Trident Submarine USS Ohio Launched

By KATE McMAHON

GROTON, Conn. (UPI) — The U.S. Saturday launched the world's largest submarine — a huge underwater nuclear fortress capable of destroying 400 targets — as 3,000 anti-nuclear protesters demonstrated outside the plant.

Police arrested 229 demonstrators and charged them with disorderly conduct for allegedly blocking entrances to the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics plant where First Lady Rosalynn Carter and 12,000 spectators watched the christening of the first $1.2 billion Trident nuclear-attack submarine.

Those arrested on the misdemeanor charge were dragged and carried to school buses and police vans and booked at the Groton jail.

Police said 193 persons, including three juveniles, were released on their promises to appear in New London Superior Court on various dates. Thirty-six others refused to cooperate and were held on $500 bond pending court appearances Monday, police said.

Police had to use a large wire cutter to break heavy chains used to connect some demonstrators to the plant's gates and each other.

It was the largest number of arrests at an anti-nuclear demonstration in New England since 1,414 persons were charged at the construction site of a Seabrook, N.H., nuclear power plant in 1977.

The demonstrators protested the nuclear capabilities of the Trident, which is capable of leveling 408 targets with a nuclear blast five times as great as the atomic bomb which was dropped on Hiroshima, Japan, at the end of World War II.

They chanted and sang their opposition to the Trident — and to nuclear power in general. "This is like Harrisburg. It is uncontrollable. You can't stop it," one banner said.

But Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said during the launching that "The Trident class is a symbol of our strategic policies and our commitment to remain a naval power.

"All too often people fail to realize that global crises arise from political tensions. Armaments generally reflect rather than create these tensions. We christen this USS Ohio today to go in peace, to maintain peace, and pray that its awesome power will be a deterrent to any conflict in the future and will never be used," he said.

A small group of Yale University students held a counter-protest at the plant's gates, with freshman George St. Laurent of Orlando, Fla., saying the Trident was "a triumph of American ingenuity and crucial for American defense."

After Glenn's speech his wife, Annie, broke a bottle of champagne over the large metal sail of the Ohio, which was bedecked in red, white and blue bunting for the ceremony.

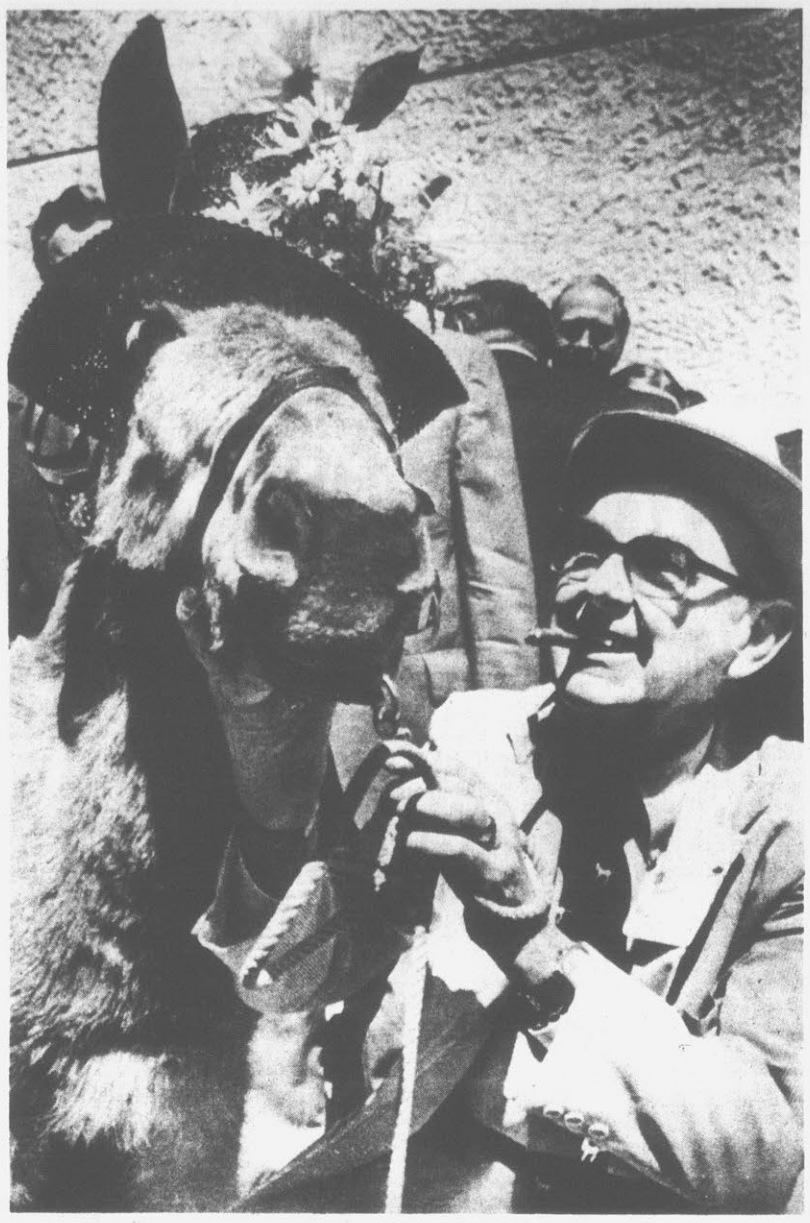

"In the name of the U.S., I christen thee Ohio. May God bless her and God speed all those who sail on her," Mrs. Glenn said.

The Ohio — the first of the nation's 30 Tridents — won't be combat-ready until 1981. The 18,750-ton, four-story tall Trident submarines are bigger than a destroyer.

The Ohio's launching, ironically, came the day after the Navy officially decided to decommission the USS Nautilus, the nation's first atomic powered submarine, which was built in Groton and is now berthed across the Thames River in New London.

After the Ohio was christened, Mrs. Carter donned a protective apron, heavy gloves and welders mask and welded her initials "RSC" into the keel of the USS Georgia, scheduled to be the fourth Trident.

Mrs. Carter was flown to the base on a helicopter and was never confronted by the demonstrators.

Parking, Dorm Fees Increases Approved By ECU Trustees Board

By LYNN CAVERLY
Reflector Staff Writer

The Board of Trustees of East Carolina University met Saturday in Mendenhall Student Center, giving approval to proposed increases in campus parking fees and dormitory rentals.

The parking fees proposal called for an increase from $10 to $25 for staff, faculty and student parking stickers, from $5 to $12 for night stickers, $10 to $12 for freshman stickers, and $2 to $12 for second vehicle stickers. Parking fees for the private lot on Fifth Street will increase from $90 to $108, per semester, it was proposed.

Glen R. Jernigan, chairman of the finance committee, said the increases in parking fees would provide for an additional $113,500 in net revenues needed to cover increases in salaries, expenditures for paving, equipment and a parking-needs study.

Increases in dormitory rental, Jernigan said, are needed to keep up with rising salary and utility costs and capital outlays. The total increases will amount to $260,000.

A motion to add 650 parking spaces near Minges Coliseum and Ficklen Stadium was approved by the board. As proposed by the Buildings and Grounds committee of the board, the $300,000 expenditure will be funded through proportionate amounts from the athletic department and collection of parking fees.

Among the highlights of the meeting was the recognition of resigning trustee K. Edward Greene. Greene was recently appointed to a judgeship and felt it was in the best interests of himself and the university to resign from his position on the board.

Chariman Troy Pate paid tribute to Greene, acknowledging his contributions during six years on the board.

Members of the Buildings and Grounds committee were appointed to meet with Tom Bradshaw, N.C. Secretary of Transportation, to discuss the continuing problem of pedestrian and highway traffic along Tenth Street.

The introduction of the official document relating the current standing between the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the University of North Carolina Board of Governors' plan for desegration in the state university system was made by Pate.

Jernigan was re-elected to a three-year term on the Board of Trustees of the Endowment Fund.

The Pirates Club received approval of their proposal to lease additional property adjacent to the present structure. This will allow the organization to increase their services and activities, subject to final approval by the university.

Staff reports included one by Dr. Edwin Monroe, vice chancellor for health affairs, on the recent deaths of two male students, and a cut in federal funds which will affect both the School of Medicine and the School of Nursing.

Chancellor Thomas B. Brewer received approval for letters of appreciation to be sent to several persons who are or will be retired from the university this year.

Abandons Uganda

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — President Idi Amin's Libyan allies, who sent an expeditionary force of 2,000 men to Kampala to try to rescue the east African dictator, have abandoned Uganda, carrying their dead with them, diplomatic sources said Saturday.

Communications with Kampala were cut early in the afternoon, apparently when the attacking armies blew up a microwave communications tower in the Ugandan capital carrying telephone and telex channels.

Focus On Hunt, Scott At State Demo Meeting

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — North Carolina Democrats flocked to Raleigh Saturday to participate in the party's annual Jefferson-Jackson Day and speculate on the possiblity former Gov. Robert W. Scott might challenge Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. for the party nomination next year.

While formal activities centered on an afternoon reception at the Governor's Mansion and a dinner at the Raleigh Civic Center featuring Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., the event was highlighted by the possiblity of a Democratic primary race involving Hunt, Scott and Lt. Gov. James C. Green.

Scott, who last week accused Hunt of backing away from his progressive record and practicing "the politics of retrenchment," attended the mansion reception and joked he had come to see if his portrait was still hanging in the front hall.

Scott passed up the reception line headed by Hunt. He said some of those at the mansion were "friends because they come up and say they really liked what I said. The rest just sort of pass the time of day and move on."

Most of those attending the annual spring celebration indicated they were fascinated by the possibility of Scott, governor from 1968 to 1973, running again but said they were still backing Hunt for re-election, although he has not announced his plans.

"I just wanted to get staked out early," said William Hodges, the Beaufort County Democratic Party chairman, who wore a "Re-elect Hunt" button.

Another Democrat, who asked not to be named, said he felt Scott hurt his political chances with an unsuccessful attempt to be named president of the state community college system.

"But a lot of people are talking about a three-way race next year and that could be real interesting. Hunt would still win but it would be interesting," he said.

More Executions In Iran

By SAJID RIZVI

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Former Prime Minister Amir Abbas Hoveyda, the shah's closest confident and the highest ranking prisoner of Ayatollah Khomeini's government, was executed by a firing squad Saturday after being secretly tried and convicted by an Islamic revolutionary court.

Hoveyda, prime minister for 13 years during which he was Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi's closest aide, was convicted of "battling against God" and of treason.

Radio Tehran, which had not mentioned the proceedings against Hoveyda since his trial resumed three days ago, announced his death Saturday night.

Hours later, unidentified attackers bombed a Tehran outpost manned by the ayatollah's "revolutionary guards," killing at least six persons in what appeared to be a reprisal for Hoveyda's execution.

The outpost, in the building that used to be the offices of the Lockheed Corp. before the exodus of Americans and American companies from Iran, was severely damaged, witnesses said.

In another attack, witnesses said two women driving a car opened fire on a guard outpost in east Tehran, wounding several persons. Islamic guards said later they thought both attacks may have been staged by Hoveyda supporters.

Hoveyda's execution followed by a few hours those of two generals and four key military officers as the Iranian revolutionary courts' summary trials resumed after a three-week lull.

It brought to 78 the number of known death sentences carried out since the takeover by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in mid-February. Sources close to Khomeini's office said more executions were on the way.

Tehran radio said Tehran's Islamic revolutionary court convicted Hoveyda of "battling against God" — a Koranic sin punishable by death — and of treason during his long premiership.

In Washington, the State Department said it deplored Hoveyda's execution and, in a carefully worded statement, questioned the legality of his secret trial.

Asked about Hoveyda's death, spokeswoman Anita Stockman said the State Department "has heard" of the action. Then she added:

"If true, we deeply regret and deplore, both on grounds of human rights and justice, the execution of Hoveyda following a secret trial in which he was apparently not allowed proper defense or the normal elements of due process and justice.

Hoveyda appealed for mercy and for time to consider his appeal, the radio said, indicating the appeals were rejected.

Hoveyda told the court he was a "tool of the system," the radio said, and had not pursued any policies for which he could be held responsible.

Hoveyda, once known for his flamboyance, last served the shah as the powerful minister of the imperial court. He was arrested last year in what was seen as an attempt by the shah to appease revolutionary forces.

There was no word on Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan's reaction to the latest executions. It was his intervention and protests which led to the framing of a written code of conduct for the courts.

Tehran's governor, Abol Hassan Dadvar, announced Saturday that elections to a constituent assembly, needed to ratify Khomeini's Islamic republic constitution, would take place within the next two months.

The arrests continue, meanwhile. Thirty-four more Iranians — ministers of the shah's last premier, Shahpour Bakhtiar, members of the defunct parliament and journalists — were arrested, according to reports published Saturday.

Among those seized was veteran journalist Dr. Mehdi Semsar, editor of the shah's official newspaper, the Rastakhiz, and Reza Amini, an Iranian employee of the International Communication Agency.

Among those executed early Saturday were Gen. Mohammad Javad Mowlawi Taleghani, former chief of Tehran police, Gen. Gholam Reza Iraj Amini-Afshar, former commander of the army aviation in Isfahan, and four officers accused of direct role in the "Black Friday" massacres in Tehran in September, when several thousand anti-shah demonstrators were killed.

Among charges against Amini-Afshar was a report that one of his subordinate officers kidnaped five wounded demonstrators from a hospital in Najafad after a riot, shot and killed them and burned their bodies.

Denies Report

The Etellant newspaper reported that revolutionary guards had arrested the ousted shah's younger sister, Princess Fatemeh Pahlavi. But Tehran radio and the princess, ex-husband, an American rancher, denied the report.

Budget Cuts Hit N.C. Med Schools

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Federal budget cuts by President Carter will be a severe blow to the financial status at North Carolina medical schools, according to school administrators.

Medical schools at Duke University and the University of North Carolina will receive losses amounting to $300,000 this year, according to school administrators. Next years' losses to the two schools are estimated at around $1.4 million.

As of Oct. 1, federal funds cut at UNC will amount to $170,000, while Duke will suffer a $130,000 cutback, school officials said.

A UNC spokesman said the price loss estimate does not include count funds received by the dental, nursing and pharmacy schools.

Also affected by the budget cuts were Bowman Gray School of Medicine at Wake Forest University and East Carolina University Medical School.

The cuts were made last week when the House and Senate passed legislation cutting $24 million in federal aid to medical schools across the nation.

$1,820 Million In Building Permits

Building permits totaling $1,820,757 were issued in Greenville during January, according to figures reported by N.C. Labor Commissioner John C. Brooks.

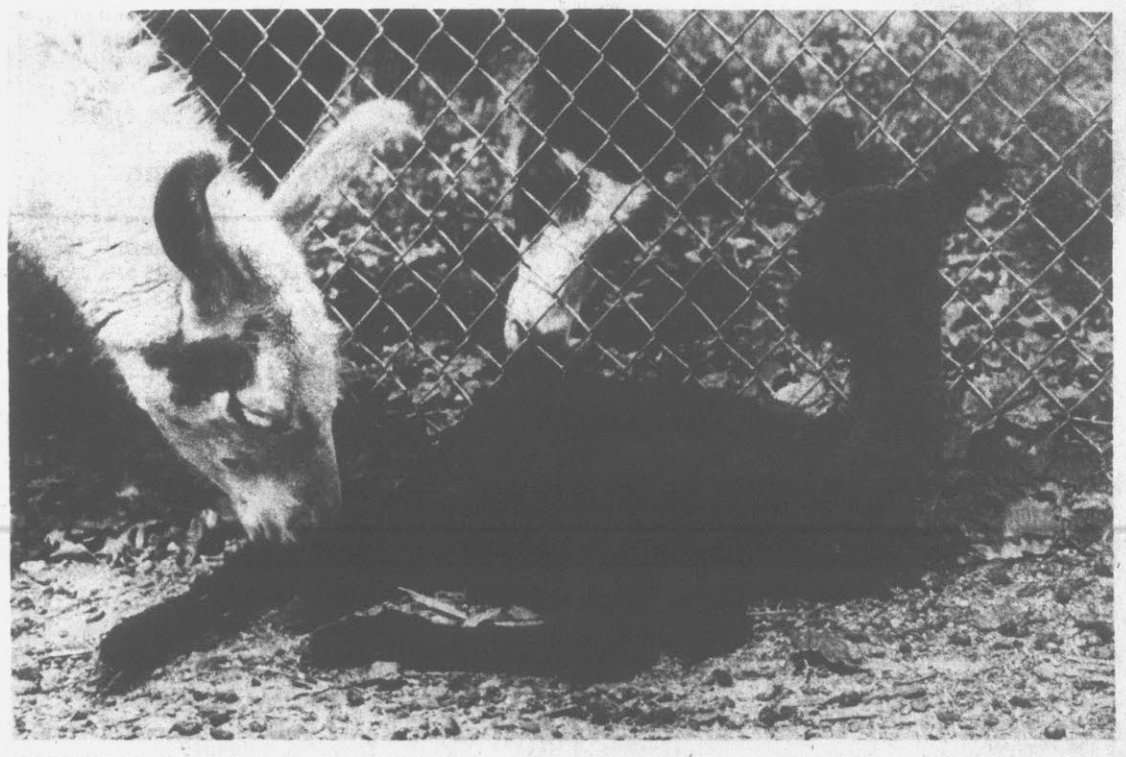

Greenville's January permit total compared with $2,620,272 recorded for December of 1978, which capped off a year that saw $51,178,797 in building permits issued here.

The January figure ranked Greenville eighth in the state among cities with more than 10,000 population, Brooks reported. Roanoke Rapids ranked fourth in the state with $3,878,710 in permits, due largely to the issuance of three permits in excess of $1 million each in connection with the Becker Village Mall.

Permit totals in several neighboring cities for January included: Elizabeth City, $141,550; Goldsboro, $724,995; Jacksonville, $953,742; Kinston, $429,497;

New Bern, $524,625; Roanoke Rapids, $3,878,710; Rocky Mount, $1,318,267; and Wilson, $1,103,729.

Brooks said that permits totaling $56,740,881 in estimated construction costs were issued during January by 38 North Carolina cities. The figure, he added, was up 10.5 percent from the $51,341,903 reported for last January and 5.7 percent higher than the total recorded in December.

Young Woman Dies In Accident

DEMOLISHED CAR . . . Investigators and members of the Greenville Rescue Squad look over the wrecked auto of Vickie Lynn Phelps, who died as a result of injuries received in the accident. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

The daughter of a Greenville businessman was killed early Saturday morning in a one car accident near Grimesland.

According to Trooper Walter Featherston, Vickie Lynn Phelps, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Waverly Phelps, was traveling east on N.C. 33 about two and one half miles from Grimesland when her car apparently left the right shoulder of the road and went out of control.

Featherston said the car traveled nearly 300 feet into a wooded area along the roadway throwing Phelps and a passenger out.

Miss Joyner was reported injured and transportated to Beaufort County Hospital.

A passerby, Calvin Daniels, of Chocowinity, was traveling home, when he said he spotted headlights in the woods off the highway. Daniels said he turned around and came back to the lights, and heard a person calling for help.

Daniels said he went to the scene, but could not free the leg of the injuried girl from the wreckage.

Daniels ventured to the highway and waved down a car to call for help.

Carter Predicts Oil Lobby Fight

By WESLEY G. PIPPERT

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI) — President Carter predicted Saturday that oil lobbyists will swarm over Congress "like a chicken on a June bug" trying to kill his windfall profit tax proposal. He added: "I am prepared for a fight."

In remarks prepared for delivery in a Jefferson-Jackson Day speech to Virginia Democrats, Carter appealed for public support in his battle to recover and put into an Energy Security Fund some of the "unearned, excess profits" oil companies will reap from his price decontrol decision.

"We must face facts," he said. "The oil lobby does not like the idea of this Energy Security Fund for the American people. They are going to be all over Capitol Hill like a chicken on a June bug. Some are already telling us we should just turn all the money over to them — every last dime."

Noting that many legislators on both sides of the issue doubt Congress will ever pass a tax on windfall oil profits, because the oil lobby is too strong, Carter added:

"I say — let's prove that the government of the United States belongs to the American people.

"I am not looking for a fight," he continued. "... But I'll promise you this. I am prepared for a fight if that is what it takes — and with your help, I do not intend to lose."

The president acknowledged that his newly-announced decision to lift price controls from U.S.-produced oil will be "painful" for Americans, who will have to "use less (oil) and pay more for what we use."

He said the windfall profits tax and the Energy Security Fund it would finance will insure that decontrol "does not become an excuse for a ripoff."

The president flew to Richmond by helicopter from Camp David, and was returning to the Maryland mountaintop retreat after delivering his speech.

He also hit the profit tax theme in White House talks with visiting editors Friday — just before he met with oil company representatives and told them they would damage their relations with his administration by opposing the tax.

"The oil companies are going to fight (the tax), I am sure, tooth and nail," the president told the editors during Friday's interview, the transcript of which was released Saturday.

"But I am determined to see this put on the books," he said. "I am going to go to the wall and use my utmost influence among the public and in Congress to get this tax passed. Otherwise, there will be tremendous unwarranted profits going to the oil companies."

On other subjects, Carter told the editors:

—The Three Mile Island nuclear plant accident will bring about "a much more careful assessment of nuclear power and a much more stringent set ot safety regulations and operating procedures."

—The United States will not deal with the Palestinians unless they recognize Israel's right to exist, but expects the opening of the borders between Israel and Egypt next month "will alleviate the tension" for the Palestinians.

Egypt Recalls Ambassadors

By MAURICE GUINDI

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — In its first major reprisal against Arab hostility to the peace treaty with Israel, Egypt Saturday ordered its ambassadors out of Saudi Arabia and six other Arab countries, some of them long-standing friends.

The move sent Cairo's relations with a substantial part of the Arab world plummeting to a new low. It left Egypt's diplomatic ties with 12 of the Arab League's 22 members in varying degrees of damage.

"The government of the Arab Republic of Egypt has decided to recall its ambassadors to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Bahrain, Tunisia and Morocco in view of actions by their governments which do not conform to the requirements of Arab solidarity," a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil told a parliamentary committee the withdrawal of ambassadors does not mean a break in relations.

"The diplomatic missions will stay to look after the interests of Egyptians in these countries," he said.

The seven countries involved in Saturday's decision already already had pulled their ambassadors out of Cairo in line with resolutions adopted at last week's anti-treaty conference of Arab ministers in Baghdad.

Until recently, Saudi Arabia, Morocco and the UAE traditionally had been close allies of Egypt, and Morocco's King Hassan and UAE President Sheikh Zayed Ben Sultan alNahyan were close friends of President Anwar Sadat.

Saudi Arabia in particular was Egypt's principal Arab bankroller, the source of $2 billion in aid annually since the 1973 Middle East war.

Interested persons are invited to attend and to be prepared to provide input on the budget discussion.

News Briefs

Urges Acceptable Plan

ATLANTA (AP) — Joseph Califano, secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, urged the state of North Carolina on Saturday to quickly develop an acceptable plan for desegregating its public colleges and universities or face the loss of millions of dollars in federal funds.

North Carolina has until early May to submit an acceptable desegregation plan for higher education to HEW or risk losing about $13 million in federal education funding, HEW officials say.

"I hope we can avoid that result — and avoid protracted litigation, for such an outcome would harm thousands of students," Califano said at ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Atlanta University Center, a consortium of six predominantly black colleges and universities.

Japanese Suspect Bribery

TOKYO (UPI) — Prosecutors suspect bribery of government officials in connection with sales of U.S. planes in Japan in an investigation reminiscent of the 1976 Lockheed payoff scandal that brought Premier Kakuei Tanaka's downfall.

Sources close to the Tokyo prosecutor's office Saturday said prosecutors feel there may be a connection between Nissho-Iwai Trading Co., Japanese government officials and $2.5 million in suspicious commissions from the Boeing Co. of Seattle and the McDonnell-Douglas Corp. of St. Louis.

Two Nissho-Iwai executives were indicted Wednesday on forgery charges related to commissions they got from the American firms.

Evans To Challenge Statute

ATMORE, Ala. (UPI) — Condemned murderer John Louis Evans III has decided to challenge the constitutionality of the 1975 Alabama death penalty statute that took him to within six hours of execution, said an attorney who met with Evans Saturday.

Attorney Reggie Stephens said Evans, who repeatedly has refused all appeals efforts, changed his mind in angry reaction to the last-minute stay issued Thursday by U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist.

"He said that now that he's gone through this, he might as well fight back," Stephens said after conferring with the 29-year-old Texan on Holman Prison's death row.

ABA Adopts Open Meeting Policy

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Criticized after the electronic media were excluded from some sessions of its midwinter convention, the American Bar Association has adopted an open meetings policy establishing equal treatment for all media members.

The resolution, adopted unanimously by the ABA's Board of Governors Friday, says:

"The American Bar Association believes the country is best served by the broad distribution of information about the legal system and the role of lawyers and the courts. General membership meetings of the ABA are open to the registered representatives of all news media unless specific exceptions or limitations are made by the Board of Governors."

Two More Settlements

CINCINNATI (AP) — Two more out-of-court settlements totaling nearly $6.7 million have been announced in connection with the 1977 Beverly Hills Supper Club fire that killed 165 people.

"This puts us at $10 million and this is only the beginning," said an attorney for victims of the fire after the settlements were announced Friday.

Fears Shutdown Of Auto Industry

By JEFFERY L. SHELER
UPI Auto Writer

DETROIT (UPI) — A week-old shutdown of the nation's truck lines has cost the U.S. auto industry $400 million in lost production — a mild loss in comparison to what lies ahead if the nationwide trucking dispute drags on another week, industry analysts predict.

One observer estimated Saturday the entire auto industry will be shut down by Thursday if supply lines to the nation's far-flung auto plants remain severed.

"If they shut down the industry, it will mean a loss of $350 million a day," predicted Arvid Jouppi, auto analyst for the Wall Street firm John Muir and Co.

The shutdown has cut the payroll checks of more than 125,000 auto workers and Chrysler Corp. already has announced all 41 of its plants will be closed indefinitely starting Monday. General Motors is partially shut down and Ford Motor Co. is hobbling along at a reduced production pace.

Company officials say it's just a matter of time before all production is halted.

Spokesmen for the Big Three auto companies declined comment on dollar losses resulting from the Teamsters dispute. But they indicated plant closings and curtailed work schedules slashed last week's output by 90,500 cars and trucks.

Translated into sales lost or delayed, the companies sustained a $400 million setback for the week, Jouppi said.

"A complete shutdown would mean weekly losses of a billion dollars every three days, and after a few weeks, I think it would begin to have a very serious effect on earnings," he said.

Crisis Eases

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — With the crisis at Three Mile Island continuing to ease, the last evacuation center closed Saturday and the head of the federal emergency team at the nuclear power plant took some time off with his family.

Gov. Dick Thornburgh said his advisory that pregnant women and young children remain out of the area would stay in effect until slight radiation leakage was stopped. He said evacuation plans remained on standby.

"We're trying to be as cautious as possible and not increase the psychic costs of the whole incident," the governor said in an interview. "I don't want to give advice to people and then have to counter that and ask them to move out again."

Scholarship Funds Are Vital

Dr. John H. Horne is retiring as dean of adminissions at ECU, and one of the wishes he expressed as he neared the time to step down was for more scholarship funds.

'I'd like to see East Carolina with a multi-million dollar scholarship fund — $10 million — the proceeds of which would be used for academic scholarships — a million dollars a year," he said. "Think what could be done. That's what we need more than anything right now."

Chancellor Thomas Brewer has said that endowment funds are necessary to the development of ECU and much of his time will be devoted to this area.

It is simply a fact that, if East Carolina University is going to reach its full potential of excellence, more and more resources from private sources are going to have to pour into its endowment and scholarship funds.

Look at the top universities of the nation and you will find that virtually all of them have major endowment funds and large scholarship programs.

Getting top students to attend a university is as competitive as finding the outstanding football and basketball players. To entice outstanding students to East Carolina a prestigous scholarship program is going to be needed.

As a state university, ECU enjoys financial support from the taxpayers through state government. State support will provide the basics, but not the extras which are needed to move into the area of true greatness. Much additional financial support will have to come from alumni, friends of the school and businesses, before we can achieve the heights that we all see for East Carolina University.

Penmanship Lessons Deserve Applause

In Oakland, Calif. a teacher is giving lessons in penmanship. No doubt the reaction might be that it's about time the schools emphasized this skill...but it should be pointed out that this particular teacher is instructing physicians.

Anyone who has ever read a doctor's prescription might again react that it's about time.

In this case the lessons are in response to an accrediting group's regulation that hospital medical records shall be legible and readable.

We applaude the efforts to improve physicians' handwriting. Any such effort in the field of journalism, however, would be a clear violation of some right or other.

THIS AFTERNOON

Another Federal Target

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — With the federal government apparently intent on keeping the fire hot under North Carolina as an example of a racist state, the prison system appears to be next in line for action.

The continuing controversy between the University of North Carolina and the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare drags along, with a number of state officials convinced that an example is being made of this state in order to "prick the conscience" of the nation and rekindle dying interest in civil rights

The Justice Department has let it be known to state officials that a suit alleging prison overcrowding is being contemplated.

In the face of more than $65 million already committed for new prison construction, and antiquated Central Prison now being torn down to make way for a new maximum security facility, that charge probably will not get very far.

"So we understand, now, that federal intervention may be launched on the grounds that we continue to segregate our prisoners within the cells", a top aide to Gov. Jim Hunt said.

The prisons are already desegregated. What the feds will push for are a black and a white in each two-man cell.

"And that volatile combination may well be the quickest way possible to reduce our prison population," the source adds.

A Target

The history of North Carolina as a target of racist charges has been told for many months, now: federal intervention in the Wilmington 10 case, the Joan Little case, the university controversy, and the developing Charlotte Three case.

Of the university battle, Gov. Jim Hunt now says candidly that he does not believe HEW Secretary Joseph Califano is deliberately dragging things along, but that "people in the bureaucracy" are.

"There are plenty of people in the bureaucracy anxious not to settle .... certainly not on any reasonable terms. And they are having a great influence", Hunt says.

BILL NOBLITT

There are civil service bureaucrats in the civil rights offices of the federal government who "have their own ideas about what ought to be done in North Carolina, and a lot of them are not in the least interested in resolving the conflicts".

A Signal

One of the most important pieces of legislation to be handled in this session of the General Assembly is the establishment of a balanced growth policy for North Carolina.

Resulting from statewide hearings, many personally attended by the governor, the proposal must rank at the top of the list of things in which Hunt has a strong personal interest and commitment.

A single legislator's name appears as the introducer and sponsor of that proposal in the House of Representatives: State. Rep. Liston B. Ramsey, D-Madison. Most insiders call this a clear signal that Ramsey has nailed down the post of Speaker of the House for the next session of the General Assembly in 1981....and asking him to handle this most important task is acknowledgment of that fact by the governor.

A Name

Another favorite Hunt proposal is the Fair Sentencing System. The title of that has prompted some observers to wonder if a new tradition has been set which might liven up bill titles in the future. There might be a "Mediocre Anti-Litter Law", or an "Excellent Income Tax Law", or a "Poor Tax Rebate" proposal.

THE INSIDE REPORT

Saudi Self-Confidence

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — The failure of a secret American warning just before Saudi Arabia imposed its 1973 oil embargo has led President Carter, more than five years later, to take a low-key approach in seeking support for the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty from the Saudis, now more aware than ever of their international leverage.

The warning was a sharp note from then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to the Saudi government. It was pointedly recalled by the ruling royal family in confidential talks with American Ambassador John West shortly before national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski's treaty-selling mission to Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

Kissinger warned that if the oil weapon was used, the U.S. would not be "responsible" for the security of the oil fields and would consider all obligations for the defense of Saudi Arabia against outside attack terminated. But the oil weapon was used with a vengeance — and without U.S. reprisal. When it was sheathed, U.S.-Saudi relations immediately returned to their former intimacy.

The Saudis' clever use of that Kissinger warning today tells a good deal about the upward shift in Saudi selfconfidence. Fully aware of the crisis atmosphere in the U.S. and the industrialized world caused by the revolution in oil-rich Iran, the always- subtle, always-indirect Saudis are sending a message to Jimmy Carter: if you turn the screws on us, you are the one who will be squeezed.

The Saudi princes do not have to stress the obvious. In about two years the Soviet Union will be in the world oil market in a big way for the first time, as their own production slows and Soviet-bloc demands grow.

That Carter understood is a conclusion inescapable from the shrewd, careful way in which Brzezinski handled his delicate mission just before the treaty was signed. Brzezinski told Prince Fahd, the top man here, first that the Africa-Mideast Soviet strategic threat is too ominous to permit a serious split between the U.S. and Saudi Arabia; and second, that Carter's intention to bring Israel around to a solution of the Palestinian problem is a personal "commitment."

The Saudis accepted that low-key presidential promise from Brzezinski, delivered without hint of pressure from Washington. That leaves the mood here toward the U.S. as one of watch and wait, with no disposition either to increase oil production because the U.S. wants it or to use oil as an anti-U.S. weapon.

"We are not going to start a crusade to undermine Jimmy Carter's hope for a comprehensive Arab-Israeli peace," one of the handful of top princely policymakers

EMPTY HOUSES, EMPTY LIVES

Nothing is colder than an empty house in the winter with no heat. In like manner, there is nothing colder than an empty life— a life devoid of high purpose, generous thoughts, friendship, affectionate relationships with members of the family.

People who have no religion, who never go to church, who concentrate entirely on the material aspects of life — these people live empty lives. If their lives were full, they would join with others in the many areas of fellowship open to us. Civic, fraternal, and educational organizations are some of these areas. But the most important one is the sacred fellowship we have come to call the church.

There is an occasional perversity which strikes some of use which makes us believe that we would be perfectly happy if we were only left alone. But actually, this is the road to misery, as we are quite aware most of the time. Happiness comes only with the full life.

Sunday Morning Notes

An "Old Dirty Book Sale" was held on the campus last week, sponsored by the Society for Collegiate Journalists, the honorary journalism fraternity.

It's not exactly what you might think. In fact, Journalism professor Ira Baker said the advertisements quickly brought an excited call. It was an inquiry as to just what kind of dirty books these were.

"It's not what you think," Baker replied. He went on to explain that the books the society members had in mind were the old, physically dirty kind.

Oh well...

Someone called "The Daily Reflector" office recently to complain about the rites of Spring.

It was shocking, was the gist of the coversation.

And there's an art to scowling . . . it has to be done just right or it might he interpreted as a leer.

It was a festive mood which surrounded the groundbreaking ceremonies for the ECU School of Medicine $26 million building recently.

Many who fought hardest for establishment of the school were on hand to share in the satisfaction of the day.

Gov. Hunt, a supporter, recognized a number of present and former legislators who were there for the occasion.

"I think if a lot of legislators here would take off their shirts, you'd see scars on their backs, scars from the fight over the ECU medical school."

At that point most of them were rather proud of their scars.

Back in 1907 there was another ceremony — that one held on what is now the main ECU campus, along what came to be Fifth Street.

The dignitaries of that day were breaking ground for a main building that came to be named Austin; (now gone) and two dorms, Wilson (demolished) and Jarvis (still standing).

A local youth went over to the new campus, which was then outside Greenville proper, to watch the proceedings.

March 30, 1979 was 72 years later and groundbreaking for the medical sciences building signified the opening of an entirely new campus of what had become East Carolina University.

D. J. Whichard, chairman of the board for "The Daily Reflector", who had seen the groundbreaking in 1907, was again on hand for the ceremonies which opened the new ECU medical campus.

Other Editors Say Needs Supercede

(Goldsboro News-Argus)

Former Governor Bob Scott sent up an obvious trial balloon this week. Deploring what he called North Carolina's "collective lack of leadership", he cited, in general, what he considered pressing unmet needs.

He cited the need for more spending for schools, community colleges, universities, highways, mental institutions, libraries and historical sites.

Scott chided Governor Hunt and the General Assembly leadership for having "panicked before the spectre of Proposition 13".

He said money should not be returned to taxpayers as long as we have unmet needs; and the needs are there, he insisted.

Presumably, he also meant no tax reductions should be considered until all needs are met. Or, perhaps, the ex-governor suggests we should increase taxes to meet these "needs" now.

The truth of the matter is that the greatest need in this country is tax relief. The taxpayer is staggering under the burden of a tax load created by governments at every level attempting to meet the perceived needs of the various agencies of government and politicians playing Santa Claus.

Despite his Haw River background, Bob Scott has been away from the grassroots a long time. Most of his life has been spent not only in the bureaucracy but in its upper echelons.

When Bob Scott sees Proposition 13 panic among members of the General Assembly, he sees it in the eyes of people who have their fingers on the public pulse.

Another hard-fought campaign for the governorship might be good for North Carolina and for Bob Scott. Because he and Jim Hunt draw their support from many of the same people, we would see a realignment of the political base.

We would see, perhaps, a healthy challenge to the burgeoning political dynasty of Mr. Hunt. And we would see a re-education of Bob Scott over what the real need in this state and nation is today.

Before the dust would settle, we would see some Proposition 13 panic in the eyes of Bob Scott.

Shift Out Of Capital

By CLIFFORD KRAUSS

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — The federal government plans to transfer some one million people out of Mexico City by 1982 and to shift capital investment to the impoverished countryside to defuse this capital's population timebomb.

Mexico City already vies with New York and Tokyo as the world's most populous urban area. The World Health Organization recently predicted it would become the world's largest city by the year 2000 with a population of up to 35 million people.

With a current population of 13.2 million, only 400,000 fewer than the entire nation supported in 1900, Mexico City is clogged

40 Years Ago Today

April 8, 1939

Despite intermittent showers, a curtailed parade this morning brought to a climax the two-day convention of East Carolina Safety Patrols conducted here yesterday and today under the sponsorship of the Carolina Motor Club.

The parade began in front of the college and proceeded past Five Points to Washington St. and down Washington to Third, St., down Third to Evans St. and down Evans to Fifth St. At that point they returned to the front of the college. A more elaborate and longer parade was cut short by rain.

Parade contest winners were: Greenville, best poster; Elizabeth City, best slogan; Tarboro, largest number of representatives in uniform; Bladenboro, best patrol in appearance and best juvenile float; and Ed Williams, Jr., son of Mrs. Novella Moye Williams, was judged as having the best decorated bicycle.

Special Breaks To Borrowers

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The country seems to love debtors. Uncle Sam, feeling kinship perhaps, gives the borrower every break in the Internal Revenue Service code. Life insurers cater to him. Banks, too.

Your identity might even depend on your debts. Your good name, your reputation, your self respect might accompany you on a trip, but if you have no credit card you might not be able to cash a check.

You might not even get on the road in the first place. Try renting an automobile without a plastic credit (call it debt) card. Your money means nothing to a car renter. Your debt potential does.

The IRS allows the borrower to deduct interest costs on his or her tax return, in effect subsidizing debt. The practice is challenged from time to time but it gets nowhere; Congress too is full of debtors.

Turned down for life insurance? Take out a personal loan and almost have it forced on you. It's low-cost insurance too, and you're not likely to be asked about your physical problems either.

But you need more coverage? In that case, determine if your bank offers mortgage insurance, then see if you can get in on it. Mortgage the house. Lots of people get $40,000 of coverage that way.

Banks almost always love debtors, as you would too if somebody agreed in contract to give you back money you lent them. Sometimes the more you borrow and the more you owe, the more they love you.

Recognizing that such romances might be based on flimsy credentials, some sharp borrowers go into debt over and over again to build their reputations for the day when they might really need a sizable sum.

They do it this way: They request a $3,000 loan for two years. They put the money into a 90-day account. Then they repay the loan early. It costs them a bit, but how can you price tag a good reputation?

Sometime thereafter they apply anew. This time they seek twice as much. Impressed by the repayment record, the bank officer feels his customer is worth the risk. And on it goes to a really big name.

On many a Main Street, acknowledged as among the most important people in town, strut some of the county's biggest debtors. They may be more honored than the biggest saver. Savers are idlers; debtors are doers.

That, at least, is a common misconception. But savers are at least the equals of borrowers, since the latter could not even be were it not for savers. Seldom, though, does the borrower acknowledge it. Almost never.

The borrower's vacation trips and automobiles are courtesy of those who postpone their good times in order to build a nestegg. The borrower says the future is now; nesteggs are to use. They use them.

The are obligated, of course, to return them, but they don't always do so. The law, the personal bankruptcy law, is often on their side, permitting them to repay in fractions so they might feel whole again.

To the editor:

I'm writing concerning what I feel is an infringement on my rights as a Greenville citizen. I was awakened at 8 a. m. last Sunday by a loud whining siren. Thinking that Russia had finally dropped the bomb, I rushed out of bed. It was nothing more than a private citizen's misfired burglar alarm. Again this weekend I was waked up by something that sounded like a U. F. O. landing in my back yard — another burglar alarm. As I write this letter, a burglar alarm at Pitt Plaza has been droning for over two hours and it's 1 a. m. The police say, "Sorry, there's nothing we can do. The owner's out of town."

Is it fair for one private citizen to keep awake 100 others with some $200 gadget that constantly goes off on its own free will? The law says, "Yes, it's o. k." Why can't someone turn that contraption off? All it would take to restore peace and quiet to my area is for an industrious policeman to climb up a ladder and cut the electrical wire that goes to the siren. The police say that this is not within their rights. I say, "Bull!" Personally, I think the owner should have to splice the wires together. I also think the police are too lazy to cut off the power to the siren. I myself tried to cut the wire about an hour ago, but I was stopped by a policeman who said I would be "disturbing someone else's property." I think the owner of the burglar alarm is disturbing my property.

Isn't it ironic that, whenever I go to a party where the music can be heard a few houses away, the police always bust it up?

The law isn't fair regarding a citizen's peace. I hope this letter will hasten to change it.

I will now attempt to go to sleep to the sweet echoes of a broken burglar alarm serenading me into electonic dreams.

To the editor:

To the many people who feel that if the ERA is passed, Congress will lose some of its power. On the contrary, I feel that, if the Equal Right Amendment is passed, it would give Congress more power. Also, if ERA is passed, Congress will no longer be able to pass any law which discriminates against any person, male or female, on the basis of sex. The Equal Rights Amendment would become an important part of the United States Constitution.

Vanessa Parker

To the editor:

To think that less than 1,500 of Greenville's 12,000 registered voters cast ballots in the referendum dealing with utility bonds. Undoubtedly, there may be a tendency for people to be apathetic when it comes to matters that do not touch them directly. But, to exhibit such indifference or lack of interest when it comes to water, sewer and electric facilities, all of which do affect the residents of our community—alas.

By not going to the polls, we not only shirk our responsibility but we also forego helping to indicate the sentiment of the population of the community. There is also the inherent danger that when a majority of the people abstain from voting, a minority vote could endorse passage of legislation that is unfavorable to the majority of the people. Away with apathy if there is to be worthwhile representation.

As I Recall It

The Long Chase Of Two Notorious Criminals

By NOEL YANCEY

(Noel Yancey retired recently after 39 years of covering North Carolina news for the Associated Press. In this column, he retells some of the big stories he knew.)

When the story is written of North Carolina's most notorious criminals, the names of Bill Payne and Wash Turner will be high on the list. The notoriety of the pair of bank robbers put them on the list of the FBI's most-wanted criminals after they led seven desperate criminals on a sensational escape from the Caledonia Prison Farm on Feb. 15, 1937. The seven heavily-armed convicts kidnapped prison Capt. I.D. Hinton and Steward W.L. Roberts when they fled the Halifax County prison in a stolen car. During a wild ride of over 400 miles that followed, they kidnapped a Raleigh motorist and stole his car.

Six month later, Trooper George Penn of the State Highway Patrol chased a car containing two men into a dead-end road near Asheville. In a shoot-out that followed, Penn, who happened to be driving the only car in the patrol not equipped with a bullet-proof windshield, was slain. His bullet-riddled body was found beside the road on August 22, 1937. Payne and Turner were identified as the culprits when their fingerprints were found in a car used by the killers.

In the months that followed their escape, officers thought they had cornered Payne several times, and at least three times he was reported to have been fatally wounded in gun battles with police; but each time he slipped out of the traps, or it was a case of mistaken identity.

"He seems to have a charmed life," said state prison Supt. Oscar Pitts.

Robbery of the Bank of Motgomery at Troy brought the FBI into the chase. Later Payne was tentatively identified as one of two soft-spoken bandits who robbed the bank of Candor.

Finally a group of 12 to 15 FBI agents surrounded a car parked behind a Sanford Hotel on the night of Jan. 3, 1938 and captured Payne and Turner. The FBI men took their prisoners to Charlotte and placed them in cells at their state headquarters before Sanford or Lee County officers knew anything about it.

Ed Scheidt, who led the FBI raid, said that it was directed personally by J. Edgar Hoover from his headquarters in Washington.

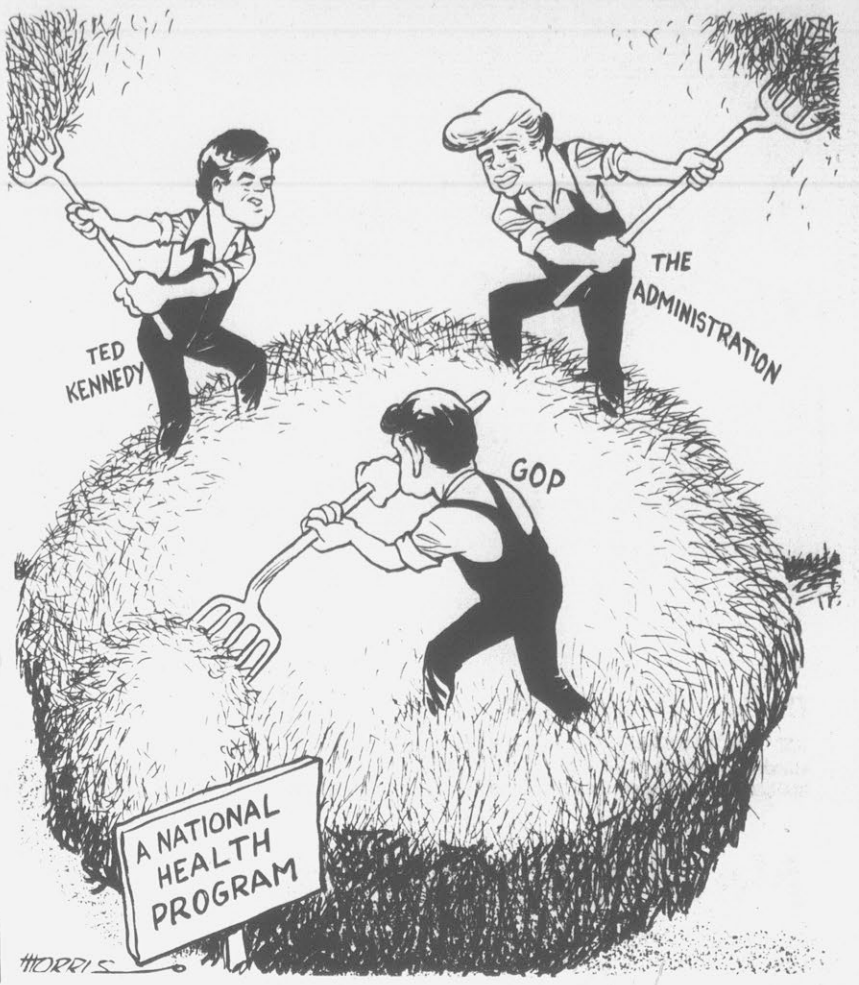

After their arrest, officers said Payne had admitted participating in several bank robberies in the two Carolinas. He said that when they were captured they had planned to pull one more bank robbery and to flee the country. Officers said Payne and Turner had several hideouts in remote sections of coastal Brunswick County and had even purchased a sea-going launch to evade pursuers.

Taken to Buncombe County, Payne and Turner were speedily convicted of first degree murder in the Penn slaying and sentenced to die. They said that in all their criminal career, this was the only killing they had committed..

The death sentence was carried out in the gas chamber at Central Prison in Raleigh on July 1, 1938. Payne spent much of his time in prison reading the Bible and described it as "real reading". On the day before the execution, Payne was visited by his mother and two sisters who saw him baptized as a Baptist.

When asked by the prison chaplain if he had any last words, Turner said "I guess all that needs to be said in that direction can be summed up in a few words: 'Crime does not pay'."

by traffic and choked by smog while suffering from shortages of drinking water, housing and employment.

