FIRE CLAIMS WILLIAMSTON RESTAURANT — Williamston and surrounding fire departments battle a Friday evening blaze that caused extensive damage to the Holiday Inn restaurant and offices just outside Williamston. Firemen on the scene said the blaze was spotted by a fireman working across the highway from the firm. Smoke was seen coming from the roof over the kitchen area, where the fire is believed to have started. The restaurant was serving at the time of the fire and the patrons escaped without injury, it was reported. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Spies Had The Right To Bend The Rules

By JIM ANDERSON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A one-time chief of U.S. Air Force intelligence says Pentagon spies had a right to bend the rules in South Africa because of fears the minority white regime might develop an atomic bomb.

But, retired Maj. Gen George Keegan says South Africa undoubtedly knew of the U.S. intelligence activities for a long time and only complained last Thursday for domestic political reasons.

Keegan, the head of Air Force intelligence from 1971 to 1977, defended America's use of a reconnaissance camera in a U.S. Embassy plane to collect information in South Africa.

He said U.S. military attaches — the Pentagon's intelligence agents — mostly collect their information "by going to the host government and asking for it."

"Sometimes they don't give it, and then we have put cameras in embassy planes, but it was usually done with the knowledge of the host government," he said in an interview.

Keegan said the attaches usually collect only routine data on such installations as harbors and airfields, but "in rare cases" are sent after sensitive information.

"The requirement for information (in this case) would be an overriding national interest in knowing whether the South Africans are building a nuclear bomb," he said.

He said a Soviet spy satellite picked up information in 1977 indicating South Africa might be developing a nuclear bomb and passed the data on to the United States.

Keegan said South Africa later denied developing nuclear weapons and the United States accepted the assurances. But America has apparently kept an eye on South Africa's nuclear plants ever since the Soviet tip.

The possibility of a South African bomb, Keegan said, would be exceptional enough to permit the bending of America's normal rules against military attaches engaging in clandestine activities.

He said the camera in the embassy plane probably only duplicated information already available from intelligence satellites. "But a low altitude photograph would give more detail, and it might avoid cloud cover," he said.

More importantly, he said, a close-up shot "would also have great dramatic and political effect if we ever wanted to print it in a newspaper" — such as the United States did during the Cuban missile crisis in 1962.

Keegan said South Africans undoubtedly knew of the camera in the embassy plane and "the timing of their exposure of it was purely political."

His analysis agreed with State Department officials, who said Prime Minister P.W. Botha made the espionage charges public as a domestic political diversion.

As head of Air Force intelligence, Keegan commanded about 300 air attaches based at U.S. embassies around the world. The Air Force, Naval and Army attaches send data to the Defense Intelligence Agency, the Pentagon version of the CIA.

Keegan said the value of the DIA's information has been diminished recently by rivalries with the State Department and CIA — a battle that he says the other agencies are winning.

The State Department said Saturday the American plane involved in the espionage incident has flown from South Africa to neighboring Botswana.

South Africa gave three U.S. Air Force men one week to leave the country and the State Department responded by giving the two top-ranking South African military attaches a week to leave the United States.

Prisoners Were Killed Before Kampala Fell

By CHARLES P. WALLACE

KAMPALA, Uganda (UPI) — Officials of Uganda's new government said Saturday missing President Idi Amin's secret police massacred more than 100 prisoners with hand grenades shortly before the fall of Kampala to Tanzanian and Ugandan exile troops.

President Youssef Lule, sworn in Friday as Uganda's new leader, told a news conference Saturday that Amin had so far eluded all efforts to capture him. Diplomatic sources said the burly dictator, whose reign of terror killed an estimated 500,000 in eight years, had already fled the country.

"Amin is very fast indeed," Lule said. "Every time we get near him, he shows us his heels."

In his news conference, Lule reiterated "the rule of law must prevail in Uganda" and directed the country's new chief justice to get the courts working again.

Lule also indicated the United States would shortly recognize his government, which was drawn up in a secret meeting of various Ugandan exiles in northern Tanzania while the fighting was still underway to overthrow Amin.

Although military spokesmen have said Amin would hang if caught and tried, Lule was cautious in his comments on the fallen dictator.

"It has been alleged Amin has committed crimes against humanity," Lule said. "The evidence will have to be examined. I am not a judge."

Amin has not been seen or heard from in several days and there was growing evidence he may already have left the country. CIA Director Stansfield Turner said in Washington recently that Amin's immediate family was in exile in Iraq, but it was not known if he planned to join them there.

Diplomatic sources Amin's personal jet, given to him in happier times as a gift by Israel, had been refueled at the Soroti air base some 140 miles northeast of Kampala and he had probably left the country aboard it.

These sources also said the personal car of Amin's latest wife, the young and beautiful "Miss Sarah," also had been found in northern Uganda abandoned near the Zaire border.

In perhaps the most grisly discovery in the aftermath of the liberation of Kampala, officials found the torn remains of an estimated 100 prisoners at the headquarters of the State Research Bureau, Amin's dreaded secret police.

Officials said that when it became clear Kampala would fall to invading Tanzanian and Ugandan exile troops last Wednesday, agents at the State Research Bureau lobbed grenades into interrogation rooms packed with defenseless prisoners.

In a visit to the headquarters Saturday, the brutality of Amin's regime was apparent eerywhere.

Seven bodies covered with flies and insects lay immediately outside the building, otherwise an innocent looking three-story building in the suburbs of Kampala. Inside, in seven dank cells in the basement, the building had been entirely ripped apart, apparently by the grenade explosions.

There were pieces of human bodies — heads and legs — lying all over, apparently from victims blown up by the grenades tossed by Amin's police.

Bodies still littered the capital from the final battle for Kampala, which finally fell to Tanzanian and Ugandan exile liberators at dawn Wednesday.

An employee of the city mortuary charged with collecting dead bodies from the streets reported he had picked up 200 on Saturday alone and expected the figure to more than double once all had been found.

Military officials said one body found near the capital's International Conference Center, was believed to be that of white, British-born Bob Astles, one of Amin's closest confidants and most notorious aides who was also wanted for questioning for many murders.

Government sources also reported that Lule's new administration had demanded $1 billion from Libya for the lives of 40 Libyan military prisoners captured during the fighting.

The sources said Libyan strongman, Col. Moammar Khadafy, had countered with an offer of $400 million and that negotiations were continuing.

Khadafy, virtually Amin's only remaining ally, sent some 2,000 Libyan troops Uganda to help defend Amin. But, as the Tanzanians claimed victory after victory and Amin's army began to collapse, Khadafy hastily withdrew most of the Libyan forces to prevent them being captured or killed.

Transcripts Show Men Confused And Angry

By IRA R. ALLEN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — It promised to be a sensation — the best since Watergate — when the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, under threat of congressional subpoena, released transcripts of the secret meetings it held during the Three Mile Island crisis.

But instead of revelations of incompetence or cover-up, the 1,200 pages depict conscientious men confused about an event nobody had planned for, angry at the nuclear plant operators but trying to work smoothly with them, and genuinely worried about public safety.

Faced with technology run amok, they even had trouble getting hamburgers and telephone connections to Middletown, Pa.

Unlike Richard Nixon's Watergate tape transcripts, there was no "smoking gun" evidence here, and only a few expletives deleted.

But like those blockbuster tapes, these pages show besieged government officials fretting over the public relations fallout from their decisions.

In fact, the commissioners anticipated most of the questions that would be flung at them by the media and the six congressional committees now planning to rake over the NRC's crisis management record.

"I suppose somebody will want to know, did we behave ourselves in this particular incident?" commented Chairman Joseph Hendrie, sometimes evasive in front of Congress but an authoritative voice within the commission.

Aware President Carter would appoint a commission to investigate the affair, Hendrie told his colleagues they could let the panel come in "and then simply ... stand back and order the staff to be fully cooperative, and let it go forward, and let the report issue as it will."

There was no evidence, as some had suspected, of a self-serving conspiracy between the NRC and Metropolitan Edison, the utility whose brand new atomic power plant failed to meet safety standards.

Harold Denton, the NRC's top regulatory staffer, began criticizing "Met Ed" as soon as he learned it had vented radioactive gas into the air Friday morning, March 30.

He accused plant operators of "piddling around" and withholding vital information. "It is really difficult to get that data," he complained.

Four days later, Denton was, in effect, running both the plant and the NRC's public relations. He stressed the need to establish better working relations with the plant operators.

But he also said the utility people wanted to move too slowly in trying to bring the crisis under control.

Commissioner John Ahearne said an explanation of some kind was needed for the "three-quarters of a million people sitting on the edge of their chairs, intense." Denton agreed.

Although a general evacuation was never officially recommended, it weighed heavily on the discussions after the March 30 radiation release.

Denton and NRC safety director Roger Mattson recommended evacuation early on, but later agreed it wasn't necessary.

The commissioners also relentlessly questioned and second-guessed the plant operators, and themselves, on the possibility of a devastating explosion from the hydrogen bubble inside the reactor containment building.

They worried about radiation levels in the air and in the milk, and about news reports — most of them fairly accurate, it turned out — that might unduly alarm the public.

They spent hours that first day of real crisis — March 30 — drafting a news release.

And every so often someone would ask the hard question on everyone's mind.

How bad is it?

Friday, Mattson said the nuclear core had been exposed 15 hours, causing damage far worse than thought. "We saw failure modes the likes of which have never been analyzed. ... I don't know what I would say if a reporter called me and asked me if we melted fuel."

Saturday, discussing the dangers of that hydrogen bubble, Mattson answered: "Let me say, as frankly as I know how, bringing this plant down is risky ... No plant has ever been analyzed in this condition in the history of this program."

Sunday, NRC research official Robert Budnitz said that, if the hydrogen explodes "we're gonna lose everything."

Commissioner Peter Bradford questioned the liklihood of a blast. He suggested: "Let's put it this way, there's not much chance of a harmful explosion that we're not prepared for."

Responded Budnitz: "There is no such thing as a harmless explosion."

Late that confusing Saturday afternoon, Commissioner Richard Kennedy reflected philosophically: "We may not be as close to the edge of that precipice as it seems."

His view eventually proved correct.

But Mattson's words of warning set the mood from the very beginning.

"We've got a horse race here," he said. "... Do we win the horse race or do we lose the horse race? If you are not lucky you might lose it."

Atomic Bomb

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Libya's strongman ruler, Col. Moammar Khadafy, once tried through an aide to buy an atomic bomb from Peking, but the Chinese refused to sell, a columnist who was a former high-ranking CIA official reported Saturday.

In a column appearing in Saturday's Washington Star, Cord Meyer, former station chief for the CIA in London, also reported that Khadafy may be behind Pakistan's effort to build a uranium plant of the type that can produce material for nuclear weapons.

Meyer, who retired from the CIA about a year ago, is now associated with nationally syndicated columnist Charles Bartlett.

Khadafy has long been obsessed with obtaining the atomic bomb to balance Israeli expertise, Meyer wrote. The CIA believes that if Israelis do not already have the bomb, they do have the capability of building one.

In 1975, Khadafy ordered Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yassir Arafat to assemble a team of Arab scientists to make the bomb. Meyer wrote that Arafat, fearing Khadafy's explosive rage, decided not to tell him that there were not enough Arabs sufficiently trained to make one.

Four years before, Khadafy "had sent his deputy, Abdulssalan Jallud, to Peking with orders to buy a nuclear bomb from the astonished Chinese, who were not willing to make the sale," the column said.

"Now the suspicion is strong that clandestine Libyan funding is behind the newly revealed Pakistani effort to build an enriched uranium plant," Meyer wrote. "The potential of Libyan access to this nuclear weapons material helps explain the sharp reaction of the Carter administration to the discovery that this secret work was in progress."

The administration cut off economic aid to Pakistan this month because it would not agree to internationally supervised inspections of its nuclear plant.

Pakistan was one of the largest recipients of U.S. aid, according to State Department officials. It received $4.87 billion from 1945 through last September.

Once the United States' staunchest ally on the Indian subcontinent, Pakistan was the western anchor of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, but in recent years it has assumed a more non-aligned stance while developing extensive relations with China and the Soviet Union.

Objections To Freeway Dropped By EPA

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's objections to a proposed Benson to Wilmington freeway were dropped Friday after the state agreed to environmental safeguards along the route.

The safeguards will come in the form of bridges spanning the environmentally sensitive wetlands along the 90-mile route.

State Secretary of Transportation Thomas W. Bradshaw Jr. met with EPA officials for two hours before agreement was reached on the new plan.

"They have accepted our concept of a freeway," Bradshaw said in a telephone interview after the meeting. "We feel like we are back on schedule."

State and federal officials said it was too early to tell how much of a price increase the changes would cause on the $180 million project.

State officials feared EPA's original rejection of the freeway plan would cause the state to lose $20.25 million in federal funds for the project.

The funds must be committed to right-of-way acquisition by Sept. 30 or revert to the U.S. Department of Transportation.

John C. White, regional EPA administrator, said the state presented new information about the five alternate routes it studied, the socio-economic effects on the routes, state collaboration with federal fish and wildlife officials and plans for minimizing intrusions on wetlands.

State and federal officials said they could not estimate either the mileage or the cost of necessary bridges because the project had not reached the design stage.

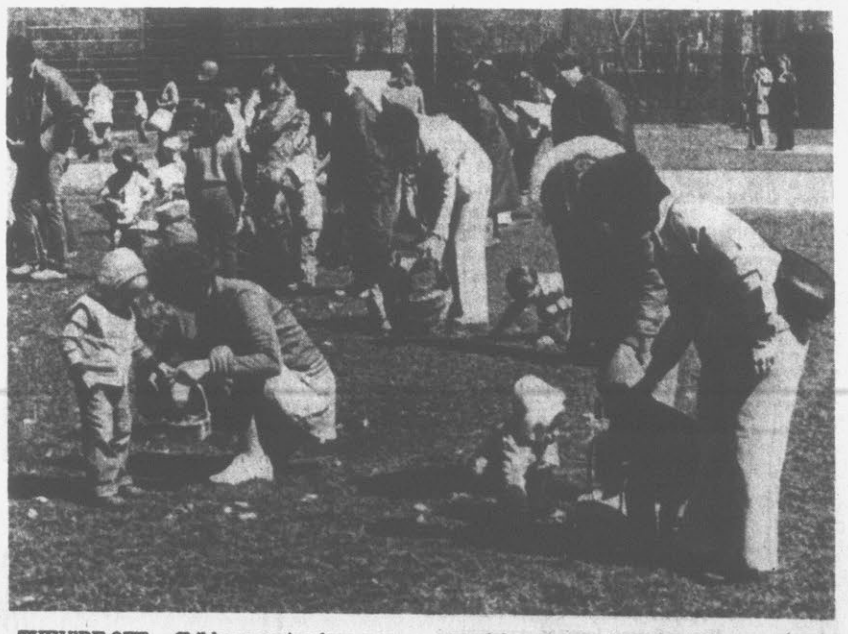

George E. Wells, the state's manager of highway design, said interstate bridges cost about $40 a square foot. He said bridging all of the wetland areas along the route would involve millions of dollars.

According to the preliminary environmental impact statement, the expressway would cross 10 wetland areas, 45 acres of seasonally flooded bottom land on the periphery of creek floodplains, 76 acres of wooded swampland and 277 acres of bogs or pocosins.

The statement indicates that wooded swamplands are the most ecologically sensitive areas.

An EPA official said wetlands are critical for flushing pollutants out of water before it enters streams.

The proposed freeway route runs from Interstate 95 between Benson and Four Oaks along U.S. 701 to Newton Grove, southeastward along N.C. 50 to Faison, then southward paralleling U.S. 117 to Wilmington.

Cold Shutdown

HARRISBURG, Pa. — Dropping temperatures in the damaged core of the Three Mile Island reactor were permitted to stabilize again Saturday as officials pondered their next step in a cautious cooling process to end the nation's worst nuclear plant crisis.

"The temperature is holding at 250 degrees (Farhenheit) and pressure at 900 pounds (per square inch), and it looks like it's going to stay there for awhile," said Karl Abraham, a Nuclear Regulatory Commission spokesman. "It looks like that's where the reactor wants to go."

A phased final cooling to reach a benign, long-term reactor condition called cold shutdown started Friday when operators began reducing core cooling water temperatures at a rate of about five degrees an hour.

NRC authorities refused to set an exact timetable for achieving cold shutdown, saying they lacked sufficient technical data and had to analyze each action carefully before proceeding.

The next cooling step will be to remove even more heat from the seething core water through a steam generator serving as part of a secondary coolant water loop, said Abraham.

Editor Says Dispute Shows Bureaucracy At Its Worst

By BRUCE BARTLEY
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A magazine editor, who failed to convince a judge to stop the CIA from censoring a former agent's spoof about spying in Uganda, says the dispute shows bureaucracy at its worst.

"They (the CIA) think it will cause them all kinds of trouble around the world," Tom Bates, editor of Oregon Magazine, said Friday after a federal judge refused to prohibit the CIA from further censoring an article by ex-spy Jay Mullen.

"We think it's a lot of bureaucratic nonsense," the editor said.

Bates must now decide whether to print the article with the 16 words that the intelligence agency maintains endanger national security.

The government has not yet asked for a court order to prevent its publication.

Mullen, of Medford, Ore., submitted the article, "I was Idi Amin's Basketball Czar," to CIA censors in keeping with an agreement all CIA employees make when they join the agency.

If the magazine goes to press as planned on Monday, Bates said, he fears that the CIA will seek an injunction to halt publication or sue for damages after publication.

The 16 words were the last of about 30 clauses to which the CIA objected.

Mullen has already made some editing changes at the CIA's request, such as deleting fictional names of people the government said could be endangered by any hints of their identity.

The manuscript deals with Mullen's exploits in the Ugandan capital of Kampala in the early 1970s. Mullen coached the deposed Ugandan president's basketball team and says in the article that he once punched Amin after an argument.

The first of four 20-page sections of the May issue of the 40,000-circulation magazine was printed Friday. It contained part of the Mullen article but did not include anything to which the CIA still objected. Another installment is planned for the June issue.

CIA counsel John Greaney negotiated with Bates and Mullen on Friday over the remaining disputed sections.

Bates' attorneys asked U.S. District Judge Robert C. Belloni to decide whether national security was threatened by possible publication of the 16 disputed words, which appear in two different clauses in two sentences. Belloni refused to rule on the issue. He said he couldn't act until the CIA did.

During the hearing before Belloni, Bates said the magazine would be at least a week late if it did not meet its Monday deadline at the print shop. The alternative, he said, would be costly overtime to printers.

"It's not the point of the story to endanger anybody's life," Bates said earlier. "I was quite surprised over the things they were concerned with."

"They're obviously going to fight it" if the article is published as is, Bates said.

"We're a relatively small publication and we can't afford to lose thousands of dollars. We're kind of in a jam."

Few Clues

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Police have few clues to the slayer of a 92-year-old eccentric millionaire who often hitchhiked and sometimes carried $60,000 in cash in his pockets.

"If you see him walking down the street you wouldn't think he had 10 cents on him," said an acquaintance who asked that he not be identiied.

Henry Ritayik, had lived alone for 30 years in Pass Christian, Miss., 50 miles east of New Orleans. He recently rented a $100-a-month apartment here in order to have a place to stay during occasional business visits, family members said.

Ritayik's body was discovered in the apartment on Thursday. Police said he had been beaten on the head with a club-like object.

"I definitely think it was someone he knew," said police detective Charles Albright. "I personally don't think it was a case of robbery. Whoever beat him really wanted to make sure he was dead."

Ritayik's brother, R. A. Ritayik of Sewanee, Tenn., estimated the victim's wealth "in excess of $2 million."

The estate includes real estate holdings in Mississippi, stocks and other investments, his brother said.

He said his brother sometimes carried $50,000 or $60,000 in cash wrapped in newspaper stuffed into his pockets in order to be able to quickly close land deals before sellers had second thoughts.

A niece, Mrs. Gregory Krekeler, 42, of St. Louis said her uncle was rich but "you wouldn't know it." She said the last time she saw him was at a family funeral, with the millionaire arriving by bus.

Pride Of Baltimore Is Safe After 7,000 Mile Cruise

By NANCY KERCHEVAL
Associated Press Writers

BALTIMORE (AP) — The two-masted schooner Pride of Baltimore was safely anchored in Delaware Bay today as it neared the end of a six-month, 7,000-mile Caribbean cruise that was almost ruined by the elements in its final days.

Its 11-member crew, all safe, had to work feverishly late Friday to free the 136-foot vessel from a reef where it had been forced aground by 25-knot winds, the Coast Guard said.

Missing since Tuesday, when it was swept 250 miles out to sea as it headed to Norfolk, Va., the Pride showed up in Delaware Bay on Friday afternoon after the Coast Guard launched a widespread search for the ship.

Chris Hartman, spokesman for Mayor William D. Schaefer, said today that Capt. Charles Whitcomb would proceed unassisted to Baltimore after dawn.

The tall-masted ship, a replica of a 19th-century Baltimore topsail clipper, was anchored off the southernmost tip of New Jersey, where it went aground, Hartman said.

The Coast Guard had reported late Friday that it appeared the vessel wa breaking up on the reef, but the report was untrue.

"They're riding out in the Delaware Bay overnight," Hartman said. "Capt. Whitcomb said the ship is riding comfortably and is taking on little water. The damage is limited to some sprung seams."

An 82-foot Coast Guard cutter, the Point Franklin, reached the Pride off Cape May, N.J., early today, said Petty Officer Charles Crosby in New York. He said the Coast Guard ship would help assess the damage to the Pride and, if necessary, either escort it or tow it to the nearest port, at Wilmington, Del.

Originally, the Point Franklin was to tow the clipper to Wilmington, but Hartman said Whitcomb decided towing was "not necessary and not good" for the Pride "because of the configuration of the ship."

"She is in no danger of sinking," said a Coast Guard spokesman in Cape May." "The only thing we did was deliver a pump by helicopter. Apparently, with the assistance of the pump they managed to lighten themselves enough to get off the reef."

Said Hartman: "We're terribly unhappy about it (the grounding), but, at the same time, very thankful in view of the last couple of days that the ship and crew are safe. We also are very grateful that something much worse didn't happen when the ship ran aground."

He said Whitcomb reported that "the crew was fine. They're low on food — down to the canned tuna — but that's no problem. We can get food to them."

Hartman said the ship was forced away from the coast early this week by two storms carrying winds as high as 50 knots. Winds calmed as the Pride headed back to the coast.

The ship has an 85-horsepower engine used for docking, but because the engine is so small, it is not effective in counteracting winds.

The Pride, launched in 1977, was built by the city of Baltimore for the Bicentennial. The wooden vessel managed to elude six military planes that searched as far as 340 miles off the coast between Cape Hatteras, N.C., to Cape May, the Coast Guard said.

No Comment On Resignation

WASHINGTON — Bruce Beasley III, asked to resign his $28,000-a-year job as executive director of the Mid-East Commission here last week, declined to comment on the move, other than to say he is not vendictive and is sorry the situation arose.

The commission's personnel committee asked that Beasley resign on or before June 30. A Fountain native, he has been associated with the Mid-East Commission since the organization was formed 11 years ago, first as assistant executive director, then as head of the multi-county planning and clearinghouse agency.

The commission, which is scheduled to hold its annual meeting in Greenville on April 19, provides planning assistance to municipal and county governments in State Planning Region Q, which includes Pitt, Beaufort, Martin, Bertie and Hertford Counties.

Mid-East also serves as a clearinghouse to review projects for state and federal funding for their effect or contribution toward balanced growth, conservation of natural resources and effects on the environment, as well as possible duplication of programs or effort.

The commission is funded by the various municipal and county government members and through state and federal grants.

A member of the personnel committee, who declined to give a reason for the action, said in addition to asking for Beasley's resignation, the group said no hiring or firing should be done until after June 30, there should be no recriminations against present staff members, and there should be no extensive Mid-East traveling without prior approval.

The spokesman said the committee's action resulted from several committee sessions.

Mary Long Tankard, acting head of the commission's program for the aged, resigned her post Friday. No reason was given by officials who announced the resignation.

Aviation Program

The U.S. Air Force Orientation Group will present a multi-image show entitled "Stretch the Limits of the Sky" Wednesday, April 18 at D. H. Conley High School.

The program, showing the evolution of aviation, will be presented in a 45-seat mobile theater from 8:30 a.m. until 3 p.m.

The 15-minute program highlights key civilian and military events and people from aviation history and also shows research and development achievements.

Artwork, photographs and an original musical sound track take viewers from Leonardo da Vinci's dreams of manned flight through the space age, including a futuristic look at a space colony.

The high school, in cooperation the Air Force, will sponsor the exhibit.

Plane Owners Being Sought

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The owners of a World War II-vintage bomber are being sought by South Carolina authorities while the plane, suspected of being used in drug-smuggling operatins, is at the Burlington Municipal Airport for repairs.

A South Carolina sheriff said the Federal Aviation Administration has been unable to identify the plane's owners.

Gary Herman, an owner of H&H Propeller Service, said the plane landed at the airport Sunday. He said his company was hired to repair a broken seal on the propeller shaft.

The B-52 first attracted attention when it was spotted on a pasture landing strip in McBee, S.C., on March 12. A search for the owner produced a man claiming to represent the owners. But the man produced false documents when asked for registration papers.

After sheriff's department officials challenged the validity of the papers, the man said that he had sent the originals to the FAA registry, said Sheriff Ralph Freeman of Chesterfield County, S.C.

Freeman said the FAA found that the plane was sold by a California company but that the federal agency had been unable to contact anyone about the sale.

The man, identified as Jim Collier of Guilford County, told authorities that the owners of the plane planned to convert the bomber into a crop duster, Freeman said. He said they rented the pasture landing strip to dust for pine beetles.

"You don't spray pine beetles, you chop the tree down," Freeman said.

Continue Hunt For Two Men

CRESWELL — The search for two Greenville men, missing since their 14-foot boat foundered on Lake Phelps near here Thursday, continued Saturday.

Washington County Sheriff James Peal said he doubted the men — Ransom Breedlove, 31 and Wayne F. Wilson, 27 — were still alive.

The intensive search, which included helicopters from the U.S. Coast Guard Air Station at Elizabeth City and the Dare County Sheriff's Department, was halted Friday because of bad weather.

Robert Wayne Best of Greenville, who survived, spent about 13 hours afloat on the 16,000 acre lake before being pulled from the water about 5:15 a.m. Thursday by the Sheriff and the lake warden.

Peal said the 39-year-old Best was several yards away from the lake's boat ramp.

Best said he, "thought about a lot of things," while in the water, and, "talked to the man upstairs for a long while."

The survivor said he and his companions abandoned the boat about 4 p.m. Wednesday when it began taking on water as they were returning to shore.

Best, who said the three were hanging onto life preservers rather than wearing them, noted that Breedlove went down once, "and then he came back up and then I didn't see him again."

Best and Wilson remained together for a while, until seperated by currents, then shouted to one another for a while through the darkness. Best said when he could hear Wilson no longer, he decided to swim to shore.

Appealing To Tobacco Growers

Basically it is an appeal to growers to leave the bottom four leaves on tobacco plants.

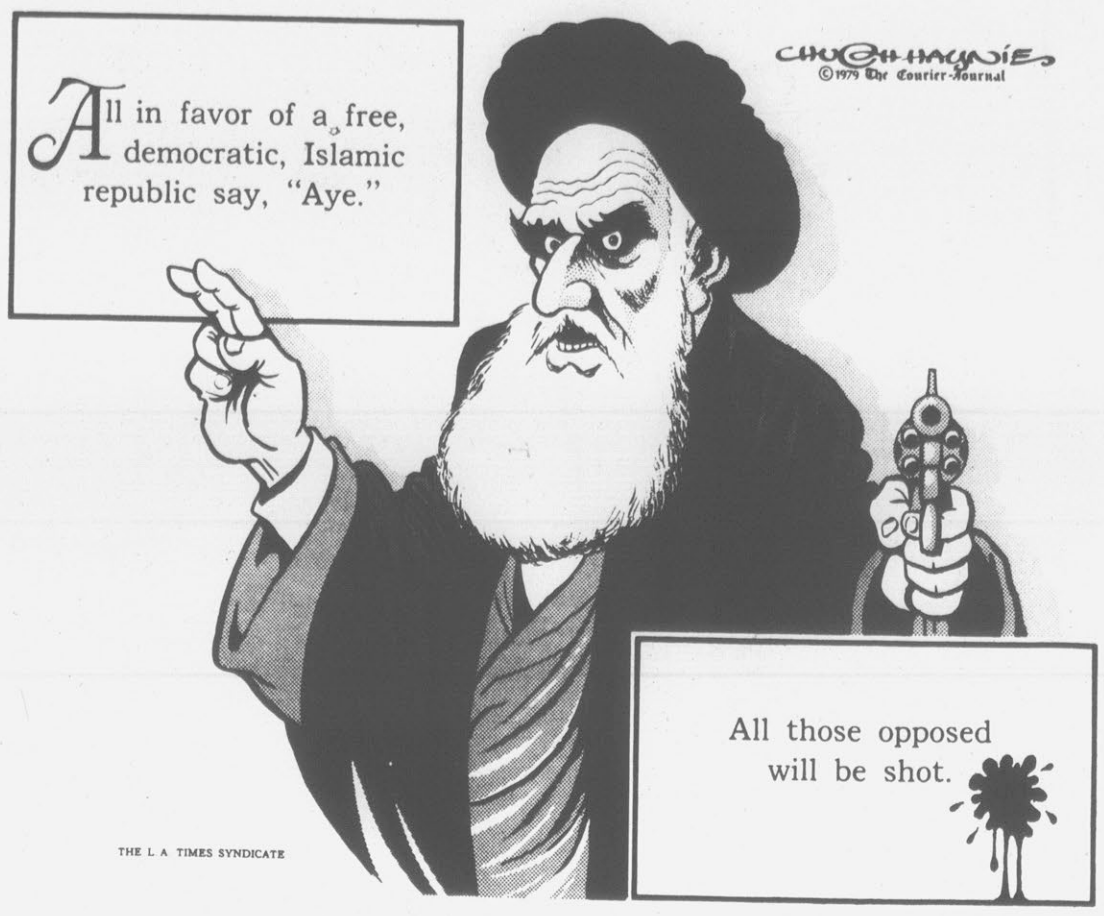

Cooperation in the program is seen as critical by Stabilization Corp., which makes price support loan and is heavily loaded with "P" and "N" grades of tobacco.

Once Stabilization gets the lower leaf grades they are most difficult to move. There is too much on hand and loan rates are above the true market value for the grades. Finally foreign tobacco of similar quality can be purchased at a lower price.

Stabilization officials say they have made progress in reducing the supply of "P" and "N" grades, but it will take further cooperation of the growers this year to reduce the supply. That is why they are urging full participation in the four-leaf program. They point out that not only will participation reduce lower leaf supplies but it will increase the supply of the more desired upper leaf tobacco. This could mean better profits to the grower.

Tobacco growing and marketing simply wouldn't work in this country without the price support program. Not only would oversupply quickly depress the price, but ultimately the quality which makes American tobacco so desirable would decline.

A further glut of lower leaf tobacco could very well wreck Stabilization Corp. The four-leaf program can result in more production of the kind of tobacco the world market wants, and also relieve the pressure on Stabilization. It is important that farmers heed the appeal of Stabilization officials.

Mankind's Solemn, Joyful Season

A Law Would Be Likely

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — with the total number of proposed new or changed laws introduced in this session of the General Assembly well over the 1,100 mark, some lawmakers feel it's time to slow down.

In casual conversation the other day a visitor to the State Legislative Building let slip that trite comment: "There oughta be a law....."

"Don't say that too loudly," his legislator friend cautioned. "Somebody might overhear you and there'll be one introduced before sundown."

Cause of Death

The recent Child Health Plan for North Carolina produced jointly by the State Department of Human Resources and both the state chapter of the American Academy of Pediatrics and the N.C. Pediatric Society called attention to a little-known situation.

"The most common cause of death after infancy is accidents..... They accounted for almost 90 percent of deaths occurring after the first year of life", the study found.

Furthermore, the specialists feel that in the absence of firm statistical information it is still possible to conclude that accident-related disabilities occur at least two or three times as often as death.

In 1977, according to a statistical breakdown compiled by the division of health services, there were 1,180 deaths in the group between one year of age, and 19. Of those, 1,056 resulted from accidents.

Between one and four years of age there were 141 deaths; 232 were accidental. Between five and 9 there were 174 deaths; 167 of them accidenta; between 10 and 14 there were 207 deaths; 190 accidental; and the figures soared for the 15-to-19-year-old where 558 deaths occurred; 467 of them accidental.

Problems

Ending state regulation of private schools runs against the idea of equal protection and opportunity guaranteed by the State Constitution, State Supt. of Public Instruction Craig Phillips argues.

In a letter to members of the House of Representatives where action is being considered, Phillips says, "I do not believe that such action is in the best interest of the State, our children, our public school system, or the non-public schools."

For one thing, it would be impossible to enforce the law requiring students to attend school until age 16 since the non-public schools would not be required to report attendance records, Phillips said.

The 180-day school terms required in public school will not apply to the private schools; nor will minimum curricular standards apply.

The future of the minimum competency test for high school graduation would also be placed in doubt since the non-public schools would not use that test. "Requiring a minimum competency score of students for graduation cannot be maintained if students are allowed to elect out of this requirement", Phillips noted.

Sunday Morning Notes

There is a big nostalgia thing about the 1950s now, as exemplified in the movie "Grease", and in other ways.

For many adults it is a time for recalling a relatively uncomplicated era . . . before the Vietnam war, before inflation and prior to a revolution in social values.

Charles Horne, director of Greenville Utilities, says he and others talked to large numbers of citizens through civic clubs and other meetings recently. They were explaining the need for water, sewer and electric improvements in the $24 million bond election, which recently won approval by the voters.

The speakers didn't try to tell people how to vote, only to point out the necessity for the projects which the bond funds would finance.

"I told them that if the improvements weren't carried out, we would freeze Greenville's progress at the 1970s level," Horne recalled.

One citizen, who obviously preferred a different era, asked Horne after his talk, "Couldn't we freeze progress at the 1950s level?"

Horne recalled that as a youth he used to swim the Tar River at Grand Turn just west of Greenville and sun himself on the sand bar at the opposite side.

"Unfortunately, I can't do that now," he chuckled. "There's a four-lane bridge in the way."

Ah, progress. It's not all bad. Part of the bond funds will be used to help finance an entirely new water waste treatment plant. The present one, located behind Greenwood Cemetery, is now out-of-date. It will be abandoned as obsolete and replaced with an entirely new facility.

Horne could have mentioned that swimming was done west of the city because, in those days there wasn't any treatment plant. Raw sewage simply dumped into the river, making the Tar an open sewer line.

The cost of cleaning up the river is high . . . but it's worth it.

And when it comes to nostalgia, you have to go back some in Greenville to recall when a huge stand pipe stood near the Pitt County Court House and towered as high as the court house building.

The big tank held most of the city's water supply, and a ladder on its side was a favorite challenge to boys of the time.

The stand pipe eventually gave way to the elevated tanks which are so familiar today. The steel sides of the old tank were cut up into sections and shipped off for scrap metal. The annex to the old court house building stands now about where the old tank was located.

Canine Tooth Fairy?

By BERNARD CAUGHEY

Not even — especially — Max.

Max, you see, is my 150-pound German shepherd.

Now, during his first 12 years (he'll be 13 June 26), he's suffered the usual puppyhood and adult diseases of worms, infected ears, dandruff, among others.

He also had a prostate problem so bad he couldn't walk. I had to fashion a makeshift stretcher to get him to the vet. And ... but that's another story.

Max, whose real name is Maximilian — a genuinely original name for a German shepherd — has been known to bite. Among other things he:

— Stripped the sweater off my brother-in-law, who vaulted over our fence.

— Bit our neighbor, the deputy fire chief, who reached over a wire, four-foot fence.

— Nipped a woman on the elbow.

— Made a grab for the water commissioner, right by the fly — but that, too, is another story.)

If it sounds like Max is vicious, he isn't. Someone once quipped that he wouldn't hurt a fly — unless it belonged to the water commissioner. But, as I said before, that's another story. It's just that, like a good boxer leads with a left jab, Max — a good protector — leads with his teeth.

Well, to get back to this story. Max had some kind of an attack or seizure the other night. My wife and my youngest son were sure he was having a heart attack. They convinced me to take him to an all night veterinary clinic.

Naturally, by the time I arrived, Max had made a

THE INSIDE REPORT

Is Jerry Tough Enough?

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — On the morning after his self-inflicted humiliation in New Hampshire, Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. telephhoned the notorious William Loeb of the Manchester (N.H.) Union-Leader, inadvertently multiplying new doubts about his capability to challenge Jimmy Carter for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Although he had bowed to pressure the previous evening and cancelled his testimony in favor of a constitutional amendment to enforce balanced federal budgets, Brown told publisher Loeb he would like to return to New Hampshire to push the measure. Since the state's Democratic establishment views Loeb as a rightwing devil figure, Brown was sending them a message of defiance and contempt.

But he was also making an unintended revelation. If he truly had not backed away from his uphill fight for the constitutional amendment in Concord, why did he not deliver his testimony? Because he was stared down by a tough provincial politician named Chris Spirou, minority leader of the New Hampshire House of Representatives.

The valid question: Is Jerry Brown tough enough to run against the incumbent president of his own party? Does he have the inner resources of a Eugene McCarthy or a Ronald Reagan, each of whom challenged incumbents of their own party despite the abuse heaped on an insurgent?

That may be the real meaning of Brown's New Hampshire fiasco, not meerly reiteration that here indeed is an eccentric politician (who followed his 6,000-mile transcontinental exercise in futility by embarking on an African safari with Linda Ronstadt). Brown's problem in Concord seems born not of insufficient groundwork but of insufficient guts.

Some important California Democrats, previously ready to back their governor against Carter, were stunned. "Maybe Jerry really wasn't ever all that tough," said one Californian who has known Brown all his life, "but nobody has leaned on him before." Accustomed to mellow, laid-back Californians, Brown was not prepared for street-fighting tactics.

That Spirou is an agent of the Carter White House was underlined when he wrote a letter warning Brown of being "hustled" by New Hampshire Republicans also backing the constitutional amendment. Cleverly, Spirou contended Brown was "retracing the footsteps" of ex-Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty, a pariah among California Democrats who ran badly in the 1972 New Hampshire primary as Loeb's candidate.

Brown tried to fight back. Dr. Steve Kemiji, who runs the "Greek-American Committee for Justice and Human Rights in Cyprus," telegraphed Spirou (who is Greek-American) requesting courteous treatment of Brown as "pro-Greek" in contrast with Carter's "pro-Turkish actions." Spirou's tough response: leaking the telegram to Alan Baron's political newsletter.

As Brown's April 2 appearance came closer, the governor grew more nervous. Brown aide Grey Davis called Spirou twice, followed by a

To the editor:

April 22-28 is Volunteer Week in N.C., and I want to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to the thousands of volunteers in our state for the contributions they make in our communities.

In recent months, citizens have expressed their concern about rising taxes and waste in government. People want progress and good services, but they don't want additional tax burdens.

We must recognize that more money for new programs is not the only answer, or our only resource. The greatest resource we have is people. All of us volunteering some of our time and talent, working together, can help meet many of the needs in our communities and state.

The value and rewards of citizen involvement can be seen in every community. I know this as your governor, as a citizen and as a volunteer. Volunteers bring commitment and compassion to their jobs. They also benefit from the feeling of giving a part of themselves to help other people.

I urge you to look around in your community and seek out an area where you can, by devoting a few hours each week, give aid to some needy person or cause. It is a privilege to count myself among the volunteers serving to make a difference in our N.C. communities.

My warmest regards,
Jim Hunt

Strength For Today

COURAGE

The bravest people are not those who have no fear, but those who have conquered their fears. Some of the greatest military commanders have been men who hated battles, feared them and trembled through them, but fought them to the end because they believed they were fighting for the right.

We should judge our courage, therefore, and the courage of our fellows, not by the way we feel but by the way we act; not by what we want to do but what we make ourselves do in an hour when courage is required.

Some people appear to like to do dangerous things. As often as not they have a neurotic need to attract attention to themselves or a more seriously neurotic death wish. The truly courageous person is the one who does dangerous acts only when there is an absolute necessity to do so, usually to promote the safety or welfare of someone else. The truly courageous person does what he knows to be right, regardless of the consequences.

Advances By Black Workers

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The jobless rate for blacks, more than twice that for whites, is often cited as evidence that employment discrimination continues and that government and private policies have failed.

The statistics seems to support the notion, because the March jobless rate for black men was 8.8 percent, or 2.6 times that of white men, and that for black women was 9.8 percent, or double that for whites.

But what the statistics don't always reveal is that black workers in the past three years have been making proportionately greater headway than whites, regardless of what those jobless rates say.

The jobless rate isn't the only indicator. Important too is the rate at which blacks have been finding jobs and the numbers of blacks that now hold them. In that respect, the figures are improving.

The reason for the jobless rate remaining high, despite the fact that more blacks are finding jobs, is that more of them have been entering the labor force. Those who once didn't seek are now looking for work.

When a person actively seeks, he or she is said to be a labor force member, albeit an unemployed one. The mere act of looking, it is said, means they feel opportunities exist where they didn't before.

Janet Norwood, acting commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, explained to Congress recently that the proportion of labor force blacks declined "slowly but consistently" after post-World War II.

But then as the economy emerged from the recession of 1974-1975 the pattern changed, she said. More blacks sought work, "apparently as the result of expanded job opportunities."

Statistically, the situation portrayed itself in a high and stagnated jobless rate. Though improvements were being made in tackling the great problem, the administration couldn't prove it by the jobless rate.

But explaining how the statistics have hidden the improvement doesn't mean that the fight is being won. Vast problems remain, and they aren't likely to be overcome quickly.

There are, as Norwood explained to Congress, three important elements of data that are strikingly different for whites and for blacks.

"The first is educational attainment," she said. "The proportion of black workers who have completed four years of high school is increasing, but it remains lower than the proportion for whites."

A second factor, she said, relates to occupational differences. "Despite a significant degree of occupational upgrading, black workers are still overrepresented in less-skilled jobs." Such jobs are marked by high turnover and unemployment.

The third difference, said the acting commissioner, is that jobless blacks tend to be concentrated geographically to a greater extent than whites. About 60 percent of unemployed blacks live in central cities.

Most Back Nuke Power

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. — Although more Americans now favor caution in the construction of nuclear power plants, a solid majority continues to feel it is important to develop nuclear power to meet the future energy needs of the nation.

These are among the key findings to emerge from a nationwide survey completed Monday, in which certain questions were repeated from a 1976 Gallup survey for comparison purposes.

