

"There are houses of prostitution all over the state of North Carolina," Clark said. "Why should people have to come to Wilson? It's not so special," Clark said that Mrs. Ruffin testified to protect her husband so he would not have to return to prison on a parole violation. He said her testimony was part of a deal with the federal government to protect Ruffin.

Pre-Registering Ends Friday

Friday, Feb. 23, is the last day for preregistration for special meetings on estate planning to be held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service office.

The Monday meeting will be held at 7 p.m., with Tuesday's meeting to be held at 2 p.m. The final session will be held Wednesday at 9:30 a.m.

Charles McLawhorn Jr., a local attorney who has specialized in estate taxes, will discuss estate planning for farm families. Mrs. Jean Stanford, a local insurance agent, will discuss how life insurance fits into estate planning.

Interested persons should call the Extension office, 758-1196, to pre-register, according to Evelyn L. Spangler, home economics extension agent.

Offer Classes In Parenting

The Pitt Co. Mental Health Center Children's Services will begin a series of classes on parenting skills Feb. 27.

Dr. Omar Dye, Coordinator of Children's Services, said the sessions will span 10 weeks, with the initial meeting being orientation. Registration fee is $5. Cost of the course workbook is $3.50. Only one fee will be charged when two persons of the same family take this, he added.

Dye said part is a course designed by Dr. Richard Abidin of the University of Virginia "created in the belief that parents can be assisted in the task of raising their children by adding to the skills and knowledge they already possess." Parents, expectant parents and others who are interested are invited, he said.

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY, FEB. 23, 1979.

Your Daily HOROSCOPE

from the CARROLL RIGHTER INSTITUTE

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You are under unusually good influences to add modern and up-to-date formulas and inventions to whatever your occupation happens to be. Be on the alert for improvements at your vocational outlet. Evening is not good for taking any chances.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Look for support from a community leader and better your position in life considerably. Don't take any risks in the evening.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) You have fine ideas so be sure to put them in operation to your benefit. Make an excellent contact during the day.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Carry through with promises made to others and gain good will, benefits. A loved one will cooperate with your plans during the day, but not tonight. Be careful in motion.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You can carry on intelligently if you know exactly what partners expect of you, and then all works out smoothly. A problem arises, but you are able to handle it well.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Get into the work ahead of you and clear the slate for more important activity in the offing. Kin can be very cooperative during the day but be careful of arguments in the evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Be more willing to go along with amusements suggested to you by good friends. Find better ways of getting your creative ideas across.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Study your home surroundings and see how best to make it more functional and attractive. A new interest arises that has fine potential.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Fine day to get the information you need so that you can improve daily routines. Clear your desk of odds and ends. Drive carefully.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Show you are practical where finances and property are concerned, and add to present abundance. Set up a better budget that is more workable. Avoid that tendency to drive too fast.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Go after your most cherished aims and get good results during the day, but take it easy in the evening. Enjoy group affairs.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Ideal day to make plans for carrying on with practical affairs more intelligently and profitably. Be wary of newcomers.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Know exactly what your personal aims are and how best to attain them. Get good ideas from friends during day, too. Evening is best spent at home.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will do well in government work, or in connection with large corporations, dealing with the public, etc. Teach the importance of discipline early in life. Stress arithmetic. Permit to participate in healthful sports early.

If Somebody Out There Is Watching: Patience

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — I read a story in the paper the other day about a man who believes beings on other planets are monitoring our radio and television broadcasts. The guy's argument made sense.

He says scientists believe the closest planets likely to harbor intelligent life are about 25 light years away from Earth. Thus, it would take 25 years for our broadcast waves to reach one or more of these planets.

Now, if our early radio broadcasts did indeed reach some alien ears, we'd just now be getting the reviews. Twenty-five years there, 25 years back. Talk about the dubious powers of a critic.

Consider what our friends in space might have said in 1973 when, after 25 years or so of radio broadcasts, they started getting different signals. "Hm, I see Earth has finally discovered television," Alien Smith might have said to Alien Jones. "Let's see what's on down there."

Uncle Miltie, Philco Playhouse, John Cameron Swayze. Good enough fare to keep our friends interested in TV. Right now, space viewers are in the middle of a new TV season (which was the 1954 season on Earth).

They probably have their favorite shows. Maybe even TV Guide.

"I like this 'Tonight Show,'" Jones might say to Smith. "That Steve Allen is really a card."

"He's okay," Smith replies, "but I much prefer 'People Are Funny.' Art Linkletter gets earthlings to do the queerest things. Then he gives them something called money and they enter a highly excitable state."

"Yes, he's good, and people are indeed funny," agrees Jones. "But there's a new show this season that I don't quite follow. It's called 'The Army-McCarthy Hearings.' A big oaf plays a mean-spirited senator who bullies people and keeps shouting, 'Communist! Communist!' And he's not even a very good actor."

"Well, there's no accounting for the tastes of primitives," replies Smith. "I suppose you've noticed they have two shows this season that are centered around the lives of domesticated creatures called dogs. 'Lassie' and 'Rin Tin Tin.'"