As part of the National Urban Development Plan to control population growth in Mexico's overcrowded cities, the government will transfer 400,000 federal jobs out of the capital to some 14 "target" towns by 1982, according to the subdirector of urban ecology at the Human Resources and Public Works Secretariat, Federico Lopez de Alba.

Lopez said in an interview that the shift of federal jobs would mean an overall movement of 1 million people out of Mexico City, including families of transferred federal workers.

"By 1982, 60 to 65 percent of the total federal machinery will be out of the city. Only planning agencies will remain in the Federal District," he said.

Lopez said the current urban population bulge and massive unemployment were caused in part by foreign and domestic investments in export-oriented, capital intensive industries centralized in the capital, Guadalajara and Monterrey.

"Most of the capital will now be going to fishing, agriculture, primary industry and oil extraction and less into heavy capital intensive industries" that create few jobs, he said.

Mexico's OPEC-sized oil reserves will be used to decrease dependence on exports of capital-intensive products, he said.

The national plan, approved by President Jose Lopez Portillo last May, calls for a shift of public and private investment away from Mexico City, Monterrey and Guadalajara, to impoverished rural areas and a braking of the yearly population growth rate from the present 2.95 to 1.0 by the year 2000.

Nearly one-third of Mexico City's population comes from the countryside, according to a recent study.

Land-hungry and unemployed rural workers migrate to Mexico's cities by the thousands every day in search of jobs and educational opportunities for their children.

Under the plan, the government has already built 19 industrial parks to create employment outside the cities and plans to give the private sector and foreign business tax incentives and energy discounts of up to 30 percent to invest in the countryside.

The plan forsees the construction of hundreds of so-called Regional Service Centers, settlements of 10,000 people with all basic services to lure migrating peasants from the cities.

"They (peasants) will see by themselves that people in those areas will progress faster. What we want to do is motivate them," Lopez said.

Even with controls and a complete success of the national plan, Lopez said 20 million people will live in Mexico City by the end of the century and air pollution will be at least 15 percent worse than today.

told us. Asking not to be quoted by name, this official ruled out any chance that Congress would undo the result of the vicious battle last year that finally authorized the sale of F-15 aircraft to Saudi Arabia.

The realistic suspicion is high here, just as we found it in Baghdad, that the principal object of Israeli policy is now to create "confrontation" between the U.S. and the Arabs, particularly Saudi Arabia. It is known here, for example, that the American-Israel Public Affairs Committee, a registered lobbyist for Israel in Washington, possesses the most extensive files on the royal family ever collected, ready for use against Saudi Arabia if and when needed.

The ruling princes credit Carter with having moved Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin a good distance in two years, recalling Begin's boast not to return "one grain of sand" to Egypt. They think Carter can do a lot more and they believe his "commitment" to try.

But they do not intend to wait forever. Despite indications in Yemen that Carter may finally be moving the U.S. out of dangerous acceptance of the Soviet strategic drive, the Saudis are not sure. They watch the world balance of power carefully, and they have not been embarrassed by recent displays of Soviet affection, no matter what they say publicly.

If Israel can continue to resist American pressure for a comprehensive Mideast settlement, Saudi Arabia will mark it down as a failure of will and power — another downward notch in the shifting balance of power. Given the Saudis' new sense of their own world influence, that could and probably would mean an unpleasant change in one of the most fruitful relationships Washington still has going for it.

Devoted To A Heritage Of Garden-Fresh Foods

WADESBORO, N.C. — Fresh, red, mouth-watering tomatoes — the kind that have become so rare — have an almost magical power to evoke memories of the past. Like most Southerners, I do not have to reach very far into family history to find small farm roots. My grandmother was born and raised on a farm in Madison County, Tennessee. As a boy, I cherished visits to the country, and vividly remember the noon dinner time, when everyone would sit down to a table overflowing with fresh vegetables from the farm: black-eyed peas, field peas, pole beans (with a little ham for seasoning), chilled green onions and, of course, tomatoes. Lots of them. "Pot liquor" from the vegetables was cleaned up with a little cornbread and chased down with iced tea. As best I can remember, food has never tasted so good.

That was many years ago, and it seems that my own memories of those days are recalled less and less often now. The old-fashioned tomatoes we remember for their taste were grown by small farmers. The popular tomato strains were those with good flavor and high yields. The tomatoes themselves were allowed to ripen on the vine in the sunshine and then were hand-picked and marketed locally while fresh.

But now chain supermarkets and convenience stores have replaced the neighborhood grocery store. The new stores, having little stake in the community, prefer to deal with big wholesalers who can supply all their needs year-round, rather than with local farmers. Production for the "fresh tomato" market has shifted to huge, specialized farms in Florida, California and Mexico.

Nor are tasty tomatoes the only victims of assembly-line agriculture. Many old traditional varieties have disappeared from the pages of commercial seed catalogs because they do not have qualities essential to an industrial style of cultivation. An alarming number of varieties have become extinct. As these varieties fall out of use, we lose a valuable national treasure — the heritage of numerous ethnic groups and countless generations of our ancestors who, for literally thousands of years developed these varieties, saved their seeds, and passed them down from generation to generation. We also lose that distinctive taste or culinary quality our ancestors prized.

When a traditional variety becomes extinct, genetic diversity in that food crop is diminished. If this happens repeatedly, valuable genetic material, important in breeding crops with natural resistance to pests and diseases, is likely to be lost. Dr. Jack Harlan, professor of Plant Genetics at the University of Illinois, states that "these (genetic) resources stand between us and catastrophic starvation on a scale we cannot possibly imagine. In a very real sense, the future of the human race rides on these materials."

One tool for the preservation of traditional seed varieties is the Graham Center Seed Directory, available for $1.00 from the Frank Porter Graham Center, Rt. 3, Box 95, Wadesboro, N.C. 28179. The Seed Directory, "A Gardeners' and Farmers' Guide to Sources of Traditional Old-Timey Vegetable, Fruit and Nut Varieties," is designed to give growers access to seeds of the tasty, nutritious varieties once grown and enjoyed by millions of people in North America. In addition, it contains an essay, "Reaping What We Sow: Seeds and the Crisis in Agriculture," detailing the social, political and ecological importance of these old varieties.

The Graham Center, a non-profit demonstration farm and training center operated by the Rural Advancement Fund, is dedicated to the preservation of the small

Coping With The Care And Safety Of 'Lovie'

Except for their children's health and safety, there is nothing a parent must guard more carefully than a lovie.

A lovie is something to which a baby forms an intense attachment. It can be anything: a stuffed toy, a pillow, or a blanket. The only real criterion for a lovie is its ability to be tranformed in a very short period of sucking, chewing, hugging and dragging from an extrordinarily beautiful object to something which the original purchaser is totally incapable of identifying.

Of course, some children are more practical than others in their choice of lovies. A thick baby thermal blanket is a good, serviceable lovie. A washable, stuffed toy with detachable ears is only slightly less serviceable. Then there is the kid who carries around the blanket from her parents' king-size bed. Or the kid who picks the frilliest, fluffiest item in the nursery.

That's Meg. When she was six months old, she grew violently attached to a gorgeous pink shawl so flimsy that it looked as if it had been knit with two pine needles. Within two months after she became enamored of it, it turned from pink to brown and developed that odor peculiar to lovies and diaper pails.

After several more months of frequent washings which did nothing to restore the color or the April freshness, her "blanket" began to fall apart. It has been patched with enough thread to sew two wedding gowns and a Christening outfit. When Meg starts to wear it as a sleeve or a poncho, I know it's time to head back to the sewing machine.

I wouldn't do this for any other piece of material in the house, but having a lovie in the family is like having another child. I have watched without flinching as it mopped up the supermarket floor. I have stood by the dryer at 3 a.m. waiting to reunite it with an anxious mistress in the throes of the stomach flu.

Many a time I have sped back to the drugstore with a lump in my throat, knowing that if an employee found it before I did, this treasure could very well end up mistaken for a rag and be pitched into an incinerator. I have rooted through a Dempsey Dumpster for it, and I have turned back to mother-in-law's after driving an hour toward home.

A prolonged search for it has become just another aspect of the bedtime ritual. This search has ended in places as different as a block can in the toy box and the corner booth of the Pizza Hut.

I remember only too vividly the one time this search didn't turn up anything. We were staying with my parents, and we had been all over Atlanta that day. When the blanket didn't turn up in the house, we retraced our steps, but to no avail. Finally at 9 p.m., we gave up, located a children's store, and bought Meg another shawl. After a number of fruitless attempts to comfort her, we left her in her bed crying, "It's not the same! It's not the same!"

The gloom was so thick in the living room we could have bottled it. My mother and I just stood there and looked at each other. My father heaved a tremendous sigh and sat down in his recliner. As the bottom of the recliner flew up, the blanket fell out.

I grabbed that blanket as if it were the Prodigal Son, and in a fit of ecstacy, I carried it to Meg. But as I tucked them both into bed, I had a sudden qualm.

I wonder if I'll survive till the blanket reaches maturity.

Press Dearly Dotes On Morbid Speculation

BY JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — The water pump broke in the nuclear reactor at Harrisburg about 4 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, March 28. The first news dispatches were models of accuracy and restraint: It was a most serious accident, but it was not the first time a reactor's emergency core cooling system had been activated.

After that it was downhill all the way. The accident swiftly became a disaster, and the disaster swelled to a crisis. From the crisis we leaped to the "possible catastrophe." There is something in the newsman that dearly dotes on morbid speculation. For the next several days, the press reveled in bull's-eye maps by which thousands would flee the disaster scene. "Cloud of Fear Grips Goldsboro." When worried people spoke, they spoke in hushed tones.

Well, maybe so, maybe so. When Drummond Ayres of the New York Times got to Goldsboro, he could find only a brown-and-white dog wandering aimlessly on a deserted street. Ayres is a fine reporter and maybe so, maybe so. But now that the reactor has cooled and the hounds of the press have walked back to their kennels, could a still, small voice of dissent be raised?

Nobody was killed.

So far as we know, nobody was seriously injured.

No lasting damage was done to the ecology.

The systems worked. In this emergency, the core cooling machinery did exactly what it was supposed to do. The damage was contained. There never was any serious probability of a meltdown. In the best judgment of men who devote their lives to atomic energy, persons in the affected area suffered only a very light exposure to radioactivity.

Was this, then, a "disaster"? It was surely no disaster as such events ordinarily are defined. By the ordinary yardsticks, the accident at Harrisburg ranked below a run-of-the-line train wreck or a 10-car pileup on the freeway. The event added up to a big news story for two reasons: It had novelty. It was not merely the "most serious" nuclear accident in the industry's history, it was almost the only serious accident in the industry's history. Second, the story had mystery; it had all the allure of the unknown. Those great chimneys, as ominous as prehistoric altars, symbolized sacrifice to the material gods of energy and the good life. Given these elements, it is no wonder, that a doomsday press squeezed the story for all the drama it could yield.

And yes, Harrisburg was a disaster. The accident may well have crippled the further production of electric energy from atomic reactors. Long before the valve malfunctioned at Three Mile Island, utility companies had begun to despair of satisfying all the elaborate paperwork requirements of regulatory agencies. At some point the environmental extremists, the demonstrators and the "Union of Concerned Scientists" (as if other scientists were not concerned) create harassment that no longer is sufferable. The Harrisburg accident will provide all the fabric required for the fashioning of bedsheet bogeymen. Remember Three Mile Island! In a few weeks, everyone will have forgotten what in fact ought to be remembered — that this was no true disaster at all.

If the calamity howlers and the purveyors of panic have their way — if they succeed in halting the atomic generation of power — what alternatives would they propose? Three possibilities are mentioned — to replace atomic generation with coal generation, to embark upon a crash program to develop solar power, and to reduce our lifestyles so drastically that we consume 10 percent less power.

Coal carries a heavy price, not only in pollution but also in terms of miners killed and injured. Solar power cries out for development, but even a crash program would produce no significant increments before the turn of the century. Let us talk about voluntary trends toward austerity when they turn out the first light at Las Vegas.

Harrisburg has to be put calmly in perspective as a bad accident, nothing more. On its record here and abroad, nuclear power production remains the safest, cleanest, most efficient method of power generation we know of. We have to have it. We cannot afford to lose it.

Tar Heel At Helm In Nuclear Crisis

By SCOTT MACLEOD

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. (UPI) — With the momentous, nerve-jarring early days of Three Mile Island past, Harold Denton has time now to sit over coffee and quietly reflect on America's worst nuclear crisis.

Denton is the easy-mannered North Carolinian President Carter sent here to avert a catastrophe. His face, bearing a thin, ski-slope nose, is now recognized by millions coast to coast. Until last week, he was another faceless bureaucrat.

Saturday was a day he could take some time off, visit with his family, which came up from Washington, and take a ride through the Pennsylvania Dutch countryside.

"I knew that given time and reactors, accidents could happen. Less severe and more severe accidents were — are — possible," said Denton, the 43-year-old, $50,000-a-year chief reactor regulator for the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, in an interview with UPI.

"But it's going to take me awhile before I solidify my views on what we might do differently than what we do now.

"A week ago I was convinced, and still am, that the risk of nuclear power is as low if not lower than the risk of generating electricity by burning coal.

"But society appears less willing to tolerate nuclear risks than the more conventional risks, such as pollution, coal mine cave-ins and workers being hit by trains. That's a judgment for society to make."

Denton was out of bed at his Middletown motel before 7 a.m. Saturday. As he drank his coffee at a restaurant, NRC engineers at Three Mile Island awaited his arrival. He calls Carter every morning after he gets there.

Beads of sweat no longer covered his broad cheeks, as they did at a nationally televised news conference the day he arrived in Harrisburg. His manner was easy. He wore a navy blue turtleneck beneath a sky blue shirt open at the collar.

"The first few days of this was like falling into an Einsteinian black hole," laughed Denton, recalling the rush beginning March 30 when the president had him helicoptered here from Washington.

"It was really a blur. I could wake up tomorrow and decide I was never here. I have a strange recollection of this weird scenario and this rapid action. I'm sure it will sink in later."

His Southern drawl calmed an alarmed nation that looked on as the accident reached the potential for a core meltdown, which could have been a catatstrophe. The situation at the plant Saturday was stable, and the slow processes to shut down the reactor were underway.

"Conditions are so good I'm able to leave today and spend some time with my family," Denton said during an impromptu visit with his wife to the NRC press center in Middletown.

Denton and his wife Lucinda saw the new film "The China Syndrome" about nuclear power plant mishaps the weekend before the Three Mile Island accident.

Now, he's playing a real-life role.

"As drama, as entertainment, I thought it was enjoyable. I was particlarly pleased that the core cooling systems worked in the end," he said.

As Denton left the restaurant, a patron went up to him and said, half-joking, half-serious: "Are we going to live?"

"Certainly!" Denton replied.

New Center Dedicated

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — The $2.5 million National Humanities Center was dedicated Saturday and hailed by Gov. Jim Hunt as "one of the nation's most bright beacons of understanding."

Twenty-five distinguished scholars in the humanities have begun to study, write and exchange ideas at the center, which began operating in September. The idea for the center was conceived in 1975 by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Eventually, 50 scholars will study there each year in such fields as art history, cultural studies, political theory, history of science and foreign languages.

More than 200 persons gathered for the dedication ceremonies to hear Hunt and keynote speaker Dr. John Hope Franklin, a professor at the University of Chicago, and a leading writer on the black experience in America.

Hunt said the center should be dedicated "in the spirit of Albert Einstein, who said, 'the important thing is not to stop questioning.' Einstein would have approved of this wonderful place of comprehension."

The Triangle University Center is owned by Duke University, North Carolina State University and the University of North Carolina, all of whom have pledged $75,000 to it each year for the next five years.

In addition, it will be funded by corporations, private foundations and federal and state agencies.

family farm and saving our crops' genetic heritage. Small farmers who are staving off financial ruin can come to the Center — located in Anson County, N.C. — to learn new farming methods. These include ways to combate erosion and restore the soil's natural tilth, and methods of raising good crops without undue dependence on chemical fertilizers and pesticides. Part of the Center's philosophy is that not all "progress" is necessarily good — and ignoring or forgetting sturdy, mouth-watering vegetable strains is a prime example of the sort of progress that should be resisted.

I am just old-fashioned enough to want my children to know what real, fresh tomatoes tasted like in my childhood. If ever the time comes when no one can remember, then we will really have lost something.

Wants To Drop Affiliation

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Some North Carolina teachers argued for dropping affiliation with the National Education Association Friday at a session of the state educators' annual convention.

Disgruntled members of the North Carolina Association of Educators see affiliation with the NEA as a stigma because of a recent Internal Revenue Service ruling that declared the organization a labor union. The NEA was originally established as a professional organization.

The dissatisfaction with the NEA is seen as a reflection of a nationwide trend of unrest among its 1.8 million members. Membership in the state organization has dropped by 2,000 in the past year.

"Workfare" Program Being Tested

WASHINGTON (AP) — Food stamp recipients who are physically able to work but who aren't doing so will pay for their federal assistance under a test program the Agriculture Department will start.

The "workfare" program announced Friday will be tried only with a few thousand people in nine areas. It would require food stamp recipients who cannot find work to take local minimum-wage, public-service jobs for enough hours a month to cover the cost of the stamps.

Getting Geared Up

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A manufacturer is gearing up for the day gasoline prices jump to $1 a gallon with a pump that is capable of registering the dollar mark.

Gilbarco Inc. has six assembly lines turning out the pumps which it has had on its drawing board since 1976.

Officials said that of the one million pumps across the country, only 90 percent of them can register prices higher than 99.9 cents per gallon.

Team Of 37 Evaluated ECU Teaching Programs

An evaluation team of 37 educators from throughout North Carolina visited East Carolina University April 2-4 in order to evaluate the teacher education programs of the university.

Dr. Lewis H. Swindell, former Dean of Atlantic Christian College, served as chairman of this visiting committee. Dr. Swindell, now retired, taught at ECU. Working closely with him was Dr. H. M. Eldridge, associate director, Division of Standards and Certification, State Department of Public Instruction.

Each department offering a program leading to a teacher certification evaluated its curriculum offerings, faculty, students and facilities. A steering committee consisting of members of the Teachers Education Committee of the Faculty Senate and administrators of ECU also evaluated overall policies, student services, campus-wide facilities and the student teaching programs.

One of the highlights of the three-day visit was a reception given by Dr. Thomas Brewer, Chancellor of ECU, on Monday night in the Wellington B. Gray Gallery of the Jenkins Fine Art Center

In addition to visiting each department offering a teacher education program, the team visited with students currently involved in student teaching or graduate teacher education programs, and with several recent ECU graduates.

Pilot Describes Miracle Of Avoiding Crash

By NORM CLARKE
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Thirty-one years of flying experience and training to "keep cool" helped Trans World Airlines pilot Harvey "Hoot" Gibson regain control when his jetliner with 80 passengers on board did two 360-degree rolls and hurtled down into a five-mile nosedive.

"I feel like I'm 400 years old," Gibson, fatigued from only three hours sleep in 48 hours, said in an interview Friday night in his Las Vegas home.

Federal Aviation Administration officials said it was "miraculous" and "unprecedented" that the Boeing 727 jet survived such a incident before being brought under control. Gibson, 44, was commended by FAA chief Langhorne Bond for averting a crash by lowering the plane's landing gear to help pull the aircraft out of its dive.

"Things like that happen," said Gibson, who had thoughts of becoming a doctor while he grew up in Earlville, Ill. "But the people I work with have their act together. From the start, we (pilots) have been taught to keep cool ... hold up under the worst."

His harrowing experience came Wednesday night over Michigan when the plane — Flight 841 from New York to Minneapolis — went into a roll at 39,000 feet. Breaking the sound barrier during a five-mile dive the airliner pulled out "maybe two seconds before crashing," according to a source who asked not to be identified.

Gibson was quoted in an interview Friday with the Detroit Free Press as saying the plane rolled over twice, not once, and that "we lost 29,000 or 30,000 feet" in the dive.

"It seemed like it lasted 20 seconds," Gibson, a veteran of 16 years with TWA, told The Associated Press.

In keeping with company policy, he would not discuss why he resorted to putting down the landing gear.

"It comes down to doing the right thing at the right time," he said.

Bond said "It is clear that that is the event that allowed the crew to regain control of the plane. There is nothing in the manual to tell you what to do."

Gibson said, "People say pilots are overpaid. The reason we get good money is for those critical few seconds every 4 to 5 years. You can't put a price on that."

Gibson declined to cite specifics of the ordeal Wednesday night until TWA completes an investigation.

His thoughts as the plane thundered earthward from 39,000 to 12,000 feet at 650 mph, apparently exceeding the speed of sound:

"I didn't have time to talk to 'The Man,' but we could have held a group prayer session at the end," he said.

Wilmington 10 Attorneys Urge Judge To Overturn Convictions

By LORI COOKE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Attorneys for the Wilmington 10, claiming false testimony resulted in the convictions of their clients, Friday urged a federal judge to overturn the convictions.

The attorneys asked U.S. District Court Judge Franklin Dupree to overturn the group's convictions on charges stemming from the firebombing of a white-owned grocery store during racial unrest in Wilmington in 1971.

Civil rights activists including Angela Davis, Southern Christian Leadership Conference national president Dr. Joseph Lowery and Charlene Mitchell, executive secretary of the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression, were in the audience.

The lawyers attacked the credibility of the prosection's chief witnesses and particularly that of Allen Hall. Defense attorney James Ferguson of Charlotte said, "It is undisputed by any party that there would have been no case without Allen Hall."

Ferguson said Hall and Jerome Mitchell, one of the witnesses who corroborated his testimony, benefitted from "a pattern of specialized treatment."

Hall, Mitchell and Eric Junious, the other witness who supported Hall's testimony, later recanted and said they had lied. Hall has changed his story several times during the case.

Ferguson said the failure of prosecutor Jay Stroud to show an "amended statement" by Hall to the defense and the jury during the 1972 trial was a violation of the defendants' constitutional rights to confront and cross-examine witnesses against them.

A friend-of-the-court brief filed by the U.S. Justice Department asking that the convictions be overturned centers on Hall's statement. Justice Department lawyers said the statement casts doubt on Hall's testimony.

Hall received special treatment that included a fishing trip along the North Carolina coast and a visit from his girlfriend even though two deputies had to drive her from Asheville to the coast for the meeting, Ferguson said.

Both sides in the case have until April 20 to file further written arguments with Dupree. The Justice Department has asked to have until that date to respond to a recommendation by U.S. Magistrate Logan D. Howell that the convictions stand.

Dupree has not said when he will rule on the petition, although he said he had not yet caught up with the reading he must do to render a decision.

At a news conference after the hearing, Miss Davis said supporters of the Wilmington 10 hoped to see the Rev. Ben Chavis, the only member of the 10 still in prison, released.

"We would like to see him released with no conditions attached," she said. "We would like to see him get a pardon of innocence. But at least we would like to see him out on bail."

Ferguson requested bail for Chavis at Friday's hearing and Dupree said he would rule on the request as soon as possible.

Eight of the nine black men and one white woman are out on parole. The woman, Ann Shepherd Turner, has completed her parole.

Saves Two Lives

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — For Army Staff Sgt. Clifford Prater, his 198th parachute jump was nearly his last.

A midair entanglement with two other soldiers resulted in snarled rigging of their parachutes. But the 31-year-old Prater's cool orders to the two younger parachutists brought them to a rough, but safe landing.

For his action in the March 28 accident at Fort Bragg, Prater was presented Friday with the Army Commendation Medal at the 82nd Airborne Division's headquarters.

"They were so tangled up in my parachute, there was no way they could work their way down level to me," Prater said after the ceremony. "In fact, it was obvious the cloth was wrapped around their heads and they couldn't even see. They kept yelling, 'help me, help me.'"

Prater said he knew he could have elected to deploy his reserve parachute and let the small safety canopy "pop me up above them." But "They wouldn't have had a prayer, going into the ground without being able to see."

Thus began a rapid descent with only the reserve parachute to break the fall of three men.

"At that time I didn't know whether we were going to make it or not," Prater said. "I told them not to mess with the reserve because it was holding air and supporting us. But I'm glad they couldn't see the ground when I said it, because it seemed to be coming at us like an express train. When I hit, I hit pretty hard."

But Prater and the other two soldiers, Spec. 4 Alvin Hall, 22, and Pfc. Dolton Floyd, 21, joined the other troops for an eight-mile run back to headquarters.

Prater said a discussion afterwards revealed that Hall and Floyd had exited the C-130 Hercules transport airplane improperly, "mistakes I doubt they'll make again."

New Album Reflects The Pride Of Lumbee Indians

Proud To Be A Lumbee. Pembroke. Willie French Lowery Publishing Co., BMI. Stereo record $9.85; tape $10.90 (includes sales tax, postage and shipping charges). Mail orders: Lumbee Regional Development Association, Inc., East Main Street, P. O. Box 68 Pembroke, N. C., 28372.

Eleven songs, ten written by Willie Lowery — and one by his wife, Carol — are included in this album "dedicated to all Lumbee youths."

A professional musician who created the score for the Lumbee outdoor drama. "Strike at the Wind!," Lowery gives scope to the pride, aspirations and the everyday pleasures of more than 40,000 Lumbees, most of them living in Robeson County.

Funded through the Lumbee Indian Education Project of the Lumbee Regional Development Association, Inc., in association with Fayetteville Presbytery and Pembroke Area Presbyterian Ministry of North Carolina, Proud To Be A Lumbee combines the celebration of life today with pride in Lumbee history, heroes and folk legends.

A one-man musical force, Lowery sings, and plays guitar, bass, and percussion. Miriam Oxendine is the female lead vocalist and doubles on piano, and Mickey Oxendine provides bass and percussion support.

Seven Lumbee children — Maurice Lowery, Teresa Tyler, Connie Lowery, Corey Lowery, Clint Lowery, Teresa Locklear, and Melinda Locklear almost steal the thunder from the grown-up singers with their melodic, lilting singing.

Musically, the songs reflect elements of simple folk and country music interwoven with a strong thread of Protestant hymnal music. Some of the melodies are plaintive, others have spirited foot-tapping beats. Only one, "Henry Berry Lowery Is My Hero," incorporates elements of American Indian ceremonial dance tempos generally associated with background music for Indian movies and songs of Indians learned in childhood.

A few listenings left me captivated by at least half of the eleven selections, and pleased with nearly all the others. The title song, "Proud To Be A Lumbee Indian" establishes the cheerful, healthy optimism of the album.

"Little Lumbee Baby," the sole song written by Carol Lowery, is an enchanting lullaby, beautifully sung by the children and Ms. Oxendine. The mellow quality of William Lowery's voice is most noticeable in "This World You Know God Made It," in which some excellent piano passages and the happy voices of the children make it perhaps the most memorable of the songs.

"Rowing Down The Lumbee River" has an irresistible air, a delightful outdoor summer song with a kinship to an old children's favorite "Ten Little Indians."

All involved in the production of this first record of musical tribute to the Lumbee Indians can justifiably be proud of the result. It is a charming, captivating venture made even more pleasurable by its low-keyed approach.

A booklet with the words of each song, prefaced by a brief background of what inspired Lowery to create the words and music, comes with the record or tape. This booklet has black and white illustrations by Robert Lowery.

Following an earlier touring career, first with the "Lumbee" group who recorded a hit tune, - "Sheets of Gold," and later with the group "Plant And See" (which played several engagements in Greenville in past years), Lowery now concentrates on Lumbee music. This is fortunate for both Lumbees and non-Lumbees.

Cries From The Heart

William Gibson is one of America's most gifted craftsmen of words — in poetry, books and plays, including "A Cry of Players" now on the boards at the Studio Theater of the East Carolina Playhouse on campus.

The faculty, staff and student body of the ECU Drama Department is assuredly one of the finest theatrical ensembles in the South, so it's inevitable that when two such positive forces meet, the result is a superb production of a significant play.

Holly Jeremie, as Anne, eight years older than her young husband, Will Shakespeare, is an exciting actress to watch in the close-up range the Studio Theater affords. She is consistently convincing as a temperamental woman of intelligence, torn by jealousy and concern over the survival of her three children, yet a woman haboring a disastrous tendency to treat her husband as a child incapable of making decisions.

Cary Carter gives us a youthful Shakespeare at the critical point in his life where he battles conflicting demands imposed by duty and loyalty, opposed to the forces of unfulfilled yearnings to find his true role in life. It is the arrival of the strolling players that ignite the realization of the power of words which leads Will to begin to understand the roots of his restlessness.

Gibson's play effectively articulates the ageless theme of man's attempts to find courage to escape the imprisonment of circumstances; an inner desire, a self torment more keenly felt by gifted individuals. Gibson forces us to ponder choices, whether a person has the right to place his own potential above the well being of those who depend on him.

It is a searing cry from the heart when the young to-be-playwright pleads with his wife to "give me the gift of myself."

And there's other cries from other players. Steven Williford is moving as Sir Thomas, by virtue of his rank doomed to be aloof from his fellow men, a proud man whose loneliness eventually prompts him to seek companionship from young Shakespeare, even after having the youth punished by public flogging.

On all counts — the performance of supporting cast members, the staging, costuming, lighting, music — this is a totally rewarding evening of theater, one rich in human emotions poignantly worded and beautifully expressed by the actors, with the underlying tensions central to the play relieved by measures of comedy, the rowdiness of Elizabethan life styles, and moments of tenderness.

Six more performances will be given, each evening at 8:15 Monday through Saturday, April 14. Tickets are priced at $2.50 each. Considering the limited seating available at the Studio Theater, it is advisable to reserve a seat by calling 757-6390 in advance.

Methodist Church Film Criticized

NASHVILLE (AP) — The first film on evangelism produced in the United Methodist Church in 20 years won't be available this spring as expected because of criticisms aroused at its premiere.

The objections came when the 32-minute film, "Finding the Way Forward," was shown to the church's 95-member Board of Discipleship.

Several ethnic minority members said the film did not portray their respective groups adequately. Others complained that it was "too upper middle class" and reflected no women in leadership roles.

The film, stressing "contagious United Methodist congregational life," features white congregations in Darien, Conn.; Montgomery, Ala., and Richland, Wash., a predominantly black congregation in Atlanta, and a multi-racial congregation in Los Angeles.

The Rev. George G. Hunter, executive of the board's evangelism section which produced the film, says revisions can't be made in time for use at church conferences this spring as planned.

New Plans For Local SPEBSQSA

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Sunday Editor

They love to sing and they're part of a brotherhood known nationally as SPEBSQSA (short for the Society for Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America.)

The Greenville Chapter of the SPEBSQSA was pioneered by Bill Burt, an employment consulting specialist who now lives in Oriental and lived in Greenville when the local chapter was being founded.

For the past several weeks, members of the Greenville singing group have been active — in February focusing on a membership drive; and more recently, considering merger with other area quartets and groups.

"We're trying to join forces with the Rocky Mount chapter, possibly as the Tar River Chorus, with plans to sing alternately in both places. People in Washington, and Tarboro will probably join us too," Don Lawler, current president of the Greenville SPEBSQSA commented.

The singers perform in two categories — as a quartet and as a chorus — depending on the occasion. Active membership currently includes Lawler, Don Dempsey, Graham Nahouse, Charlie Entzminger, and Billy Jones, as well as Steve Bartlett, Colonel A E Dubber, Mike Bell, Bob Hanrahan, Ed Walcott, Dennis Reaser, and Al Ingenito.

Nahouse is program vice-president; Jones is librarian and membership chairman; Dempsey is secretary-treasurer; Entzminger is music director and Burt is past president.

"We've competed for the last two years in the Tar Heel Division," Nahouse said, "and we've never finished last." He added that the next big appearance for them will be in Greensboro on April 21.

The quartet section of the local singers, according to Lawler, has made "approximately 50 appearances in the past couple of years." The chorus sings two or three times a year."

Nahouse said that their choice of music "is traditional plus some modern songs. Anybody wanting to join doesn't have to know how to read music, all that's necessary is to be able to carry a tune."

At this time, the Greenville chapter is an all-male affair, but Lawler pointed out that in many places a female equivalent, known as the Sweet Adelines, exist.

This April marks the 41st anniversary of the founding of the SPEBSQSA. Nahouse and Lawler related that it was in April 1938 during the Depression Years that two youngsters got together in Oklahoma City. It was in the lobby of the Alvin Hotel, that it all got started, a spontaneous happening with bell boys and elevator operators joining in. From that beginning the enthusiasts for barbershop music set up a meeting for Tulsa, which turned into an all-night singing session. This marked the birth of SPEBSQSA, and in communities all across America, interest continues to grow for this old-fashioned style of American singing.

Sierra Club To Meet

The Sierra Club will meet at 8 p.m. Monday, April 8 in the First Presbyterian Church. The program will center on a discussion of what local citizens can do to insure that the Greenville-Pitt County area will remain as beautiful and liveable as possible.

Speakers will be: Kay Whitehurst of the Tar River Task Force; Steve Evans of Keep Pitt County Clean and Beautiful Committee; and Lynn Olmstead of the Chamber of Commerce.

Visitors are welcome and will be given an opportunity to express their ideas.

New Show At EEii's

BELHAVEN — A new show, featuring hand-forged copper, brass kitchen utensils, carved wood and metal sculpture by Dempsy Calhoun, is opening at EEii's little KORNERS of the World today, with a reception from one until five in the afternoon. The public is invited to attend and to meet the artist.

Calhoun, now teaching at Wingate College, holds the BFA in sculpture and the MA in design from East Carolina University. A winner of several major awards, including a N.C. Museum of Art artist exhibition award, Calhoun was also the subject of a biographical film made by the N. C. Arts Council and shown over UNC-television during 1975.

In the summer of 1971, Calhoun and three other graduate students of ECU assisted with a teaching program held at EEii;s, and selections from his work has for some years been featured at the gallery. The exhibit will remain on view through April and May.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Margaret Clark

What if the Nazis had invaded and occupied Great Britain in 1941? In SS-GB, Len Deighton piques our immagination with this might-have-been situation. From the beginning, we learn that Churchill has been executed, the king is being held in the Tower of London, Britons are being deported to work in German factories, and the SS is running Scotland Yard. There are collaborators. There are profiteers. But there are others working in hope, in secret, in desperate danger, against the invasion. Douglas Archer, detective Superintendent in Scotland Yard, continues to solve cases even under the occupation. The most recent murder raises the threat of Nazi control of an atomic weapon and turns Archer into a Resistance partisan. The machinations of power-hungry Nazis nicely complicates the plot as the police and secret agents chase each other in the London fog. Len Deighton, with several fine spy stories behind him, has written a very clever tale. The ending of SS-GB is guaranteed to rock you.

Another spellbinding novel of nonstop action and fabulous surprise is THE MATARESE CIRCLE by Robert Ludlum. It is this best selling author's most improbable (but not impossible) plot to date. When American's best secret agent, Brandon Scofield, and his Soviet counterpart, Vasili Taleniekov, become too hot to handle and are slated for execution by their own governments, they are forced to team up, in spite of having sworn to kill each other. Their objective is to stop a secret organization called The Matarese that has been financing terrorist groups around the world. No one really knows the aim of the organization, only that it has to be stopped. Desperate but resigned, angry but controlled, the two superspies pool their expertise and begin to track the leaders of the Matarese. Their search takes them from Corisca, through Essen, Leningrad, London, Rome, and finally to Boston, and a climax as surprising as it is unexpected. Robert Ludlum's eighth novel is one of his best.

Anthony Stuart makes his American debut with a stylishly written novel of international intrigue set against the background of European diplomatic circles. THIS MAN GULL introduces Vladimir Gull, Russian defector and simultaneous interpreter. Now living well in England, Gull's trade constantly draws him to the world capitals and hot spots. When a falsified interpretation of a U.N. speech, made at gun point, leads Gull to Rumania, he discovers some old friends and new enemies. THIS MAN GULL is the second in a series of novels featuring the international adventures of Vladimir Gull, who may well be another James Bond.

Woes Of Subway Artists

By GORDON BOCK

NEW YORK (UPI) — If you think Michelangelo had it tough painting the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, think of the artists who have to run for cover every time a New York City subway car barrels into their "studio" at 45 mph.

Working at night doesn't make it any easier — the city's subway system is a 24-hour-a-day operation. But the subway painters have at least one advantage over the Italian artist: they're painting "by the numbers."

The brush-wielding is going on at 84 of New York's most heavily used subway stations as part of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority's $10 million "Operation Facelift" program, timed to coincide with the subway system's 75th anniversary.

Phyllis Cerf Wagner, the widow of humorist Bennett Cerf who is now married to former Mayor Robert Wagner, picked the 12 colors from which various decorating schemes for the stations are being developed.

As the painters brush away, a flagman stands at end of the platform, ready to alert the motorman of an approaching train that a work of art is in progress. In a matter of moments, the painters clear the tracks of their ladders and brushes, let the train pass and go back to work.

At the Fifth Avenue station, near the main branch of the Public Library, the completed look features beechnut-colored columns, "raisin" ceilings above the track, eldorado-painted stairway areas, and mezzanine and platform ceilings done in antique satin. Dark brown exit gates and off-white entrance portals finish the picture.

So far, though, the results have drawn a big yawn in chic art circles — and among early-morning commuters whose eyes are glazed from lack of sleep.

Michelangelo had at least one advantage over the subway painters — more time. The Italian artist's fresco work on the Sistine ceiling was completed in about four years. Operation Facelift, announced last September, is slated for completion July 1.

A Review

A Little Bit Of Everything

If unbridled fantasy in gorgeous technicolor is your bag, then "Circle of Iron," now showing at Buccaneer 2, is just the movie for you.

Billed as a tribute to the late karate idol, Bruce Lee, and in fact based on an original story by Lee and James Coburn, this cinematic mish-mash should be given a prize as the salad bowl movie of the year.

A little bit of everything is haphazardly assembled around the core of the story, an arduous search carried out by Cord (Jeff Cooper) for the "Book" in the custody of the fabled seer Zetan (Christopher Lee). The search, predictably, entails a series of perilous challenges and encounters.

Cord's guiding star, David Carradine, in various roles of blind man, monkey man, and Turkish chieftan, has this fine actor, despite blindness, skittering over mountain and desert with the agility of a gazelle. At other times he peppers the silences of long marches with assorted gems of Zen wisdom, or stops for a rest break in misty landscapes to toot lyrically on his Oriental flute.

One surrealistic scene has Eli Wallach contentedly ensconced in a huge bronze cauldron of oil. For ten years, in the middle of the desert, he has been there, hoping to wither away the bottom half of his body, Speaking of oil, Cord somehow manages to remain bodily glossy despite sand, dust, rain and assorted battles.

Roddy McDowell turns in a brief performance a la Bette Davis; and the temptress to Cord's vow of chastity, Erica Greer, looks happy only when she is crucified, tied prettily in place with colored silk ribbons.

Visually, stylistically, and photographically, "Circle of Iron" shows influences from a veritable grab bag of cinematic, literary and fashion sources as diverse as "Fellini Satyricon," "Planet of the Apes, wild West movies, Moroccan folk festivals, "Titus Groan," lands and people travalogs, Gorgeous George and John the Baptist.

The late Mr. Lee's penchant for martial arts (and accompanying grunts) are erotically choreographed by Kam Yuen.

Festival To Aid Restoration

KING-BAZEMORE HOUSE . . . built in 1763 and moved to the Hope Plantation property last year, will be restored beginning this spring. Proceeds from the "Springtime at the Plantation" festival to be held Saturday, April 21, will go to the restoration fund.

WINDSOR — "Oh, for the days gone by when I could gase upon my wife," a sorrowful David Stone scrawled in pencil on the bookcase wall behind a row of heavy volumes in his library.

The date was 1816, shortly after the death of his wife, Hannah Turner, with whom he had enjoyed the first few years of marriage in his stately mansion known as the Hope House.

Young Stone, twice elected governor of North Carolina and a popular political figure throughout his own short lifetime, could have scarcely known that his sad inscription would remain intact nearly 200 years later, to be viewed by the modern-day visitors who regularly come to see his restored home.

But, like the melancholy lament which survived years of weathering, neglect and abuse to be preserved now behind glass in the long bookcase, so has Stone's house in its entirety been nourished back to a new life through the restoration efforts of the Historic Hope Foundation, Inc.

Research

More than a decade of research and restoration has brought the early 19th century home back to its original grandeur which David Stone, who later remarried, and his family so enjoyed. Yet work on the site continues as the various directions of a long-term historical project present themselves, the most recent of which focus upon the King-Bazemore House.

House Donated

Donated to Historic Hope Foundation in 1974 by Mrs. Adelaide B. Jenkins and Henry L. Bazemore as a memorial to their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cling Darden Bazemore, the mid-18th century structure was moved last year to Hope property, about five miles from its original location. (Another daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cling Bazemore, Mrs. Etta (W. C.) Taylor, Jr., is a resident of Greenville).

Restoration of this house, one of two known gambrel room houses with brick ends in North Carolina, is expected to begin this spring as final preparations near completion and as warmer temperatures yield more suitable working conditions.

Matching Grants

Hope Foundation has subsequently received two matching grants totaling $55,000 from the North Carolina General Assembly to aid in this project. In addition, a $5,000 matching grant for the King-Bazemore House restoration has been made by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation of Winston-Salem.

To secure local matching monies for these grants, Historic Hope Foundation, Inc., sponsors a number of benefits, the most timely being the annual "Springtime at the Plantation" observance, scheduled this year for April 21 at Hope House.

Outdoor Festival

An informal, outdoor affair, the festival provides a framework for dining, dancing and music in a manner to be suited to all ages. "Sprintime" at Hope officially begins at 5 p.m. that Saturday, with a clogging and square dance performance by the Green Grass Cloggers of Greenville, a group of young dancers that has gained national and international acclaim.

The hour-long exhibition, with Jerry Powell presiding as caller, will be followed by an interlude in which guests at Hope will have the opportunity to learn clogging steps. Back-up music will be provided by the Home Town Boys Bluegrass Band.

Dinner will be served on the lawn beginning at 6:30 p.m. and will include a festive menu. Decorated tables will be placed around the large lawn to accomodate guests.

After dinner, a street dance will begin at 8:30, to be held in the driverway encircling Hope House. The Roanoke River Joymakers of Williamston will provide the music. Throughout the festival, tours of Hope House will be conducted by hostesses dressed in 18th century fashions.

Brief History

In the 12 years since Historic Hope Foundation, Inc. acquired the then greatly dilapidated structure, its monumental task of restoration has been virtually completed. Fully furnished with pieces acquired on the basis of an estate inventory compiled by Stone before his death in 1818, the home requires just a few additional items.

Hope House has been described as an outstanding residence of the Federal Period, though of the earlier Georgian design, and portrays characteristics of the then popular Jeffersonian Classicism style with its Palladian influence.

Operating Hours

Hope House is open to the public as a house-museum Tuesdays through Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sundays from 2-5 p.m. Both group and individual tours are welcomed and outdoor picnic facilities are available.

Inquiries about the house, other restoration projects and fund-raising benefits may be addressed to: Historic Hope Foundation, Inc., P. O. Box 601, Windsor, N. C., 27983.

Collins Leads Purple To 30-6 Victory

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

The first offensive unit, wearing the Purple jerseys, showed a lot of spark, but East Carolina Coach Pat Dye wasn't exactly pleased with the outcome of the spring game Saturday afternoon.

Paced by two touchdowns by Anthony Collins, the Purple romped to a 30-6 victory over the Gold, and the game was not close after the first period of play.

"It's obvious that we have some problems," Dye said after watching the contest from the press box. "We need some depth in our offense and we have a lack of defense."

Injuries had sidelined a number of the top defensive players, however, and Dye said that how serious the Pirate problems were in that area may not be fully known until the fall.

Both starting defensive ends, John Morris and Clifford Williams were out of action, along with both starting linebackers, Mike Brewington and Jeffrey Warren. And that was just the start of the list, Dye noted.

"If there was anything that was a bright spot, it had to be the play of the first offensive unit," the coach continued. Going against the remenants of the first defense, the first offense ground out nearly 400 yards in total offense, picking up 23 first downs along the way.

Collins was the top star, scoring twice, on runs of three and seven yards. He finished the day with 96 yards in 17 carries. Fullback Theodore Sutton added one score, and picked up 92 yards in 20 lugs. Halfback Sam Harrell added 72 yards in 15 trips, while Mike Hawkins added 26 yards in just six carries.

Quarterback Leander Green ran for 37 yards on eight plays, and hit just two of seven passes for 62 yards. One of those, however, was a 24-yard touchdown strike to Billy Ray Washington.

Bill Lamm rounded out the Purple scoring with three of four extra points, and one of two field goals. His good one was a kick of 47 yards, while he missed on a 37-yarder.

Overall, the Purple rushed for 334 yards and added 62 passing for a total of 396 yards.

The Gold, by comparison, gained only 182 yards on the ground and just eight in the air. Quarterback Aaron Stewart led the Gold offense with 72 yards on 11 carries, including the lone touchdown, a 16-yard scamper.

Jessie Hilton, just switched from quarterback to running back, had 53 yards in 14 carries.

"We limited the defense to just one pattern," Dye said. "We thought that this would help the second offense, but it didn't turn out that way. Right now, I'm just glad we don't have to line up and play someone right away."

The Pirates have three practice days left and will use those to work on some of the problems seen in Saturday's game. "We'll choose up sides for a private scrimmage on Thursday that won't be open to the public," Dye added.

On the quarterback situation, Dye noted that Henry Trevathan is still the backup to Green. "In a quarterback, you look for someone who won't get you beat. Then you look for someone who won't get you beat and will get you in the end zone. On the basis of that, Henry is still our number two quarterback. But Aaron showed a lot of things out there today. He just needs work. He has a lot of the quickness and running ability that we need."

Dye added that he feels that the Pirates have five running backs who are winners right now. They include Hawkins, Collins, Sutton, Harrell and Roy Wiley, who missed the spring with an injury. "Harold Blue also has the stuff to help us, but he's missed the whole spring too. Hilton has only been at running back for ten practices, and there is no question that he has a lot of ability. He just has to get stronger and learn to handle his blocking and learn the offense well."

Dye feels that the offense is way ahead of where it's been in the previous five springs the coach has gone through at East Carolina. But the defense is further behind that ever before, too.

"That fightens me," Dye said. "I've always believed that the defense is supposed to be way ahead of the offense in the spring and that hasn't been the case. With the kind of folks we are going to play this fall, we have to have a good defensive team if we want to have any chance of winning them all. The offense is going to give up the ball now and then in poor field position and you've got to have a defense that can go out there and get it back for you."

Dye felt that the kicking game, except for Lamm and the punting of Rodney Allen (4 for 39.0) didn't get a true chance. "We had a lot of people out there in the line who really didn't know what to do, and having young kids back kicking too didn't help."

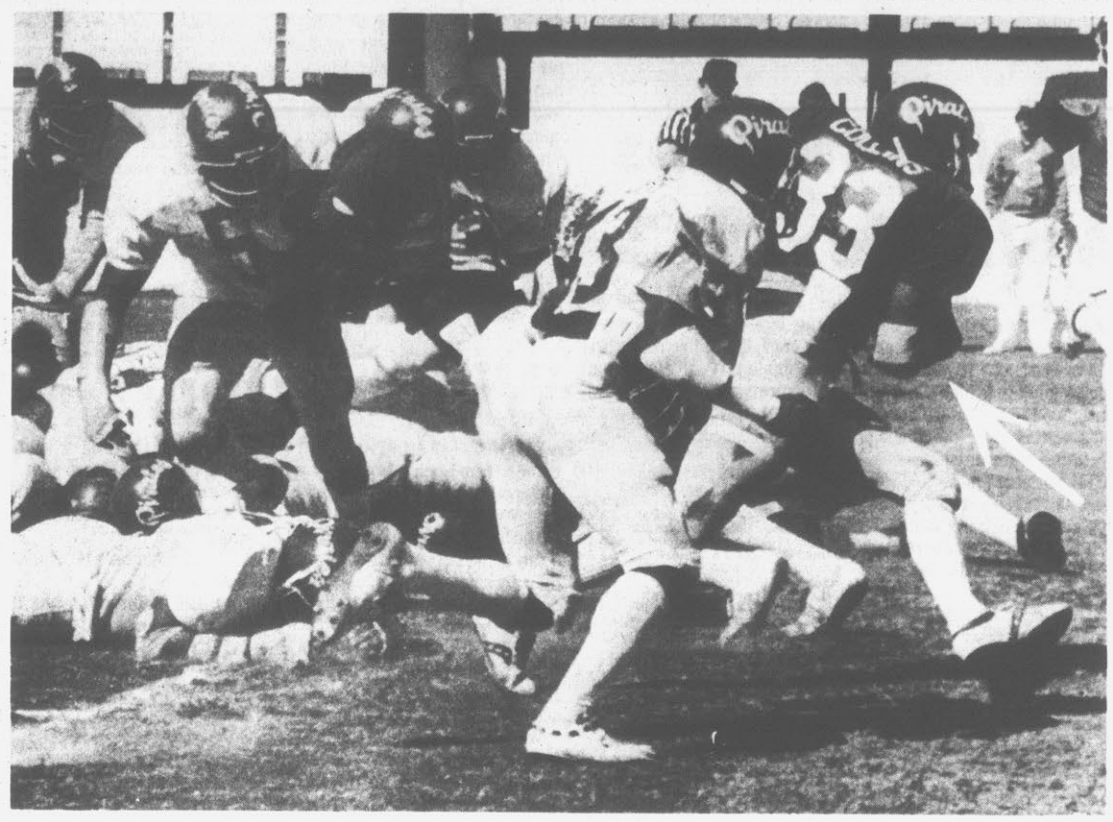

The Gold defense blocked two Purple kicks, and nearly got a third.