The percentage of Americans who favor a cutback in nuclear plant operations until stricter safety regulations can be put into practice has increased from 40 percent in the 1976 survey to 66 percent in the current survey.

Helping to explain the sharp change in attitudes are findings from the current survey which show that among the remarkably high proportion (96 percent) of Americans who had heard or read about the Three Mile Island situation at the time of the survey:

— Three in 10 (four in 10 in the East) were "extremely" (12 percent) or "quite" (16 percent) worried about their own and or their family's safety in the immediate aftermath of the reactor incident.

— As many as four persons in 10 (41 percent) felt the situation was, in general, not handled as well as possible, reflecting the confusing early reports regarding the seriousness of the situation.

— Three in every four in the survey (75 percent) think a situation such as the Three Mile Island plant accident is likely to happen again.

While most Americans continue to attach considerable importance to the development of nuclear power, as many as six in 10 (62 percent) say they would object to having a nuclear plant constructed near their home (within a radius of five miles).

This proportion represents a sharp increase since the 1976 survey, when only 45 percent said they would have a similar objection.

Public Not Ready To Reject Nuclear Power

Yet, despite these worries, the American people are not ready to reject the use of nuclear power for future energy needs.

In fact, only one American in four (25 percent) favors shutting down all nuclear plants at this time.

In addition, 63 percent feel that it is either "extremely" or "somewhat" important to have MORE nuclear power plants to meet the future energy needs of the nation. In the earlier survey, the comparable figure was 71 percent.

Here are the questions and results:

"Do you feel that nuclear power plants operating today are safe enough with the present safety regulations, or do you feel that their operations should be cut back until more strict regulations can be put into practice?"

As I Recall It

When Greensboro Was Savaged By A Tornado

By NOEL YANCEY

(Noel Yancey retired recently after 39 years of covering North Carolina news for the Associated Press. In this column, he retells some of the big stories he recalls.)

One of North Carolina daily newspapers carried a picture on the morning of April 4, 1936. It showed a letter carrier delivering mail to a Greensboro resident who was standing in the ruins of his home left by a tornado. The picture seemed to say that even though the man had experienced the worst tornado in North Carolina history that life must go on.

The storm, which left 13 dead, over 100 injured and more than 500 homeless, was one of a flock of tornadoes which struck in five southern states that day, killing more than 27 persons and causing millions of dollars worth of property damage. Another storm struck Concord the same day, injuring seven persons and badly damaging 2,000 homes.

"Utter desolation marked the path of the maniacal wind as it ripped and gouged its way through the city within four blocks of the Jefferson Standard Building," a reporter on the scene wrote of the Greensboro storm.

"Residents of the area, dazed and disheartened, today plodded through streets littered with the ruins of their wind-shattered homes and shops.

"Here the front of a brick tenement house and garage was sheared as if with a clean cleaver stroke. There an entire factory building was struck down, all its supports collapsing at once.

"And everywhere tin roofs were pulled from buildings and crumbled as easily as a child would cast aside the tinfoil wrapper from a stick of gum.

"The storm struck — as a blanched, red-eyed World War (I) veteran described it — 'like a big shell bursting.'

"Terrified families saw the walls stripped from their houses, rafters plowing into their sitting rooms.

"Men, women and children huddled together in the doorways of buildings — fearing the structures would collapse and trap them, yet afrait to venture outside into the hail of bricks, stones and splintered timbers.

"When the sound — 'like a train rumbling over an underpass — and the fury died, they were herded into the streets by policemen into nearby buildings left standing, and one man was electrocuted by a deadly live wire."

The article related how several men sat in a barber shop and a nearby cafe when the storm caused the flimsy roofs to crash down, killing three of them.

Mrs. J.B. Ayers and her 8-year-old daughter Gloria, and Mrs. Ruby Bain were killed by fire when the adjoining houses in which they were trapped, caught fire.

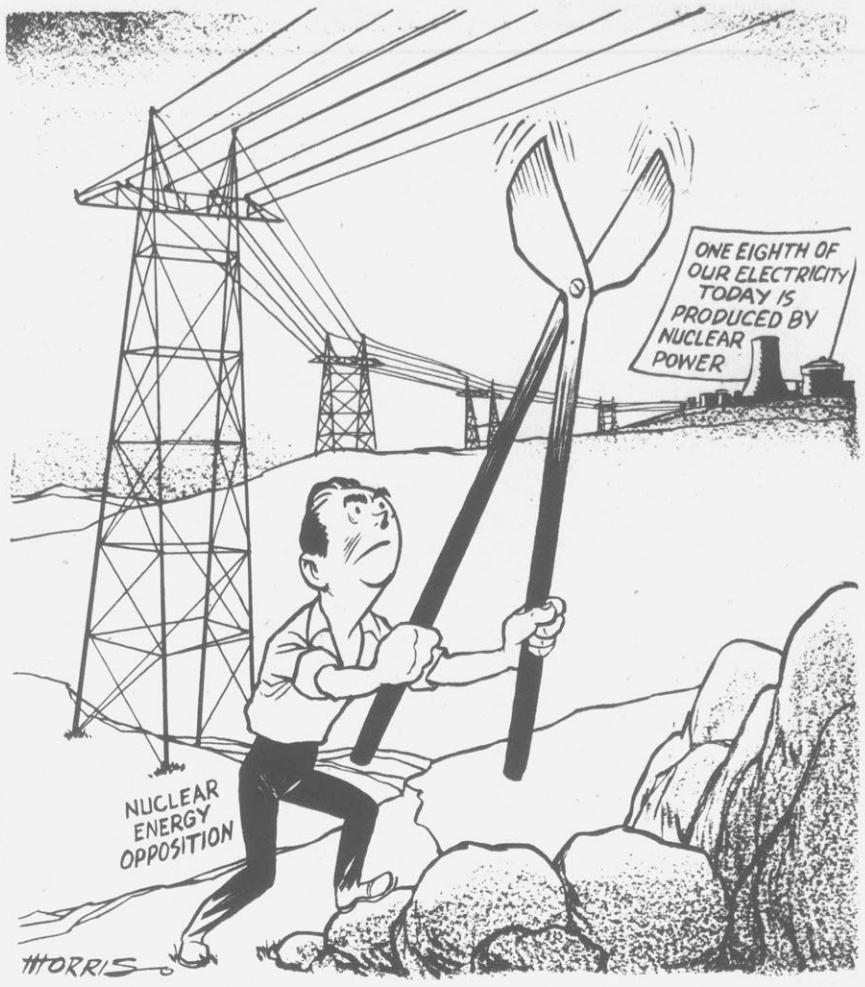

The article told how the old El Moro cigar plant, a three-story brick building which had been abandoned a few months before the storm, was smashed down to a level of less than 10 feet.

The George C. Brown Lumber Co., the J.D. Wilkins steelwork plant, the Red Band Flour plant, the Dillard Paper Co., Sinclair Refining Co. wholesale plant, Glascock Stove and Manufacturing Co. and other industrial buildings were practically demolished. The wind destroyed the buildings at the Sinclair plant but left the storage tanks undamaged. The plant of the Blue Bell Overall Co. on South Elm was severly damaged and remained closed the day after the storm, throwing 700 workers out of work.

Bennett College suffered an estimated $25,000 damage but other colleges in the city were not hit.

After smashing the Elm Street area, the storm touched down again in the Bessemer section two miles to the east on the Raleigh Road. Damage at Greensboro was estimated at from $1,500,000 to $2,225,000.

CUTTING THAT OFF WOULD BE QUITE A SHOCK!

Children Of Appalachia Learning Their Heritage

CUMBERLAND, Ky. — "Here we were right in the heart of Appalachia teaching these kids all about the Greek and Roman cultures and nothing about their own culture." James Goode, humanities professor at the University of Kentucky's Southeast Community College in Cumberland is concerned about this lack. Last year he introduced the first Appalachian Studies course in the University's curriculum. Through this already popular course, students at Southeast not only are getting an appreciation of their mountain heritage, but are also making a major contribution to the oral history of the area. Specifically, the students are getting their fathers and grandfathers, mothers and grandmothers, aunts and uncles to talk to them on tape about life in a coal camp.

"Coal camp culture has been virtually ignored in all Appalachian study," says Goode. "When people think of Appalachians they think of dulcimer-playing, quilt-making, wood-whittling welfare recipients. I grew up in a coal camp and I never knew anything about any of that stuff." Fifty percent of today's Appalachians have coal camp backgrounds.

Goode's course offers a vivid picture of the typical coal camp. It consisted of a self-contained unit of miners and their families living in three-room, company-owned houses within walking distance of the mine. It had dirt roads, a church (Methodist or Baptist), an elementary school, a commissary ("where you could get anything you wanted"), a doctor, and a couple of nurses. Bosses and the doctor lived in houses with running water. Miners called that section of the camp "silk stocking row." A guard and a chain across the entrance to the camp kept the rest of the world out. Everything was company-owned — including, it seems, the people. Some camps were unusually favored, having a "movie house" or a two-year high school or a second church (for black people) or sidewalks.

On their tapes students hear over and over, "Times were hard, but we were happy." Again and again they hear John L. Lewis and the union being praised for getting better wages and shorter hours for the miners. That blind devotion to the union, which these young people have encountered all their lives, begins to make sense as they listen. They hear 60-year-old men tell of making $2.00 for 14 hours of work, but never seeing the money because they owed it to the company for rent or medical services or supplies.

"This oral history project comes none too soon," says Goode. "Two miners have died since they made the tapes for the class." The unique contribution of all these tapes, in Goode's opinion is that "old timers will talk candidly with these young people whereas they might not with someone else — someone who's not kin."

In other Appalachian Studies course activities, students examine everything from moonshining to quilt-making, in an effort to immerse themselves in the concrete details of the culture. Students have made items ranging from a bull-tongue plough to stack cakes. "When they get stuck on something, I tell'em go home and ask their grandmother or grandfather," says Good.

Expanding his program to establish an Appalachian Studies Center at Southeast Community College is Jim Goode's dream. He envisions it as having a comprehensive oral history library, a collection of original Appalachian quilt patterns that people could check out, a speaker's bureau that brings famous Appalachians in to talk to "ordinary people" and give them a pride in their heritage. That "pride in their heritage" is all-important to Goode. He says mountain folks have been laughed at for so long for being what they

Complications Arose With An Easter Bunny

The Easter Bunny and I have always had a good working relationship. I wouldn't say that we were best friends. In fact, I feel about the same towards him as I do toward income tax: they both have to be endured once a year. But, on the whole, I've tolerated rather well the smushed jelly beans in the carpet, the bits of chocolate bunny embedded in the sofa upholstery, and the Red Dye No. 2 on the front of the new pink organdy Easter dress.

Last week, however, something happened which made me reassess this relationship. Meg and I met the Easter Bunny in a mall.

It was as if I had seen Princess Grace chomping bubble gum. After such an encounter, belief in a personality's finer qualities is hard to sustain. I got the same sick feeling in the pit of my stomach that I got in December when there were so many Santas around that they were passing each other in the stores. With 2 or 3 hundred of them walking around the city snapping Polaroid pictures, it's somewhat difficult to explain to a child exactly what is going on. It got so obvious that Meg finally went up to one, put her hands on her hips, and said, "You are all over the place, aren't you?"

So it came as no surprise that the minute she saw our "rabbit" friend, she stopped right in her tracks and cocked her head to one side. "Is he real, Mommy?"

Since "he" was buxom and wore loafers, I was hard put to answer that question. I'm certainly not anti-feminist, but I've never seen a rabbit, male or female, with a bust. And the explanation that had sufficed at Christmas just didn't seem to suit this occasion. It wasn't hard to believe that Santa would send out elves in his place to help him compile the Christmas lists, but it didn't seem logical that the real Easter Bunny would send out a human helper dressed in a rabbit suit to take requests for eggs. If anything, he'd send a chicken.

Unfortunately, the encounter kept generating questions. "Now she's asking me why the Easter Bunny comes," I told Phillip. "What do I tell her?"

"I guess you tell her that he comes to celebrate Easter just as Santa comes to celebrate Christmas."

"But that's not true. Kids understand Santa and Christmas. Santa is the spirit of giving; he really and truly symbolizes for a small child the joy we feel at Christmas. But I'm not sure that small children are capable of understanding the deeper joy we feel at Easter. And besides that, what does the Easter Bunny really have to do with Easter? If you can figure out how a basket of candy relates to the Resurrection, I wish you'd tell me."

"Well, if you feel that way, maybe we shouldn't give Meg an Easter basket."

"What? And disappoint her on Easter?!"

Just call me the Easter Chicken.

call from Brown himself. Stay home, Spirou insisted. Brown responded by asking for a meeting with Spirou in Concord before he testified.

Brown the fly thereby invited himself into the parlor of Spirou the spider. Even worse, the governor at the eleventh hour inexplicably decided to take not a single aide.

"I cleared the decks and opened up the guns of Navarone on him," an exuberant Spirou told us. How? By informing Brown that the hearing procedure snubbed just-elected Democratic Gov. Hugh Gallen (a Carter supporter and amendment foe). Brown accepted this as a pretext for capitulation.

Surrender did not buy him kindness. Gallen publicly accused Brown of trashing the U.S. Constitution. Spirou compared Brown's Concord expedition to Gen. Custer's trip West. "We were very kind to him, considering what he deserved," Spirou told us.

When Gene McCarthy announced against President Lyndon B. Johnson, Robert F. Kennedy told us McCarthy would have a chance in New Hampshire only by ignoring the state's regular Democratic leadership — their threats and their sensibilities. McCarthy did so, and ran well. Brown did not. Seeking detente with Spirou, he ended up surrendering. The call to Loeb was tacit admission of his weakness the night before.

Brown's advisers say bravely that the bare-knuckled treatment in Concord is now backfiring, and cite new Democratic support from the state legislature to prove it. But one legislator previously leaning toward Brown told us: "I was struck that he didn't have much presence of mind."

More important is the fact that Chris Spirou is only the first of myriad hard-nosed politicians Brown must confront if he persists in trying to bring down a president. That is something for him to contemplate on his romantic safari.

The Draft Requires A Satisfactory Answer

BY JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — You can search the calendars of Congress for hours on end and not come up with a greater dilemma than is posed for conservatives by proposals to bring back the draft. The question defies a wholly satisfactory answer.

A couple of years ago, the question would not have arisen. Now it crops up in high-school auditoriums and college newspapers. Last week a group of 40 House liberals, led by John F. Seiberling of Ohio, united in a statement asking President Carter to oppose a return to Selective Service registration. The 35 Democrats and five Republicans said they were "disturbed by the increasing number of proposals for the resumption of the military draft."

My guess is that everyone who grapples with this issue will be disturbed by the propsect, but Seiberling's liberal cohort has far less trouble than one encounters among conservative troops. Liberals know where they stand; conservatives are of two minds.

It is an abiding principle among many of us that the best government is the least government. That is a simplistic way of saying that the first responsibility of government, in terms of human affairs, is to insure the liberty of the people — to minimize compulsions and to maximize freedom.

Obedient to that principle, we tend to oppose every needless compulsion of the state — and surely there is no compulsion more to be feared and resisted that the compulsions of Selective Service and conscription. This is the ultimate deprival of personal liberty. Without the most compelling necessity, supported by the most convincing evidence, conservatives could not possibly support a return in peacetime to the draft.

But there is another abiding principle and it is to this effect — that in terms of national affairs, the first obligation of government is the national security. Upon the fulfillment of this responsibility all else depends. It cannot go unnoticed that roughly one-third of the powers delegated by the Constitution to the Congress deal with the powers incident to war — with raising and supporting armies, providing and maintaining a navy, organizing and arming the militia, and so forth.

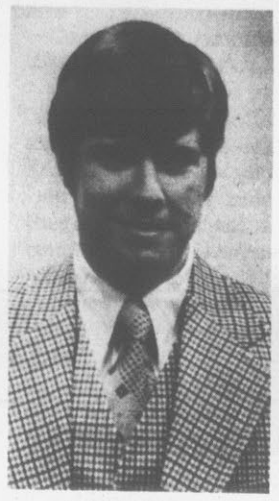

When individual liberty collides head-on with the national security, how is the issue to be resolved? It is no problem in time of war. It might be no problem in time of peace if all the authorities were in agreement (a) that a resumption of the draft is necessary, or (b) that a resumption of the draft is not necessary. No such agreement is presently in sight. The secretary of the Army, relying upon a Defense Department study, says a draft is not needed. The Army chief of staff says it is. Some competent observers say the all-volunteer concept must now be written off as a failure. Other competent observers say the concept has worked remarkably well.

On the record of recent events, the armed services are running into trouble. During the last quarter of 1978, the percentage of qualified recruits for all four armed services dropped below established goals. Rep. Paul N. McCloskey, Jr. (R-Cal.) charges flatly that the all-volunteer system "simply is not providing a combat-ready army." In the event of a major war, he contends, it would be many months before Selective Service could be reactivated to deliver 650,000 recruits for six months of basic combat training. McCloskey is a fighting marine who won the Silver Star and Purple Heart in Korea. His warnings carry a bugle-call ring of authority.

McCloskey and 14 colleagues have introduced a bill, H.R. 2206, that would create a National Youth Service System as an alternative to full-scale conscription. All men and women would be required to register within 10 days after their 17th birthday. At age 18, they could choose among several options — two years of active military service with full GI benefits; six months of active service; or they could gamble on staying in a lottery pool for six years without getting called up.

Without endorsing this specific bill, I do suggest that McCloskey deserves a hearing. No one wants to see our liberties abridged, but no one wants to see them lost to an enemy, either.

Eligible?

Some North Carolinians may be eligible for additional food stamps as the result of recent changes in U. S. Dept. of Agriculture regulations.

According to Betty Rouse, Supervisor of the Pitt Co. Food Stamp Center, information has been received from USDA through the Division of Social Services in Raleigh that households which were entitled to benefits lost in the past because of an error, but could not receive the benefits because they were not currently certified may now get those food stamps. New regulations now allow those households to get the lost benefits, even though they are not currently certified for food stamps, she said.

At Night, It'll Become A Disco

TORONTO (AP) — The world's tallest, free-standing disco will open next fall in the CN Tower, says tower director David Garrick.

One-third of the tower's deck will be a disco by night and a full observation deck by day, he said.

Garwood Was Looking For The American Dream

By JAN CARROLL
Associated Press Writer

ADAMS, Ind. (AP) — Robert Russell Garwood was a country boy looking for a piece of the American dream when he left Indiana in 1963 and enlisted in the Marines. Sixteen years later, Garwood is back in his hometown, his youth gone and his dreams shattered by the nightmare of Vietnam.

Bobby, as he is known to his family and friends, spent almost 14 of those years in the hands of the Vietnamese. But when he returned to this rural, southeastern Indiana community on a 30-day convalescent leave, there was no hero's welcome. His homecoming is clouded by allegations of desertion and collaboration with the enemy — charges Garwood steadfastly denies.

"I was a gung-ho Marine. You gave me an order and I did it," he said in an interview last week. "I guess I believed too much in the U.S. government, that everything it did was right."

Garwood, a lanky man with deep-set, dark eyes, was born April 1, 1946, in Greensburg, Ind., the first son of Jack and Ruth Garwood. They lived a few miles down the road in nearby Adams until his parents divorced when Garwood was 4. Jack Garwood was given custody of Bobby and his younger brother, Don.

Garwood says he was a "silent, timid" youngster with a lot of friends.

"I liked everybody and everybody liked me. I'd do anything for my friends," he said. "I'm a country boy. I grew up in the country. I lived in the city for a couple of years but I didn't really adapt to the city."

The city was Indianapolis. During his sophomore year, the 17-year-old Garwood dropped out of Arsenal Technical High School to join the Marines. Since he was underage, Garwood solicited his father's permission, and reluctantly got it.

"My old man, he was worried that I couldn't take it. The Marines are the toughest outfit and I wasn't really what you'd call a tough guy," he said with a chuckle. "I was ready to prove to my old man that I was ready to step out into the world."

Garwood added: "I really got to know more about the facts of life after I joined the Marine Corps."

John F. Kennedy was president when Garwood became a Marine. The Beatles were making their musical presence known in America. Candy bars were a nickle and a cup of coffee was a dime. Garwood watched his favorite shows, "I Love Lucy," "Amos 'n Andy," and "Abbott and Costello" on a black and white television set. "When I left the states, color TV was only talked about," he said.

Three presidents have come and gone in the time Garwood has been out of the country. He missed Watergate and Americans landing on the moon. His fiancee married someone else and moved to California. Instead of his old favorites, Garwood watches "Mork and Mindy" on the large color TV in his parents' trailer. "I still can't understand that show," he says.

Garwood completed his basic training in California and from there went to Okinawa, Japan, on his way to Vietnam. In Okinawa, he met the Stewarts, an Army family from Greensburg, stationed there.

"He was around the family quite a lot," recalled Lucille Stewart, who now runs a dress shop in Greensburg. "He was always polite and considerate. He was never loud or obnoxious in any way at all."

Garwood, then 18, dated the Stewart's 15-year-old daughter, Debbie, for a time. "At the time, we didn't know he was service. Most people didn't allow their daughters to date GIs," Mrs. Stewart said. "But we accepted him because, knowing he knew the family back home, we felt quite secure."

Garwood said he spent about eight months on Okinawa before he went to Vietnam for what was supposed to be two months. When he was captured, he had only 10 days left to serve.

"I was a short-timer. My tour was almost over," he said. "No short-timer wants to go anywhere."

Garwood said he was approached by a corporal in the motor pool who asked him to drive a vehicle to the 3rd Marine Division headquarters about a half a mile away.

"I told him, 'I'm sorry, man, I'm short. I ain't going nowhere,'" he said. "My combat weapon was an M-14. I had been dismantling it and cleaning it to turn it in."

Garwood said he persuaded him that there was no one else to do the job and that "there won't be anything dangerous about it."

"So I strapped on a .45-caliber pistol, put a round in the chamber and went," he said.

Later, he found his jeep surrounded by 30 or 40 enemy soldiers. At first, he said, he thought they might be South Vietnamese troops.

"But when they pointed their guns almost point-blank at me, I knew they weren't," he remembered. "I dove out of my jeep on the ocean side and started shooting. I got one of them right between the eyes. I didn't even aim. I shot another one in the stomach. They got me twice in my right arm — you can still see the scars. Then I lost my weapon and rolled under the jeep. That's when they captured me...

"The first day, I was able to walk. The second day, they had to carry me. I was too weak. I had lost too much blood," he said, noting that his wounds went unattended for three days.

Because of the charges against him Garwood is reluctant to talk specifically about what happened to him during the 13½ years after his disappearance on Sept. 28, 1965. Other U.S. POWs have claimed Garwood defected to the Vietnamese.

His lawyer, Dermot Foley, has an explanation: "There is reason to suspect that the Vietnamese abused Bobby for a while and then told him that if he crossed over, they would release him. He decided to make the deal, and they broke their word."

Garwood disputes claims that he remained in Vietnam on his own, saying, "Can anybody who's ever grown up in America actually believe I volunteered to stay in that God-forsaken country?"

The Marine characterizes his imprisonment as "hell on top of hell."

"They used psychological warfare. They try to break you. If we were beaten, we would laugh. At least it released some of the tension," he said. "Nobody can really understand what went on over there. They don't know. They can't know. It was a crazy war. It shouldn't have happened."

Garwood said his overriding emotion during those grim years was depression, "especially when they let everyone go home and kept me. I didn't even know about the peace agreements until the POWs went home."

After a while, "I turned depression into hate. If I had really done some crime against society, you'd have some kind of realization of the punishment. But what did I do? I did what I was told."

While in Vietnam, Garwood went from 180 pounds to 140, largely because of the monotonous diet of rice.

"Can you imagine eating one thing every day for 14 years?" he asked.

Sleep didn't come easily either.

"In Vietnam, all the nights are bad. There are no good ones," Garwood said. "You didn't know when or where somebody was going to try to cut your throat. You slept with one eye open and one eye closed."

Baptized a Methodist before he left for Vietnam, Garwood said he was sustained by his faith in God, his country and the American people. "That's what kept me alive."

Several months ago, he slipped a note to an unidentified foreign traveler in Hanoi. It said, "I am an American in Vietnam. Are you interested?"

Garwood said he decided to give the note to the man after hearing him speak English. "He was more scared than I was," he said.

"I laid my life on the line. I didn't know if this guy was real or not," Garwood said. "Some of the Russians can speak better English than we can."

It was a chance Garwood said he had to take. He gambled and won. The traveler contacted the U.S. government and the wheels were slowly set in motion for Garwood's release — the first POW to leave Vietnam since more than 500 American GIs were freed in 1973.

"If my note hadn't gotten out and they would have found it, I wouldn't be here today. My body would have been shipped back in a box, like all the others," he said.

In March, Garwood began the long trip home, taking an Air France jet to Bangkok, Thailand, from Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon.

When he stepped off the plane, he was informed of the charges against him: soliciting American combat forces to throw down their weapons and refuse to fight; attempting to cause insubordination; disloyalty and refusal of duty among fellow prisoners of war; suspicion of desertion in time of war; unlawful dealings with the enemy and misbehavior while a prisoner of war.

If tried and convicted of all charges, Garwood could be sentenced to death — a penalty not imposed on a Marine since before the turn of the century.

The turn of events has disillusioned Garwood, who observed that "I've returned to my own country and live in almost the same fear" that shaped his life in Vietnam.

"I went in for four years and now it's 16. Four more years and I can retire," Garwood said. As for his continued military service, "that's up to the Marine Corps."

Bitterness creeps into Garwood's soft voice when he speaks about his recent past.

"I spent 14 years in Vietnam. Those were my youth years. They're gone. I'll never get them back. I spent half of my life over there. For who? Who'll explain it to me. Can Nixon explain it to me? Can Johnson explain it to me?"

Readjustment is coming slowly to Garwood. His English is improving and his Vietnamese accent, though still noticeable, is beginning to fade.

"Even now, I have to think of some words in Vietnamese and translate them into English," he explained with a smile. "I've been away from it for so long. You don't know what it's like not to speak your own language for 10 years."

The future is something that Garwood doesn't think about too much, explaining, "I still don't have my freedom."

He claims he doesn't worry about the charges against him, saying, "I'll just leave it up to the judgment of the American people.

miraculous recovery. One hour and $31 later, I got the expert diagnosis: Max is an old, overweight dog.

But the vet cautioned that something obviously was bothering Max. Therefore, we should take him to his regular vet, he said.

I did. That's when Dr. Richard Thackaberry muzzled him, took his temperature, checked his heart and did the things vets usually do.

He also checked Max's teeth and, while looking under his growling gums, Thackaberry's face crumbled into a painful, toothy grimace.

"He's got a breath that would stop a tractor," Thackaberry gasped, shaking his head in disbelief. This wasn't news to us, since we already had nicknamed him "Sweetlips."

"Bring him back Tuesday. We'll give him some anesthesia, clean his teeth and pull any loose ones," he said.

Now, Max is a real thoroughbred. His grandfather was the world champion, 1959 Grand Victor — Red Rock's Gino. So Max is no slouch.

But here's Thackaberry announcing for all the world to hear that he has a champion case of halitosis. Blue ribboned bad breath.

Well, Max went back to Thackaberry. And, as I said, nobody likes to go to the dentist. He showed his real colors. Not the black, silver and tan under which he's officially registered — but yellow.

He tugged and moped; he made sad eyes. Eventually he went under and Thackaberry did his dentistry, including pulling one tooth on the left side — the one right behind the fang. Those two visits cost $69. Thank God he didn't need braces.

Max was still groggy from the anesthesia when he came home from the vet. He ate his usually hearty dinner and was none the worse, except for occasional moans, which led us to believe he was hurting. That sent his mistress — my wife — Terry, to the medicine cabinet for two aspirin, which we tucked into cream cheese and gave him to eat.

The moaning stopped temporarily, but soon it resumed. So, four hours later, two more aspirin in cream cheese.

Again, no moaning for awhile. Then it began again. And he had those sad, sad eyes.

That's when we figured it all out.

Terry had baked a batch of tollhouse cookies, chock full of chocolate chips. He was stretched out on the floor, with those cookies only a few feet away.

Smuggling Ring Smashed

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty-four women have been arrested, and a smuggling ring that imported $1 million worth of cocaine into the United States each month has been smashed, federal authorities report.

The women, including seven Americans, have been charged with participation in the operation, according to Assistant U.S. Attorney Victor J. Rocco.

Legislative Actions Friday

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, is trying to devise a means of nabbing the people who dump their trash unlawfully with a litter identification bill.

But his efforts were stalled Friday on the House floor when opponents got the bill sent back to a committee for further study.

The bill would allow litter with identifying material, such as a letter with names and addresses, to be used as evidence that the person identified was responsible for the littering.

But House opponents said the bill's provisions could involve innocent parties.

"If would appear this would apply to any sender who puts a return address on a letter," said Rep. George Miller, D-Durham.

Other opponents asked if a candy company would be responsible for candy wrappers, tossed out by a consumer, found in a litter pile.

"I think it could possibly be interpreted that way," Adams said. He wanted the bill to be approved tentatively and then held until the language could be tightened.

But Rep. Parks Helms, D-Mecklenburg, asked that the bill be referred to a judiciary committee for further consideration.

In other legislative developments Friday:

Senate action on a bill that would require all public schools in the state to offer breakfast to students was delayed when the bill was sent to the Appropriations Committee.

Appropriations • Chairman Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, said the measure would require increased administrative costs.

Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, the bill's sponsor, said breakfast programs are now operating in 70 percent of the state's schools. She said the federal government would pay for the new program.

Credit Cards

A bill that would expand and revise state laws governing credit card fraud was filed in the House by Rep. Ralph Edwards, D-Guilford.

Categories of fraud subject to felony prosecution would be broadened under the bill. It would also include new bank debit cards. These are not credit cards but can be used to make drafts from bank accounts.

Testimony

Rep. Parks Helms, D-Mecklenburg, filed a bill that would allow one partner in a marriage to testify against the other. Current law prohibits one spouse from testifying against the other is prohibited by current law.

Tear Gas

A bill that would allow possession of small amounts of tear gas for self defense purposes was filed in the House by Rep. Casper Holroyd, D-Wake. Persons convicted of a felony would be excluded from possessing tear gas under the bill.

Gun Permits

The House killed a Senate-passed measure that would have required persons to obtain weapons permits in their home counties instead of the counties where they purchase the gun.

Threats And Violence Ended In Emergency Room Shooting

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Wilhelmina Turner tells a story of threats and violence that made her separation from her husband "a living hell" that culminated when he shot her in a hospital emergency room a week ago.

Yet Mrs. Turner said earlier this week that her husband does not have mental problems — "He's just crazy jealous, that's all."

The 27-year-old mother of four was recuperating in Moses Cone Hospital with eight .22 caliber bullet wounds, six in her head and two in her right shoulder. Her husband, David Thomas Turner, is charged with two counts of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill.

The Turners were separated in January after six months of marriage.

At the time of the shooting, Turner was out of prison on parole for shooting his first wife in 1971. He is now in Guilford County Jail under $100,000 bond.

About six weeks ago, Mrs. Turner said, Turner showed up at her home in Sedalia and pulled out a .38-caliber pistol, threatening to kill her for "running around."

Mrs. Turner said about a month later, he kidnapped her as she was about to enter Cone Mills at 10:45 p.m. to work the third shift. He drove her to the woods and raped her "about 10 or 15 times in one night at gunpoint."

After that, they went to Turner's parol officer and set up an appointment at the mental health clinic. Everything seemed to be going well for a while, she said, until she woke up one night to find Turner with a gun beside her head.

Her next contact with him came last Saturday, when she and her friend, Anthony Davis, were waiting to fill up the car at a gas station. Turner walked up to the window, asked her to roll it down and when she didn't, pulled a gun from his coat and began firing at her.

Davis rushed Mrs. Turner, with five bullets in her body, to Moses Cone Hospital.

He was standing in the emergency room with Mrs. Turner, Davis said, when Turner walked in. He said Turner wanted to know if his wife was still alive. Davis said he told Turner she was alive but in bad shape. He said Turner told him to get out.

"About 15 people were standing around me on the table when all of a sudden I saw his jacket and shirt," Mrs. Turner said. "He pushed a lady aside and said everybody out."

They fled, she said, "and there I was left at his mercy in the emergency room. He pulled me up by the hospital gown and shot me until the gun wouldn't shoot anymore."

He began bludgeoning her with the pistol butt, she said. "Then a little security guard girl said, 'Drop it,' and it was all over."

Ugandans Rejoice Over New Government

By ANDREW TORCHIA
Associated Press Writer

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Ugandans rejoiced with drums and dancing as the new government was sworn in, spelling an end to eight years of Idi Amin and his notorious death and torture factory.

Tribal musicians brought out the drums and began a dance punctuated with high-pitched cries as thousands of their countrymen and women waved banana fronds, and hugged and kissed each other in jubilation.

The tumult erupted after the Cabinet and Uganda's new president, Yussufu Lule, took the oath of office Friday, asking citizens to "help me erase the traces of eight years of Idi Amin."

Lule and his ministers stood in the hot sun on the steps of the Parliament building, where Chief Justice Sam Wambuzi administered the oath in his scarlet robes and white wig, a reminder of Uganda's British colonial days.

"You have a legal government in office and Amin is now the rebel," Lule declared, as Tanzanian commandos scoured the north and east in search of the ousted president.

Lule, wearing a blue safari suit, called on Amin's forces to surrender and declared, "They have nothing to fight for."

The loudest tumult erupted when Lule asked the crowd to give three cheers for Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere, who sent his army in to depose Amin after Amin's forces invaded Tanzania in October.

"I emphasize that we will not be your masters but your servants. We shall need your support, cooperation and prayers," Lule said.

Lule also appealed to Ugandans to stop looting, but most buildings in the center of Kampala had broken windows, smashed by civilians seeking revenge for eight years of misery under Amin.

When Lule walked down Parliament's steps, women began dancing in ecstasy, and Col. Tito Okello, who led the Tanzanian and Ugandan exile force, was hoisted aloft by the crowd.

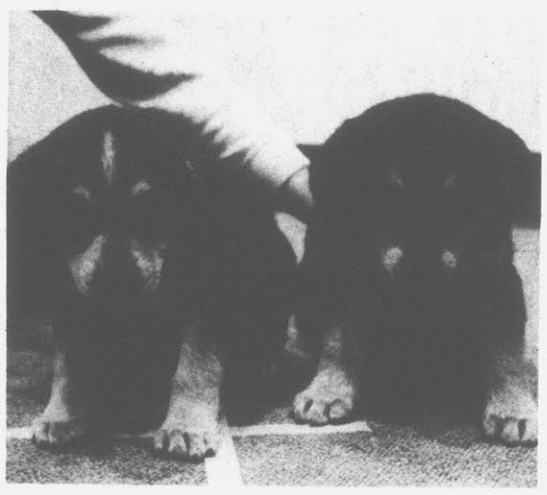

Lule's government has said Amin will be tried for murder and treason if caught and the state radio said he "deserves the gallows" for thousands of killings since ousting President Milton Obote in 1971.

Much of the killing was done at the headquarters of his "State Research Bureau," where the Tanzanians found a handful of emaciated prisoners who survived over a month by gnawing corpses around them.

The triangular, three-story building is adjacent to Amin's lodge on Nakasero Hill, an area of flowering trees and stately buildings. The Tanzanians reached it Wednesday morning.

Outside were a dozen rotting bodies, badly mutilated. There was a drain gutter caked with dried blood. That was where prisoners stood to be shot.

Lynn Anderson Facing A Year Of Expectations

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

When her daughter was born eight years ago, Lynn Anderson recalls, somebody woke her up in the hospital and told her she had a little girl and the No. 1 record on the pop charts.

The child was Lisa. The record was "I Never Promised You a Rose Garden." Miss Anderson has great expectations again. She's expecting her second baby and her Columbia Records LP, "Outlaw Is Just a State of Mind," is No. 52 and her single from it, "Isn't It Always Love?", is No. 30 on the country charts. Both are climbing. Miss Anderson hopes that by the time the baby is born, the records will be high on the pop charts.

When you see the word outlaw in a country album title, you think of people like Waylon Jennings and Willie Nelson, who let whatever rock and pop influences they wish flavor performing that they consider basically country. Some people, especially when that approach started, considered them basically outlaws.

The word outlaw in her new LP just catches Miss Anderson up with her stage performances, which have not been "hard country" for a long time.

"I was born in Fargo, N.D., and moved to near Sacramento when I was 3," Miss Anderson says. "When I was going to school, I listened to the Beach Boys and Elvis

LYNN ANDERSON

Presley. My music is a mixture of pop and country influences.

"I feel my recordings were being presented with a pretty straight country image for a long time, when my stage shows weren't."

Miss Anderson is married to her second husband, Spook Stream, who has an interest in several progressive rock and album-oriented rock radio stations. She has made a breakthrough for country music, at least her own, on those stations.

"They didn't play my music until recently," she says. "I kept giving him a bad time. I was heard there only when I did commercials for a soft drink company and the company would pay for the minute."

The blonde singer never did wear square-dance dresses for performing. "If I'm dressing up and trying to look nice, which is what I do when I go on stage, I watch what fashions are doing. I go a little bit with what is current in fashion, rather than being locked into a country outfit.

"Of course, boots and a cowboy hat are a different thing. If somebody comes to my house, I'm in cowboy boots or bare feet."

Miss Anderson has shown horses since she was 7. "I think I've had six California state championships and six national championships. They're judged events, some on the riders, some on the way the horse performs, some are beauty contests for horses where you lead them in.

"I've had two national championships with reining horses, the last in 1978. They have a set pattern like a figure skater does and they're judged on how precisely and how perfectly they execute the patterns. They do spins and circles and change directions.

"Mostly the agility events are done by quarter horses. I raise quarter horses. We also have cutting horses. I have a world champion cutting horse. They go into a herd of cattle and separate one. They can do it without a bridle. It's a lot of fun.

"I was entered in the Houston Livestock Show a month ago. I went to work my horse a couple of days before it and realized my balance was shot. He'd be turning left and I'd still be going right. I realized my days of that were over until after the baby comes.

"The horse does all the work; all you have to do is hang on. A lot of dipping and dodging goes on."

That much interest and time spent on a hobby is unusual for a musical artist. "A lot of entertainers get so involved in being a star they forget how to be a person," Miss Anderson says. "I have a lot more fun than they do.

"It is frightening to me to see a lot of people who don't do anything else but music," she goes on. "I wonder what they will do when the time comes when people don't buy our records any more. I've tried to be realistic and prepare for that day. The day will come for each and every one of us when we fail to sell records and tickets.

"I better not have forgotten my shorthand at that point."

Miss Anderson's band members tell her she could open a restaurant, since cooking also is an avocation.

Miss Anderson's mother, Liz Anderson, is a writer of country songs. Miss Anderson has been putting one of her mother's songs on each album, though there isn't one on the current LP. There will be again in the future, she says.

Many of her songs she gets from listening to pop singersong writers' records. Karla Bonoff wrote "Isn't It Always Love?". "I first heard her record of it. We had started to record it about a year ago, then I was told Karla was going to release it as a single. Then she didn't, and I cut it in October.

"When I heard 'I Never Promised You a Rose Garden,' which Joe South wrote and recorded, it had been recorded by five people." Miss Anderson's was the huge hit.

She had a No. 1 country hit with "Cry," originally a hit by Johnnie Ray. She did "Listen to a Country Song" by Kenny Loggins and "Come Runnin'" by Van Morrison.

Working with the Carpenters in Los Angeles, she asked Richard Carpenter if his "Top of the World" would be released as a single. He said no, so she cut that. "My record became No. 1 on the country chart and the Carpenters re-recorded it and released it as a single. They got No. 1 on the pop chart."

When she's at home in Lake Charles, La., Miss Anderson says she works harder than when she's on the road. There's family, the horses, cooking, gardening and paperwork. "I have no patience with people who are bored," she says. "One of these days I'm going to write a cookbook. It is always more fun to try to fit more into the hours than it is to not have anything to do with them."

Producers Are Subject To A Change In Tastes

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Television producers, no less than the stars, are subject to the changes in public tastes.

They are typecast, bypassed, trapped by issues. They fall behind the times and fail to adapt to new programming trends.

A producer who one day has a million-dollar income, three shows on the air, and the undying gratitude of the network may suddenly himself personna non grata if the public tires of his brand of drama or comedy.

Program tastes shift as fast as the wind. CBS' barnyard of rural comedies went swiftly with the arrival of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" and "All in the Family." It also signaled the death of the "honey I'm home" situation comedy. Those who couldn't hack the new style were forced to rest on their residuals.

"Laverne and Shirley" and "Three's Company" tolled the arrival of broad comedy (that's not a pun) and sex — and the end of gritty realism comedy. At that point Norman Lear began his withdrawal from television to devote his talents to cinema. As he did, his company's TV fortunes began to falter.

Other producers bit the dust when the Westerns faded. Some were mowed down in the antiviolence movement. It is just as certain that those riding today's crest of inane comedy, sexuality and escapism will one day be on the outside looking in if they can't adapt to future shifts.

"My career has been strange," says Aaron Spelling, a nimble survivor in television's treacherous waters. His shows are "Charlie's Angels," "Starsky and Hutch," "Vega$," "The Love Boat," "Fantasy Island," "Family" and "Friends."

"My first year as a writer I did nothing but anthology. As a producer I did nothing but anthology shows. Then, suddenly, I found myself producing seven Westerns. I got typecast as a Western producer. Every time a new Western came along, I was asked to produce it.

"Then Danny Thomas and I did 'Mod Squad.' For years I was typecast as a cop show producer. It took me seven years to sell my first comedy, 'Love Boat.'

"The last few years have been pleasant. I do a little bit of everything."

Spelling thrived on his ability to adapt. Garry Marshall, on the other hand, became one of TV's hottest poducers because the times caught up with the simple, sweet comedies he has always done.

It happened with "Happy Days," and specifically when the kids discovered the super cool Fonz. It became a phenomenon. "Laverne and Shirley" was spun out of "Happy Days" and became a hit. Another spinoff, "Mork and Mindy," probably will be even bigger. Another Marshall show, "Angie," is already on is way to the top ranks of the ratings.

Grant Tinker, president of MTM Enterprises, has kept his company solvent by moving from comedy to drama with such shows as "Lou Grant" and "The White Shadow." The company was founded on the success of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," but when that type of realistic comedy was no longer saleable, Tinker refused to follow the crowd. Other than Mary's variety show, MTM's only comedy is "WKRP in Cincinnati," which is zanier than anything the company has done before but is still rooted in realism.

Another hot company is Lorimar Productions, which started eight years ago with two partners, a secretary, and a rented office. It had one major asset — "The Waltons."