"Yes, it does seem strange, but little Jane and Dick are crazy about those programs. They also like the new show about that magical kingdom on Earth, 'Disneyland.' Say, Smith, do you suppose that earthlings make some television programs especially for their infants?"

"Sometimes, I think all their shows are made for their infants." An unkind cut, Mr. Alien Fiore, especially considering that the programs you're receiving now are products of our television "Golden Years." Wait till 25 years from now, when you start receiving what we're getting now.

Humane Society Officers Named

New officers of the Pitt County Humane Society were elected Saturday.

The officers are Elizabeth Savage, president; Jeanette Fiore, vice president; Marion Frost, recording secretary; Margaret Humenay, corresponding secretary; and Evelyn Beasley, treasurer.

Mrs. Lorraine Graff attended and was signed up as a new member. Ralph Cottam was named membership chairman. Mrs. Fiore will continue her work with adoptions and investigations, it was decided. Miss Beasley will continue in charge of the spaying program and Dr. Emily Farnham will be in charge of telephone contacts with members. Additional posts will be assigned to members desiring to assist.

Joining Jazz Event

CHAPEL HILL — The J. H. Rose High School Jazz Band will participate with ten other bands across the state at a high school jazz festival Saturday, Feb. 24, at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The second annual festival, sponsored by the UNC-CH department of music, will feature such Matteson, nationally recognized jazz artist from North Texas State University.

Matteson, who plays jazz euphonium, valve trombone, tuba and piano, will serve as clinician for the workshops.

The public is invited to attend all sessions of the festival, which will be held in Hill Hall auditorium. There will be performances by the high school bands at 8:15 a.m., open rehearsal with Matteson and the UNC-CH Jazz Band at 11 a.m., an improvisation clinic at 1 p.m., and an evening concert by the UNC-CH Jazz Band at 8 p.m.

The J. H. Rose Jazz Band is directed by Jim Rodgers.

Hasty Pudding Honors Actor

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Lamenting that no pudding came with the pot, film star Robert DeNiro said he was pleased anyway to receive the man-of-the-year award from the nation's oldest dramatic organization.

Hasty Pudding Theatricals, a Harvard University undergraduate organization founded in 1844, on Wednesday gave a gold-colored pudding pot to DeNiro, who has appeared in "The Deer Hunter," "New York, New York," "Taxi Driver" and "Godfather II."

When DeNiro accepted the award, he said he was having a good time, but "the only thing I'm a little unhappy about is that there's no pudding inside. But, thanks anyway."

Colombia Big In Drugs, Counterfeiting

By DANIEL F. GILMORE

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Secret Service has sent a task force to Colombia which not only supplies most of the marijuana and cocaine in the United States, but leads all foreign counterfeiters of U.S. dollars.

Officials say the Secret Service group, which went South America without fanfare in January, will assist Colombian authorities who are moving in on both the drug traffic and counterfeiting.

The Secret Service, in addition to providing protection for the president and other officials, is charged with suppressing the counterfeiting of U.S. currency and securities. In fact, that is the reason it was founded in 1865.

"There has been a generally increasing upward trend in the dollar value of counterfeit notes being passed," one official said. Seventy percent is American-made, often by rank amateurs. But of the remainder printed abroad, 65 percent comes from Colombia alone.

Lesser counterfeit amounts come from Canada, the Far East and France.

Officials said they did not know exactly why Colombia topped the foreign counterfeiting list, "but we guess it's because of the high value of narcotics" coming from there.

Staggering amounts of money are clandestinely exchanged in the drug trade and some counterfeiting is almost inevitable. According to some estimates, Americans pay out up to $25 billion a year for marijuana alone.

The face value of bogus bills is only a tiny fraction of that amount but Secret Service officials said the Colombian connection in fake money "is our major problem."

Nevertheless, the Service—which operates under the Treasury Department—still seizes more counterfeit money before it circulates than is spotted by banks and alert store clerks after it is moving in the marketplace.

Agents seized $18,337,000 in fake dollars in fiscal 1978 before they could be circulated. Some of the bogus was still hot from the presses.

But $4,000,482 in counterfeit bills was passed and confiscated in the same period. Almost $1 million was foreign-made.

The last holder of a "hot" bill takes the loss. There's no reimbursement from the Treasury even if a citizen voluntarily turns in a fake bill.

Officials say the quality of counterfeit bills is getting no better, despite technological advances in copying machines and even color copiers and offset printing.

"There are no new techniques," an agent said. "There's been a lot of speculation and loose talk about office copying machines but what comes out of them just can't fool most people."

The exquisitely detailed bills produced by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the intricate seals and designs of U.S. bank notes and the unique quality and markings of the paper discourage good imitations.

"Over the years some paper was made in the Far East which was fairly deceptive," an official said, "but we believe we have identified the gentleman."

Most counterfeits are made by amateurs on second hand, off-set presses. The more professional know the trade and work secretly in the off-hours at legitimate printing houses when the boss and honest workers are not around.

An agent told a UPI reporter how he nabbed one middle-aged amateur in Los Angeles in 1972 who within seven days of taking out a library book on printing, was churning out counterfeits on an old press.

"He had $150,000 ready to go," the agent said with a trace of admiration. "And he hadn't even returned the library book."