The Gold nearly got on the board first, but an illegial procedure penalty killed a 26-yard run by Stewart that would have given the Gold a first down at the Purple 12.

Later, after blocking its second punt, the Gold got the ball on the Purple 21, but suffered the third of eight fumbles in the game, losing it at the 17.

The Purple turned that into its first touchdown, marching 83 yards for the first score. Green's 38-yard pass to Vern Davenport helped the drive along on a third and 18 call, and Collins finally

Post, Lopez Knotted For Winners' Circle

By KEN PETERS
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sandra Post and Nancy Lopez matched 68s Saturday to tie for the lead after three rounds of the $305,000 Dinah Shore Winners Circle and set the stage for a war of nerves in the finale of the Ladies Professional Golf Association's richest tournament.

Post, the Winners Circle defending champion, and Lopez, the sensation of the tour as a rookie in 1978, have shot identical rounds of 68-70-68, 10 under par through 54 holes of the 72-hole event at Mission Hills Country Club.

They were 3 strokes ahead of JoAnne Carner, who carded a 2-under-par 70 in the third round over the par-72, 6,272-yard Mission Hills Country Club course.

Judy Rankin, with a third-round 69, was 4 strokes off the pace at 6 under par for the tournament. Donna White also carded a 69 Saturday to move within 5 strokes of the leaders, and Pat Bradley fired a third-round 67 to put her 6 strokes behind.

The players have found the Mission Hills course to their liking during the first three days of the Winners Circle, as temperatures have been in the 80s, and the swirling winds that normally make the layout difficult were calm for the opening three rounds.

Post, Lopez and Japanese star Chako Higuchi had begun the third round tied for the lead, but Higuchi dropped back in the pack with a 79 Saturday.

"I know what I have to do," said a rather grim-faced Post following the third round. "Now all I have to do is go do it. Obviously I like this course, and it likes me.

"It may be between Nancy and me, but you can't count JoAnne out."

Lopez agreed, saying, "You can't count anybody out, there are too many good players close behind us. But I feel confident. I'm hitting the ball very well now."

Post, Lopez and Carner played in the same threesome, and each played an outstanding front nine.

Post rattled off five birdies through the first nine holes for a 31, but then lost a stroke to par with one bogey and no birdies on the back side. Lopez, 22, carded four birdies on the front and had a 32, then matched par 36 on the last nine.

Carner, like Lopez a two-time winner already this year, was less successful on the front with a 35, but equaled that for a 2-under-par round.

Sunday's final round of the Winners Circle will be nationally televised. The tournament sponsored by the Colgate-Palmolive Co. carries a $37,000 first prize, tops for the lady golfers.

Renner, With Stroke Lead, Has Plan To Handle His Excitement

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Jack Renner, who retained a one-shot lead with a solid, two-under-par 70 in the third round, said he knows he will be nervous and excited in Sunday's final 18 holes of the $250,000 Greater Greensboro Open Golf Tournament.

But the intense 22-year-old, who has led or shared the lead all the way in the quest for his first pro title, has a plan to handle that nervousness and excitement.

"I want to try to channel the excitement into a positively aggressive attitude; to adopt an attitude of 'I'll show 'em', instead of standing on the first tee cowering," he said Saturday.

"I will win a golf tournament out here. I don't know when, but I think it will be this year. It may be tomorrow. It may not be tomorrow. I won't worry about it, because I know that I will win.

"I will not go out on the first tee afraid. I will not be out there afraid I'm not going to win.

"I will win.

"There is nothing to fear."

Renner, who scored the highest finish of his brief career as a runner-up in this tournament a year ago, retained control of the top spot through 54 holes with a 209 total, seven shots under par on the 6,984-yard Forest Oaks Country Club course.

Bobby Wadkins, who's trying to join older brother Lanny on a trip to Augusta, Ga., and the Masters next week, shot the best round of the tournament, a 5-under-par 67, in the sunny, breezy weather. He moved into second at 210.

"It's the first time all year I've putted decent at all," said Wadkins, who won the prestigious European Open last fall but has yet to take an American title in five years on the PGA Tour.

"Now it comes down to trying to win the golf tournament," he said. He needs a victory to join his older brother in the invitational field at Augusta. Lanny, the only two-time winner on the tour this season, shot a 73 that took him out of title contention at 219.

Gary Player, the little South African who is tuning up for the defense of his Masters title, birdied the final hole for a 71 that put him in third place and in a strongly challenging position at 212.

George Burns and Tom Purtzer were next at 213. Burns shot a 69 and Purtzer matched par 72. Jim Thorpe and Vance Heafner were at 214. Heafner shot a 70, Thorpe 71.

Seve Ballesteros, the young Spaniard who won this event a year ago, struggled to a 74 and 220.

"Just a good, solid round," said Renner. "If I'm pleased with anything it is that I put a little more distance between myself and — not Bobby — but the rest of the guys. Anyone back of Bobby will have to shoot a very good round, in the 60s, to catch us tomorrow. It doesn't figure that both of us will play badly."

Renner, a solid, third-place finisher in the Tournament Players Championship three weeks ago, birdied the second hole from four feet. But he bogeyed the fourth when his good approach bounced over the green into deep rough.

Renner got the stroke back with a 15-20 foot birdie putt on the 11th. He regained sole control of the top spot with a 3-iron shot that was dead on line for a hole in one but stopped six feet short of the cup on the 17th. He tapped it in for birdie-2.

Pirates Swing Big Sticks As William & Mary Defeated, 14-1

East Carolina University's Pirates had a field night Saturday evening as the Bucs ripped William & Mary, 14-1.

The Pirates pushed over six runs in the fourth inning to break the contest open. Leading 1-0 going into the inning the Pirates banged out seven hits, and nearly picked up Harrington Field's first inside-the-park homer in the process.

Billy Best, who already has cracked two career records for the Pirates, added a third during the night. Best with 408 at bats, has passed Geoff Beaston, who held the old record of 400; and also has passed base-stealing Eddie Gates, who had 35, as the fleet-footed junior now has 41.

Saturday night, he bounded out three hits, including a triple, to give him a total of 118, surpassing Pete Paradossi's total of 117, set last season.

It was Best's triple that nearly turned into the inside-the-park homer. The Indian centerfielder, going back on Best's hit to deepest center, slipped and fell down, as the speedy Pirate raced around the bases. As Best rounded third, the ball was on the way in, but Coach Monte Little gave him the go-ahead, and he was just nipped at the plate.

East Carolina got its first run in the opening frame. Mike Sorrell struck out, but the ball was in the dirt and got past the catcher and Sorrell was able to reach first safely. He stole second and scored when Best beat out a bunt and the ball was overthrown at first.

It stayed that way until the fourth. With one out, Butch Davis beat out a hit to deep short and Max Raynor followed with a single to left. Mike Sage singled to right, scoring Davis and Jerry Carraway singled, loading the bases. Bob Neff got a hit to center, bringing in Raynor and Sorrell beat out a slow-rolled down the third base line, scoring Sage. Best then watched Carraway score on a wild pitch before he hit his triple that scored Neff and Sorrell.

In the fifth, the Pirates added two more. Macon Moye beat out an infield hit and Butch Davis walked. Sage also walked, loading the bases. Neff's single to right brought in both Moye and Davis.

Three unearned runs scored in the sixth. Best reached on an error and Jay Carraway walked. Moye singled in Best, but was cut down in a double play. Raynor then cracked a two-run homer.

The final two came in the seventh. Neff walked and and Sorrell reached on a fielder's choice. Best was safe on an error, scoring Neff. Jay Carraway then doubled in Sorrell with the final Pirate run.

Starter Boby Patterson, who won his fourth game in five decisions, held William & Mary in check until the fifth with a double and then scored on a two-out triple by Jim Carter.

Patterson in his six innings on the mound, allowed four hits, all the Indians got, while he walked one and struck out 10.

Bill Wilder and Earle Mobley both came on for relief duty. Wilder went two innings, allowing only one base-runner, on an error, as he struck out two. Mobley fanned one in one perfect inning.

Best, Raynor and Neff each had three hits for the Pirates, while Moye and Jerry Carraway each had two.

The Pirates climbed to 13-10 with the victory, while the Indians settled to 6-16.

East Carolina is to face Davis and Elkin tonight at 7:30 p.m., then will entertain North Carolina on Monday night and UNC-Wilmington on Tuesday night.

Lefty Keeps 'Em Laughing

By JIM KYLE
Reflector Sports Writer

Maryland basketball coach Lefty Driesell, with the wit and savvy of a stand-up comedian, delivered a barrage of one-liners to an appreciative audience at the Greenville Sports Club's annual spring banquet at the Greenville Country Club last night.

The event, the culmination of the club's 1978-79 season, also honored area high school athletes and athletes from East Carolina University. Farmville Central's Donald Freeman and North Pitt's Cynthia Barnes were chosen as the outstanding area high school athletes, while Rosie Thompson and Zack Valentine were named the outstanding East Carolina University athletes.

Driesell, one of the winningest coaches in NCAA history, said, "To coach, you've got to be a fool. There is no off-season for coaches. Since the season's been over, I've been home about eight days."

There is a lot more to the profession than sitting on the bench during games, he said. And there is also a tremendous amount of pressure.

"Coaching is the only business in the world that everybody knows about. I'll bet everybody in this room can tell me how to coach. But it's different when you're on the bench pulling the strings."

One of Driesell's favorite topics was taking friendly shots at North Carolina rival Dean Smith. "Dean wants to put in a 30-second clock now that he doesn't have anybody to run the four-corners. I brought that idea up 10 years ago, but I think I'm going to vote against it now. Anything he wants, I'm generally against."

Driesell said that although he is thought of as a great recruiter, Smith's acutally the "premier" recruiter in the Atlantic Coast Conference with 10 former players who have been chosen to the NBA all-star team.

"North Carolina will probably be favored in the ACC next year. They've already signed two of the top players in the country, and Dean's slick.

"Now Duke: the pressure got to them last year, and I guess it will again this year. As for Norman, don't fell sorry for Norman (Sloan) don't feel sorry for Norman. He had a tough year, but he'll be back. (Virginia's Terry) Holland will have another good team and Wake has a young team, and they'll be back.

"We'll do all right, too."

Driesell said Maryland will have last season's ACC rookie of the year back, Buck Williams. "Buck won the rookie of the year, and that's extremely hard for someone from Maryland to do. The ACC is a North Carolina-oriented league. All the sportswriters who vote on these things are from North Carolina. That's why Dean always wins the coach of the year."

Driesell said later, "I get down on Dean and tease him a lot, but that's because he wins a lot. It's just like the ACC this year. A lot of people are getting down on them because they lost out in the NCAA and NIT. When somebody's good, you knock at them."

The ACC's lack of success in post-season tournament play this season is probably because the league "burns itself out" during the season and with its own tournament, Driesell commented. "The tournament's a drain. They ought to have the tournament at Christmas time and have a Christmas champion."

He also said the league should play its games on Friday and Saturday nights like the PAC-10, because it allows three days of hard practice during the week.

"The ACC is still a strong league," Driesell said. "If someone doesn't believe it, I tell them, 'You take your team and put it in the ACC, and I'll take my team and put it in your league and we'll see how they do.' I'd like to get out of the ACC, anyway."

Driesell said he is irked by the fact that some have labled him a great recruiter, but a poor coach. "I won 57 straight games in high school and won at Davidson with only 11 scholarships when everybody else had 20.

"You've got to be able to do both of them to win as many games as I have."

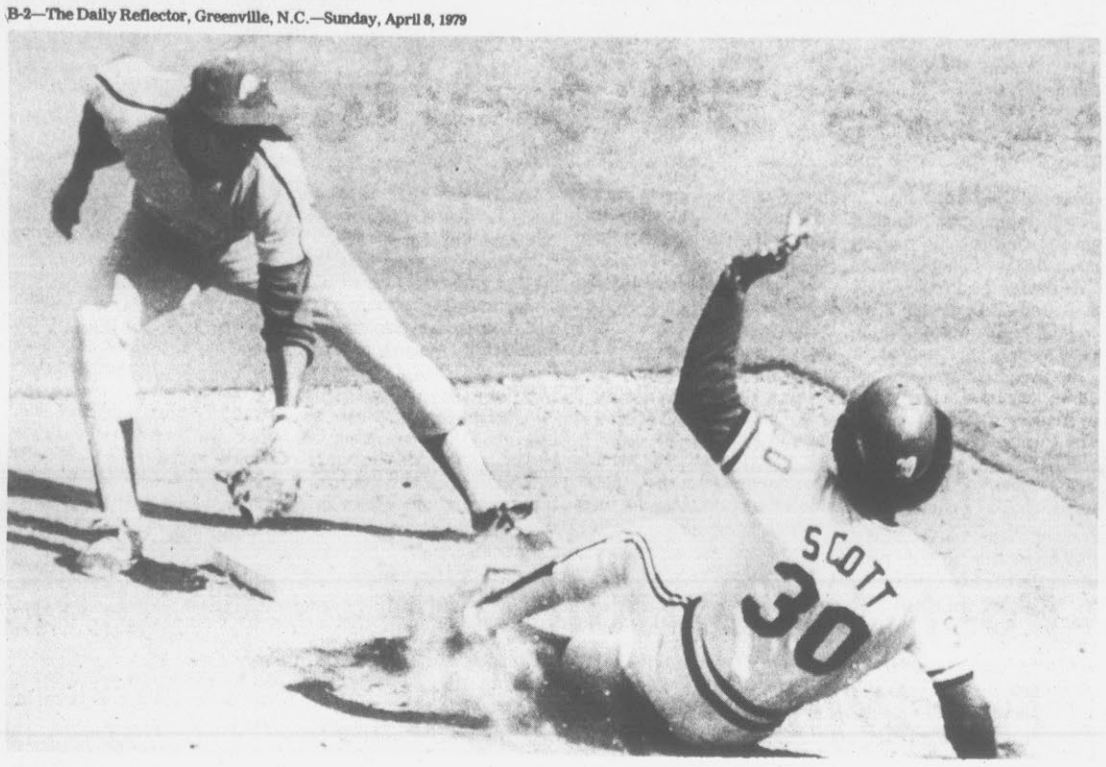

He was asked about recruiting this year and said he believes Maryland will land 7-3 Ralph Sampson, one of the most sought-after players in the country. "Someone told me, "Moses (Malone) almost led you to the promised land, maybe Sampson can.'" Malone, a star NBA player, signed with Maryland, but went pro before college.'

One of the great joys of his profession, Driesell said, is the chance to work with young people. "They're solid people, they know where they're going and they've got their heads screwed on straight. You'd be amazed at how solid young people are nowadays and you'd be very, very proud of them."

Cardinals Rally On Reitz' Hit To Defeat Philadelphia By 3-2

By PAUL LEBAR
AP Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — "I was just trying to punch at it," said St. Louis Cardinals' third baseman Ken Reitz. "It shows you don't have to swing that hard to hit the ball."

Reitz' hit, which carried to the left center-field wall, drove home George Hendrick from second base with the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning as the Cardinals beat the Philadelphia Phillies 3-2 Saturday.

Pete Vuckovich allowed only four hits — none after the fourth inning — as the Cards beat Philadelphia for the second day in a row.

The big right-hander, however, didn't realize he had held the Phillies hitless over the last five innings. "I was simply concentrating on getting the ball from the mid-thigh down. I didn't feel I was really popping it in there — I just wanted to keep the ball down.

"The fact that I was unaware of holding them hitless after the fourth shows that I was concentrating. It's good that I don't know those kind of things out there. Concentration is the key."

Greg Luzinski and Mike Schmidt hit successive home runs in the fourth to stake the Phils to a 2-0 lead. Both blasts were hit to virtually the same spot in the left-field bleachers, more than 400 feet away.

Following the Phils' homers, Garry Maddox reached on a throwing error by shortstop Garry Templeton, then Vuckovich retired 17 of the next 18 batters he faced. The only Philadelphia baserunner after the fourth was Mike Schmidt, who coaxed a walk in the sixth. Vuckovich then retired the last 10 batters he faced.

Starter Randy Lerch, who pitched the first eight innings, escaped several tight situations when the Cardinals couldn't capitalize on scoring opportunities.

Baltimore Tops White Sox, 6-3

BALTIMORE (AP) — Rick Dempsey snapped a sixth-inning tie with a two-run double and scored on Al Bumbry's single, keying a four-run rally that gave the Baltimore Orioles a 6-3 victory over the Chicago White Sox Saturday.

The Orioles had tied the score at 3-3 when Gary Roenicke was struck in the face by a pitched ball from reliever Lerrin LaGrow with the bases loaded.

Rich Dauer hit into a double play, cutting down the runner at the plate, but Dempsey bounced a ground-rule double over the center-field fence. Bumbry, who walked to force in a fifth-inning run, then singled to finish LaGrow.

Mike Flanagan, a 19-game winner last season, earned the victory with three innings of relief from rookie Sammy Stewart.

Chicago scored a run in the fourth on a sacrifice fly by Junior Moore, who also singled home one of the two sixth-inning runs. The other run scored on a single by Alan Bannister.

Roenicke suffered a severely lacerated lip and was taken to a nearby hospital for plastic surgery.

Ken Forsch Hurls No-Hitter At Braves; Earliest Ever In Majors

HOUSTON (AP) — Ken Forsch of the Houston Astros pitched the earliest no-hitter of any major league season Saturday night, beating the Atlanta Braves 6-0 and joining his brother, Bob, among no-hit hurlers.

It is the first time that two brothers have hurled major league no-hitters. Bob, of the St. Louis Cardinals, did it last April 16, beating the Philadelphia Phillies 5-0.

Ken, at 32, three years older than Bob, missed perfection by only two Atlanta batters. He walked leadoff hitter Jeff Burroughs in the second inning on a 3-1 pitch and Barry Bonnell with two out in the eighth, also on a 3-1 pitch.

Ken's no hitter was the earliest ever pitched in major league history. Bob Feller of the Cleveland Indians pitched one on opening day in 1940 — but the date was April 16, the same as Bob Forsch's date.

The previous earliest no-hitter was pitched on April 14, 1917, by Ed Cicotte of the Chicago White Sox, who beat the St. Louis Browns 11-0 in St. Louis.

The previous earliest National League no-hitter was pitched on April 15 twice.

First, Leon Ames of the New York Giants did it for nine innings against the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1909 but gave up a hit in the 10th and wound up losing 3-0 in 13 innings. Then in 1915, Rube Marquard of the Giants beat the Dodgers 2-0.

Ken Forsch, a 6-foot-4, 215-pound right-hander and a 10-year major leaguer, all with the Astros, struck out three Atlanta batters and allowed seven balls to be hit to the outfield, six to center field.

He was in command throughout. Not one batter came close to getting a hit. Every out was routine. The closest thing to a hit came in the fourth inning when Glenn Hubbard hit a sharp grounder that Houston third baseman Enos Cabell fielded on one hop. His throw to first beat Hubbard by more than two strides.

The no-hit performance was all the more remarkable in that until Friday night Forsch was listed as only a questionable starter for the game because of a swollen insect bite on his left elbow which he suffered April 3 against Montreal in his final exhibition outing — a game in which he allowed 13 hits in seven innings.

Parker Leads Pirates Past Montreal, 7-6

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Steamrolling Dave Parker scored the winning run with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning in a jarring home-plate collision with catcher Gary Carter to give the Pittsburgh Pirates a 7-6 victory Saturday over the Montreal Expos.

There were two errors on the play, which resulted in the winning run by Parker. The Pirates' outfielder rammed into Carter while wearing the football-type helmet he has used on the basepaths since fracturing his cheekbone in a home-plate collision last season with New York Mets catcher John Stearns.

After the Expos scored four runs in the top of the ninth to take a 6-5 lead, Pirates pinch-hitter John Milner singled with one out and Parker walked on four pitches from losing reliever Elias Sosa. Bill Robinson then flied out and pinch-runner Matt Alexander took third on the play..

Willie Stargell followed with a bouncer to Sosa, who dropped the ball, fell down, then threw wildly past first base. Alexander scored and Parker was waved home.

Carter caught the relay throw well ahead of Parker's arrival and applied a two-handed tag — but Parker knocked the ball loose and was called safe by minor league umpire Joe Schratz.

Manager John McNamara of Cincinnati was the catcher for one of his pitchers, Fred Norman, when both played for Binghamton of the Eastern League.

Two more fumble recoveries put the Purple in great field position, at the 28 and the 27, but both times they failed to score. A third fumble recovery gave Purple the ball on the Gold 24, and on the first play, Green hit Washington in the end zone for the score, making it 13-0 with 4:21 left in the half.

The Gold then drove to the Purple 43 before Andre Bentley intercepted and return it 30 yards to the Gold 33. From the 31, Lamm kicked his 47-yarder with just seven seconds left for a 16-0 lead.

An early interception set up the only Gold touchdown in the third period, as Thomas McLaurin returned a Green pass 26 yards to the Purple 42. Stewart finished up the six-play drive with a 16-yard run around the left side for the score. A two-point try failed, and with 9:17 left, it was 16-6.

The Purple marched 77 yards in nine plays with Sutton cracking over from the two to match the score. With 5:34 left, that made it 23-6. Key plays on the drive included a 12-yarder by Collins, a 14-yarder by Sutton and an 18-yarder by Green.

The next possession saw the Purple go 64 yards in 15 plays for its final score. That ended when Collins went in through the middle of the line from the seven with 9:09 left.

Defensively, Gold linebacker Chuck Jackson was credited with 20 tackles, while McLaurin, from the backfield had 17, Brian McDaniel had 14, tackle Noah Clark had 12 and middle guard John Hallow had ten.

Pirates, Britt Slip Past Campbell

First Choice The Celtics

East Carolina ace Mickey Britt might have been excused Friday night in the first inning if he began to wonder if he were cursed.

The Pirate hurler, who has quietly moved past everyone in career victories, and is well on the way to setting every career hurling record, gave up an unearned run to Campbell, then saw them score an earned run in the second as the Bucs fell behind 2-0.

Britt has been the hard-luck pitcher for the Pirates so far this year, losing five times, more than in his first two years combined. Four of those five losses were by one run, usually an unearned one.

But this time, the Pirates came back, tieing it up in the third, then taking the lead for good in the sixth as they presented Britt with his third win of the year, 5-2.

It wasn't a pretty win either for the Pirates or Britt, but it was a good one. Britt was tagged for nine hits in the game, but only twice did two of them come in the same inning. He struck out five and walked two.

"I've got to admit that I was a little worried when that first run came around," Coach Monte Little said. "But we got back under control and pulled it out and I'm thankful for that."

Britt, in his junior season, is making a major assault on the Pirate record book. He's now up to 251⅓ innings pitched, second only to Ron Hastings, who had 260 in 1968-71. His 22 victories is two more than Pete Conaty's old mark of 20.

His nine losses ties Bill Godwin for second place behind Hastings' 12. He has 148 strikeouts and trails leader Hal Baird, now the Pirate associate coach by just 38. He has 74 walks, placing him third on the all-time list, 14 behind leader Conaty. He has allowed 81 runs, just 16 less than Conaty. His 64 earned runs allowed ties him for Conaty's record, and he has allowed 204 hits, surpassing old record-holder Hastings, who had 184.

Campbell started the scoring in the first inning, getting an unearned run. Bryan Smith led off with a fly ball to left. Raymie Styons, playing that position for the first time at East Carolina, started in on the ball, then chased back after it, only to have it go just over his head for a double. Eddie Hanks than reached on an error that allowed Smith to score from second.

Only one other Camel reached second base the rest of the night, as the Pirates pulled off two doubleplays along the way.

The Pirates were held in check for the first two innings, but took advantage of Camel mistakes to push over two unearned runs in the third. Jerry Carraway led off, reaching on an infield hit. He was safe at second when the covering second baseman missed tagging the base on Bob Neff's grounder to short, leaving both runners safe. Mike Sorrell reached on catcher's interference, loading the bases. Best grounded back to the mound, forcing Carraway at the plate, but Styons slapped a single into left, scoring both Neff and Sorrell to tie it at 2-2.

The Pirates didn,t get another chance until the sixth, and they made it pay off for two more runs, both again unearned. Styons reached on an error and Macon Moye, who saw a seven game hitting streak end in the game, walked. Both moved up on a passed ball, and Butch Davis reached on an error, with both runners scoring.

A freak double play ended the rally. Mike Sage went on to reach on another error and Rick Derechailo grounded back to third. After faking Davis back to the bag at third, the fielder threw to second to get Sage. The throw to first for the attempted double play was not in time, but Davis had broken for the plate on the throw to second. The relay from first was in time to get him sliding in home.

The seventh saw the Pirates get their final run of the game—the only earned one. With one down, Best singled and stole second. Styons walked, but was cut down at second on Moye's grounder to the mound. Moye then took off for second and pulled up halfway as Best broke for the plate. The relay to home was not in time, and both runners advanced safely.

The win boosted the Pirate record to 12-10, while Campbell fell to 11-15-1.

Bucs To Face Eagles

The Kinston Eagles professional baseball club will host East Carolina in an exhibition game Thursday, April 12 at Grainger Stadium in Kinston.

The game, slated to begin at 7:30 p.m., is being held by the Eagles in conjunction with the Kinston Jaycees and the Kinston High School Booster Club. All gate receipts will be donated to the high school athletic department for the purchase of athletic equipment.

Tickets for the event will be $2 in advance and $3 at the gate. Advance tickets may be purchased from any Kinston Jaycee or Booster Club member.

The exhibition game cannot be rescheduled in the event of a rainout since the Eagles open their regular Carolina League season the following night, so no rain checks can be issued.

Coach Monte Little of ECU and Manager Duane Larson of the Eagles have promised to pull no punches in the game, Eagle owner Ray Kuhlman said.

Pack Can't Hold Tiger

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The score was 23-8 in the eighth inning and the North Carolina State baseball team was glad the long afternoon was nearly over.

But Clemson, undefeated in the Atlantic Coast Conference, added 18 insurance runs in the ninth inning to humiliate the hapless Wolfpack 41-9 Friday in a conference game.

"I couldn't tell my guys to go up there and make outs," said Clemson coach Bill Wilhelm. "We try to emphasize for them to bear down all the time."

And bear down they did as center fielder Neil Simons stroked three home runs, including a grand slam in the ninth.

The Tigers battered five N.C. State pitchers for 27 hits, including six home runs. Clemson gained the upper hand in the first inning with five runs.

N.C. State managed six runs through the first four innings.

But Clemson sent 22 men to bat in the ninth inning — the fourth time in the contest that the entire order batted in one inning — as the Tigers put together the 18-run outburst.

Clemson pitcher Bobby Kenyon picked up the win to boost his record to 3-1, while Wolfpack starter Doug Huffman (5-1) was tagged with loss.

The Tigers improved to 23-6 overall and remain undefeated in the ACC at 7-0. The Wolfpack fell to 17-6 and 2-2.

Errors Help Expos To Win

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

A team that led the National League with 167 errors last season, the Pirates took up their butter-fingered habits again Friday, making five miscues while dropping a 3-2, 10-inning decision to the Montreal Expos.

"That's what we didn't want to do — play like we did last year," Phil Garner said.

Garner was among the Pirate culprits in their season opener, played in cold, gusty weather at Three Rivers Stadium. Frank Taveras, Dave Parker, Willie Stargell and Dale Berra also made errors as the temperature plunged to 31 degrees.

"I hope it was the cold, the wind, the bad hops, whatever," said Garner, who made his error in the ninth inning after switching from third base to shortstop.

Pittsburgh Manager Chuck Tanner hoped his team wasn't reverting to last season's character.

"That's hard. That's not good," he said. "But those things happen and one game does not make or break a season."

In other National League games, the San Francisco Giants whipped the Cincinnati Reds 7-2; the St. Louis Cardinals routed the Philadelphia Phillies 8-1; the Houston Astros edged the Atlanta Braves 2-1 and the Los Angeles Dodgers routed the San Diego Padres 10-1.

Tenth-inning errors by Stargell and Berra resulted in an unearned run that gave the Expos their victory over the Pirates. With the score tied 2-2 in the 10th, Andre Dawson was hit by a pitch from reliever Kent Tekulve.

Dawson took second when Tekulve's pickoff throw got by Stargell at first base. He advanced to third on a groundout and scored when Ellis Valentine's bouncer was muffed by Berra at third.

"I think our speed had a lot to do with their miscues," said Expo Manager Dick Williams. "Valentine was running hard to first base, so Berra tried to rush the play."

Reliever Elias Sosa held Pittsburgh to one hit over the last two innings and got the victory.

Giants 7, Reds 2

Bill Madlock drove in three runs and scored three as San Francisco beat Cincinnati for the second straight night. After Madlock singled home the Giants' first run in the fourth, Darrell Evans capped the rally with a run-scoring double. Dan Driessen homered for the Reds in the fifth before Evans' RBI single in the sixth boosted San Francisco into a 3-1 lead. The Giants put the game away with a four-run ninth keyed by Madlock's two-run triple.

Cardinals 8, Phillies 1

Ken Reitz and Tony Scott each collected three hits and drove in three runs apiece, leading St. Louis over Philadelphia behind John Denny's five-hitter.

Reitz' double and two singles, and Scott's single, double and triple highlighted an 11-hit St. Louis attack off Philadelphia left-hander Steve Carlton and reliever Doug Bird as the Cardinals won their opener for the fourth straight year.

Astros 2, Braves 1

Enos Cabell drove in two runs with a first-inning single off Atlanta's Phil Niekro and Houston made it stand up for a season-opening victory over the Braves.

Dodgers 10, Padres 1

Joe Ferguson slugged a grand-slam homer and Reggie Smith belted a three-run homer to lead Los Angeles over San Diego. Los Angeles right-hander Don Sutton scattered six hits for his first victory of the season, giving up only a first-inning run to the Padres.

Ferguson hit his grand slam in the first inning off loser Randy Jones as the Dodgers took a 5-1 lead. Smith homered in the fourth off reliever Mark Lee as Los Angeles scored five more times.

Carew's Hits Little Help For California

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Minnesota's first baseman went 2-for-4 and delivered a key single.

No, it wasn't Rod Carew, the ex-Twin and perennial American League batting king. Carew went 3-for-5 Friday night and drove in two runs, but it didn't help his new team, the California Angels, who were drubbed by the homer-happy Seattle Mariners 14-6.

But Ron Jackson, who came over from California in the Carew deal and has taken over the first base job Carew vacated, tied the score with a single and scored on Glenn Adams' double during a three-run sixth-inning rally that gave the Twins a 5-3 victory over the Oakland A's in the opening game for both teams.

In the only other AL game, the Baltimore Orioles downed the Chicago White Sox. Texas and Detroit were postponed for the second day in a row by inclement weather.

"Rod Carew is Rod Carew and I'm Ron Jackson and I try not to worry about it," Jackson said. "I play a different type of game than Rod Carew. Rod Carew is a seven-time batting champion and I haven't won a batting championship yet, so I just try and do the best I can.

"I can just feel the pressure on me, though. I'm batting cleanup and I'm going to be the big guy in the lineup that everyone is going to be looking for to do good. I felt like I was the one who had to get the team going. Tonight, I drove in the first run and after that we broke it open. As long as you get two hits every night you have to be happy; I don't care how you get them."

Mariners 14, Angels 6

Ruppert Jones hit two home runs as Seattle collected a club record 17 hits and 14 runs for its second straight victory over the Angels. The expansion Mariners, in their third season of existence, set another club mark by erupting for nine runs in the second inning as they chased California starter Nolan Ryan. Seattle sent 14 batters to the plate against three California pitchers in pounding out seven hits, still another team record.

Orioles 5, White Sox 3

Rich Dauer's two-run single keyed a three-run Baltimore rally in the second inning and Jim Palmer hurled a three-hitter as Orioles Manager Earl Weaver notched the 1,000th victory of his major league career. Weaver is the 31st manager to reach that plateau and it ruined the managerial debut of Chicago's Don Kessinger.

Rampants Slip Past Eagles By 5-4

Rose High's baseball team narrowly averted its second defeat in as many days Friday afternoon as Skip Topping hit a sacrifice fly with one out in the bottom of the seventh to plate Mike Campbell with the winning run in a 5-4 victory over Northeastern.

Topping's RBI, which came on a long fly to left field, atoned for the catcher's throwing error in the top of the inning which allowed the Eagles to regain the lead after the Rampants had taken it for the first time in the sixth.

That put Rose down 4-3 going into the bottom of the seventh, but starting pitcher Kenneth Meekins walked the first two Rampant batters, Junior Neal and Mike Campbell. Meekins was pulled in favor of Eric McDaniels, who walked Mark Shank before getting a strikeout.

With the bases loaded, Ronnie Chapman waited out a walk to force pinch runner Robert Morehead across with the tying run. That brought up Topping, who won the game with his fly ball to left.

"We were very fortunate to win," Rampant coach Ronald Vincent admitted after the game. "The thing that bothers me is that we're making great defensive plays, but still having breakdowns sometimes on routine situations." Three errors in the top of the seventh very nearly cost the Rampants the game.

Nonetheless, Vincent was happy to get back on the winning track after Thursday's heartbreaking 2-1 loss to Rocky Mount, the team's only loss of the season. "I was real pleased with the effort. I would have been very easy for our guys to lay down after yesterday, especially going into the bottom of the seventh. But we've just got some guys that won't quit."

The Rose hitting continues to be a problem, Vincent said. The Rampants had only four hits off the Eagle pitchers. "We swung the bats a little better today, but we still aren't hitting good enough. Coach (Robert) Carraway is spending a lot of time with the hitters and we're going to come out of it."

Northeastern took an early 2-0 lead in the game, despite the fact that the Rampants had runners in scoring position in both the first and second innings.

The first Eagle run came in the second when Miles Brite reached on a drag bunt with one away and stole second. He scored on a single to left by Dwayne Crank.

In the third, McDaniels reached on a broken bat single to left. He was sacrificed to second by Bion Jolley and went to third on a wild pitch. Meekins knocked him in with a sacrifice fly to left.

The Rampants got on the scoreboard in the fourth with a run by courtesy runner Morehead. He came after Chapman led off the frame with a walk. He stole second and went to third on a wild pitch. Topping hit a ground ball to third and Chapman was thrown out in a close play at the plate.

Morehead came in to run for Topping, who reached first safely on the fielder's choice, and he scored from there on Barrett's double down the left field line to make it 2-1.

Rose tied the game in the next inning. Neal led off with a base hit to left. He moved to second on a balk and to third on Campbell's infield out. A second balk sent him home with the tying run.

A throwing error allowed the Rampants to take the lead in the sixth inning. With two away, Barrett walked and stole second. Mike Williams then grounded to short for an apparent third out, but the throw pulled the first baseman off the bag and Barrett raced home.

The Rampants held a victory celebration as Barrett crossed the plate, but it proved to be a little premature as the Eagles wouldn't lie down and die in the seventh.

Crank reached on a fielding error by the Rose shortstop and Hoppy Haines was sent in as a pinch runner. Haines went to second as pinch hitter Danny Brite hit a sacrifice bunt.

That brought up Jerry McGee, who singled to center field, plating Haines. The throw from center came to Topping, who tried to gun down McGee going to second, but threw the ball back into center field and McGee came all the way in.

After a walk, Rose starter Lindsey Winstead, who picked up his fourth straight win, got the next two outs with little difficulty and Rose won it in the bottom of the inning.

The Rampants, now 7-1 overall and 3-1 in Division I, will travel to play Wilson Beddingfield Tuesday.

CORNER OF GREENVILLE AND ARLINGTON BOULEVARDS

FACED WITH INCREASING financial difficulties, the N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission is expected to begin cutbacks in personnel and services on July 1 if its financial picture does not improve by then.

A tentative plan calls for a reduction of 33 in the Commission's staff of 430. In addition, all enforcement officers would be put on a four-day week of 10-hour days and be assigned two to a vehicle.

The program also calls for suspension of operations of the Waynesville fish hatchery and a 30 per cent curtailment in the trout-stocking program, an Associated Press story said earlier this week.

The proposed cutbacks would include a reduction of 19 in the enforcement staff, the elimination of the positions of 11 wildlife technicians in the game divisions and the elimination of most cooperative research projects, which would mean a halt to most of the research the commission is now doing. The cutbacks total about $1.4 million a year.

The Commission, which is supported mainly from the proceeds of hunting and fishing license sales, had considered asking the General Assembly to boost license costs, but rejected the proposal after hunters and fishermen registered strong opposition.

There are, however, four other measures before the legislature that would bring increased revenue:

☐ The issuance of a state waterfowl hunting stamp at $3.25 apiece, which would bring in $90,000 to $95,000.

☐ The requirement of tagging of fur pelts and a tax on fur dealers, which would bring in an estimated $125,000 to $150,000.

☐ An income tax checkoff which would allow taxpayers to designate portions of their refund checks for non-game functions, which could raise about $200,000 a year.

☐ An increase in motorboat registration fees from $4 to $5.50 for one year and from $7.50 to $13 for three years, which would raise about $200,000.

Sport Flounder Minimum Abolished

The state Marine Fisheries Commission recently changed the minimum flounder regulation so that sport fishermen will no longer have to worry about catching small flounder.

The old regulation, which set an 11-inch minimum on flounder, was designed as a conservation measure for commercial fishermen, but also put a potential hardship on sportsmen.

For this reason, the Commission changed the regulation so that the minimum size of 11 inches applies only if a person buys or sells the flounder. The sport catch is a small fraction of the total flounder catch.

Bear Grass Rallies, 6-5

BEAR GRASS — Bear Grass High School rallied for six runs in the sixth inning to squeeze out a 6-5 win over Aurora Friday night.

Aurora pushed ahead with one in the third. Lewis walked and moved up on a wild pitch and a hit by Stewart. Hollowell then singled Lewis in.

Aurora added two more in the fifth. Blount walked and Toler singled. Both scored on Dixon's double.

The Trojans picked up two more in the top of the sixth for a 5-0 lead. Clayton walked and Stewart singled. Hollowell's hit loaded the bases and two came in on Blount's hit.

Then, in the bottom of the sixth, Bear Grass rallied for six runs to win it. Clay Gardner singled and William Roberson singled, both advancing on an error on the play. Clayton Cowen walked and Jeff Harrison singled in Gardner. Bob Peele and Jackie Harrison both walked, forcing in two more runs. Jesse Bullock singled in the fourth run, but Peele was cut down. After a wild pitch, David Bowen doubled in the final two runs.

Gardner and Roberson led the Bear Grass hitting with two each, while Stewart and Hollowell had two for Aurora.

The Bears are now 2-4 and play host to Jamesville on Tuesday.

Knights Look For Improved Teams

By JIM KYLE
Reflector Sports Writer

The baseball and softball programs at Greenville Christian Academy are both just in their second year, but big improvements are expected from both teams this season, according to the coaches.

Baseball

The Knights are hovering around the .500 mark and looking for a winning season with the addition of several transfer players.

"We're doing pretty good for our second year," said coach Terry Lee. "We picked up a lot of new players from the public schools, which has helped us. We're still trying to build the program, but we've come a long way from last year."

Lee said the Knights' strengths lie in the infield and the pitching staff. The team has three good pitchers, a top-notch catcher and a real good defensive infield.

Hitting has been somewhat of a problem for the team, but Lee said, "we've come a long way in our batting from last year, too." Another weak area is the squad's outfield.'

Junior Richard Smith is a transfer player who is helhelping the team out this season. He is usually on the mound or in center field, but can play most any position, Lee said.

Freshman Troy Hudson starts at third and is batting around .540. He caught last season and is also used as a pitcher. "I'm looking for him to improve over the next three years," Lee said.

Softball

Nat Sutton inherited the softball program this season and said the Lady Knights should be 50 per cent better than last season.

The team is showing great enthusiasm and is working hard, Sutton said. It's potential is nearly unlimited. "I'd say in the next two or three years, they could be number one in the state because the potential is there."

Defense is a strong point for the Lady Knights and right now, Sutton said there are no glaring weaknesses.

Anchoring the infield are sophomore shortstop Melinda Peaden and junior first baseman Tammy Ross. Peaden is a good defensive player and Ross, although in her first season, has made only one error so far this season.

The starting pitcher is Mirinda Sutton, the coach's daughter. She is "very sharp and walks only one or two batters per game. She knows the strike zone and she knows the arch," Sutton said.

E.B. Aycock Takes Victory

GCA Drops Two To Falls Road

ROCKY MOUNT — Falls Road Academy took a pair of victories over Greenville Christian Friday afternoon, defeating the GCA softball team 13-10 and the baseball team 16-8.

Details of the games were not available.

Rumors, True Or False, Have Impact On Wall St.

By JOHN F. SIMS
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Greeks had a word for it.

Rumor, according to ancient Greek mythology, was a swift-footed, feathered monster with a sleepless eye under each feather and for each eye a tongue, a voice and an ear.

Rumor was the daughter of the god Earth and terrorized whole cities with a mixture of truth and falsehood.

Last year the Delaware governor told a news conference if certain steps were not taken, Delaware could become technically bankrupt.

A truncated version of his comments, heard on a radio broadcast a full 24 hours after he spoke, sent prices of gold, silver and platinum soaring on the New York market.

Why? What relation is there between the solvency of the state of Delaware and the price of gold?

Only a commodity trader could tell you.

A story quoting the governor was moved on UPI wires, and next morning radio newscasters used the story.

Within a period of about two hours after the precious metals market opened, UPI received more than 30 telephone calls seeking confirmation of what the Delaware governor had said.

Eventually, this reporter asked one caller, a Wall Street securities analyst, what the fuss was all about.

"The market is going absolutely bananas because of that report," the analyst said. When asked why, the analyst replied, "Who knows?"

Apparently the market rumor-mill had turned the governor's comments into a report that Delaware was bankrupt. If such had been the case, one could expect movement in bonds issued by the state or by cities within the state.

But gold?

"Commodity traders are lunatics," said one securities analyst who preferred, for obvious reasons, to remain anonymous. "They'll react to anything. If you told a commodities trader a great white shark had been found in the East River, he'd use it as a reason to discount the price of silver."

Commodities traders defend themselves on the grounds they have to keep up with developments in the news. They always claim they know what's going on two or three days before the press finds out and maybe a week before the general public hears.

And they are not alone.

Very recently, prices on the New York stock market dropped in reaction to a report that China had invaded Vietnam. The market dropped again three days later when the invasion actually occurred. It fell again on a rumor the Soviet Union had invaded China. The last has not yet occurred.

The previous week the market reacted to a rumor that the new Iranian leader, Ayatollah Khomeini, had been assassinated.

Traders usually don't bother to check rumors. It's all grist to their mill. By the time a rumor is clarified, the market is reacting to something else.

"On the foreign exchange market, the short-term is five minutes from now and the long-term is tomorrow," a foreign exchange trader explained. "We can't take the risk of being behind the news. If a story turns out to be incorrect, the market will adjust."

The only trouble with that philosophy, generally shared by all traders, is that people lose money on the market fluctuations. And when you're talking about foreign exchange, even the stability of nations potentially hangs in the balance.

"The market is a mindless animal, not a rational, logical being," he told UPI. "Since traders are rational beings they always want reasons why something happens and they begin looking around for explanations.

"It's the rumor that follows the action, not the other way around. This is why insiders always know the rumors — they are the first to ask the questions. This makes the rumor a self-perpetuating mechanism."

Early in March, in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, a 10-minute plunge in the feeder cattle market was linked to a misinterpretation of a routine announcement on meat import quotas.

One South Dakota broker who declined to identify himself said he lost $17,000.

Bud Bitner, an American Agriculture Movement member from Walsh, Colo., said activist farmers in Washington, reading the Federal Register, discovered an imports announcement. They did not know immediately that the news was two months old and they misinterpreted the bureaucratic language, he said.

"We got calls from Sturgis and Canton and we called people in Chicago who said they knew nothing about it," commodities broker Gordy Pederson said. "But within a period of 10 minutes, feeder cattle fluctuated by $3.00 — that's $1,260 a load. Ridiculous."

Instead of assigning beef import quotas to nations, the government works out what are called "voluntary restraint agreements" to split shares of foreign beef shipments to the United States.

In order to pave the way for the voluntary restraint agreements, the government suspends quotas. The Federal Register language said "suspension is necessary" because beef supplies were inadequate to meet domestic demands at reasonable prices.

Bitner said there was "a genuine belief that total suspension had occurred."

He said the rumor spread so far that an Australian embassy official called a Washington reporter at home for confirmation or denial.

"There's no way you can define how the rumors get started," he said. "They tend to spring from some people following a stock; they will talk to someone who thinks the firm will raise its dividend or declare a stock split. Then it will get passed along to the point that the market thinks it is fact. This can have a substantial impact on a stock."

Perhaps the one good thing about rumors is that they have a half-life shorter than the fleetest radioactive particle.

"Rumors tend to die quickly," Gordon said. "But they can persist, especially about companies. Companies, under law, must come out with a statement about activity in its stock and this is one reason the rumors are short-lived.

Early Enrollment Aimed At Gifted

SEATTLE (AP) — A 10-year-old freshman at the University of Washington is the youngest college student in the United States.

A 13-year-old girl praises the university's Philosophy Department and says she has come to enjoy the humor of the ancient Greeks.

Skipping gifted children ahead is better than holding them back with their own age group, says Dr. Hal Robinson of the Child Development Research Group.

"In the old one-room schoolhouse, kids weren't segregated by age," said Robinson. "They were allowed to work at their own speed. It's only since the growth of the urban school that this bureaucratic system of age segregation has become established."

In one case, a mother called Robinson because Iowa school authorities had told her to remove all books from her 18-month old child's reach because the youngster had begun to read.

She followed their advice, and the toddler started sneaking in episodes of Sesame Street. The mother wanted to know if she should unplug the TV, too.

Robinson explains that early reading and exceptional problem-solving skills are signs that a child may be intellectually gifted.

All of the students enrolled in the program scored higher than 80 percent of Washington's graduating high-school students on a state pre-college test.

The younger students haven't had problems making or maintaining friendships. Many of the girls say most of their friends are other university students. The boys say they have friends in their neighborhoods.

Robinson, who hopes to see the program expanded, believes there are many more gifted children "than anyone suspects."

"The standard bell-curve predicts that there should be three kids per 100,000. That's nonsense. We've found ten times that many."

He stressed that early enrollment did not encourage students to specialize.

The Mayor Is A Tax Scofflaw

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Of the 348 cases of property tax scofflaws in this neighbor city to Boston, one in particular has gotten lots of publicity — the mayor's.

Mayor Thomas Danehy owes the city about $40,000, says tax official Michael Moreau. Danehy said: "It's not that easy to come up with that kind of money." Moreau says the taxes were accumulated over five years by Danehy and his brother, John L. Moreau, a Middlesex County commisioner. The tax man also said the city will put a lien on two pieces of commercial property owned by the brothers if the debt is not erased within two weeks.

First Kiss, A Nosy Accident?

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. (UPI) — An anthropologist at Texas A&M University thinks he knows how and when kissing originated.

"Prehistoric societies didn't leave us any written records ... but we do know by 2000 B.C. something happened," says Vaughn M. Bryant. "By then, lovers in ancient India are depicted as rubbing and pressing their noses together.

"From what I can tell, two people must have been pressing their noses together one day, slipped, and discovered kissing," the anthropologist says. "They undoubtedly found that more enjoyable."

Citizens' Rate Postage Asked

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill which would guarantee lower mail rates for individuals willing to accept slower postal service has been introduced in Congress.