"We've had a lot of failures and some successes," says president Lee Rich. The successes include "The Waltons," "Eight Is Enough," "Dallas" and "Kaz.' Lorimar is also noted for such distinguished TV features as "Sybil," "Helter Skelter," "Studs Lonigan," "Green Eyes," and "Mr. Horn."

"There's no question, our turning point was 'The Waltons,'" said Rich. "We absolutely didn't have a series in mind when we did the movie 'The Homecoming' for CBS. It was Fred Silverman who suggested it, and then Earl Hamner sat down and wrote four or five scripts.

A former network programming official, who asked not to be identified, says, "Our success typecasts us. It's hard to break out because if you succeed you are in a sense limiting your options.

"If Garry Marshall came to a network with a show called 'Kojak' they'd thank him and assign someone else to produce it. He's known for comedy. If Quinn Martin came in with 'Mork and Mindy' they'd bring in another producer. Quinn got hurt by the antiviolence thing and now he's got only one show, 'Barnaby Jones.'

Spelling says nothing is really ever new. "The thing is to add style to old things. 'Love Boat' is nothing more than an update of 'Oh Susannah' with Gale Storm. After 'Mod Squad' everybody was doing young relevant shows. Look at the imitations of 'Charlie's Angels.' You've got to be there first."

Ensembles Will Give Program On Wednesday

Five student ensembles will present a program of instrumental music Wednesday at 7:30 p. m. in the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall.

The instrumental works to be performed are "Quintet in D Minor" by Franz Danzi, "Fugue in G Minor" by Bach, "Trio V in G" by Mozaft, "Introduction and Rondo" by Gordon Jacob, "Waltz and Beguine" by Robert Roden, and "Allegro Assai" by Mendelssohn. A special feature of the concert will be the performance of "Brass Quintet" by Richard Levinson, graduate trumpet student in the School of Music. Instruments to be performed in the varied ensembles include flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, piano, violin, violoncello, trumpet, trombone and tuba.

British director Ken Russell has captured the spirit of the noted dancer, Isadora Duncan, in a program to be aired Saturday at 10 p. m. Born in San Francisco in 1978, Isadora suffered some early failures as an artist before scoring triumphs in London, Paris, Vienna, Budapest, and finally the United States from 1903 through 1908. A bold, flamboyant innovator, she danced barefoot in long, flowing robes. Through her tours and her dance schools, one near Berlin opened in 1904 and the other in Moscow in 1921, she exerted strong influence over the development of modern dance. Her personal life, riddled with tragedy and scandal, also brought her much attention.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Julie Hicks

A new biography by Robert Conot called A STREAK OF LUCK: THE LIFE AND LEGEND OF THOMAS ALVA EDISON is destined to become the definitive work dealing with the life of a man who was the most prolific inventor in history. The book was exhaustively researched; indeed, the author ploughed through the Edison Archives — not an easy task since more than a million items exist in that collection. This endeavor helped Conot to produce a very human portrait, The myths are stripped away and the real Edison is uncovered. A somewhat different man emerges than the remote and legendary figure we might imagine. Edison's accomplishments are all explored in detail, of course, for he literally gave birth to the electronic age. Yet, other lesser-known but just as interesting facts come to light. Such adjectives as complex, contradictory, ingenious, and ruthless can be used to describe a man who was a pioneer, a visionary, an opportunist, and a showoff. He possessed simultaneously a driving ambition for wealth and passion for invention. Often the two came into conflict. In A STREAK OF LUCK, Conot gives us a thorough and readable biography which exposes the very human Thomas Alva Edison.

In LADD: THE LIFE, THE LEGEND, THE LEGACY OF ALAN LADD, Beverly Linet probes into the public and private life of a Hollywood personality viewed by millions as a "young Greek god." This in depth portrait includes over sixty photographs and is a result of hundreds of interviews with family and friends. It reveals his outstanding success in the world of show business as well as his hangups: the guilt of his mother's suicide, his concern over his shortness, and his unwillingness to take his talent seriously. The author concerns herself with the question of how a man who was so successful could let alcohol ruin his health and eventually contribute to his death. He was one of Hollywood's biggest stars, but he died alone at the age of fifty from a combination of pills and alcohol. Linet quotes several of Ladd's fellow performers and their opinions helped her in the development of the book — Darrell Zanuck: "There aren't any box office stars anymore except John Wayne and Alan Ladd"; Van Heflin: "Alan was far better actor than he would ever believe himself to be...God how I loved that man!"; Virginia Mayo: "I wasn't conscious of his height...I was conscious of his fabulous beauty"; and his agent-wife Sue Carol Ladd: "Alan Ladd is a big star to everyone else in the world except himself."

Tennessee To Fight Unversity Merger

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The University of Tennessee says it will go to the nation's highest court to fight a court-ordered merger of its Nashville campus with predominately black Tennessee State University.

On Friday, the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati upheld a Nashville federal court's 1977 ruling that the two state universities in Nashville constitute a racially divided dual system of higher education.

"Because the first merger steps are scheduled for implementation on July 1, we shall move immediately to seek a stay of the merger order until the appeal is heard by the Supreme Court," UT President Edward Boling said in Knoxville.

The U.S. Office of Civil Rights says an ultimate ruling by the Supreme Court could affect at least 10 other states accused of maintaining dual systems of higher education stemming from the days when racial segregation was legal.

The appeals court ruling Friday affirmed the January 1977 ruling by the late U.S. District Court Judge Frank Gray Jr. of Nashville that the continued existence of white-dominated UT-Nashville unconstitutionally hampers the ability of predominantly black Tennessee State to attract white students.

The University of Tennessee contended the racial composition of Tennessee State's enrollment was the result of student choice and not any current unconstitutional act or policy. Gray, however, ordered the merger, saying the state's efforts to gradually desegregate the school were unsuccessful.

In a 2-1 ruling, the appeals court agreed with Gray that the mere existence of a predominantly black university was not the reason for the court-ordered merger.

"It was the failure of the defendant to dismantle a statewide dual system, the heart of which was an all-black TSU, which was to be a continuing constitutional violation," the appeals court said.

Despite reported efforts to desegregate the schools, state records show white enrollment at Tennessee State actually has decreased from 18.6 percent to 16.9 percent since Gray's ruling. Meanwhile, black enrollment at night school-oriented UT-Nashville has continued to hover around 15 percent the past three years.

The UT-Nashville campus is part of the statewide University of Tennessee system. Tennessee State is part of the Board of Regents system of colleges and universities across the state. The regents and UT trustees often compete for state tax dollars.

Gray ordered that UT-Nashville be merged into Tennessee State under the direction of the Board of Regents. Just last month, the board named TSU President Frederick Humphries to head the combined school, which will retain the name Tennessee State.

Boling said his staff has already been instructed to prepare an appeal under a UT Board of Trustees resolution two years ago giving the administration carte blanche in fighting the merger.

"They've been so recalcitrant the past 10 years, I'm not at all surprised they're continuing that policy," said George Barrett, a Nashville lawyer who filed the 1968 suit seeking the merger on behalf of a then-TSU history teacher who is now a lawyer in Washington.

Flee Caribean Volcano

By DANIEL DROSDOFF

KINGSTOWN, St. Vincent (UPI) — Mt. Soufriere volcano shot mushroom clouds of hot ashes, smoke and fire thousands of feet into the air Saturday, blackening the sky for miles around and fanning fears of a major eruption that could force evacuation all 100,000 residents of this Caribbean island.

The 4,000-foot volcano, which killed 2,000 people in 1902 but has been dormant since 1971, rumbled to life at dawn Friday, belching clouds of choking fumes and ash. A number of stronger eruptions followed, accompanied by subterranean explosions that shook the 18-by-11-mile island, and molten lava began snaking down the slopes of the volcano.

Government officials estimated about 10,000 persons already had been evacuated from the Mt. Soufriere area, but a visit to the town of Georgetown, on the volcano's lower eastern slopes, showed hundreds of persons remained behind.

There was no immediate report of any casualties. The State Department in Washington said two children had died, possibly suffocated by toxic fumes, but those reports could not be confirmed here.

Premier Milton Cato has declared an emergency and appealed for international help.

The United States and Trinidad sent in relief supplies by sea and air. A U.S. relief specialist and two vulcanologists also were on the way. A French frigate arrived Saturday with 1,000 cots and 1,500 blankets.

U.S. relief supplies were being sent in aboard C-130 transports from Panama.

Three U.S. coast guard cutters were diverted from their Caribbean patrols to the 150-square-mile island to help in the evacuation if necessary. Coast Guard transport planes were reported standing by for any emergency.

The Coast Guard Vigilant was due to arrive Saturday night. The cutters Gallatin and Dallas were due Sunday and Monday.

"If things get really bad," a Coast Guard spokesman said in Miami, the cutters "will take people to other islands."

In the meantime, he added, they will handle requests from local authorities to help people who may be stranded on the northern end of the island or attempting to flee by boat off the northern coast.

Brian Moss, an official of the U.S. Agency for International Development, said all Americans on the island were believed safe, but added, "This could die off or it could really blow and create a diaster of major proportions."

The goverment mobilized all island doctors, nurses and police vehicles and designated police stations and other public building as gathering points in the event of a decision to evacuate all the island's 100,000 residents.

Most homes in Georgetown near the volcano were closed and shuttered, and cars were covered by heavy coats of black ash. Small rocks hurled thousands of feet into the air by the eruptions littered the streets of Georgetown.

The residents who remained behind covered their faces with handkerchiefs to protect themselves from the fumes.

"Some people are simply refusing to move," said Owen Sutherland, the owner of a trucking firm in Georgetown.

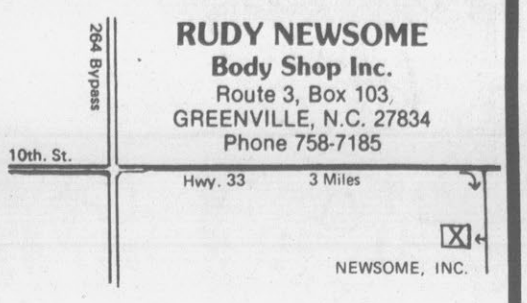

"This town will be gone in three days," he said. "I'm trying to convince everybody to move but some just won't go."

The volcano is about 30 miles north of Kingstown, capital of this British associated state in the Windward islands.

Despite the threat of a catastrophe, tourists continued to fly into St. Vincent from neighboring Barbados even though it was being showered by volcanic dust from the eruptions 100 miles away.

Australia's Great Barrier Reef is not a continuous single reef, but a collection of barrier reefs, coral cays and rock islands all interlaced with lagoons and fringing reefs that stretches some 1,250 miles off the coast of Queensland.

Ifaga Is Law In Samoa

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL
Assoiated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — Not so long ago, Larry Tiffany had never heard of the Ifaga — something you find by "turning left" at Hawaii. Nor did he know anything about the influence of Matai chieftains on law.

All that has changed.

Tiffany, a University of Denver law professor, and other American legal experts have been concerning themselves with these matters since February 1978.

That's when they got the job of writing a legal code for American Samoa, a cluster of South Pacific islands supervised by the U.S. Department of the Interior. The job was to usher island society into modern jurisprudence — and on the way, to cross thousands of miles from Colorado, where law first appeared at the point of a gun.

American Samoa has a legislature — the Fono — a governor and a judiciary. But it lacks a comprehensive legal code. What code now exists is based on common law and tribal custom.

The citizens of American Samoa can change that in July by adopting a 250-page set of laws compiled by Tiffany and the others on a $16,500 grant from the U.S. Law Enforcement Administration.

The legal code is based on one from Missouri, which Tiffany said is among the most comprehensive, providing a police manual, models for charges and procedures, and detailed criminal codes.

And, he added, "Why reinvent the wheel?"

But there are important differences between the Missouri system and his, Tiffany said, including a compromise aimed at dealing with Ifaga, a ritual that would likely bring chaos to American courtrooms.

Briefly, Ifaga — pronounced Ifanga — applies when a member of a family tribe commits an offense against a member of different tribe. In such cases, members of the offender's tribe gather at the hut of the injured party and remain until their tribal apology is accepted.

The seriousness of the offense determines the vigil's length, but Ifaga rarely is used beyond simple assault or theft, Tiffany said.

"The Samoan judges that we talked to thought it would be double jeopardy if somebody was tried after that ceremony was performed and accepted," Tiffany said.

So Tiffany worked out a compromise with the help of Jerry Sherk, a former Denver University law student sent to Samoa to study customs.

Under Tiffany's proposed code — outlined for the Samoans in February — a person convicted of a crime for which Ifaga had been used would have his charge and subsequent sentence reduced by one degree.

Tiffany said it was "very quiet" in the Samoan judges' chambers when he raised the issue of Ifaga. "I told them I realized I was encroaching on their culture and I was embarrassed even to discuss it with them. But I felt we had to do something about it."

The University of Denver's involvement with American Samoa began when a university law professor, John Carver, was appointed acting attorney general of the islands, whose principal city is Pago Pago — pronounced Pango Pango — on the island of Tutuilla.

In February 1978, a U.S. District Court ruled that the right to jury trial should be extended to Samoa despite fears that the influence of tribal chieftains — Matai — could render such a system meaningless.

Carver, who has since returned to the law school here, invited then acting law school dean Tiffany to lecture on the intricacies of trial by jury and to do it in Pago Pago.

"You get there by going to Honolulu and turning left for five hours," Tiffany said.

Instead of the grass-huts society he'd expected, Tiffany found "something in between the Margaret Mead image and downtown Denver. The women really do wear dresses and they don't go around bare-breasted."

It's a small society, but one in need of a written body of law, Tiffany said. "Even though there are only about 30,000 people, you've got to have the same laws as if you had 30 million people."

Ed Sneed Forges Five-Shot Margin

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Ed Sneed, calm and composed under the greatest stress of his golfing life, strode through bright southern sunshine to a 3-under-par 69 and established a commanding 5-shot lead Saturday in the 43rd Masters.

Sneed, a journeyman pro who has won three times in 11 years on the tour, watched in something approaching detached interest as his would-be challengers either failed to make a major move or fell victim to the subtle tests of the famed Augusta National Golf Club.

While Tom Watson, the man deemed most likely to win this event, had his adventures on the back-side par 5s; while mighty Jack Nicklaus failed to get it going; while Craig Stadler went from bogey to bogey to watery double bogey, Sneed quietly put together a 54-hole total of 204, a distant 12 shots under par and took control.

"What it amounts to," analyzed Nicklaus, "if Ed plays well tomorrow, I can't catch him. Neither can anyone else. If he plays well, he wins. It's that simple.

"Ed's a good player. He hasn't won a lot and he hasn't won in the majors, but if he can keep this up, he'll run away from everyone else."

But, he said, that isn't necessarily so.

"If he should slip, well, I'm only 3 shots out of second place," Nicklaus said. "If I shoot 65 I could go past everybody."

Watson agreed.

"For me to win, I'd have to have an exceptional round and he'd have to play poorly," Tom said.

"He's swinging the club very well, playing very well. I don't expect him to collapse."

Watson, shaken a bit after a shot hit a woman spectator in the mouth, managed a 70 and was tied for second with the chunky Stadler at 209. Stadler had to rally for a 74 after hitting his second shot in the water on No. 11.

Fuzzy Zoeller, a hard-hitting first-timer in the Masters, and Bruce Lietzke, the first-round leader, were next at 210. Lietzke, who blew to a 75 in the rain and storms that delayed Friday's second round, shot a 68 and Zoeller powered his way to a 69.

"It just confirms that I'm a fair-weather player," said Lietzke, who had a 67 in the sunshine of the first round. "I've always known it. All my good rounds have been in good weather and I've had a lot of bad ones in bad weather."

Tom Kite, Australian Jack Newton, Ray Floyd, Leonard Thompson and Miller Barber were at 211. Thompson and Floyd shot a 73, Kite 68 and Newton 69.

Barber, the 48-year-old veteran called "Mr. X" by his fellow golfers, was one of 12 players stranded by darkness on the course Friday night after play had been interrupted two hours by a violent thunderstorm and a tornado warning.

He had three holes to go to finish his second round, and finished it off in 64, matching the record on the 7,040-yard Augusta National Golf Club course. After a brief break, the old pro went out again for the third round and was at 2 under par a couple of times, then bogeyed the last two holes for a score of par 72.

Pirates Rally On Best's Hit To Nip Braves

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

For two straight games, East Carolina's Butch Davis had been the hero, knocking in the game-winning runs in extra inning affairs.

Last night, Davis was limbering up in the on-deck circle when Billy Best did the job just a shade earlier, as the Pirates came from behind to nip Pembroke State, 3-2.

For East Carolina, it was their sixth straight win, and marked the fifth time during that streak that they had rallied for the win.

It didn't take extra innings this time, as Best came up with a one-out, two-on double that scored Jerry Carraway from second base.

Parker Davis hurled the victory, pitching a neat four-hitter for his fifth win against no defeats. The first run off him was unearned, but the second came on a dead-center home run by George Mattonelli.

"Parker threw a good game for us tonight," Coach Monte Little said. "He took his time and worked well throughout the game.

"You know, they used their two best pitchers against us tonight. I'm real happy about that," he added. Kenny Hedgepeth started, but was relieved by Mike Baldwin. Combined they had a 12-2 record going into the game, accounting for over half of the Braves' 21 victories. Baldwin took the loss, his first in eight decisions.

The 12th-ranked (NAIA) Braves broke one string of the Pirates. Their first run came in the third inning, and it marked the first time that any team, in 27 games, had scored a run in that frame against the Bucs. It was unearned, so the Pirates can still claim no unearned runs through 27 games in that frame.

The Braves threatened in the second, when Dave McAllister got a two-out single, stole second and went to third on an error on the play.

But it was in the third before they finally broke the ice. Ron Seidel led off with a walk and Robbie Bennett reached on a bunt to the third-base side of the mound, with Seidel going all the way to third when the ball was overthrown at first. The next batter grounded into a double play, but Seidel scored from third on the play.

The other Brave run came in the fourth on Mattonelli's home run that went out in dead center field.

After that, only one other Brave reached second base, in the eighth, when an error, a fielder's choice and a hit-batsman put runners on first and second.

The Pirates had a chance in the first, as Billy Best reached on a slow-roller down the first base line. He stole second and moved to third on the second out of the inning, but died there.

In the sixth, a single by Butch Davis and a walk to Max Raynor put two on with two out, and sent Hedgepeth to the showers.

Finally, in the seventh, the Pirates came through to score twice and tie it up. Raymie Styons led off, reaching on a hit to deep short. After one out, Bob Neff doubled to right center, and a wild pitch on the third strike against Mike Sorrell scored Styons and put runners on the corners. Best then hit a sacrifice fly to score Neff with the tieing run.

The leadoff man in the eighth, Macon Moye, singled, and was sacrificed to second, but two strikeouts ended that threat.

Then, in the ninth, the Pirates got the winning talley.

Both Best and Raynor had two hits to lead the Pirates to the win. The victory raised the Pirate record to 18-10 overall, while Pembroke State fell to 21-10 on the season.

The two teams meet again today at 1:30 p.m. in a doubleheader. The Pirates are then off until Wednesday, when they host N.C. State in a doubleheader at Harrington Field.

Palmer Legend Built In Augusta

"This is a new one, but the first jacket I ever won still fits — size 42 long."

Palmer, who will be 50 in September, was poised and pleasant as friends by the dozens passed by to commiserate with him over failure to survive the cut in the 43rd Masters Golf Tournament — his 25th.

He shot the first 36 holes in 146. The cut was 145, lowest ever.

"I knew when my 20-foot putt on the final hole Friday spun out of the cup I wouldn't make it," he said. "I am disappointed, naturally, but not distressed.

"I was playing the best golf I've played in quite a while. I played the first five holes in five over par and the next 31 in 3 under. That's not bad. It just wasn't good enough."

The graying charger out of Latrobe, Pa., is Mr. Masters. He emerged as a skinny U. S. amateur champion to play in his first Masters in 1955. He won four championships — 1958, 1960, 1962 and 1964 — and proceeded to build a lasting love affair with this great fairway spectacle among the Georgia pines.

Asked about the depth of this love affair, Palmer flashed that boyish smile and said:

"I've been around here so long, I think the fans feel like I am one of them. I've always talked to them while I was playing and even after I was through. I know almost everybody by sight, hundreds by name."

Palmer still looks great. His hair is thinning a little and shows flecks of gray. His face is deeply tanned. He is as lean and fit as a football halfback.

It was here that he built his legend, creating his loyal and often rambunctious "Arnie's Army," delighting galleries and TV viewers, particularly housewives, with his charm.

His come-from-behind charges became patent — the jerk on his gloves, the tug at his trousers and the exhortation to his caddie, "The game is on!" No one could make women sigh just by watching an airplane fly overhead.

It was Palmer's charisma plus the advent of TV, they say, that sent the game on its multimillion-dollar spiral.

"I will never forget my first Masters," Arnie said. "As amateur champion, I was paired with Byron Nelson. I suppose my greatest thrill was winning my first one in 1958. In 1960 I won by only a stroke, in 1962 in a playoff. I really was happy when I managed to win in 1964 by six shots."

A reporter asked Palmer if he planned to compete on the senior circuit after he reaches his 50th birthday next Sept. 10.

Arnie laughed and replied, "I'm not through with the junior circuit yet. I plan to play at Houston and Dallas. If my game is still going good, I will point to the PGA." It's the only major title he hasn't won.

Palmer said golf was more fun now than in his early days.

"Then, it was an absolute necessity that I win," he added. "It was work. I couldn't take it casually. Now I enjoy it."

If there was any advice he could give young players, he said, it would be that they be more outgoing.

"I realize the money is very important," he said. "But it's important to relate to the public and create a personality."

That's what Palmer has done better than anyone.

Bullets Host Hawks In NBA Title Defense

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — After a week's layoff with a first-round bye, the Washington Bullets open their National Basketball Association playoff schedule Sunday against the Atlanta Hawks, the first team they beat last year on the way to the league championship.

The Bullets earned the bye through winning the Atlantic Division title in the regular season. They also secured the homecourt advantage throughout the playoffs with the NBA's best record, at 54-28.

Injuries plagued Washington through the final weeks of the regular season, with starters Mitch Kupchak, Kevin Grevey, Wes Unseld and Tom Henderson all on the bench at one time or another.

A torturous schedule, with six games in eight days, also strained the Bullets, and they dropped their last three regular-season games.

Coach Dick Motta, however, said Saturday that all of the injured players appeared all right and expected to be ready for the Hawks.

Atlanta finished strong and swept the first-round miniseries from Houston, 2-0. The Hawks advanced with a 100-91 victory over the Rockets in Atlanta Friday night.

That triumph came without the direction of Coach Hubie Brown, who was ejected early in the second period after being slapped with a pair of technical fouls. Assistants Frank Layden and Mike Fratello took over.

Motta, who this season became the third coach in NBA history to record 500 career victories, said he considered the Hawks a team that relies on team play and toughness rather than the individual exploits of such stars as Houston's Moses Malone and Calvin Murphy.

Ott Leads Pirates

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Though he had a measure of sympathy for picketing umpires, catcher Ed Ott of the Pittsburgh Pirates went to work on St. Louis Cardinals pitching Saturday.

"The umpires stopped us at the gate and gave us little folders," said Ott, who drove in four runs with a homer and a triple to lead Pittsburgh to a 7-4 victory Saturday in a nationally-televised baseball game.

About 30 major league umpires from both leagues were joined by members of local labor unions in the pregame picketing. The umps want more money, and Ott can understand that.

"I'll just say they're underpaid and leave it at that," said Ott, whose batwork supported the six-hit pitching of Ed Whitson and reliever Grant Jackson. "They (the umpires) are away from their families more than we're away from our families. They don't have any home stands so to speak. They're on the road constantly ... I definitely think they're underpaid."

Ott has a labor problem of his own. Despite his play Saturday, he'll probably be benched Sunday in favor of right-handed hitter Steve Nicosia. And Ott doesn't appreciate being platooned.

"I don't have to like it — but I have to accept it," he said. "Maybe someday I'll make somebody believe I can start against right-handers and left-handers. But if we keep on winning with the lineups we're throwing against them, I'll be completely satisfied. I'd like to put that (World Series) ring on at the end of the year and collect that check."

Whitson, used solely in relief last season after two Pirate starts in 1977, checked the Cardinals on five hits over the first eight innings. He was relieved by Grant Jackson with none out in the ninth after allowing a walk and the sixth Cardinal hit. Jackson gave up the Cardinals' last run on Garry Templeton's sacrifice fly.

A double by Dave Parker and a single by John Milner drove in two Pirate runs in the first inning off loser Bob Forsch, and Milner's sacrifice fly made it 3-1 in the third inning.

St. Louis' Keith Hernandez singled home a fifth-inning run, and an error by Milner at first base allowed the tying run in the sixth inning.

Working Ump May Walk Out

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Ted Hendry, the only umpire currently working under his contract with the American League, isn't happy about it and is thinking of quitting.

Hendry, 38, told NBC-TV's Barry Tompkins in an interview Saturday that he was working only because attorney Richie Phillips, legal counsel to the umpires union, had advised him to do so.

"Richie Phillips advised that I work with the contract but I didn't want to," said Hendry, who sat wearing a sign which said: "I'm umpin' today's game but I hate it. "The amateur umps are incompetent and it's unfair to fans and to us and to the players. But I will still follow Richie Phillips' advice."

Hendry said the only reason he is working is because his fellow umpires, on strike since the beginning of spring training, support him.

"They're backing me 100 percent," said Hendry. "But it's a disgrace to all concerned. In Seattle, the unpires are afraid and don't want to work.

"We need the Jerry Neudeckers, the Marty Springsteads, the Ed Vargos and Doug Harveys. It's brutal working with these incompetent amateur umpires."

Galindez Regains WBA Crown

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Rugged Victor Galindez ripped Mike Rossman with left uppercuts to the head and regained the World Boxing Association light-heavyweight championship when Rossman was unable to answer the bell for the 10th round because of an injured right hand Saturday.

Promoter Bob Arum said just seconds after the fight ended that Rossman had broken the hand. Referee Stanley Christodoulou of South Africa said Rossman's corner asked him to stop the fight.

It goes into the books as a 10th-round knockout for Galindez, and was a sudden end to a wild fight which saw Rossman's brother throw punches at Galindez after the fourth round.

In the fourth round, Galindez hurt Rossman with a right hand and had him in trouble at the bell. When the bell sounded, the Argentine kept on punching, and after being sent to his corner by the referee, Rossman's brother Andy dashed across the ring, shouted at Galindez and shook his fist at him.

From the fourth round on, Galindez — who lost the title to Rossman when he was stopped on cuts in the 13th round last Sept. 15 — was in charge of the fight. Most of the crowd at the Superdome rooted Rossman on, but he simply couldn't handle Galindez's firepower.

In the fifth round, Galindez shook Rossman on three occasions with rights after left hooks. Galindez suffered a cut above his right eye, but this time the cut didn't bother him.

In the seventh round, Galindez, who weighed 174¼, the same as Rossman, hurt the defending champion from Turnersville, N.J., with a hook that turned him around.

Galindez followed with two smashing rights to the head and then had the best of a toe-to-toe exchange that lasted about 20 seconds.

Three smashing hooks just before the bell had Rossman in trouble in the eighth round, and then Galindez had Rossman in real trouble in the ninth.

In that round, two ripping hooks slashed a cut over Rossman's right eye at about the midway point. Rossman fought back for the remainder of the round, but Galindez hurt him on at least two occasions.

A dejected Rossman, making his second defense of the 175-pound title, said: "I'm not sure when it (the injury) happened. In the sixth or seventh round I think, I hit him with a right hand and I felt it throb. I tried to keep going, take a chance with the pain."

But the pain became unbearable and the 22-year-old Rossman had to give up the title he held less than a year. He broke the hand once before in his career and said he has had trouble with it for two or three years.

The 30-year-old Galindez, who had said he would quit if he lost, now has a record of 52-6-4 and the title he first won in 1974.

Johnstone's Grand Slam Lifts Yankees

american league

CHICAGO (AP) — Pinch-hitter Jay Johnstone's grand slam home run in the eighth inning lifted the New York Yankees to an 8-5 victory over the Chicago White Sox Saturday.

Dick Tidrow, the third pitcher used by the Yankees, picked up his first victory of the year but left the game after the White Sox put two men on base with one out in the ninth. Ron Guidry, last year's Cy Young Award winner, made his first relief appearance in two seasons and got Jorge Orta to hit into a game-ending double play to earn the save.

Dawson Leads Expos

MONTREAL (AP) — Andre Dawson triggered a two-run sixth with a leadoff homer and Ross Grimsley and Elias Sosa teamed up on a six-hitter as the Montreal Expos defeated the Chicago Cubs 2-0 in their home baseball opener Saturday.

Grimsley, 1-0, had been locked in a pitching battle with Cubs starter Rich Reuschel, 0-2, before Dawson slammed his second home run of the year over the wall in left field.

It was only the third Expos' hit, but Rodney Scott and Warren Cromartie followed with singles and then pulled a double steal. Ellis Valentine struck out and Tony Perez was walked intentionally to load the bases for Gary Carter, who hit a sacrifice fly to center fielder Jerry Martin to score Scott.

Grimsley, who last season became the first 20-game winner in Expos history, struck out one and walked two before needing last-out relief help from Sosa.

Giants 2, Astros 1

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — San Francisco's Vida Blue pitched out of trouble several times and beat the Houston Astros 2-1 Saturday to become the major leagues' first three-game winner of the season.

It was the third complete game in three starts for Blue, who struck out eight batters and walked none.

The Giants had only four hits in the game, and three came in the fourth inning when they scored both their runs. Darrell Evans drove in the first run with an infield out and Mike Ivie followed with a run-scoring triple off Houston starter Vern Ruhle, 0-2.

Terry Whitfield opened the Giants' fourth with a single to right and after Bill Madlock lined out to left, Jack Clark singled to center. Whitfield took third on a passed ball and scored when Evans grounded into a forceout.

Blue allowed nine hits, including three for extra bases, but shut out the Astros until the eighth. Houston scored on singles by Terry Puhl and Craig Reynolds and a sacrifice fly by rookie Jeff Leonard.

Fallen Saints Rehabilitating

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — With every groan from the two burly men torturing themselves on the sophisticated weight training devices, the New Orleans Saints move closer to the elusive dream of a winning season.

Both men are rebuilding shattered knees that gave way in the third National Football League game of the season for the Saints. Both say they're counting the days until training camp opens in July.

First to go down was All-Pro guard Conrad Dobler, who fell in a freak accident in the open field. Minutes later, it was his running mate at guard, Emanuel Zanders, who got hurt when a player fell against his knee. Both underwent surgery and began the painful process of rehabilitation.

"It's coming along good. Excellent," Dobler said in a telephone interview from his home in Laramie, Wyo.

"Personally, I feel like it's moving pretty slow, but the doctors and people who know about things like this say it's coming along okay."

He said he's concentrating on strength work, making the weight training machines clank and whirr until he can hardly stand up after a workout. He said his knee still swells some when he runs a lot.

Zanders, however, said his knee's as good as ever.

"I feel like a whole man again," Zanders said. "I've been playing basketball with no problems. I can pull with no problems. I'm working on strength and endurance.

"No pain and no swelling. I'm knocking on wood, because I could go out tomorrow and do one lap and have it swell up like a balloon."

Tar Heels Edge Wolfpack

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina capitalized on a walk, an N.C. State error and Jim Atkinson's single to score the winning run in a 9-7, 11-inning Atlantic Coast Conference baseball victory over the Wolfpack Saturday.

Atkinson, who had three singles for the game, drove home the winner after pinch-hitter Lloyd Brewer had worked N.C. State relief pitcher John Walker for a base on balls to open the 11th inning. He had reached second on Walker's throwing miscue on an attempted sacrifice by P.J. Gay.

Gay later scored on Craig Shumock's ground out to give the Tar Heels an insurance run.

Greg Norris, the fourth Tar Heel pitcher, received credit for the victory, hurling two-and-a-third scoreless innings to level his record at 4-4.

Namath Likes Florida

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Broadway Joe, whose public was excited as much by his off-field exploits as by what he did on the football field, is now Broward County Joe, and a little tamer.

"We change, hopefully for the best, over the years," said Joe Namath, who traded the concrete canyons of New York City for the sandy beaches of Fort Lauderdale. "My life is more comfortable here. I like the outdoors. I'm not searching for answers or seeking as many adventures as I did when I was a younger fellow."

It hasn't been too long since Namath was thrilling football fans with his on-field exploits as New York Jets quarterback and titillating them with his offfield exploits in New York City's bars.

But at age 35, over a year since his retirement after an unsuccesssful stint with the Los Angeles Rams, Namath maintains a low profile while living in a relatively modest penthouse here.

"He was Broadway Joe," said former Coach Weeb Ewbank. "But today Joe's more of a businessman. He's real sharp-looking, real — poised. He's matured."

Despite the failure of his television series, The Waverly Wonders, Namath gets enough work co-hosting televised sports events and making commercials. He also recently opened a Bachelor's III bar here.

"I have a different style than I did when I was working and living in New York," Namath said. "I used to come here for a few months because the doctor said a warm climate would be conducive to good health. But now I live here. I may have a house in California, but this is my home."

He owns a 21-foot whaler, "A Lotta Heart," and does a lot of fishing with his father.

His tan legs retain the scars of the knee and hamstring problems that marred the end of his career, and he is bothered by periodic backaches.

"I was once asked what my most taken-for-granted luxury was and I couldn't answer right away. But I've found that it's my health. That's my No. 1 priority," he said.

Toward that end, his diet consists of Oriental fish and vegetables, he no longer smokes, he stopped chewing tobacco and he says he's only downed nine ounces of wine in the last year.

Rams Nip Sanderson

ROCKY MOUNT — Greene Central nipped Raleigh Sanderson 2-1 in the Rocky Mount Invitational yesterday, while Wilson Hunt defeated Williamston 18-14.

Jeff Scott hit a solo homer in the fourth inning and then scored on a single by Chip Hardy in the sixth as the Rams defeated Sanderson. The only Sanderson run came in the seventh after the losers had two outs and nobody on. They left the bases loaded.

Hardy was 2-3 for the Rams in the game, while Mike Cody was 3-3 for Sanderson. The win raised the Greene Central record to 8-4. They will face Northern Nash, winner over Oxford Webb in the first round, on Monday.

Hunt grabbed the lead against Williamston with five runs in the first and never lost it, although Williamston did battle back to tie it.

L. Deans walked and M. Wells singled with both scoring on a double by Boyette. Wright walked and he and Boyette scored when Lewis was safe on an error. Another error, as R. Deans reached, let Lewis score.

Hunt pushed over three more in the second and one in the third, while the Tigers picked up two in the second, five in the third and one each in the third and fourth to tie it at 9-9. But two by Hunt in the sixth and seven more in the seventh won it. Williamston got four in the seventh before finally bowing.

Williamston will now face the loser of the Southern Nash-Rocky Mount game, played Saturday night.

Lady Bucs Disappointing

CHAPEL HILL — East Carolina's women's track team had a disappointing showing yesterday in the 17th annual Carolina Relays.

Competing in a field of eight teams, the Lady Pirates could manage but two first-place finishes. Roz Major won the long jump with a leap of 18-8¼, breaking her varsity record of 18-5¾, Cookie McPhatter took the 800-meter run in 2:15.0.

The Bucs had a pair of second-place efforts. Maria Gudjohnsen was runner-up to Major in the long jump with a 17-9¾ showing, while the 400 relay team of Dawn Henderson, Catharine Suggs, Major and Gudjohnsen was second in :48.4.

ECU's Elaine Davis was fourth in the shot at 35-11½, Suggs was fourth in the 100 in :12.74 and Linda Mason was fifth in the 3,000 in 10:59.

Coach Laurie Arrants was not extremely pleased with her team's performance and was wary of the in-state teams her squad must face in the NCAIAW championship meet in two weeks.

"Carolina and St. Augustines looked strong today. I will have to do some manipulating of personnel, doubling up in events, for us to be in contention in the state meet. The other teams just have more people than we do."

Sneed Holds Lead

"I didn't have it all that close to the hole and I missed the few opportunities I had," he said.

He three-putted twice, once for par on the long 15th, and missed six putts of 12 feet or less.

"I just couldn't make anything happen," he said.

Lanny Wadkins, the only two-time winner on the tour this year, also was at 212 after a 70. Lee Trevino shot 70-214 and was out of it again in his chase for the only major title that has eluded him. Hubert Green was 72-215, four-time Masters runnerup Tom Weiskopf 71-216 and defending champion Gary Player of South Africa was 74-217.

Sneed, tied with Stadler for the lead at the end of 36 holes, took sole control of the top spot with a chip and a 15-foot birdie putt on the second hole.

He scored his first bogey of the tournament on the fifth hole, missing the green and chipping poorly, but Stadler also bogeyed and Sneed retained the lead.

The smooth, disciplined Sneed also made birdie-4 on the eighth and, with Stadler continuing to have his problems, had a 3-shot lead at the turn.

He expanded that with a gorgeous shot to within 3-4 feet of the flag on the picturesque 12th, considered by many to be the finest par-3 in golf. He made the putt for birdie and almost smiled.

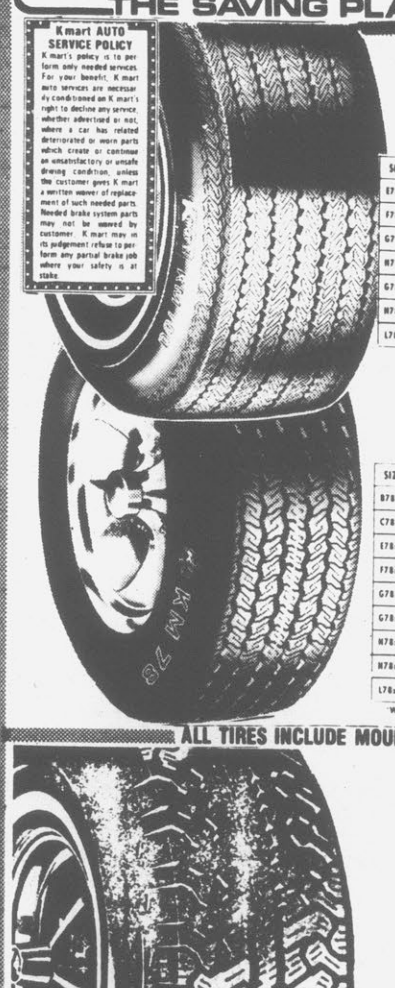

Melvin Takes 2nd

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Otis Melvin's second-place finish in the invitational 200 meters was the top East Carolina performance in the Dogwood Relays here yesterday.

Melvin ran the event in :21.11, while Marvin Rankins had a :13.8 clocking in the 110 high hurdles to take fifth place. The Pirate 1,600 relay team was also fifth in 3:05.84.

Other Pirates who did not place in the final standings were Valentino Robinson with a :14.4 time in the 100 highs, Bill Mills with a 3:53.25 in the 1,500 and Tony McKoy with a :53.21 in the intermediate hurdles.

Racing's Ralph Moody May Have Solved Energy Crisis With Fuel-Stingy Engine

By JERRY GARRETT
AP Motorsports Writer

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A spoon, please, gentlemen.

Prepare to eat your words.

You say the sport hasn't contributed anything worthwhile to the auto industry since the rear view mirror.

You say it's an inexcusable waste of gasoline.

The 60-year-old Moody, one half of the legendary Holman-Moody team that was a terror on the stock car circuit through the heyday of the Ford factory efforts, has put a lifetime of mechanical knowledge gleaned from his racing career into creating what even his critics are now hailing as "The Car of the Century."

From his modest garage south of here in tiny Oak Hill, Moody may have come up with the biggest breakthrough to date in the energy crisis.

In tests recently at Daytona Beach Community College, Moody's 1979 Mercury Capri test car got an astounding 84 miles to a gallon. The skeptical test supervisor, Bill Gordon, who has supervised Environmenta l Protection Agency fuel economy tests before, couldn't believe it.

"It is the car of the century," Gordon said enthusisatically after the test. "Fuel consumption is incredible, the exhaust is clean, and the car handles well on the road."

"Actually the exhaust is four times cleaner than anything on the road today," Moody corrected. "It runs like a damn hot rod and we've only just scratched the surface on fuel mileage."

Moody said a model that gets over 100 miles per gallon is not impossible. He could put the concept into a smaller, lighter car and come up with "something that gets 140-150 miles per gallon."

This is no design exercise, though. It's not the pet project of some absent-minded professor. This isn't any graduate student project for some university.

This car could be in production in 40-60 days, available on dealer showrooms.

"We're ready to go through complete EPA certification now," Moody said.

Moody, who sold his interest in the Charlotte, N.C.-based Holman-Moody operation two years ago after helping get Janet Guthrie's career off the ground, said the car started out as a project for Hot Rod Magazine, using a Shelby Cobra design.

"But then we decided why not try it in something relevant? An American passenger car," he said. "We took a four-cylinder Perkins block, converted it to diesel fuel, turbocharged it, and built a special clutch, transmission and rear end setup."

The Perkins is basically a marine engine. There is an historical precedent there. The venerable Offenhauser, which has ruled the Indianapolis 500 since the 1930s, started out in a boat.

"We still haven't got the optimum of what we want. When we finally come up with the production car we're trying to get, we know we can get even better mileage," he said.

Into three figures?

"Yep," he said confidently.

The project quickly gained the interest and support of Lincoln-Mercury, and Moody plans to build his initial run of 2,000 engines for their Capri. The same number of Monarchs and Lincoln Versailles are planned, with prices from $9,000-$18,000 and all options.

"Once we get going, I would imagine there'll be some kind of pressure put on to have somebody produce a helluva lot more than 2,000 of them," he said.

Moody emphasized he has no contract with any automobile manufacturer. "It's gonna be who comes up with the best deal," he said. "When this thing hits the market, there's gonna be a helluva rush to get on the bandwagon."

When word first leaked out in racing circles two months ago that Moody was designing a "trick car" that would get unbelievable mileage, numbers like 60-70 miles per gallon were kicked around. Moody was asked if those figures were accurate.

"They were a little conservative — on purpose. If you come right out saying you've got a car that'll get 80-90 miles per gallon people will think you're some kind of jerk," he recalled.

Besides the testing here, Moody and his pals have driven all over Florida in the car without problem.