Another Los Angeles loser confided to arresting agents that he obtained a superior ink for his counterfeits by lacing it with Jack Daniels.

Most counterfeiters still "age" their masterpieces by soaking them in coffee.

Some counterfeiters escape detection for lengthy periods because, unlike greedy colleagues out to push a quick million, they modestly print only enough to get by.

And contrary to what one might suspect, gambling casinos and such theme parks as Disney World where money circulates quickly are the worst places to try to float a counterfeit.

"They have highly trained people who can spot a counterfeit quicker than you can lay it down," an agent said.

Despite inflation, the $20 bill is still the counterfeiters' favorite model "but an increasing number of 50's are circulating—mostly foreign-made."

Although larger denominations up to $100,000 are still in circulation, only notes from $1 to $100 are being printed now.

"The 500's, 1,000's, 5,000's and 10,000's haven't been printed since 1969," an official said. The $10,000 bill now circulates only among banks although there probably are some stashed away in safe deposit boxes.

The manufacture of fake coins is just not worth the time and effort but counterfeiting of rare and precious coins sought by collectors is on the upswing. "Some of the fakes are quite good," officials said. And craftsmen in Lebanon fashion "genuine" gold replicas of $20 gold pieces, no longer in legal circulation in the United States, which often contain more gold than the face value.

There is even counterfeiting of U.S. postage stamps, engineered by disreputable mail order firms, but the volume is small.

Underground entrepreneurs have toyed with Social Security and U.S. Government checks but are generally discouraged with the placement of telltale computer punch holes and the stringent requirements for authentic identification before they can be cashed.

The Secret Service is worried about the counterfeiting of commercial securities because no federal statutes exist to control the faking of, say, IBM or General Motors paper.

And there is no way of knowing how much counterfeiting is going on in this area because the securities are often used as collateral for loans and can lie undetected in vaults and safes for up to 30 years.

Municipal Bonds

A 'Secret' To Some

INTERSTATE SECURITIES CORP.

Municipal bonds have played a major role in attaining for our country the highest standard of living in the world. Through the issuance of bonds, municipalities are able to build better schools, libraries, recreation facilities, streets, highways and many other betterments which provide us with ability to improve ourselves by way of the economic cycle. The construction of municipal improvements provides all types of workers with employment and income from which they can meet personal needs and luxuries. This is but a small part of the complex economic machinery and in short is the primary function of municipal bonds.

There are no deep secrets about municipal bonds. Still, hosts of people haven't bought them because they don't fully understand them. Anyone who pays an income tax and has some capital is a potential buyer. If an investor is in the low income tax brackets, a municipal can qualify as a long term safety backlog. If in the middle tax brackets, it can be a reservoir of ready capital, earning tax-free income while waiting for other investment opportunities. And, if in a high tax bracket, an investor would have to obtain a very high return on taxable investments to equal the yield on tax-free municipal bonds. (For instance, an investor in the 40 percent tax bracket would have to receive a 10 percent taxable return in order to equal a return of 6 percent on a tax-exempt municipal.)

Municipal bonds offer safety, diversification, and marketability almost on a par with U.S. Government Bonds. Even during the Depression, the total loss by default on all municipals outstanding was less than 2 percent, diversification is achieved geographically by state, by maturity (from one to thirty years), and by coupon rate (from 1/10 percent to 11 percent).

An individual's portfolio is much like his personality. Investments from person-to-person may range from purely speculative to ultra-conservative. Whatever the picture, in of medium to large portfolios, there is a definite place for municipal bonds. For example, the speculator may want high yield and relatively low quality. By the same token, the conservative investor may expressly want safety or principal, thereby being satisfied with slightly less yield. However, both types of investors may have a need for municipal obligations—tax-free income.

Ownership of tax free municipal bonds is most graphically illustrated by the fact that over 40 percent of the amount of bonds outstanding are owned by individuals and trust accounts. The importance of this figure points out that individuals in high income tax brackets are readily aware of the advantages gained, income-wise, by their participation in tax-free obligations.

Old Brands Not Missed.

—National Smoker Study

Research shows 14 out of 15 MERIT smokers find total "taste" satisfaction.

Low tar MERIT has proven that it delivers the flavor of high tar brands—but can it satisfy smokers long-term? A nationwide research effort confirms it.

Confirmed: 85% of MERIT smokers say it was an "easy switch" from high tar brands.

Confirmed: 9 out of 10 MERIT smokers not considering other brands.

Confirmed: Overwhelming majority of MERIT smokers say their former high tar brands weren't missed!

And in interviews conducted among current high tar smokers:

Confirmed: Majority of high

Kings: 8 mg "tar," 0.6 mg nicotine—
100's: 11 mg "tar," 0.7 mg nicotine av. per cigarette, FTC Report May '78

Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous to Your Health.

tar smokers rate MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading high tar cigarettes tested! Cigarettes having up to twice the tar.

Confirmed: Majority of high tar smokers confirm taste satisfaction of low tar MERIT.

This ability to satisfy former high tar smokers over a long period of time could be the most important evidence to date that MERIT is the first real taste alternative for high tar smokers.