"It's time we treated individuals ... who are first-class mailers the same as we treat businesses — by providing them the option of sending their mail at a lower rate, if they want," said Rep. William D. Ford, D-Mich., the bill's chief sponsor.

Under the measure, citizens would be allowed to mail their letters, greeting cards and personal correspondence for substantially less than the present 15-cent first-class rate.

This "citizens' rate" would involve a "deferred level of service" in which a letter might take a few days longer to reach its destination.

But the postage rate would be only 11 cents, Ford explained.

Auto Dealer Candy Dykstra Was Born To The Role

By JOANNA FIRESTONE

EATON RAPIDS, Mich. (UPI) — Candy Dykstra was born with genes marked ambition, salesmanship and wheels.

The attributes helped make her the first woman awarded a car and truck dealership by Ford Motor Co. After only a year and a half, her business is thriving.

It's located on Main Street across from the Pickle Deli Restaurant in a folksy litte mid-Michigan town that bills itself as "the only Eaton Rapids in the world." It's the kind of place where you can park without worrying about meters and a lot of folks drive pickup trucks.

"I think salesmanship is innate," said Candy, granddaughter of a former Ford Motor executive and wife of the county sheriff. "I'm sure you can develop it to a certain extent, but you've got to have instinct. You've got to, like people, you've got to have the desire and you've got to be aggressive."

If her ambition and salesmanship is inbred, so is Candy's interest in anything on four wheels.

Her grandfather, the late John Dykstra, was a Ford president. Her father runs a profitable Ford dealership of his own just up the road in Lansing.

But the scrubbed-faced, pretty blonde who looks younger than her 30 years, didn't have her Eaton Rapids dealership — Candy Ford — served up on a silver platter. She began as a secretary-receptionist-clerk in her father's business in 1967, but her heart was in the showroom.

"I realized when I was 19 — going on 40 — that I wanted to be a dealer, but women didn't sell cars, women weren't dealers. They worked in the office, and that was that."

She said her surname was more of a hindrance than a help.

"Nobody'd let me sell cars," she said. "I was a Dykstra and they didn't want me to know what was going on in their dealerships."

Candy "knocked on every door in town" before she landed a sales job at a Lansing Oldsmobile-Chevrolet dealership. She remembers her first sale.

"It was a doctor, and I sold him an Olds '98. I didn't make any money on the deal and I went all the way to Detroit to pick up the car for him.

"I also remember the second one — I made money on that one. It was to a South American student. I guess I learned the first time that you don't eat on the exhilaration of a sale."

After four years of selling cars and repeated attempts to get her own business, Candy found a "sleeping dealership" in Eaton Rapids and Ford, cognizant of affirmative action, went along under its dealer development program.

"The program is primarily for younger people, people with ambition and promise but who don't have a lot of capital to start out with," Candy said. "They help you out with advice and stuff and get a share of the profits until you buy them out."

Although many women have inherited family dealerships or taken over for their dead husbands, Candy was the first woman ever awarded a dealership outright.

Ford told Candy she would be doing "a heck of a job" if she came through the first month $10,000 in the hole. Instead, she was $10,000 to the good.

"Candy just loves to make money," said her husband, Eaton County Sheriff Art Kelsey.

Under her direction, the dealership has increased business by about 600 percent over its previous owner. She hopes to have Ford paid off soon and already is building larger quarters on the edge of town she hopes will be ready by summer.

With four salesman and a staff of 25, Candy still does some of the selling herself.

"When I'm starvin', I'm out standin,'" she laughed.

"It's a very satisfied feeling, knowing they're happy with their investment and you're victorious over all the other people who were trying to sell them a car. I get a sick feeling in the pit of my stomach when I let a customer walk."

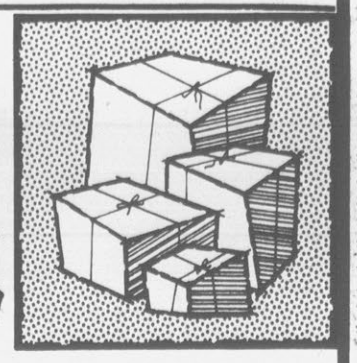

She also cuts her own television ads, a task she considers "worse than going to the dentist."

"But it's something people really remember," she said. "They all want to know, is there really a Candy?"

Sissy Farenthold Tries Stir Political Interest

By MIKE HENDRICKS
Associated Press Writer

AURORA, N.Y. (AP) — After stirring up Texas and national politics, Frances "Sissy" Farenthold is trying to whip up interest in politics among college women.

"Public life has really been an alien life to women," says Mrs. Farenthold, the first woman elected to the Texas Legislature, the first woman to have her name placed in nomination for the vice presidency and now the first woman president of Wells, a small century-old women's college.

"At Vassar, although I was a political science student, it was never broached that maybe I could run for office. It was not thought of. It was not traditional. I want to bring it to these students as a viable choice, and it will be a viable choice for them if they think of it early enough."

Wells was founded in this village on the banks of Cayuga Lake in the rural Finger Lakes region 110 years ago by Henry Wells, the man behind Wells Fargo and the American Express Co.

Today, the school enrolls about 500 women who pay $5,950 for a year of study at the school.

"I guess I relate to that now more than I ever did," Mrs. Farenthold says. "I did not know about Seneca Falls until 1973. That's how much it was ignored in the history books. I don't want that to happen to my students.

"This probably seems far removed from Texas politics, but I can see a direct relationship in what I saw in Texas and my concerns here. It's just a different level.

As president of Wells, Mrs. Farenthold says she wants to show the women students that they do not have to be limited in what they want to do with the rest of their lives.

"I feel very deeply about the role of women's colleges," she says. "We are in the midst of a revolution of change in women's role in society. It is our obligation to respond to that, and our opportunity.

"Invariably, you hear that one of the responsibilities of a liberal arts college is to educate its students for citizenship in a democracy. I want to bring that to a very practical level and relate it very specifically to young women. What a women's college should be is a way station to full integration into society."

When she arrived at Wells, Mrs. Farenthold took down the portraits of her 12 predecessors and moved out of the big, traditional office into one nearer the dorms.

She uses Henry Wells' original desk, and had a wood-burning stove installed in her office. In her economizing, she replaced sit-down meal service for students with a cafeteria.

On the academic front, Mrs. Farenthold established joint programs with other area colleges that allow Wells students to pursue degrees in engineering, business and other fields not considered women's work. She also started a program involving five women's colleges designed to encourage women to become politically active.

Mrs. Farenthold, 52, a lawyer from Corpus Christi, was a member of the Texas Legislature from 1968-72. She was a member of the liberal "Dirty 30" group which opposed some of the traditional interests.

In 1969, she was the only legislator to vote against a resolution commending President Johnson.

Mrs. Farenthold ran for governor in 1972 and 1976 and forced Democratic primary run-offs both times. In 1976, she narrowly lost the nomination to Preston Smith.

Can Save Many Babies Even When Formulas Fail

EDITOR'S NOTE — In this, the year of the child, there's a move afoot to save Third World newborns from malnutrition. Makers of baby formula say they have the solution. Critics say these companies only contribute to the problem.

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In Zambia, it is customary to decorate an infant's grave with his most valuable possessions. Some graves are adorned with baby bottles and empty tins of formula.

"It is sad," says a World Health Organization handbook, "to see so many children with the feeding bottle that may well have killed them put on their graves."

The haunting cemetery scenes capture the essence of a growing dispute over the marketing of infant formula — a powdered substitute for mothers' milk —in impoverished countries by corporations of the United States and other industrialized nations.

Used properly, infant formula can sustain life and promote growth. But when used improperly in the milieu of poverty, illiteracy and contamination afflicting many in the Third World, it can lead to malnutrition, disease and death.

"Bottle feeding is a relatively safe process in the developed world, but it can become deadly in countries where social and economic conditions make proper usage virtually impossible," says Leah Margulies. She is director of the Interfaith Center for Corporate Responsibility, a New York agency of the National Council of Churches of Christ, a leader in the campaign against formula promotion.

She and other critics note three major hazards of formula feeding in the Third World:

—Powdered formula must be mixed with water, and the water supply in much of the Third World is heavily contaminated.

—Bottles and nipples often are not properly sterilized.

—Once mixed, formula must be kept in a cool place, and refrigeration often is lacking.

In addition, formula is expensive — at about $1 a day it's more than some families earn — and in an effort to stretch a meager supply, mothers often dilute it so much that babies become malnourished.

Critics ascribe the trend to years of Western-style promotion tactics in the nearly 100 so-called developing nations of Africa, Latin America and Asia by companies in search of new markets.

They contend that with the drop in the birth rate and an increase of breast feeding in many industrialized nations these manufacturers need new outlets for formula. As a result of consumer advertising and promotion in hospitals and clinics, they say, mothers turn to formula because they think it is best for the infants or because hospitals and medical personnel don't encourage breast feeding.

Formula critics say they find this pattern in many parts of the Third World. Manufacturers give free samples of formula to hospitals and clinics; babies are started on formula from birth, and mothers are given samples as they leave the hospital. By this time, the mother's milk has dried up, so the family sacrifices other needs to spend its meager income on formula.

"I knew a mother of four children, all between the ages of 6 years to a few weeks who, when she had spent the available cash to buy baby formula, would lift up the lid (of the cooking pot) and say that the food would soon be ready. In the meantime, one by one the children would cry themselves to sleep," said Fatima Patal, a Canadian-trained nurse who has worked in Chile, Jamaica and Peru.

The companies say they support breast feeding and aim primarily for the urban, middle-and upper-class market and use of formula as a dietary supplement after three months of age.

"It does not make economic sense to go out into the rural areas where there is no market," says Henry Ciocca, a spokesman for Nestle.

Critics acknowledge that some mothers cannot breast-feed, sometimes because they are ill or severely malnourished themselves, or in some rare cases, because their babies are allergic to substances in mother's milk.

But many medical experts say that 95 percent of all mothers are physically able to nurse.

"The majority of women in developing countries, even if not as well-nourished as we would like, are able to breast-feed their infants well," says Dr. Derrick B. Jelliffe, a leading critic of the formula companies and an authority on pediatrics and nutrition in developing countries. Jelliffe is a professor and head of the division of population, family and international health at UCLA.

The four major companies targeted for criticism are Nestle of Switzerland, which has the largest share of the multi-million dollar Third World formula market, and three U.S. companies — Abbott Laboratories, maker of Similac; Bristol-Myers, whose Mead Johnson subsidiary of American Home Products Corp. and producer of the SMA, S-26 and Nursoy formula brands.

In addition to Nestle, several other European firms and at least four Japanese companies market formula in the Third World.

The leaders in the campaign against formula promotion are the Interfaith Center and INFACT, (for Infant Formula Action), a Minneapolis-based coalition of church activists and other groups opposed to formula marketing.

While INFACT has concentrated on Nestle, launching a boycott of all Nestle products, including candy and chocolate drink, church activists have bought stock in the U.S. companies so they can use stockholders' resolutions to push for reform of marketing practices.

While most companies say they have retrenched in their consumer advertising campaigns, they challenge the link drawn by critics between formula marketing and infant malnutrition and disease.

Nestle maintains that "there is no evidence to indicate that infant malnutrition has been increasing in Third World countries. ... What is known about Third World infant malnutrition can be summed up as follows: Lack of sufficient food after the baby's third month is a major cause of morbidity and mortality whether or not the infant is breast-fed; infants born into the higher socio-economic groups, whether bottle-fed or breast-fed, are healthier than infants in the lower socioeconomic groups; breast-fed babies appear to develop better and suffer from fewer illnesses than bottle-fed babies as long as the breast milk is available in sufficient supply; even where breast-feeding is universally practiced, as in poor traditional cultures, infant mortality is far higher than in urban areas where breast-feeding is on the decline."

Formula makers acknowledge that contamination and over-dilution occur, but they argue that this is a problem of poverty and ignorance and has little to do with their marketing practices.

They note that many impoverished Third World mothers bottle-feed a variety of fluids other than commercial formulas, such things as goat milk, flour and water paste, gruel and tea.

"Even when the risk of misuse is high, it is surely preferable to start off with a supplement which has a high nutritional value like infant formula, than with thin starchy gruels of little or no food value," says a Nestle publication.

Ms. Margulies agreed that bottle-feeding doesn't always mean formula-feeding and added an example of her own: The mother "who bottle-fed her baby with water thinking that the bottle and nipple by themselves had magical qualities."

Although the companies say they no longer advertise directly to the mothers, they promote formula within the medical profession by supplying free samples, posters, and booklets on formula use to nurses, doctors and hospitals. In addition, they have sponsored banquets and conferences for doctors and have donated air conditioners, incubators and other equipment for hospitals. Even baby bibs.

A wide range of manufacturers use similar methods to promote their products in the American medical community. But formula critics say U.S. health workers are more sophisticated about such sales pitches than their counterparts in the Third World.

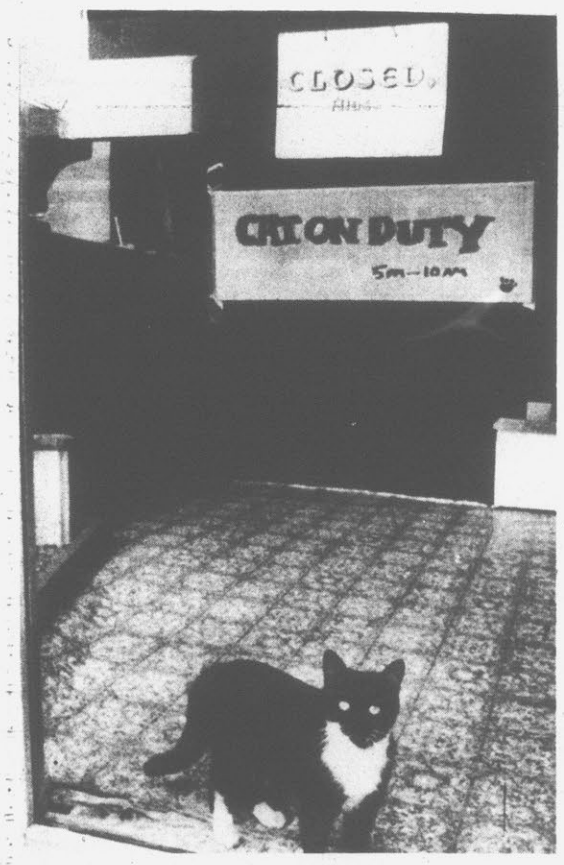

A handful of Third World nations are taking steps to promote breast-feeding and restrict formula promotion. Zambia and Niger allow formula to be sold only under a government label. Jamaica is restricting formula imports. Several countries have curbed the activities of the nurses or midwives employed by the corporations to teach mothers about infant care, including the use of formula.

California Democratic Reps. Ronald Dellums and George Miller are drafting legislation to restrict the export of American-made formula to the Third World.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., focused public attention on the issue with his health subcommittee hearings but chose not to proceed with legislation after persuading the major companies to support a World Health Organization conference exploring the problems in greater depth. That conference is scheduled in October in Geneva.

Business Jets Offer A Rich Market

By WALT SMITH

SAVANNAH, Ga. (UPI) — A new generation of luxury corporate jets will be unveiled in the next few months to meet the demand of executives for planes with intercontinental range, greater speed and plusher interiors.

Three companies have begun production of new models, ranging in price from $7 million to $8 million, in a fight to gain control of the most sophisticated and luxurious segment of the business jet industry.

In contrast, Lockheed-Georgia Co., long a major entry in the field with its four-engine JetStars, has announced it will suspend production — at least temporarily — at the end of the year.

The newest entry is the twin-engine Challenger, built by Canadair Ltd. It is a totally new plane being built in Montreal by a firm owned by the Canadian government. In addition, Gulfstream-American Corp., based in Savannah, is developing an improved Gulfstream III and the Falcon Jet Corp., of Teterboro, N.J., is producing the new Falcon 50.

J.B. Taylor, president of Canadair, said the unique aspect of the Challenger is that it was developed from scratch instead of modifying an existing aircraft. The first Challengers, costing $7 million, are scheduled for delivery next year and will carry 12-18 passengers, depending on cabin configuration.

"We brought over 200 corporate pilots in and they made a lot of recommendations," said Taylor. "Many of them were the first ones to order. They sort of felt like they were part of the program."

"It's really the first all new airplane in the sophisticated category in the last 10 years," he said.

Gulfstream-American, formerly Grumman American, also plans to deliver its first twin-engine Gulfstream IIIs next year with a price tag of $7.4 million for domestic sales and $7.5 million for foreign customers. It will replace the Gulfstream II, which has been in production for 12 years, and will have more speed, and better altitude capability and fuel economy. It will carry 14-19 passengers.

The first Falcon 50 flew from Chicago to Paris with passengers last September and Tom Turner, director of marketing, said the first deliveries of the three-engine plane, which will carry 10-12 passengers, are scheduled later this year at a price of $7.75 million furnished.

"I think the most significant aspect of the plane is that it has three engines," said Turner. "You can have conditions where even with one engine out, you can cross the Atlantic. We feel that the third engine gives more assurance of reliability on crossing long stretches of water or jungle to the executive."

Going against the trend, Lockheed-Georgia of Marietta, Ga., announced it was dropping out of the market to consider "both design improvements and new designs," as well as "renewed production of the present model."

Lockheed JetStar program manager W.B. Bullock said it is too soon to say if production will resume on the JetStar II.

"The thing that made us decide to change is that we weren't selling them like we should," admitted Bullock.

Unlike the other companies, the corporate jet business represents only a small percentage of the Lockheed revenue, with the major product being the huge C-130 transport plane.

The sales competition is keen.

"The customers are so demanding in the areas of service and support and Canadair is taking on all these things at once," said Falcon Jet spokesman Turner. "They've never built a business jet. They are not using an engine that is tried, and they've not built up a service fleet.

"I am positive the Falcon 50 will out perform the Challenger in all areas," he said.

At Canadair, Taylor said, "The way we're looking at it, we've got a whole new airplane in this category. We feel like we should have an active market for the next 10 years because we don't see anything coming along to compete with us."

Gulfstream pushes its experience in the industry. It says owners of the Gulfstream II are now ordering the new model. "We have quite a bit of repeat business," said Charles Vogeley, senior vice president for commercial jet sales. "Everyone that has sold a Gulfstream II has sold it for way more than the acquisition price."

Despite Lockheed's decision, Bullock joined executives of the other companies in optimism for the future of the sophisticated business jet market.

"There are about 3,000 business jets in service in the U.S. of all shapes and sizes," said Bullock. "That has grown very steadily at the rate of 200 airplanes a year. The price is not going up relatively any more than on anything else."

"We had one of the best years last year we've ever had," said Vogeley. "We sold a total of 43 Gulfstreams — 23 Gulfstream IIIs and 20 Gulfstream IIs — by far the biggest year we've ever had."

Vogeley said the business jet "certainly is not a pleasure tool of the chief executive officer as it may have been in the early days of business aviation. It's really got to be a business tool."

"The crowding of the airlines and the difficulty of getting from one spot to another has helped sales," said Turner. "For executives, time is money. Some executives tear themselves apart trying to keep companies viable and the executive jet is one way to utilize his time in a better way."

As for the price, Turner said, "If an executive wants to ride in a cabin of a certain size and fly at a certain speed to save time, he will have to pay the price."

"There are nine Gulfstreams in Africa," said Vogeley. "The rulers of many African nations have Gulfstream IIs — the Ivory Coast, Uganda, Morocco, Algeria. Basically, they are for transportation for the ministers of the rulers.

"For example, in Saudi Arabia, the King has a (Boeing) 747. The minister of petroleum and other ministers use Gulfstreams."

"There is more wealth being accumulated overseas," said Gulfstream President Allen Paulson. "The petroleum nations are the big buyers of Gulstreams."

Vogeley said Gulfstream once looked upon its potential U.S. customers as the Fortune 500 list of the nation's largest corporations. Now that has expanded to the "Fortune 1000."

"Let's face it," said Paulson. "They are a business tool and no longer a luxury. It just makes people more productive and they make money for the company."

Say Rowdyism Is Increasing

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

AMHERST, Mass (AP) — "Even up until around 11 o'clock it was quiet, and then, Boom!, they started pouring in...I couldn't believe the number of lacerations we had to handle that night."

An Army medic recalling Vietnam? No, just University of Massachusetts Health Center orderly Michael Hart talking about a Saturday night on campus.

University Police Chief Robert Joyce had heard there was a new wave of rowdiness on American campuses; it did not prepare him for what happened on one weekend last fall.

In the space of 57 hours his men answered more than 180 emergency calls and arrested 29 people — most of them drunk —on charges ranging from larceny and assault to disturbing the peace.

After the action died down it was estimated the vandals had cost the university and the people who pay its bills $15,000, one-tenth of the campus vandalism tab for all last year.

Who is to blame?

Everyone accuses "a small minority of students," and some also point to lax discipline, outsiders and alcohol.

Whatever the cause, random violence — a problem big-city high schools have been dealing with for years — has suddenly moved onto some of the nation's better quads and greens.

—In North Adams, a mill community in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, police describe state college dormitories and student apartments as "animal houses." Student-police tension peaked when a fake land mine was tossed at a police cruiser, causing the officer to crack up his squad car.

—About 500 students gathered at the University of Nebraska one night and began heaving things, such as a vending machine, into a bonfire. Police arrived and fighting broke out; 17 persons were arrested.

—The Dartmouth College faculty has asked for the closing of campus fraternities, saying they cause alcoholism and misbehavior.

"The '60s saw the death of the doctrine whereby colleges acted in loco parentis, in place of and with the authority of parents. Nothing has arisen in the '70s to take its place."

Also, some schools are getting more resident students from welfare or working-class neighborhoods with high crime rates and racial tensions, and, in some cases, Brown said, "violence came with them."

Trouble is not limited to those schools, however. At Wellesley College, a prestigious institution for women outside Boston, a student dance at Tower Court residence hall was ended early one night last fall by a fist fight.

Some administrators call drinking the major problem. "Alcohol is the real drug of abuse today," said UMass Dean of Students William Field, whose campus has 24,000 students.

Much of the trouble is caused by drunken non-students, referred to by a UMass spokesman as "people who consider UMass a good place to go for an exciting weekend."

Some people argue that not everyone should go to college, saying that those who are forced to do so may rebel by fighting and drinking and destroying.

Vets Mark 62nd Anniversary

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — At one time the members of a World War I society sipped wine from a silver loving cup in memory of their deceased comrades.

But the honored dead of the Society of the Last Man of Forty Veterans are too many now, the survivors too few. Now the sips are simulated.

Henry Abbott, 83, of Philadelphia, has to make do with milk in deference to an uneasy stomach.

But for two hours it was almost 1917 again. Four of the six surviving members got together for their 47th reunion on Friday, the 62nd anniversary of American entry into World War I. Two members, Charles W. Miller, 81, of Tomah, Wis., and Clarence Evans, 88, of St. Petersburg, Fla., were unable to attend.

The group was organized in 1932 by 40 members of Philadelphia's Premiere Voiture de La Societe des 40 Hommes et 8 Chevaux — a society of the American Legion named for old French railroad cars that could carry 40 men or eight horses.

For the first 40 years or so, the reunion was strictly stag and held at night.

"We changed it to a luncheon because we were getting along in years and didn't feel comfortable on the streets at night," said Henry Bamberger, 85, of Philadelphia.

The sessions were opened to wives two years ago and three attended Friday.

"I feel like a thorn between two roses," quipped Caroline Wilson, 76, of suburban Upper Darby, from her seat between her husband Walter — at 80, the "baby" of the outfit — and Abbott, a widower.

Before luncheon, there was a full role call, and red roses were placed in an urn for each of the 34 deceased friends.

Throughout the meal there were toasts — to the dead, to the living and finally, from Bamberger, "To the last man: may he remember us as long as he lives."

The last man — who will it be? Bamberger and Gawthrup nominated Abbott or Wilson for the lonely honor. Wilson picked Abbott. Abbott, predictably, deferred to Wilson.

The last man will claim the $1,000 "ghoul pool" created back in 1932 and now worth $1,618.39. Also a large bottle of Hennessy VSOP cognac, presented by the French consul-general 47 years ago and kept in a satin-lined casket.

After lunch, the silver cup engraved with the names of all 40 original members was passed for ceremonial sips. The meeting ended, as always, with a rendering of "Auld Lang Syne."

Heavy Fines Face Greeks

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The Greek government ordered heavy fines for violators of recent energy-saving measures and said weekend driving restrictions do not apply to tourists. Offenders could be fined up to $30,000.

The fines were ordered Friday. Last week, the government raised gasoline prices 18 percent to discourage consumption and banned driving on alternate weekends, depending on whether the car's license-plate number is even or odd.

Walt Atkins Talks About The Press Box

A Place To Get Work Done

By CINDY BROOME

East Carolina University Sports Information Director Walt Atkins believes that the time to socialize is not while working.

"A press box is a place to get your work done. It's not a place to have a party," Atkins told an ECU journalism class recently.

"A lot of people think we go out and socialize a lot, but this is not the case. This is a service organization, not a fraternal organization.

"We try to maintain a working press box," Atkins, said, adding that no wives or children are allowed in the press box during ball games. "The writers' wives sit in the stands. Of course, there are women sports writers too, and their husbands aren't allowed in the press box either. We don't want any distractions."

The Sports Information Office is a service to the media, according to Atkins.

"We operate our office by three principles," said Atkins. "Our first principle is to deal with the media honestly. It takes no work to be honest. It's a state of being, to decide to be honest."

Accuracy and availability are two other principles Atkins spoke of, stressing the importance of being accurate and also of being available to the media.

"Our service entails keeping the media up to date on what's going on at East Carolina, and giving them the opportunity to cover events here," he said.

If the local press is unable to report on out-of-town or out-of state games, then the Sports Information Office covers it for them, he said.

The Sports Information Office also provides the media with information in media guides and weekly releases. Features on various players are also written for the media, according to Atkins.

Six telephones were installed in the press box for the sports writers, Atkins said.

"I don't feel comfortable charging writers to send their copy," he commented. "We take care of it," he noted in reference to the completed sports articles.

"We've never lost a page," he added.

The Sports Promotion Office deals with the "general public" and handles consolidation of the programs and advertising.

Sports programs must include identification, the roster, which is usually placed in the center of the booklet, and the schedule, Adkins explained

A special program was prepared for the Independence Bowl when the East Carolina Pirates played Louisiana Tech last December. In addition to write-ups on the football players, there was a five-page section on East Carolina University in general, including an article on ECU's chancellor, Dr. Thomas Brewer, and two pages on the medical school.

"We wanted the people in Louisiana to know about East Carolina," Atkins said.

Questions Executives Salaries

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Is the chairman earning his keep?

As the traditional season of corporate annual meetings moves into high gear this month, that promises to be a more frequently asked question by activist stockholders, who in past years have peppered company executives with scores of questions on political, social and policy questions.

PARAMEDIC PAPA FEEDS KITTENS — Salt Lake County paramedic Douglas Mangum Friday feeds four kittens delivered by Caesarian Thursday night by other paramedics at Fire Station 54 after the mother was killed by a car. The kittens now have 15 fathers at the station, and Mangum says, "We intend to keep them." (AP Laserphoto)

The reason is new Security and Exchange Commission rules requiring more detailed disclosure on executive salaries, bonuses, incentive pay plans and the value of perquisites — or perks — like club memberships or a chauffeured limousine.

While some practices have been common for some time, detailing executive compensation — particularly at a time when the administration is stressing wage restraint — may prove uncomfortable at many annual meetings.

"There's no question that investors will be looking at this with a fish eye," said one investment advisor, who asked not to be named.

The new SEC regulations were adopted last fall as part of a broader program requiring more information to be made public on corporate governance, directors and committee functions.

Chrysler Corp.'s proxy statement mailed out this week revealed for instance that Lee A. Iacocca, who became chairman last November after being forced out of Ford, was being paid a $1.5 million cash bonus for making the move as well as an annual salary of $360,000 and some stock option benefits. The bonus represented money Iacocca forfeited by breaking a separation agreement with Ford, which would have paid nearly $2 million if it didn't go to work for a competitor.

Thomas D. Barrow, who switched from Exxon to become Kennecott Copper Corp.'s chairman last December, negotiated a pay plan based on corporate performance. That deal could at least double his base salary of $365,000 annually if the price of stock rises substantially and earning per share improve over the year. According to Kennecott's proxy, Barrow will receive an extra $1,000 for each one-cent increase in net earnings per share above the previous year, up to $1 a share. Above an increase of $1 a share, he will receive $500 for each additional penny. And he stands to earn another bonus of $250,000 for each one-dollar per share increase in the price of Kennecott stock above the $22.94 mean price it traded on the New York Stock Exchange on the day he took his new position.

In business developments this past week:

—President Carter said he would gradually lift price controls on domestic crude oil in an attempt to reduce U.S. dependence on imported oil by letting U.S. prices rise to the world level.

—The Labor Department reported that wholesale prices rose in March by 1 percent. It was the second consecutive month the index rose by that amount. That brought wholesale and producer price increases to a 14.1 percent inflation rate on an annual basis in the first quarter.

—The unemployment rate remained at 5.7 percent for the second consecutive month in March. That's the lowest jobless rate in 4½ years. The Labor Department said 200,000 additional workers found jobs in March, bringing the total U.S. labor force to 96.8 million.

RECORD RESULTS

Sales totaled $2.8 billion, compared to $2.1 billion in 1977. Net income rose to $131.3 million, up from the $106.3 million earned during the previous year.

Sales for the fourth quarter were $842 million, compared to $545.3 million in the same period of 1977. Net income reached $31 million, compared to $26.3 million for 1977's fourth quarter.

Daffodil Farm The Work Of Two Women

PINETOPS — From February through May, daffodils — more than a million of them, all told, it's been estimated — grace the terraced fields of Tom and Julia Cherry's farm near here.

A walk or ride along the loop path the Cherries have constructed especially for public use provides a number of superb vantage points from which to view the golden hosts.

The view brings delight to the beholder and its significance is heightened when one realizes that the planting of these terraces of beauty began only 10 years ago and continues as a labor of love of two women — Julia Cherry and her aunt, Miss Celia Stallings of Tarboro.

The two are systematic in their planting. From the time blooming begins, they're studying the terraces and deciding what areas need to be filled in or added to. Then around the first of April — they planned to start this past Thursday morning right after breakfast — they begin their transplanting of no fewer than 3,000 bulbs. These they space about a foot apart — "not in lines, but at random, as nature does it," they explain — wherever they see a gap they think needs filling in. They've started at the tops of the terraces and have gradually planted downward each year, working with the daffodils' natural tendency to spread and make lush each area. "What we try to do," Miss Stallings explained, "is intersperse kinds that bloom at differing times so, during the entire spring, as much as possible, there are some blooming in each area. Every year we make more headway toward this goal."

"People ask us," she said, "why we're covering the areas at the back of the farm that few people see. 'The Lord sees them, and we see them and the animals see them. That's plenty of reason for us,' I tell them. 'We do it for the joy of it anyway, not for any other cause — except, of course, that daffodils are wonderful erosion controllers. All farmers should be aware of this."

For Beauty and Conservation

Chermont, as the farm about eight miles from Pinetops was named years ago, was inherited by the Cherries from Tom Cherry's Uncle Frank Cherry in 1961. It was Uncle Frank who terraced the hilly fields, Cherry believes, but it was his own wife and her Aunt Celia who decided in 1970 that some of the several kinds of daffodils which populated the yard and the outbuilding area around the house could be used to both beautify and conserve the fields. Aunt Celia, who now works two days a week as a registered nurse in the Pediatrics Department of Edgecombe General Hospital, had only recently moved back to Tarboro after having lived and worked for 40 years in such faraway places as New Orleans and Chicago.

"Julia and I have always been close," Miss Stallings said, "She's my sister's child, but I'm only three years older than she is and we played together as children. I always enjoyed coming out here on vacations when I was working away from Edgecombe County, and I still love being here. We get outside and ooh and ahh over this and that flower. We enjoy everything, even the hard work and the pigs — Is there anything in the world cuter than a baby pig, I want to know."

Tom and Julia Cherry said they stopped growing tobacco several years ago to devote most of their farming effort to their hog operation. The only row crops now are corn to feed the hogs and peanuts to sell. The woods abound with red fox, deer, rabbits and squirrels, and natural springs feed the creek which meanders through the farm. "I love this place," Mrs. Cherry, who grew up just down the road, said, "I'm outside early in the morning when the weather's good, and I don't go in the house all day unless I have to. The flowers have made me love it even more. I tell the children that, if they don't keep up these flowers after I'm gone, I'll haunt them."

There are about 35 different varieties of daffodils on the farm. Mrs. Cherry and Miss Stallings said they themselves don't know all the names. There are King Alfreds, Scarlet O'Haras, rosy clouds, Cassandras, and various forms of 'scrambled eggs' — to mention a few.

They Freely Give

The women said they have never bought any bulbs to speak of, that almost all their varieties have been given them by friends and relatives. And, as they've been freely given to, they freely give. They feel no qualms about giving away the blooms. "Those somebody doesn't pick will just dry up," Mrs. Cherry said. "We'd rather they be enjoyed."

Mrs. Cherry's sister, Mrs. Jennie Harvey, who lives nearby, said she and other relatives and friends are always on the lookout for new varieties to share with Mrs. Cherry and Miss Stallings. "But there just aren't any to speak of," she said. "They've got lots and lots of practically everything there is in the daffodil line."

Mrs. Cherry does sell, for reasonable prices, bulbs in the fall. "Daffodils," she said, "have to be thinned out to have the nicest, largest blooms right on. When you give them away, you're doing yourself as well as the other fellow a favor."

They Welcome the Public

Beginning last spring, Mrs. Cherry and Miss Stallings decided their daffodil project had progressed enough to open the farm to the public. They set aside the first Sunday in April as the day to invite anyone who wished to tour and pick flowers to his or her heart's content.

This year, Sunday, Apr. 2, appeared to be the peak time. Miss Stallings led a caravan out from Tarboro to view the spectacle and many others also came and helped themselves. The women are thinking now of setting the first Sunday of April as their annual "open to the public" day.

"It depends a lot on the weather, though," Mrs. Cherry said.' "This has been an early spring. I saw my first bloom Jan. 19, when usually it's February, at least, when I do. From mid-March through the first week of April seems to be the peak time, though we'll have some blooming through late May. We may have to adjust that date. Anyway, we'll be announcing it all around the area early next spring."

The Cherries made it clear they will welcome anyone who comes to visit as a result of this article, but they warned that most of the flowers are past their prime or have been picked already. "It may be better," Mrs. Cherry indicated, "for everyone to mark the calendar now to come over on or before the first Sunday of April next year."

To reach the farm, one should travel to the town of Pinetops on Highway 43; turn right onto the Rocky Mount Highway at the last stoplight in Pinetops; travel to the third crossroads (Jenkins Crossroads); turn left and stay on this road till he reaches a fork in front of a two-storied white house (the Mildred Price House); then turn left onto State Road 1222 and follow this road about two and one-half miles till he sees the farm on the right. A "Chermont Farm" sign is in the front yard of the house.

"THIS KIND. . .with the backswept petals reminds me of a beautiful young girl with her hair flying in the breeze," Miss Stallings said. The trumpet is orange; the petals deep yellow.

"AND ISN'T THIS ONE LOVELY!". .Miss Stallings (left) and Mrs. Cherry still exclaim over the beauty of an individual daffodil.

MRS. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN CARRAWAY JR.

Patricia A. Major Weds B.F.Carraway

RALEIGH — Patricia Anne Major and Benjamin Franklin Carraway Jr. were married in Sacred Heart Cathedral Saturday afternoon at two o'clock. The Rev. Thomas Hadden and Father Thomas Sanford performed the double ring ceremony.

A program of wedding music was presented by Carolyn Knox of Raleigh, organist, and Sister Helen Thomas, I.H.M., of Raleigh, vocalist.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. William E. Major of Raleigh, and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Franklin Carraway of Rt. 1, Fountain.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown in white qiana with silk Venise lace. The Queen Anne neckline and high rise bodice were formed of Venise lace, seed pearls and English net. The long tapered sleeves had a cuff of lace and net. The A-line skirt had lace appliques and a lace border around the hemline of the skirt and attached chapel length train.

Her matching lace headpiece was attached to a walking length tier of silk illusion which had a Venise lace border. She carried a cascade of white roses and stephanotis.

The maid of honor was Kathleen Major of Raleigh, sister of the bride. Bridesmaids included Robin Lee of Columbia, S. C., Lisa Major, sister of the bride, and Betsy Carraway, sister of the bridegroom, both of Raleigh, and Susan Carroll of Ayden, sister of the bridegroom. They wore off-shoulder formal gowns in mint green qiana and carried mixed nosegays of spring flowers.

The father of the bridegroom served as best man and ushers were Donald Smith of Knoxville, Tenn., Perry Drose of Maxton, Bill Major, brother of the bride, and Doug Manheim, both of Raleigh.

The couple will be living in Raleigh after a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va.

PLAN FOR SEWING

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Plan ahead for home sewing by doing homework before shopping for a pattern and fabric, suggests Marjorie Baker, Extension clothing specialist at Oklahoma State University.

Look through fashion and sewing magazines to see what is new and what fires your imagination, she says, adding these tips:

Study ready-to-wear departments. Notice how fashions you like are influenced by fabrics. See how the fabrics drape and tailor. Note how textures add surface interest and how different prints affect designs and the total look.

While looking at ready-made garments, study the labels to learn about the fabric and fiber content. Also look at the trim used and how the seams are finished.

Too often, we take mother for granted—assuming she will always be there. But what happens when she's no longer with us and all we have to remember her by are a few small snapshots?

This year treat her to a sitting at Rudy's Photography and let us capture her special smile, her lovely grey hair and the character lines that time has etched on her beautiful face.

Reader Asks For Reprint

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago you printed an article titled PLEASE GOD, I'M ONLY 17. Is there any way you could print it again? I'm 17 now and when I read it it caused me to do a lot of thinking. It might cause others to do a lot of thinking, too.

I would also like your permission to print the article in our high school newspaper. Thank you.

DARCI HUGHTON

DEAR DARCI: You (and anyone else who wants to print the article in his high school newspaper) has my permission to do so. Here it is:

PLEASE, GOD, I'M ONLY 17

The day I died was an ordinary school day. How I wish I had taken the bus! But I was too cool for the bus. I remember how I wheedled the car out of Mom. "Special favor," I pleaded, "all the kids drive." When the 2:50 bell rang, I threw all my books in the locker. I was free until 8:40 tomorrow morning! I ran to the parking lot, excited at the thought of driving a car and being my own boss. Free!

It doesn't matter how the accident happened. I was goofing off—going too fast. Taking crazy chances. But I was enjoying my freedom and having fun. The last thing I remember was passing an old lady who seemed to be going awfully slow. I heard the deafening crash and felt a terrific jolt. Glass and steel flew everywhere. My whole body seemed to be turning inside out. I heard myself scream.

Suddenly I awakened; it was very quiet. A police office was standing over me. Then I saw a doctor. My body was mangled. I was saturated with blood. Pieces of jagged glass were sticking out all over. Strange that I couldn't feel anything.

Hey, don't pull that sheet over my head. I can't be dead. I'm only 17. I've got a date tonight. I am supposed to grow up and have a wonderful life. I haven't lived yet. I can't be dead.

Later I was placed in a drawer. My folks had to identify me. Why did they have to see me like this? Why did I have to look at Mom's eyes when she faced the most terrible ordeal of her life? Dad suddenly looked like an old man. He told the man in charge, "Yes, he is my son."

The funeral was a weird experience. I saw all my relatives and friends walk toward the casket. They passed by, one by one, and looked at me with the saddest eyes I've ever seen. Some of my buddies were crying. A few of the girls touched my hand and sobbed as they walked away.

Please . . . somebody . . . wake me up! Get me out of here. I can't bear to see my Mom and Dad so broken up. My grandparents are so racked with grief they can barely walk. My brother and sisters are like zombies. They move like robots. In a daze, everybody! No one can believe this. And I can't believe it, either.

Please don't bury me! I'm not dead! I have a lot of living to do! I want to laugh and run again. I want to sing and dance. Please don't put me in the ground. I promise if you give me just one more chance, God, I'll be the most careful driver in the whole world. All I want is one more chance.

Please, God, I'm only 17!

On The Young Side

By SHARON CONNOLLY

On Thursday, the Rose High National Honor Society announced the 1979 spring inductees. These students were selected according to their academic and extra-curricular activities.

During an Anchor Club meeting Tuesday night, members of the club elected officers for next year. As a result of this election, Virginia Baker will be president; Anne Richards, vice president; Coleen Lemnah, secretary; and Sandra Simpson, treasurer. Three members were selected to serve on the Board of Directors. Jennifer Davis was chosen as a senior member, and Marjorie Crane and Diane Ingenito were chosen as the two junior members.

As Easter holidays approach, Anchor Club members plan on being busy with two different projects next week. Their first project is selling chocolate candy during lunches, and the second is giving an Easter party for the special education class at Aycock Junior High.

The Rose High Choral Department participated in two events recently. The first was a performance for the Kiwanis by the Advanced Ensemble, and the second was a performance of the Advanced Ensemble, Mixed Chorus and Sophomore Chorus. These groups provided a concert for the elementary students at Wahl-Coates and Third Street Schools. Songs on the program included "Wonderful Day," "Witches Chorus," "Oklahoma," "Scarborough Fair," and "God's Sun Has Made Me Free."

Congratulations are extended to the four newly-selected Girls' State nominees. Kim Coddle, Eden Hooks, Susan Peele, and Ann Williamson were chosen to represent Rose High this summer at the annual event to be held at UNC-Greensboro. The girls will learn about state government at this event.

DINNER FOR FOUR
Pork with Prunes
Yams Squash
Pound Cake Coffee

PORK WITH PRUNES
Worth trying.

16 pitted prunes (about ½ of a 12-ounce package)
Port wine
1¾ to 2-pound rolled, tied, boneless pork loin (rib end)
Seasoned salt
½ teaspoon arrowroot stirred smoothly into 1 tablespoon cold water

Soak prunes in ½ cup port 2 to 12 hours —depending on how chewy or soft you want the prunes. Rub pork lightly with seasoned salt; roast on a flat rack in a small shallow pan until meat thermometer registers 170 degrees — 2 hours or longer. Remove pork to a hot serving platter and keep warm in a slow oven. Remove rack from roasting pan but leave fat and drippings. Drain port from prunes into a measure; add enough more port to make ½ cup; pour into the roasting pan. Cook over low heat, stirring with a wooden spoon to get up drippings; strain into a small saucepan. Add arrowroot mixture and cook over moderate heat, stirring constantly, until thickened, boiling and shiny. Add prunes and reheat gently.

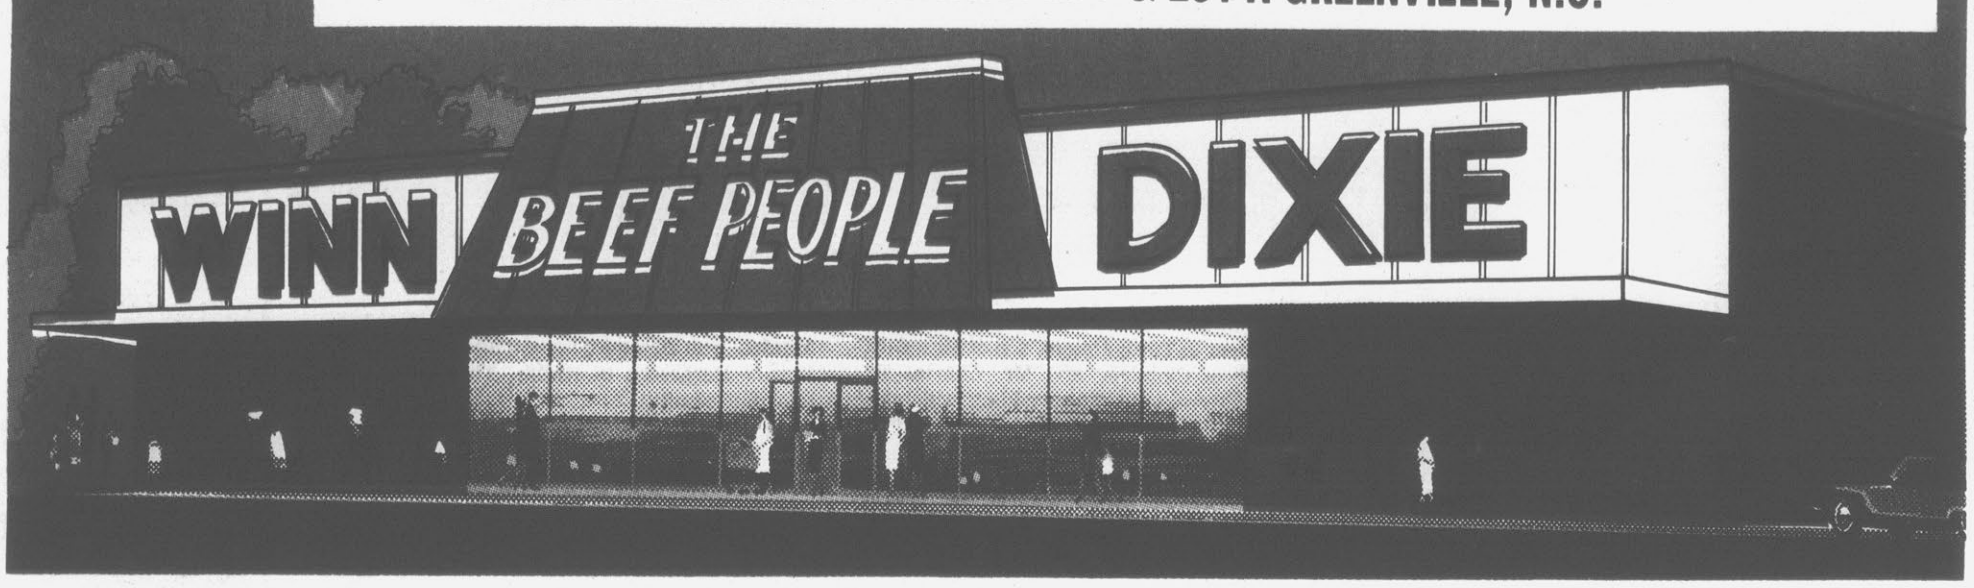

DINNER FOR TWO
Lamb Chops Potatoes
Spinach Salad
Banana Dessert

BANANA DESSERT

1 tablespoon butter
3 tablespoons ginger marmalade
Juice of 1 small orange
2 ripe bananas, sliced
2 tablespoons light rum, if desired
2 large or 4 small slices pound cake, toasted if desired

In an 8-inch skillet over moderate heat stir together the butter, marmalade and orange juice until mixture bubbles. Add the bananas and heat. Stir in the rum, if used. Spoon over the pound cake and serve at once. Makes 2 servings.

At Wit's End

By ERMA BOMBECK

I was in a fitting room the other day trying to decide on my annual dress. The salesperson zipped me up the back (she has signed an agreement never to publish) and commanded, "Now turn around."

As I did, something weird appeared between the hemline and the torso. The skirt flapped open and out came a thing that looked like an urn.

"What's that?" I gasped.

"It's your leg," she said dryly.

"Both of them?" I asked.

"One," she said softly.

If it isn't one part of my body that is being exploited by new fashions, it's another. Took me three months to get my arms ready for short sleeves. I'd lie flat on my back, put on a record of Lawrence Welk playing "Winchester Cathedral" and cross arms vigorously. It hadn't occurred to me that while I was reducing my upper arms, my knees were growing together.

I explained to the salesperson that those of us who carried our babies low had this problem.

She said dresses this year all had the disco influence with slits and slashes and that I had better get my knees in shape for them. "The easiest way," she said, "Is the old doorknob exercise where you balance yourself on a doorknob, squat down to the floor and pull yourself up again 10 times."

It's going to be wonderful walking across a room without making a noise like you're being followed.

It's going to be wonderful running with the dog and not sounding like a gym shoe with a loose sole.

To be able to cross your legs when all about you have prickly heat and can only make attempts at the knee and have to settle for the ankle.

The joy of slipping off your pantyhose and not having the sensation that the dyke just broke.

The exhilaration of standing up and having your knees join you instead of just sitting there.

To wear boots and not have your legs look like two nuclear bombs.

It's going to be wonderful when I can pull myself up by this doorknob and do nine more of these knee bends.

On second thought, maybe someone will do me a favor, open the door, and knock me unconscious.

BRIDAL SHOWER

Ann's Pate — CheeseTray
Assorted Breads — Punch
Ice Cream — Brownies

ANN'S PATE

A cinch to make.