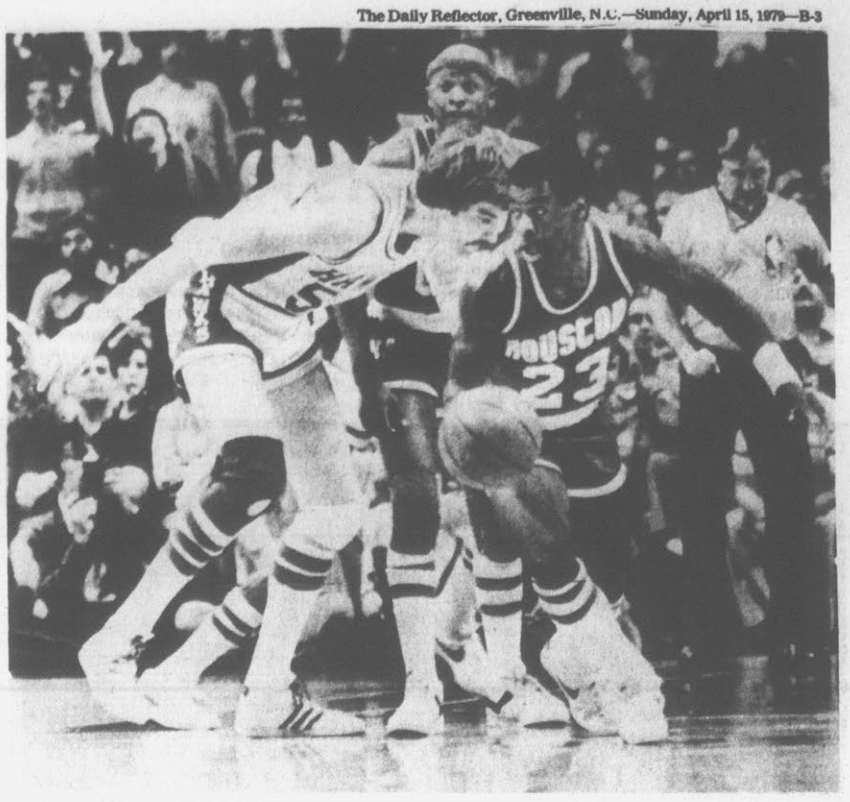

"We loaded it up with 300-400 pounds of gear in the trunk, and a couple of people and drove it 10-12 hours down to Sanibel Island and back; we ran it like gangbusters coming back. Then down to Cocoa the next day, all down back roads, in and out of traffic. Then back down there the next day for 5-6 hours of the same thing. We got 65.5 miles per gallon on that trip," he said. "We know the average driver can get way over that.

"It does anything a regular car should do."

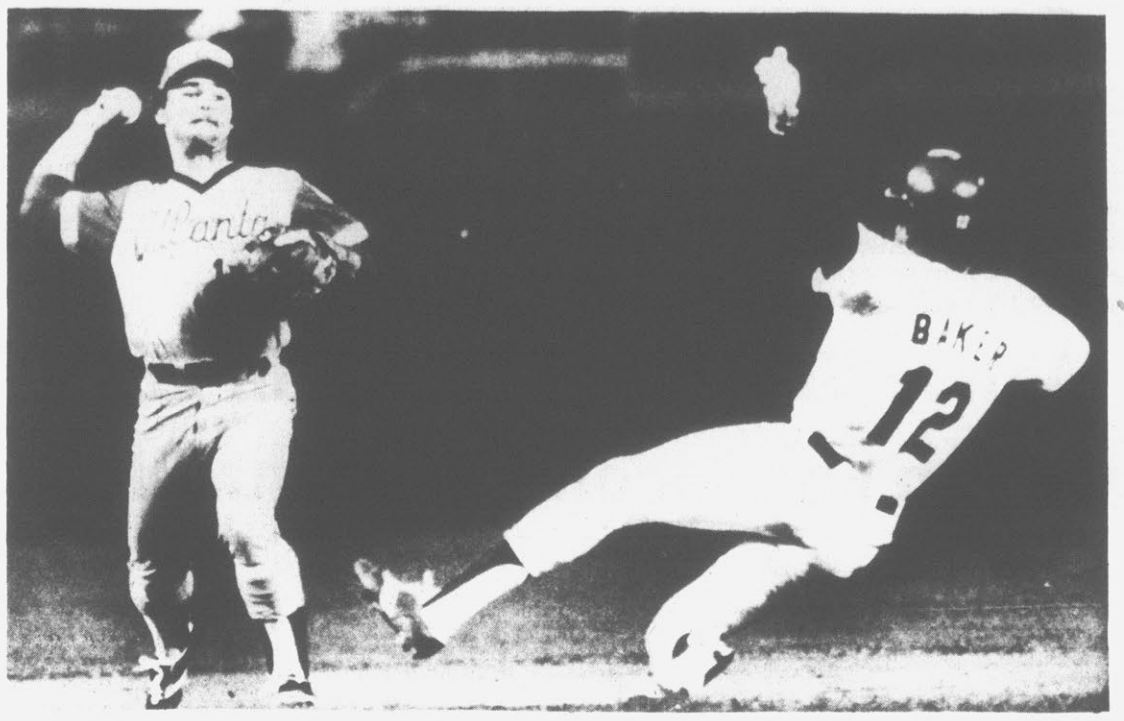

Although this particular project began a short time ago, Moody said, "I've been fooling with this type of thing all my life. We had one about 12 years ago that really ran down the road and got 50-60 miles per gallon on gasoline. But fuel was cheap then, and nobody cared, and it got pushed aside and never did happen," he said. "We got into this thing at just the right time. Probably if it had been back when we didn't have this kind of crisis, though, it would be sitting there too."

Asked what effect auto racing had on his fuel economy projects, Moody answered, "When you have a race car you have to worry about fuel mileage — how lean or how rich you run something. It's something you have to live with every day in racing. The more you get into it, the more determined you get to come up with something that, well, does something. "If you hadn't been in racing in the first place, I doubt if you'ld have had the knowledge to be doing this type of thing." Moody's current concepts are still top secret. The big thing, though, is Moody has gone beyond the textbook definitio ns of how much fuel you can mix with air and still get it to ignite.

"It's the old case of 'they said it couldn't be done.' Engineers in Detroit run their data through computers. If the machine says it can't be done," he noted, "the engineers don't even try."

Cunningham To Head Age Group Run Program

NEW YORK (AP) — Glenn Cunningham, the venerable 69-year-old who was one of the great middle distance runners in history, now is associated with another racing endeavor — a program that will produce a National Challenge Team.

The still rugged Cunningham, the world's premier miler and 1,500-meter runner during the 1930s, has been named national ambassador of the "Sprint With Sprite" program.

National competition will be conducted in 20 cities, beginning April 28 in Memphis, Tenn. and ending July 28 in Wichita, Kan.

Participation will be open to runners of all ages, with first, second and third-place prizes to be awarded in five categories: 17 and under, 18-29, 30-39, 40-49 and 50 and over.

After the regional competition, a National Challenge Team will be selected, comprised of eight runners 18 and over. That squad will travel to Dallas, Chicago, Atlanta and San Francisco for races against teams in those cities after Labor Day.

The still energetic Cunningham plans to make pre-races appearances in each of the regional cities and all four of the Challenge sites.

"This is a unique concept ... but by the time our tour is finished, I think we'll be giving a lot of joy to runners and we'll develop one heck of a National Challenge Team," said the enthusiastic Cunningham. "I'm very enthused about touring the country again, seeing some old friends and making new ones."

Between the start of the tour in Memphis and the finish in Wichita, the regional sites and dates will be: May 19 in Lexington, Ky.; May 20 in New Orleans and Phoenix, Ariz.; June 2 in Houston; June 3 in Jacksonville, Fla.; June 9 in Bloomington, Ind.; June 10 in Madison, Wis.; June 16 in Nashville, Tenn., and Charlotte, N.C.; June 17 in New York; June 23 in Kansas City and San Antonio, Tex.; June 24 in Baltimore; July 8 in Columbus, Ohio; July 14 in Salt Lake City; July 21 in Virginia Beach, Va., and July 22 in St. Louis and Seattle.

Friendliness Helps In Getting Pro Tennis' Top Players Entered

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — First there were contracts that guaranteed the presence of top tennis players at pro tournaments. Then came the big bucks, the mushrooming purses that attracted the top players like a magnet.

But now that the world class players have become so affluent that they can pass up $400,000 tournaments without a second thought, how do tournaments attract players like Jimmy Connors, Vitas Gerulaitis or John McEnroe?

"Today the extra ingredient is a close personal relationship with the players," said Hill "They'll do things out of personal friendship and that's something that money can't buy. That is a more effective way than the promise of a big payday."

Contracts, money or even friendship, however, couldn't get any of the top five players on the WCT tour to this week's $175,000 WCT tournament beginning Monday at River Oaks Country Club, where a $30,200 check awaits the singles champion.

McEnroe, Connors, Bjorn Borg, Gerulaitis and Arthur Ashe all decided to pass up the tournament.

The River Oaks tournament is a victim of the age of the independently wealthy tennis stars who can pick and choose their tournaments for reasons other than money.

"Three years ago I could have told you why a player didn't come to a tournament," Hill said. "Now it's hard to explain what they do. They can pick and choose but you'd think they would pick the logical tournaments.

"Look at the Masters, a $400,000, eight-man tournament and Guillermo Vilas, Borg and Gerulaitis turned it down."

Hill, who has seen the problem escalate during the last few years, says the unpredictability of tournament lineups is causing some sponsors to reevaluate their advertising revenue.

"There have been some big sponsors who decided to rethink their priorities," Hill said. "Here they put up a lot of money for a tournament and then no one shows up."

Hill said many of the younger players take too much credit for the tennis boom.

"Some of the younger guys today weren't around to see tennis like it used to be and they think they are solely responsible for the tennis boom," Hill said. "They have no appreciation for sponsors. That's not true of all of them.

"I think guys like McEnroe, Connors and Gerulaitis have been very cooperative. They'll do things when you ask."

Reid Stuns Navratilova

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Kerry Reid played nearly error-free tennis to upset top-ranked Martina Navratilova, 6-3, 7-6 in the semi-finals of a $150,000 women's tennis tournament Saturday.

Reid, seeded third, meets No. 2 seeded Tracy Austin of Rolling Hills, Calif., in Sunday's live nationally telecast final.

In the other semifinal match Saturday, Austin took less than an hour to defeat fourth-seeded Evonne Goolagong, 6-0, 6-1. Goolagong was playing her first tournament since injuring her leg at Wimbledon last summer.

Reid's victory was her first over Navratilova in eight meetings. At the start of the match, it looked as though history would repeat itself. Navratilova took a 3-0 lead, but then dropped six straight games.

"After I was down 3-0, I said, 'Oh no, here we go again,'" Reid said. "If I let her get ahead of me, she's like a steamroller over me."

The 31-year-old Australian said she suffered the early setbacks because "I went for too much." In the fourth game, Reid said she began concentrating on hitting to Navratilova's weaker backhand "so she couldn't force a rally."

Navratilova, the 1978 Wimbledon champion, said her game suffered because of a painful wart on her right foot. "I wasn't forceful on the overheads. I should have put them away, but I didn't ... I was thinking about the pain that was going to come rather than concentrating on winning the point."

In the second set, Navratilova again took an early lead, 3-1. But Reid held service twice and broke Navratilova's serve to pull even at 3-all.

Both players began serving strong and it took a 7-4 tiebreaker for Reid to win.

Errant Shot Hits Wife

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Mac McLendon told his wife, Joan, after the opening round of the 43rd Masters Golf Tournament that he was "playing so bad I'm afraid I might hit somebody."

He did, and ironically it was Joan.

McLendon rushed to the area, and saw his wife lying unconscious on the ground after being struck just below the shoulder.

She was taken by medics to a local hospital for X-rays, which were negative, and returned to Augusta National in time to rejoin her husband on the eighth hole.

Atlanta, Philadelphia Complete Sweeps; Lakers, Blazers Win

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

Atlanta's defense and Philadelphia's muscle brought an abrupt end to the two mini-series in the National Basketball Association's Eastern Conference, while the home-court advantage helped stretch things to the limit in the West.

The Atlanta Hawks limited Houston to just 13 points in the final period and beat the Rockets 100-91 Friday night, while centers Caldwell Jones and Darryl Dawkins combined for 37 rebounds as the Philadelphia 76ers overpowered the New Jersey Nets 111-101.

Atlanta and Philadelphia thus completed two-game sweeps of their first-round series and will begin play in the best-of-seven second-round Sunday, with Atlanta at Washington and Philadelphia at San Antonio.

In the West, the Los Angeles Lakers beat the Denver Nuggets 121-109 and the Portland Trail Blazers defeated the Phoenix Suns 96-92 to tie those series at one victory apiece. The deciding games will be played Sunday in Denver and Phoenix.

Atlanta and Houston were tied 78-78 after three periods, but the Rockets were held scoreless for 5:33 of the fourth quarter and managed just 5 points in the opening 9:25 of the period as the Hawks pulled away.

"The key to our team is good team defense," said Terry Furlow, Atlanta's reserve guard. "The Atlanta Hawks' D, that's what it all came down to."

Moses Malone led Houston with 21 points and 24 rebounds but only scored 8 points in the second half.

"As John Paul Jones or someone once said, 'We found the enemy and they're really us,'" said Houston Coach Tom Nissalke, who said the Rockets did not get the ball inside enough to the 6-foot-10 Malone.

"Their defense took us out of what we wanted to do," said Houston guard Calvin Murphy. "They had a game plan and they stuck with it."

Offensively, John Drew and Eddie Johnson scored 25 points each and Furlow scored 12 of his 14 points the second half as Atlanta posted its 17th consecutive victory at home.

The 76ers simply outmuscled the Nets, pulling down an amazing 80 rebounds as Coach Billy Cunningham used his two centers together for much of the game. Jones had 24 points and 21 rebounds while Dawkins had 19 points and 16 rebounds.

The 6-11 Dawkins said he liked being on the court at the same time as the 7-1 Jones. "If my guy gets by me I know Caldwell will be there," he said. "I can relax a little if I know he's in there."

The Sixers led 51-45 at the half, went up by 10 after three periods and kept the lead in double figures throughout the final quarter.

Bernard King led New Jersey with 27 points while John Williamson, who scored 38 points in Wednesday's game, was held to 21 this time on 9-for-34 shooting.

Los Angeles and Portland had two of the best home-court records in the NBA during the regular season, the Lakers compiling a 31-10 mark and the Blazers going 33-8. Both used the home-court advantage to stay alive in the first-round series Friday night.

Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, saddled with five personal fouls for nearly the entire second half, scored 32 points and grabbed 12 rebounds against Denver.

How did he keep from fouling out?

"Don't ask me," replied Abdul-Jabbar. "I just played as hard as I could and left it up to providence."

The Lakers, who led most of the way, finally put the game away by outscoring the Nuggets 11-4 in a two-minute stretch late in the final period.

Jamaal Wilkes added 26 points and 13 rebounds for Los Angeles, Norm Nixon handed out 16 assists and Adrian Dantley came off the bench to score 25 points. David Thompson paced the Nuggets with 29 points but was held scoreless in the fourth quarter until the outcome was decided.

Rookies Ron Brewer and Mychal Thompson scored 21 and 20 points, respectively, and Thompson hauled down 17 rebounds as the Blazers stopped the Suns. Phoenix led 76-73 going into the fourth quarter but managed just five field goals and 16 points in the final 12 minutes.

"We played with great intensity in that fourth period," said Blazers Coach Jack Ramsay.

Hot Ball

In The Back Door

Pirate pitcher Bruce Kison dives safely back to third after over-running the bag in the third inning Friday in Pittsburgh against St. Louis. Kison went from second to third on the play on a passed ball. Cardinal third baseman Ken Reitz puts the late tag on Kison as umpire Harry Smail makes the safe call. Pittsburgh won, 7-6. Milner Shows His Stuff In Role Of Sub For Second Straight Night

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

There's always John Milner in reserve.

"The man can play," says Dave Parker.

The Pirate supersub showed some of his stuff Friday night for the second game in a row. Playing again in place of the injured Stargell, Milner blasted two, two-run homers to key a 7-6 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

"I just want to be an asset to the club," said Milner, obviously not unhappy as a sometime player. "I can't be coming to the ballpark every night looking to see if I'm going to play here or play there."

In three games thus far this season, Milner has given the Pirates his best shots. They include six hits in eight appearances and six runs batted in. The second of his homers Friday night provided the Pirates with their winning runs.

"Both came off fastballs," Milner said. "I'm not a guesser. I wait to see the ball and then I hit it."

In other National League games, the Cincinnati Reds beat the San Diego Padres 4-2; the Atlanta Braves nipped the Los Angeles Dodgers 2-1 and the San Francisco Giants trimmed the Houston Astros 8-7.

Milner hit a pitch from reliever Buddy Schultz for Pittsburgh's winning homer, which followed a double by Dave Parker. Milner's earlier two-run homer capped a five-run Pirate burst in the third inning off Pete Vuckovich and staked Pittsburgh to a 5-2 lead.

The regular Pirate first baseman has a bruised hip.

Reds 4, Padres 2

Dan Driessen's two-run double keyed a three-run first inning and Dave Concepcion drilled four hits as Cincinnati beat San Diego.

Bill Bonham, with six strong innings, recorded his first victory since undergoing surgery last September for bone chips in his right elbow. He scattered seven hits.

Braves 2, Dodgers 1

Gary Matthews' sacrifice fly provided the decisive run in the fifth, and reliever Gene Garber made it stand up as Atlanta edged Los Angeles. Garber relieved rookie Rick Matula, who emerged with his first major league victory. The Braves smashed 11 hits off three Los Angeles pitchers, eight of them against loser Doug Rau.

Giants 8, Astros 7

Jack Clark hit a three-run homer and Bill Madlock also knocked in three runs, powering San Francisco over Houston. Houston allowed only six earned runs in their first six games, but San Francisco jumped to an 8-1 lead after four innings with Clark delivering his big blow in a four-run fourth.

Record 93 Entries Set For Indy 500

INIANAPOLIS (AP) — Dissident drivers weren't bluffing when they said they could skip the Indy 500 May 27 and race elsewhere, defending champion Al Unser says.

"If money is all we were after, we have an offer to go somewhere else for more money than the Speedway is offering," Unser, a three-time Indy winner said.

However, the breakaway Championship Auto Racing Team relented Thursday and submitted 44 entries for the $1 million race, including most of auto racing's top drivers.

CART and the U.S. Auto Club have been split over a USAC rules change reducing turbocharger boost for eight-cylinder engines to 50 inches of pressure. CART allows 7 inches in its races.

CART President U.E. "Pat" Patrick indicated his group will continue to pursue a change in the rules.

"I don't like missing any race, but if it takes that, I was sticking behind the people I'm with," Unser said. "Sometimes somebody has to stand up. If the CART people had decided not to go, I would stick with them.

"All of us want to run at the Speedway. We were not trying to avoid that place. We're not against the Speedway but against USAC. The Speedway is the big red apple of auto racing."

Unser said he opposes the sharp slowdown caused by the lower boost.

"These cars are designed for 200 miles per hour," he said. "If they're going to back up 20 years, why don't they wait until I'm gone? I'm not ready to go that slow."

Meanwhile, 10 more entries were delivered to Speedway officials Friday, increasing the field to a record 93 entries representing 18 racing teams. Any mailed entries postmarked before midnight Sunday will be accepted.

New entries included one from Rasmussen Racing Products, with Eldon Rasmussen as driver; three from Leader Cards Inc., Milwaukee, Wis., with Sheldon Kinzer of Bloomington and Bill Vukovich, Coarsegold, Calif., as drivers; two from Bruce Crower, Chula Vista, Calif., with Jerry Sneva, Spokane, Wash., the driver; one from Hucul, Hunter and Arndt, Prince George, Canada, for driver Cliff Hucul; and one from Beaudoin Racing, Brookfield, Wis., for Billy Engelhart, Madison, Wis.

Sherman Armstrong, Winchester, Ind., and Rolla Vollstedt, Portland, Ore., added one more car to their team entries.

Rose Suit Dismissed

CINCINNATI (AP) — A Hamilton County Juvenile Court judge has dismissed a paternity claim against baseball star Pete Rose, but the case will be pursued in Florida, attorneys say.

Judge David E. Grossmann dismissed the suit in Cincinnati Friday at the request of Cincinnati attorney Ed Benson, who represented Terryl Rubio of Tampa, Fla.

Rubio, 25, alleged in lawsuits filed in Ohio and Florida that Rose is the father of her 1-year-old daughter, Morgan. The suits asked that Rose be ordered to pay hospital and other costs related to the child's birth and make support payments.

Benson said he had been instructed by Rubio's attorney in Florida to ask the Ohio court to drop the case.

LOVES THE TOUR

WEWOKA, Okla. (AP) — Gil Morgan, the golfing doctor of optometry, sees great things for the 1979 PGA Tour. Gil had a big season in 1978.

"We face challenges on the tour every day," he said. "That's one of the main reasons I enjoy it so much. It's a challenge, year after year. You can never let down.

Arguments And Ejections-Just Another Night For Earl Weaver

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

He gave his own catcher the thumb, then got thumbed by the ump. It was just another game for Earl Weaver.

Baltimore's fiesty manager didn't appreciate Rick Dempsey getting picked off base in the second inning and got into a brief helmet-slamming contest with him when he yanked the catcher three innings later.

Weaver didn't appreciate Ken Singleton getting thrown out of the game for protesting his strikeout in the fifth inning — and he followed Singleton to the showers for protesting the ejection.

And he certainly didn't appreciate the balk call against Baltimore pitcher Don Stanhouse that triggered Milwaukee's five-run seventh inning, blew open a close game and helped the Brewers beat the Orioles 9-3.

In Friday night's other American League games, California ripped Oakland 10-1, Minnesota clipped Seattle 8-2, Texas nipped Detroit 5-4, Chicago whipped New York 12-2 and Toronto turned back Kansas City 4-1 in a rain-shortened 5½-inning game.

When Weaver pulled Dempsey out of the game in the fifth inning, the two went nose to nose in the Baltimore dugout. "He slammed a helmet down, so I slammed a helmet down," Weaver said. "He picked up a mask and threw it, so I picked up a mask and threw it. If he would have gotten too close, he would have been in trouble.

Dempsey said he was upset at being pulled from the game, but that he had cooled down. "There was no fight or anything. He explained his side and I explained mine. I was wrong."

Angels 10, A's 1

Don Aase scattered six hits while California had six extra-base hits, including Joe Rudi's home run and double, to batter Oakland.

In the second inning, Don Baylor singled, Rudi hit an RBI-double and Brian Downing delivered an RBI-single. In the fifth, Rudi, Rance Mulliniks and Downing all hit their first homers of the season.

Twins 8, Mariners 2

Roy Smalley and Ken Landreaux hit two-run homers and John Castino had a two-run single to pace Minnesota's romp over Seattle.

Smalley hit his homer in the third inning off Paul Mitchell, and Landreaux pounded a Rick Honeycutt pitch over the wall in the seventh.

Rangers 5, Tigers 4

Texas, the only unbeaten team in the majors and off to its best start since moving from Washington seven years ago, got its winning run on Al Oliver's seventh-inning bases-loaded double-play grounder.

White Sox 12, Yanks 2

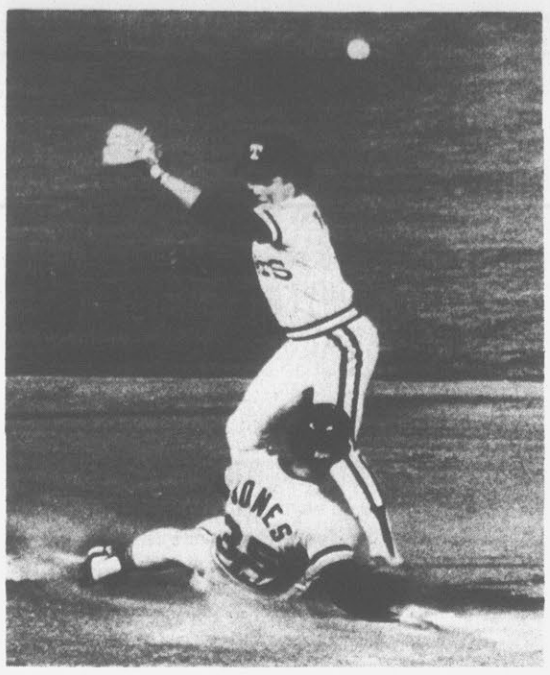

Chicago ruined Luis Tiant's debut with the Yankees as Chet Lemon and Jorge Orta hit successive third-inning home runs off the ancient corkscrewing pitcher.

Allan Bannister also homered for the White Sox, who chased Tiant in the third. Rich Wortham checked the Yanks on four hits and struck out nine batters.

Blue Jays 4, Royals 1

In the fourth inning, Rico Carty's walk, John Mayberry's triple and Alvis Woods' suicide squeeze scored two more Toronto runs.

Watch The Bouncing Ball

Detroit Tigers' center fielder Lynn Jones steals second base as Texas Rangers' second baseman Bump Wills bobbles the ball. The action came as Ranger catcher Jim Sundberg overthrew second in the second inning at Texas Friday. The Rangers won, 5-4. (AP Laserphoto)

Evonne Goolagong's Comeback May Be A Shortlived Return

By ELIZABETH P. LATT
Associated Press Writer

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Evonne Goolagong, playing her first tennis tournament since last summer, says her comeback may be shortlived.

The 27-year-old Australian, who now lives at Hilton Head Island, said Friday she plans to call it quits on the circuit after her daughter, Kelly, who will be 2 next month, enters school in a year or so.

"I don't think it's fair to her to go galavanting around," said Goolagong, who plans to enter her daughter in a special school when she is 3.

Besides that, Goolagong said she wants to have another child and coming back after a pregnancy is "hard work. I get too many injuries after not playing for awhile," she said.

Since Kelly's birth, Goolagong has been plagued with leg and foot injuries. She virtually limped through her semifinal loss to Martina Navratilova in the 1978 Wimbledon, Goolagong's last tournament.

But she said she felt fine in her 6-4, 6-4 victory over the Netherlands' Betty Stove in the quarterfinals of a $150,000 women's tournament at the Sea Pines Racquet Club on Friday.

Goolagong said she will wait to see how she fares in this tournament before making plans for the future. One thing she is certain of is that she plans to compete in Wimbledon in June. She won the unofficial world championship in 1971 and would like to repeat before hanging up her tennis shoes.

Goolagong is seeded fourth in this week's tournament. She faced No. 2 seeded Tracy Austin, 16, of Rolling Hills, Calif., today. In the other semifinal, top seeded Navratilova went up against third-seeded Kerry Reid.

Austin's picture perfect baseline ground strokes spelled doom Friday for Laura DuPont of Matthews, N.C. The California teenager defeated the 27-year-old DuPont 6-3, 6-4.

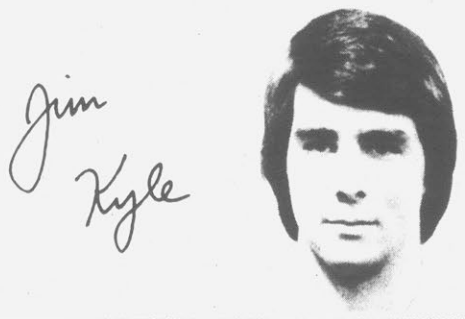

Navratilova had little trouble getting past Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia 6-1, 6-2.

While most observers were predicting a Navratilova-Austin final, Goolagong said she feels she has a certain home court advantage.

"I've always enjoyed playing this tournament," said Goolagong, who makes her home at nearby Shipyard Plantation. "I don't feel there is as much pressure on me" as on some of the other players.

Pete Rose, now with the Philadelphia Phillies, is still the leader in seven batting categories for the Cincinnati Reds.

BOTH THE TOTAL number of boating accidents and the number of deaths from boating accidents decreased last year in relation to 1977, according to a report compiled by the N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission's boating division.

A total of 159 boating accidents were reported last year, resulting in 50 fatalities. In 1977, there were 218 accidents and 60 deaths. The number of boats registered in the state grew to 191,061 last year from 177,254 in 1977.

The total property damage from boating accidents was also considerably less last year than in 1977, $339,450 to $514,325. Both the total accident and property damage figures were the lowest in the four years listed in the report.

There were 26.2 fatalities per 100,000 registered boats in the state last year. That is the lowest number in the past six years, according to the report.

Alcohol is still a big problem in boating accidents. One out of every three victims of boating accidents tested had more than a .10 blood alcohol level, which would be driving under the influence on the highway.

Alcohol can be dangerous to boaters for a number of reasons. The loss of coordination and reaction time can cause accidents and the loss of balance can be extremely dangerous in a boat. In emergency situations, alcohol impedes a person's ability to react properly and it also increases the rate of body heat loss in cold water, which reduces survival time.

Some of the major causes of boating accidents last year were: anchoring the boat from the stern, or letting the stern face oncoming waves; sudden movements, such as standing, in small boats; operator inattention; disregard of weather conditions.

More than twice as many fatalities occured when the victims were not using flotation devices as when such devices were used. A total of 21 deaths occurred when boaters had the devices aboard and were not using them and eight more occurred when no such devices were aboard. Some 12 fatalities occurred to boaters using flotation devices.

Wild Turkey Prospects Good

The outlook for this year's spring wild turkey season is brighter than it has been for some time, according to Commission biologist Wayne Bailey. Reproduction has been good for the past couple of years and turkeys have been sighted in areas where they haven't been seen in years.

"This spring's harvest should be higher than the last two year's takes," Bailey said. "We also expect the mountain kill to be up this year. Turkey populations in our mountain areas are excellent."

Last season, the turkey harvest was low due to poor weather and heavy hunting pressure in certain areas, while other good areas were neglected.

Bailey said hunters can help the Commission's turkey program by tagging and checking all kills and by reporting illegal hunting during the fall and winter. The Commission has a toll-free 24-hour hotline at 1-800-662-7137. All calls will be kept confidential.

Youth Highlight Of Jaguar Teams

By JIM KYLE
Reflector Sports Writer

Most of the spring teams at Farmville Central are plagued by inexperience, but the younger participants are benefitting by their experience this season.

Baseball

The Jaguar baseball team was inexperienced in some key areas before the season began, according to coach Linwood Woodard, especially pitching.

"Before the season began, I felt we would have to progress a great deal to be competitive because we're very inexperienced in some key areas. When we got into the season, I found our defense would be adequate and that we could score runs," Woodard said.

Although the Jaguars are hitting with some high averages, they have had some problems at important points in their games. "We're not hitting with men on base and our pitchers are making mistakes at bad points."

The Jags have not been able to put together the big inning, while their opponents have. "I'm pleased with our progress, but we've lost ballgames because of big innings. If we can stay away from big innings, we can play with anybody in our conference.

"We just haven't put an entire ballgame together."

Senior shortstop Billy McLawhorn has been an offensive leader for the Jaguars. He is a second-year starter and has done a good job of getting on base, Woodard said.

Sophomore second baseman Greg Hardison is also hitting well and senior center fielder Allen Moore is a top defensive player.

Tennis

Coach Don Dempsey said Greene Central should take the Eastern Carolina Conference crown, but the Jaguars may be able to pose a challenge.

"It looks like unless we figure out something to beat Greene Central, they will probably win the conference and we will probably come in second," he said.

"We have four or five players who are pretty close together — we don't have anyone that stands out particularly among the first four."

Those top four are senior Roy Richardson, sophomore Lonnie Pierce and juniors David Dunn and Bobby Patterson. The other two starters are Stan Morgan, a junior, and Mark Owens, a senior. They are better doubles players than singles players, Dempsey said.

Timing has been a problem for the Farmville netters this season. "A lot of the boys play during tennis season and not too much otherwise. They have ability, but their timing is poor at this point," Dempsey said.

"It could be that we might get enough better to beat Greene Central before the end of the season."

Softball

The Lady Jaguars have only been participating in softball for two years, so the program is still basically in the building stage.

"It takes a lot of work," coach Kay White said. "We're starting five freshmen and don't have any seniors on the team."

But the future should be bright for the team, White said, "if not the rest of this year, then next year."

The Lady Jags have been inconsistent so far this season. "We're fair hitters, we just make too many mistakes in the field." Fielding has been the team's biggest problem.

The team is young, but everybody is contributing, so it should show improvement, White said.

Boys' Track

Youth is also a problem for the Jaguar track team. Coach Gene Brewer said half his team is made up of freshmen and sophomores.

"We're doing about what I expected when the season started," he said. "I'm hoping the kids have now got some idea of what's going on and that they will get better from now to the conference meet."

The team has gotten some good performances from some of its veterans, and some may be contenders in the conference meet, Brewer noted.

Three seniors have been the leaders this year, Donald Freeman, James Tyson and Calvin Horne.

Freeman runs the hurdles and participates in the jumping events. He has had some good times and seems to be getting stronger, Brewer said.

Tyson sprints and also jumps. He, too, seems to be improving.

Horne is a steady performer who runs the high hurdles, the triple jump and relays.

Those three make the Jaguars strongest in the hurdles and the jumps.

Girls' Track

The Lady Jaguars have some good individuals, coach Hilda Worthington said. They are also young, but some of the girls are coming along well.

Senior Lynette Harris, a triple jumper, was fourth in the sectionals last year and is being counted on this season, Worthington said.

Senior Janet Lang long jumps and runs the 220. "She is improving about every track meet." Sister Charlene, a sophomore, puts the shot, while Rose, another sister who is a freshman, runs the 440 and the 220 hurdles.

Golf

Coach Larry Lewis has been disappointed in the first-year Jaguar golf program.

"We've been doing very poorly. We only had five kids come out and four of the five are underclassmen. Two are freshmen."

Lewis is hoping the situation will improve, however. The team's scores are improving with every match. "That makes it look good," he said.

The top two players on the team are senior Al Ham and junior Robbie Jones. Both have been sporadic, however. "If both could get on at the same time, we'd be in good shape. Both could be very solid golfers," Lewis said.

A Jury Of Their Peers

A JURY OF ONE'S PEERS — Three Denver-area high school students who volunteered to act as a jury for a juvenile offender listen as the one who's in trouble with the law explains his story. (AP Laserphoto)

By SUSAN GUFFEY
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — Juvenile offenders who want a jury of their peers are getting just that in an experimental program which provides advice as well as punishment for nonviolent Denver youths.

Unlike many adult juries, members of the youth panels are eager to do their "duty" as they review cases ranging from shoplifting to burglary.

The jury program is the newest addition to Denver County's "diversion" program for young offenders. The idea is to keep troubled youths out of Juvenile Court when possible and still teach them a lesson about right and wrong.

Seven students from the city's 29 junior and senior high schools sit in judgment each week on three cases referred to them by the district attorney's office.

Dozens of students have volunteered for juries in the month-old program and those who have served are asking for more duty, according to Zoralee Steinberg, a counselor for juvenile offenders and organizer of the program.

Asked why he was serving on the volunteer panel, one juror said, "Why do adults serve on juries? It's our duty, isn't it?"

Prosecutors choose which cases are to be decided by the youth jury. Violent crimes or "anything too serious" goes to Juvenile Court, said District Attorney Dale Tooley.

Accused youths must admit they are guilty. Otherwise their cases go to Juvenile Court. They also must agree to accept the "contract" decided upon by jurors.

At one end of a courtroom table was a four-boy, three-girl panel. At the other end was 14-year-old Tommy (not his real name,) accused of shoplifting $3.40 worth of gum and cigarettes.

Twice before Tommy had been caught shoplifting. He was sent home each time after being lectured by police.

Jurors listened as Tommy's father talked of shame and bewilderment at his son's actions. He said Tommy was reacting to peer pressure about his below average height and added that it didn't help that the family was Mexican-American.

During deliberations, jurors asked Mrs. Steinberg how they could tell the father to stop talking about his son's height and give him more positive reinforcement. She told them to just say it and they did.

The decision: Tommy would have to keep in touch with Mrs. Steinberg for six months and would be required to find something besides television to fill his spare time.

A 16-year-old boy came before the jury accused of collecting more than was due from customers on his newspaper delivery route. His distributor claimed the youth quit owing him about $90.

The boy told jurors he had been shortchanged by the distributor shortly after he took over the route and that he became tired of asking for his money.

The jury told him to pay back the money by June 1 and asked his juvenile counselor to help him find another job.

Recipe For Fun: Go Fly A Kite

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Flying kites, says Ron Moss, is more fun than fishing because you can see what's on the string.

Then he tells about once playing out six miles of string for a kite that went so high he couldn't see it.

Because kite flying is fun, Moss got out of the automobile service-station business and into the kite-selling business. He says he's got the only kite shop in Dayton and maybe the biggest one in the country.

"Kite flying has become respectable again," he said. "Time was when people saw a grown man out flying a kite, they just figured he was some kind of kook. Well, people don't feel that way any more."

Moss' store is filled to the ceiling with kites — at least 360 varieties in all sizes, colors and shapes: birds, insects, airplanes and sailing ships.

Prices range from 45 cents to $600 for his fanciest model. One that was handmade in China and has real gold embroidery sells for $190. Another is a miniature replica of the 1903 Wright Flyer airship.

"This shop has a kind of hypnotic effect on people," said his wife, Pat Moss. "So many of them walk in, stop, look around and say, 'Wow!' That's the kind of reaction we like to get from customers."

"Kite flying is a very stimulating hobby that always keeps you looking up," Moss mused. "It's just as much fun as fishing. And when you are flying a kite, you don't have to sit around waiting for something to get on your line."

"It used to be that all kites were made of paper," he said. "Now, new designs have been made possible by advances in aerodynamics. Kite flying, in turn, has become a very popular sport."

Moss, 45, said he became fascinated with kites when he was 4 years old and figures he has flown all kinds since then — like the one that used more than six miles of line.

"I figured she was up there 12,000, maybe 15,000 feet," he said. "I know one thing. I couldn't see the kite."

Recollections of flying a kite when things got slow at his service station brought a chuckle from Moss.

"A lot of times I had two or three kites up in the air behind the station," he said. "I'd tie them to the bumper of my car or to the wrecker. Customers would come in and ask, 'Who the heck is flying the kites?'"

Palm Springs Remains Key Oasis Of The Beautiful

EDITOR'S NOTE — It's a place where "winter" becomes a verb and "everybody" means anything but everyone. It's Palm Springs, an oasis for the beautiful and the powerful that rises from the Southern California Desert — but only as high as zoning laws allow.

By SAUL PETT
AP Special Correspondent

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — A smashing season, dahlings, despite the snow that came and the shah who didn't. Simply yummy.

The Gerald Fords (she was the dancer) threw a lovely wedding reception for daughter Susan and her Secret Service man husband. The Sinatras were there. The Richard Nixons (he was the recording artist) were not there, although THEY had had THEM to Tricia's nuptial blast at La Maison Blanche.

The Spiro Agnews (he is the novelist) were not there either although they live just a hoot and a holler down Bob Hope Drive, near the intersection of Frank Sinatra Drive. Imagine, sweeties, within 70 miles of each other, we have the last two presidents of the U.S. of A. and, within three miles, the last two surviving vice presidents. Ah, westward tilt.

Glamour-wise, dollar-wise, realty-wise, a fabulous season, pets. All that recession talk is simply not allowed to cross the desert.

Fat cats from Beverly Hills, New York and Dallas are buying $300,000 condominiums just from the brochures — second homes, mind you — and 107 Indians own real estate worth zillions, and the house burglary rate is going up and Teamsters Local 959 of Alaska is building a country club-condominium complex among the date palms which will cost $80 million.

On the market a few days, the Elvis Presley house (five bedrooms, seven baths, 30-by-40 music room, interior colors nightclub reds and blacks, parking for 10 cars) was sold to singer Frankie Valli for $385,000. It needs $100,000 worth of work.

For $285,000, according to the agents, you can buy the "private love hideaway" that John Gilbert built for Greta Garbo. Includes five bedrooms, five baths, hand-carved archways, three fireplaces with handcrafted copper hoods, guest house and, of course, of course, swimming pool. You supply the Duesenberg.

Garbo, Gilbert, Gable, Bogie, Jolson, Crosby, Flynn (Errol) and Benny (Jack), all the big ones came here in their time. And from show biz to big biz, from locker rooms to throne rooms, current and retired biggies still come to winter homes here, to sun, to play, to clip their coupons or polish their Oscars:

And we have so many names here there's never enough time to drop them all. Mostly they live behind the electronic gates and poincettia-festooned walls of their elegant compounds. But charity brings them out.

Walter Annenberg, the publisher, art collector extraordinaire and former ambassador to England, was told one day, without prior warning, that the art museum was a little shy. He promptly wrote a check for $250,000 although he had already given at the office.

This year the Annenbergs also gave $4 million to the Eisenhower Medical Center, for which the Bob Hopes had donated 80 acres of valuable land. Presidents no longer faze this place, poopsies. Ike stayed at La Quinta Country Club, Kennedy at Sinatra's, Nixon at the Annenbergs' and Ford owns a $600,000 pad on the 13th fairway of the Thunderbird Country Club.

The new Marriott, a confection of tiled roofs and white stucco walls, is named the Marriott Rancho Las Palmas Resort. There is an unwritten law against calling anything in the desert a motel. Tone is muy importante here.

There are written laws, ordinances, which outlaw billboards, flashing neon and signs with prices. The size of signs is strictly controlled, the height of buildings is limited, exteriors in anything but pastel shades are verboten and even interior light fixtures which can be seen from the street must be approved by the Architectural Review Committee.

All of this brings us to the Agua Caliente (hot water) band of Cahuilla Indians, who have much of this town in a steady boil.

Just a few blocks from the downtown Taj Mahals — Saks, Merrill Lynch, I. Magnin and the three-story Alan Ladd Hardware store — there is a crazy patchwork of empty lots. This is the most valuable land around, worth as much as $300,000 an acre, and it is owned, not by any of the many wealthy white nabobs in residence, but by 107 Indians.

A bit of history. In 1876, President Grant gave the Indians a 32,000-acre reservation. The land was broken up into a checkerboard of alternate mile-square pieces, one set going to the Southern Pacific as a railroad subsidy and the other to the Indian tribe, and most of it was sand.

In 1891, Congress authorized the allotment of Indian land to individual Indians, but it was another 68 years of my-country-'tis-of-thee before they were allowed to do anything with it. In 1959, they were given the right to sell or lease. It was theirs, Congress said, "without encumbrance."

Within city limits, the Indians owned 8,000 acres. They sold 2,000 acres over the years and now rent 1,773 acres to white hotel and home owners for leases as long as 99 years. This explains why some Indians drive Rollses and Mercedes and live in $500,000 homes.

They pay no income or property taxes on their land because that would be an "encumbrance." Two years ago, after a long court fight, it was decided that the Indian lands were not subject to zoning laws because that, too, would be an "encumbrance."

The Indians say they want to cooperate with the folks in city hall but they want "more density" allowed on their land. City hall thinks that would be too tacky. One city manager got so mad he threatened to leave the Indians without police or fire protection.

Negotiations go on while the Agua Calientes still own 3,327 unused acres in town which may be worth $50 million, $100 million, $300 million, you take your choice.

But we risk being gross, loveys, dwelling on money. There are also the sights and sounds of Palm Springs, the lush oasis in a sea of sand and mesquite, the beguiling clear air, the benign sun, the whispering cool nights (in winter), the snow-topped mountains beyond the palms, the Social Security set rushing off to golf or tennis, the endearing old pioneers ...