1 pound chicken livers
¾ cup (1½ quarter-pound sticks) butter, soft
1 medium onion, chopped medium-fine
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon paprika
1 teaspoon curry powder
¼ cup brandy

Coarsely cut livers, discarding center membranes. In a 10-inch skillet melt ½ cup of the butter; add liver, onion, salt, pepper, paprika and curry powder. Cook over moderate heat, stirring often, just until livers are cooked through — about 10 minutes. Turn into an electric blender with the brandy; whirl at high speed, stopping as necessary to stir down, until smooth. (This takes a fair amount of time.) Turn into a bowl and with a spoon beat in the remaining ¼ cup butter, bit by bit. Pack into 1 or 2 crocks, cover tightly and chill. May be kept refrigerated for about 5 days. Makes about 2¼ cups. 1 orange, seeded and ground
½ cup slivered blanched almonds
7 cups sugar

In a large saucepot over low heat, stir together all ingredients until sugar is dissolved. Over high heat bring to a boil; boil gently, stirring occasionally, until thickened. At once pour into sterilized home canning jars. Adjust caps. Process for 10 minutes in a boiling water-bath canner. Makes about nine 6-ounce jars.

Credit For Women

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Establishing credit can be complicated, especially for a woman without a credit history in her own name.

A government pamphlet, Women and Credit Histories, is free from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 538G, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

Among the tips it offers is: if you have had a joint account with your husband and want an account in your own name, check with the credit bureau (listed in the Yellow Pages) to make sure the credit information on file is accurate, complete and filed under the correct name. Have information from old joint accounts transferred to your own file, and ask creditors to use your current name on charge records and report joint accounts in both spouses' names.

On The Local Scene

by Rosalie Trotman

"It's a hobby because I like adding things to it," Mrs. Graham Flanagan said of her miniature doll house.

The doll house, which is pictured, was built by Mrs. Flanagan about 10 years ago. In addition, she has a small three-room antique doll house and one she received at the age of 12, one of the first with electric lights.

She has been collecting little things for the house for some time and some of the things, she has had since she was a child.

The house includes two bedrooms, living room, parlor, dining room, kitchen and bathroom. It opens from the front and back and the back has glass windows.

The seasonal motif of the house is Christmas and the overall decorating theme is English. The kitchen is done in early American with ironstone and a Dutch cupboard. Some of the special interest items are miniature copper pots, individual stack pottery bowls, butter churn and copper fry pans. The bathroom has a set of scales and a glass bathtub, a souvenir of Bath, N. Y.

One bedroom is furnished with a china setee and chair, a high rise coal stove, made by Mrs. Flanagan's son, Greyton, and a crocheted bedspread. Hand-hooked rugs and handmade painted furniture (1900-1910) are also included.

The parlor features a Christmas tree, blanket chest, also made by Greyton, children's building blocks and a brass oil lamp. A petit point rug and dining chair cushions, created by Mrs. Flanagan, decorate the dining room. The mahogany drop leaf table features a platter from Radio City Music Hall, New York City, bought by Mrs. Flanagan when she was 14. Brass candlesticks are placed on the mantel.

A miniature water color hangs over the mantel in the living room. Of special interest is a musical box piano, needlepoint cushions and pillow and tapestry rug.

SEVEN-ROOM DOLL HOUSE. . .was years ago. built by Mrs. Graham Flanagan 10

The curtains and draperies were made by Mrs. Flanagan, who also painted an oil picture on black velvet for the house. When necessary she repairs some of the older pieces of furniture.

"Dolls have always been my thing — since I was a small girl," said Mrs. Flanagan.

The Flanagan home is included on the tour of homes and gardens being sponsored by the church women of St. Paul's Episcopal Church Tuesday.

If you have some heavy cream left over and have no immediate use for it, you can whip it (adding sugar to taste or omitting it) and freeze it to use as a dessert topping another time. It's a good idea to put the whipped cream into small paper cups placed on a small cookie sheet and freeze; when the cream is frozen, you can store the little cups in a tightly closed plastic bag in the freezer.

Most Prefer To Keep Working

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More than half of today's employees would prefer to continue working past their normal retirement age, according to a new national survey.

The study sponsored by Johnson & Higgins, an international employee benefit consulting and actuarial firm, also documents concern for the impact of inflation on retirement income, satisfaction with private pensions and a lack of confidence in Social Security on the part of employees and business executives.

The degree of interest in working beyond normal retirement age varies with the job. The study showed 71 percent of the self-employed would prefer to continue working full-or part-time as long as they are able, compared with 53 percent of salaried workers and 42 percent of hourly wage workers.

Professionals Careful To Select The Right Piano

By GLENNE CURRIE
UPI Lively Arts Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — If you want to get a smile out of a concert pianist, ask him or her if they ever played "Old 199" from the basement of Steinway Hall. Chances are you'll also get a flood of reminiscences.

"Number 199" was for many years the favorite concert grand of many pianists, some of whom would not even consider trying another instrument. Today the nine-foot grand is in deserved retirement in Skitch Henderson's home.

But not many pianists these days will settle for the same piano for every concert. They want the right piano for the right occasion: one that suits the program, the hall, whether it's for a solo recital or to be heard over an orchestra.

As American pianist Grant Johannesen puts it, "Every artist has his own sound he is looking for."

That's not where Steinway keeps its "seconds" but where it stores 60-odd concert grands for the sole use of recitalists and concert artists.

More than 700 times a year, a pianist, conductor or teacher will descend to the concert basement to pick out a piano for a concert, either a seven-foot-two "B" model or a nine-foot "D."

The fact is that — because they are partly made of wood, no two pieces of which are identical — no two pianos sound alike. Which is fine for top pianists, who always are looking for a different sound.

Every pianist knows what sound he is seeking, even if he can't put it into words. The late Guimar Novaes, trying out a piano for a concert, would say, "This piano has a cold."

But no pianist can memorize the varying characteristics of the 60 pianos on hand at Steinway and Sons — which claims that 95 percent of all pianists use Steinways. Besides, Steinway technicians are constantly making minor adjustments which subtly change the sound.

When I was in the basement recently, Theodore Steinway dropped in unexpectedly, even though it was a cold Saturday morning. He is Steinway's chief engineer and still on the board of management, though CBS bought Steinway's in 1972.

He explained, "The opinions of the artists on the piano is extremely valuable. The feedback from the highest performers is the only way we can maintain the highest excellence."

As a result, the technical staff under Franz Mohr is always tinkering with the pianos, manipulating the 12,000 moving parts to try to improve the sound.

And when they know a pianist is coming in to select an instrument for a concert, they know from their records on him and from his program what he is looking for, and line up a half-dozen instruments for him to try out.

Johannesen kept up a running commentary as he tried the pianos set out for him.

But first he admired the new lighting and the newly sprung floor in the concert basement. "This place used to be called the Black Hole of Calcutta."

"I'm doing a Chopin program," he said, "so I'm looking for a colorful tone. If I were doing Beethoven it would be a totally different tone. I don't know how to describe it, but I know when I hear it.

"There's a different selection for recording. You need a very responsive piano. Even then I'd need something different for the 'Emperor Concerto' — something with 'true grit.'

"To play a Prokofiev or Bartok concerto, where you're fighting the orchestra to penetrate to the audience, you need carrying volume.

"Chopin and Debussy on the other hand need lots of coloring."

As he spoke he was trying out Chopin's Don Giovanni Variations on one piano, seated in a straight-backed chair rather than a stool or bench.

He commented on that particular instrument, "The upper register is very bright — more akin to what you'd want for an orchestra. It has a ring to it. It doesn't have the plangent quality you need for Chopin."

The next one was "more mellow. Better for a solo recital where you don't need the extra sonorities, a freer sound."

The next was one he had played before, which he recognized by its number.

"But I don't always use the same one, even for the same concert," Johannesen said. "It depends on so many things."

"I like the double action of the Steinway," he said. "It's more difficult than the single action, but it makes the piano more interesting — a sort of touch-tuning that is unique."

The double action — a sort of kick-down on the pedal like an overdrive — was introduced by Steinway in 1937.

After he'd picked the piano he wanted, Johannesen began reminiscing.

"Myra Hess liked to have double castors on her pianos. One time when she was playing on a raked stage the piano started to slide across the stage. She kept on hitching the stool after it. Fortunately she finished the piece before it disappeared.

"One time when my piano was on a dolly, it started to drift toward the cello. I had to hook my knee under it like this till I finished.

"Another time, I was doing a TV concert in Rio (de Janeiro). There were only two pianos available, both of them pretty bad. I picked what I thought was the better of the two, only to have the lid slide off as I started playing."

Johannesen's attention was drawn to a corner of the basement where technicians "Ruby" Belanoff and Ron Concers were working on the piano for which the great Josef Hofmann had developed his own action, calling for an extremely light touch. Johannesen tried the keyboard, then grimaced at the extraordinary sensitivity of the instrument, unlike any he'd ever played.

Steinway, which this year is marking the 125th anniversary of the establishment in New York by a German immigrant family of "Steinway and Sons," keeps a piano "bank" of some 500 pianos in every major city across the country, for the use of concert artists.

Every Steinway dealer has a couple of instruments which can be used by established musicians free of charge except for costs of shipping and tuning.

But some pianists still miss "Old 199."

Library Programs Help Cure Reading Flaws

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Education Editor

"Word doctors" in libraries nationwide are helping to rehabilitate reading cripples.

The librarians, who hope to wipe out illiteracy, reach thousands each year, helping those hobbled by poor or no word skills to lift reading levels.

The American Library Association, in a report focusing on this unusual aspect of library service, says illiterate adults as well as children enroll in library programs which are set up to cure reading and writing ills.

Many programs are designed and staffed by library personnel. Others are linked to government agencies, schools or private non-profit organizations such as Literacy Volunteers of America and Laubach Literacy International.

The library battle against illiteracy developed extra clout in 1977 when the ALA put out a manual to guide libraries not yet involved in the literacy movement. It told how to set up local programs.

This year, the ALA moves onto a faster track. It will train 200 librarians from state agencies and county and regional systems in the ways of setting up programs to teach literacy skills to disadvantaged adults.

The special corps of "word doctors" will, in turn, train members of local library staffs. The goal: adult literacy programs in each of the nation's 8,000 public libraries, as soon as possible.

Literacy will also be a major theme of The White House Conference on Librrary and Information Services, set for October.

"One of the themes of the conference is access to information for all Americans," said Jean Coleman, direcctor of the ALA's Literacy Program.

"And literacy is a fundamental issue. The best methods of information storage and dissemination are meaningless to the millions of Americans who can't read."

Coleman said library programs may be the best way to reach the 23 million Americans over the age of 16 who are functional illiterates.

The U.S. Office of Education defines a functional illiterate as one who reads and writes at a sixth grade level or below.

Coleman said libraries are hospitable to reading programs for a very good reason. As she put it:

"Many adults with reading problems had difficulties in school and are uneasy about returning to a classroom.

"Libraries don't have all those unhappy associations, so the people are more at ease. And, by virtue of their trained librarians, are highly qualified to identify, locate and even produce written materials that can be matched with various levels of reading skills.

"The libraries are not trying to compete with American schools but to supplement their activities by working with out-of-school adults."

In a typical library program, the adult student works one-to-one with a tutor for two to four hours per week. The customized tutoring lets each student move at his or her own pace. Eliminated? The possibility of embarrassment in a group situation.

The ALA said teaching methods include:

—The linguistic-phonemic approach which stresses letter and sound relationships. This is a popular approach in programmed learning in which the learner moves ahead at his own pace.

— The language-experience approach. This teaches reading by having the student write his own stories and then read them.

—Individualized learning in which reading is based on self-seeking, self-selection, self-pacing.

The key to success in a library literacy program often is a volunteer tutor trained by the library in working with students on an individual basis, according to the ALA report.

David Hamilton, 35, was named "Tutor of the Month" at Byers Library in Denver in 1978. The honor was for helping raise a student's reading level four grade steps in one year.

The ALA report says Hamilton is a student in the literacy program himself.

"When I graduated from high school," he noted, "I was reading at a second grade level.

"I could barely write my own name."

After five years in the Denver program he is reading at an eighth grade level and still studying.

The payoff?

The ALA says Hamilton has jumped from boiler maker to maintenance repairman for the city and county of Denver, an occupation requiring good reading skills.

He told the ALA:

"Before participating in the library program, I couldn't even fill out a job application.

"You know. There's a lot of closet illiterates out there. To them, I say, 'learn to read, it will make a big difference in your life.'"

Voyage To Save Baby Seals

By SID MOODY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

ABOARD SEA SHEPHERD (AP) Sea Shepherd is a retired British trawler. Her mission is to go from Boston into the ice of Canada's Gulf of St. Lawrence to dye white seals red.

The radio operator is a young woman who works for a rock 'n' roll station in Vancouver; the ship's lawyer once had a dog testify in court; the radio-operator-to-be doesn't even look at television; all 32 souls aboard are soon to embark on a Moby Dick tragi-comedy scored for rheumatic diesel and fog horn, and Ahab is a salon-vivant named Cleveland Amory who has written best sellers about society and looks like Leopold Stokowski in a high wind.

Ten on board are newsmen. Most of the rest are volunteer environmentalists of varying hues and non-aquatic.

The professional sailing captain and the first and second engineers, speak their native Yorkshire, a difficult dialect.

Amory thinks sealing is an abomination against man and animal. The seals he intends to save are a beguiling and photogenic species. This does not harm fund raising. They are baby harp seals which have white fur when newborn and helpless on the ice around Newfoundland. Three weeks after birth they learn to swim, their pelts turn color, and they put to sea. Their pelts are used for glove lining, trim, even to make toy seals. Sealers club them to death with bats.

Amory reasons that by dyeing the seals red he will eliminate their market value.

Amory is 61, tall, non-athletic looking, gravel voiced from smoking, frizzly-maned and well born — Milton Academy, Harvard '39.

March 3: The last red tape is cut, and Sea Shepherd puts to sea in moderate swells that leave the non-aquatic comatose. Besides the dye and plastic garden sprayers, her cargo includes a month's supply of food, 7,000 miles of diesel oil, eight barrels of helicopter fuel, naivete, disorganization and crossed purposes.

Those on board Sea Shepherd represent a cross section of the ecology movement. The do-gooder. The radical. The professional. The young, out to save the world by wearing a button.

The on-board radical is a 28-year-old Canadian named Paul Watson. The 19-year-old trawler is registered in Watson's name — because he is Canadian — even though Amory's Fund for Animals put up the money for it.

Frank Milner, along as an observer, is an inspector for the 150-year-old Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Britain, which has put up $48,000 for the expedition — providing the Queen's name does not become compromised by violence. The other professional is Jerry Owens, a former Texas cop, private detective and now investigator for the Fund. He has brought 300 cases of cruelty to animals to court. And won them all.

The rest include a plumber's apprentice, an ex-disc jockey, an environmentalist from Hawaii — the ice crew, all in their 20s.

Harp seal mothers mate right after giving birth, then delay fertilization in some wondrous way to time their next delivery for optimum ice conditions the following winter. Last year a Canadian government official on a good-will tour of the States said seals were harvested as a natural resource, "just like your oranges." In 175 years, an estimated 60 million seals have been killed.

The surviving one million harp seals have about 250,000 pups a year of which 183,000 are on this year's kill quota.

"Our appeal is for decency," Amory explains. "Not because the seals are cuddly but because they are being killed in ways Idi Amin hasn't even thought of."

The Fund, organized by Amory in 1967, has 180,000 members and this year counts on raising $1.5 million.

March 6: Sea Shepherd gets stuck fast in pack ice. The anchor is let go in a shower of rust to try and crack it. After 20 minutes of full astern, Sea Shepherd slides free.

The Canadian Coast Guard icebreaker Wolfe, assigned to the sealers, is alongside as Sea Shepherd repeatedly backs off and rams ahead into the ice, shuddering like a man with chills.

March 7: Sea Shepherd's old navigational Loran has blown a fuse and is out. Fewster asks Wolfe by radio for a position fix. "If we knew where you were, we could tell you where you were," Wolfe replies in reasoning as dark as the gathering night. But the radar works, and eight miles ahead are two blips. Sealers?

March 9: The radar blips have now become ship's lights two miles off the port bow. The wind sweeping over the dark ice is bitter cold. Sea Shepherd breaks free temporarily into an open lead and crunches to a halt on the opposite side. Suddenly there is a new sound above the wind, an unforgettable wailing borne by the near gale from some primeval place where man is a stranger.

Sea Shepherd has reached the seals.

A covey of helicopters bearing fishing officials and Royal Canadian Mounted Police begins descending on the eight-man ice party 1½ miles from Sea Shepherd. One by one they are seized.

Fisheries official Stan Dudka alights from a helicopter and, without asking permission, mounts Sea Shepherd's bridge as one of his men takes a pratfall on the dye-reddened deck. In a barely controlled voice he announces the eight have been arrested and charged variously with assault, resisting arrest and violation of sealing regu lations. Any further violations, he tells Fewster, and he will be arrested as well as the ship.

Besides possible loss of that $48,000, the cost of the melee is to include a $3,000 lawyer's fee for the 90-minute arraignment in the Magdalens; $16,000 bail and the expense of various charter flights to return the prisoners. If found guilty, the eight face fines up to $80,000, the Fund $100,000. Moby Dick comes high.

In due course, Sea Shepherd returns to Boston. Amory has shifted from concern to elation. The Fund takes an ad in the New York Times complete with the classic snap — posed: "Our mission was successful beyond our wildest dreams ..."

The ad says 1,000 seals were sprayed. Dudka says the dye washed right out. It didn't from Sea Shepherd's Harvard-crimson decks, in any event. But sealers radioed they took 880 pelts the day of the arrests, slightly below their daily average.

Says Jerry Owens: "Literally millions have been spent in protests, yet the sealing goes on. In fact, each year the kill quota increases."

Owens' approach is different. He is a patient and logical man. For the last two years Owens has gotten to know Canadian sealing officers well enough to go out on the ice with them, well enough so they turn their heads while he has autopsied 3,000 seal carcasses. Half of them, he found, did not have sufficient skull injuries to cause death. In other words they were skinned alive. This violates Canadian regulations. It is also his basis for a court suit.

"In a civilized nation, the law is where you get things decided. Bring the case before a judge and let everybody present his side. But now, with the arrests, all my avenues of communication will be closed. I could have had a hell of a lawsuit for the $250,000 Cleveland

From 1:15 to 5 o'clock this afternoon, the gardens of New Bern's Tryon Palace are open to the public without admission being charged.

Spring Flower Day In The Royal Palace Gardens

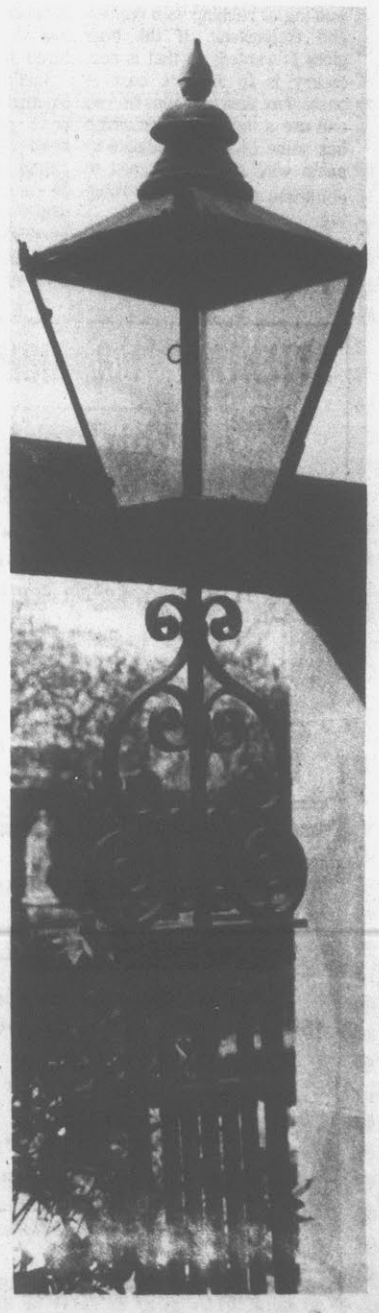

Velvety pansies in shades of lavender and blue, in bronze and cream, golden late flowering daffodils, and something like 25,000 tulips in a wondrous array of shapes and colors are foremost among the battalions of flowers being nurtured to peak flowering for the pleasure of strollers visiting the gardens of Tryon Palace today. And for this spring celebration viewers will be admitted free of charge.

As glorious as the flowers are, they constitute but one of several attractions in the 13 acres of gardens in the Palace Complex. Formal and informal gardens lead one into the other. Italian sculptures grace Hawk's Allee and the Maude Moore Latham Memorial Garden. Yaupons trained over a frame of inter-woven branches of the Pleached Allee is an enchanting place to stroll. Flag poles with early flags and pennants, an old cannon, a grassy lawn, wrought iron gates, a dovecote and kitchen garden, and a natural Wilderness area, each convey a different atmosphere, recalling gardens of long ago.

For every member of the family, there's much to see, to enjoy at Tryon Palace on this April Sunday.

Three Bedroom Ranch Plan Conserves Space

By Jerry Bishop

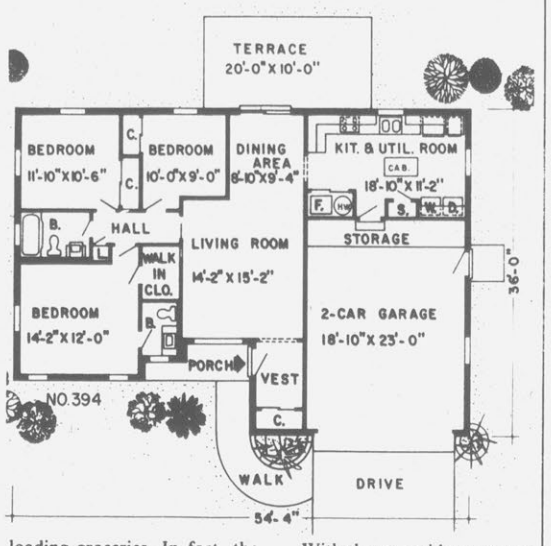

Save money without sacrificing livability. The Landorf, a carefully arranged three bedroom ranch style, accomplishes just that. For carefree family living, the design shows sizable rooms, a dining area with sliding glass doors to the terrace, a work center kitchen, and ample storage space.

Brick and stone layer the exterior of this trim home, and vertical siding adds an interesting contrast to the horizontal brick.

A feature not often found in budget plans is the entry, set apart from the living room and framed by a coat closet. To enlarge the design visually, the entry is open to the living room and dining area, and the view is one of open space, climaxed by sliding glass doors that bring in the outdoors and complete the effect.

Large enough for family and guests, the living room provides the focus of the home. It is comfortable, accessible from the sleeping areas, and close to the kitchen for entertaining.

Bordering the dining area is an excellent work center kitchen. Besides containing all necessary kitchen equipment, the area carves a laundry niche and utility area. A central work island offers additional cabinet space, and a garage entry allows for ease in unloading groceries. In fact, the adjacent garage storage area provides a logical location for a pantry if one is desired.

For effective zoning from everyday noise, bedrooms are clustered to the left of the living areas. The master bedroom, which measures over 14 by 12, merits a half bath and walk-in closet. The second bath, edged by a linen closet, is near bedrooms and living room.

With three outside entrances for flexibility, the long double garage is a welcome feature and shows useful storage space.

Top Design Award Accorded To Novel Den-Disco Combination

AP Newsfeatures .....

When we hear a designer or decorator use the term "multi-functional" to describe a room or a piece of furniture, most of us picture the practical.

We think of the living room that becomes a bedroom at night, or the desk that doubles as a dining table.

But for Sherman Nobleman, multi-functional means a den that doubles as a disco. And this concept won the Portola Valley, Calif., designer first-place honors in the 21st Annual S.M. Hexter Awards Program, a national design competition. Nobleman won in the residential interior category.

Nobleman says that when his friends heard he was designing a disco room for his home, they imagined "a room that would be wild, bizarre, fantastical." But that was never the room he had in mind.

"From the beginning, I wanted a room that would be comfortable and useful all the time," he explains.

And so Nobleman designed a room for living as well as dancing, a kind of rich man's recreation room. The interior is casual and comfortable by day, clean and classy by night.

But because his friends had imagined a rather decadent design, he dubbed his room the "deca-disco."

The room, located in a small space beneath the house, has a hardwood floor for daytime exercises or nighttime disco. The cobalt-treated wood can take the skids and scuffs of the dancer, he says, and needs only a buffing to restore its beauty.

Around the perimeters of the floor, wicker furniture covered in bright cotton fabric invites reading, relaxing or visiting. The room also contains covered platforms that can be used for seating or game-playing. The bar area is convenient and compact, tucked away in a corner.

There are two long walls in the room, one glass, the other mirrored. The window-wall reveals the outdoor trees and shrubbery, which are illuminated by colored lights at night.

Nobleman says his wall of mirrors "doubles the feeling of space in the room," and provides a disco atmosphere at night. The mirrors also conceal storage closets that can hold everything from exercise gear to stereo equipment, with room left over for coats, games or musical instruments.

Of course, a multi-purpose room needs multi-purpose lighting, and the deca-disco has that. The room has three lighting systems to cover every lighting need. And, because no real disco can do without syncopated, flashing lights, a system of colored lights can be plugged into the stereo system to produce light sequences that flash in time to the musico.

Two other designers won honorable mentions in the residential interior category.

Skylights were installed in the attic to provide both light and visual excitement.

N.C. State Univ. Answers Timely Gardening Questions

Q. I am growing my own tomato plants, and it looks as if they will be too large by the time the danger of frost has passed. How can I slow their growth? (G.B., Smithfield)

A. Reduce the amount of water, which will cause slight wilting and reduced growth. If possible, reduce both day and night temperatures. If you are growing the plants in individual containers, you may have to transfer them to larger pots. You may also have to give the plants more space when they are finally transplanted to the garde. (A.A. Banadyga, extension horticulturist)

Q. Each year my Southern peas rot off at the soil. Is there anything I can do to prevent this? (H.W., Lumberton)

A. Yes. Delay planting until the soil has warmed thoroughly. Plant the peas in an area that has not had peas or beans for three to five years. Plant seed that have been treated with a fungicide. (George Hughes, extension horticulturist)

Q. My Golden Delicious apple tree was loaded last year. This year it has less than 100 blooms. How could I have gotten more blooms? The tree is 12 years old. (H.W., Nashville)

A. If you had thinned the tree last year, when it was heavily loaded, you would have more blooms this year. But, you must thin early — by the time the fruit is the size of a dime. Leave one fruit per cluster and the clusters 8 to 12 inches apart. Fruit in the top of the tree can be closer than fruit at the bottom of the tree. (Mel Kolbe, extension horticulturist)

Q. What perennials could be planted in a daffodil bed for summer blooms? The soil is heavy. Would daylillies be okay? (J.R., Durham)

A. Daylily (hemerocallis) is an excellent landscape plant. It can be planted with spring flowering bulbs. The numerous varities of daylilies offer red, pink, orange, yellow or cream color all summer long. Plant tubers just below soil surface. Space 18 to 24 inches apart and during the growing season fertilize lightly with 10-10-10. Locate either in full sun or partial shade. Daylilies can be an excellent landscape feature in the summer for many N.C. gardeners because of their general attractiveness and ease of culture. (Kim Powell, extension landscape horticulturist)

Because it is versatile, easy to apply and dries rapidly, shellac has retained its popularity over the years despite the inroads made by some of the synthetic wood finishes, especially the varnishes.

Shellac's natural gloss can be cut down, if desired, by steel wooling or rubbing with pumice and rottenstone. If the high gloss is wanted, all that is necessary is to apply a coat of paste wax and rub it in. Or you can use a liquid polisher which has some of the ingredients of paste wax and is designed to eliminate all or part of the rubbing.

Every so often, somebody will complain that, after applying shellac, it doesn't dry properly, is sticky or gets cloudy. The causes generally are that the shellac was applied under high humidity conditions, or the shellac was too old, or it was applied just as it came out of the container. Shellac should never be bought in large quantities unless it is to be used within a period of six months. It doesn't "take" when the air is laden with moisture. And it has to be thinned with denatured alcohol.

Shellac comes mostly in 4-or 5-pound cuts. This means that 4 or 5 pounds of shellac gum have been dissolved to each gallon of alcohol. But it must be cut still further, a procedure which enables it to be applied in several light coats rather than one thick coat. After you have used shellac a few times, you will learn just how much denatured alcohol should be mixed with the shellac for the consistency that you want. But until you discover this, your first uses of shellac will produce good results by making a mixture of half shellac and half alcohol.

Two kinds of shellac are available — white and orange. The white actually is clear and is the most widely used. The orange is recommended when you want a darker color without hiding the grain of the wood.

When wood has been sanded preparatory to the use of shellac, it should always be wiped thoroughly with denatured alcohol. Although shellac dries in much less than three hours, I have found it wise to wait at least that long between coats. If the surface is sanded lightly to remove imperfections (it isn't always necessary), be sure to use a dry brush to remove grit residue before applying the next coat.

HOME FOUND

FOLSOM, Calif. (AP) — On nearly 1,000 acres adjoining Folsom State Prison, two wild horses have found the freedom they had apparently craved since they had been rounded up by the federal government a few years ago.

Early Alert To Lightning

NEW YORK (UPI) — Spring lightning storms send out advance warnings — large anvil-shaped clouds and thunder rumbling in the distance.

When you see and hear these things, seek shelter immediately, say experts for insurance companies.

Even indoors, it's wise to avoid certain locations and situations during such storms. Stay away from open windows and porches; warmer interior air may attract lightning. Avoid using the telephone or television set. Don't touch metal objects such as pipes and electrical appliances.

Put off doing the dishes or bathing until the storm subsides.

Don't rush to pull wash off the clothesline or close car windows during the storm. You could become a grounding device for the lightning.

If you are outdoors, avoid hilltops or other high places. Sit down if you cannot find shelter. If you're in a group — scatter over a wide area.

Avoid storm shelters in unprotected areas such as open golf courses, picnic areas and campsites, all of which often attract lightning.

Stay away, also, from flagpoles, towers and metal fences.

A lone tree can be dangerous even if you're not standing under it. A bolt of lightning can spread through the roots to electrify the ground you stand on.

Don't wade or swim during a storm and, if you're caught in a boat on open water, stay as low as possible to avoid becoming the main target.

FROSTBITE BLOCK?

NEW YORK (AP) — The danger of frostbite, eye and lung damage may be reduced among high-altitude mountain climbers by the infusion of blood serum, according to Medical World News.

The publication reports a West German researcher apparently reduced the effects of cold by injecting serum into 23 climbers during two Himalayan expeditions.

The researcher, Dr. Roman Zink, reported that none of the climbers suffered frostbite or hemorrhages of the eye, despite a sustained temperature of 35 degrees Fahrenheit.

Here's the Answer

Q. — I have always done my own repair work over the years, but I have developed arthritis in my fingers and now find some tasks quite difficult. For instance, whenever I have to fix a lamp socket, I find it very hard to take out the old socket by pushing the brass part where it says "press." I would like to pass along this information to other persons who might have the same trouble. The brass shell can be separated from the cap simply by prying them apart with a screwdriver at the exact spot where the press direction is located.

A. — Thanks.

Q. — We want to change the color of the ceramic tiles on part of the walls in our bathroom. Someone suggested painting them, but we would rather put up new tiles. Can they be installed right over the old ones?

A. — Yes. But the old tiles must be clean, soundly attached and roughened up a bit. The rough surface will provide a better grip for the new adhesive. To determine how soundly the old tiles are attached, each must be tapped with the handle of a screwdriver. Remove any tile found to be loose. Clean the old adhesive from the space and the back of the tile. Cement it in place. If a tile is missing or badly broken, its space can be filled with any sand mortar or spackling compound. Old accessories — soap dishes, toothbrush holders and such — can be removed, but it is easier to tile around them, trimming with what are called bullnose tiles. Your dealer will help you choose the special trim shapes you will need. Take a rough sketch of the room with you when you go to order the tiles.

Q. — I expect to put up a fiber glass roof over our rear patio. The setup is such that the upright posts in the framework will have to be set into the soil. What type of posts should I use?

A. —Use 4 by 4 treated posts. These can be set into the ground at least 2 feet deep where the soil is firm, but considerably deeper and sometimes braced by concrete where there is much frost. If you have not had much experience in this kind of work, ask the dealer from whom you purchase the lumber to advise you about this on the basis of conditions in your area. Be sure to buy posts of the proper length. If, for example, you find that the posts must be set 3 feet into the ground and that the roof will be 7 feet high at the front end, the part farthest from the house, buy standard 10-foot length.

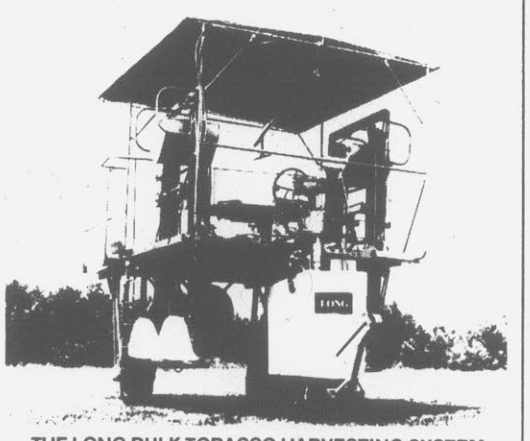

New Wheel For Home Sewers

WALNUT CREEK, Calif. (UPI) — The idea is so simple and practical, you wonder why nobody thought of it before: a dual tracing wheel for home sewing that marks seam and cutting lines simultaneously on paper patterns and fabric.

The twin tracing device is especially designed for multi-size patterns. It can be adjusted to four seam width settings: ½, ⅝, 1 and 1⅝ inches and in corresponding centimeters. As a serrated-edge wheel follows the marked stitching, or seam, line, a powder holder marks the cutting line. The wheel comes with containers of light and dark powder.

The manufacturer says the wheel can also be used for accurately marking or tracing seam lines for imitation suede fabrics and leather, for pleats and tucks, sleeve caps, neck and armhole edges, hems and quilting.

Long Bike Trip A Big Adventure

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — From Omaha, Neb., to Chattanooga, Tenn., via the wooded wilderness of New Brunswick, Canada, and Maine fishing camps, is a long bicycle ride, no matter whose atlas you refer to.

But for Jay Connerley, it was just the "something better" he was looking for. Weary of working days as an electrical draftsman for a suburban Omaha utility in Fremont, Neb., and making a two-hour nightly drive to college evening classes, Connerley, 23, climbed aboard his two-wheeler to seek adventure.

"...I just figured there had to be a better way," he said.

Relying on experience acquired in two Outward Bound programs and equipped with a sense of adventure, sandy-haired Jay set out May 15, 1978, on an arc through Minnesota, Canada and down the eastern seaboard to Chattanooga.

It was a 4,300-mile ride.

"Before I could get from Fremont to Omaha, I had three blowouts," he said. "I was carrying too much gear. Along the way I mailed things back until I was carrying just one day's food, a portable stove, a change of clothes and a raincoat."

In Iowa, he was hampered by strong winds. "I would pedal as hard as I could for 8 hours and only get 50 miles," he said.

Along the way, Jay said, he met hundreds of interesting persons, each joining him in what he called "natural and relaxed friendships, even if they did only last a few days."

"I truly didn't meet a person on the entire trip who wasn't very nice to me. Outside of Montreal I met an industrial psychologist on a bicycle tour of his own.

"He had just about finished his trip and was only a few miles from home so he invited me to join him for a few days' rest."

Jay said there was something about being on a bicycle that made a person open and approachable to townsfolk.

"There is no doubt about it, people are just more friendly when you come into a town on a bicycle. Maybe it's because you just naturally have something to talk about...maybe," he said.

"I just know it's not that way in a car. On my cycle people would come running out of their country store and invite me to 'come sit a spell.'

"Before you knew it, I'd be staying for dinner."

He arrived in Chattanooga in December and went to work in a pizza restaurant.

"For me, the trip worked," he said.

GIANT DECOYS

HAVASU SPRINGS, Ariz. (AP) — Eddy McWilliams' giant geese decoys have been surprising both wild geese and hunters along the Colorado River.

Each fiberglass decoy is more than 5 feet long and 4 feet high. Some of them are hollow and several have folding doors on the back that allow a hunter to climb inside and use it as a shooting blind.

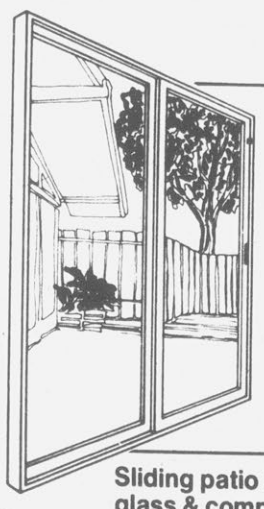

Normal decoys are about 2 feet long.

"Wild geese, when they first see the decoys spread out in a field, seem fascinated by the size," said McWilliams, a hunting and fishing guide at Havasu Springs. The decoys, which come with removable heads and necks, cost $150 each, he said.

Twin Sisters Are Reunited

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Megann Larsen and Susie Freshour, both 21, have known each other casually, even attending the same high school, but it was not until recently that they became aware of their true identities.

They are fraternal twins.

When they were about 3, they did live together in the home of Bartha Freshour, a foster parent. Soon Megann was adopted by the Ray Larsens. Susie, who had a heart murmur (which was corrected by surgery), remained with Mrs. Freshour.

The adoptive parents were advised by an adoption agency not to to tell the twins that they were sisters. For many years they followed the advice, but Mrs. Freshour finally told Susie about her sister in 1975, swearing her to secrecy.

Recently Susie invited Megann for dinner. "I asked Momma why Susie would want to talk to me," Megann said. "That's when Momma told me Susie was my sister."

Temporarily A Tamed Tigress

By SUMALEE PITHAYAKORN

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Bangkok zoo keepers believe they have successfully domesticated a feared Bengal tigress — at least for now.

"All mammals can be domesticated if you keep them away from their parents from the time they are cubs and let them live with humans or other creatures," said Keyun Seemuang, deputy director of Dusit Zoo.

As he spoke, Keyun pointed to Kamo, a 5.4-foot tigress playing with two dogs who share her cage. Kamo bit one dog softly on the foreleg while the other looked on, a playful expression on its face.

"We bought Kamo from an animal merchant," said the 40-year-old Keyun. "She was only two months old and we were not told what happened to her mother.

"Because she was so young and motherless, we kept her in the house of a zoo guard who had a puppy. The two got along fine. But when Kamo got to be too big, we had to move her into a cage."

Deprived of her playmate, Kamo became despondent.

"She refused to eat, she was restless and didn't sleep. She walked around her cage all day," Keyun said.

When a veterinarian could find nothing wrong with Kamo, zoo officials decided to reunite the tigress with her old companion, the zoo guard's dog, named Dang.

"The minute Kamo saw Dang, she leaped with joy. She purred. And she began to regain her appetite," Keyun said.

The tigress and the dog lived happily together for another two years until Dang died. Kamo fell into another depression.

"This time we put another two dogs in with her and it didn't take Kamo much time to get acquainted with her new friends," Keyun said.

But there is a limit to how long one can expect Kamo to remain domesticated. Keyun said in another two years she will be ready to mate and the dogs will have to be removed from her cage.

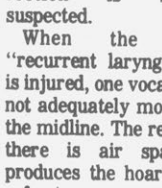

"Kamo was brought up as a pet. We fed her, we gave her baths, cleaned her teeth and brushed her fur. Without a mother tiger, she was never taught to hunt. And while she has no hunting instinct, she is still harmless to other animals.

"But when the time comes for her to mate she will become dangerous."

"All animal offspring are like children, like white pieces of cloth. We can teach them to be anything we want to as along as we prevent them from picking up their own instincts. For tigers, it can last only four years."

Teflon Injections for Chronic Hoarseness

About 10 years ago, I suddenly became hoarse. The doctors found I had paralysis of one vocal cord. They told me that my hoarseness would never disappear and that nothing could be done about it. Only recently, I read something about a special injection that could make the vocal cord move again. Can you help me track down the doctor who does this? — Mr. C.E., Tenn.

Dear Mr. E.:

Paralysis of the vocal cord sometimes follows complex surgery on the thyroid or parathyroid glands. In some instances, pressure on a special nerve because of enlargement of one of the chambers of the heart may also cause laryngeal paralysis. In a number of instances, this phenomenon also occurs without any apparent reason. A virus infection is sometimes suspected.

When the so-called "recurrent laryngeal nerve" is injured, one vocal cord may not adequately move towards the midline. The result is that there is air space which produces the hoarseness you refer to.

It is now possible, in some instances, to inject Teflon into the paralyzed vocal cord. This produces a swelling and reduces the air space. Very often there is remarkable improvement in the timbre and quality of the speaking voice with one or two injections. It does not, however, reactivate the nerve nor does it make the vocal cord muscle move again.

In your local community, there are many excellent ear, nose and throat surgeons who are familiar with this procedure and who can perform it safely and competently.

I have been breast-feeding my baby for four months. Recently, he developed colic. My doctor suggested I stop drinking cow's milk because this might be the cause of the baby's colic. How can I breast-feed him if I don't drink milk? — Mrs. R.R.D., S.D.

Dear Mrs. D.:

Your doctor has made a wise contribution to your baby's health. For it has been found that there is a special substance in cow's milk which, when drunk by the nursing mother, can produce colic in some highly sensitive infants.

In fact, it has been found that when cow's milk was eliminated from the mother's diet, breast-fed colicky infants returned to normal health within a few days.

The idea that infant colic may be related to some intolerance to cow's milk is not new. That which is new is the knowledge that even when only the mother drinks cow's milk colic can be transmitted to the infant through breast-feeding.

DOG VACCINATION CLINICS SCHEDULE

The Pitt County Community Health Department is again offering county wide dog vaccination clinics to the citizens of Pitt County as a convenience to them and in its effort to keep Pitt County free of rabies.

The vaccine will be administered by licensed Doctors of Veterinary Medicine, using the latest advancement in vaccine development.

The General Statutes of North Carolina require that all dogs be vaccinated and that they display the vaccination tag at all times. This tag can also be used to identify your dog if lost or strayed. Please take your dog to the clinic nearest your home for this vaccination. Again this year, all of the clinics will be held in the evening as an additional convenience.

Voluntarily Behind Bars

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Jim Russo made a living for 20 years, he says, by swindling people across the Southeast with loaded dice, phony heroin and paper money. He paid for it with prison time.

Now Russo is back behind bars, but it's voluntary. He runs a prison ministry.

The smooth-talking, 51-year-old Russo uses his former con man's skills to convince inmates to abandon the criminal life and turn to religion — just as he did 13 years ago in the federal penitentiary at Atlanta.

Russo was born in Maplewood, N.J., But grew up in Tampa, Fla. around the produce market where his father built containers. He learned to cheat at dice in junior high school and liked it.

"At first I lost and I didn't particularly like that," said Russo, whose large hands are built for palming small objects — loaded dice, for example.

"Then a man told me I could win and showed me how," he recalls. "I bought some dice and started cheating right then. A month later I beat a trucker out of $300. To a 13-year-old kid 40 years ago that was like a million bucks. I was a big man then."

After a stint with the U.S. Army at the end of World War II, Russo turned to prize fighting. He said he boxed professionally for about five years, including matches in Madison Square Garden.

Then he returned to con games.

"We kept calendars of golf tournaments, American Legion conventions, stag parties—anything that involved a gathering of men in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina and Texas. We became professional gate crashers, if we couldn't get in legitimately, we'd slip in. If you bellied up to a table with a handful of money, nobody cared. We'd use front money and get into card and dice games," he said.

In those days, he said, it wasn't difficult to buy off peace officers, attorneys or judges. Russo won't name names or towns, but says in eastern Georgia there was a peace officer with an expensive drug habit.

"Consequently we did our con games and gambled. He'd let us do anything we wanted in his county," he said.

For a time, he said, he had a base or operations in Fayetteville, N.C. but moved wherever the action was.

"In Alabama and Mississippi we did a lot of gambling and if we found a high roller, we'd try to single him out," he said. "We'd bring in our own people and try to arrange a card game at a fishing camp to fleece him out of money. At conventions, two or three of us would go into a bathroom and start a crap game and pull the suckers in."

His luck ran out in 1963. He was convicted in Tampa on a counterfeiting charge and sentenced to 10 years in the Atlanta federal prison.

"I joined everything I could — the Alcoholics Anonymous, the program of progress, a bible forum. I would have joined the Girl Scouts if they had one. I wanted to make parole. I was trying to con my way out. I went to church every Sunday, even joined the choir. I thought to myself, 'This is the crowning touch. When they see this, they'll let me go home.'"

Russo was paroled after four years. But something had happened to change his life.

"My wife Betty and the kids sent me a Bible. I hid it. I was a tough guy, I didn't want anybody to see it."

But after a while, Russo began reading it. "I began to realize I was a pretty terrible guy," he said. "I was in bad shape. I used people. I even used my family as a front for respectability."

When he got out, he went straight. He kept going to church and became a member of a lay witness mission. "I had a sense of belonging, a sense of worth I never had before. I wanted to be somebody, and I was."

For the last 11 years, he says he has traveled nearly 8,000 miles a year going to prisons around the state, telling his story. Last September he started the prison ministry. He also counsels drug offenders and is an unofficial chaplain at the Bradenton Correctional Center.

After he got out of prison, Russo said he went around and asked forgiveness from everyone he had wronged. And got it.

At times, he said, he was asked to get back in business, but refused.

"Today, there isn't a place where I can't pick up a phone to doctors, lawyers —the cream of the crop—and say I'm coming to town," he says.

How do people know this isn't the ultimate con?

Russo said 13 prominent Sarasota residents make up his prison ministry board of directors and oversee its operations.

"I don't need a lot of money. At this point in my life, I know how to make it legitimately and illegitimately. And I know I'm doing some good this way.

"It used to be I'd talk to people and get money by stealing it," he said. "Now, I talk to people, they give me money and I deposit it."

Outdated Laws Exist

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Think twice before you discard that banana peel.

Modern-day littering laws notwithstanding, it has been illegal since 1911 to throw a banana peel on the street in Tennessee. The law prescribes a $50 fine.

A 1939 state criminal law says marathon dancing and other endurance contests can't last more than eight hours. It says those involved in the contest must take a 48-hour break before competing again.

It is illegal to call another person a coward if he refuses to participate in a duel. The law, dating to the 1800s, carries a two-year prison term.

The law also calls for a 10-year prison term for persons involved in a duel.

The sale of logs that have been hollowed out and plugged at the ends with a piece of wood has been illegal since 1901.

The owner of a dog which has chased, bitten or wounded a goat or sheep is subject to a $25 fine.

Persons who handle dangerous snakes violate a 1947 law which carries a maximum $150 fine and a six-month jail sentence.

A law which makes it illegal to "interfere, disquiet or in any way disturb pupils of any school or college for females" should give males intent on raiding sorority houses some reason to reconsider.

Steamboat racing carries a $50 fine and a six-month jail term.

Barbers are prohibited from cutting hair on Sunday, and other types of work on Sunday except in emergencies or for charity work are also illegal. Persons who hunt on Sunday are subject "to the same penalties as those who work on the sabbath.

Great Expectations presents another chapter of

Nine weeks' gross sales*

During the nine weeks ending December 31, 1978, the Great Expectations store in a Miami shopping mall reached $99,845 in sales.

This store is owned by a businessman/franchisee who operates it on a part time basis (with a paid manager). He has no prior experience in our business. For perspective this volume would normally produce 30%–35% net, pre-tax profit.

Our Great "X" mall units nationally gross from 4 to 10 thousand dollars weekly with potential pre-tax profit margins from 23% to 35%.

Carson Hosts 1978 Oscar Awards

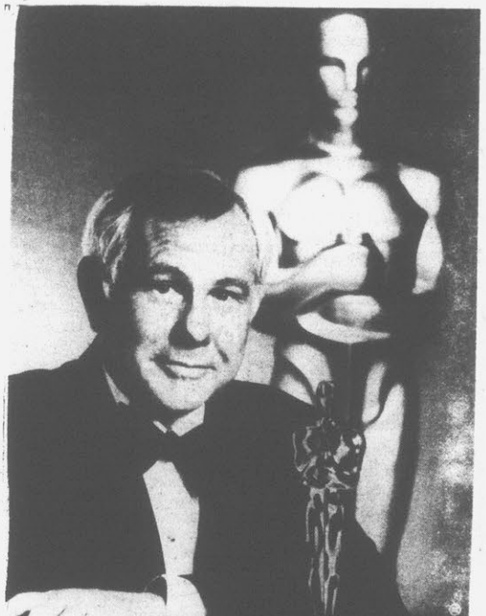

In the early 1950s, a young comedian named Johnny Carson gained experience as host of a string of live television shows with exotic titles like "Carson's Cellar" and "Earn Your Vacation." He's come a long way since, but has never forgotten the training he received in those often wacky days of live television.

Carson returns to his video roots this year when he hosts the 51st Annual Academy Awards, which will be telecast Monday, April 9 (10 p.m. to conclusion), on ABC. This will be his first appearance on an Oscarcast but he feels that he's ready to tackle the biggest live broadcast of them all.

"The Oscar show is a real throwback to the kind of program I did when I was just getting started," he said. "I've always been a big fan of the Oscars because it is aired live and you never know what is going to happen. I remember the year that David Niven had to deal with the streaker and those times when a controversial acceptance speech set off a whole chain reaction of events. The host, of course, is the person in the hot seat and this year that seat belongs to me."

"The advances in tape and film over the last 20 years have been phenomenal, but along the way live television has just about been eliminated and that's sad. There really is no better training ground for a young performer than in the kind of broadcasting where there is no margin for error, and it is strictly every man for himself. You are totally at the mercy of your own and the technicians' frailties.

"I think a lot of the people who attend the Oscar show each year know what I'm talking about. Many of the best directors working in movies had their start in live television.

Johnny Carson will be the sole master of ceremonies when ABC presents the 51st Annual Academy Awards live on Monday, April 9 (10 p.m. to conclusion).

Research Sheds New Light

Christ did not carry his own cross to Calvary. And the Roman soldier who offered him "posca" — vinegar — when Jesus cried out "I thirst" was compassionate — not cruel.

Those are but two of the historical facts that emerged during the painstaking research that preceded the filming of "Jesus of Nazareth," concluding Palm Sunday, April 8 (8 to 10 p.m.), on NBC-TV.

"It makes a dramatic and picturesque scene," says Franco Zeffirelli, who directed the Biblical epic starring Robert Powell as Christ and Olivia Hussey as the Virgin Mary. "But the plain fact of the matter is that Christ never carried a cross to His execution place outside the walls of Jerusalem. Our extensive research into the life and times of the Jews and Romans bears this out."

What Christ did carry, according to producer Vincenzo Labella, citizen of the Vatican and authority on religious history, was the crosspiece, or horizontal portion.

"The execution crosses were made of heavy, roughly hewn oak," says Labella. "Just the weight of the 'patibulum,' or crosspiece — 80 pounds — would have made Jesus stagger. It would have been absolutely impossible for any man to also carry a three-meter pole. That would weigh more than 500 pounds. According to our research the main pole, or 'stipes,' was probably a fixed structure.

As for the long-standing idea that the Roman soldier derisively offered Jesus vinegar, Zeffirelli explains that "It was, in fact, a compassionate gesture. The combination of vinegar and water was, and still is, one of the best thirst-quenchers."

The Crucifixion scene took two weeks to film on location outside the ancient city of Sousse where Hannibal once marched. And although the presence of the film crew and cast in the Tunisian town generated considerable excitement, the Biblical scene they were replicating was not unusual in early Christian times.

"Crucifixion was nothing extraordinary in that day," Zeffirelli explains. "In fact, it was such a common occurrence that there was no big crowds. Just Jesus' close friends, and His mother, Mary, John the Beloved and Mary Magdalene. The rest of the townsfolk went about their business. It was only centuries later that the Crucifixion took on importance in the evolution of Christianity."

ANGUISH OF THE CRUCIFIXION - Mary (Olivia Hussey) grieves as she kneels before the lifeless form of Jesus Christ (Robert Powell) after He has been crucified, in the final episode of "Jesus of Nazareth" on NBC-TV Palm Sunday, April 8 (8-10 p.m.).

Kenny Has Something Special

"To be able to do something you love and have people appreciate it is surely one of the greatest joys of life," said Kenny Rogers about his first network special, "A Special Kenny Rogers," to be presented Thursday, April 12 (9 to 10 p.m.), on CBS.

The popular singer and songwriter wanted to do something different with his first special.

"So I decided to do it based around some of the people who are special to me," he said. "I love concerts. I love the country. I love country music. And I love people. It was only natural that I go back to my roots."

Thus, his special includes a segment filmed on location in Crockett, Texas, where he spent much of his childhood, and at home with his family, friends and former neighbors in the small (population 8,668) East Texas town.

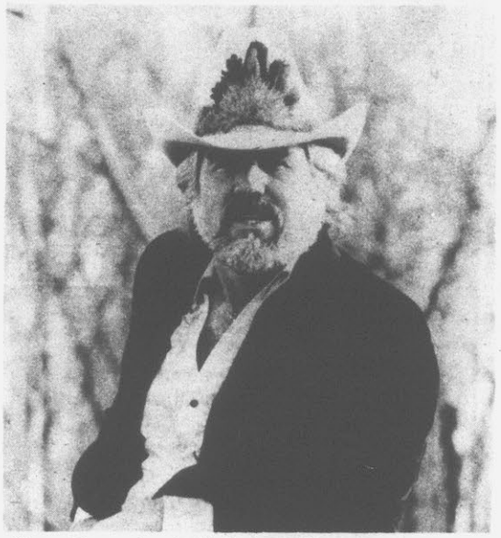

"Crockett personifies 'country,'" Rogers continued. "I decided millions of people have no concept of what country people are really all about. On the special, they will get a chance to see."

Rogers also wanted to include the person he says was his "greatest inspiration" — Ray Charles. "When I was growing up in Texas, I watched and listened to the man and his music. I said, 'Maybe I can make a living doing the same thing.'"

When Rogers started searching for other artists to appear on his special, he didn't have to look too far. Dottie West and the Oak Ridge Boys, who frequently work with Rogers on the road, will also perform.

"We share thousands of memories and jokes that only we can understand," Rogers noted. "And when it counts, there's always someone there."

Of the Oak Ridge Boys, Rogers said: "I love their music. I cut my teeth on the old mountain tradition country music."

Kenny Rogers stars in his first network special, "A Special Kenny Rogers," Thursday, April 12 (9-10 p.m.) on CBS.

Robs Same Bank Twice

Clint Eastwood does his safecracking in a big way, with a 20mm cannon - in "Thunderbolt and Lightfoot," to air on "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," April 8 (9-11:15 p.m.).

A team of very frustrated bank robbers robs the same bank for the second time because they can't find the loot they hid after robbing it the first time in "Thunderbolt and Lightfoot," an action drama airing as "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," April 8 (9 to 11:15 p.m.).

Clint Eastwood, Jeff Bridges, George Kennedy and Geoffrey Lewis are the "think-big" thieves who take a unique approach to safecracking — they blow it open with an anti-tank gun — when they rob the Montana Armory.

'Thunderbolt' (Eastwood) is hiding from his former partners — Red Leary (Kennedy) and Eddie Goody (Lewis) — because they believe he stole the money they stole together in a successful robbery of the Armory. Masquerading as a country preacher, Thunderbolt meets a young drifter called 'Lightfoot' (Bridges) and takes the youth with him to dig up the hidden money which he is, indeed, planning to keep for himself.

Unfortunately, the building where the money was hidden has been torn down, and when the other equally honorless thieves catch up with Thunderbolt, Lightfoot suggests that they merely re-stage the robbery and split the new bundle four ways.

The well-planned robbery goes very smoothly, but nothing else does — Leary is still seeking vengeance on Thunderbolt for making the second robbery necessary, and the pursuing police are not inclined to take the matter lightly. An unexpected discovery makes things look brighter for Thunderbolt and Lightfoot until the surprising grim finale.

Search Swamp For Treasure

Two boys match wits with a murderous alligator in murky swamp waters in "The Boy From Deadman's Bayou." Part I of the feature, starring Mitch Vogel, Mike Lookingland, Percy Rodrigues, John McIntire and Jeannette Nolan, will air on "The Wonderful World of Disney" Sunday, April 8 (7 to 8 p.m.), on NBC-TV.

A year after the devastating hurricane rips through the Louisiana bayou country destroying a small church and dislodging a precious silver bell which now lies hidden beneath the murky waters of Dead Man's Bayou, Jeannot (Vogel), who lost his parents in the storm, attempts to lay his deceased father's memory to rest by locating the bell and donating it to the new church being built by Father Boudreau (McIntire).

Warned not to venture into the fateful Dead Man's Bayou by Charbot (Rodrigues), a bayou fisherman and maker of charms to ward off evil bayou spirits, Jeannot and his cousin, Claude (Lookingland), recklessly abandon their fears and discover the wrecked church tower housing the bell in the depths of the bayou's waters.

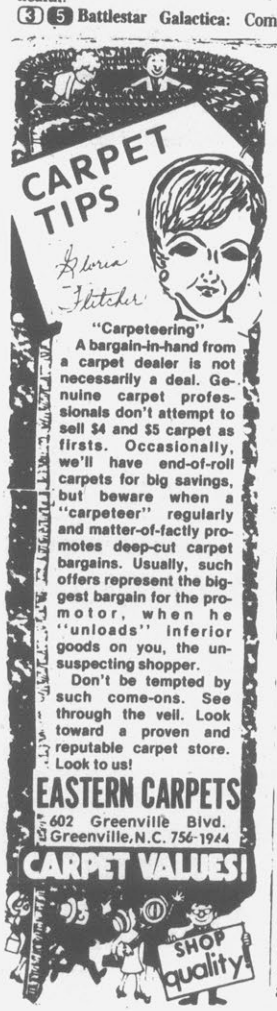

Symphony Tours China

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's historic tour of China will be the subject of a one-hour documentary, CBS Reports: "The Boston Goes to China," to be broadcast in late April.

An eight-man team, headed by correspondent Ed Bradley, executive producer Howard Stringer and producer Andrew Lack, accompanied the Boston Symphony on its recent tour.

The Boston, under the direction of conductor Seiji Ozawa, played one concert in Shanghai and three in Peking during its eight-day visit. In addition, Ozawa led the Shanghai Philharmonic in one concert, and, in the finale of their last Peking concert, led the joint orchestras of the Boston and the Peking Philharmonic.

The tour also included master classes in Shanghai and Peking conducted by instrumentalists from the Boston with members of the Chinese orchestras, and rehearsals of the Peking and Shanghai orchestras by Ozawa.

Two Musical Specials Back-To-Back On ABC

Perry Como celebrates the awakening beauty of spring amid Hollywood landmarks and legends, and Cheryl Ladd stars in a highly contemporary but "down home" musical extravaganza in back-to-back specials Monday, April 9, on ABC-TV.

The perenially popular Perry will be joined by Pam Dawber (co-star of "Mork & Mindy") and Bernadette Peters in "Perry Como's Springtime Special" (8 to 9 p.m.).

Longer visits — and production numbers — are in order at the forecourt of Mann's Chinese Theatre, with footprints of stars from Pola Negri to Jack Nicholson; the beautiful Yamashiro Gardens perched on a cliff above Hollywood, the Western street of a major studio, and a nostalgia-drenched trip to the Stardust Ballroom. In the spirit of Easter, Perry sings with the choir at St. Sophia's, one of the most beautiful churches in America.

"The Cheryl Ladd Special," with guests Waylon Jennings, Ben Vereen and the Mission Mountain Wood Band, follows (9 to 10 p.m.).

In a spectacular dance number, Ben, Cheryl and seven dancers perform "Tropical Nights." Cheryl then sings "Ease on Down" with the Mission Mountain Wood Band, and concludes with a concert number which includes "Gotta Get You Into My Life," "Happy Together," "To Make You Smile Again" and "Missing You."

Cheryl Ladd has a song in her heart and dance in her boots when she stars in her own musical-comedy hour, "The Cheryl Ladd Special," Monday, April 9 (9 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

The Easter Beagle Returns

To Linus, the Peanut philosopher, the idea of celebrating a holiday without a special symbol — such as a Great Pumpkin for Halloween or Santa Claus for Christmas — is like eating a cone without ice cream or a peanut butter sandwich without jelly, walking a leash without a dog or sucking your thumb without a blanket.

More recently the sensitive little blanket-toter in Charles M. Schulz's famous "Peanuts" clan has come up with another hero, the title star of "It's the Easter Beagle, Charlie Brown," animated special to be rebroadcast Monday, April 9 (8 to 8:30 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Linus insists it is not necessary to color eggs because the Easter Beagle distributes them "to all the good little kids."

In analyzing Linus, Schulz notes: "He's a pretty bright little fellow. He's kind of naive now and then about some things, but he's like all of us in that he needs something that he can cling to."

"Linus is a youngster to whom everything must have significance, and nothing is unimportant," continues Schulz. "Christmas is a special day, and it has Santa as one of itssymbols. Halloween is also special in a way, so, according to Linus, it ought to have some sort of a Santa Claus, as should Easter."

Apparently, Linus does not believe in the Easter Bunny — or, at least, that the renowned rabbit will come to Peanutland — so he and Schulz came up with the Easter Beagle, just as they once came up with the Great Pumpkin.

Schulz recalls that after he had introduced the Great Pumpkin, he received letters from readers and viewers inquiring about the who, what, when, where and why of the legendary jack-o'-lantern.

"A number of professional scholars have even written to me about the origination of the legend," continues the artist-writer. "They insisted that it must be based on something."

The image of Santa Claus emerged from the legends surrounding St. Nicholas, a 4th century Asia Minor bishop later popularized by the Dutch. The American Thanksgiving turkey originated with the four wild turkeys served in the Plymouth Colony on the first Thanksgiving.

But the Great Pumpkin and the Easter Beagle just are — or are they?"

Musical Duo Featured

Richard Hatch (r) and Bruce Davison (center) co-star as Jan Berry and Dean Torrence, respectively, with Wolfman Jack portraying himself, in "Deadman's Curve," on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," (9 to 11 p.m.).

Richard Hatch and Bruce Davison star as the Jan and Dean singing duo of the late 1950s and 1960s, whose sizzling popularity ended dramatically in sudden tragedy, in "Deadman's Curve." The biographical movie, dealing with the meteoric musical career of California teenagers Jan Berry and Dean Torrence, will be rebroadcast April 10 (9 to 11 p.m.), on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies."

The production features special appearances by Dick Clark, whose longtime association with recording stars dates back to the Jan and Dean years; Wolfman Jack, perhaps the zaniest personage in the disc jockey game; and singer Mike Love of The Beach Boys, a group experiencing a musical revival and whose original popularity was contemporary with that of Jan and Dean. Also appearing is Bruce Johnson, formerly of The Beach Boys, writer of the Grammy Award-winning hit, "I write the Songs."

Jan, Dean and The Beach Boys played a key role in popularizing the California surfing sound — songs that conjured up idyllic images of surf, sand, and sun-bronzed youngsters and caught the fancy of millions of kids who had never seen an ocean or surfboard.

As chums and football teammates at University High School in Los Angeles, the impulsive, ingenious Berry and the reserved, deliberate Torrence made their first recording, a novelty song they created as a lark, with impromptu equipment in the Berry garage. Almost by accident, the record — "Jenny Lee" — became a hot-selling commercial release, and the team of Jan and Dean was launched.

They recorded a series of other hits, among them "Baby Talk," "Surf City," "Surfin' Safari," "Ride the Wild Surf," "Little Old Lady From Pasadena" and "Deadman's Curve," and achieved widespread fame.

Peter Cottontail Hops In Tonight

"Here Comes Peter Cottontail," a lighthearted animated special, told and sung by Danny Kaye, will be rebroadcast Tuesday, April 10 (8 to 9 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

The special, based on the book, "The Easter Bunny That Overslept," by Priscilla and Otto Friedrich, tells the story of Peter Cottontail and an embarrassing problem. It seems that Peter has failed to deliver more Easter eggs than the evil Irontail (the voice of Vincent Price). But Mr. Sassafrass (the voice of Kaye) saves Peter from disgrace through his time machine. With the help of this invention, Peter tries to go back a day in time in order to make amends and manages to land in every important holiday, except Easter, before he sets things straight.

Kaye, who feels that the best avenue to a child's mind is through the funnybone, says, "Kids will laugh at anyone willing to act like a child, and I am a good child."

Oscars Will Be Awarded

Oscar begins its second half century with a glittering, star-studded entertainment spectacular when the 51st Annual Academy Awards Presentation of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is telecast Monday, April 9 (10 p.m.), on ABC-TV.

"The Deer Hunter," a searing drama about the Vietnam war, and "Heaven Can Wait," a lighthearted comedy of a man given a second chance in life, head the list of contenders with nine nominations each.

"Coming Home," another drama dealing with the Vietnam experience, was nominated in eight categories, including nominations in the four acting categories for the film's stars, Jane Fonda, Jon Voight, Penelope Milford and Bruce Dern. Other top nominated films were "Midnight Express" with six, Woody Allen's "Interiors" with five and "Days of Heaven," "Same Time, Next Year" and "The Wiz" with four each.

In an Academy Award rarity, Warren Beatty was nominated in four separate categories. Beatty was honored for his capacities as star, co-writer (with Elaine May), co-director (with Buck Henry) and producer of "Heaven Can Wait." Only Orson Welles with "Citizen Kane" in 1941 was nominated in these four categories.

Two of Hollywood's most famous personalities, Sir Laurence Olivier and Ingrid Bergman, received nominations for Best Actor and Best Actress. Olivier's nomination for "The Boys From Brazil" was his eleventh, tying him with Katharine Hepburn for most nominations among performers. Miss Bergman received her seventh nomination for her performance in "Autumn Sonata." She has previously won three Oscars and a victory would make her the only performer, male or female, to hold four acting Oscars.

An innovative production number will be featured on the telecast, "Oscar's Only Human" — a medley of well known songs which originally appeared in films but were never nominated for an Oscar.

Sammy Davis, Jr. and Steve Lawrence will perform, and the songs include "Singin' in the Rain," "Puttin' on the Ritz," "Our Love Is Here to Stay," "Hooray For Hollywood," "That's Entertainment," "A Hard Day's Night," "Stayin' Alive," "Be A Clown," "They All Laughed," "There Will Never Be Another You," "It's a Grand Night For Singing," "New York, New York" and "The Candy Man."

What A Hubby!

Jaclyn Smith recently said that, after four months of marriage, hubby Dennis Cole still serves her breakfast in bed each morning. Yes, there's a rose on the tray.

Steiger Qualified

Some Biblical scholars believe that Pontius Pilate was left-handed, basing their contention on the inscription he wrote for the Cross on which Jesus was crucifed. That would make Rod Steiger, who plays Pilate in "Jesus of Nazareth," additionally qualified for the part, because he's a southpaw, too. However, says Steiger, "I can hold a script equally well with either hand!"

Repairs Needed

Cracks have appeared in the outfield stands at Yankee Stadium, and a spokesman says they are "related to the winter weather." The City of New York will make emergency repairs at a cost of about $80,000.

Ballet Airs On PBS

The sensuous and vibrant "Frankie and Johnny," the first American ballet, comes to PBS Wednesday, April 11 (10:30 p.m.).

The ballet premiered in Chicago 41 years ago to a shocked and flabbergasted audience. It has since been recognised as one of the most significant ballets of its day, the forerunner of the burgeoning American genre in dance.

The serio-comic ballet depicts the story of Frankie, a woman of the streets and Johnny, her pimp, who were lovers sworn to be true to each other, until, as the ballad goes, "he done her wrong" by dallying with Miss Nellie Bly.

When the ballet was first performed, reviews were mixed. One critic called it "bawdy" while another said it was "one of the best things Mr. Roosevelt has done," referring to the fact that it was created as part of the WPA Federal Theatre's dance project.

Also featured on the program will be an interview with Ruth Page and black-and-white film of the original production in which Ms. Page danced the part of Frankie and Bentley Stone portrayed Johnny. "Frankie and Johnny' is an earthy ballet," notes Ms. Page, who — along with Stone — choreographed this production for the telecast. "It is not meant to be refined. It is both tragic and fun and a bit wicked, really."

After its 1938 debut in Chicago, "Frankie and Johnny" opened in New York in 1945 in a production by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. To conform to censorship regulations, Ms. Page was asked to make some changes in the choreography, and police were stationed throughout the theatre to prevent the new media from taking action pictures.

There was even disapproval within the Ballet Russe itself. The Russian rehearsal pianist refused to play the "revolting" score one more time, and the situation was saved only when George Balanchine stepped in and played for the rehearsal.

In one scene from "The Hal Linden Special," airing Wednesday, April 11, at 10 p.m. on ABC-TV, the star recreates the role of Meyer Rothschild, from the Broadway hit "The Rothschilds." Here he applies the elaborate makeup that ages him 40 years.

All On Vacation

Jiminy Cricket hosts "On Vacation With Mickey Mouse," an animated special about the wacky vacations of renown Disney characters, airing Wednesday, April 11 (8 p.m. on NBC-TV).

When Jiminy Cricket becomes the producer of an hour television show, he has good reason to worry. His main attractions — Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck, Minnie Mouse, Pluto and Goofy — are all on vacation. During Jiminy's search and roundup, we see the leisure activities of these Disney stars:

At a country club, Mickey and caddie Pluto are the least successful pair on the golf course. Mickey constantly hits balls into groundhog burrows and sand traps, while Pluto matches wits with a gopher, a bee and a persistent wad of bubble gum.

Crimes Intrigue Him

"I've always been fascinated by the classic crime, the super sleuth and the final determination of who-did-what-to-whom," says Ed McMahon. "For me, hosting 'Whodunnit?' is like a dream come true. I've been reading such stories since I was a kid."

"Whodunnit?," a mystery game show played for laughs and loot, premieres Thursday, April 12 (8 to 8:30 p.m.).

Further commenting on his fondness for mysteries, McMahon said: "I've always read Agatha Christie's works — I loved the classic Charlie Chan mysteries where all the suspects are gathered together in one room and Chan methodically rules out this one, then that one, you know the style I mean.

"By elimination the detective would finally come to the tell-tale clue, like the cigarettes in the ashtray had no filter!

"Our show will be like that. Contestants and our celebrity panelists — like F. Lee Bailey — will all see what turns out to be the only clue. There will be a lot of 'red herrings,' so everyone'll have to be real careful. After everyone makes his selection, we'll run an instant replay of the actual perpetrator and show the clue that nails him to the crime.

"I know I'm going to enjoy the game and I think the television viewers will too. There are a lot of mystery fans in the country and this will give them at home a chance to see just how good they are at picking out the right clue and pinning the crime on the suspect."

The crime segment — about six minutes — will dramatize the crime, show the suspects involved and a law enforcement official investigating the crime.

Then McMahon will be joined by three experts, the contestants and suspects from the crime drama.

At this point, the contestants can make a commitment and play for $10,000 or wait until they have more information and choose later.

Experts will have a limited time for cross examination and all then will have the opportunity to make their selection. If a contestant outwits the experts and correctly identifies the suspect, he wins $5,000. If both contestant and expert are successful in picking the criminal, contestants can win $1,000.

Connors In Film

Pike's Peek

BY CHARLIE PIKE
PFA Staff Writer

HOLLYWOOD — There's now scuttlebutt that NBC is giving serious thought to revamping "MRS. COLUMBO" for another try next Fall. It's understood that KATE MULGREW would remain in the role, but should the project be shelved permanently, then there's talk that she'll show up as the star of a new and different series.

After the January 1st earthquake jolted Southern California, "LOVE BOAT'S" GAVIN McLEOD and his wife, PATTI, moved out of their sky-rise apartment in Hollywood and into a small house in Santa Monica. Now they're moving back into the apartment building, but just to the sixth floor this time.

At the same time that NEIL DIAMOND was in Cedars-Sinai Hospital in Hollywood undergoing a nine-hour back surgery, GREG MORRIS of "VEGA$" was having an operation for a torn cartilage in his left knee. Greg injured the knee during an early episode of "MISSION: IMPOSSIBLE," but it didn't require surgery until he aggravated it while on location on the new series.

Rumor has it that all is not well in the ROBIN WILLIAMS-VALERIE VALARDI marriage, primarily because Robin has been seen socially without his bride on several occasions.

In order for BOB HOPE to guest-star on LEIF GARRETT'S May 11th TV special, the latter had to jet to London to tape the segment since Hope is there taping a TV special of his own. Predictably, Leif will now appear as a guest on Hope's show.

The pleasant — though not entirely expected — success of "THE ROPERS" has left next season's format of "THREE'S COMPANY" more than a little up in the air. The decision that has to be made is whether there'll be a new set of landlords, or would there be a detrimental tendency to compare someone new to the Ropers.

While "M*A*S*H" will be back for an eighth season, it's understood that an hour-long concluding segment is already on the drawing board for airing the end of next season.

Evidence that all was not bad on "MAKIN' IT" — every regular member of the cast has received job offers for either a new series or a feature film.

Craft Of Acting

Robert Preston offers this thought about the craft of acting: "Olivier once said, 'Always consider the next take as a better rehearsal than the last. The minute you think this is a performance, this is it, the camera will catch you performing for yourself.'"

Cassidy Breaks Mold

Shaun Cassidy breaks the mold of his 'Hardy Boy' image when he stars in "Like Normal People," airing as "The ABC Friday Night Movie," April 13 (9 to 11 p.m.).

"I read the script at a time when I wasn't sure if I wanted to do any television," the actor/singer says honestly. "I had just gotten done with the series and it wasn't that I was anxious to go into feature films. I was eager to work on my music, a tour, both of which kind of suffered because of 'Hardy Boys.'

"However, besides being a terrific vehicle for an actor, the story of this film is just incredibly wonderful. I think it will enlighten a lot of people. Some people are going to expect this to be a downer — I realize that — but it's not. It's totally positive."

Shaun portrays Roger Meyers and Linda Purl stars as his wife, Virginia. The two are mentally retarded and the movie, based on a book written by Roger's brother (Like Normal People), tells of their attempts to wed and lead a normal life.

"They actually met at a place in San Diego called the Home For Guiding Hands when Roger was like 18 or 19," Shaun explains. "His mother took him there, and there's a very nice scene in this art class where Virginia is working on drawing a rabbit. He says, 'Is that Bugs Bunny?' She looks at him and says, 'No, it's Mrs. Bugs Bunny. Isn't that obvious?'

Through flashbacks, the film tells Roger and Virginia's story of trying to live everyday lives.

"It's because they worked together that they have done what they've done," Shaun suggests. "They've worked off each other. Roger is more of a dreamer. He's the one who says, 'Let's push ahead.' Virginia is much more middle-of-the-road, but that combination is what had enabled them to get where they are."

Today, the Meyers have their own apartment and each maintains a fulltime job. Also, both were big fans of "The Hardy Boys."

"The night before I met them, Roger wrote me a fan letter and, by coincidence, he'd met my mother, father and brother, David, at various things like the Special Olympics. So I think it's been very exciting for him and for Virginia, but no more than it has for Linda and myself. When you explore mental retardation, you discover that it's not necessarily that much of a different world than the one you live in. And that's what we hope to show in the film."

Dave's Exercise

While golf, tennis and racquet ball are popular off-season diversions for most players, Cincinnati Reds' Dave Tomlin gets his exercise "shoveling corn and manure, pitching hay and feeding cows." Tomlin owns a 72-acre farm near his hometown, West Union, Ohio.

Linda Purl and Shaun Cassidy play two retarded young people who marry in "Like Normal People," a true story on "The ABC Friday Night Movie," April 13 (9-11 p.m.).

Michele Will Tell

Q: Who was the blonde male dancer in the 1950s film, "Tea For Two," that starred Doris Day and Gordon MacRae? MRS. L. CUTTER, FLORENCE, S.C.

A: He's Gene Nelson. Now in his 50s and nimble as ever, the singer/dancer/actor hasn't been in a movie since 1963 ("Thunder Island" was his last one), preferring to direct. And he is one of TV's busiest directors.

Q: Lynda Carter is my favorite actress. Does she plan to make any movies in the future? Where do I write to her? M. WILDS, NICHOLS, S.C.

A: At the moment, Lynda has her hands full with a three-dimensional career — recordings, a nightclub act and her TV series. "The New Adventures of Wonder Woman," so it's doubtful that she has time for movies. There is a strong probability, however, that there will be films at a later date. Write to her c/o CBS-TV, 7800 Beverly Blvd., Hollywood, Calif. 90036.

Q: Is Barry Manilow going to have a special on television any time soon? H. SILVA, WILMINGTON, N.C.

A: Barry will be featured in a special on ABC-TV, but the date has not been announced.

Q: My English class would like the address of Charles Schulz, Walt Disney Productions and Warner Bros. for a project we are working on. J. BIRCHFIELD, BLACKSBURG, S.C.

A: Yes! This week, in fact, Cheryl will be featured in her first television special Monday, April 9, on ABC. Don't miss it!

A: Betty does have two sons, but she isn't Leif's mom. His mother is dancer/actress Carolyn Stellar, who has been the guiding force in shaping Leif's career.

Saves Pet Bull

Stacy Swor takes care of raising a motherless bull she helped to birth in "The Escape of a One-Ton Pet," a three-part "ABC Children's Novel for Television" airing on the "ABC Weekend Specials" series Saturday, April 14 (12-12:30 p.m.).

How can a young girl hide a 2,000-pound bull the size of a compact car?

That's the problem facing Pru Miller, a spirited teenager in "The Escape of a One-Ton Pet," a three-part "ABC Weekend Specials" presentation airing on successive Saturdays, beginning April 14 (12-noon to 12:30 p.m.).

Pru is a high-spirited Northern California girl who raises a motherless bull she helped to bring into the world, confident that the animal will grow into a prize-winner and a champion breeder.

Dave Parker Has It All

Dave Parker, in the parlance of the sporting world, has all the tools — 6-foot-5 and 230 pounds of sheer talent, desire and pride. Add all that up and you have the highest paid player in the major league, which Parker is. The 27-year-old Pittsburgh Pirate right fielder recently signed a $5 million contract over a five-year period.

But players, fans and coaches alike agree that Parker is the most complete player in the major leagues — and this after only four full years with the Pirates.

The Buc superstar will join his teammates when they take on Eastern Division rival St. Louis on the "NBC Major League Baseball Game of the Week" Saturday, April 14 (2:15 p.m.).

"Parker's the most awesome player I've ever seen," dazzled Philadelphia All-Star shortstop Larry Bowa commented recently. Bowa was the only player besides Parker to get a vote in the National League Most Valuable Player balloting last season.

The only thing that slowed Parker down was a fractured cheekbone that kept him out of the lineup for 11 games. In typical style, he injured himself while barreling into home and colliding with New York Met catcher John Stearns.

He played with a protective face mask the rest of the season and took out his vengeance on National League pitchers. When the Pirates started play in August, they were seven games behind the Phillies.

After hitting .381 with seven homers and 31 RBIs in that sizzling summer month, Parker and the Pirates crept to within 4 1/2 games of the Phils. He topped that with a .413 average with seven more homers and 27 RBIs in September to almost bring Pittsburgh to the top.

Parker finished with a .334 average, 30 homers and 117 RBIs despite missing seven games. That prompted Philadelphia manager Danny Ozark to comment: "I've never seen a guy who loves the game like he does. I don't think he'll be a much better player, but he'll be a smarter hitter."

A lot of players have noted Dave's lack of laziness and his drive to always do better. That drive has prompted a four-year batting average of .308, a figure that may just keep growing.

Somehow you get the feeling that the Pittsburgh organization got a bargain when Dave Parker inked that five-year contract.

The Teen Scene

No sooner did LEIF GARRETT finish taping his May TV special than he was off to Japan. He'll appear in concert in Japan before returning to the States to start in a yet-titled movie. After that, sometime around September, he'll begin his U.S. tour.

The general reaction to SHAUN CASSIDY's performance in "LIKE NORMAL PEOPLE" (airing Friday, April 13th) by those who have seen the film is that he could very well be in line for an Emmy nomination.

May 1st is the date for the release of KC & THE SUNSHINE BAND's new album, which will contain their just-released single, "DO YOU WANNA GO PARTY?" As always, the single was written by HARRY (KC), CASEY and RICK FINCH.

PINK LADY is a new group that promises to be making a lot of musical charts before long. Actually, two young Japanese girls are Pink Lady, and they are that country's biggest musical stars. With their guest appearance on LEIF's TV special — their U.S. debut — they'll no doubt be attracting a lot of attention in the months ahead.

WILLIE AAMES of TV's "EIGHT IS ENOUGH" couldn't be happier. He and his musical group, PARADISE, are now signed with MCA Records and an LP should be forthcoming shortly.

SUSAN RICHARDSON of that series couldn't resist the urge and is now the proud owner of a brand new Corvette.

'Family Man'

"The Family Man," a new motion picture-for-television, starring Ed Asner, Meredith Baxter Birney and Anne Jackson, has begun production on location in New York City for broadcast on CBS-TV.

Paul Clemens, Dick Latessa, Mary-Joan Negro and Luke Reilly are featured in the cast.

Asner portrays Eddie Madden, a happily married owner of a parking garage who becomes romantically involved with a younger woman. The relationship begins with his concern over her problems dealing with a spurned and violent lover and with their shared interest in music. His attentions are observed by his young son, who is working part time for his father.

Maddin finds himself romantically drawn to the young woman, a fact he is slow to admit. Meanwhile, his wife learns of the situation from her son, but keeps silent in the hope that things will work themselves out.

A Hot Time In The Old Town

At first, the idea shocked residents of Long Beach, Calif. "You mean to say they're going to come wheeling along our Shoreline Drive at 180 miles an hour?" questioned a merchant, as he glanced warily at his store front. One lifelong citizen, who had vivid memories of rumble seats and running boards, exclaimed, "Why, they'll be driving at full blast down Ocean Boulevard. Imagine!"

They did, indeed, and on Sunday, April 8, they'll do it all over again when the U.S. Grand Prix West is run on the streets of Long Beach (3:45 p.m. to 6 p.m. on CBS-TV).

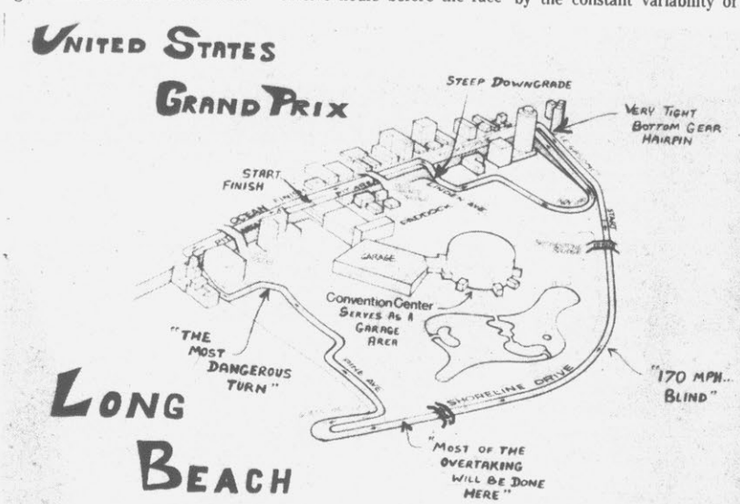

Any fears the locals had several years ago before the running of that first race were quickly diminished. It merely proved, among other things, that there's nothing like the roar of race cars to pick up the pace of a city.

The setting is so continental that the question now asked is why Long Beach didn't do something like this long before they did.

Twelve hours before the race begins, Long Beach closes parts of the main business thoroughfare, transforming it into a complete race course of 2.02 miles of straightways and curves. At turns and in escape areas, precast concrete barriers are faced with 25,000 tires, lashed together in rows up to four deep and eight to ten tires high. Then, presto! It's Monaco West, with 180-mph blurs where senior citizens usually creep along in golf carts.

Race fans freak out on the new sounds and perspectives afforded by the constant variability of a "real" racing environment. Particularly gratifying is the overhead view from the many high-rise vantage points along the circuit. If you're lucky enough to be on a balcony (these rent for as much as $1,500 during the race weekend), you can actually see the violent wrench of steering wheels and the pumping of brakes. This affords an exciting sense of the human element that is impossible to catch from any other viewing place.

Competitors like the constant challenge of changing road surfaces and contours — rough and slick. Of course, the Grand Prix West is hard work for the drivers, although they do get a rest on the main straight.

An overnight transformation of the city streets of Long Beach, Calif., takes place each year on the eve of the running of the U.S. Grand Prix West. CBS Sports will present live coverage of the event, Sunday, April 8, 3:45 to 6 p.m.

'Like A Dream'

"The American Sportsman' has been like a dream show for me," said Curt Gowdy as he reminisced about the outdoors adventure series, which celebrates its 15th anniversary this season. "Not only has the show been a success for all those years, but it has taken me to some of the best fishing and hunting spots all over the world."

Gowdy, who has hosted the ABC Sports' program since its inception, has participated as a commentator in some of sports' finest moments, but he says he most relishes his involvement with the 'Sportsman.'

"It's a funny thing, but every time I do a sports event, all the athletes I talk to ask to be on the 'Sportsman,' even though they and the entertainment celebrities who appear on the show know they won't receive a dime. For them as well as for myself, it has been a love affair with the outdoors," Gowdy said.

This "love affair" began in Gowdy's Wyoming childhood when he first went pheasant hunting and fly fishing near Cheyenne. Even though Gowdy later became an All-American basketball player, his heart belongs to the outdoors.

Gowdy vividly remembers when 'Sportsman' was born as a segment of "Wide World of Sports." The producer of 'Wide World' wanted a fishing show that was competition-oriented. From this came the idea to hold a three-day world championship trout fishing contest in Argentina. The contest pitted Gowdy and writer Joe Brooks against two Argentinians at Lago General Paz, a lake near the border of Chile. On the final day, the Americans came from behind to win when they caught a whopper of a trout.

"We put the show on the air, and it received wide public and press acceptance," said Gowdy.

The viewers had a taste of the outdoors, like what they saw, and as a result, "The American Sportsman" with Gowdy at the helm, became a series.

Enjoys Pulling A Con

Stephen Furst, who stars as the portly Flounder on ABC-TV's "Delta House," learned to be a con man, whose antics could match any of those by the hilarious Deltas when he first arrived in Hollywood.

"I was married immediately after graduation to the girl I dated throughout my senior year," the Virignia Commonwealth University graduate relates. The two set off for Hollywood in a rented truck, with Furst's old car being towed behind it, and very little money. They had a difficult time getting an apartment because of wary managers.

"I figured out that they suddenly were out of vacancies because we were unemployed, admitted it, and — even worse — looked so unemployed," Furst said. "So I lied." He put on his best suit and made up a story about opening a branch of an Eastern-based business in the Los Angeles area.

That got the Fursts an apartment, but it didn't solve all their problems. "We had an apartment in Hollywood," he joked. "All that did was make me feel like a genuine Hollywood actor, instead of an unemployed out-of-town one. I had to do something."

Furst's first job was as a pizza delivery man in the Hollywood area. His hours were from 6 p.m. until 2 a.m., six nights a week. He refuses to say whether the job included all the pizzas the delivery man could eat.

However, he loyally went back to the pizza house after deciding to take his buddies in the series out to dinner.

"We all posed as out-of-work actors who were very hungry," he says happily. "Now that was a con I really enjoyed pulling."

It's More Than Just Beauty

At the national, state and local levels, the America's Junior Miss Pageant is one of the largest scholarship competitions for high school senior girls in the United States, say Pageant officials.

The 50 state titleholders who will gather this year in Mobile, Ala., for the national pageant have all attained a high level of achievement in scholarship and community service, as well as being attractive, physically fit, creative and articulate.

The finale to the competition will be broadcast as a speical, with Hal Linden as host, Saturday, April 14 (8 to 9 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

The contest was organized in 1957, and the first contestants, representing 18 states, arrived in Mobile in 1958. By 1961, all 50 states were represented.

Back in 1958, the total for the scholarships awarded to the finalists was $10,000. Now the new titleholder alone will receive a scholarship of $15,000, and, in all, more than $1,000,000 in scholarships and prizes will be awarded to contestants at the local, state and national levels, according to Pageant officials.

Approximately 25,000 high school seniors enter the more than 1,400 local contests that lead up the national finals.

Wide World

FOR JERRY APODACA, chairman, The President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports

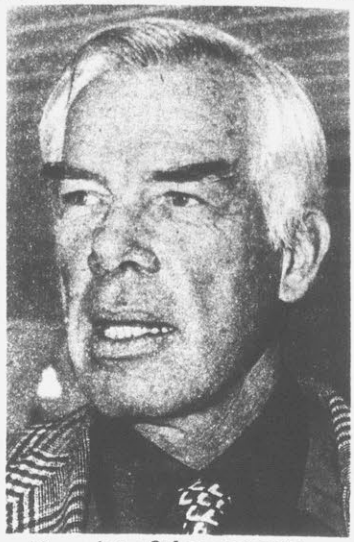

As a nation, how do we rate in fitness, and what hard evidence is there that exercise improves our health? — E.N., El Dorado, Ark.

● Poorly, although we're getting better. Recent surveys disclosed that 62 percent of American adults are overweight and nearly 50 percent never exercise. However, the percentage of adults who exercise regularly has nearly doubled, from 24 to 47 percent, since 1961. As to the benefits of exercise, both mortality rates and the incidence of fatal heart disease have dropped sharply since the mid-60's. Most physicians attribute the declines to three factors: 1. earlier detection and treatment of high blood pressure; 2. improved diet; 3. better exercise habits. Unfortunately, the revolution in living habits doesn't appear to have touched the younger generation.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Everyone seems to be coming up with Lee Marvin chatter these days. How about you? What have you got to tell us about him that's new? — P.L., Yuma, Ariz.

● For relaxation, Lee either takes off on his Yamaha 500 and races along the desert roads, or else goes fishing (preferably in Australia). When he's working, or out in a professional capacity, he has a rule: "Never sit up front — unless you're driving. Stick to the back of the car." His abiding ambition, he says, is to take things as easy as possible. "One thing one learns as he gets older is that he is a darned sight more interesting than most of the people he meets." By the way, did you know that Lee doesn't believe in formality at meal times? Last time actors Barry Newman and Albert Salmi lunched with Lee at his Tucson, Ariz., home, they ate in the huge kitchen — where they were joined by Lee's horse!

● No. If we paid workers for hand weeding, food would be too expensive for most of us. Farmers use herbicides that kill the weeds without injuring the crop and use special cultivation techniques and other management procedures, which, when properly combined, allow production and marketing of fruits, vegetables and other crops at affordable prices.

FOR GRAYSON H. WHEATLEY, prof. of mathematics and education, Purdue University

Will all these computing marvels have the reverse effect on our children in that they will rely on their fingers for information, instead of their brains? — N.S., Decatur, Ill.

● I'm not at all concerned that calculators in the elementary school will "short circuit" the learning of mathematics. With calculators to carry the burden of computation children can focus on problem-solving. My experience suggests children think more, not less, when using calculators.

FOR CANDICE BERGEN, actress

Exactly how much attention do you pay to commercials? I ask because you have endorsed a perfume. — A.D., Minot, N.D.

● I'm interested in new products, whether they're advertised or not; but I don't subscribe to the theory that one's lifestyle changes when one buys something new. I didn't mean to imply that all women would meet Mr. Right if they dabbed the new perfume behind their ears; just that if they wore it when he showed up they'd be much more attractive.

FOR ERICA JONG, author of How to Save Your Own Life

When your first book made the best-seller list, were you sought out by people who never cared about you before, and how did you deal with them? — J.R., Meridian, Miss.

● Since I'm rather open myself, I used to be bad at spotting guile in others. I think I was romanced by a lot of people with dollar signs in their eyes or who wanted to bask in reflected glory, but I learned to distinguish between those who were genuine and those who were not. The adjustment period took about two years.

FOR JAMES F. FIXX, author of The Complete Book of Running

Running has suddenly become popular; when did it first begin as an exercise? — R.E., Grand Junction, Colo.

● Way back when. The ancient Greeks were great runners, though they liked short races, not the long ones that are in vogue today. In the Bible, the subject of running comes up repeatedly, perhaps most notably in John's admonition to the Hebrews: "Let us run with perseverance the race that is set before us" (Hebrews: 12:1).

FOR LYNN REDGRAVE, actress

What do you like most about our country, the fact that it's easier to live here or work here? — T.C., Santa Fe, N.M.

● It's a combination of both. America has an energy and vitality that I haven't found anywhere else. The opportunities are endless, and doors open — to everyone — more than they close. I don't miss England at all because actors have a hard life there. The more I live here, the more I love it — and my husband and children feel the same. Now it's home.

PRO AND CON

Does the FDA Take Too Long to Approve Drugs?

PRO Joseph Stetler, President, Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association

The 1962 amendments to federal drug laws produced a troublesome side effect sometimes called "the drug lag." In the 15 years preceding 1962, there were 641 new drugs introduced in this country. But the next 15 years produced only 247 new ones. Because U.S. approvals often lag several years behind other advanced countries, American patients have been denied useful treatments for such disorders as epilepsy, asthma and cardiac irregularity. Unquestionably, the FDA has a tough job. Any effective medicine involves potential risks that should be carefully monitored. But let's not forget the risks to the patient who cannot obtain medication that might be available sooner, if processing moved more efficiently.

CON Donald Kennedy, Commissioner, Food and Drug Administration

FDA has a dual responsibility to assure consumers and health professionals that drugs are safe and effective and to encourage innovation and speed the flow of new drugs. FDA evaluates drugs as soon as manufacturers apply for approval. The law requires manufacturers to submit at least two studies showing the drug is safe and effective. When adequate data are submitted, a drug can be approved within months. Delays usually occur because FDA must ask for more or better information. FDA has established a special system for quick review of drugs representing major therapeutic advances. I know of no significant proven therapies approved elsewhere that are unavailable here.

Wide World

We are jogging toward better health.

As a nation, how do we rate in fitness, and what hard evidence is there that exercise improves our health? — E.N., El Dorado, Ark.

● Poorly, although we're getting better. Recent surveys disclosed that 62 percent of American adults are overweight and nearly 50 percent never exercise. However, the percentage of adults who exercise regularly has nearly doubled, from 24 to 47 percent, since 1961. As to the benefits of exercise, both mortality rates and the incidence of fatal heart disease have dropped sharply since the mid-60's. Most physicians attribute the declines to three factors: 1. earlier detection and treatment of high blood pressure; 2. improved diet; 3. better exercise habits. Unfortunately, the revolution in living habits doesn't appear to have touched the younger generation.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Everyone seems to be coming up with Lee Marvin chatter these days. How about you? What have you got to tell us about him that's new? — P.L., Yuma, Ariz.

● For relaxation, Lee either takes off on his Yamaha 500 and races along the desert roads, or else goes fishing (preferably in Australia). When he's working, or out in a professional capacity, he has a rule: "Never sit up front — unless you're driving. Stick to the back of the car." His abiding ambition, he says, is to take things as easy as possible. "One thing one learns as he gets older is that he is a darned sight more interesting than most of the people he meets." By the way, did you know that Lee doesn't believe in formality at meal times? Last time actors Barry Newman and Albert Salmi lunched with Lee at his Tucson, Ariz., home, they ate in the huge kitchen — where they were joined by Lee's horse!

● No. If we paid workers for hand weeding, food would be too expensive for most of us. Farmers use herbicides that kill the weeds without injuring the crop and use special cultivation techniques and other management procedures, which, when properly combined, allow production and marketing of fruits, vegetables and other crops at affordable prices.

FOR GRAYSON H. WHEATLEY, prof. of mathematics and education, Purdue University

Will all these computing marvels have the reverse effect on our children in that they will rely on their fingers for information, instead of their brains? — N.S., Decatur, Ill.

● I'm not at all concerned that calculators in the elementary school will "short circuit" the learning of mathematics. With calculators to carry the burden of computation children can focus on problem-solving. My experience suggests children think more, not less, when using calculators.

FOR CANDICE BERGEN, actress

Exactly how much attention do you pay to commercials? I ask because you have endorsed a perfume. — A.D., Minot, N.D.

● I'm interested in new products, whether they're advertised or not; but I don't subscribe to the theory that one's lifestyle changes when one buys something new. I didn't mean to imply that all women would meet Mr. Right if they dabbed the new perfume behind their ears; just that if they wore it when he showed up they'd be much more attractive.

FOR ERICA JONG, author of How to Save Your Own Life

When your first book made the best-seller list, were you sought out by people who never cared about you before, and how did you deal with them? — J.R., Meridian, Miss.