Charlie Farrell, now a sturdy 79, reminisces about the old days — there were no sidewalks or street lights — when he and Ralph Bellamy started the Racquet Club and the Hollywood hegira to the desert. He recalls the long nights of drinking until dawn with Errol or Bogie, swimming home in a white or black tie or whatever, home being at the other end of the pool.

That folk hero of the range, Gene Autry, now 79, studies a menu four inches from his thick-lensed glasses. He grumbles mildly about the cause of his recent hernia difficulties. "Must've been all that getting on and getting off horses. Also picking up the bad guys and throwing 'em down. I did all my own fights."

Against the infirmities of age, he is consoled by the fact that he owns a large slice of everything in sight, the Gene Autry Hotel, the California Angels, a string of TV-radio stations.

America, America. If you're staying at Gene's hotel for $75 a day, you can arrange for a sight-seeing bus to see the homes of the rich.

You won't see much beyond the walls. At the Annenberg digs, where the Shah of Iran was expected until the last moment (the security people were already in place), you won't see the private golf course, the 12 shimmering ponds, the white oleanders, the guest houses, the gardens and manicured lawns. ("I don't want to see one grain of sand except in the golf traps," Annenberg commanded at the Creation.)

You won't see the 38-foot-high, 6,400-square-foot living room area of the main house or the original casting of Rodin's Eve, which is surrounded by 300 bromeliad plants, which are surrounded by the works of Renoir, Gaugin, Van Gogh and Seurat (not prints, dear dumkopfs).

By comparison, the man next door on Sinatra Drive stinted. Old Blue Eyes is said to have spent only $2 million on his place. It includes an unused helicopter pad, several bungalows (one is called "The Agnew House" because he wrote his novel there), tennis courts and an old wooden railroad car fetchingly converted into a sauna.

Barbara, the new Mrs. Sinatra, had the main house redone. The large kitchen is walled in blood-red tiles grouted in white and contains three large TV monitors by which the staff watches the electronic front gate. Spies report she redid the living room in beige velour and one no longer sees Frank's Oscars, trophies or the sampler which said, "Don't get even. Get revenge."

You'll be relieved to know that high on a hill construction has resumed on the Bob Hopes' new house, the one with the indoor-outdoor pool, after a disastrous fire. Said old ski nose: "Palm Springs is so exclusive the fire department has an unlisted number."

Private Property Week Marked By Realtors

The Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors will be observing "Private Property Week," underway today through Saturday, April 21, with a variety of local activities.

David A. Evans Jr., president of the organization, said that during the week, Realtors across the nation will encourage homeowners to "preserve their property and to stand up for their rights to private property ownership."

Evans said that the local observance of "Private Property Week, which has been proclaimed by both Gov. Jim Hunt and Greenville Mayor Percy Cox, is in conjunction with the annual nationwide observance.

In his proclamation, Cox pointed out, "Each year the Realtors and Realtor-Associates of the United States observe Private Property Week...a week dedicated to reaffirming our right not only to own real property, but also to call attention to our duty to preserve the land and our inalienable right to enjoy that land."

He noted that this year, the local organization joins with more than 600,000 Realtors and Realtor-Associates across the nation in the observance.

In addition to the proclamations designating the week-long observance, Hunt proclaimed Saturday, April 21 as "Next Door Neighbor Day in North Carolina." Hunt noted that "being good neighbors to those around us is the first step toward human understanding."

According to Evans, this year's Make America Better project will be "Let's Green America." As part of the local project, Board of Realtors members will be involved in the relandscaping of an area at Greenville Villa nursing facility, with plans calling for the effort to be completed on Friday.

On Saturday, members will be picking up litter in Greenville and other areas of the county, including Farmville, Grifton, Winterville and Ayden, Evans reported, and he urged local participation in the litter campaign.

The Board of Realtors will staff a booth at Pitt Plaza from Monday through Saturday, 1-9 p.m. each day, to answer questions local citizens may have concerning real estate. Additional information be will distributed, as well as balloons and litter bags, Evans said.

The local Realtors have purchased a film on vandalism, "Handwriting on the Wall," according to Evans, which will be available for clubs, schools, organizations and anyone interested to borrow. The film will be viewed by city schools superintendent Glenn Cox and others attending a principal's meeting here Thursday.

The local president said that the film, a documentary focusing on vandalism and resulting damage to property and quality of life, is part of a Vandalism Prevention Program implemented by the organization.

Evans said that Realtors throughout the nation will conduct Private Property Week activities such as restoring landmarks, cleaning up lakes and rivers, helping in the renovation of homes and conducting vandalism prevention programs.

PLAN YOUR HOME

The Tellura

Efficient Plan Spells One Level Living

HANDSOME HOME YIELDS THREE BEDROOMS, LARGE LIVING ROOM

By Jerry Bishop

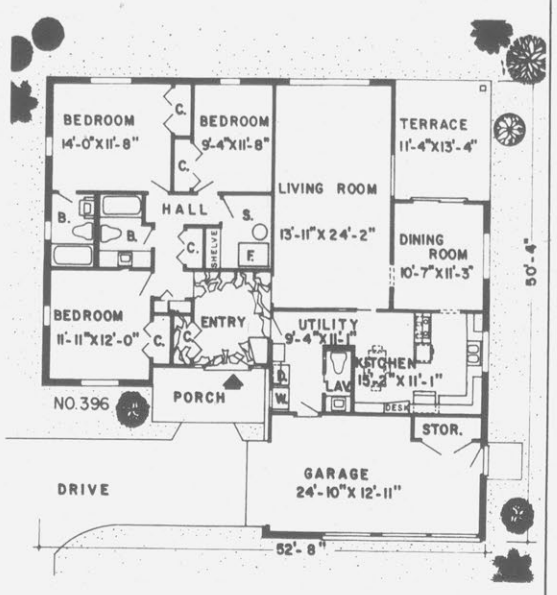

Designing a home that is complete on one level is not as simple as it may seem. Often, plans that show single story homes have left something out: storage space, perhaps, or a utility or laundry room.

The Tellura, today's featured home, is one design that can actually be lived on one level. Besides the three bedrooms, two and one half baths, and sizable living room, the plan calls for a work complex that combines food and laundry functions and is complete, right down to the inclusion of a planning desk.

A versatile home, the Tellura exhibits a facade trimmed in brick. Double entry doors add interest and invites guests into the flagstone entry. With coat closet at hand, the entry is set at the crux of the L-shaped design and fashions a traffic pattern with access to sleeping areas, living room, or work areas.

To right of entry and bordering the garage is the work complex, comprised of laundry, kitchen, and half bath. The arrangement is effective and places a garage entry into the utility area. The result is that the utility room serves double duty as a mud room and protects the living area from back yard traffic. Large enough for family dining, the kitchen shows plenty of counter space and a handy planning desk on one wall.

At rear of the kitchen is the dining room, a bright spot for entertaining. Sliding glass doors become floor-to-ceiling walls of glass that admit light and link the room with the corner terrace.

Another sunny room is the expansive living room. Lavished with windows for natural light, the room extends nearly 14 by 24 to function as family fun center or party room. Cross-traffic is all but eliminated by tucking the area at rear to overlook the terrace.

Sleeping areas in the plan are well-furnished with baths. A private bath benefits the master bedroom, while another serves the smaller bedrooms. A storage room with built-in shelves offers space for furnace and water heater, and a garage will house additional storage space.

A Special Touch Is Added With Massive Wall Art

By BARBARA BASLER
AP Newsfeatures

Several years ago an elderly woman in upstate New York became too ill to make her annual vacation trip to the Arizona desert she loved.

And so, her husband brought the scenery to her. He commissioned a local artist to paint a huge desert scene across one entire wall of their home.

The idea was a novel one, and it made news across the country.

They were not the very first to decorate a wall with one massive work of art, of course, and now it turns out they won't be the last.

A New York City firm has decided that the centuries-old concept of mural-sized art — with a modern twist — might fit today's home decorating needs.

"In a real sense, this idea has its roots in 18th-century France, when artists such as Watteau and Fragonard were commissioned to paint frescoes on the walls of French chateaus," says John Elmo, president of Summa Artworks, Ltd.

But today it is difficult to commission big-name artists — or even local ones — to come into the home and decorate a wall. In addition, members of today's mobile society might balk at the idea of investing in a hand-painted wall scene that can't be moved when they move.

So, knowing the idea would have to be adapted, Elmo's firm is commissioning artists to create "mural-sized graphics," which will be reproduced as signed, limited-edition silkscreens.

"The only difference between our art and other original graphics is the size," Elmo says.

And, while today's "wall art" may not fill an 18th-century wall, the graphics can make a sizeable dent in most modern homes and apartments. At 6 feet by 8 feet, the indoor works of art seem as big as all outdoors.

The first item in Summa's series is a work entitled "Garden Court," limited to 200 silkscreen prints and 20 proofs, numbered and signed by artist Richard Haas.

The work is an interior courtyard scene, done with a three-dimensional reality that makes it seem, at first glance, to be an actual courtyard doorway, rather than a wall covering.

Already under way, says Elmo, is a second project, which will reproduce a Grand Canyon panorama in the wall-graphic format.

Wall graphics are not cheap — "Garden Court" sells for $2,900. But, stresses Elmo, "This is art.

"There is no reason why we cannot and should not cover walls with genuine, quality art instead of using mass-produced murals, which have no value except for their decorative look," he says.

The silkscreens will be sold through design showrooms and in art galleries, both here and abroad. The graphics are packaged in 10-inch by 74-inch tubes, and they include instructions for hanging, moving, etc.

Elmo also believes businesses and hotels will like the idea of wall graphics for lobbies and offices.

"I think large-scale art will become more important because rooms are smaller in scale, and furniture is cleaner, simpler and smaller. All this means people want less clutter," he explains.

"And so, I think one or two pieces of monumental art would answer today's decorative needs," he adds.

MORE PLASTICS

NEW YORK (UPI) — Plastics consumption is seen rising about eight percent this year with increased penetration expected in building construction, car production, packaging and insulation markets, says Modern Plastics magazine.

GARDEN CLINIC

N.C. State University Answers Timely Gardening Questions

Q. Is it all right to put lime on my vegetable garden after it has been planted? (J.R., Greensboro)

A. Yes. But make every effort to incorporate the lime into the soil, either through hoeing or tilling. (Jack Baird, extension soils specialist)

Q. I plan to plant zoysia plugs this spring but need to know how to control dandelions and crabgrass that have grown in the yard. (J.T., Rocky Mount)

A. Dandelions can be controlled by spraying in the spring with 2,4-D or a mixture of 2,4-D and Dicamba. The crabgrass should be sprayed after it comes up and when it reaches the two to three leaf stage with MSMA. MSMA will yellow the zoysia for two to four days, but it will grow out. (Carl Blake, extension agronomist)

Q. What can I do to keep the bottom (blossom-end) of my tomatoes from turning black? (G.P., Wendell)

A. Blossom-end rot of tomatoes is not caused by a disease organism, as many people think. It is caused by a lack of calcium in the blossom end of the fruit. The lack of calcium can be due to an uneven water supply or not enough calcium in the soil. In other words, low pH. Thus, to reduce the number of tomatoes with blossom end rot, a grower should provide a uniform supply of moisture and sufficient calcium. Irrigation and mulch will help with the moisture. Liming to get the soil to a pH of 6.5 to 6.8 as far in advance of planting tomatoes as possible will help with the calcium supply. (Harry Duncan, extension plant pathologist)

Q. When I fertilize my shrubs should I first push aside the mulch? (L.B., Greensboro)

A. If your shrubs are properly mulched with four to six inches of pine straw or three to four inches of decayed bark, it would be helpful to pull the mulch aside, fertilize and then replace the mulch. Broadcast the fertilizer under the dripline of the plants. Fertilizer put up next to the main stems could injure the plants. An average fertilizer recommendation would be two to four pounds of a complete fertilizer, such as 8-8-8 or 10-10-10, per 100 square feet of area. (Kim Powell, extension landscape horticulturist)

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

"Can I apply A over B?"

Substitute any of a number of materials for A or B and you have one of the most frequently asked do-it-yourself questions. Examples:

"Can I apply new asphalt roof shingles over old?"

"Can I apply paint over wallpaper?"

"Can I apply resilient floor tiles over old linoleum-type flooring?"

"Can I apply ceiling tiles over a regular plaster ceiling?"

"Can I apply latex paint over oil paint?"

And on and on.

The answers to all those questions and dozens of others in that category are embodied in the generalization that a new surface is only as good as the old one, a twist on the maxim that a chain is only as strong as its weakest link.

New materials will stay in place only until the old surfaces come loose. Then, obviously, the new will move with the old — even though the two might still be bonded securely. Resilient floor tiles might remain firmly cemented to an old piece of sheet flooring even while the flooring itself has become detached from the wooden floor boards.

The lesson is clear. If you place one material over another, be very certain that the substance at the bottom is checked very carefully. If it already is in bad shape or in need of extensive patching, take it up or off. Most of the time, repairs are minor. These can involve some re-nailing or re-cementing or whatever seems necessary to prolong the bonding life of the old product. Or it can be something as simple as the removal of grease and dirt. It is especially important, when one material is to be joined to another with an adhesive, that all wax or polish be thoroughly stripped from the old, just as this step is a necessary preliminary to routine painting, varnishing or any other finishing procedure.

When contemplating the addition of a new material to an old, don't overlook the factor of added thickness and-or weight. If you're putting new flooring over old, be sure to determine ahead of time whether there will be interference with the movement of doors or anything else. If you're having a new roof put on over an old one, the roofer should check the strength of the framework, known as a deck, to see whether it can handle the extra weight. If your wall already has three layers of wallpaper, it may be that a coat or two of paint may be just enough extra weight to pull some of the paper away from the wall. In short, don't take anything for granted. Always give some thought to the thickness-weight situation.

When any product contains a solvent (turpentine, denatured alcohol, lacquer thinner, etc.), ask questions and read labels to see whether it will affect the old surface. For instance, the lacquer thinner used in lacquer will soften most other finishing materials, and the solvents in some floor cleaners will damage asphalt tiles.

Does that sound too good to be true? Well, believe it! We've utilized some innovative building techniques to really trim labor costs. And our homes require fewer board feet of lumber, which reduces construction costs even more. And, even better than that - studies have shown that a Low-E® home is every bit as structurally sound as a conventionally built one.

Science Seeks Energy From Ordinary Sea Water

By PATRICK LAMB

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (UPI) — In a remote mountaintop laboratory, scientists are at work with lasers and powerful magnetic fields to develop a virtually inexhaustible new source of energy from ordinary sea water.

Not only would the energy source be able to produce an energy equivalent of 300 gallons of gasoline from one gallon of water, but it would be able to recreate the energy of the sun with a minimum of side effects.

Although this may sound like science fiction, it's not.

The energy source, if perfected, will come from controlled fusion nuclear reaction. Scientists working on the project feel it could be the major solution to the world's energy crisis without many of the dangers associated with fission reaction nuclear power plants like the one at Three Mile Island.

"The potential payoff is so enormous for civilization that we can't allow this possibility to go untried," says Dr. Harry Dreicer, head of the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory's Controlled Thermonuclear Research Division. "It is so inexhaustible, so clean and so promising that we must pursue it to the full extent."

But although scientists hope to show within the next two to three years that fusion reaction is scientifically possible as an alternate energy source, it probably will not be until the year 2020 that the first commercial fusion reactors are on line.

Significant scientific and engineering problems still face fusion reaction, but researchers are optimistic they will be resolved.

Fusion nuclear energy is really nothing new. The sun is a fusion reactor which has been operating satisfactorily for billions of years.

A fusion nuclear reaction occurs when two light elements collide, fuse to form a heavier element, and release energy in the process. In a fission reaction, such as that used in current nuclear power plants, elements are split apart.

The fusion nuclear reaction occurs when two light elements collide, fuse to form a heavier element, and release energy in the process. In a fission reaction, such as that used in current nuclear power plants, elements are split apart.

The fusion reaction like that of the sun that can most easily be reproduced on earth uses deuterium and tritium, both heavy isotopes of hydrogen found naturally in water. (A heavy isotope is an atom with more nuetrons in its nucleus than a normal atom.)

But creating the conditions under which such a fusion of those elements can occur is the most serious problem facing scientists hoping to perfect controlled fusion reactions.

The fusion reaction occurs at temperatures of up to 100 million degrees and must be conducted in an extended period of time within an area of tremendous pressure.

Because of their large masses, the stars are able to hold the hot gases together to allow the fusion reaction to continue without interference.

But for man to create a successful fusion reaction, he must be able to reproduce some of the conditions found in the sun.

Research to produce a successful method of controlling a fusion reaction is proceeding on two fronts.

The greatest amount of research is focusing on a method of containing a continuous fusion reaction within magnetic fields. It is generally known as "magnetic confinement."

Another method, which proponents say is even more promising, is "inertial confinement." It involves use of lasers or other intense beams to bombard tiny fuel pellets of deuterium and tritium to create a series of short-lived fusion reactions.

At the forefront of the magnetic confinement research is the Princeton University Plasma Physics Lab, which is currently constructing a $240 million device called the Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor (TFTR) which scientists hope will be able to produce at least as much energy as it consumes. This "break even" point is expected to be reached in late 1981.

Existing experiments in magnetic confinement have involved construction of doughnut-shaped devices in which superheated gas or "plasma" of tritium and deuterium is contained in an inner chamber by intense magnetic fields.

The magnetic fields not only keep the superheated gases from actually touching the walls of the chamber, but also serve to compress and thereby further heat the gases.

At the Los Alamos Scentific Laboratory, Dreicer's staff is perfecting a method of heating the plasma to even higher temperatures by passing electric current through it.

Dr. Harold Furth, associate director of research at the Princeton lab says the TFTR device has a good chance for success.

"We think it's actually going to produce about as much fusion reaction as the electrical power we're going to put in," he said. "Of course, you need about a 1,000 percent return to make it economically useful."

The Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory and Lawrence Livermore Laboratories in California are leading the research into inertial confinement using lasers.

The Los Alamos project is experimenting primarily with carbon dioxide lasers, while the Lawrence Livermore team is working with a neodymium glass laser.

In both programs, several laser beams instantaneously strike microscopic glass pellets filled with deuterium and tritium. The laser pulse heats the outer region of the pellet creating a minute explosion which then compresses the deuterium and tritium and produces a fusion reaction which lasts for 10 to 20 trillionths of a second.

In a power plant application, a series of pellets will be dropped into a target area where repeated laser bursts will be fired.

Under construction now at Los Alamos is the $62 million Antares project, which lab officials say will be fully operational in 1984. Like Princeton's TFTR, it is expected to demonstrate "break even," but in the inertial confinement field.

At Lawrence Livermore, construction on a $200 million project known as Nova is underway, which is also expected to achieve the break even point. It is expected to be operational in 1985.

Current research in the inertial confinement field has concentrated on laser development, fabrication of the target pellets and interaction of the pellets with the lasers.

In both magnetic and inertial confinement research thus far, the majority of research has focused on successful development of the inner core of the reactor. The development of the outer part of the reactor, which would transfer energy from the fusion reaction into heat, is also underway. Its development is not expected to present as difficult engineering problems as those encountered in core development.

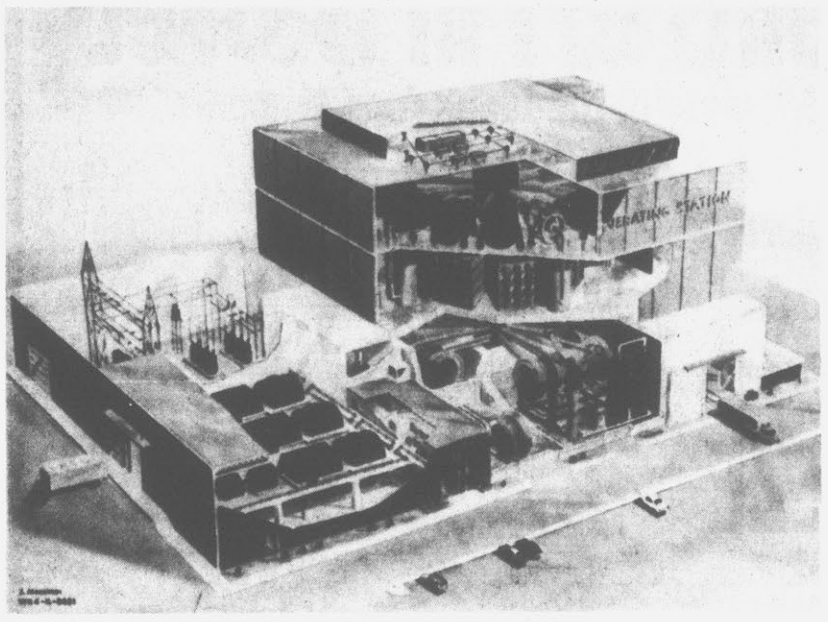

While most scientists working on fusion reaction believe fission reactors must continue to be used, they quickly point out the tremendous advantages of the fusion devices.

"Whereas fission has the disadvantages of using rather limited fuel resources (uranium) and having to deal with highly radioactive by-products, fusion will use deuterium extracted from water and have much less residual radioactivity with which to contend," said Los Alamos scientist Milton D. Machalek in a review of the lab's ZT-40 magnetic confinement project.

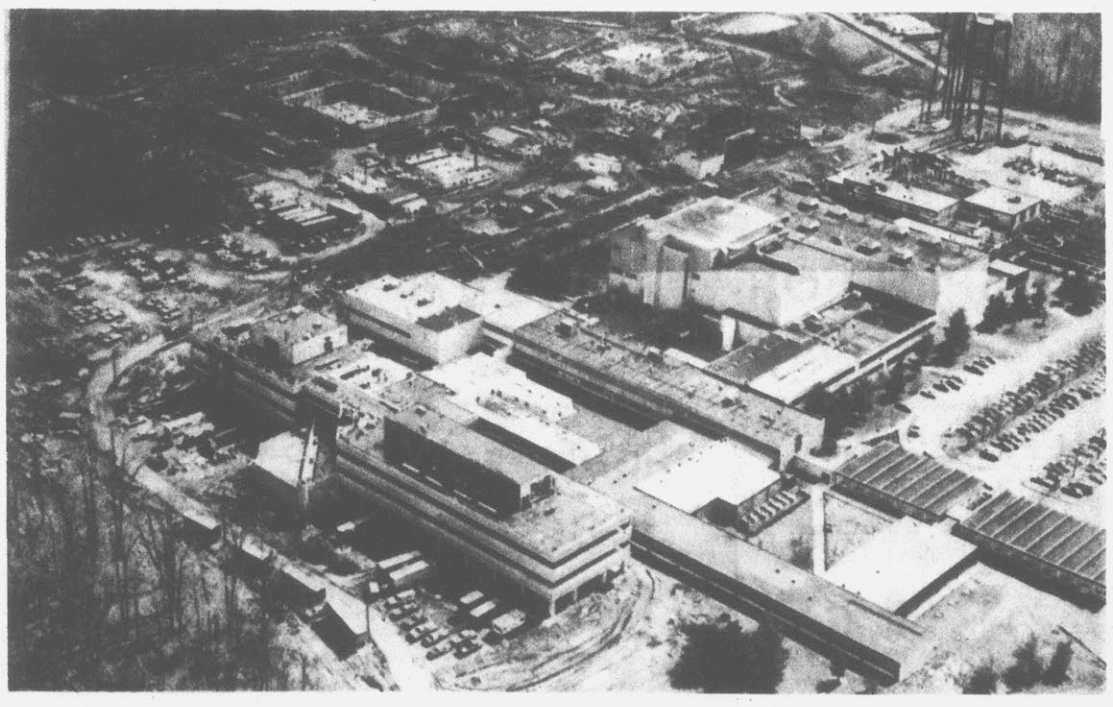

Dr. Roger Perkins, head of the Los Alamos laser fusion program, said fusion reactors do not have the potential to go into an uncontrolled reaction like fission reactors used in the Three Mile Island power plant.

"In the fusion process, you have to use an initiator like a laser or injection into a magnetic field to sustain a reaction," he said. "If you run into a problem, you simply turn off the driver. It's as simple as turning off the circuit breaker. In a fission reactor, all these things are internal and there is the potential you could lose control of them and have a melt-down."

Dreicer says that if the superheated plasma in a fusion reaction comes in contact with another medium, the reaction simply ends instantly.

In a primer on laser fusion, Los Alamos scientists D.A. Freiwald and T.G. Frank note that fusion power generation "involves minimal hazard from nuclear waste by-products."

"Fusion does not create the wide range of radioactive products comparable in toxicity to (those)... created by fission," their report says. "It is estimated that the potential radiation biological hazard from the structural materials in a laser fusion per plant would be one-tenth that of the fission products and less than one-hundredth that of the plutonium in a fission breeder reactor giving the same power output."

Scientists say the only major potentially dangerous element produced by fusion reaction is tritium, and most of it could be reprocessed for the reactor's fuel. The reactor cavity structure would become radioactive after several years of operation, but scientists say the problem is less severe than in a fission reactor because of the short life of the isotopes involved in fusion reaction.

Transporting fuel to the plant would involve relatively few problems, since water provides the two basic elements for the reaction. Likewise, there would be virtually no radioactive waste products to be hauled away from the plant since the tritium is recycled.

Freiwald and Frank also say that advanced nuclear fusion plants "may convert nuclear energy into electricity more efficiently than present designs."

"This increased efficiency would greatly reduce thermal pollution, if such advanced concepts can be shown to be economical," they said.

With the tremendous potential for fusion energy, scientists say they are disappointed the research programs do not receive better funding from the federal government.

In the current fiscal year, the Department of Energy allocated $356 million for magnetic confinement programs. For next fiscal year, the amount recommended is $364 million, barely a 2 percent increase. Laser fusion programs did not fare as well, with the federal government's proposed $146 million expenditure for the 1980 fiscal year, barely 1.3 percent above current spending.

Scientists are are quick to point out that excessive funding would be unnecessary.

"Even if we had the money, there just aren't enough qualified people around to work on this type of project," Dreicer said.

But Furth said a little additional money would allow fusion research "to grow at a natural rate."

"The present rate of growth is not such as to allow the natural progress that could occur," he said.

Several scientists interviewed said they are uncertain about the impact of the Three Mile Island incident on future funding for fusion research programs. However, they generally agree that the increasing severity of the energy crisis will mean more dollars for fusion energy research.

But even if there was enough money for growth at a "natural rate" and more qualified researchers, scientists say it is doubtful that the date for the first commercial fusion reactor could be advanced substantially.

In his office overlooking the construction site for the Antares project, Perkins drew a chart on a blackboard showing the probable timetable for completion of various fusion research programs.

"It takes us a minimum of 10 years to get a nuclear reactor on line in the United States," he says. "In Japan, they can do it in four."

Unless the federal government takes steps to reduce the time required for development of nuclear plants, Perkins said, the timetable won't be substantially altered.

"But of course it may not matter anyway," he said. He smiled and pointed to the year 2010 on the chart. "The bulldozers building the power plants will probably run out of fuel about there."

Goiter Control Effort Urged

NEW YORK (AP) — Three international organizations — the World Food Council, the United Nations' Children's Fund and the World Health Organization — have urged 19 countries to join a program to control endemic goiter in the next decade.

The ailment is caused by a lack of iodine in the diet. Endemic goiter is widespread in the world, particularly in mountainous areas.

Cretinism or other forms of mental deficiency and neurological disorders are frequent in children born to mothers with the disease.

But doctors say goiter can be prevented easily at low cost by adding iodine to table salt. It is estimated that more than 200 million persons suffer from goiter.

Sight Loss Inconvenient

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio (AP) — Ron Abrams talks about his computer programming job at Wright Patterson Air Force Base. He discusses his part-time auto-repair business and his interest in roller skating, camping and other hobbies.

But he has little to say about being blind.

Abrams, 37, a native of Salem, Ohio, had congenital glaucoma, an ailment that he battled until he finally lost for good at age 17.

"I knew there was always a possibility of losing what little sight I had," Abrams said of his situation. "But I had always tried to lead a normal life.

"When I was undergoing treatment, I had to make periodic trips to Youngstown to see my doctor. Youngstown was a pretty good distance from Salem, so I had to develop a sense of independence early because I ended up staying in a Youngstown boarding house on several occasions.

"My folks wouldn't settle for dependency and they never peddled the pity routine."

His failing sight was diagnosed early in life and Abrams' parents began preparing him for a productive life in a world of darkness. He began his formal education early and was enrolled in Braille classes while he was still able to see.

His instructor at the Rayen School in Youngstown was Dr. Colleen Powers and Abrams' father still credits her with "helping us realize we need to treat Ron as you would anyone else."

"Ron seemed to handle his blindness very well," said Dr. Powers, now retired and living at Hubbard. "I made a practice of not discussing anyone's handicap, and I think they learned to accept it as a foregone conclusion."

"I don't like the word handicap," Abrams said of his blindness. "I prefer to think of it as an inconvenience."

His ability to compensate for this inconvenience has to be proven at times to skeptics.

His wife, Lea, terms the reaction of skeptics as "polite discrimination." She said Abrams was no stranger to this form of discrimination.

The Slow-Reader Label Not Always Applicable

By LISA LEVITT
Associated Press Writer

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Today's problem reader won't necessarily be tomorrow's illiterate. In fact, says Anabel Newman, an Indiana University education professor, today's low achievers in grade school can be tomorrow's college graduates.

"I worked with a boy in fifth grade who not only could not read, he would not read," she says. "He has now finished his master's in fine arts; he has had paintings displayed in the Metropolitan (Museum of Art), and he is reading voluminously in the areas he's interested in."

The young man's struggle against the odds of being pigeon-holed as a functional illiterate along with some 20 million other Americans is chronicled in a long-range study begun by Mrs. Newman in 1964 in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Of the 400 first-graders pegged as low achievers, 310 remained in the study at the end of the first year. Of those, 135 were located when they reached 11th grade. Based on tests and interviews with them, she concluded that 89 were no longer low achievers but were at or above average.

Finally, on 20 who reached 12th grade, she did case histories based on interviews with students and parents, tests, graphs of achievement for each school year. Of those, half remained low achievers but the other 10 were considered achievers.

What made the difference? Mrs. Newman decided it was five factors: Interest, motivation, models, pressure and perserverance.

"I would see certain kinds of things as being terribly basic: A certain kind of caring attitude in the home mixed with good teaching in which teachers are sensitive to what kids need ... and would push them hard enough so that they measure up to the standards set for them.

All of her test pupils had below normal general learning ability on the basis of the Metropolitan Readiness Test they took in first grade. Yet, she says, those children given the five variables went on to successful academic careers.

While her group did poorly on reading competency tests, she said they scored about average on general intelligence tests — which turned out to be one of the most accurate predictors of their potential.

"These were not dumb kids. But they were kids who were going in a little bit different direction sometimes than what society would say they ought to be going," she says.

Unfortunately, she added, most such youngsters are immediately categorized as problem children.

"I worked with one child who had been labeled and scheduled for special education. He turned out to be a very artistic child. He was not mentally retarded. He had never been trained to read, but he should never have been placed in special education.

Hazards Avoided In Air Setting

NEW YORK (UPI) — The air setting on a clothes dryer is useful for drying plastic and rubber articles such as shower curtains, tablecloths and baby pants that heat drying might damage. Placing three or four clean, dry bath towels in the dryer with these articles helps absorb moisture during the air cycle.

Rubber-backed scatter rugs should also be dried on the air setting, one medium size or two small rugs at a time.

Never use heat with foam rubber or plastic articles — it could damage them or cause a fire, says the soap and detergent industry trade association.

Earhart Quilt Most Popular

CINCINNATI, Ohio (UPI) — Amelia Earhart was the favorite subject among entrants in the Fifth Annual National Quilt Square Contest.

The 1978 theme was famous women and their accomplishments. Besides Miss Earhart, the women most often portrayed were Helen Keller, Florence Nightingale, Eleanor Roosevelt and Betsy Ross.

More than 300 quilters entered from 47 states. The 30 winners, representing 19 states, each received a $35 award.

Their squares were set and hand-stitched into a quilt that was added to the Mountain Mist collection of the Stearns & Foster Co., the contest sponsor.

BOOKLET AVAILABLE

A booklet which points out the recreational facilities and historic sites of North Carolina's coastal plains has been prepared by Carolina Telephone.

The handbook is called "Welcome to Eastern North Carolina," Carolina Telephone reported, and is intended to give the highlights of the area from the surf to the piedmont.

The company said that it has distributed booklets to the welcome centers, chambers of commerce in many of the towns which it serves, and to the N.C. Travel and Tourism Division. The pamphlets are available at the offices of Carolina Telephone's district commercial and marketing managers and community relations managers.

Day Care

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Plans to develop a state-wide day-care program were announced Friday by the secretary of the state Department of Human Resources. The program will be aimed at making quality day care more accessible to low-and middle-income families with working mothers.

Human Resources Secretary Sarah T. Morrow said the day-care programs will be moved from the department's Social Services Division to the Division of Plans and Operations. She said the switch will give the program more visibility and flexibility.

"There are approximately 13 counties in our state with no certified day-care centers and many areas of our state have very few day-care centers," Mrs. Morrow said. "I am concerned about providing day-care arrangements for those families who must work in order to be self-sufficient. Our primary goal is to assist counties in implementing coordinated child-care services."

Mrs. Morrow said the Plans and Operations Division will provide technical and consultation services to anyone who wants to develop child-care services. Assistance will also be given to day-care operators who want to expand or upgrade their services, she said.

The department has requested more than $10 million from the General Assembly to operate the program through 1981. Mrs. Morrow said the money would be used to purchase day-care from private profit and non-profit day-care operations.

Mrs. Morrow said the purchases would allow the department to provide nearly 3,000 additional day-care slots next year and 6,000 slots the following year.

In addition, $750,000 has been requested to provide grants to non-profit groups who want to upgrade or develop day-care facilities.

U.S. Secretary of State George Marshall promoted aid to Europe as "cheaper than war" in 1948 and received the 1953 Nobel Peace Prize for European Recovery program.

Workers Might Come Back

NEWPORT NEWS (AP) — Striking Steelworkers at Newport News Shipbuilding might be back at work April 23 — or might not — depending on the shipyard's response to their demands.

Rejecting their leaders' recommendation to suspend the strike unconditionally Monday, the rank-and-file voted Friday to demand first that the shipyard drop its requirement that all strikers sign an "unconditional offer to return."

In a telegram sent to Edward J. Campbell, president of Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., the union said workers would return to their jobs a week from Monday.

"We reject, however, the conditions the company has heretofore publicly announced it would impose on returning strikers, including the unnecessary, arbitrary and deliberately provocative requirement they sign individual waivers or offers," the telegram said.

Shipyard spokesman Tom Olds said Friday night the company would not comment until it received the telegram.

The union's local executive board voted 22-9 Monday to call off the walkout a week later, fearing protracted legal proceedings could weaken the strikers' resolve.

The shipyard then announced it would take the strikers back only if they signed the one sentence agreement "I make an unconditional agreement to return to work."

Basically that means the workers can't ask for pay for the time they were on strike or asked to be returned to his or her specific pre-strike job, said shipyard spokesman Tom Olds.

"They are asking people to sign a blank check," said Bruce Thrasher, Steelworkers district director, after the closed meeting at the Hampton Coliseum.

"When we made this effort in good faith, they threw up a roadblock. This is a typical doublecross and refusal to deal in good faith by Tenneco," the shipyard's Houston-based parent company.

Friday's meeting was called to explain the leaders' original decision and vote on it.

The crowd — estimated at 6,000 by the union and at 5,000 by Coliseum officials — was quick to show its sentiments.

The boos when union leaders got up to speak and cheers when workers called for a continued strike could be heard by reporters waiting outside the Coliseum.

"I'm not here to dictate this decision. We are going to discuss it and if you-all don't agree, we may change it," Thrasher said.

"No matter what you decide to do, remember one thing. This strike has won the admiration and support not only of labor in this state, but throughout the world."

When union spokesman Bill Edwards was asked why the meeting had been closed, he said, "We've got a little family dispute here and there's going to be some squabbling."

After it was over, Thrasher said, "We had a lively debate today, and free and open discussion. But we came out unified and we're stronger for it."

The Steelworkers struck the shipyard Jan. 31 over the yard's refusal to recognize the union and its victory over the Peninsula Shipbuilders Association in a union election a year before.

That refusal earned the company an unfair labor practices ruling from the National Labor Relations Board, which the yard took o the 4th .S. Circuit Court of Appeals, starting the long legal process that union leaders fear could weaken the strike.

That legal battle is now in the hands on Melvin Welles, the NLRB administrative law judge who Monday completed hearings ordered by the appeals court on the yard's claim of vote fraud in the union election.

The shipyard, the Steelworkers and the PSA have indicated they might appeal Welles' decision and the subsequent NLRB ruling, meaning additional months in court.

Withdraw Request

By United Press International

A mining company has withdrawn its application to prospect for uranium in the Pisgah National Forest in western North Carolina and several conservation groups now say the areas should be designated as federally protected wilderness areas.

The French American Metals Corporation has withdrawn a request to drill in the Lost Cove and Harper Creek areas of the Pisgah National Forest. In the recent Roadless Area Review and Evaluation conducted by the U.S. Forest Service, these areas were recommended for further study pending the outcome of the uranium exploration.

Now that FRAMCO has given up its efforts to prospect in Harper Creek and Lost Cove, the Sierra Club says the areas should be protected as wilderness.

Analysts Seeking Answers Posed By Nuclear Accident

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Along with Congress and a special commission appointed by President Carter, Wall Street analysts have set to work seeking answers to questions posed by the Three Mile Island nuclear accident in Pennsylvania.

Government officials last week declared the crisis over at the nuclear power facility, and progress continued toward a recommended "cold shutdown" of the facility.

From investors' point of view, however, it remained to be seen how seriously the incident would affect the electric utility and nuclear fuel and equipment industries, as well as the nation's already pressing energy problems.

As United Business Service, a Boston advisory firm, put it, "The Harrisburg nuclear accident is a further setback in the effort to find solutions to the country's growing energy predicament."

While such questions were being debated this past week, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 5.19 to 870.50, ending a run of five consecutive weekly gains. The markets were closed on Good Friday.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index dropped .51 to 57.53, and the American Stock Exchange market value index lost 1.42 to 180.32.

Big Board volume averaged 29.70 million shares a day, down from 34.74 million the week before.

On Wednesday President Carter named an 11-member commission to investigate the accident and to report its findings in six months.

Separately, Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., and Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., were making plans for congressional inquiries.

Brokers, meanwhile, began to issue a spate of reports on the investment implications of the accident.

"At a minimum, any momentum for increased use of nuclear power that might have developed since the OPEC price increases of the past four months probably has evaporated," said Warren Shimmerlik, energy analyst at the firm of L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towbin.

"Not only will anti-nuclear activity rise, but a large segment of the population that was willing to give nuclear power a chance (in part swayed by its flawless safety record) may become disenchanted.

"Moreover, many politicians, who never had a great deal to gain by supporting nuclear power, may be increasingly reluctant to publicly favor continued growth, particularly now that the credibility of the nuclear industry is vulnerable to attack by anti-nuclear forces, whose own credibility has been sharply increased.

"As a result, we would expect electric utilities to avoid ordering new nuclear power plants for some period of time. This might occur by choice or, conceivably, by government edict."

"Of more immediate concern for nuclear-related companies is the outlook for plants currently operating or under construction. It seems unlikely that operating plants will be shut down en masse, because of the economic ramifications and probable blackouts that would occur."

But Shimmerlik said there was a possibility of rotating shutdowns of plants for inspection.

"The status of nuclear plants under construction may also be in limbo. If a moratorium on new plants should be declared, utilities may be reluctant to continue construction of partially built plants."

The Merrill Lynch Market Letter observed: "On a longer range basis, we look for further stretchouts in the already long and complicated process of building nuclear power plants.

"Orders for new plants, meanwhile, are likely to continue at a virtual standstill, possibly slowing the expected advance of nuclear power's share of U.S. electric generating capacity from last year's 9 percent to 15 percent by the mid-1980s."

As for the coal industry, which has attracted some interest from investors as a possible beneficiary of the recent developments, Shimmerlik had this to say:

"Any moratorium on nuclear power plant construction should result in an increase in coal-fired plants. It should be noted, however, that this shift probably would not be reflected for many years since it takes at least eight years to build a coal-fired plant."

Corporations Fail Anti-Inflation Rules

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fifty-three of the nation's largest industrial corporations — including big providers of fuel and food — have failed to pledge formally to abide by federal anti-inflation guidelines, the government has indicated.

Among them are such well-known companies as Mobil, Standard Oil of Ohio, Kellogg and United Brands.

Their names became known Friday in a roundabout manner through an announcement by President Carter's anti-inflation advisers.

The Council on Wage and Price Stability, which oversees the voluntary anti-inflation effort, released a list of 447 large industrial corporations that "have made an explicit commitment to comply with the price standard."

The council refused to name companies that have not pledged support, explaining through spokesman Ed Dooley that "they're not necessarily in violation of the guidelines; they just haven't made an explicit commitment."

The 53 names were determined by comparing the council's list of 447 with the corporations identified by Fortune magazine as the biggest 500 in the United States. Those were the 500 companies the council had asked for commitments to agree to hold prices in check.

None of the 53, a council statement said, "openly opposed the anti-inflation program." The council said some have problems with parts of the complex price standard. Others may be unable to respond because of bankruptcy or merger proceedings, it conjectured.

The few corporate spokesmen available for comment this Easter weekend emphasized that absence from the council's list did not necessarily mean their companies were ignoring the guidelines.

John Flint, a spokesman for Mobil, said, "There's some discussion between Mobil and the council over interpretation of some of the regulations. In the meantime, Mobil is in compliance."

And Chuck Partidge of Standard Oil of Ohio said, "I don't know why we are not on" the list of companies in compliance. He added, "My recollection is that we wrote a letter back to (them) in February."

The guidelines call for wage increases of no more than 7 percent this year and price increases a half percentage point below the average of the last two years.

Council chairman Alfred E. Kahn and President Carter both have accused businesses, especially small-and middle-sized firms, of failing to comply with the price standards.

Violations Are Cited

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Fire officials say they will cite a 20-story Holiday Inn here for fire violations after a blaze forced the evacuation of about 200 guests.

The fire chief said he would charge the hotel for "illegal partitions" in the basement where the fire broke out Friday.

A hotel spokesman was not immediately available for comment.

High Point Faces Fine

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — High Point faces a possible $18,000 fine for failing to promptly notify state officials that its West Side Sewage Treatment Plant was discharging incompletely treated sewage.

Russell Radford, regional supervisor for the state's division of environmental management, said Friday his agency will investigate the city's failure to report the problem for nearly three weeks.