● Since I'm rather open myself, I used to be bad at spotting guile in others. I think I was romanced by a lot of people with dollar signs in their eyes or who wanted to bask in reflected glory, but I learned to distinguish between those who were genuine and those who were not. The adjustment period took about two years.

FOR JAMES F. FIXX, author of The Complete Book of Running

Running has suddenly become popular; when did it first begin as an exercise? — R.E., Grand Junction, Colo.

● Way back when. The ancient Greeks were great runners, though they liked short races, not the long ones that are in vogue today. In the Bible, the subject of running comes up repeatedly, perhaps most notably in John's admonition to the Hebrews: "Let us run with perseverance the race that is set before us" (Hebrews: 12:1).

FOR LYNN REDGRAVE, actress

What do you like most about our country, the fact that it's easier to live here or work here? — T.C., Santa Fe, N.M.

● It's a combination of both. America has an energy and vitality that I haven't found anywhere else. The opportunities are endless, and doors open — to everyone — more than they close. I don't miss England at all because actors have a hard life there. The more I live here, the more I love it — and my husband and children feel the same. Now it's home.

PRO AND CON

Does the FDA Take Too Long to Approve Drugs?

PRO Joseph Stetler, President, Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association

The 1962 amendments to federal drug laws produced a troublesome side effect sometimes called "the drug lag." In the 15 years preceding 1962, there were 641 new drugs introduced in this country. But the next 15 years produced only 247 new ones. Because U.S. approvals often lag several years behind other advanced countries, American patients have been denied useful treatments for such disorders as epilepsy, asthma and cardiac irregularity. Unquestionably, the FDA has a tough job. Any effective medicine involves potential risks that should be carefully monitored. But let's not forget the risks to the patient who cannot obtain medication that might be available sooner, if processing moved more efficiently.

CON Donald Kennedy, Commissioner, Food and Drug Administration

FDA has a dual responsibility to assure consumers and health professionals that drugs are safe and effective and to encourage innovation and speed the flow of new drugs. FDA evaluates drugs as soon as manufacturers apply for approval. The law requires manufacturers to submit at least two studies showing the drug is safe and effective. When adequate data are submitted, a drug can be approved within months. Delays usually occur because FDA must ask for more or better information. FDA has established a special system for quick review of drugs representing major therapeutic advances. I know of no significant proven therapies approved elsewhere that are unavailable here.

A BRAVE NEW BREED OF MEDICS BATTLES SUDDEN DEATH—AND WINS

By L. B. Taylor, Jr.

• In Seattle, Wash., an American Legionnaire clutched his chest and collapsed while marching along a downtown street, an apparent heart attack victim.

Within seconds, bystanders stepped from the crowd and began administering cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR). Three minutes later, firemen who had completed an 81-hour basic life support course arrived to take over.

In a few more minutes, a team of paramedics, each member trained for more than 1,000 hours in advanced life support techniques, relieved the firemen, stabilized the man, and defibrillated his heart, steadying its contraction and irregular beat.

• In St. Paul, Neb., a worker touched a hot wire, and 7,200 volts arced through his body, entering one hand and exploding in a ball of fire out the other. He was knocked to the ground, breathless.

A co-worker, trained in first aid, applied CPR and revived him. Four minutes later, a rescue squad was on the scene and Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs) gave him oxygen, took a heart reading with a portable cardiac monitor, and started an IV (intravenous injection) to treat shock.

• In Logan, Ohio, an 18-month-old girl was run over by a car and lay motionless in the street with a brain concussion, broken ribs, a punctured lung, fractured collar bone and a broken wrist.

Within five minutes an ambulance arrived and two EMTs quickly and skillfully worked over the lifeless form. To get her to the hospital without further injuring her in the movement, they rolled her on her side with her spinal cord and neck immobilized and then rolled her onto a backboard. This method, called "logrolling," prevents a badly injured patient from suffering paralysis.

The Legionnaire, the electrical worker and the little girl are all alive and well today, thanks largely to the rapid development and expansion in recent years of a national Emergency Medical Services (EMS) system.

This life-saving program, funded in part by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) and the Department of Transportation, has spread to virtually every state and will "blanket the country with wall-to-wall coverage by the early 1980's," according to the HEW program director, 41-year-old Dr. David R. Boyd.

The idea of on-site treatment of heart attack, accident and other victims in need of emergency services is not new. Medics have tended wounded soldiers on the front lines of combat for centuries, and doctors once rode with ambulance crews in metropolitan areas.

But in the years since World War II, many doctors have become specialists and others have been too busy, their time too valuable to spend in the field. They can treat far more patients better in offices and hospitals.

Consequently, emergency service greatly deteriorated. Most ambulances were provided by funeral homes and did not carry proper equipment.

Many ambulance crew members were poorly trained for the care and handling of critically ill or badly injured people. A great number of victims who probably could have been saved with fast, efficient medical service, instead died as a result of the lack of it.

HEW estimates there are about 110,000 "trauma" deaths from accidents annually in the United States — primarily from poisoning, auto accidents and burns. Another 350,000 sudden cardiac deaths are estimated each year.

Yet, as recently as a few years ago the American College of Emergency Physicians estimated that 18,000 of those who die each year in auto accidents alone could be saved if emergency medical care were immediately available.

As late as 1972, the National Academy of Sciences, in a special report, called emergency medical services "one of the weakest links in the delivery of health care in the nation."

To counter the deplorable emergency service conditions, Congress passed two new laws. The Highway Safety Act of 1966 provided funds for states to buy ambulances, adequately equip them with proper gear and supplies and train attendants in basic emergency care.

In 1973, the Emergency Medical Services Systems Act was passed, modeled in part after a regional system Dr. Boyd had set up in the Chicago area.

As a direct result of these laws, tens of thousands of firemen, policemen, ambulance crew members and others from all walks of life, male and female, including many volunteer workers, received extensive training in basic life-support systems.

Studies included such life-sustaining steps as how to stop serious bleeding, how to treat patients in shock and how to administer heart massage and mouth-to-mouth resuscitation (CPR). Those passing the course became qualified as EMTs.

Medical specialists further trained to give advanced emergency care qualified as paramedics. By law, they can provide more intensive care, such as administering IVs, applying certain drugs and medicines, and using defibrillators and other sophisticated equipment.

These EMTs and paramedics, who often are given complex care instructions in the field by radio phone from doctors in medical centers, provide, in effect, an extension of services offered by hospital emergency rooms.

A spin-off benefit of all this formal training has been a "ripple effect" where EMTs and paramedics have conducted classes in first aid, including CPR techniques, for citizens in communities across the country. In Seattle, for instance, more than 125,000 people have taken such training.

Today, there are 300,000 certified EMTs in the U.S., and more than 12,000 paramedics.

There are approximately 30,000 ambulances, most of which meet the new federal standards for design. Rescue vehicles now carry telemetry for sending EKG information to hospitals; radio telephones to call doctors at hospitals; defibrillators; drug boxes for medicines and intravenous solutions; oxygen; stethoscopes; trauma kits; first aid supplies; splints; baby delivery equipment and extrication tools to free victims pinned in auto wrecks.

More than one-third of the 300 EMS regions throughout the U.S. are operating with basic life support systems.

Dr. Boyd is hoping for coast-to-coast EMS coverage soon. "Things are going faster now because we have good model systems to go by," he says. "So by 1982, maybe 1983, we're shooting for a national program, moving from basic life support up to advanced life support."

Results of the vastly upgraded EMS system already are impressive. Estimates of the number of dead-on-arrival accident victims, for example, have decreased by almost 20 percent since 1968.

Statistics from regional areas have been even more encouraging. Charlottesville, Va., reports a 26 percent drop in pre-hospital coronary death rates, and a 62 percent decline in ambulance coronary death rates, three years after a community-wide CPR program and pre-hospital emergency cardiac care began there.

The future looks more promising. HEW says, "National estimates are that improved access and care for the most critical patients, i.e., trauma, acute coronary attack, burns, poisonings, high-risk infants, and behavioral emergencies, can save approximately 100,000 lives each year."

Adds Dr. Boyd: "In EMS we haven't invented a new treatment. We haven't invented anything new. We're taking what people have known for years and are getting it out in the field. The reason EMS has caught on is because everybody knows it's an idea whose time has come." For more information about EMS, write to: Health Services Administration, Division of EMS, P.O. United Artists

JON VOIGHT'S STRUGGLE TO REGAIN STARDOM

By Isobel Silden

He bursts into the room, sees the waiting people, for he is almost an hour late for set appointments, and grins quickly, saying, "I'd better leave."

It is so disarming, reporters, never among the most patient of folk, murmur, "It's O.K.," simultaneously lavishing forgiveness and relief that he has finally shown up.

One is never sure with superstars, and Jon Voight is, indeed, one of the superstars of this year for his sensitive portrayal of a paraplegic in Coming Home, a performance so stunning that many experts predict Voight will win an Oscar on Monday night.

Seemingly, it is not of paramount importance to him, as he says, "It is a huge event in this material world. Hopefully, I'll be happy with the people I am with that evening, if it doesn't come my way."

He speaks well and rapidly, and he speaks a lot. He uses the word "energy" in almost every sentence, and it seems such a contradiction, for Jon Voight appears to be the most laid-back of people.

If this were a fan magazine story, rhapsodic phrases might read: one gets caught up in the intensity of his blue eyes. His heart-shaped face, unique in so masculine a man, is almost flawless. He exudes sex appeal in a jogger's jacket and jeans.

So let the record read all that, because it's true! Jon Voight is a most compelling individual who looks far younger than 40, which he became last December 29.

His movie career has been a sporadic one, since his first undistinguished films starting in 1967. They had been preceded by a modicum of on and off-Broadway appearances for the Yonkers-born man. In his Broadway début as the juvenile lead in The Sound of Music he introduced the hit song, "I Am Sixteen."

In Hollywood, his first films were Hours of the Gun with James Garner and Jason Robards; Fearless Frank, which has received belated fame since its director was Phil Kaufman, responsible for the current hit, Invasion of the Body Snatchers, and Out of It, described by one critic as "a throwback to the days when life was one big Archie comic strip."

But with Midnight Cowboy, as Joe Buck the Texas drifter, Voight was on his way. The movie won an Oscar as best picture, Voight received an Academy nomination, and the New York Film critics named him Best Actor.

Then came Catch 22, The Revolutionary, The All-American Boy, Conrack and Deliverance, after which no one saw him on film for four years.

He is very honest about the reasons:

"My last several films hadn't made much money, and I wasn't in high regard in the community. I was offered roles, but they weren't things I could make good. So I did Hamlet twice: once for 10 days at Cal Stage Northridge with the students there, and for three days at Rutgers University in New Jersey with the Ensemble Theatre Company from New York.

"I went back to acting class, and I wrote two screenplays that aren't yet completed, but it was an important learning experience. I kept extremely active. I was constantly reading scripts, and I turned down five big movies, which turned out not too good. I was grateful for the attention, believe me, because I'd had a reputation for being a bad boy."

Always-fickle Hollywood has forgiven all. Voight, this year, is literally and figuratively filmdom's fair-haired boy. For The Champ, he even cut his long shaggy blond hair, shaved off his beard and looks almost, but not quite, Establishment.

In the many articles written about him, he has been variously represented as tough, rebellious, out of step with the rest of the world or sweet, endearing and a veritable pussycat.

Who then is Jon Voight? Which portrait is accurate?

"There are many Jon Voights," he smiles pleasantly. "Different personalities talking to me see me differently. I don't really care how I'm represented. To a certain degree, I think it's interesting. The nicest thing about interviews is the meeting of different peoples and receiving their energies."

He is temporarily headquartered at MGM Studios, where The Champ was filmed. He is working closely with the movie's editors, unique for an actor. The norm is to finish a film and go on to the next project or take a holiday. Voight gets involved because he cares.

He cares about many things, most importantly, relationships. But is he really tough?

"I hope I am," he replies quickly. "Tough and defensive of the things I love: all the life-affirming things, all the ways we get to appreciate life. I have to protect people like Jamie and Angie."

They are his son James, 5, and daughter Angelica, 3, by his second wife, Marcheline Haven. His first wife was Lauri Peters, whom he met when they were in Sound of Music. That five-year marriage ended in 1967. He and "Marche" separated in 1976 but are close friends. Voight lives in a nonstatus-symbol Hollywood Hills home with actress Stacy Pickren, who was his Ophelia in the California production of Hamlet. She plays a bit role as a hooker in Coming Home, and he projects stardom for her.

Similarly, he will not push them into any organized religion, as he was. "My father (now deceased golf pro Elmer Voight) didn't endorse any religion. But I received a Catholic education.

Voight is a very happy man these days. And he says so.

"At the moment, I am very happy. I have been ambitious, possessive of things; there were those little strains working away at my creative ability. Those are the accomplishments defined by the struggle. My long-range goal has been to live in the present, and here I am. It may mean that I do or do not work. The course is clear. I want to get on that path. I'm allowing it a lot more."

He had been in psychotherapy since Midnight Cowboy. He was seeing a doctor again when he got the paraplegic role in Coming Home. But no more. Now he studies with a lady whom he describes as a "spiritual guide."

He is not going in for séances, Ouija boards, spirit-writing or anything commonly associated with spiritualism.

"The lady with whom I work is very energized and very powerful to me. She speaks respectfully of the moments that pass between people. I am learning to be in the present, unconnected to the mannerisms, the ailments of our daily life."

"I'm starting to feel it. I'm being encouraged to find my way to it." Again, the smile flashes and always his very white, long and sensitive hands gesture, emphasizing points, almost as props helping him shape his words.

If, indeed, he is this happy, is he no longer the angry young man who formerly jumped up and down in print and conversation on certain issues?

VOIGHT

"Lots of things make me angry, which indicates impatience, a side I have to deal with. I don't like to proselytize because it seems silly or pompous, as if I'm giving a little lesson to someone.

"Yes, as you've probably heard, seeing actors doing commercials irritates me. It also makes me sad. It's like they had a wish: the knowledge that they didn't need to do that. You must always associate yourself with your real feelings. You must be honest, and lots of things can whittle away at your honesty. I can't accept an actor telling me, 'This is the best car in the world,' when we both know it isn't.

"I believe you should attempt to do and be the best you can at each moment. I would encourage us all to do the best we can, and being dishonest in front of the public is not the best way to go."

Voight and the nation's movie critics haven't had an ongoing love affair at various times. In his present happy state, how does he feel about critics?

"They have an energy that is commendable," he starts out. "And I disagree with most of them. I only occasionally read them. Of course, if someone says something hurtful to my vanity, my ego gets hurt. It is impossible to have enthusiasts and guides trying to encourage values, and some are more interested in the literary aspect of what they are doing than in recommending certain values.

"The critics are an interesting group in that they are allowed to function. Consider: they don't have to attend to the financial success of a film, where everyone else connected with the film is involved. Critics, because they are not connected with the material, are allowed to function on a higher level: they should function on a spiritual level and have psychological values. They have a burden, in that they think they can influence the success of a project, and in the New York theater, they can. You have to be so careful if you're a critic!" His tone: serious and cautionary.

"If I could give a recommendation, I would say stay very powerfully attuned to the positive and very wary of this power aspect. Critics should try to be the fans of the theater. They should never forget that."

Voight's current movie, The Champ, is a Franco Zeffirelli modernization of the 1931 MGM classic. In that film Wallace Beery won an Oscar, and child actor Jackie Cooper became an instant star. It has been updated and changed a bit, with more emphasis on the ex-boxer's broken marriage than on his ring comeback for the sake of his son. The son is played by eight-year-old Ricky Schroeder, performing in his first movie. Faye Dunaway plays Voight's ex-wife.

It somehow seems contradictory that so gentle a man as Voight would train for endless weeks with Jimmy Gambina, who staged the Rocky fight scenes, and then have a real on-screen fight with professional heavyweight boxing contender Randall Cobb.

Why this role?

Again, there is no hesitancy.

"I have all my life been a gentle person, but there is a certain strength I have always recognized. I'm not afraid to look out there, and there is much to be learned from the activities of other humans. In theater, we are all trying to change human nature. Can it expand? Can a society or government do that? You know, I've always felt I was in the business of making myself obsolete because, if there were a better world, there wouldn't be a need for theater.

"I think we are all artists in the way we dress, converse — there is an art to living. Some part of our community has said, 'You take care of that part of life, entertaining for us.' But you should be able to sit in a room alone and get theater. Since we're all a long way from that, theater says it to us. Artists give themselves over to what it's like, showing the audience, 'It's something like this.' That's the reason for taking on a character who is not whole," he explains.

In a corner of his office is the wheelchair in which he literally lived during the production of Coming Home.

Will it always stay there?

He thinks for some moments, staring at it. Finally:

"I don't know. Right now, it's a very friendly thing, and I can play basketball with the guys in it." He refers to the paraplegics with whom he researched the role during 11 weeks of "studying" at Rancho Los Amigos, a rehabilitative hospital outside Los Angeles.

He reiterates, "It's a friend I don't want to give up yet."

The interview has been interrupted twice by important phone calls. Each was concluded by Voight's saying, "God bless." Now he explains:

"A friend ends his conversations that way, and I like it, so I do it, too. I also sign my pictures 'God bless.'" He smiles with joy.

It's a unique conclusion to a Hollywood interview. It's warm and friendly. So is Jon Voight. FW

VOLUNTEERISM IS AS AMERICAN AS APPLE PIE

By Patricia Brooks

The United Way of America contributes to the support of some 37,000 nonprofit agencies throughout the country. Last year, its fund-raising efforts raised $1.1 billion through the work of 20 million unpaid volunteers.

Together with other organizations the figure grows to 37 million volunteers, and even this figure is low because it represents only volunteers in organized agencies, and much of American volunteerism is on a more spontaneous ad hoc basis. Adding informal volunteerism might bring the total as high as 68 million.

So what's the big deal? The big deal is that volunteerism, on the scale practiced in the United States, is unheard of in most of the rest of the world.

It is this ad hoc volunteerism that has led Americans to respond to community needs that are not being met by government or private social agencies. Random examples include:

- "Senior Gleaners" — an all-volunteer group of retired people, mostly over 70 years of age, in Sacramento, who noticed food rotting in fields and offered to harvest it and distribute it to charity. Now over 1,000 volunteers help.
- A Brooklyn couple who enlisted area residents in helping to turn a derelict-riddled vacant lot into an attractive garden and children's park.
- Vanderbilt University students who tutor (without academic credit) inmates at Tennessee State Penitentiary, counsel juveniles and exchange communications with ex-convicts in a halfway house.
- Some 2,000 volunteers who work in the Seattle school system because of budget cutbacks.
- An ecology club in New Canaan, Conn., whose high-school members have devoted every Saturday morning for the past three years to recycling bottles and cans for the community.
- Church-and-neighborhood efforts in many inner cities to paint up and rehabilitate neglected city blocks, a street at a time.

Who are all these millions who give so freely of their time and energy to so many worthy causes? Ten years ago, a profile of the average volunteer would have been a married woman between 25 and 45, with children in school. She was a high-school, perhaps even a college, graduate, from a middle- or upper middle-class family, who did not require a paid job, whose husband's income was sufficient to support the family.

Today's volunteers cover the entire age, class and economic spectrum. He or she is the retired person who seeks some spiritually enriching activity. More than 135,000 of them serve as foster grandparents and spend 1,000 hours a year in hospitals, correctional facilities and homes for the handicapped or retarded.

He/she is also a teenager or college student in search of experience or training that might serve as career preparation. According to a 1975 study by ACTION (the federal agency for domestic and overseas volunteer service), students in its volunteer program expend 50,000 hours of service annually.

Another of today's volunteers is a minority or low-income person who seeks volunteer work as a first step on the training ladder. (The ACTION survey discovered that persons in the $4,000 to $10,000 income range had the high rate of 58 percent volunteerism.)

Still another volunteer is the businessman, whose corporation encourages him to devote some of his free time to a civic volunteer effort. Sometimes an employer allows time off or flexible scheduling to accommodate an employee's volunteer schedule. Some employers, such as IBM, "lend" their employees for volunteer work, actually paying the salary if an employee volunteers to teach at a school for the deaf or whatever the project happens to be.

Allis-Chalmers Corporation in Milwaukee launched a community-action program in 1977 and lent 4,000 employees to work on 38 projects in 18 different communities. Mostly this was done in spare time, but at plant-manager discretion, some time off regular jobs was allowed. Among the employee accomplishments were: the renovation of three halfway houses in Appleton, Wis., the rebuilding of a burned-out community center in Little Rock, Ark., and solving problems relating to drugs, alcoholism and the aging.

Throughout our history, volunteers have been a major factor in social progress. From 1830 to 1960, volunteers organized the Underground Railway to shelter runaway slaves. In the 1840's a single woman, Dorothea Dix, led a national crusade of volunteers to reform institutions for the mentally ill. Their fervor led eventually to state governments assuming responsibility for such institutions.

These are just a few examples from the past. Thousands more exist today: such familiar organizations as the Red Cross, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, 4-H Clubs, YMCA and YWCA, N.A.A.C.P. Thousands of others have been organized to fill specific needs. They range from the Sierra Club (to protect the environment), to Gray Panthers (to fight discrimination based on age).

The reasons people volunteer are as diverse as the volunteers themselves. Barbara Sloane, former director of the Council of Jewish Women's Field Services, feels that volunteerism "allows people to give of themselves. That's what it's all about — unself-conscious giving." For some women volunteering is an escape from loneliness or household drudgery. For newcomers in a community it is an entree to new friends.

But to many volunteers who hold full-time jobs as well, volunteering at night or weekends enriches their lives. A San Antonio woman said, "I am where I am emotionally because others helped me."

A young Chicago man, who teaches school and is studying for an advance degree, still manages to devote three hours a weekend to teaching handicapped youngsters in a swimming, music, arts and crafts program.

And an Atlanta ex-convict volunteers his spare time in a drug-rehabilitation program. He notes, "I'm trying to help these guys avoid some of my mistakes."

Whatever the motivation, there seems no stopping this favorite American pastime—volunteering. Perhaps George Romney, former governor of Michigan and one-time U.S. Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, summed it up when he said, "Money alone won't solve the problems this country faces. People solve problems — people who care." We can all be thankful for the 68 million who do — maybe even thankful enough to join them. Volunteerism, anyone? FW

One volunteer comes to the aid of the aged; another adds fun to a young hospital patient's day. Nowhere else in the world is volunteerism practiced on the grand scale as it is in the United States.

SHA-NA-NA! TEN WILD AND GREASY GUYS WHO KEEP US GROOVIN' ON THE 50's

By Bruce Pollock

There is a widespread misconception afoot in the world of popular entertainment. Like most pundits, the general public sees fit to attribute the rise of the nostalgia craze for the 50's to the top-rated TV comedy, Happy Days. Those only slightly more knowledgeable designate the long-running Broadway play Grease as the significant 1971 benchmark. The truth is, there's a stage show playing almost nightly that portrays a vision of the 50's that's easily more imaginative than Happy Days and which has been around a couple of years longer even than Grease. It's called Sha-na-na!

Greasier than your average 10-man theatrical troupe, more educated than your typical 10-man rock group, Sha-na-na this year celebrates its tenth anniversary as a touring ensemble, the last eight featuring essentially the same cast of characters — that's Johnny, Donny, Danny, Denny, Lenny, Jocko, Chico, Screaming Scott, Santini and Bowser.

"We were always an aberration of a rock band," says the redoubtable Bowser (Jon Bauman). "We were visual rather than audio. I think we finally found our niche on TV."

The road to their current syndicated series, which has just been picked up for a third season, was eight years long and a smile wide for this rock group that never had a hit single, this repertory company that never had a permanent roof. It started at Columbia University in New York one year after the turbulence of the campus riots, dead in the center of the turbulence that was acid/rock in 1969. "It was the campus audience's response to us at an all-oldies concert that convinced us to try and take it a step further," recounts Donnie York, one of the original founders of the group, along with Denny Greene, Scott Powell (aka Santini) and Jocko Marcellino.

The next step was a date at Steve Paul's then ultra-fashionable Scene in New York, where they played a one-night stand that lasted three weeks. The step after that was the Woodstock Festival, with their role subsequently immortalized on celluloid in the ensuing film of that event.

"Rock'n'roll was the one thing that was in all of our backgrounds," says Donny. "Regardless of where we came from, or what kind of money we had growing up, the music we had all grown up with was the same."

Like most rock'n'roll bands, Sha-na-na was put together piecemeal, with Denny and Santini coming from a high-school band in New York City, Chico and Danny and Jocko and Lenny operating in rival bands in Massachusetts called The Ramrods and The Pilgrims. Don York was imported from Boise, Screaming Scott from Kansas City. Bowser and Johnny Contardo rounded out the package. Famous alumni include Henry Gross, from Brooklyn College, whose song "Shannon," was a big hit in 1976, and Elliot Randall, also known as Enrico Ronzoni, who did a stint with Steely Dan.

"When we first started," says Denny Greene, "they said the group would last six months at the most. This was after we'd played Woodstock and the Fillmore East. Ten years later people still aren't sure, but it doesn't matter, because we've been able to create a place for ourselves in the entertainment industry."

While television has traditionally been anathema to rock 'n' roll, their TV series has not at all diluted the basic Sha-na-na experience. It arrives, street, stoop and lamppost, with remarkable fidelity to the original premise. "We don't feel prostituted or misunderstood on TV," says Bowser, "because we had a lot of input at the beginning. The producers took off from what we brought them. That's why we as a unit feel it's a very honest extension of what we were doing before." In addition to that, TV has actually enabled them to expand their repertoire. "There's an entire body of material that's virtually untapped on TV and lends itself to visuals very well," Bowser explains. "In many cases we're able to do songs on TV that we went through in the course of our 10 years of stage shows and had to throw out because they didn't meet the need of reaching the last guy in the last row at some mammoth concert hall. When the camera comes in and finds you, that's an entirely different story."

Another reason the group as a troupe has adapted well to what is usually an alien medium, is that so many are actors, theatrically trained, creatively ambidextrous. "I've always conceived of my role in this group as an acting job, more so than a music job," comments Bowser.

"I've been acting since I was about 12," says Jocko Marcellino, who has a masters in drama from NYU and studied at the HB Studios. He's currently a member of the 4th Wall Repertory Company at the Truck and Warehouse Theater in New York City, as is Santini, who is also a trained dancer (having studied with Alvin Ailey) as well as a photographer. "I'm working on a book called Fans," he divulges. "I take my camera to our concerts and shoot pictures of fans, because our audience is so diverse." Denny Greene, an actor with another New York group, the Perry Street Theater, is working on a book about the music industry. It's fiction, of course. "Fiction allows you to say a lot more things without being libelous," he states. Bowser is a classically-trained musician. On a recent telethon, "I sat down as Bowser and I played Chopin." (Dirty) Dan McBride, the last to join the group and also the oldest (33), once did three hours a morning on talk radio and is now looking to expand to "scoring, directing, writing and acting. These are things I've done all my life." Santini, Contardo and Greene have solo albums either out, or in the works, while Screaming Scott boasts co-credit on "Sandy" for John Travolta in the movie version of Grease. It was a smash single in England but has yet to be released here. In fact, the group has been nominated for a Grammy for its part in the soundtrack album of that movie.

How do so many egos exist together on the same stage? That's clearly Sha-na-na's greatest trick, other than their mere survival. Says Screaming Scott: "To the people who like us and the TV show, I think the most interesting thing about the group is that we're all regular guys, normal guys. Nobody in the group is the star or the best singer or the best player in the world. We're just a bunch of semi-anonymous guys."

Dirty Dan adds: "Here you have a chemistry of people you could not put together in a formula. You could not run an ad for us in the paper. Some people sing certain things better than others, some people dance better."

But none as well as Santini, who used to win all the twist contests when he was in high school, and still wins, eight times out of 10, the nightly Sha-na-na dance contest. He assures us it is not rigged. "Why does the group stay together?" he asks. "You take four guys who have a hit record, they break up. We're a 10-man democracy, a bizarre concept in the music industry. We don't have hit records, but we made it because we're a hard-working band that delivers a great show. So we've developed our fans through word of mouth, and they come to see us again and again because they love the guys and they love the music."

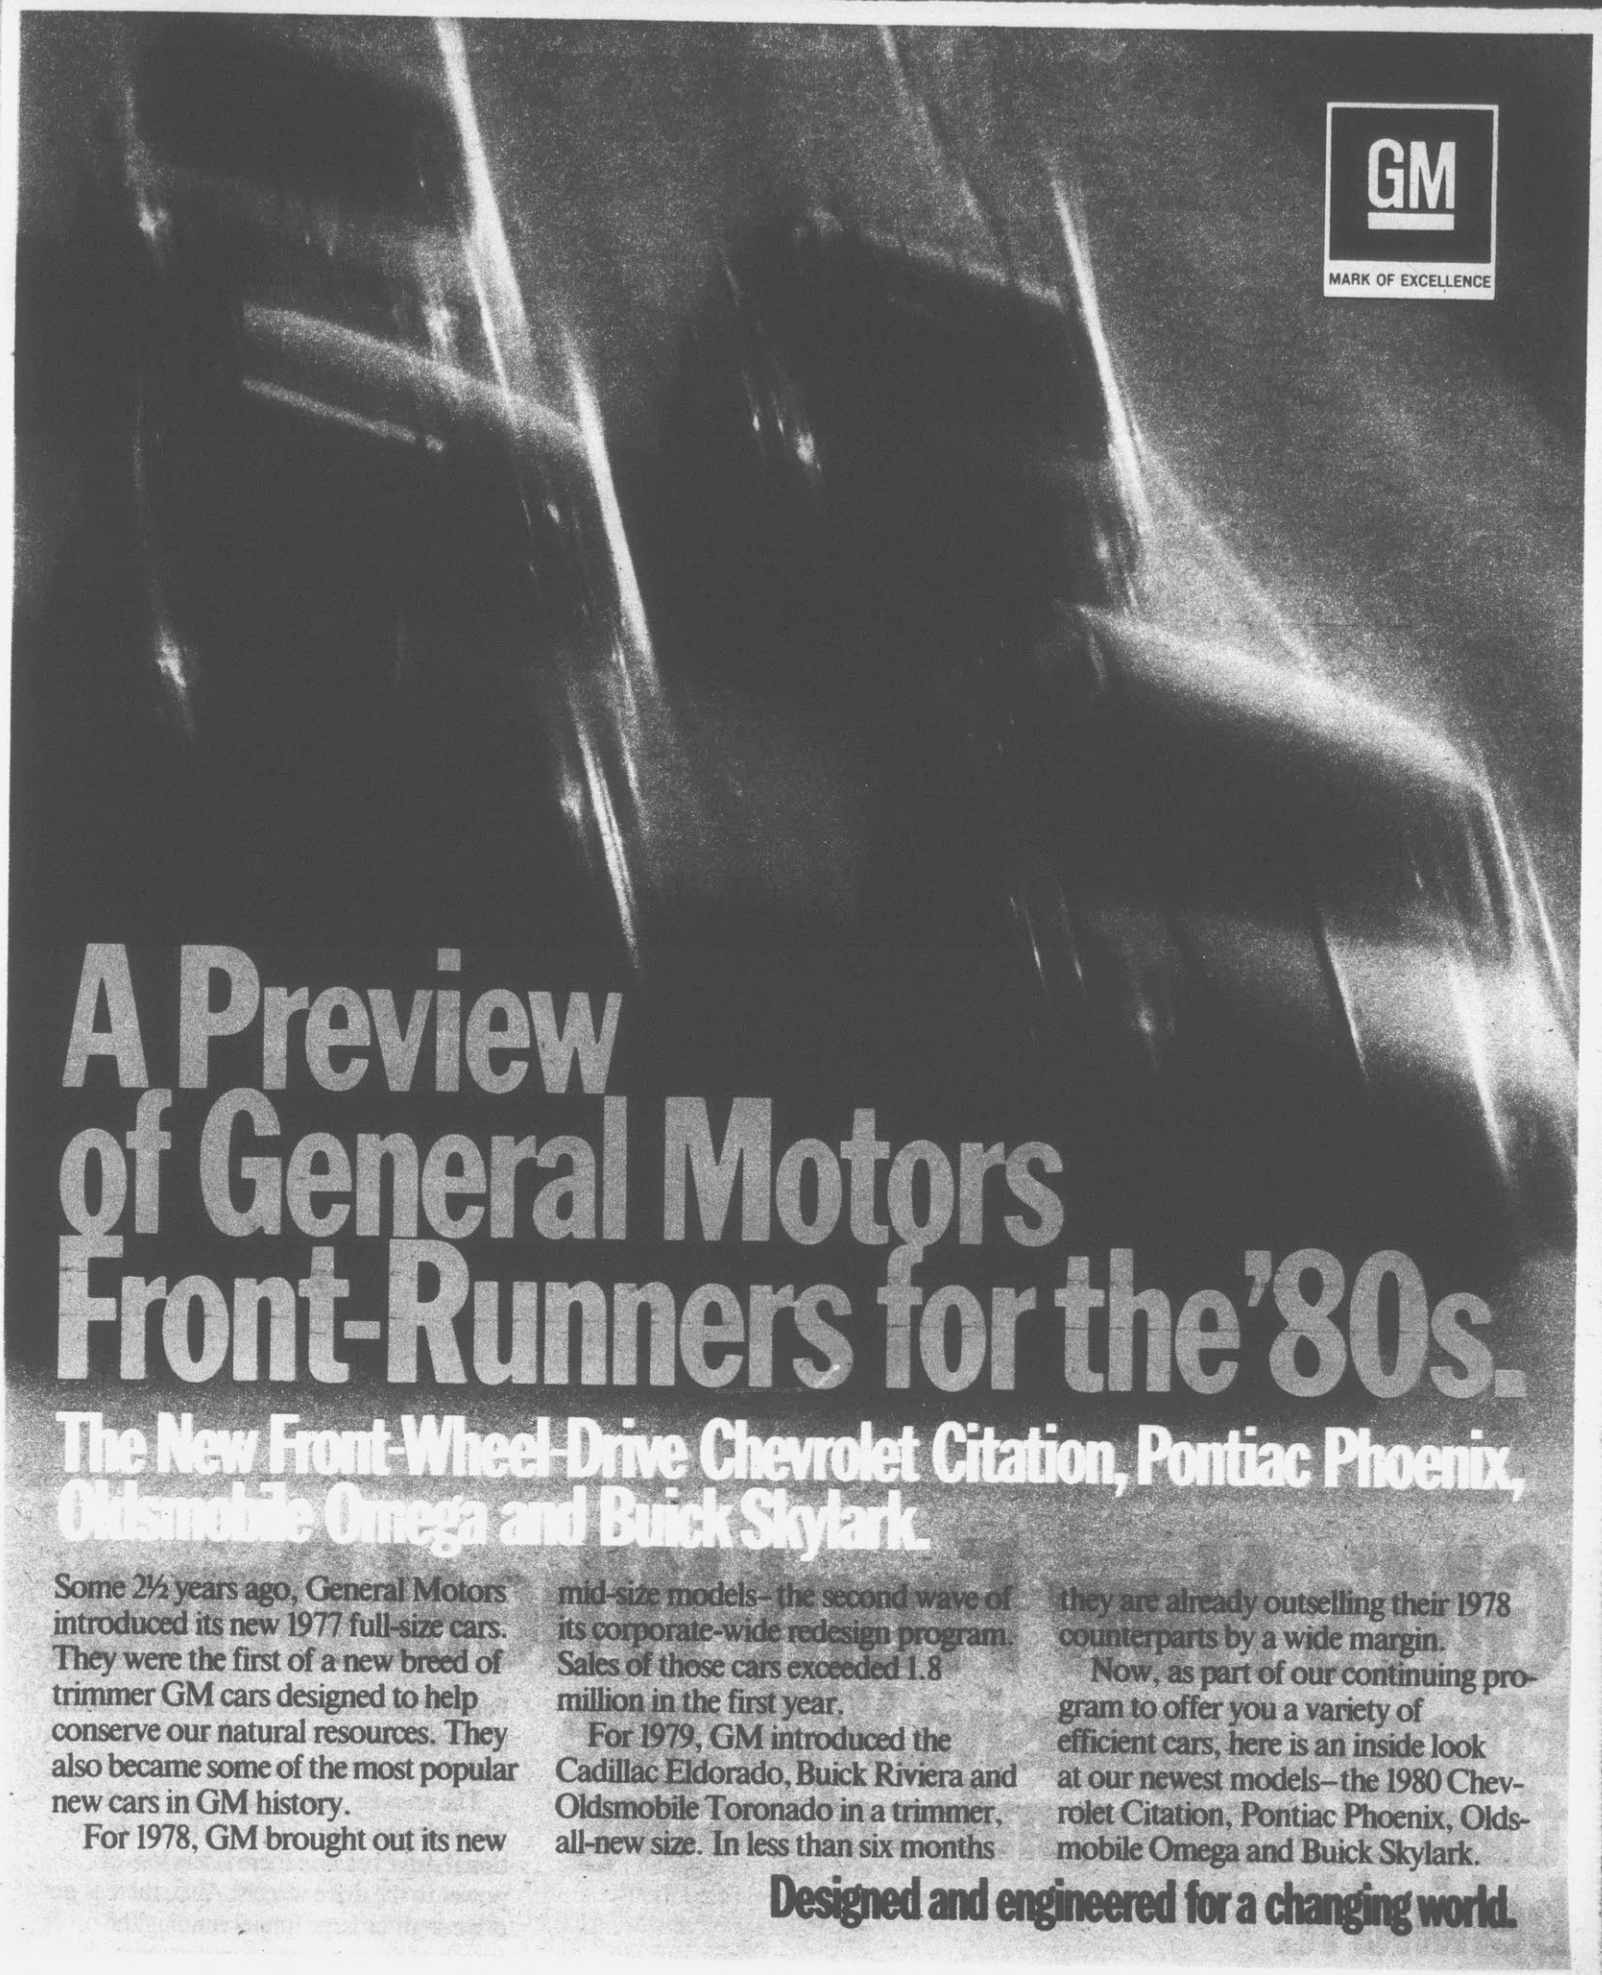

There it is again, at the core of everything the rock 'n' roll of the 50's as epitomized by the guests who have been lured (undoubtedly for a pittance) to the show: Chuck Berry, Bo Diddley, Dion, Paul Anka, Chubby Checker, Bobby Rydell, Del Shannon, Lesley Gore, Jan & Dean and the Ronettes.

"The gratifying thing about doing the TV show," says Santini, "is that so many kids come to love this kind of music. It just shows that the music is still unique and vital. Last year we played during the miners' strike in Virginia. In the middle of the strike people were shelling out $35 to take their families to see Sha-na-na. They were there to love it, and they wanted their kids to love this music, too, because it means so much to them." FW

The New Front-Wheel-Drive Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark.

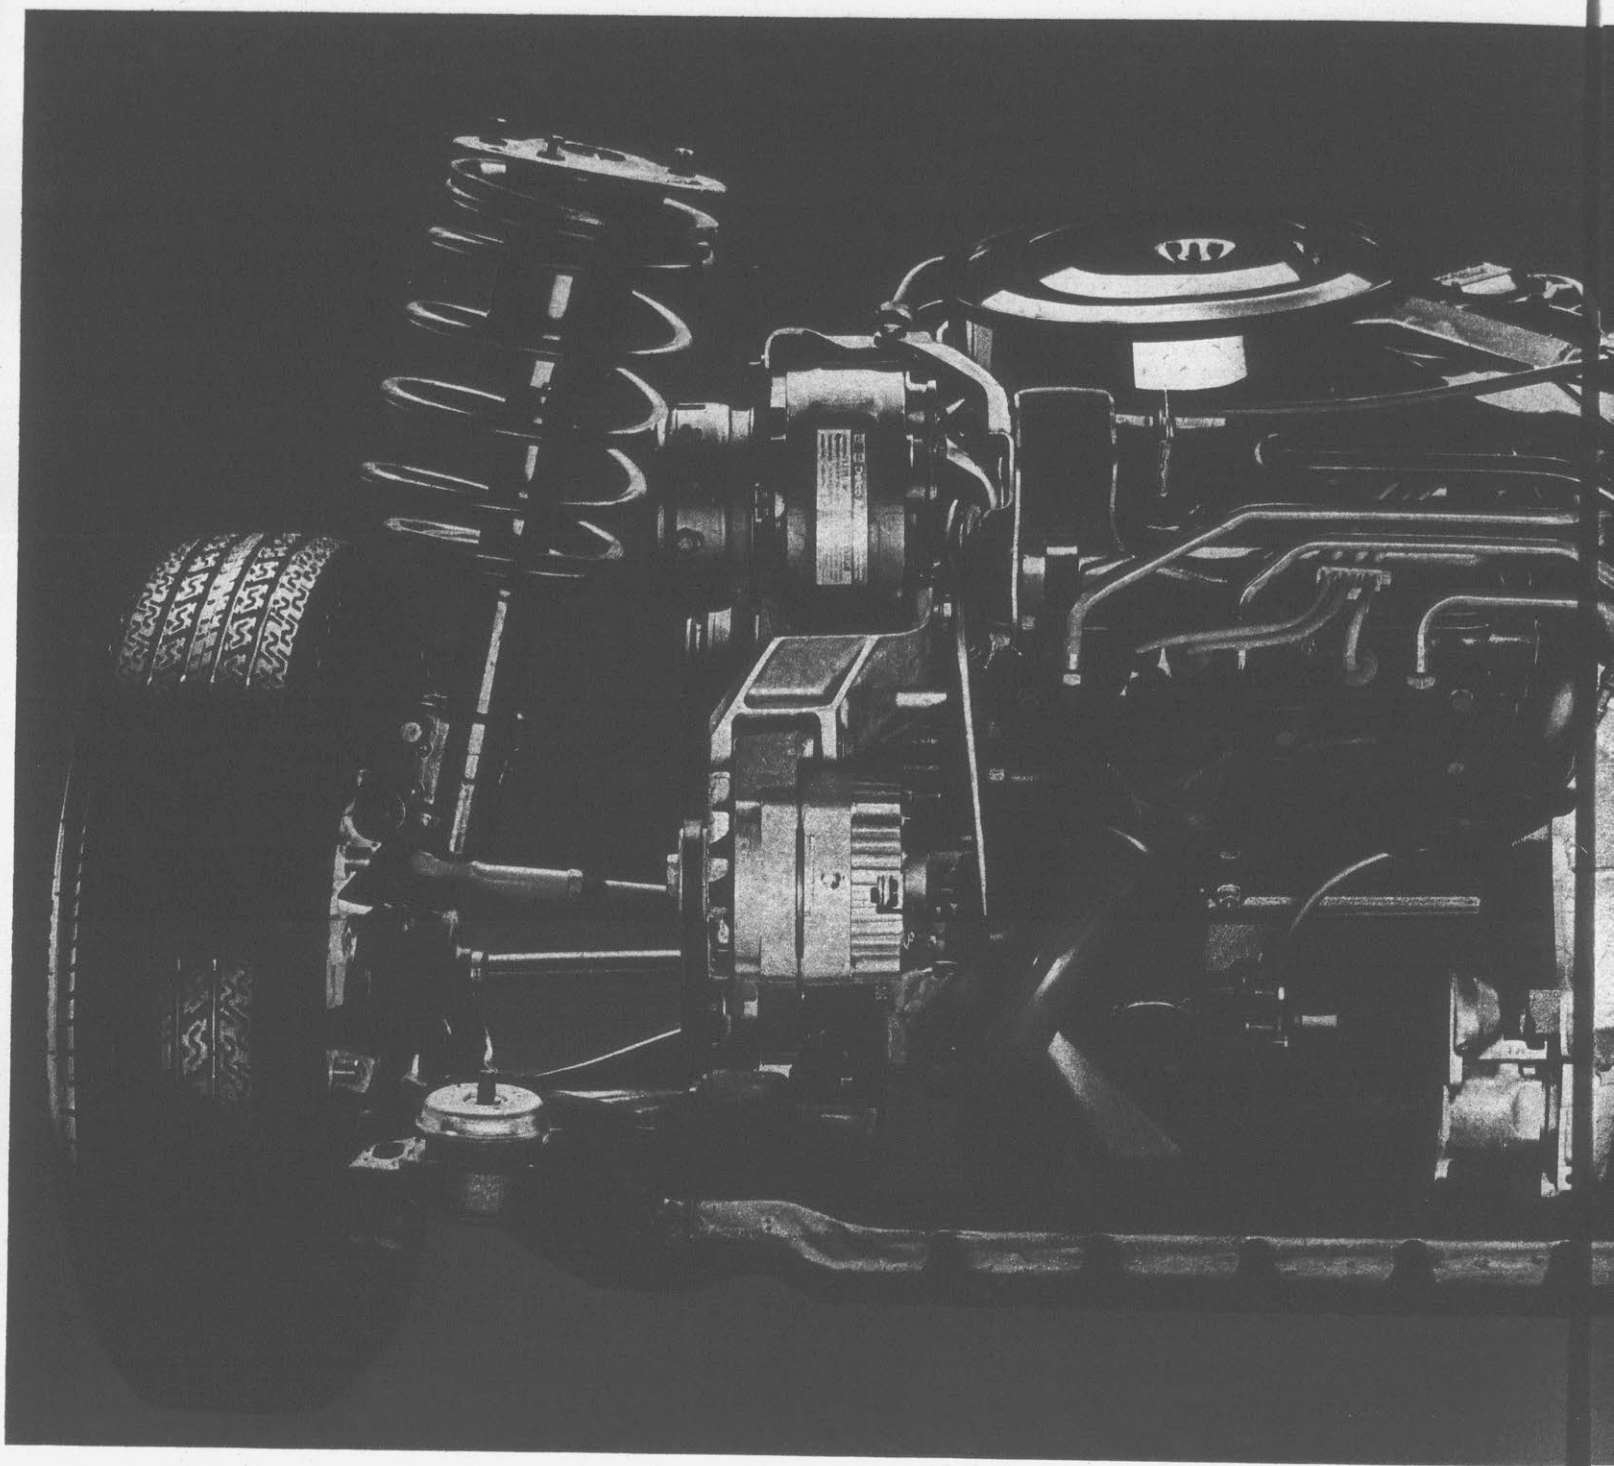

Some 2½ years ago, General Motors introduced its new 1977 full-size cars. They were the first of a new breed of trimmer GM cars designed to help conserve our natural resources. They also became some of the most popular new cars in GM history.

For 1978, GM brought out its new mid-size models–the second wave of its corporate-wide redesign program. Sales of those cars exceeded 1.8 million in the first year.

For 1979, GM introduced the Cadillac Eldorado, Buick Riviera and Oldsmobile Toronado in a trimmer, all-new size. In less than six months they are already outselling their 1978 counterparts by a wide margin.

Now, as part of our continuing program to offer you a variety of efficient cars, here is an inside look at our newest models–the 1980 Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark.

GM's New Front-Wheel Drive.

Efficient. Responsive. With more than 5½ million miles of testing behind it.

Perhaps two natural questions to ask about these new cars are—why front-wheel drive and why does the engine sit crossways?

The answers are simple. First, front-wheel drive is more efficient than conventional drive because there is less loss of power to the drive wheels. Also, there is no drive shaft or large tunnel running the length of the passenger compartment.

Second, with the engine mounted transversely, we can reduce overall length, yet design a car with plenty of room for passengers and luggage.

Tested and retested.

But let's face it. The design of any new car has to be proved. Which is why we put more than 5½ million test miles on these in nearly every kind of weather on virtually every kind of road. We know them inside and out. What they'll do. And how they'll do it.

Lively performance.

Take responsiveness. In acceleration tests from 0-50 mph, this year's standard 4-cylinder engine performed just as responsively as last year's standard 6-cylinder engines. And this year's available V-6 outperformed last year's 5.0 liter V-8. (All comparisons based on use with available automatic transmissions.) These GM-built engines are produced by various divisions. Talk to your dealer for details.

Take a test drive.

If you've never driven a car with front-wheel drive before, we're convinced our front-runners for the '80s offer you a great, new and rewarding experience.

And if you have driven front-wheel-drive cars before, well—these are about to bring something brand-new to the ball game.

Good Gas Mileage.