Frank Ward, superintendent of water and sewage treatment plants in High Point, said the plant first failed March 25 when a toxic chemical dumped into a city sewer disabled two of the three treatment stages.

Ward said the toxic chemical has been tentatively identified as toluene, a widely used paint thinner, killed bacteria which eats organic products in the sewage. Since the incident, the plant, one of two sewsage treatment facilities at High Point, has been discharging about three million gallons a day of improperly treated waste water.

Radford said his office was not notified of the problem until Thursday, 18 days after city officials determined that the plant was not functioning properly.

"They're meant to call us immediately (when) they know something has gone wrong and definitely within 24 hours," he said.

Ward said he failed to notify the state agency immediately because "we didn't realize the impact. It's like a human being who starts getting sick. You can't tell how sick he is."

Radford said the city could be fined more than $1,000 a day for failing to report the incident on time, but "I can't say if the fine will or will not happen."

Ward said the city is trying to catch those responsible for dumping the chemical but doubted the culprits could be identified. The discharge of the chemical violates state law.

Einstein's Theory Easier Than Reading Insurance Policy

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Tried reading one of your insurance policies lately? You might have more luck with Einstein's theory of relativity.

Supporters of a move in the General Assembly to require that insurance companies offer policies that are easy to understand say Einstein's work is more readable than the average automobile insurance policy sold in this state.

Separate bills are pending in insurance committees in both the state House and Senate that would require insurance companies to offer more readable, understandable policies for all types of coverages in North Carolina.

The bills are copied after new laws passed in Minnesota and a handful of other states, applying a readablity test designed in 1949 by Rudolph Flesch.

His test, called the Flesch scale analysis, would be the legal standard for readability under the legislation filed by Senate Insurance Committee Chairman Sen. Carolyn Mathis, D-Mecklenburg, and in the House by Rep. Marilyn Bissell, R-Mecklenburg.

Both were prompted by the tangle of language that fills standard insurance contracts.

"In trying to understand the whole insurance system itself," Mrs. Mathis said in an interview, "It seemed to me that the problem is people don't understand what they are buying."

If one of the bills is enacted, insurance companies doing business in North Carolina would be required to have their policies checked for readability by the state Department of Insurance.

To measure the ease of reading, the Flesch test involves computing the length of sentences and the number of syllables in words used. A score is given according to the degree of difficulty of the entire policy, with higher numbers given to more readable texts.

Mrs. Mathis' measure would require every policy to receive a score of at least 40, indicating it could probably be understood by someone with a 12th grade education. The House bill would require a 50 score, or 10th grade level.

By contrast, Mrs. Mathis said, the standard automobile insurance policy sold in North Carolina scored a 10 on the test. Einstein's work scored 17.

"I think because of all the problems we've had with insurance in North Carolina, this is just something we ought to have," she said. "Most of the companies that operate here already have readable policies in use in other states."

Six other states currently require readable policies either by law or insurance department regulation, said Bill Hale, a legislative staff attorney who drafted Mrs. Mathis' bill.

The state Insurance Department supports either bill, said Ron Raxter, a department attorney who worked on the House bill. Some companies are already offering easier-to-read life insurance policies in North Carolina, though none are simple enough to pass the Flesch test standards of the legislation, he said.

None are in use here for casualty insurance, such as auto coverage, he said.

Reaction from the insurance industry toward the legislation has been generally — but not entirely — cool.

Brad Adcock, lobbyist for Blue Cross-Blue Shield of N.C., told a House Insurance Committee hearing recently that his company is trying to make its policy descriptions easier to read.

"The insured person needs to have something in his hands that thoroughly explains in an understandable way just what coverage he has," he said.

But Adcock said the company has found it difficult to write a policy that simple. And he said it found the Flesch scale inadequate — it measures the length of words and sentences, but cannot gauge whether all the sentences clearly convey the meaning.

Ruffin Bailey, veteran lobbyist for the American Insurance Association, says his companies are trying to make their policies simpler but do not want a law requiring them to meet the standard.

"I don't believe it is the crisis some say it is," he said. "I dare say not one out of every 100 has ever attempted to read their contract of insurance. How many people even know what company they've got insurance with?"

A number of his companies, he said, are now offering automobile policies simpler than others. But meeting the bills' standards, he said, would be difficult to do without discarding accepted legal terms.

"I expect you're gong to create more problems than you'll solve by passing this," he said.

Besides ordering simpler policies, the legislation would order the state Insurance Department to issue consumer guides, comparing coverages and prices of competing companies in various lines of insurance.

The Senate bill is now in a subcommittee and there is pressure from the insurance industry, Mrs. Mathis acknowledged, to turn it into a resolution that only urges companies to offer simpler language.

Grounded Teenager Felt Better Inside

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 16-year-old girl who was grounded for three weeks. I couldn't even have my friends over. I was very, very angry, but my parents really did me a favor, and I'd like to tell other kids about it, and maybe it will help them.

The first week I was really mad. I wouldn't speak to my parents. The nicer they were to me, the nastier I was—slamming doors, turning the radio way up just to bug them, etc.

Then I had a talk with my favorite teacher. She advised me to use the time constructively, so I cleaned my room from top to bottom—rearranged all my clothes and sorted them out. I gave the stuff I'd outgrown to the Goodwill, sewed on buttons that had been off a long time, etc.

I got way ahead in my history, science and English. I also read two good books and caught up on letter writing I'd put off for a long time.

I was still mad at my parents when I was around them, but inside I felt a lot better about myself.

Hope you think it's worth passing along.

UNGROUNDED AT LAST

DEAR UNGROUNDED: You bet it's worth passing along. You didn't say why you were grounded, but I'll bet you'll never do it again.

DEAR ABBY: I cheated a little on my income tax and haven't been able to sleep very well lately. Any suggestions?

TOSSING AND TURNING

DEAR T and T: Yes. Send the IRS $500. And if you still can't sleep, send them the balance.

DEAR ABBY: Is adultery always wrong? I have a married friend I'll call Jim who has a girlfriend I'll call Joyce. When Jim and Joyce are together it is obvious that they are madly in love.

Jim was trapped into marriage by a girl who got herself pregnant so Jim would have to marry her.

A few years ago, when Jim fell in love with Joyce, he was all set to leave his wife and marry Joyce, but his wife deliberately got herself pregnant, and Jim was trapped again.

The only reason Jim is staying with his wife is because of his two children. Joyce understands the situation and accepts it, so she doesn't pressure Jim for a divorce.

So what's wrong with Jim grabbing whatever happiness he can? Isn't this affair better than breaking up a family?

A FRIEND OF BOTH

DEAR FRIEND: Even if Jim and Joyce were never caught in this adulterous affair it would still be wrong. When a man really loves a woman he wants her by his side publicly instead of sneaking around back alleys. Divorce is legal, respectable and dignified. Adultery is cheap, shoddy and deceitful.

And as for Jim's wife "deliberately getting herself pregnant" . . . that's not possible. She had to have Jim's deliberate cooperation.

DEAR ABBY: I'm an eighth-grade teacher who thought your column, "Rules for Baby-sitters" was so valuable that I had copies made for all my students. We discussed your rules in class, and one boy suggested this additional rule:

"Write down the address of the house where you're sitting and keep it next to the telephone in case you have to call the police or fire department."

Oftentimes sitters know how to get to a house but don't know the address. This is very important when calling the police or fire department.

INDIANA TEACHER

DEAR TEACHER: Thanks for an excellent addition. Here's another from Portland, Ore.

"The parent (or guardian) should leave written permission with the sitter giving the doctor or emergency hospital the right to treat a child in case of illness or accident. Without written permission, a minor cannot be treated."

by Rosalie Trotman

Joann Norris, daughter of a Greenville woman, has been named North Carolina Teacher of the Year.

Mrs. Norris, who teaches first grade at Garner Elementary School, is the daughter of Mrs. Bessie Payne Gunther of 302-B Skinner St., Greenville.

The announcement was made by State Supt. of Public Instruction Craig Phillips. Mrs. Norris' principal, Jack E. Nance said, "My experience with Mrs. Norris — and I've been with her for six years — has been that her kids are better prepared for the next step in our program than kids from the average teacher."

Mrs. Norris, who lives in Clayton, has taught in Garner for nine years and has been a teacher 15 years. An Apex native, she graduated from Fuquay-Varina High School and attended the University of North Carolina at Greensboro on scholarship. Her first teaching job was at Fuquay-Varina High.

A former president of the Wake County chapter of the North Carolina Association of Educators, Mrs. Norris was named Wake County Teacher of the Year last May by the Wake Assn. of Classroom Teachers.

As the state winner, Mrs. Norris will represent North Carolina in the national Teacher of the Year contest. She will not be assigned to a classroom next year, but will be "an ambassador for education" for the state. "I hope I can spend the next year saying that there are positive and good things going on in classrooms," she said. In accepting the award, Mrs. Norris told the State Board of Education that educators need "to stop paying lip service" to their top priority — teaching. She cited a recent national survey that showed teaching now ranks fifth among teachers' top concerns. Record keeping, student discipline, testing and diagnosis are ahead of teaching, according to the survey, she said. "Someone has said our hope for the future is in our children. I frankly believe our hope lies in the teachers of these children."

"Teaching seems to be bombarded constantly by negativism," she went on. "I think it is important to let people know that there are many good things happening in the schools and that teachers have a commitment to working hard."

Miss Stox, Mr. White Wed

ROXBORO — Miss Stella Diane Stox and Richard Young White were united in marriage Saturday at 3 p.m. in a double ring ceremony.

The Rev. Gordon Joyner assisted by the Rev. Edgar Whitlock performed the ceremony. A program of music was presented by Mrs. Frank Kimbrough, organist, and Mrs. Edgar Whitlock, vocalist. The ceremony was directed by Mrs. Randolph Harrelson of Newport News, Va.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Stox Jr. of Roxboro. She is the granddaughter of the late Mrs. Minnie T. Baker of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of the late Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Hunt White of Henderson.

The ceremony was performed in the Westwood Baptist Church.

Mrs. Augusta Ferguson of Washington was honor attendant and Lt. Col. William H. White of Lorton, Va., brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

Bridesmaids included Mrs. Libby Stover of Elm City, Ms. Phyllis Barwick of Wilson, and Mrs. Maxine Clayton of Roxboro. Flower girls were Miss Diane Stover of Elm City and Miss Sara Ferguson of Washington.

The bride chose a formal gown of ivory silk chiffon over peau de soie designed with an empire waist, high neck and shephedress sleeves. Appliques of Venise lace adorned the bodice and upper sleeves of the gown. A chapel train flowed from the waist.

Her fingertip veil of silk bridal illusion was adorned with appliques of matching Venise lace attached to a lace and seed pearl covered Juliet cap. She carried a cascade of spring flowers including daisies, lilies, roses, tulips, daffodils, baby's breath and stephanotis.

The attendants wore formal gowns of sea mist green silk jersey fashioned with an empire bodice with a scoop neckline featuring a chiffon removable bertha collar. They wore a picture hat highlighted with a silk ribbon and cluster of silk daisies. They carried baskets of spring flowers including tulips, daisies, roses, daffodils and baby's breath.

The flower girls were dressed in long yellow dresses of dotted swiss styled with an empire waist and puff sleeves adorned with a white eyelet pinafore. They each carried a small basket of spring flowers.

The couple will be living in Raleigh after a wedding trip to St. Thomas, Virgin Islands.

The bride graduated from Roxboro High School and ACC with a degree in primary education. She was a member of Delta Zeta Sorority. She presently teaches kindergarten at Rock Ridge School, Wilson County. The bridegroom graduated from Henderson High School, ACC with a B.S. in mathematics and ECU with a B.S. in business administration. He was a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon social fraternity. He works at Corning Glass Works, Raleigh.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall given by the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Yarborough greeted guests and Mr. and Mrs. Coy Thomas said good-byes. Ms. Mary Sue Richardson presided at the register.

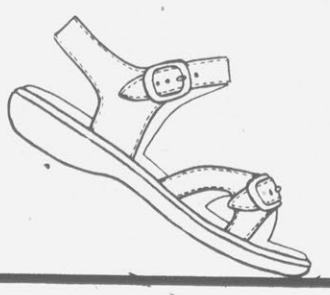

Ms. Lee Van Thomas poured punch and Mrs. Sandy Newman served cake. The refreshment table was centered with an arrangement of mixed spring flowers flanked by white tapers in silver candelabra.

PHYLL'S CARROT BUTTER CAKE

My sister sometimes serves this as a brunch dessert.

- 1¼ cups all-purpose flour
- ¾ teaspoon baking powder
- ½ teaspoon baking soda
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon cinnamon
- ½ cup butter
- ¾ cup sugar
- ½ teaspoon vanilla
- Grated rind of ½ of a medium lemon (1½ teaspoons)
- 2 large eggs
- ½ cup plain yogurt
- 1¼ cups loosely packed finely grated pared carrot
- 1-3rd cup chopped (medium-fine) walnuts
- Glaze, recipe follows

Stir together flour, baking powder, baking soda, salt and cinnamon. Cream butter, sugar, vanilla and lemon rind; beat in eggs, one at a time, until blended. Stir in flour mixture in 3 additions, alternatively with yogurt, just until smooth each time. Stir in carrots and nuts. Turn into a greased and floured 8-inch square cake pan. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — about 40 minutes. Let cake stand in pan on a rack about 10 minutes; loosen edges and turn out on a rack; turn right side up with another rack; cool completely. Spread Glaze over top and sides.

Glaze: Into 3 ounces soft cream cheese gradually beat ¾ cup confectioners' sugar, 1 teaspoon vanilla and enough milk (about 1½ teaspoons) to make a soft spreading consistency.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I read somewhere that in 1977, copy machines throughout the world regurgitated 226 billion copies of everything from annual reports to birth announcements.

It seems anything worth saying once can improve if you produce it again and again.

At first, I thought it was a business-oriented piece of equipment, but when all my friends began getting them for their homes, I realized how much I needed one.

As I told my husband, "A home copier would really save us a lot of money."

"What would you use it for?"

"Are you crazy? I could duplicate all of our birth certificates and our medical records and your discharge from the Army, not to mention a Christmas newsletter to 300 of our intimate friends."

"You need a copier like the Osmonds need a cavity fighter."

"You are saying then that what I do is not worth saving. I've seen your memos and they don't exactly belong in the archives. After all, I like to run my home with the same efficiency as you run your office."

That hit a nerve and by the next week, I was busy at my copier.

The first week alone I turned out copies of every check we had ever written, our Social Security cards, driver's licenses, and warranties on all our small appliances. I made 60 copies of a garage sale notice for Mayva, 35 forms to leave for the milkman, and an inner-utility room memo regarding laundry left on the dryer longer than 60 days.

At a dinner party, I wheeled in the copier and turned on the button and asked, "How many of you want a copy of my recipe for Ambrosia Liver?" (They were obviously too stunned that a housewife was that efficient to say anything!)

One night my husband made his way through the pillars of white paper and said, "Aren't you going a little crazy with this thing? The next thing you know you'll go into cloning people."

I looked up from my copier, which was producing instructions for a current diet going through the neighborhood. "You know, I could cross a Dolly Parton, a Barbara Walters and a Carol Burnett that could make test tube productions obsolete!"

Cabbage does not develop a strong flavor if it is not overcooked. It's mild and sweet in flavor when shredded and cooked quickly and briefly with a little butter and a few tablespoons of water in a covered skillet. Watch the heat and cook only until the vegetable is tender-crisp.

More Than Just Mail-Delivery

NEW YORK (UPI) — The British Post Office is much more than a system for delivering mail, according to its visiting consultant, Alain de Cadenet.

The BPO also runs Britain's telephone and telegraph services and has been a public authority since 1969.

In its 1977-78 fiscal year, the BPO registered a $708-million profit, the largest surplus ever recorded by a British nationalized industry, including gas, electricity, steel, coal and the railways. The bulk of the profit came from telecommunications, but the Postal Service was in the black by $77 million, de Cadenet said.

During the past two weeks a group of dedicated girls spent their afternoons in practice sessions learning a pom pom routine, two cheers and four chants. The work was done in order to tryout for a position on the Rose High cheerleading squads.

Twenty-eight girls participated in the tryouts Wednesday for the junior varsity squad. Judged on neatness, voice, coordination, pep, originality in cheer and a gymnastic stunt, the new cheerleaders were selected by out-of-town judges.

Judged on the same categories as the JV, the new varsity members include Debbie Cannon, Jill Cargile, Sheila Collie, Marjorie Crane, Jennifer Davis, Angelene Edwards, Lori Jo Edwards, Rhonda Holland, Coleen Lemnah, Angie Peterson, Carla Tadlock, Sylvia Taylor, Veronica Ward and Kerri Warner.

Other selections made this week include those made by the Key Club and Keywanettes as the two clubs chose officers for next year.

The president-elect of the Key Club is Dan Mayo. Skip Hill will serve as vice president and Montro Streeter as secretary. Bill Lee will be the new sergeant-at-arms.

In Keywanettes this year's vice president, Laurie Smith was selected president. Other officers include Karen Wheeler, vice president, Coleen Lemnah, secretary, and Carla Tadlock, treasurer. Board members named were Jennifer Davis, Denise Bullock, Karen Kingsbury and Missy Dye.

The new members of the Haskett Chapter of the National Honor Society were inducted Thursday night in a ceremony held at the First Presbyterian Church. The guest speaker was Dr. Thomas Durham. Other speeches on the four qualities of NHS were made by Chuck Blake, Pat Moore, Jane Welborn and Hannah Taft. The presentation of pins and certificates was conducted by Til Jolly and Susan Tucker.

ECU To Host Energy Seminar

ECU News Bureau

A seminar, "Energy's Appropriate Technology Small Grants Program," has been scheduled for East Carolina University Wednesday, April 18, from 1 to 3 p.m.

The meeting will be held in Rawl Auditorium and is sponsored by the ECU Department of Industrial and Technical Education in cooperation with the N.C. Department of Commerce's Energy Division.

One of a series of seminars in ten North Carolina regions, the event is designed to bring together individuals and organizations who are participating in the state's Appropriate Technology Small Grants Program.

Interested persons are invited to attend, but since seating space is limited, preference will be given to those who have preregistered.

According to Jon Parker, technical assistance coordinator with the N.C. Department of Commerce, persons participating in the seminar are able to meet others with similar interests, receive assistance in writing grant proposals and learn about sources of additional funding for their energy-related projects.

Further information about the program is available by telephoning 1-800-662-7131. More details about the ECU seminar are available from seminar coordinator Paul Waldrop at the ECU School of Technology, telephone 757-6744 or 757-6707.

Tornado 'Sleuth' Studies Diasters

By ED LION

CHICAGO (UPI) — T. Theodore Fujita is an offbeat sleuth. His ballywick isn't crime. It's tornadoes.

Whenever a major tornado rips through an area, odds are Fujita, 59, professor of meterology at the University of Chicago, is there in its wake, garnering clues.

"I really consider myself a detective," Fujita said in an interview. "Just like the FBI looks for clues from a robber or murderer I'll search for clues from the tornado."

He will look at debris accumulation left by the tornado, pattern of damage and seek witnesses. Sometimes he gets lucky and finds a witness who snapped a picture.

Using all these clues and the help of computers, he can calculate how much winds a twister packed, its direction and other data.

He hopes his findings and studies of NASA high altitude photos of tornado-forming clouds will lead to quicker possible tornado detection, better protection from tornadic winds and aid in solving a mystery that still baffles meterologists — the exact causes of tornadoes, which pack the most violent winds on earth.

Fujita said his study of tornado destruction also may help in finding ways to better protect buildings against ravages of high winds. He works with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, giving data to the agency and targeting high risk areas to help it formulate anti-tornado guidelines for nuclear plants and storage depots.

"We want to make sure plants can withstand tornadic winds," he said. "Already one nuclear plant site under construction was hit by a tornado. The cooling tower — which is not for housing nuclear materials — was damaged. But we wouldn't want a place with radioactive substances to be damaged."

"Tornadoes are a strange beast," Fujita said in a tone a sheriff might use in describing an outlaw.

"They can be devastating, leaving much more damage in hard-hit areas than typhoons. And they occur more in the United States — the Midwest — than anywhere else in the world. But there are still a lot of unanswered questions about their exact cause."

The National Weather Service predicts more than 100 Americans may be killed by tornadoes this year.

Fujita does his clue-hunting for the weather service. During the March through June tornado season, he doesn't like to make any appointments.

"Who knows when a tornado or damaging funnel cloud will strike," he said. "And if its a big one I like to get to the scene immediately before the clues are cleared up."

In 1974, a year of widespread tornado damage, he was on the road for 40 days. He dubbed April 4 of that year the day of the "Super Outbreak" because 148 tornadoes touched down, including a twister in Xenia, Ohio, that killed about 25 people.

After going to the scene of the "crime," Fujita reports to the weather service whether the damage was caused by a tornado or just a high wind. In his 20 years as a tornado detective he has visited 300 sites and decided 250 of them were indeed tornado-devastated.

"Sometimes that can be important for insurance cases," he said. "For instance in Michigan, some insurances will cover tornado damage but not high winds."

Fujita said a tell-tale sign of a tornado is spotty damage — areas along a path of devastation interspersed with relatively unscathed areas. The spotty damage is caused because, within many tornadoes, there are spinning mini-tornadoes — called suction vortices.

Like police who have a crime lab, Fujita has a tornado lab — a room with a special tornado simulator.

A high speed fan creates a swirling mini-tornado from dry ice smoke and helps Fujita and his team of researchers manipulate and study tornadoes in a way that otherwise would be impossible.

"We've found some interesting things," he said. "Many have thought that mountains or lakes might stop tornadoes. But we found that not to be true by simulating those obstructions."

And Fujita has found that if the area around the simulated tornado is heated it will dissipate, leading him to believe perhaps inner cities — with their heat-generating industry and gas fumes — are protected. He is studying records in the hope of confirming the theory.

If the theory bears out, however, Fujita doubts that tornadoes could be warded off by heating areas.

"It would be impractical to heat those large areas," he said. "I doubt tornadoes can be curbed through modification."

Fujita has catalogued all tornados in the United States since 1916 and developed the Fujita scale — the equivalent of the Richter scale for earthquakes — to measure a tornado's intensity.

For all his traveling in tornado country, Fujita has never actually seen a real twister in action. But, he said, that doesn't affect his tornado detective work.

Alcoholism Up In Israel

CHICAGO (UPI) — Israel faces a growing problem of alcoholism, particularly among younger persons, says an Israeli physician in a guest editorial in an American Medical Association publication.

"Jews have been reported to be moderate drinkers and infrequent drunkards. During the last two decades it has become evident that Israel, too, faces a steadily growing problem of alcohol addiction," writes Marinel Sagiv, M.D., a pathologist at Kaplan Hospital, Rehovot, Israel.

Dr. Sagiv says that until the mid-60s, alcohol addicts were rather inconspicuous in the general population of Israel. They were middle-aged men or older, and most of them had been born abroad. Nearly all of them held jobs, had a steady income and a regular social life, he says.

Reports in the last 13 years indicate a sharp change in this pattern, Dr. Sagiv said.

In 1965 the lowest age of alcoholics admitted for the first time to psychiatric wards was 29 years.

In 1973 women were admitted for the first time, along with other alcoholics under the age of 25.

Ethnic composition of the alcoholic patients is of special interest, he writes. In one group of 29 alcoholics, 20 were Oriental Jews (12 from Yemen and eight from Morocco).

Most of the Israel alcoholics are Oriental Jews, and a high proportion are from Yemen. This despite the fact that Morocco and Yemen are Moslem countries where use of alcoholic beverage is forbidden.

Fashionable Homes Face Ruin From Sliding Earth

By JILL STEWART
Associated Press Writer

RANCHO PALOS VERDES, Calif. (AP) — The road along Portuguese Bend winds gently past wispy pepper trees and rambling ocean-view homes, its slightly cracked surface the only hint of a slow-motion disaster residents say is "tearing everybody up."

More than 30 fashionable houses in the Abalone Cove neighborhood of this affluent Los Angeles suburb are splitting and cracking inch by inch, victims of a creeping landslide that began last spring.

"When I noticed cracks in the ceiling last April, I thought I needed to paint again," said resident Jacqueline Moxley. Now, as the cracks slowly riddle her home from kitchen to back bedroom, Mrs. Moxley says "it just breaks your heart."

Shifting real estate is no stranger to Portuguese Bend. Some 150 homes not far from Abalone Cove were either destroyed or damaged between 1956 and 1958. But until last year, homes in the Cove section had remained untouched.

"It's amazing to watch," Mrs. Moxley said. "Monetarily and emotionally, it's tearing everybody up."

The once-choice homes are now impossible to sell at their pre-slide worth, and banks will not make loans to prospective buyers, according to residents.

"We're losing something we paid a lot of money for and worked for," said Maureen Griffin, a homeowner. "We're losing our biggest asset."

Melvyn Lewin said his $210,000 home is now "practically worthless." He said the four-to six-inch cracks in his floors "look like caverns" and open wider with each new rainfall.

Just next door, Lawrence Horan cut his slowly sliding garage away from his house to keep the rest of the building intact. But a few weeks ago the home began "pivoting around the fireplace," Horan said.

"I have a contractor coming out to cut another portion of my house off," he said. "The thing is moving very erratically."

Nearby, a two-acre palm-studded waterfront estate once used to film the comedy "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World," has suffered cracking throughout the grounds.

The owner, Mrs. Betty Hardin, put it up for sale last year for $875,000. "It's still on the market and I can't sell it," she said.

While the slide has turned most homeowners against the caprice of nature, it also has pitted some residents against local government.

Mrs. Griffin and Mrs. Moxley said the city and county should have warned residents about a slide possibility after a sewage pumping station nearby was damaged by ground movement three years ago.

DUE GROUND SLIPPAGE — Mrs. Betty Harden looks at the crack between her home and garage in the exclusive Portuguese Bend area where the slow slippage of the ground is damaging many homes in and around the neighborhood. (AP Laserphoto)

"If only we had known, we could have done something about it before it got like this," Mrs. Moxley said. "It's a real stab in the back."

But Mayor Ken Dyda of Rancho Palos Verdes said the city "had no privileged knowledge" that the homeowners didn't have.

"It's just like earthquakes," he said. "When you live in California and you haven't had one in awhile, you tend to forget about them."

Lewin said the city has dragged its feet on a geologist's report that said the slide might be stopped by pumping out ground water from heavy rains. Geologists think the extra water caused the slide.

However, Dyda said the city has "done the only thing you can do." It proclaimed Abalone Cove a disaster area.

The county recently agreed with the city in confirming the disaster rating. If the state follows suit, low interest loans for repairing damage would be made available to homeowners.

But because Abalone Cove is a private area with private roads, funds for halting the slide will have to come from residents, Dyda said.

He said the city is working on the introduction of state legislation to allow the residents of Abalone Cove to tax themselves to raise funds for restoring the land.

For Maureen Griffin, that amounts to the city and county doing nothing "unless we pay for it."

"Our homes are falling apart more every day and...they wonder why we're half crazy up here," she said.

Lord Bunberry Lost To Derby

LONDON (UPI) — One hundred and ninety-nine years ago this June, Lord Derby and Lord Bunberry flipped a coin to see which would put his name to a new race they had just decided to sponsor.

Lord Derby won and gave his name to the first of more than 200 races worldwide which have been named after the Derby, including the Kentucky Derby.

Imagine if Bunberry had won — it would be the "Bunberry" and the "Kentucky Bunberry," which sounds like a form of fruit muffin.

The 200th Derby (pronounced Darby) will be run at Epsom Downs in Surrey, 17 miles southwest of London, June 6. In honor of the event, Britain's Royal Academy will open an exhibition through July 1 called "Derby Day 200."

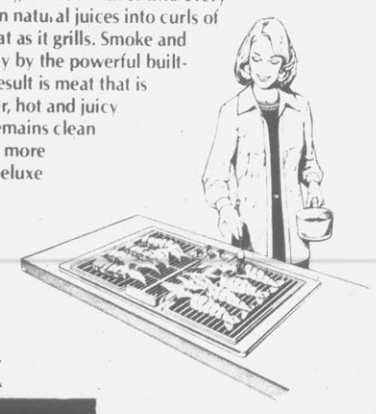

GRAY SIDEWALS

AKRON, Ohio (UPI) — A white outside sidewall strip lends elegance to the tires on today's cars, but in the early years of the century, the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. had an unusual approach to elegance. They made gray sidewalls, the same gray as the spats gentlemen wore over their highbutton shoes.

Switching Brand Trend

NEW YORK (UPI) — Brand switching becomes a way of life when family members take over supermarket shopping for working mothers, says a new survey.

The study by Cadwell Davis Savage, a New York City advertising agency, found that husbands in particular were apt to pick brands different from their wives' selections. And the more often they shopped, the more often the men chose different brands.

Although daughters were more likely to follow their mothers' choices, they still selected different brands 47 percent of the time.

Brand choices were not a matter of chance, said Neve Savage, director of account services. About two-thirds of the shoppers questioned said they had a specific reason for their choices.

Product categories in which the greatest changes occurred when other family members shopped were, in this order: beer, frozen main course meal, frozen pizza, bar soaps, toothbrushes, shampoo, mouthwash, hand lotion, frozen vegetables and soft drinks. The percentages ranged from 90 down to 66.

Two Incomes Can Be Trouble

UNIVERSITY, Ala. (UPI) — Sometimes two incomes per family are more trouble than they're worth, says professor Charles Leathers.

Leathers says careful study and planning are needed to prevent hidden moneyeaters from using up the extra money.

"The real moneyeaters arise when a wife and mother, for instance, takes a job and must supply transportation, child care and a new wardrobe in order to work."

A working wife may also have less time to prepare meals at home. When that happens, eating out increases and so does the amount of money spent on food.

Leathers, a professor of economics and fiscal planning at the University of Alabama, suggests two-income families calculate their net income after taxes and compare that with what they give up when the wife works.

How One Milks A Fire Ant

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. (UPI) — Researchers at Texas A&M University are milking venom from imported red fire ants as the first step in developing an anti-venom against the sometimes killer insects.

Entomologist Brad Vinson and immunologist Barry Paul are working on the project because a fire ant sting is not only notoriously painful, a single sting can also kill a person allergic to the venom. Vinson says thousands of milkings will have to be done to obtain enough pure venom for tests with human blood.

How do you milk an ant?

You hold it in place with tweezers and attach a small tube to the tip of its stinger.

Family Problems Add To Runaway Teen Ranks

By CAROL DEEGAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Joan M., 14, ran away from home because she didn't get along with her mother. Eric, 17, left because there wasn't enough room for him at home.

Both needed help. And they found it at a runaway house in Washington, D.C., one of the many facilities in the country that provide short-term aid to such youngsters.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare estimates that 773,000 teen-agers run away from home each year. One survey has found that most runaways are between 15 and 17 years of age, and slightly more are male than female.

Teen runaways come from all ethnic and social levels. Many travel only a short distance from home and return in less than a week. But it is estimated that three out of 10 stay away for longer periods. And some never return.

Cynthia Myers, executive director of the National Runaway Switchboard in Chicago, says teens usually run away from home because of problems with family, friends or school.

However, Larry Dye, director of HEW's Youth Development Bureau, says there is a growing number of teen-agers called "throwaways," who are pushed out of their homes.

"We're finding in programs that we're serving an increase in the number of kids that are being pushed out of their homes, or they leave their homes at 15, 16 years of age by some kind of mutual agreement between the parent and the young person," Dye said.

"When the young are forced out of the homes, we're talking about adolescent abuse, sexual abuse, we're talking about the destruction of the family unit being such that the young people are just told to go out and make it on their own," he said.

Bill Treanor, director of National Youth Alternatives, a national organization of community-based youth services in Washington, D.C., says there is another kind of "throwaway" — the teen-ager who is forced out of his home for economic reasons.

"With inflation in general and the housing market in particular, people are living in smaller and smaller units with less and less space, sort of like, just how many little birds can fit in a nest?

"Well, somebody gets pushed out, and you see this particularly in large cities with minority young people where they just don't fit in the apartment any more; that seems to be an increasing factor of a lot of homeless youth," Treanor said.

In addition, Ms. Myers said, more and more runaway teens are suffering from a feeling of tremendous lack of self-worth.

"Teens are asking, 'What am I gonna do with my life? My father can't get a job, he has trouble getting a job, what am I gonna do?'" she said.

Dye said many of today's runaways tended to come from families which had moved around a lot, or where one parent was not a natural parent, or where there was a single-parent family.

Some 38,000 teens receive temporary residential care and counseling at 166 federally funded runaway programs in the United States each year. But Dye said about 20 percent of the teens who came to these facilities needed more long-term residential care.

In some instances, a teen can go to live with another relative, or a friend, or is placed in a boarding school or foster home. Eric was old enough to find an after-school job and live in a foster home. Joan chose to live with an aunt. However, this is not possible for many runaway teens.

"In fact," Ms. Myers said, "there are more situations where young people cannot go back into the home, but they are in no way ready to go out and get an apartment and get a job and live on their own, so they need somebody to help them out."

Various laws prohibit teens, at certain ages, from borrowing money, renting an apartment, or getting a job — "all of the things that help you sustain yourself in a community by yourself," Dye said.

And, Treanor said, "All the social services, the juvenile system and the foster homes, and group homes, all these kinds of things, they stop at 18 and after 18, unless you're in the correctional system — in jail — there really isn't any program for you."

Margaret Beyer, a clinical community psychologist in Washington, D.C., said that because the "demise of the family has been so well documented at all socio-economic levels," it was important that more comprehensive and long-term care be provided for those teens who are unable to return to their homes.

Winners In 2nd Annual Math Event

ECU News Bureau

New Bern Senior High School, J.W. Ligon High School of Raleigh, and J.H. Rose High School of Greenville were the winners at the second annual high school mathematics contest, April 5, at East Carolina University.

New Bern was first place in the overall Senior Math Division while Ligon won the first place trophy in the Junior Math Division. Rose captured first place trophies in the Comprehensive and Algebra II team events and many of its students received awards in the individual categories.

The contest was sponsored by the ECU Department of Mathematics and drew approximately 1,300 students from 85 junior and senior high schools, public and private, in 33 eastern North Carolina counties.

Individual students and teams of students competed for awards in four areas: Algebra I, Algebra II, Geometry and Comprehensive Mathematics. The participating students received certificates, and the category winners received trophies and plaques.

This year's ECU math contest also served as the Region One Contest in the first Annual State High School Mathematics Contest, which has been set for May 24. Ten of the Comprehensive Mathematics participants in the ECU event qualified to compete in the statewide contest.

PITT COUNTY, Greenville — J.H. Rose High School: Bert Singleton, second place, Algebra II: Jeen Kim, First place, Comprehensive and qualified for the State Mathematics Contest; Mark Grossnickle, second place, Comprehensive and qualified for the State Contest; Fred Parham, third place, comprehensive and qualified for the State competition; Eric Downes, qualified for the State Math Contest;

Tom Chenier, qualified for the State Contest; Caren Hix, qualified for the State Mathematics Contest.

Offer Study In History

MYSTIC SEAPORT, Conn. (UPI) — Graduate level courses in American maritime history will be held June 25-Aug. 3 at Mystic Seaport Museum by the Frank C. Munson Memorial Institute of American Studies.

One course is a study of the development of American mercantile enterprise from colonial times to the present and its relationship to American history; the other, a research seminar on selected topics in American Maritime Studies.

The courses are primarily intended for graduate students and teachers but are open to professionals and qualified undergraduates interested in obtaining a general background in maritime studies. Both are accredited by Connecticut College, Trinity College, University of Connecticut and Wesleyan University.

Financial aid is availble through a limited number of grants-in-aid and part-time employment. The deadline for financial aid requests is June 1.

For applications and further information contact Dr. Benjamin W. Labaree, Director, Munson Institute, Mystic Seaport Museum, Conn. 06355.

Some Runways Told To Split

NEW YORK (UPI) — Thirty to 60 percent of the more than one million children who are runaways at one time have been told to leave home, says a recent magazine article.

Such children become "teenage addicts, alcoholics, the prostitutes; kiddie porn stars, delinquents and PINS (Persons in Need of Supervision)," writes Melinda Blau in the April issue of Parents magazine.

"Runaway or push-out, both have been rejected emotionally ... they're not running to anything, such as a countercul-ture, they're running from," the author adds.

She quotes Dr. James Gordon as saying far more who remain at home also feel abandoned, many because parents often try to ignore the signs of a child in trouble. Gordon is with the Center for Studies of Child and Family Mental Health in Maryland.

Permanency Planning Helps Roots Grow

Right this minute, approximately 10,000 children in North Carolina are in foster care, with the average child spending 40 percent of his life moving from one temporary home to another, with no plans for a permanent solution.

According to Group Child Care Consultants of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, 50 percent of all children in foster care will grow up in a foster care environment and live in three or more foster homes.

These children are lost in a lost world, removed temporarily from bad home situations and left to drift from one temporary home to another.

In August of 1978, the Group Care Consultants received a $100,000 grant from the children's bureau of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to develop programs and materials toward permanency planning in North Carolina.

"Permanency planning is a method that enables foster children to maintain or establish psychological roots with their natural, adoptive or foster parents," says the Group Child Care Consultants.

Every child is entitled to have a family that cares for his needs until he is grown. Permanency planning works toward either reuniting the child with its own family, or develop another form of long-term security for him.

WHY CAN'T I HAVE A HOME?

The Governor's Advocacy Council on Children and Youth presented a report, "Why Can't I Have A Home?," during its March meeting that deals with improving the North Carolina foster care system.

"Too many children stay in foster care too long," said council chairperson Ruby Milgrom. "Our goal is for every child in North Carolina to have a permanent home — ideally, a family to care and nurture him. This is a basic right of all children, and it is within our reach."

One of the basic recommendations in the report deals th a computer-based tracking system to be installed in the state Division of Social Services. The system would allow the state to monitor and manage the system.

Another recommendation states that a child should be removed from his home only if there is danger of immediate bodily harm. After the department of social services has offered a minimal level of services to the child and family.

According to the report, there should be special efforts made by both the county and state to find permanent homes for children who stay in foster care for no apparent reason.

Also, more pay and training should be offered to the foster care worker, who often leaves the job for better pay. Also, caseloads should be reduced for workers to give more "quality" time to each individual foster child.

156 CHILDREN IN 70 HOMES

Pitt County presently serves 156 foster children in 70 licensed foster homes, with approximately 20 children in group home situations such as the Kennedy Center in Kinston.

According to Mary Lehman, social work supervisor at the Pitt County Department of Social Services, three workers Linda Shoffner, Peggy Chandler and Linda Wilder-work directly with foster children.

Ms. Shoffner recruits, licenses and supervises foster care homes, as well as places foster children.

Ms. Chandler and Ms. Wilder work with providing services to the foster children. Pam Joyner, another worker, deals basically with foster children with planned adoption. Sallie Williamson, who works with the Work Incentive Program, lends a hand with the overflow of work.

Mrs. Lehman explained that there are two basic types of payment made for foster children, which are monies from the State Foster Home Fund and Aid to Families With Dependent Children-Foster Care.

The state Foster Home Fund offers $120 a month, with the AFDC-FC paying $135. The AFDC-FC money is available to those foster children who come from welfare recipient parents.

All foster children in North Carolina are automatically eligible for Medicaid, which covers most medical expenses and provides regular physical examinations and dental work.

For a child to be released for adoption, the natural biological parents may voluntarily sign a release form in the presence of a spcial worker and a notary

Love's Important In Foster Children Care

"To be a foster parent, you must love children," said Mrs. Spellman Johnson, one of Pitt County's 70 foster parents. "It must not be a job."

"If you don't love them, they can tell," added Mrs. Ernest McIntyre, another foster mother.

Both persons know what they're talking about, for Mrs. Johnson has been "mother" to over 100 children during her 13 years as a foster parent. Mrs. McIntyre's mother, Mrs. Louise McGowan, had been a foster mother herself for several years before Mrs. McIntyre became a parent in 1974.

Both mothers remember their first foster child, "just like it was yesterday," as Mrs. Johnson put it.

"After I raised my children, I had time on my hands, nothing to do," said Mrs. Johnson. "I talked with a woman who was a foster parent and asked her how I should go about it."

"After about two months after I had applied with Social Services, my caseworker brought by my first little boy," she continued. "He said,' I brought your first child,' and the whole house lit up."

Mrs. McIntyre remembers when her mother received two little girls to take into foster care.

"I just fell in love with one of them, and went on to become a licensed foster parent," Mrs. McIntyre explained. "And every child after her I've learned to love just as much."

Mrs. Johnson and her husband, Spellman, presently have four girls and one boy in their home. Lisa, Carolyn and Reggie all go to E. B. Aycock, with Sandra, the eldest, a student at Rose High.

"I keep two children during the day while mine are at school," said Mrs. Johnson. "When you sit down, you grow old."

Both Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. McIntyre noted that church is a big part of their family's life, with all the children enjoying the various activities offered through church.

"Yes, they all love to go to church," said Mrs. Johnson, who attends Friendship Holiness Church in Falkland.

"We are active in our church," said Mrs. McIntyre, whose family attends Grace Free Will Baptist Church. "Our assistant pastor, Dwight Whitworth, really works with the young people."

What's the best way to make a new child feel welcome? Mrs. Johnson believes that interesting the child, making him happy and buying some personal articles such as clothing make the child feel more at ease and loved.

"When they bring me a child, I tell him, 'Welcome,' " explained Mrs. McIntyre. "I show him his room and give him some time to be alone. There's usually a child here near his age that can help out in making him feel more at ease."

Both foster mothers pointed out that they would be happy to take in more children, if their means would allow them.

"All of them feel like mine," stated Mrs. Johnson, mother of three and grandmother of six. "I love children and always wanted a big crowd of them."

Mrs. McIntyre, mother of one son and grandmother to two granddaughters, pointed out that all children have good qualities.

"I wish people who've already raised their own would just take in one foster child," said Mrs. McIntyte. "There are so many children and not enough homes."

According to Mrs. McIntyre, a group of Pitt County foster parents have formed an association to work toward sponsoring scholarships for foster children in the area.

"We hold yard sales and bake sales," she explained. "We want to afford these children an opportunity to grow."

RECALLING THE PAST . . . is an easy task for the Ernest McIntyres, who've served as foster parents for the past five years.

Pitt Clean Up Committee Urges County Pride

April has been declared Keep America Beautiful Month, and Pitt County has joined forces to attack the garbage and litter that is carelessly thrown about the county roadsides.

With the slogan, "Take Pride in Pitt," the keep Pitt County Clean and Beautiful Committee has tried to organize countywide clean-ups.

Sylvia Wheless, an active member of the Clean and Beautiful Committee, said, "Our road may look fairly clean, but once you get out of your car and start picking up, there seems to be no end."

Ann and Jack Duffus can attest to that fact. Saturday, April 7, the couple, along with Leonard Moretz and 12 boys from the Pitt County Boys' Club, picked up approximately 60 bags of trash from both sides of the highway in front of Wellcome Middle School.

Sam Uzzell, Assistant Agricultural Extension Agent at the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Office, works with the Clean and Beautiful Committee as its vice president. He noted that the clean up campaign had progressed "pretty well" for the first few weeks.

"It's a never ending process," commented Uzzell. "As soon as an area is cleaned up, it gets littered up again quite rapidly."

One of the committee's special projects is to clean up and beautify the areas around the five Pitt County waste container sites. Saturday, April 7, some of the Committee's members cleaned around the Stantonsburg Road container, with plans to plant grass and plants around the site in the near future.

"It is suggested by our group that users of the container sites be more careful and do not stack trash above the containers," said Mrs. Wheless. "The trash blows out and down the roadside."

"These sites were placed about the county for the convenience of Pitt County citizens and should not be abused," she continued. "Please consider the people who live near these sites, they don't want their property littered because of the carelessness of others."

County communities have taken an active role in trying to pick up trash around their towns. Grifton has held three clean-up weekends to prepare the town for the annual Shad Festival. Ayden, Bethel and Grimesland have also had clean-up efforts, with the Winterville Jaycees awarding a "Yard of the Month" to inspire Winterville citzens.

The Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors have taken an active role in the beautification month, declaring April 15-21 as "Private Property Week," with the theme, "This is Your Land — Preserve It.. Enjoy It.. Invest In It."

Realtors will man a booth at Pitt Plaza, distributing information and litter bags to urge citizens to join in the beautification effort.

The Realtors will also sponsor the film showing of "The Handwriting on the Wall" to city and county schools, as well as civic organizations.

During the next week , prizes will be awarded to posters drawn by Pitt County schoolchildren by the Realtors, with live trees as awards. Several realtors, headed by Ann Duffus, have also been beautifying the area around Greenville Villa Nursing Home.

Saturday, April 21, will be the culmination of the Clean and Beautiful Committee, the Realtors and the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce Beautification Task Force efforts to clean up the county, with a full scale push to clean up the four main entrances to Greenville.

Greenville Boy Scouts, as well as sorority and fraternity members from East Carolina University, will join Greenville Area chamber members and their families in aiding the Task Force, chaired by Mrs. Betty Brewer, in preparation for the four welcome signs to be erected in May.

According to Sylvia Wheless, the keep Pitt County Clean and Beautiful Committee is interested in entering the Coastal Plains Development Association's Beautification Contest, as well as the Keep North Carolina Beautiful Commmittee.

"We're encouraging groups to take clean-up pictures and turn them into Sam Uzzell at the Extension Office," she said.

If anyone is interested in joining in the clean-up effort, Uzzell and Wheless urge him to attend the next Clean and Beautiful meeting Thursday, April 19, 12 noon, for a dutch luncheon at the Three Steers Restaurant.

"Beautification is everyone's business," said Mrs. Wheless. "We can make Pitt County the cleanest and most beautiful county in North Carolina."

Mall Festival To Welcome Spring

ECU News Bureau

"Barefoot on the Mall," East Carolina University's first annual salute to spring, has been set for April 17. The festival is a campus/community event featuring arts and crafts, music of various kinds, and entertainment to please everyone.

The celebration begins at noon with a performance by Antionette Attell ("Toad the Mime"), who will do solo mime performances, body readings and face painting.

She will also conduct an on-the-mall class for all who want to learn techniques of mime — observation, movement and make-up — and present another performance at 4 p.m.

"Playfair," group play for adults has been scheduled for 2 and 6 p.m. A non-traditional group of games, "Playfair" requires no special skills or competitive "win or lose" situations, but enables large numbers of people to share the good times and participate in a fun-filled activity most of us left behind with childhood.

Everyone is invited to come out and play.

At 3 p.m. the ECU Jazz Ensemble will perform several upbeat jazz numbers, and at 5 p.m. scheduled performers and anyone else who wishes may perform musical numbers in the festival's "Coffeehouse Jam."

With voice, or with guitar, banjo, recorder or any other instrument, musical contributors are welcomed.

The Green Grass Cloggers, a nationally noted folk dance group based here in Greenville, will present their "foot-stomping fun" at 7 p.m., and "Vintage Grass" will appear in concert at 8 p.m.

During the scheduled activities, crafts, flowers and food of all types will be sold, and a caricature artist will be on hand to sketch whimsical exaggerations of people's faces.

Also appearing all day is Marcelle Ruble Rook, palmist and astrologer, who will read palms, plot astrology charts and divine body auras.

All entertainment is free. The ECU Student Union invites the public.

Swamp Like An Eerie Fairyland

By JOAN MOWER

FOUR HOLE SWAMP, S.C. (UPI) — Visiting this black water swamp, the home of giant cypress trees, pileated woodpeckers and poisonous cottonmouths, is like taking a trip into an eerie fairyland.

Because of the National Audubon Society and the Nature Conservancy, nature lovers can wander along a one and a half mile boardwalk through the swamp where Revolutionary Gen. Francis Marion, dubbed the "Swamp Fox," once used to hide his troops.

The society and the conservancy purchased 3,600 acres of Four Hole Swamp and turned it into a unique, but little-known, nature center — The Francis Beidler Forest. The center was opened 18 months ago.

"The land was purchased for the trees, in particular," said Steve Winton, a employee of the Audubon Society which operates the center. "It is the largest tract of uncut bald cypress trees and tupelo gums in the southeast."

Environmentalists from around the country come to the forest about 40 miles north of Charleston, near Harleyville, to walk along the elevated boardwalk above the murky black waters.

Huge cypress trees, some of them 500 years old, creak overhead, and the air is filled with bird calls.

The swamp's water level, about two to three feet in the winter, dries up in some parts during the summer. Water moccasins and other snakes, who live in the swamp, often slither across the boardwalk.

"We have many wading birds, such as the white ibis and the yellow-crowned night heron, which nest here," said Winton. "And people also come to see the prohonotary warbler — an orangy-yellow bird."

At night, raccoons, otter and deer come out of hiding.

Cypress groves were once common across the southeast, Winton said. But timber companies stripped most of the older groves in search of the valuable hard wood.

"Cypress is so valuable because it was a durable timber," Winton said. "Most of it was logged."

Unlike most trees which die when immersed in water, the cypress and the tupelo gum trees are able to live by slowing down their metabolism. The cypress develop huge root bases to give them support in the water.

"It's a mystery why the cypress and the gum trees live in water and other trees don't," said Winton.

The fresh-water swamp, which is fed by hundreds of springs, turns black because of the decomposing leaves and cypress needles.

Besides the boardwalk, which cost about $30,000 to build, the Audubon Society constructed a solar-heated nature center to house exhibits. The center is privately operated and so far has apparently not attracted too much tourist attention. Officials said only about 100 visitors come to the swamp each week.

Speaking of Your Health...

Vascular Surgery to Forestall Stroke

I now live thousands of miles away from my family. For years I have known that my father has had severe arteriosclerosis. Recently, I learned that the doctors have suggested an operation on his neck to prevent a stroke. I am confused about this and can't get anyone to clarify it for me. — Miss D.E.W., N.Y.

Dear Miss W.:

I must confess that I am more confused by your letter than you seem to be by the contemplated surgery on your father. The fact that you live thousands of miles away in no way prevents you from contacting your father's doctor directly and getting the information that will relieve you of your obvious anxiety.

Some patients do not realize that doctors are happy to discuss confusing aspects of medical or surgical problems. In fact, physicians welcome such inquiry because they get greater support from the family when everyone knows exactly what they are contemplating doing.

Patients who have generalized arteriosclerosis frequently have narrowing of the carotid arteries which bring blood and oxygen to the brain with each pump of the heartbeat. These arteries run to the brain on each side of the neck. When there is a deficit of this blood flow and when there are early neurological signs, special tests (arteriograms) can, by X-ray, demonstrate the narrowing of these blood vessels.

It is now possible to do an operation known as "endarterectomy" by which the arteriosclerotic plaques that block the flow of blood can be "reamed out" to increase the blood flow in the neck. It is even possible, in some instances, to remove the blocked artery and substitute a dacron or teflon "sleeve" in order to further facilitate the blood supply to the brain.

In carefully selected patients, vascular surgeons have been remarkably successful in restoring the blood flow to prevent a possible stroke.

I feel fairly certain that this is what your father's doctors are contemplating doing. It would give you added assurance if you did, indeed, speak to them.

My mother, my aunt and now I, at age 28, have developed a goiter of the thyroid gland. Is this a condition that is passed on from one generation to the next? — Mrs. T.O., Iowa.

Dear Mrs. O.:

A goiter, or enlargement of the thyroid gland in the midline of the neck, is not infectious or contagious and is not a family characteristic. It is due to a deficiency of iodine in food or water. Consequently, goiters occur frequently in inland areas where there is a reduced amount of iodine in the drinking water.

These growths are not cancerous. Surgery is performed on them, more for cosmetic reasons than for reasons of health. The reason they seem to occur in families is because families, of course, live in the same community. When iodized salt or bread is used in these communities, they frequency of goiters is markedly reduced. Thyroid hormone, too, is very effective in the control of progressive enlargement of the goiter.

Blind, He Marches To His Own Drum

By CAROLE FELDMAN
Associated Press Writer

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — Princeton University senior Peter Altschul marches to the beat of his own drum.

He goes where the beat takes him — whether it's on the football field during half-time, on a stage with the university band or accompanying Princeton's glee club.

It's not an easy task. Peter Altschul has been blind since birth.

"One of the myths people have about blind people is that they're good at music because they have good ears," he says. "But I don't think being blind has helped me. Music is a talent that has to be worked on and developed."

And, adds Altschul, "Music is where my talent lies."

The percussionist marches with Princeton's band in between the halves of football games. One of the band's managers, who is responsible for equipment, guides him by the elbow to keep him in formation.

"On the whole, it's very easy," he says. "It's a very loosely knit organization. We form things like blobs, very simple things, on the field."

Altschul also plays the organ, piano, tympani and the snare drum, but he considers himself more than just another percussionist.

After he completes graduate school — which he plans to attend after his Princeton graduation — he says he would like to teach music, compose or, perhaps, do arrangements for a rock 'n' roll band.

The Pleasantville, N.Y., native says he expects to encounter some prejudice in the professional world, as he says he has encountered some bias in academia.

"I've always been told that for a blind person to get what he wants he has to be better than 90 percent of all sighted people," he says. "I think I have a reasonably good shot at doing these things."

He adds, "There are some good blind musicians."

Altschul says he came to Princeton because he "wanted a relatively small college with a good liberal arts department and what I thought was a good music department."

Princeton, he says, is "probably one of the better places for the handicapped. It's not that big a campus, there's less ground to learn and many buildings have elevators and wheelchair ramps."

He says the administration at the Ivy League campus has been "very good" in helping him to pick courses and obtain texts on reel-to-reel tape.

"I have a lot of friends who are supportive," he says. And the student body, he adds, will offer help if he seems lost. "Otherwise they just ignore me unless I run into them."

public. When the process is done through a licensed agency, such as the Department of Social Services, 30 days are given after the signing for the parents to change their minds. If no word is heard after the allotted amount of days, the child is then free for adoption.

Many children, however, are freed from their natural parents by a district court procedure whereby a judge may terminate the parents' rights on the grounds of abandonment, abuse or neglect.

"We have had 12 termination cases so far this year and have won them all," said Mrs. Lehman. "Credit should be given to Edward Harper, a local attorney, for his work with our department."

NATIONAL ACTION FOR FOSTER CARE CHILDREN MONTH

Gov. James B. Hunt has joined with other officals in proclaiming April as national Action for Foster Care Children Month in an effort to promote awareness of the foster care situation.

According to information released from the Governor's Advocacy Council, a child who has been in foster care two or more years is likely to grow up in foster care. Forty percent of North Carolina's foster children have been in care two or more years.

Nobel-prize winning poet Gabriela Mistral perhaps put the plight of the foster care situation best in the following poem:

"We are guilty of many errors and many faults
but our worst crime is abandoning the children, neglecting the fountain of life.
Many of the things we need can wait. The child cannot.
Right now is the time his bones are being formed, his blood is being made, and his senses are being developed.
To him we cannot answer
'Tomorrow.'
His name is 'Toda[illegible].'

Year Noted By CARE

NEW YORK (AP) — With 1979 designated by the United Nations as the International Year of the Child, CARE is offering special Mother's Day cards, Louis Samia, executive director of the overseas aid and development agency, has announced.

The cards combine a distinctive Mother's Day greeting with the opportunity to make a donation to aid destitute mothers and children around the world, Samia says, adding, "During this IYC year we have launched the CARE Crusade for Children and we plan to expand our aid to millions of needy families.

"A contribution in the name of a mother, wife, or any woman dear to you will provide these people with lifesaving food and the tools and know-how to increase their own food growing," he points out. "Also, medical aid and training, fresh water systems, schools and other self-help projects to enable them to work their way out of poverty."

Donations — minimum $2 per name — can be sent to CARE Mother's Day Plan, Dept. M, 660 First Ave., New York, N.Y. 10016, or the nearest CARE office, Samia said. Each woman being honored will be sent a card notifying her of the special tribute or, if it is preferred, the cards will be mailed to the donor.

Samia cited examples of what contributions can accomplish: $5 provides 600 children with nutritious biscuits; $10 serves 200 children daily cups of high-protein beverage for a whole year; $15 brings fresh water to a family through a village water system costing $3 per person; $25 furnishes basic agricultural tools to a subsistence farm family.

Clear Way For Work Abroad

NEW YORK (UPI) — A new program, which cuts through all the red tape, permits American students to work in Britain and British students to work in the U.S. — at any kind of job they choose. It has been approved by both governments.

Any U.S. citizen between 18 and 30 who is enrolled in a U.S. College or University in 1979 or 1980 is eligible. There's a $38 fee to obtain a "blue card," which will enable you to work anywhere in the British Isles for six months.

You must have at least $200 with you on landing to support youself until you get your first pay check, and you must have your ticket back to the U.S.

For further information and application blanks, contact Council on International Educational Exchange, Hotel Empire, Broadway at 63rd St., N.Y., N.Y. 10023.

More Lending In Fuel Crisis

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the world's energy crisis intensifying, the World Bank, a United Nations' financial agency, will expand its assistance for oil and natural-gas production in the developing countries.

Bank officials said some 60 countries could benefit in the early 1980's from an accelerated program of exploration and development for oil, natural gas and coal.

The program will give priority to countries that depend heavily on imported oil and have the greatest need for technical assistance.

The bank's help will include aid in devising national energy policies, the updating of existing geological surveys, the commissioning of new surveys, the financing of exploratory drilling and the financing of the eventual production facilities.

Inflation Test Will Tell Much

WASHINGTON (UPI) — To find out how badly you've been hit by inflation, take this test, worked out by the American Council of Life Insurance: Look up your 1967 tax return. Write down your income after deducting your income taxes and social security taxes for that year. Do the same thing with your 1978 return. Unless your 1978 figure is double the 1967 one, you have flunked the inflation test and your real income has decreased since 1967.

WHY? A Mere Nine Million

BY JAKE KELDERMAN

WASHINGTON—The auto industry had a good year last year, collectively they recalled only slightly more than nine million vehicles. You may laugh, but the year before they set a record with 12.9 million vehicles recalled.

Leading the pack this year was the Ford Motor Co., which recalled some 3.6 million of its cars in 37 recall campaigns. The company also pulled off first place honor in the largest single recall category by calling back some 1.5 million 1971-78 Pinto and Bobcat cars that had potentially unsafe gas tanks.

The second largest of the domestic automakers is also facing the possibility of having to initiate the largest recall ever—more than seven million of its 1971-78 cars fitted with automatic transmissions. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration believes they may contain a dect that allows them to slip from "Park" to "Drive." The safety agency has two independent testing firms looking into it right now and it is expected that an announcement of some sort will be made within the next few months.

Coming in second in this year's recall race was GM, with less than half the number of vehicles recalled by Ford. The 1.7 million cars recalled by the company included 320,000 1977 Chevettes with gas tank problems and 265,000 Chevy. Pontiac, Olds and Buick models with defective rear axles.

Chrysler, the third largest of the domestics, finished third in the recall race. It yanked back 1.57 million cars last year, 1.1 million of which were the pesky Aspen and Volare models.

AMC, the poor sister of the bunch, called back just under 750,000 of its models.

In all, the four domestic companies asked owners to return 7.7 million cars and trucks last year.

THE FOREIGN MAKERS COLLECTIVELY CALLED BACK JUST OVER ONE MILLION CARS LAST YEAR and it was poor beleaguered P[illegible] leading the pack [illegible]85,579 cars recalled in 17 se[illegible]mpaigns. TOYOTA CAME NEX[illegible] 216,538 CA[illegible]CALLED AND HONDA FOLLOWED WI[illegible]8,070 V[illegible]LES RECALLED ALTHOUGH ABOUT 40,0[illegible] OF [illegible]SE WERE MOTORCYCLES.

Of the remaining foreign manufacturers, none recalled more than 68,000 cars and in fact, ONE MAKER, NISSAN (DATSUN) RECALLED ONLY 389 CARS LAST YEAR.

For Week Of April 15 - April 21, 1979

Pat Boone And Family Salute Spring

In a lighthearted tribute to spring, Pat and Shirley Boone — with daughters Cherry, Lindy, Debby and Laury — salute seasonal sports and romance as well as Easter, on ABC-TV's "Pat Boone and Family Easter Special" Sunday, April 15 (8 to 9 p.m.).

In another musical highlight, "If My Friends Could See Me Now," the four Boone sisters model fashions at the oceanside Newport Beach, Calif., shopping mall.

Byner helps Pat write a father-daughter note to soon-to-be-married Debby Boone in a "Birds and Bees' sketch. Knight and Pat are seen as newly hatched chicks discussing their future while perched in a giant Easter basket.

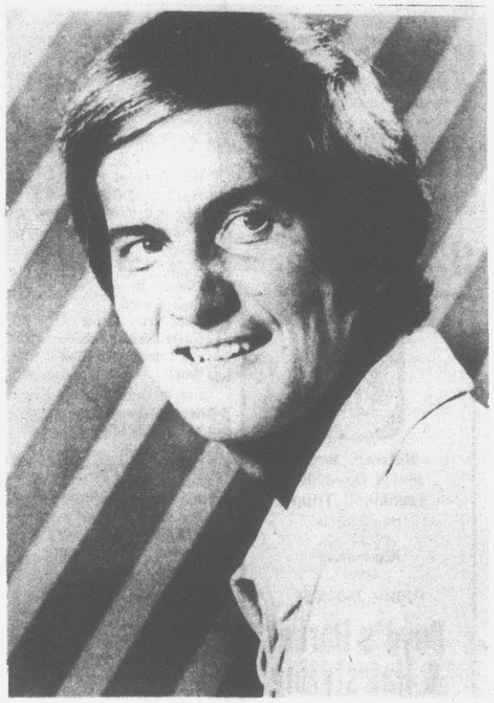

Two-year-old grandson Ryan Corbin dons an Easter bunny costume to help Pat and Shirley with their duet, "Be Kind to Your Parents."

Success in the entertainment industry is an elusive commodity. You don't have to delve deep to come up with the names of performers whose tenure as 'stars' was short-lived. The key to success in show business is not reaching stardom, but remaining a star. Pat Boone has.

The fact that Pat remains a star is general knowledge. He has set a record by staying on the record charts for more than 200 consecutive weeks with one song in contention each week though not necessarily the same title. Of the Top 40 recording stars during the rock 'n' roll era, Pat has remained among the top three. Of the no less than 60 songs on the charts, fifteen have hit the Top Ten. "Love Letters" remained on the charts for 34 weeks, a record for a single and remained No. 1 for 5 consecutive weeks.

Another dimension to his career is his successful role as a writer. His first book, "Twixt Twelve and Twenty," has sold more than 800,000 copies. Other books include "Between You, Me and the Gatepost," "The Real Christmas," "A New Song," "A Miracle A Day Keeps the Devil Away," "Joy," and "My Brother's Keeper." Two years ago, he and Shirley collaborated on "The Honeymoon is Over."

For Pat Boone, success has definitely not been an elusive commodity. He achieved stardom and has managed to maintain it.

Boones abound as Pat and family gather for an Easter celebration in "The Pat Boone and Family Easter Special," on Sunday, April 15 (8-9 p.m.) on ABC.

BROTHERLY LOVE - Gary Coleman (l) and Todd Bridges, who plays brothers Arnold and Willis on NBC-TV's "Diff'rent Strokes" (8-8:30 p.m.), wish viewers a Happy Easter.

Despite His Age He's A Veteran

Gary Coleman, the astounding young actor who stars as Arnold Jackson on NBC-TV's "Diff'rent Strokes," is 11 years old — but has the style, timing and delivery of a veteran performer.

"I don't really know where the desire to become an actor came from," says his mother, Sue Coleman. "It was just one of many interests that he asked about — and he seemed to be a natural at it."

Gary, as precocious and outspoken as he is talented, has his own explanation about why he became an actor:

"Daddy took me for a long ride, and I said 'Yes!'

"I never went to acting school. I never went to music school or dancing school — none of those schools. Only public school, where I learn math, science and anything else that's likely to turn into an education.

"I like public school, but I sure don't like private schools. Their classes are too small, and you can't have any fun in them. Everybody's so serious!"

Gary's toughest subject is math. "I have a terrible time with math," he says. "I get four problems wrong on a page that just has four problems on it! But I like science. Spelling, too, because I like to write."

Gary's small size can probably be attributed to the fact that he had a kidney transplant when he was five years old.

"Both of my kidneys died, and so I had to get a transplant. My kidney's birthday is a week before Christmas — Dec. 17th — and I have a party for my kidney every year. Then, on my real birthday in February, all I do is eat ice cream and cake."

There are not other children in the Coleman family, which doesn't bother Gary a bit. "I have no brothers or sisters, only cousins. And I've got plenty of them. Some of them I like, and others I just can't stand. Not at all!"

Gary's co-star on "Diff'rent Strokes" is equally talented Todd Bridges, who starred as the precocious Loomis on "Fish." Todd quickly developed a national following because of the series. In just a few weeks after the show premiered, hundreds of fans, young and old, were inquiring about fan clubs and buying 'Loomis' T-shirts.

Whether or not the cameras are rolling, Gary and Todd always seem to be 'on' and their co-star, Conrad Bain, wearily admits, "Things are never dull with these two around!"

Cheerleading Championships Air On CBS

"The 2nd Annual National Collegiate Cheerleading Championships," a 90-minute special featuring competition and entertainment, starring Suzanne Somers, with Joe Namath as master of ceremonies, and featuring five collegiate cheerleading squads competing for the national title, airs Monday, April 16 (8 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Lola Falana and Donny and Marie Osmond, Ricardo Montalban and Herve Villechaize are special guest stars. Sports figures Terry Bradshaw, Bobby Hull, Parnelli Jones and Lynn Swann will also make guest appearances.

The five cheerleading squads will demonstrate their abilities in the areas of music, cheerleading and gymnastics while competing for the national title and a total of $25,000 in scholarship money. The finalists are: the returning 1978 champions, the Tarheels, from the University of North Carolina; last year's runnerup, the Trojans, from the University of Southern California; the Golden Hurricanes, from the University of Tulsa; the Rebels, from the University of Mississippi; and the Spartans from Michigan State University.

"I was a loser when I auditioned for cheerleading. At my high school in San Bruno, Calif., I tried out three times for the squad and three times I failed.

"I even tried to become a banner girl, and failed at that, too! All I had to do was to march in step with nine girls. I was so bad, when we were supposed to turn, I marched straight and collided into the others."

As Miss Somers described how excited she was to appear on 'The 2nd Annual Championships,' her eyes were transfixed on the competing squads. Watching them practice their acrobatics and cheers, she said, with a touch of envy, "I still wish I could have been a cheerleader."

Bond Thriller Tonight

James Bond, the notorious 007 agent, would have been proud of Robert Sands, played by Dale Robinette in "Billion Dollar Threat," an action-adventure thriller airing Sunday, April 15 (9 p.m.), on ABC-TV.

Sands, a government secret agent, must utilize an arsenal of highly unusual weaponry in order to bring the toughest of international criminals to justice. The criminial in this case is Horatio Black, played by Patrick MacNee, who is determined to launch his own missle into the earth's atmosphere for the purpose of blasting a hole in the ozone layer. This would expose much of the world's populace to deadly radiation, and Black is asking the government for a billion dollars to abort the launch.

Sands, an inventive and resourceful agent, is forced to dip into his bag of tricks — a veritable Mary Poppins handbag of unorthodox devices. One such device used in the film is dental floss — not the everyday kind. One merely has to rip off a section, tie it around any metal object that happens to be in one's way, wait 10 seconds and watch it ignite. At a shade under 600 degrees, the elasticized material cuts through metal like butter. Says Sands, "Just what I need to remove those stubborn stains."

Then there is Sands' unusual pack of cigarettes. When one cigarette is primed with a little tap on the end, it emits a coherent beam of radiation for 15 seconds. This brief emission of an extremely high degree of thermal energy is known as a laser beam.

Sands also has a writing pen that sprays a gas that will knock out an adversary in four seconds. As for conventional weapons, his shotgun comes close. In one barrel is a miniaturized rocket that can take out an armored truck at a hundred yards. In the other barrel are shells that have a spread of over six feet at 70 yards.

During the course of the drama, Sands has two major problems with which to contend. One is a 40-foot inter-continental ballistic missile which he must disable if he is to save the world's populace from mutilation and death.

Drama Ends Tonight On NBC

An exciting drama, "The Boy From Dead Man's Bayou," concludes Sunday, April 15 (7 to 8 p.m.) on NBC-TV. Mitch Vogel, Mike Lookinland, Percy Rodrigues, John McIntire and Jeannette Nolan star in the adventure about two boys who match wits with a murderous alligator in the murky waters of a Louisiana swamp.

Determined to retrieve a lost silver bell from the waters of Dead Man's Bayou, Jeannot (Vogel) and his younger cousin, Claude (Lookinland), entreat Charbot (Rodrigues), a local fisherman, to design a charm which will ward off the evil spirits lurking in the forbidden bayou.

The boys create a crude decoy bird to lure the vicious alligator, protector of the bayou, into a trap. After the alligator is secured, the young adventurers salvage their precious sunken treasure. Their victory is short-lived, however.

Breaking free from its bindings, the alligator overturns the boys' canoe and attacks the youngsters. Charbot, entering the bayou by chance, senses the danger and dives into the slimy water to encounter the gator. In a fierce struggle, Charbot overpowers the reptile only after Jeannot is knocked unconscious by a slap from the alligator's weighty tail.

Later, when Jeannot recovers from his injuries, he is happy to learn that Charbot has retrieved the bell during the alligator attack.

In Observance Of Easter

CBS News will present two religious programs — a sunrise service in San Francisco and a musical celebration — Easter Sunday, April 15 (9 to 11 a.m.).

The 57th annual Easter Sunrise Service from Mount Davidson (9 a.m.), sponsored by the San Francisco Council of Churches, is held in the shadow of the tallest cross in the world (103 feet), which caps the tallest peak (938 feet) in San Francisco area. Mount Davidson is named for scientist/naturalist George Davidson, who first surveyed the mountain known as Blue Mountain (and known by the Spanish as San Miguel Rancho).

The non-sectarian service will feature a sermon by the Rev. A.C. Ubalde Jr., pastor of the Bethany Methodist Church in San Francisco, a resident of the Bay area for the last 10 years and a leader in the large Asian community. Music will be provided by a 150-voice choir from the inner city.

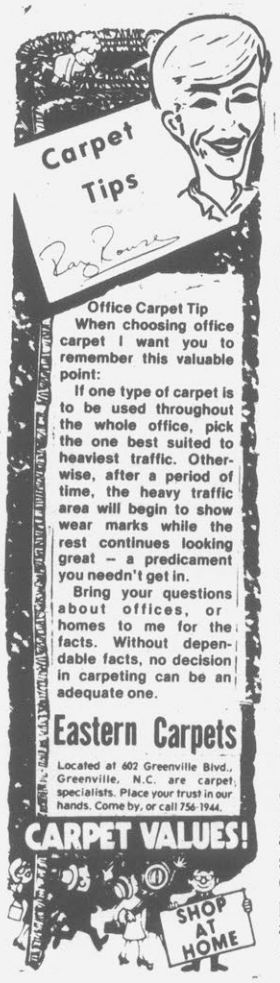

Erected in the 1930s, and dedicated by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1934, the cross sits above a crypt containing several stones from the Garden of Gethasemane (where Jesus prayed before his Crucifixion), and water from the River Jordan. In addition, a copper box within the base of the cross contains historical memorabilia and relics of San Francisco's more recent past, such as newspapers, photographs, and an early telephone directory.

In past years, the service has attracted as many as 50,000 faithful, one of whom, Gus Bauer, has participated in each and every sunrise service since 1923.

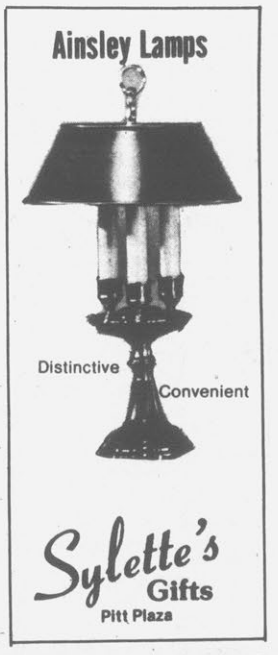

"Feast of Life," a musical celebration of Easter, will be rebroadcast as a special religious presentation (10 p.m.). The original broadcast featured the premiere of two original works as well as poetry and dance.

A highlight of the broadcast is Carlos Surinach's "Via Crucis," which is based on "sietas" — the traditional improvised songs sung by the Spaniards as Holy Week processions pass through their streets. Lyric soprano Benita Valente sings "Via Crucis," and Vija Vetra interprets in dance. This work was commissioned by CBS, as was "The Easter Cantata" from Alan Hovhaness' "Triptych," sung by the Camarata Singers.

The Rev. Clarende Rivers, poet, composer and Catholic priest, reads his poem "Resurrection," followed by soprano Christine Spencer joining the choir in the singing of the poem in gospel style. Father Rivers also wrote the music for "Resurrection," which received its broadcast premiere on the program.

Sidewalk 'Super'

Ed McMahon, Johnny Carson's 'sidekick' on 'The Tonight Show,' is building a new home in Beverly Hills, Calif., and spends at least an hour on the site every day. "I get a kick out of seeing it go up," says Ed, "and psychologically, I think that by me being there, the work just might go faster."

Show Gets Positive Reaction

"Complete," "comprehensive," "accurate," " . . . an excellent presentation." These are just a few of the thousands of positive viewer reactions to "A.M. Weather," America's only daily TV program devoted exclusively to covering the weather. The 15-minute program is produced Monday through Friday at the Maryland Center for Public Broadcasting and is transmitted via satellite to 195 PBS stations nationwide.

Since its inception in Oct., 1978, "A.M. Weather" has helped pilots, its primary audience, plan their flights. But it also has provided extensive current and forecast information useful to farmers, boaters, foresters, teachers, construction workers, and plain weather enthusiasts.

Because its focus is weather, "A.M. Weather" offers a thorough study of conditions throughout the country. Satellite photos show how the weather has formed during the past twelve hours, and a "Weather Watch" segment highlights potential hazards for the next 24 hours. The entire presentation is made in language that viewers can readily understand.

A sampling of viewer mail indicates the effectiveness of the show. From Raleigh, N.C., a viewer wrote, "Historically, we have had little faith in local weather forecasters. The information you present is concise, but in enough detail to show a complete and accurate forecast."

An oilman from Wichita, Ka., claimed, "This weather information is vital to our oil well drilling and production operations in Kansas and Nebraska." And a Virginia farmer praised the program because "I'm very interested in the agricultural aspects of weather as I do a considerable amount of custom work. The wetting and drying rates and the like are very important to me."

Joe Namath is the master of ceremonies and Suzanne Somers stars in "The 2nd Annual National Collegiate Cheerleading Championships," an entertainment special featuring five cheerleading squads in competition for the national title, Monday, April 16 (8-9:30 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Nothing Funny In Being Fat

"Or they say 'All the world loves a fat man' — baloney."

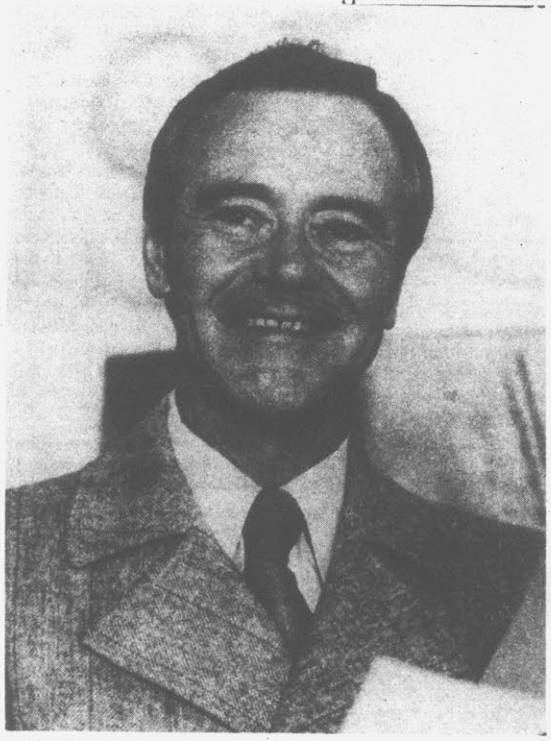

So says Cliff Emmich, the 300-pound actor who guest-stars in "The Man Inside," a segment of NBC-TV's "Little House on the Prairie" airing Monday, April 16 (8 to 9 p.m.). He asserts there's nothing funny about being fat.

"I've been overweight all my life. Even as a child I had to learn to live with other kids yelling things like, 'Fatty, fatty, two-by-four....'"

"The 'Little House' story tells what happens to a fat man when he learns that his little daughter is embarrassed by his weight. "It's a good, honest story about the problem," says Emmich. "I've done many things that the character in the story has done — such as making wise cracks about my weight before someone else can. You try and develop a sense of humor about being fat, but it's really a case of laughing on the outside while crying on the inside."

The 40-year-old actor says the worst thing about being fat is the reaction of women. "I like beautiful women — but they don't like fat men."

This is Emmich's first 'good guy' role on television. "Fat guys usually get cast as bad guys," he says.

'Ol' Blue Eyes

Frank Sinatra has been named Grand Marshal of the 91st Pasadena Tournament of Roses — keyed to "Music of America" — which will be telecast on NBC New Year's Day, Tuesday, Jan. 1, prior to the network's exclusive coverage of the 66th Rose Bowl football game.

Tournament Association President Frank Hardcastle said: "The 1980 Tournament of Roses is going to be filled with music, and who better exemplifies our theme than 'Ol' Blues Eyes himself — Frank Sinatra — a legend in his own right.

"We're two Franks from New Jersey. Where would you find a better combo to lead the Rose Parade?"

Psychic Grandma

Jimmy Van Patten claims he has a psychic grandmother.

"When we were still living in New York, she said to the family, one day, 'Don't drink the water.' We didn't know what she meant. She said she didn't know either, that it had just come to her. So we avoided tap water for a week or so until one day when my father (Dick Van Patten) came home and said he'd been cast in a play called 'Don't Drink the Water.'"

Kids Go 'Up In Smoke'

"It is no longer uncommon for 12-year olds, 13-year-olds and even younger people to be using marijuana on a regular basis," says Dr. Robert Dupont, former Director of the National Institute for Drug Abuse, during "NBC Reports: Reading, Writing and Reefer."

The special will be rebroadcast Tuesday, April 17 (4 to 5 p.m.), with Edwin Newman as the on-camera reporter for the program.

Dupont also says during the program that he believes many adults are not aware of the extent young people smoke marijuana: "Over the age of 25, the levels of marijuana use fall very dramatically and over the age of 30 they fall to practically zero in the total population.

"The result is that people who are adults don't see very much marijuana use and are utterly unaware of both the extent of it and the rapid increases in its use (by the young)."

Repeated marijuana smoking at a young age, according to Dupont, can affect the manner in which children grow up. "A young person who is chronically stoned is not coping with the important tasks of growing up. He is going to be diverted from normal growth and is going to find himself further and further behind his peers."

While working for the government, Dupont helped to liberalize American attitudes toward marijuana. Now in private practice, he has had second thoughts:

"One of the reasons I've changed my mind is that we know a lot more about marijuana now and how dangerous it really is. But equally important is that I now realize that (a liberalized attitude) has been interpreted by the public as meaning marijuana is okay...I feel very badly to have contributed to that."

Robert Rogers, producer of the program for NBC News, said: "We focus on the children of middle-class America, who in ever-increasing numbers smoke marijuana before, during and after school. In fact, many of these young lives revolve around staying 'stoned.'"

Statistics reported during the program include: a survey of 1978 high school seniors that showed 11 percent were reporting daily or near-daily marijuana use; a UCLA study that said smoking five joints a week affects the respiratory system in the same manner as smoking 112 tobacco cigarettes; and that marijuana now available on the street is 10 times stronger than that which was available only four years ago.

Bronson Stars As A Fighter

Depression-era New Orleans is the setting for "Hard Times," starring Charles Bronson, and the combination is a gritty and surprisingly effective combination of mood and action.

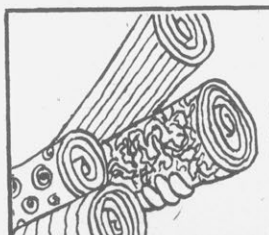

"Hard Times" airs on NBC-TV's "The Big Event" Tuesday, April 17 (9 to 11 p.m.).

As Chaney, a ruggedly individualistic street fighter who won't let his invincible fists richen or corrupt him, Bronson turns in an extremely convincing performance. Along with this strong character and excellent support from co-star James Coburn, "Hard Times" is liberally laden with action and relies more on atmosphere and tip-top pacing than on outright violence.

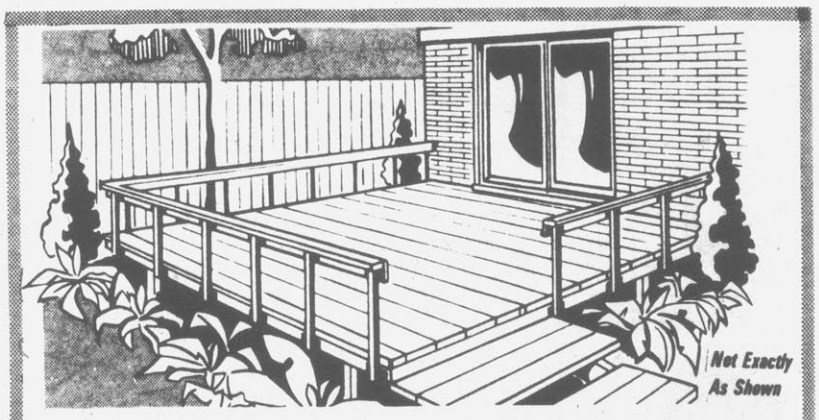

The mechanics of the story are almost classically simple, going back to the 30s in more than just the film's actual setting.

Arriving in New Orleans on a late-night freight-car — seemingly out of nowhere — Chaney comes across Speed (Coburn), a weak but fast-talking sharpie whose fighter just lost a lot of money, and asks for a chance to earn a couple of bucks for room and board. The two form a partnership and take on the best fighter New Orleans can muster — and win.

The film is well-paced, alternating between the atmosphere of Chaney's solitary existence — including his near-relationship with Lury (Jill Ireland), a lonely convict's wife — and the four of five excellent fight sequences that have a maximum of tension and a minimum of trickery or gore. Adding to the drama is Chaney's unadmitted allegiance to Speed, who unwisely becomes heavily in debt to some local loansharks and temporarily considers "unloading" his fighter to a rival promoter.

They Meet Again

When Stephen McHattie, who stars as the strange Rev. Ian Glenville, in NBC-TV's "Highcliffe Manor" comedy series, arrived on the set, one of the first to greet him was Jenny O'Hara, who portrays the maid, Rebecca. Stephen and Jenny first met several years ago when both were doing "The Iceman Cometh" on Broadway.

Lesson Is Learned

For Kevin Dobson, portraying John Hurley, a 35-year-old man stricken with heart disease, was not just another acting job but a sobering experience that left him scared and acutley aware of his own mortality.

Dobson stars with Melinda Dillon in "Transplant," a gripping true-life drama centered around one man's fight for survival, to be presented Tuesday, April 17 (9 to 11 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Hurley was, in Dobson's words, "a workaholic — 25 hours a day. He was more materialistic, as opposed to being involved with his family."

It was Hurley's dedication to work and success that brought on his initial coronary. His stubborn conviction that everything would soon be all right with his heart soon led him to the irreversible condition that only a heart transplant could possibly rectify. While Hurley was busy revelling against his illness, he was also learning to appreciate his family, and that lesson wasn't wasted on Dobson.

While working on "Transplant," and noting the debilitating effects Hurley's illness had on the rest of the family, Dobson soon came to realize that, he said, "I want to give more and get more from my family, my wife and daughter. I want to be more open and nice to the people I care about and love."

Did Dobson identify with John Hurley at all? Was he frightened by the prospect of a young man having a heart attack? "Absolutely," he answered. And the result is that Dobson has learned to slow down and take things at a more relaxed pace.

"I did everything hard," he explained. "I worked hard. I played hard, and when I partied, I partied hard. I did everything 100 percent. I've since toned down. I have a broader view. I've learned not to pressure myself."

Dobson admits that he may sound a little corny to some people, but insists that he indeed learned many valuable lessons from "Transplant," among them, "We should just care a little better about everyone," and "It's OK to express emotion, to laugh or to cry."

As sobering an experience as "Transplant" was for Kevin Dobson, it was a successful reminder for him as to the value of his own life and how important his family is. John Hurley also learned these lessons, and underwent a risky heart transplant to prolong his life. Would Kevin Dobson make the same decision?

"I would do just the same thing," Dobson answered. "At least, I think I would."

'Casino' Underway

Production has begun on "Casino," a two-hour movie starring Mike Connors, which will air on ABC during the 1978-79 season.

Connors plays Nick, a cool and colorful gambler who has borrowed $14 million to set up a luxurious gambling ship. During the vessel's maiden voyage from Miami to Barbados, it becomes apparent that powerful forces are out to sabotage the operation.

Also starring are Barry Van Dyke as Edge Lewis, Nick's right-hand man, Gene Evans as K.L. Fitzgerald, the ship's captain; Hedly Mattingly as Foxworth, the head bartender, and James Murtagh as Andrews.