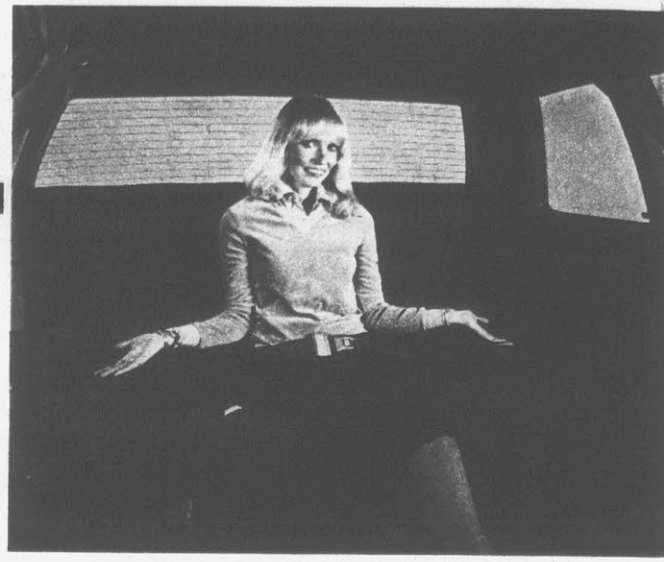

The primary goal in designing these cars was to improve gasoline economy. Our success in achieving this goal can be measured by the fact that, based on EPA figures, models equipped with the standard engine and available automatic transmission show an average estimated fuel-economy improvement in city driving of 27 percent and in highway driving of 42 percent over the similarly equipped cars they're replacing.

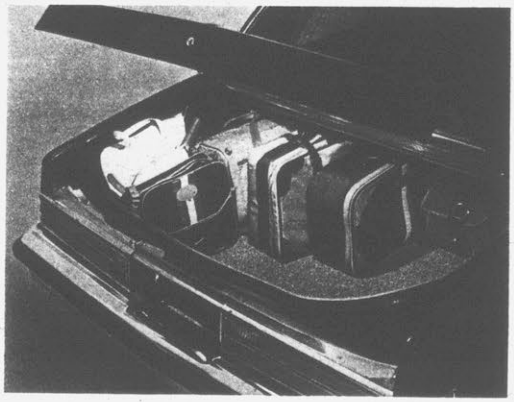

A number of things contribute to this impressive gain. Aerodynamic drag has been cut. New radial tires are designed to reduce rolling resistance. The new standard wide-ratio 4-speed transmission is designed for "overdrive" economy while still giving smooth performance in city traffic. Torque converters on automatic transmissions have been computer-matched to vehicle powertrains. And both our redesigned engines feature cross-flow cylinder heads for efficiency, plus a new variable-jet carburetor. Under most situations only one barrel is operational, thereby limiting gas consumption. But when you need extra response, just press your foot down and the second barrel kicks in to deliver more power.

New Structure.

tion should be and what thickness of metal to use. Needless to say, these computer models are backed by our time-proven testing procedures, including building structural prototypes, putting them through a battery of grueling tests, and then re-engineering them until they're right. In addition, these new cars also have all our standard safety features, such as the GM-developed energy-absorbing steering column, padded instrument panel, thick laminate windshield, side marker lights and more.

As you can see, we believe a sound structure is the basis for a sound car. But the design of a structure also determines just how roomy the car will be. And here again our new cars get good marks.

Some people hold to the theory that the only strong cars are big cars. But today, through the use of lightweight materials like aluminum and high-strength/low-alloy steels, plus the latest in engineering techniques, the weight of an automobile structure can be significantly reduced and still be strong.

One of the more advanced engineering techniques we used to arrive at the final structure design employs computer models to simulate various driving conditions. For example, if we want to find out how the structure reacts when it is driven over a severe bump or hole in the road, we tell the computer how the structure is designed, mathematically determine the stresses of going over the bump or hole, and then watch a three-dimensional representation of the structure on a viewing screen to analyze mass and design efficiency, plus noise and vibration data. In hours rather than months of actual physical testing we can determine what shape a structure sec-placing. For tall people, the front seat can be adjusted rearward more than any other domestic automobile. And the rear seating is the same in two-door models as it is in four-door models—enough for three adults. Even the trunk has been designed for efficient use of space, with the spare tire tucked away under a special panel to provide a completely flat floor.

A massive commitment.

All in all, a great deal of effort has gone into the the structural development of the new Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark. This commitment—far and away the largest program of its kind in GM history—has helped us realize what we set out to build. A structure designed to be strong, secure, roomy, durable and—in keeping with the times–also designed to save weight.

From the day the new Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark first started taking shape on the drawing board, a prime design objective has been to please the ear as much as the eye.

One of the ways we went about this was an all-out effort to isolate the passenger compartment from the engine, suspension and other chassis hardware.

Body and engine mounts are specifically tuned to dampen or eliminate vibration frequencies that might prove annoying inside.

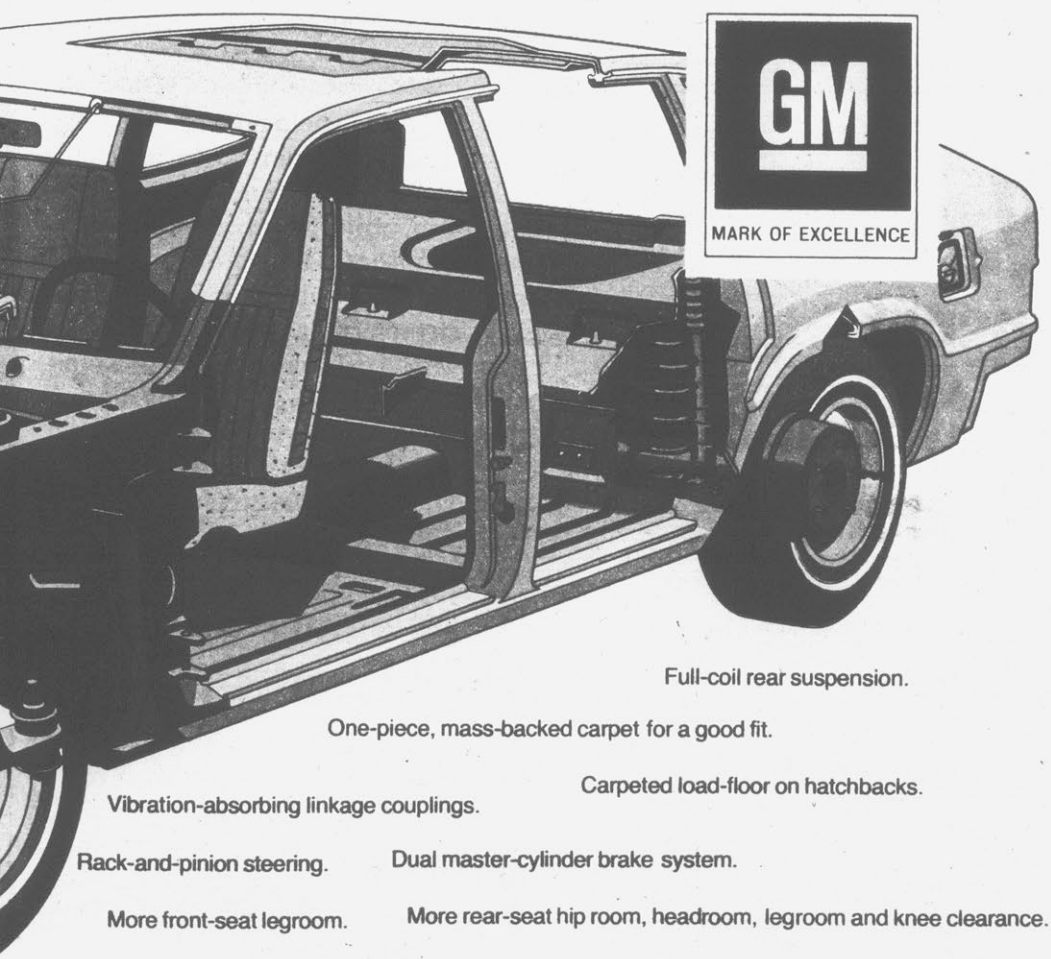

There are vibration-absorbing couplings between mechanical components running from the engine compartment to the passenger compartment—transmission linkage, acceleration pedal linkage, you name it. Even the MacPherson Strut front suspension and full-coil rear suspension have special cushioning devices that let you get a firm feel of the road without harshness of ride. Our MacPherson Strut front suspension, by the way, has fewer moving parts than conventional suspensions and features high-capacity components for longevity.

Noise fighters.

But isolation is just one form of controlling noise. To help cut down on wind-rush noise, these cars were also extensively tested in the wind tunnel.

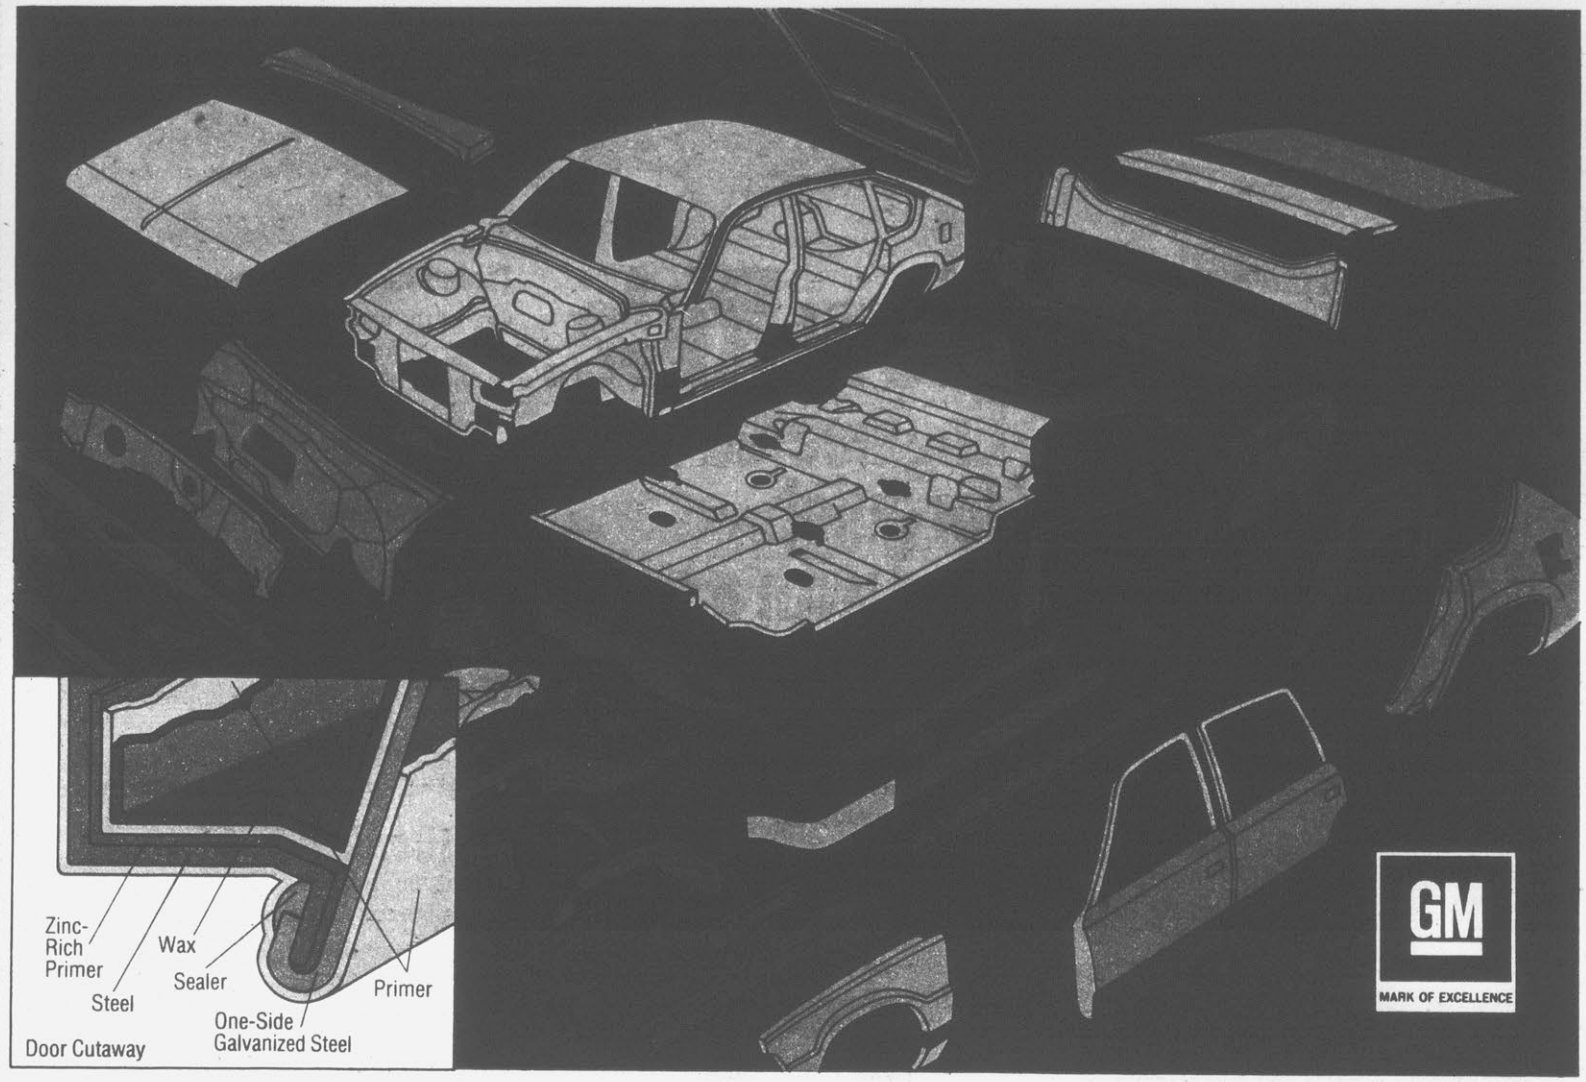

In addition, all models offer our one-piece, mass-backed carpets and foam-backed headliners. Full-framed door construction with new door seals help keep noise out. Hatchback models even have auxiliary seals in the back. And there are special acoustical-insulation packages also available on certain models.

If "quiet" engineering and a good ride are important to you in the selection of a car, we'd like to recommend that you test-drive these. You're in for a thoroughly delightful experience.

New Body.

We mentioned before how well our new front-runners handled themselves in snow and wet. It also holds true from a corrosion standpoint. These cars are designed to fight rust tooth and nail so they'll last and look good for a long, long time.

Take a look at our diagram. Everything you see in color represents an area that has been protected by one or more corrosion-resisting treatments. All metal surfaces, including the light blue, have received a durable prime coat.

In addition, the red and orange areas are special metals like galvanized steel (one or both sides) or Zincrometal.®

And yellow represents plastisol materials designed to help protect exposed painted surfaces against stone damage.

What's more, these new cars use a larger proportion of galvanized steel than any other GM car. And in areas that are particularly vulnerable to corrosion, we even protect the galvanized. A quick glance at the cutaway diagram of a typical door will show you just how much goes into it to fight rust.

JAI ALAI HITS THE BIG TIME

By Barry Wilner

Outside the jai alai fronton in Miami is a billboard advertising the handball-like game that says:

"Danger. Action. Speed."

It is an apt description of the sport, which has existed in the Basque region of Spain for centuries, in Florida for more than 50 years, and just recently has begun to make a place for itself elsewhere in the United States. But the slogan is incomplete; a key word is missing: money.

Jai alai is a pari-mutuel sport. Betting on the action is allowed, and that, perhaps more than any other factor, attracts the sport's following.

"Of course we have to acknowledge the importance of pari-mutuels to the success of jai alai as a sport," notes Fred McKenna, director of public relations for World Jai-Alai, the sport's largest organization. World operates frontons in Miami (this country's oldest and, with 15,000 seats, the world's largest jai alai arena), four other locales in Florida, one in Hartford, Conn., and seven jai alai schools. "If the Dolphins can attract one-half million dollars for Miami, say, then we attract $1 million. We realize much of that is because of the wagering."

But the people at World Jai-Alai and other frontons like to emphasize the action on the three-walled, 176-foot long, 55-foot wide cement-mixture court, not the action at the betting windows.

The furious pace of the game, in which the ball often is thrown at speeds of 150 miles per hour, drives the fans to a frenzy. Loud screams of support for each of eight teams — or eight singles players in the non-team matches — ring through the fronton.

The teams battle to earn seven points. Play is on a round-robin (called quiniella) basis, with the winners of a point continuing to play against the next team while the losers of the point sit until their next turn.

The pelota, a ball the size of a tennis ball but with a hard goatskin covering, is thrown with a cesta, a curved reed basket. A player's reaching span with the cesta might be as much as 10 feet, and it is common to see players climb a dozen feet up the side wall to retrieve a shot.

A point is scored when a player or team is unable to return a shot off the front wall after retrieving it on a fly or one bounce, or off the back wall on a fly or one bounce.

"One of the biggest obstacles in expanding jai alai to other areas that we have to overcome is ignorance," says Dick Donovan, president of World Jai-Alai. "People just don't know the game. Once they see it, they're hooked. But they have to be educated."

Bridgeport Jai-Alai, which claims to be the only truly independent fronton in the country, had $86 million bet in 1977, its first year of full operation. Of that $86 million handle, the State of Connecticut got $5,305,019; the city of Bridgeport, more than $1½ million.

"We had 800 people in a 10,000-seat building for our first matinee," recalls Bob Bestlove, Bridgeport Jai-Alai's public relations director. "People were laughing at us."

Game-fixing is almost unheard of. The reputations of the players remain beyond question.

"First, you have to realize that many of the players are making excellent wages from jai alai," says World's Fred McKenna. "Our top players, like Bolivar or Remen or Joey (Cornblitt, the sport's first American star) can make six figures with their salaries and the bonuses they earn from finishing in the money. They wouldn't jeopardize that."

"The players are kept in a segregated area at the fronton," Dom Conte, director of security at Bridgeport, says. "They can't see people or have phone calls. They're required to be here an hour before the game starts.

"They are told places to avoid, places where shady characters frequent. And no blood relatives can bet.

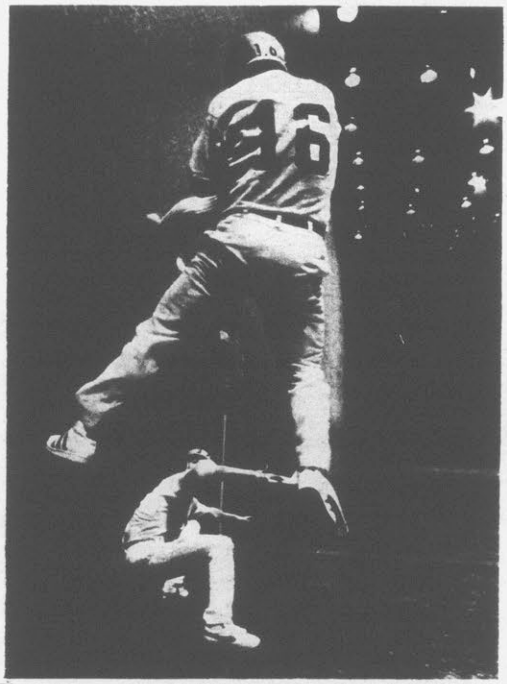

"Besides, these guys have fierce pride. Most of them are Basques, playing their national game. They're here on work visas, and they know if they break the law, they'll be sent home for good in disgrace.

"If any of them was doing something wrong, his fellow players would drum him out like a bad apple. It's like a policeman on the take — the other cops wouldn't stand for it."

Barring any legal troubles or scandals, the future of the sport looks bright. Expansion to new areas when pari-mutuel betting on humans is legalized is the next step. New Jersey, which has legalized gambling in Atlantic City, voted against jai alai last November but is a likely candidate for the sport eventually. So is Chicago, where World Jai-Alai's Dick Donovan estimates, "We would spend $30 million and create 700 jobs" in building a fronton.

With a slogan like, "Danger. Speed. Action" — and money, how can it miss? FW

Are getting ever bigger.
No doubt the cost of paper, glue,
Helps higher postage trigger.

But I have found a use for these
New stamps of giant size.
For guests to feast their eyes.

This way I think I balance off
The postage stamp expense.
Not often can you find a work
Of art for fifteen cents.

ON PARLE FRANÇAIS ICI

Well, this is the oldest joke that ever came to Quips & Quotes, and we offer it in the name of the Age of Nostalgia.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond had adopted a little French orphan girl, only a few months old. When a friend dropped by to see the infant, she was surprised to see the Raymonds studiously applying themselves to a book of French grammar.

"Whatever are you studying French for," she asked.

"When little Yvonne begins to speak," answered Mrs. Raymond, smiling, "we want to know what she's saying."

THROUGH A CHILD'S EYES

On the way to the airport, my stepmother started to explain to my two-year-old brother that she would be gone for a week and that I would be his mommy for that time. Little brother seemed deep in thought, then asked, "Mommy, who you goin' to be?"

"The first thing I expect from a cigarette is flavor. And satisfaction. Finding that in a low-tar smoke wasn't easy.

"But then I tried Vantage. Frankly, I didn't even know Vantage was low in tar. Not until I looked at the numbers.

"That's because the taste was so remarkable it stood up to anything I'd ever smoked.

"For me, switching to Vantage was an easy move to make. I didn't have to sacrifice a thing."

A GARLAND OF EASTER RECIPES TO BRIGHTEN YOUR FAMILY DINNER

By Marilyn Hansen

Let's have a traditional Easter Dinner this year. It's a joyous day to enjoy good food and the warmth of family from near and far. Our recipes, some old-time favorites and some new selections, will make your menu planning easy.

CREAM OF ASPARAGUS SOUP

- 2 cups coarsely chopped asparagus (about 10 ozs.) or 1 package (10 ozs.) frozen asparagus, thawed
- ½ cup coarsely chopped onion
- 1 cup water
- 1 chicken-flavored bouillon cube
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon lemon pepper
- 2½ cups milk
- 2 tablespoons cornstarch

1. In 2-quart saucepan, place asparagus, onion, water, bouillon cube, salt and lemon pepper. Cover, bring to boil over medium heat; reduce heat; simmer 25 minutes, or until vegetables are tender.
2. Gradually stir milk into cornstarch until smooth. Add to saucepan.
3. Stirring constantly, bring to boil over medium heat and boil 1 minute.

Makes 4 servings

Note: To serve chilled, place cold soup in blender container. Cover and blend 15 seconds or until smooth.

ROAST LEG OF LAMB WITH HERBS

- 1 oven-ready leg of lamb, about 6 lbs.
- 1 large or 2 small cloves garlic
- ½ teaspoon thyme leaves, crushed
- 1 teaspoon rosemary leaves, crushed
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- 2 tablespoons flour
- ¼ cup tarragon vinegar
- ¼ cup water
- 1 medium onion, sliced
- 1 carrot, sliced
- 1 rib celery, sliced
- 1 cup dry red wine, such as bardolino or zinfandel

1. Preheat oven to 350°F. Place lamb in roasting pan. Cut garlic into several slivers and insert randomly into lamb, using point of sharp knife.
2. Mix together thyme, rosemary, salt, pepper and flour. Rub this mixture well into lamb.
3. Pour over lamb mixture of tarragon vinegar and water. Roast lamb for 1 hour. Lower oven temperature to 300°F.
4. Remove roasting pan from oven and lamb from roasting pan to serving platter. Scatter sliced vegetables in bottom of roasting pan and place lamb on top.
5. Insert a meat thermometer into fleshy part of lamb without touching bone. Pour wine over all; return to oven; continue roasting for about 1 hour 15 minutes, basting a few times.
6. Remove lamb from oven when meat thermometer registers 145°F. for medium-rare, 155°F.-160°F. for medium, 165°F.-170°F. for well-done.
7. Place lamb on a serving platter and keep warm by covering loosely with a sheet of foil.
8. Pour off fat from roasting pan. Add ½ cup boiling water to pan; allow to boil up, scraping pan well. Turn liquids and vegetables into a strainer, pressing out liquid, reserve; discard vegetables.

Makes 8 servings

GRAVY FOR LAMB WITH HERBS

- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 1½ tablespoons flour
- ½ to 1 cup reserved liquids from roasting pan
- 1 can (10½ ozs.) beef bouillon, undiluted
- Dash freshly ground black pepper
- 2 to 4 tablespoons dry red wine

1. On board, make a beurre manié with flour and butter, using a fork or side of a knife.
2. In small saucepan, heat reserved liquids from roasting pan; add beef bouillon. Add buerre manié, bit by bit, beating with a wire whisk until sauce comes to boiling and is slightly thickened.
3. Stir in pepper and wine; return just to boiling. Pour into heated gravy boat; serve with roast lamb.

Makes 1½ cups

GOLDEN VEGETABLE PUREE

- 1 lb. carrots, peeled and quartered
- 1½ lbs. yellow turnip, peeled and cut in cubes
- Boiling water
- Salt
- 1 cup heavy cream
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- Dash white pepper

1. In 3-qt. saucepan, combine carrots and yellow turnip. Add boiling water to just cover the vegetables, plus ½ teaspoon salt. Heat to boiling; boil for 20 minutes or until vegetables are tender.
2. Drain vegetables. Mash vegetables with a potato masher by hand or puree in food processor. Add heavy cream a little at a time to achieve a fluffy smoothness.
3. Return puree to saucepan, add butter and pepper. Heat over medium heat, stirring until butter melts and puree starts to bubble. Taste for seasoning, add pepper and additional salt if desired. A beautiful golden yellow puree is a complement to baked ham or roast lamb.

Makes 6 to 8 servings

BAKED HAM WITH PINEAPPLE

- 1 fully cooked smoked ham (12 to 14 lbs.) or ½ ham, fully cooked, shank end
- 1 cup dark brown sugar, packed
- ¼ teaspoon ground cloves
- 2 cans (20-oz. size) sliced pineapple
- ¼ cup honey
- Bunch watercress

1. Preheat oven to 325°F. Line baking pan with foil. Place ham in baking pan, fat side up, and bake 30 minutes per pound.
2. About 30 minutes before ham is baked, remove from oven and cut off the rind with a kitchen shears or sharp knife; discard.
3. With large sharp knife, score fat, lengthwise and across, making cuts ½-inch apart and about ¼-inch deep.
4. In small bowl, mix together the brown sugar and the cloves. (Use ½ cup dark brown sugar and 1/8 teaspoon ground cloves for the half ham.) Pat this mixture evenly over the scored ham fat.
5. Turn oven to 425°F. Return ham to oven and continue baking until coating is a deep brown, about 30 minutes.
6. Meanwhile, drain pineapple. Reserve liquid for another use — it's great in lemonade. Place pineapple slices on shallow foil-lined baking pan. Brush with honey, place in oven on low shelf under ham and bake until golden. Baste once with the brown ham drippings (optional).
7. Place ham on a large cutting board or serving platter. Garnish with a bouquet of watercress and the pineapple slices. Cut in thin slices to serve.

Makes 20 servings
10 servings for ½ ham

COCONUT FROSTED EASTER CAKE

- ⅓ cup butter or margarine
- ¼ cup sugar
- ¾ cup light corn syrup
- 1 egg
- 2 cups unsifted all-purpose flour
- 1 tablespoon baking powder
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¾ cup milk
- Fluffy White Frosting (recipe follows)
- 1⅓ cups loosely packed, fresh grated coconut or 1 can (3½ ozs.) flaked coconut
- Multicolored jelly beans plus small, hollow chocolate bunny figures

1. Grease and flour two (8 × 1½-inch) round layer pans.
2. In large bowl of electric mixer, using low speed, stir butter to soften.
3. Add sugar to softened butter, stirring until well blended. Gradually stir in corn syrup. Add egg; beat well.
4. Stir together flour, baking powder and salt. Add dry ingredients in 4 additions alternately with milk; beginning and ending with dry ingredients, beat after each addition until batter is smooth. Pour into prepared pans.
5. Bake in 350°F. oven 25 to 30 minutes or until cake tester inserted in center comes out clean. Let cool in pans 10 minutes. Loosen edge with spatula; turn onto wire rack and cool completely.
6. Frost with Fluffy White Frosting. Sprinkle top and sides with coconut. Garnish with jelly beans and bunnies.

Note: Cake may also be baked in greased and floured lamb cake mold. Decorate with Fluffy White Frosting, coconut and jelly beans.

FLUFFY WHITE FROSTING

- 2 egg whites
- ⅛ teaspoon salt
- 1 cup light corn syrup
- ¼ cup sugar
- ½ teaspoon vanilla extract

1. Beat egg whites and salt until soft peaks form when beater is raised.
2. Mix corn syrup and sugar in small saucepan. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until sugar is completely dissolved and mixture just reaches a full boil.
3. Beat hot syrup into egg whites, a little at a time. Beat in vanilla. Continue beating until mixture holds stiff peaks.

Makes about 4 cups; enough to frost tops and side of two (8 or 9-inch) layers.

AMERICA'S NEWEST REFUGEES: POOR, HOMESICK BUT HOPEFUL

By Peer J. Oppenheimer

Throughout its history, the United States has experienced an influx of foreigners in flight from threatening events in their countries: famine in Ireland, poverty in Italy, the Holocaust in Germany. The biggest group to arrive in recent years is the Indo-Chinese — now nearing the 200,000 mark — who came as a result of the war in Vietnam.

According to Dr. Mai Tran, Deputy Director of the Indo-China Social Services Project, they have special problems. "They are not immigrants. They are refugees. Immigrants are usually psychologically and linguistically prepared to confront a new culture. These people were transplanted overnight into an almost totally strange land. They suffer the trauma of suddenly losing their homeland, their roots and their social identity. Their loss is compounded by the remorse they feel for having left loved ones behind."

Their loss of social status is made worse by the unavailability of jobs commensurate to their training, Dr. Mai suggests. "Professional people suffer most. In their country they were highly regarded. Here they cannot use their degrees. Some refuse to take jobs beneath their status, as this was unthinkable in their homeland. They end up on welfare. Many eventually accept manual jobs, mostly the women because they do not have a cultural conflict about such work. In Vietnam, the man literally owned his wife and family. But once the woman is in the American work force, she is exposed to new ideas and changes accordingly. This causes discord between husband and wife.

"Likewise, the children are torn between the traditional system of their parents and the American way. For example, they are expected to cross their hands, bow their heads and ask permission to go to school, but once there, they learn to be spontaneous and casual. When they get home, they view their parents as primitive. Sometimes this leads to deliquency."

Few Vietnamese feel any resentment from native-born Americans. But, says Dr. Mai, it is different with other minority groups, like the Mexican-Americans. "The job market is tight. Obviously we are taking work away from them."

According to a Health, Education, and Welfare task force report, 90 percent of the Vietnamese who want to work are in the labor force. The figure is misleading since many are working beneath their skills and thus still need assistance to sustain their relatively large families.

In the past, two years were required to become a permanent resident and obtain a green card (provisional status). It took five more years to be eligible to be an American citizen. According to Bob Seitz of the U.S. Immigration Department, when the President signed Public Law 95145 on Oct. 28, 1977, the Indo-Chinese could apply for citizenship five years from the date they first arrived — lopping off two years of waiting time.

Depending upon their age, qualifications, ability to communicate and their connections, these new residents have fared very differently in this country.

Among the most affluent today is Kieu Chinh, a beautiful actress who fled the Communists twice, once when she left her native Hanoi and again when she escaped the day before Saigon fell. "An airline official saved one seat for me on the last plane," she told me. "I had 30 minutes to decide whether I would leave my husband, parents, home, career, everything. Because my three children were already in Canada with my husband's sister, I decided to leave. I was afraid if I didn't, I would never see them again."

Kieu Chinh had several advantages over her countrymen. She spoke almost flawless English, had starring parts in a number of American films made in Asia, including the lead opposite Burt Reynolds in Operation CIA in 1965. She also had her own TV talk show and interviewed most American celebrities who went to Vietnam to entertain the GI's. One of them was actress Tippi Hedren who sponsored her entry into the United States. Other show-business people like director Robert Wise and actor Bill Holden promised to help.

In spite of such contacts, Kieu Chinh's hope of crashing Hollywood faded as time passed. After a year, she decided to get another job, particularly since her husband Tah had finally arrived in the U.S. He'd spent his adult life in the army and had no other profession.

Tah — whose English is good — got work in the circulation department of the Los Angeles Times, then joined the Catholic Welfare Bureau (where Kieu Chinh was working) and later the Department of Immigration, all part-time, before getting full-time employment as a counselor with a West Coast bank.

"Both of us took whatever work we could find to supplement our income," Kieu Chinh recalled. "At times, we each had three jobs, seven days a week. Our children, who are full-time students, also worked part-time. When we arrived in '75, we had nothing. Today we have a beautiful home in Montebello, two cars, money in the bank, and even my career is picking up again."

But, sometimes, she says wistfully, "I get pleas for help from other Vietnamese, and I cannot help everyone. It is very painful."

The fate of Nuguyen Chinh is more typical of the new Americans. His family consists of his 31-year-old wife and their four children, ages five, four, 18 months and 6 months. Two daughters, 13 and 11, are still in Vietnam with his mother.

Like Tah, Chinh was an army officer and has no other training. Additionally, he has two bigger handicaps: he lost a leg fighting in Vietnam, and he has been reluctant to learn English. After four years here, his ability to communicate is still pitifully poor, although classes are available, free of charge, through the Catholic Welfare Mission.

Chinh and his family are now settled in a one-bedroom apartment in a racially mixed (heavily Korean and Vietnamese) neighborhood in Los Angeles. Their place is neat but shabby, except for the Buddhist shrine; and color TV seems to be on around the clock, although none of them understands the dialogue.

Chinh had made no real attempt to get a job, and his wife has not earned any money, either. They live on $435 from welfare, $195 of which goes for their apartment, not including utilities.

Language is the biggest handicap for 60-year-old Hon Trung Bao and his wife Huynh To Minh, 51, recently arrived "boat people" who survived two months on the infamous freighter Hai Hong, so crammed with refugees that 2,500 people had to share one set of toilets. Now they have a two-bedroom apartment with their own bathroom. There is only one bed, however, and their three daughters, 24, 17, and 13, have to sleep on the floor. Two other children, a 22-year-old girl, who is a clerk, and a 21-year-old son, who attends L.A. City College and works in a hospital besides, managed to get to America two years before their parents and have been a big help. Although the patriarch of the family owned a clothing stall in Saigon, he has not found work here because he speaks no English.

Laon (pronounced Lo-Ahn) Nelson, 27, became a citizen two weeks after she first arrived in this country in 1972. (She stayed six months, then returned to Saigon.) She can't explain how it happened so quickly except to say that her American ex-husband was an Army man in Vietnam when she married him.

In 1975, before Saigon fell, he gave her two tickets — for herself and their daughter Jennifer — to join his parents in the State of Washington while he went to Teheran to work for a helicopter concern. The marriage ended in divorce, and she moved to Los Angeles. She now works as a reservation clerk in a small hotel at $3.50 an hour.

These are but a few sad tales of people who found themselves in harm's way. To fortunate Americans, it seems almost incomprehensible. FW

HIGH-FASHION WITHOUT A NEW WARDROBE

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Every woman likes to freshen up her wardrobe with the coming of each new season. But first, go through your closet and take inventory. Then follow this helpful guide:

Put Separates to Work for You. A fresh way to wear separates now is to don one shirt over another, with the top layer worn unbuttoned over the skirt or tied in a casual knot at the waist. If the under-blouse has wide cuffs, roll them back over the other shirt. For a separate that can take you from the office to an evening out, add a body suit to your wardrobe. It can be worn with a crepe wool suit, for instance, under a light, airy shirt during the day; remove the shirt for after-five.

Michael Doster

Designer Dominic Rompollo's lean, classic styles reflect current fashions destined to have long life.

Organize a Color Plan. The principle (as in a fine painting) is good color organization. There is a dominant shade (in clothing, the color that's most flattering to your skin tone), a secondary shade (it might be in the same color family — ranging from a pale peach to a deep rust) and touches of a contrasting shade that add punch to the final result (like a magenta shawl or neckerchief over a camel-colored dress).

Make your wardrobe more attractive by beefing up the dominant shade with one or two new items of clothing like a jacket (a solid color will go a longer way) or skirt. Then follow suit with the secondary and tertiary colors, where needed. Only you know what shades flatter you most.

Keep Accessories Current. Consider adding a belt and scarf to a cardigan sweater you already own, for a more tailored, pulled-together look. The belt to wear now is the kind that defines the waist, not one worn loosely on the hip as in other seasons. They come in all widths, but the wide-wrapped belt looks the smartest. A new scarf could also make a big difference in your wardrobe, with the most versatile shape being an oblong, about 54" in length. A basic shoe to have is either a pump or a medium-heel sandal in gray, beige or black patent. In handbags, yours will look dated if it's big and slouchy. The structured, scaled-down bag is the "in" silhouette in molded plastic, carved wood, straw or leather. The clutch bag looks better with suits than a shoulder-bag.

Take stock of your jewelry. Classics are in, from the little gold earring to a larger button-type to lapel pins in elongated flowers or nautical motifs. The big splash is in bright-colored wood- or buglebead choker-size necklaces; lots of lucite and enamel bangle bracelets.

Carol Horn: "Get one important piece in your wardrobe with a life cycle to it. When you buy, mentally note three to five different ways you can wear it for casual or dress. I had this fantastic gauze top which I wore elegantly all summer, then as a tunic over a turtleneck in winter; now I sleep in it!"

Bill Blass: "Get yourself a new suit this season, one with a slightly broader shoulder and shorter hip-bone jacket, with a slim skirt, slit to show more leg."

Dominic Rompollo: He agrees that you should "Buy one classic suit with a slim skirt. Wear with a skirt or sweater for day, then a strapless tube or spaghetti-strap top under it to make a cocktail suit. Choose neutrals: black, gray or beige."

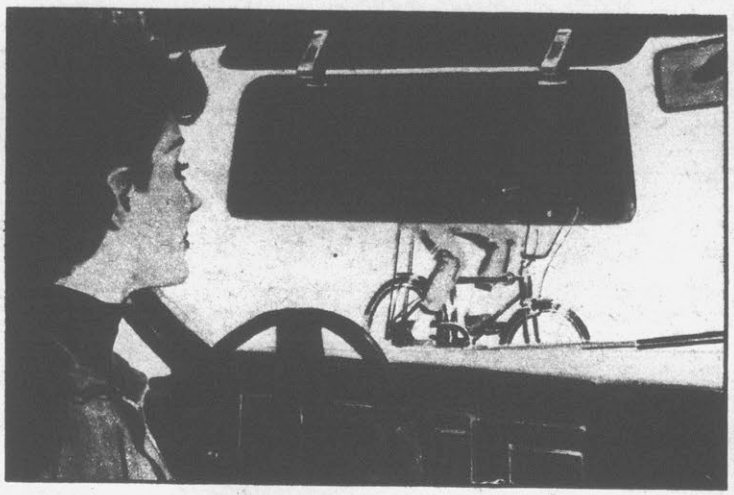

Liz Claiborne: "Get a bright-colored blouse or sweater in a tangerine, amethyst or jade, for instance, and wear it with last year's neutral jackets and skirts. Strike an original note with a pair of non-denim jeans in linen or silk."

Regina Kravitz: "Be aware of two significant style changes — in length (shorter, but still below the knee) and in silhouette (pared-down). A good purchase might be a slim slip-dress in a late-afternoon to evening fabric, such as tissue-faille, with an easy jacket, slightly padded, pulled in with a wide soft belt."

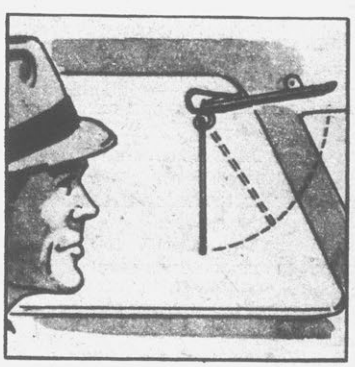

Geoffrey Beene: "Don't impulse buy or put your money into any similar outfit you already have. Invest wisely in one good thing." FW

PEOPLE QUIZ / By John E. Gibson

ARE YOU AFRAID OF OLD AGE?

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Most people over 65 feel they're "doing O.K.," but they think they are the exception — and that the others in this age group may be having problems.

2. When you retire, it's important to pick the right hobby — the wrong one can have an adverse effect on your morale and general well-being and make you feel older than you really are.

3. One thing a man can pretty well count on as he passes the middle-age milestone: his head is less likely to swivel on its axis as a pretty girl ankles by because his diminishing interest in romantic pursuits is replaced by more prosaic diversions, which have little to do with romance and love.

4. Most people don't realize how satisfying the middle and older years can be.

5. You're not "over the hill" until you think you are.

ANSWERS

1. True. In studies of persons over 65, conducted by University of Michigan research scientists, a scant 10 percent of those surveyed said old age was worse than they expected. On the other hand, three times as many said it was better than they had expected. A further finding: "People of all ages said in interviews that they believed the later years are full of problems, but when questioned about their own situation, those over 65 claimed that they personally were pretty well off. It was just the rest of their age group that was in trouble." These results suggest that unfounded speculation is responsible to a very large extent for much of the apprehension that so many people feel about having a lot of miles on their personal speedometer.

2. True. The Midwest Council of Social Research in Aging sponsored a study of the physical and psychological effects of the hobbies and leisure activities of a representative sample of retirees with a median age of 68.8 years. Findings: contrary to the popular notion that retirement brings with it a prescribed group of "acceptable" leisure pursuits, the subjects involved in this research were engaged in a wide range of activities, from gambling to reading, horse-breeding to bird-watching, golf to team sports. The conclusion drawn from this study "relates to the importance of 'doing what you most enjoy.' Retirees who were primarily participating in their favorite activity had significantly greater life satisfaction scores than those whose choice of hobbies was influenced by others."

3. False. The popular notion that a sign reading, "Out of Ardor," might as well be hung on gentlemen who aren't nearly as young as they used to be is frequently without any basis whatever. Duke University studies of the effect of Father Time on the aging libido show that physical expression of the love relationship is more than likely to continue to play a significant role in the life of the older person. The findings show that "At age 68, about 70 percent of men still regularly engage in sexual activity and even at age 78, about 25 percent are sexually active."

4. True. In a study of attitudes toward aging, conducted by San Diego State University psychologists, it is observed that "In our apparently youth-oriented society, with negative stereotypes regarding old age, it is plausible to presume that the older one gets, the more dissatisfied with life he becomes." Their investigation showed, however, that such a belief is not in line with reality. Subjects in the study, which included a specimen group of over five hundred men and women, covering a wide age range (from extreme youth to 65 plus), rated the quality and satisfaction of their own lives and an "average person's life" in each of seven age brackets. Results: "Most notably, older subjects rated their lives as better than younger subjects projected their lives would be at the same age. These data revealed a significant lack of awareness in younger people of the potential satisfaction in the middle and later years."

5. True. The investigators conclude, in evaluating the findings of the same study, that: happy productive adulthood is not a state of existence limited by boundaries of youth; rather it is a dynamic process in which problems are attacked and pleasures sought with personal equipment whose powers and limitations, though changing with age, do not necessarily favor one age as opposed to another. Lust for life is available to all ages. FW

WHAT IN THE WORLD

There's No Place Like Home

If your child is going to summer camp, you may be wondering how you're going to handle the possibility that he or she may get homesick. Carolyn Diener, an instructor in human development and family life at the University of Alabama, says that "Most children adjust to camp very well since usually they've had overnight experiences away from home already. But for some children the experience can be a miserable one." She feels that parents and children should work together to prevent homesickness, and suggests that one measure may be to let the child share the decision to go away. If a child feels that he or she is being "sent away" a sense of isolation or rejection may arise. Parents should consider the types of activities a child might enjoy and choose a camp accordingly. Another idea is to preaddress and stamp envelopes so writing home becomes easy. And, Diener says, if your child truly hates being away, it is best to bring him or her home without chastisement.

Wedding Bells

Here's one for the Guinness Book of Records — a minister who has officiated at about 120,000 weddings. The Rev. James P. Sandefur of Vista, Calif., says on a good marrying day he averages one wedding an hour at his normal $26 fee. Sandefur has come across some unusual weddings; for instance the one where the groom said he wanted his "best friend" to be the best man. Nothing odd about that — except the best friend turned out to be the groom's dog, wearing bow tie and jacket for the occasion.

Ladies In The Little League

Organized sports, when led by competent adults who are genuinely interested in the quality of the games their children play, can be important tools for teaching children about responsibility and getting along with others. And Dr. Ronald A. Smith, an associate professor of physical education at Pennsylvania State University, says that these are important lessons for both boys and girls to learn. "Girls should play in the Little League," he says, noting that "in our society, males have learned to cooperate through various kinds of group activities, while girls are taught to be individualistic." He feels that both boys and girls would benefit from participating in integrated organized sports, at least until the age of 12 or 13, when boys catch up with girls in terms of physical maturity. Smith emphasizes that "the reasons so many girls don't play sports are mainly sociological; playing team sports isn't going to make girls unfeminine."

But can the pressures of playing organized sports be harmful to children? Dr. Smith blames apathetic parents and some parents' and coaches' overwhelming desire to win for the criticism that organized sports foster too much competitiveness and often cause lasting psychological damage to "unathletic" youngsters. While he feels that "competition can spur the drive to achieve excellence, and at some point in life we have to realize what we're good at and what we're not," he acknowledges that most Americans tend to "look down on losers." Dr. Smith suggests that parents cultivate the attitude that "winning is good, but losing is all right, because the person tried and had a good time."

Lifestyles

Roller Skating. More teenagers have access to wheels these days, and they're even inviting Mom and Dad to come along for the ride. According to a study conducted by National Family Opinion, Inc., over 28 million people now roller skate at more than 3,000 indoor roller rinks throughout the U.S. And, while 73 percent of those skaters are under 18, 27 percent come from the older generation and have taken up skating because it's "better than jogging" for keeping physically fit. Forty-four percent of all skaters have been skating three years or less, while 54 percent have been skating longer, an indication that skating is probably more than just a passing fad. A December 1979 Gallup poll ranked roller skating as the fifth most popular sport enjoyed by teenagers: it outranked tennis, skiing, hunting and ice skating. Only basketball, baseball, swimming and bowling (in that order) placed above it.

Superstitions. For those of you who walk around ladders, blanch at the sight of a black cat and cringe when you hear the sound of glass breaking, remember that there will be two Friday the 13th's this year. One is this week (April 13), and the next will be in July.

Do You Read Me?

Can you read people like a book? You might do a better job after taking a course like the one taught by Dr. Vivian Rosenberg. An assistant professor of humanities at Drexel University, she has created an adult-education course called "Reaching Feelings Through Literature," which is designed to help participants learn to do just that.

As students study stories and essays by noted writers, they practice identifying feelings by using a class-compiled list of "feeling" words such as unhappy, confused, hopeful and resentful.

"I think literature offers people a way of becoming more aware of feelings without having to bare their private lives if they don't want to," Rosenberg says.

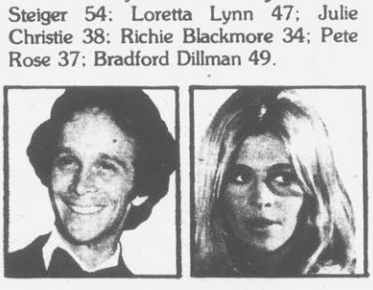

As they become more aware of feelings in literature, Rosenberg says participants may "become more able to recognize how they are feeling and how others are feeling" — in and out of the classroom.

"Literature offers a marvelous field for exploring the vast range of human emotions," Rosenberg concludes. "Consciously identifying the emotions found in stories leads us to greater skill in tuning in — really tuning in — to real people in the real world."

By consulting your local telephone directory you can get accurate, up-to-date answers to your questions about cancer. That's because the National Cancer Institute has set up a toll-free telephone Cancer Information Service with offices around the country; if no CIS number is listed in your local directory, you can call 800-638-6694 (in Maryland, 800-492-6600) for the number of your regional service. Questions that CIS answers range from "Is cancer contagious?" and "Does Laetrile work?" to requests for information on local self-help groups; the service has handled over 250,000 calls since it began in 1976.

'Enriched Flavor'™ Concept Verified.

—National Smoker Study

MERIT taste equal to—or better than—high tar leaders says latest poll.

Does the 'Enriched Flavor'™ science of low tar MERIT deliver real smoking satisfaction, even to high tar smokers? Recent nationwide research confirms it.

Confirmed: Majority of high tar smokers rate MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading high tar cigarettes tested! Cigarettes having up to twice the tar.

And in interviews conducted among current MERIT smokers:

Confirmed: 85% of MERIT smokers say it was an "easy switch" from high tar brands.

Confirmed: 9 out of 10 MERIT smokers not considering other brands.

This ability to satisfy former high tar smokers over a long period of time could be the most important evidence to date that MERIT is the first real taste alternative to high tar smoking.