Winning Film Encores

"Lawrence of Arabia," a motion picture which has become almost as legendary as the man it memoralizes, will be rebroadcast in two parts Monday and Tuesday, April 16 and 17 (11:30 p.m. both nights), on ABC-TV.

'Lawrence' was written by three-time Academy Award-winner Robert Bolt and made stars of Peter O'Toole (starring in the title role) and then-newcomer Omar Sharif. Other principal roles are played by Oscar winners Alec Guinness, Anthony Quinn and Jose Ferrer.

"Lawrence of Arabia" portrays that curious moment in history when a brash young British officer encounters the beginnings of the allied revolt in the Arabian desert against the Turks, and comes to play an almost godlike role in uniting the feuding tribes into an effective fighting force.

O'Toole, in his first major screen role, plays the enigmatic T.E. Lawrence, a student-turned-warrior, a man of destiny who doubts himself. Guinness is the softspoken Prince Feisal, leader of the Arab revolt who used Lawrence and is used by him.

Quinn plays the hawk-nosed Arab Chieftain who understands guns and fighting, and turns his back to the politics which must follow. Jack Hawkins is seen as Lawrence's commander-in-chief, an empire builder who also used Lawrence's desire to help the Arabs help themselves.

Claude Rains portrays the conniving chief of the Arab Bureau Intelligence, and Arthur Kennedy is the American war correspondent whose pictures and dispatches helped make Lawrence a living legend and world famous personality.

Anthony Quayle is seen as Lawrence's desert chief, a soldier without awareness of the history swirling around him, and Egyptian actor Sharif is cast as Ali, Lawrence's devoted desert companion.

Features The Unusual

A fellow who plays a flute for turkeys and another man who regularly crashes his head into trees are only two of the many unusual characters turned up by co-hosts of "Real People," the new NBC-TV comedyinterview series premiering Wednesday, April 18 (8 to 9 p.m.).

When Bill Rafferty, one of the travelling co-hosts, caught up with an eccentric flutist serenading a flock of turkeys, he naturally wanted to know why.

"Because," he said quite matter-of-factly, "I'm an inter-species musician."

The "Real People" crew also found some strange things happening at Fort Chickamauga, Okla., home of the only reserve cavalry unit in the United States.

Here, a group of men and women live and work in an exact reproduction of an 1830's frontier fort. One of the officers, who traded in his automobile for a horse, found the biggest adjustment was "getting used to crashing my head into tree limbs as I rode around the fort."

In Northern California, "Real People" discovered a former NASA official who is building a one-man rocketship he plans to launch fifty miles into space and safely bring back to earth. Convinced he's on a lucky streak because he recently bought a multi-million dollar gyroscope at a flea market for $38, the rocketman is offering $100,000 to the adventuresome soul who will pilot his dream machine.

"NASA has to spend millions of dollars to make a rocket they think is 99 per cent safe," he points out. "For a fraction of that cost I've made one that's 90 percent safe."

Interviewers (clockwise) Sara Purcell, Fred Willard, Skip Stephenson, Bill Rafferty and John Barbour star on the premiere of NBC-TV's comedy-news-magazine "Real People," Wednesday, April 18 (8-9 p.m.).

Two Soap Operas Share A Lawyer

ABC-TV's popular daytime serials "All My Children" and "One Life to Live," share common geographical ground - both literally and on television. The two studios which house the productions, both originated by Agnes Dixon, are only a block and a half apart in New York City, and Pine Valley and Llanview, the fictional towns in which the serials take place, are separated by just a few miles. Although residents of the two towns don't visit each other very often, friendships do exist and when Llanview's Joe Riley needed a friend and a lawyer, he turned to Paul Martin, an old school friend and Pine Valley's legal eagle.

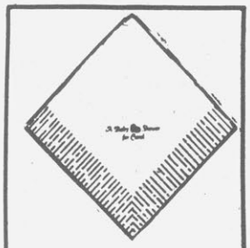

Casting Completed

With the signing of Harold Gould in the title role, casting has been completed for "Darn You, Harry Landers!," an NBC-TV comedic drama about aging.

Starring with Gould are Strother Martin as his best friend, Tyne Daly as a rest home supervisor, Victor Buono as a doctor, and Lou Jacobi, Marjorie Bennett and Paula Truman as rest home residents.

Montgomery Signs

Elizabeth Montgomery has signed an exclusive contract with CBS-TV, which calls for starring roles in TV films and miniseries.

Has A Skeptical Eye

George American Horse, a full-blooded Otoe Indian, has been an actor and technical adviser on dozens of films over the last 27 years. He feels that the depiction of Indians in a good many of those movies was baised, demeaning and just plain ignorant, so when he comes to a new project as technical adviser these days, he comes with an understandably skeptical eye.

"I always go over the script right at the start to find any degradations," he said on location in Colorado, "because no matter how much a white writer has written about the American Indian, his knowledge comes from history books that were written by other white people."

American Horse was technical adviser on "The Chisholms," a miniseries that is concluding Thursday, April 19 (8 to 10 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

A technical adviser's main tasks on an Indian-oriented production are to advise the producer and director on the authenticity of the costumes, props and script, and to coach the actors on their portrayals of Indian characters.

"Whenever I brought a problem to the producer or director," American Horse said, "I tried at the same time to bring in a solution, too, without changing the context, so that it was more toward an Indian point of view."

American Horse's grandfather, Moses Harragarra, was the last hereditary chief of the Otoe, a Plains tribe of the Sioux linguistic family. "He took me with him to all the pow-wows and taught me all about the different dances and customs — things of that sort that I am able to bring to a script," noted American Horse.

One of his largest chores on 'Chisholms' concerned the dialogue in five different Indian languages — Ojibwa, Pawnee, Sioux, Osage and Kansa — which had to be translated phonetically into English for the actors by experts in each tongue.

"Our translators had to know who was going to be saying the lines," American Horse said. "In most Indian languages, the grammar is different for a man and a woman. It's difficult for an actor to learn phonetically and still get the right emotional emphasis.

"This script, like most others, could have ended up non-authentic. But I think we pulled it the other way, because Paul Freeman, the producer, said at every step of the way, 'If that's authentic, George, then do it, because that's what we want to see.' So I think 'The Chisholms' is very realistic in that sense."

HOLLYWOOD — It's hardly noticeable, but when the six episodes of "MISS WINSLOW & SON" were taped earlier this year, series star DARLENE CARR was pregnant with her first child, a son, born the first of February.

For those who find RICHARD DEAN ANDERSON, Dr. Jeff Webber on ABC's "GENERAL HOSPITAL," a real heart throb, it might be good news to hear that Rick has just signed a new two-year contract for the show. Otherwise, girls, he's very unattached.

CHER BONO ALLMAN got weary, it seems, of paying rental once a week on an L.A. roller rink for her roller skating parties, so she bought the place! Reportedly, it cost her close to $1 million, but at least now she doesn't have to make a reservation.

SLY STALLONE couldn't have been more embarrassed when a sales clerk in a Hollywood record store asked that he sign his credit card receipt and he thought she was requesting his autograph. "I don't give autographs." Sly was heard — by almost everyone in the store — to blurt. The befuddled clerk simply waved the receipt in the air at the actor.

It doesn't pay to be famous. When a youngster fell from her bicycle and cut her knee on a sprinkler in the front yard of DEIDRE HALL, Marlena on NBC's "DAYS OF OUR LIVES," the actress went to the child's aid. After contacting the girl's working mother, she took the child to a physician for stitches and then took the youngster home. Without giving it a second thought, Deidre voluntarily paid for the office visit as well. She didn't, that is, until three weeks later when she was notified that she was being sued for negligence by the child's parents!

Over at CBS' "THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS" meanwhile, cast, crew and network executives gathered on the serial's sound stage to celebrate the show's sixth anniversary.

All three networks have set mid-May as the deadline for announcing their Fall schedules, but perhaps with the exception of ABC, observers are predicting that a final slate of new shows and new time slots for old shows won't be finalized much before Sept. 1st!

BILL BIXBY celebrated the renewal of "THE INCREDIBLE HULK" by buying a $750,000 yacht, which he and his family are now calling home. It's moored in the Marina del Rey yacht harbor in Los Angeles.

All-Femme Movie

"Walls Come Tumbling Down," a television movie featuring an all-female cast, will go into production in May for NBC.

In the story, one of six former sorority sisters is accused of murder when a catastrophic event reaches across 15 years to haunt them.

Comedy About A Drive-In

The action on the movie screen is nothing compared to the goings-on of a fun-loving audience that erupt for a hot night on the town in "Drive-In," a contemporary comedy of young love and adventure making its television premiere as "The ABC Friday Night Movie," April 20 (9 to 11 p.m.).

The Alamo Drive-In Theatre has a little something for everyone in its feature movie — a tidal wave, a shark fight, an earthquake, a mid-air collision and a burning skyscraper — but the film seems a little tame by comparison to the antics of the audience. In one car, Orville Henningson is fighting off the advances of the prettiest girl in town — who also is the steady girlfriend of the toughest guy in town. In another car, the Widow makers gang is looking for members of the Gear Grinders gang, with unpleasantness in mind. When everything explodes at once, the on-screen tidal wave seems little more than a ripple by comparison.

Michele Will Tell

Q: Has the actress who played Olivia on "The Waltons" left the series permanently? V. JONES, SOCIETY HILL, S.C.

A: That's what Michael Learned says. "I never dreamed it would last this long. I'm just exhausted, and tired of the grind," Michael said at the time of her abrupt departure.

Q: Would you please tell me somthing about actor Peter Strauss, the star of the recent TV movie, "The Jericho Mile"? What is his address? K.W., LEXINGTON, N.C.

A: Strauss burst on the scene a couple of years ago in the role of Rudy Jordache in "Rich Man, Poor Man" and has been in constant demand since. Born in New York Strauss (of German extraction) was in his first play — "The Taming of a Shrew" — at the age of 13. From there it was all onward and upward. In prep school, he directed and appeared in a number of plays, then went on to college at Northwestern. His address is: The William Morris Agency, 1350 Ave. of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10019.

Q: Are John Denver and Bob Denver related? V. SMITH, GREENVILLE, N.C.

A: No. John Denver was born Henry John Deutchendorf, Jr. and changed his name to Denver — after his favorite city — when the record company said his original moniker wouldn't fit on a label.

Q: Why did Lawrence Welk's daughter-in-law, Tanya, leave his show? R. BRYANT, MORGANTON, N.C.

Q: Please give me some information about Dottie West. A. SHEARIN, LITTLETON, N.C.

A: Dottie, born Oct. 11, 1932 in McMinnville, Tenn., is an almuna of Tennessee Tech and now lives in Nashville with her husband and four children. She won the 1978 Country Music Association Award for Best Vocal Duo with Kenny Rogers, and frequently appears with him in concert.

Two Stars Share Positive Outlook

Erin Moran of "Happy Days" and Kristy McNichol of "Family," two of television's brightest young stars, share a decidedly positive outlook on what it's like to grow up as a nation watches.

Erin and her series character, Joanie Cunningham, have blossomed into pretty young ladies since "Happy Days" captured its large Tuesday night audience.

And Kristy, at just 16, is an Emmy-Award-winner who until this season had played the youngest member of the Lawrence family since the pilot was filmed in March, 1975.

"I don't agree with people who predict bad futures for kids growing up in movies and TV," Kristy says firmly. "I had my first job interview when I was 7 1/2, for a cheese commercial," she recalls. "I got the job. When I was nine, I got a part in 'Love American Style' and I've been working ever since. I think this is a terrific business to grow up in. I would hate not working even though I complain sometimes because I don't have enough time to do some of the stuff I like."

Erin Moran describes having two families as seeming like a natural situation. "For almost five years on 'Happy Days' I have had a mom and pop (Marion Ross and Tom Bosley) and a brother (Ron Howard) who gives me advice and help me just as my own parents and brothers and sisters do at home, she explains. "It's been great."

The only rough spot turns out to be watching herself in returns of early episodes. "It was terrible," Erin says. "I hate watching myself, but it's fun to watch the rest of the cast. Sometimes I mentally cry out to the director, 'Please stop. Let me do that over."

Erin's other television credits include a great-starring role in a segment of "The Waltons," appearances on several other series — "Death Valley Days," "The Courtship of Eddie's Father," "My Three Sons" and "Family Affair." She also had the co-starring role as Jenny in the "Daktari" series.

Erin and Christy also share a strong affection for animals. Both enjoy horseback riding, and the apple of Erin's eye is her roan quarter horse named Apples.

Gymnastics Are Shown On CBS

In what may be a preview of gymnastics competition in the 1980 Olympics, "CBS Sports Spectacular" will broadcast highlights of the world Mixed Pairs Gymnasties Championship for seven consecutive weeks, beginning Saturday, April 21 (4:30 to 6 p.m.).

Ten teams (each consisting of one male and one female) from eight of the best gymnastics countries in the world competed earlier this month at the Omni in Atlanta, Ga. The Soviet Union and the United State each had two teams entered.

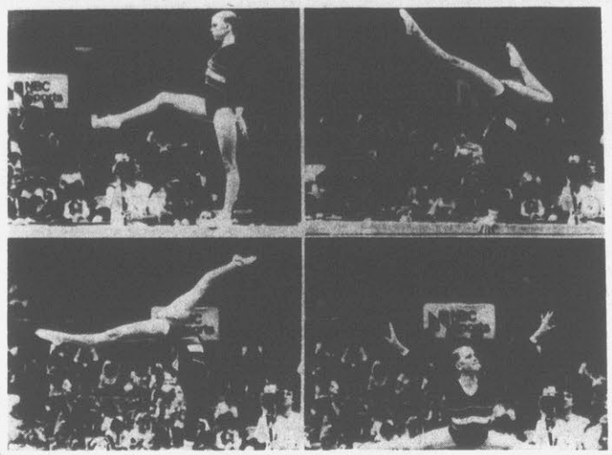

Among those competing for the U.S. was Kathy Johnson, the 1978 U.S. National Champion, a 19-year-old student at Centenary College in Louisiana. Kathy competed for the U.S. in the '78 World Championships and World Cup, taking a bronze medal in the floor exercise in each.

Two young Americans composed the second team from the U.S., 12-year-old Tracee Talavera and 17-year-old Phil Cahoy. Tracee, who lives and trains in Oregon, has been a winner of nearly every regional and national junior championship held in this country the past year. She startled many experts by taking the America Cup's bronze medal in the all-around in her first international competition (held in New York's Madison Square Garden).

Cahoy, a high school senior from Omaha, Neb., is coached by his father and started at the age of 4. In 1976 he won the AAU Junior Olympics and last March he took a gold medal on the high bar in the Soviet Union's prestigious Riga Cup. He is a member of the United States' world championship team.

Hungary sent Zolten Magyar, the Olympic champion on the pommel horse and unquestionably the best in the world at that event. Known as "The Fox" to his countrymen, Magyar won another gold medal on the pommel horse at the 1978 World Championships with a near-perfect score of 9.90. His performance is so original that now other gymnasts have copied one of his best moves, the "Magyar spindle," on the apparatus.

The Soviet Union had two of their brightest male hopes for 1980 at Altanta. They were Junior European Champion, Bogdam Makuts, and Anatoli Anisimov, who placed third in that championship last year. Makuts swept to the all-around gold medal by taking firsts in the vault, floor exercise and high bar.

Kathy Johnson, the 1978 U.S. National Champion, will compete for the U.S. in the World Mixed Pairs Gymnastics Championships on the CBS Sports Spectacular, beginning on Saturday, April 21 at 4:30 p.m.

The Teen Scene

ERIK ESTRADA no sooner returned to Hollywood from a brief visit to his native Spanish-Harlem in New York than he laid out about $3,000 on some new tailor-made clothes, including a white silk suit.

It may come as a surprise to those faithful who watch "FAMILY," but it's understood that KRISTY McNICHOL has her first screen love scene in the movie, "LITTLE DARLINGS," in which she stars with TATUM O'NEAL.

REX SMITH, who charmed DENISE MILLER in the TV movie, "SOONER OR LATER," is an understudy in the Broadway play, "GREASE." He was picked for the role when the film's producers visited the New York offices of SUPERTEEN MAGAZINE to find just the right singer.

JOHN TRAVOLTA is preparing for his next film, "URBAN COWBOY," by using an electronic bucking bronco in the privacy of his home. So far, he's not been thrown once!

As private as LEIF GARRETT's new home is, once of his many admirers found it and led a large group of fans to the outside entrance of the home. After several hours, they learned that Leif is in Japan, so they left.

While it's being denied by all concerned, NBC would like to turn "SOONER OR LATER" into a series. However, because of contractual commitments by the stars — particularly the offers coming Denise Miller's way — the likelihood is slim.

Something New

CBS-TV's 1979-80 fall programming schedule for young people, including three new special features — "Library" for weekend broadcast, "Afternoon Playhouse" for school-day afternoons, and "The Kids on the Block," a program for and about handicapped children — was announced recently.

"The CBS Library" is designed to stimulate reading through three one-hour specials, one of which will be repeated during the season. It is based on contemporary books and is to be scheduled during weekend afternoons and holidays.

"CBS Afternoon Playhouse," following its presentation on five consecutive days of "Joey and Redhawk" last December, will present two new miniseries next year and rebroadcast "Joey."

"The Kids on the Block" uses nearly life-sized handcrafted puppets in a special based on a concept designed to ease the entry of handicapped children into regular classrooms and society, and will be presented three times next season on weekend afternoons and holidays.

Yea For Dinah!

JoAnne Carner, one of the money winners on the LPGA Tour, says that Dinah Shore has been instrumental in the growth of that circuit. "Having Dinah Shore with us opened up big money and success for our game. She is so popular throughout the country. A few years ago our total prize money was $800,000. Now we're playing for $4.5 million. Dinah brought Colgate, and that brought in other major companies. We owe a lot to that lady."

'Challenge' Ends The Season

CBS Sports closes the fourth season of its popular "Challenge of the Sexes" series with highlights of some of the most exciting segments from this year's programs, Sunday, April 15 (3:30 to 4 p.m.).

One of the highlights of the event will be in the billiards category, when Jean Balukas (six-time U.S. Women's champion and conqueror of Willie Mosconi in a previous 'Challenge' program) is pitted against Ray Martin, the 1978 Professional Pool Players Association World Champion.

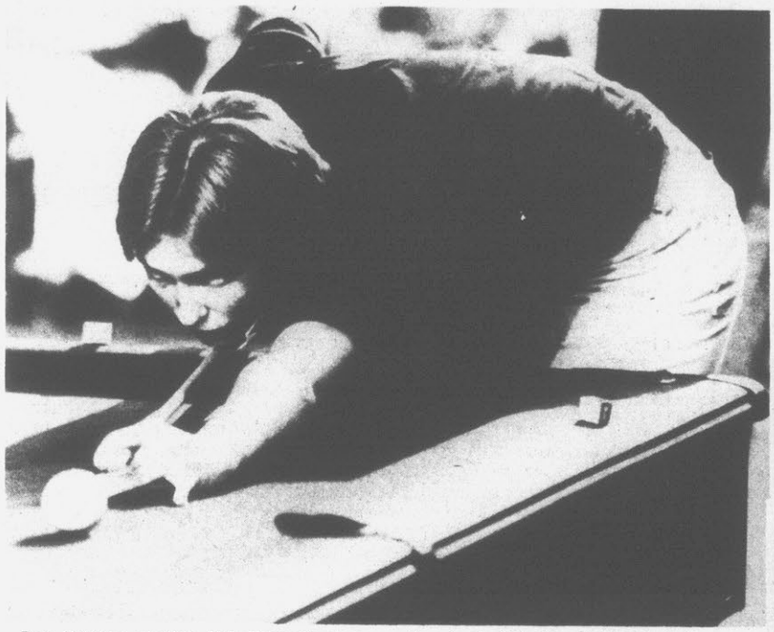

Following are several of the other events and competitors which will be featured:

Golf: Nancy Lopez (LPGA champion and winner of five straight tour events in 1978 and nine altogether) vs. Andy North (1978 U.S. Open champion).

Tennis: Martina Navratilova (1978 Wimbledon winner and 1979 champion of the women's winter tour) vs. Roscoe Tanner (owner of one of the fastest serves in men's tennis).

Basketball: Adrian Dantley (three-time Notre Dame All-America, star of the gold-medal winning 1978 U.S. Olympic basketball team, and now with the Los Angeles Lakers) vs. Carol Blazejowski (the nation's leading female college scorer during her last two years at Montclair State (Montclair, N.J.) and holder of the Madison Square Garden scoring record for men or women).

Gymnastics: Kathy Johnson (the U.S.F.G. all-around champion in 1978 and holder of the highest placing by a U.S. woman in the world championships) vs. Bart Conner (the NCAA all-around 1978 champion and first American to reach the finals in three events at the world championships).

Jean Balukas, six-time U.S. Women's champion, will meet Ray Martin, the 1978 Professional Pool Players Association World Champion, in the "Challenge of the Sexes," on Sunday, April 15 at 3:30 p.m. on CBS.

Getting Better

You would have thought after the season Jim Rice had in 1978 that he could at least crack a smile. But mention the 1979 American League campaign to the Boston Red Sox slugger, and you'll probably get lots of frowns.

That's because his team lost that heartbreaker to the New York Yankees in the special Eastern Division playoffs last season by one run. Like the rest of the Sox, Rice still has visions of Bucky Dent dancing through his head.

The Boston Red Sox get a chance to redeem themselves this season, and they'll begin that campaign when they play the defending Western Division American League champs, the Kansas City Royals Saturday, April 21 (1:15 p.m. on NBC-TV).

Rice was the absolute slugging leader in the American League last season, leading the AL in six different categories. Because of his exploits, he was named Most Valuable Player.

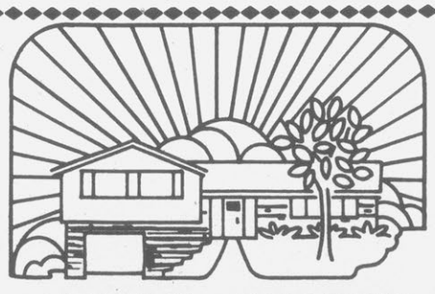

"Winning the MVP was nice," he admits, "but if I play baseball for the next ten years, the thing I want most is 10 World Series rings."

Rice was the Major League's leader in hits (213), total bases (406), homers (46), runs-batted-in (139), and slugging percentage (.600). He was also second in runs scored (117) and the first player in history to lead his league in both homers and triples.

But that's the way it's been for the Sox outfielder since he broke into the league with another celebrated slugger, teammate Fred Lynn. The pair made up one of the best rookie combinations ever.

In 1976, Lynn became the first rookie ever to be named Most Valuable Player. Both he and Rice hit over .300 and knocked in over 100 RBIs, carrying the Bosox to an American League pennant.

2 Larry Lea Presents

Poitier And Crosby In A Sprightly Comedy

The frantic search for a stolen lottery ticket by two good-natured buddies — played by Sidney Poitier and Bill Cosby — who find themselves over their heads in gangland shenanigans, cues the action in "Uptown Saturday Night," to be rebroadcast on "The CBS Saturday Night Movies," April 21 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Poitier, who also directed, plays a down-to-earth but innocently rakish factory-worker who, along with his slightly more cosmopolitan buddy (Bill Cosby, a bearded and twinkling-eyed cab driver) sneaks away from his wife one evening for a late-night fling at Madame Zenobia's, a posh black gambling joint. Duded up and with a phony letter of introduction, the two guys make out pretty well until, just when Cosby has won a bundle, the club is raided by a gang of unidentified robbers. Poitier counts himself lucky that he only lost a wallet but doesn't realize until the next morning that it contained a $50,000 winning lottery ticket.

Their crusade to retrieve the stolen ticket forms the mainstay of the film as they seek help from a bevy of zany characters ranging from a paranoid con-man posing as a private eye (Richard Pryor) to a pompous and slimy politician (Roscoe Lee Browne) who alternately hangs a portrait of Richard Nixon or Malcolm X, depending on who is visiting his office. From there, it's off into the underworld where Poitier and Cosby cleverly play two rival gangleaders (Harry Belafonte in a broad take-off of Brando in "The Godfather," and Calvin Lockheart) against each other. After a variety of sprightly ruses, tall-tales and physical dexterities there's a predictably happy ending although our two heroes are considerably the worse for wear.

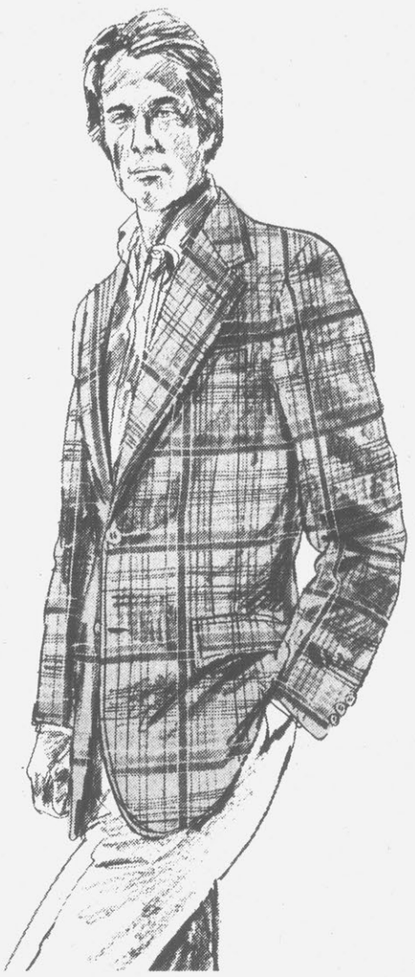

Poitier's performance is a looser and leaner one than he's ever given before, and Cosby, too, is excellent, maintaining a perpetually ironic presence which only falters when he's called on to deliver some superbly embroidered lies.

On the directorial side, Poitier has made the material extremely workable, moving the narrative crisply along and conjuring up some nicely orchestrated bits of physical comedy, particularly in a hilarious bar room confrontation with a midget gangster and his giant bodyguard.

We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

Tax time: you can't win them all.

FOR JEROME KURTZ, Commissioner of Internal Revenue Service

How many lawsuits were filed against the I.R.S. in the U.S. fiscal year 1977-78? — Joe V. Olson, Booneville, Ark.

● During the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, 1978, 13,284 cases were petitioned to the U.S. Tax Court and 1,029 civil tax cases were filed in the U.S. District Courts or the U.S. Court of Claims. Typically, about 80 percent of these court cases are either dismissed or settled without trial. Most disputed tax cases are settled within I.R.S. The I.R.S. conducts over 2.3 million tax examinations a year with additional tax recommended in about 1.5 million of them. About 62,000 cases a year, which are not closed by agreement with taxpayers, go through the Internal Revenue Service administrative appeals system, where most are settled without having to go to the courts.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Does Lesley-Anne Down, star of The Great Train Robbery, agree with critics who call her "another Sophia Loren or Marilyn Monroe"? — G.O., Dover, Del.

● No. In fact, when she's compared to current or past screen beauties, she gets acutely uncomfortable and, to her embarrassment, blushes. Lesley, 25, has said: "I have no confidence in my looks. When people pay me compliments, I go red all over." Lesley's idea of beauty is narrowed down to two actresses — Jane Fonda or Elizabeth Taylor. "When I was making A Little Night Music with Liz in Austria, I spent the first few days just staring at her. Her beauty is natural; mine is just makeup." Lesley doesn't take the film business seriously. She takes it from day to day, explaining, "At least twice a year, since I started in movies, I've been called the 'new this' or the 'new that.'" Lesley's next film is Hanover Street with Harrison Ford.

Frank Edwards / Fotos International

Lesley-Anne Down: another Sophia?

FOR KRISTY McNICHOL, star of Family

I hear you worry your mother to death because you fritter away money. What's the story? — E.W., Mesa, Ariz.

● No story, because the one you heard is nonsense. My mother manages my money, investing much of it in real estate. I get an allowance of $25 a week, plus the use of my own charge accounts. But I don't use them very much since I'm not really into monetary things. I like new clothes every so often, or for a special occasion. I do have my own car — my mom considered that a need, not a luxury.

FOR REP. JAMES H.QUILLEN (R.-Tenn.)

You once put a goldfish in your water pitcher during a House Rules Committee meeting. Why? — B.R.S., Beachwood, N.J.

● Experience has taught me that important points often can be better made with humor than with formal oration. The goldfish, larger than most "snail darter" fish, an endangered species, helped me illustrate to my colleagues the absurdity of causing a $119 million TVA-built dam in my state to stand idle. As a result, legislation was amended.

FOR GENE F. JANKOWSKI, President, CBS-Broadcast Group

British TV seems better than ours, the color sharper and more subtle because they use 625 lines on their screens as opposed to our 525. Why can't we do the same? — Mrs. Joan M. Herz, New London, N.H.

● The price paid for the European standard is an increase of about 15 percent in channel band width, allowing fewer channels and fewer program choices. A change in U.S. standards would be a monumental and costly undertaking.

FOR CHERYL TIEGS, model

Other people describe you as having the perfect face and figure. What do you like the most and the least about yourself? — D.R., San Mateo, Calif.

● What I like best are my eyes, which I accentuate by using dark makeup (all around). What I like least is that I have a tendency to seem expressionless. To others, I'm afraid it must seem as if I'm bored or disinterested, which is not so, of course. People are most familiar and comfortable with my face when it's animated.

FOR ROBERTA PETERS, Metropolitan Opera star

Since you've been singing for so long, do you still practice every day — and do you exercise, as other actresses do? — S.A., Albany, N.Y.

● Practicing is a must, whether one has been singing for a year, or coming up to 30 (as I have). I practice about one hour, not every single day, but most days. My family goes about its business and accepts my workouts as a normal part of the household routine. Sometimes I think no one even hears me. And physical exercise is just as important.

FOR JOHN A. ZIEGLER JR., President, National Hockey League

We often read of fights between players at games, which lead to charges being pressed by attorneys from NHL cities. Do you favor this kind of action taken by city authorities? —Ricky Olson, Rugby, N.D.

● In the last 10 years, there have been no prosecutions against NHL players for fights in games in the U.S. That speaks for itself. Hopefully, the authorities are satisfied with the League's own disciplinary procedures.

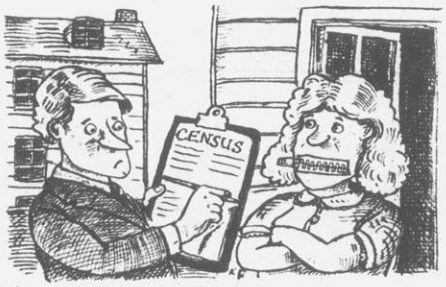

PRO AND CON

Although the Census Bureau has a strong tradition of confidentiality, its survey questions are far too intrusive — marital status, literacy, disabilities, commuting time, wages, length of lease, number of appliances, housing expenses, public assistance, parents' country of birth and even the number of toilets and bathtubs. And there's a $100 criminal penalty for refusing to answer! All of this prying serves not public interests but commercial interests — which decide where to locate factories and how to market products on the basis of millions of bits of free census information. Why should citizens put up with this mandatory intrusion every five years (no longer every 10 years) simply to give businesses free demographic data?

Response to the census is required by law and information furnished on report forms is kept strictly confidential. This law clearly states that individual U.S. Census reports cannot be used for purposes of taxation, investigation or regulation. It also requires that published data be in such a form that it is not possible to identify an individual or a single business establishment. The law stipulates that no one other than sworn officers and employees may have access to individual information. If the American people understand the usefulness of the data we collect, they will cooperate in sharing facts about themselves — and the information will be more truthful if they have no doubts about how the data will be used.

HOW JEALOUSY CAN IMPROVE YOUR MARRIAGE

By Norman M. Lobsenz

You are at a party and you see your wife at the other end of the room, deep in conversation with a man you have only recently met. From time to time the two of them break into laughter. She never laughs like that when we talk, you think. And what can they be talking about that's so interesting?

For the last few weeks your husband has been working late every night, "to catch up on paperwork," he explains. You ask whether there is anything you can do to help. "That's thoughtful of you," he replies, "but actually Miss Adams has volunteered to stay and work with me." You know you can trust your husband, even with his new young secretary. But still...a nagging doubt grows in your mind.

In situations like these, we all have a reason to feel jealous, right? Or do we? Not too long ago, jealousy was deemed to be a normal aspect of love; it was natural to feel suspicious or worried if you sensed a threat to your relationship. Some men and women even welcomed a partner's jealousy — within limits. "I'd be disappointed if Jerry wasn't a teeny bit jealous now and then," one woman said. "It means he thinks I can still be attractive to other men. It's good for my morale!"

More recently, however, jealousy has been labeled an outdated emotion. Experts on "liberated" man-woman relationships denounce it as unnatural, never useful, and, wrote sociologist Dr. Jessie Bernard, "hardly salient at all today." But it seems the green-eyed monster is not that easily overcome. Counselors report no drop in the number of couples who seek help in dealing with jealousy. And couples living together unmarried who have an understanding that each partner has the right to emotional — and sometimes sexual — freedom are distressed to find they, too, have unexpected feelings of jealousy.

Some authorities even suggest that jealousy may be an instinctive reaction to the threat of an emotional loss. This threat, write sociologists Gordon Clanton and Lynn Smith in their book, Jealousy, is reinforced by common childhood experiences: "As infants, each of us had to learn to let go of the mother, to share her...with siblings. We learned that we would not have full control over and total access to those on whom we depend" for emotional substance.

But if jealousy is, after all, a natural reaction, that does not necessarily mean it must have destructive side effects. The fact is that if one deals with it intelligently, jealousy can be a constructive emotion and can actually help to strengthen the ties of love. "What matters," one psychologist points out, "is not that a person is jealous but whether he or she can find out why — and then can do something about the cause."

Essentially, jealousy arises out of self-doubt, a lack of self-esteem, feelings of inadequacy. As such, it is a valuable warning signal of problems that need to be resolved if a marriage or love affair is to prosper. For example, when I asked a number of husbands and wives what single thing triggered feelings of jealousy, only a few mentioned sexual unfaithfulness. Most said such things as: "When he spends more time with his work than he does with me"....."When he (or she) is more attentive to other women (or men) then he is to me." In each case, obviously, jealousy was due more to inner doubts than to outer dangers.

Just as physical pain spurs us to do something to remedy a bodily problem, so jealousy is a way of calling our attention to an emotional problem we might otherwise not recognize or want to face. To deal with it involves not worrying about what our partner may be doing, but analyzing our own reactions. "Take your jealousy," advises therapist Louis Ormont, "and ask questions of it."

For instance, the husband whose wife was so involved in her conversation with another man could react in either of two ways. On the one hand, he could give in to his anxieties and self-doubts and let his jealous fancies run riot: Obviously she finds him more attractive than me. Well, I can't really blame her. Look how much attention he is paying to her. I wonder whether he'll ask her to have lunch with him. I bet they're going to make a date, find excuses to be together. That's always the way affairs begin! How can I trust her when she behaves like this? What will I do if she falls in love with him?

On the other hand, the man could analyze his jealous feelings this way: Why is she so lively? She must be having an interesting conversation. Maybe I don't talk with her enough or discuss the things that interest her. Why should it bother me that she is having a good time? Since I love her, I ought to be glad she's enjoying the party. Do I really imagine that just because she likes to talk to this fellow she is planning to have an affair with him? That's ridiculous! Am I so insecure that I don't trust her away from my side for 10 minutes? If I am, I'd better do something about that.

To convert jealousy from a negative to a positive reaction requires two basic actions. First, one must stop concentrating on what one's partner may be doing or thinking. Second, as psychoanalyst Rollo May has pointed out, "It requires turning one's attention to oneself and asking, 'Why is my self-esteem so low? This may be difficult to answer, but at least it turns your concern to an area you can do something about."

For example, one young wife became jealous of her lawyer husband when he kept talking about an unmarried woman attorney in his firm. "All he ever mentioned was how good she was at her job. He never said anything personal about her, and that's what made me suspicious," the wife said. "I finally met her at the firm's Christmas party. She wasn't at all attractive, but Jerry still spent most of the evening talking to her. I exploded when we got home. 'Why are you upset?' Jerry asked. 'I learn a lot from her, and she's a nice person, but why should that make you so jealous?

"That made me stop and think," the woman continued. "I began to think about myself, and I realized how I had always been worried about not being as smart as Jerry or as well educated. But I hadn't done anything to change that situation. So I took an evening-school class on 'Law for the Layman.' It probably sounds silly, but just being able to talk to Jerry about his work, to understand it better, gave me more confidence and security in our relationship."

All too often most people allow jealousy to deteriorate into feelings of guilt and self-pity at best, or anger and hatred at worst. But jealousy can be a stimulus to constructive action. Here are some steps experts suggest for converting jealous feelings from negative to positive results:

- Recognize that no one person can meet all our emotional needs, nor can we meet all of someone else's needs.
- Develop a sense of independence and allow the person we love to have the same independence.
- Strengthen the areas in which we feel vulnerable or inadequate so that self-esteem is increased.
- Make sure we aren't encouraging jealous feelings because we secretly enjoy them — or like being melodramatic.
- Honestly admit jealous feelings and ask a partner to help you deal with them.

No one ever feels totally secure about a love relationship. "As long as human beings need affection, there will be jealousy," say Gordon Clanton and Lynn Smith. "[But] jealousy is neither proof of love nor evidence of personal failure. It is merely a signal that tells you to attend to your relationship and to yourself." If jealousy is used to punish a partner or feed self-pity, it will only be corrosive. If it is used in a rational way, to gain insight and clarify problems, jealousy can help a marriage grow. FW

ROMANCE WRITERS: SPINNING LOVE INTO GOLD

By Suzy Kalter

"I can't believe this book was written by a man, no man could know those things about a woman!" stormed an irate buyer at her local book store, as she plunked down her creased and well-read copy of Love's Tender Fury by Jennifer Wilde and demanded her money back.

Jennifer Wilde, it has just been revealed, is actually a man. A very nice man, named Tom Huff, 42, who lives with his mother in an old Victorian mansion outside of Ft. Worth, Texas, and who spends a lot of his time writing as Jennifer Wilde, and a lot of his time writing as Tom Huff.

As Jennifer Wilde, he has published several paperback original novels (all historical romances) and sold so many copies for Warner Books that he is one of the most well-known, best-loved and highly saleable of the authors churning out potboilers and love stories, family sagas and generational tales. He has sold several million copies of his paperbacks, making him one of the three kings (or queens) of historical romance. Although he is the only man among the top sellers, he is not the only man to write this kind of book and use a pen name.

"These books are read mainly by women," he explained in his careful Texas drawl, "and when I first started writing them, which was several years ago and times were a bit different, we were afraid that women would only buy this kind of book if it were written by a woman. So we just picked a name. I've had several pseudonyms."

Besides Jennifer Wilde, the other two leading names in "this kind of book" are Rosemary Rogers and Patricia Matthews. Both are in their 40's, had complete careers outside of book publishing (Rogers was a secretary for years; Matthews worked in a clerical position at a college for 17 years) that they relied on for their incomes while they toiled over the typewriter. And both have become millionaires, selling millions of copies of titles like Love's Avenging Heart, Sweet Savage Love and The Crowd Pleasers.

The Crowd Pleasers, Rosemary Rogers' most recently published book, is different from all the others: it is a contemporary novel about high fashion, lust and San Francisco, and is Rogers' first move away from the historical fiction she has become famous for.

"I don't see much difference between the two," she purrs, in her slightly accented (she was born in Ceylon and raised in India), throaty whisper. "Contemporary novels are also romantic, they have the same action and intrigue. In my head I'm writing the same thing, the research is just different, and they wear different kinds of clothes."

Suzy Kalter, an incurable romantic, was ripe for learning the secrets of writing romances.

Historical romances, by definition, require a tremendous amount of research. They always take place in a past century and usually span several continents, preferably three locations, maybe four. "I spend a tremendous amount of my time researching," says Patricia Matthews. "I may have a basic idea of my story line and plot, but only after I get into the research do I really know what direction the story will take. You find so much great stuff in the research that you want to use it all, which you can never do, or you find something that you think is so good you have to change dates and a few facts around just so you can work it in."

Certain authors become experts at certain time periods; other authors stick to time periods they know sell well (Tudor England, Pre-Revolutionary France, American Colonial) while others draw from their own backgrounds. Because Rogers grew up in Ceylon and India, she often draws on personal memories, transposing them into the right frame. She is currently working on a historical romance tentatively titled Last Love, Lost Love, which takes place in India and the American Southwest (another area she knows well) in the 1870's — a time period she has worked with before.

Time and place are not the only givens in a historical romance. "Sure, they all have a formula," admits Patricia Matthews. "It's like somebody once told me, 'You get the heroine up a tree and then throw stones at her.' You let her get into a mess and get herself out of the mess. And you have to have a happy ending. Everyone wants a happy ending."

Everyone also wants a villain who is really vile. "You have to have a character who is mean and rotten in the beginning of the book who everyone thinks is the worst," says Matthews. "Then the heroine escapes him, only she ends up with somebody much worse. People love villains. I learned that from Dickens."

ROMANCE WRITERS

Villains are pretty easy to spot in romances because they are almost always mean stepfathers or worse. They have names like Rudd or Silas (the heroes are named Adam, Robert or David) and always attack their helpless victims — heroines with names like Eulalie, Elena, or Leliha rather than Jane or Sue.

And there lies the key to the sale of so many books: the heroines are the women every woman dreams she is. She is on her own ("You have to get rid of the parents in the first chapter," says Matthews, "otherwise there's no explaining why a young lady of that time gets into so much trouble") to fight her own way in the world. She encounters a lot of problems, but she overcomes them all, and in the end lives happily ever after.

Because of their strong theme of woman's independence and survival, historical romances differ from many of the other types of books often referred to as "women's books."

Barbara Cartland also writes historical love stories with female heroines, but they are of the "regency" style. They have no sex whatsoever and usually end with a kiss, which is the promise of all that is to come. Cartland, and her literary followers, have sold millions of books, and they are truly expert at weaving the same story in and out of different places and times.

An altogether different variation is the historical novel. These, too, take place during another time and usually feature a woman in a heroic and noble position. They are always based on historical facts and usually pivot around people and circumstances that are well known and undisputed history. Mistress of this genre is Victoria Holt (who is also Jean Plaidy). She is particularly comfortable with Tudor England and French medieval history. Historical novels, rather than historical romances, have more cross-over in the book world than most of these books. They often come out first as hard-cover editions and then are reprinted in paperback, rather than created as paperbacks. (Victoria Holt is the name the author uses for hardback editions, Jean Plaidy for paperback originals.)

"You should be able to tell a book type by its title," says Patricia Matthews. "I wanted to name my first book Malvern because that's the name of the plantation where a lot of the action takes place. But I had to change the title because the publishers were afraid I would mislead the readers. Books with plantation names are not historical romances. They are called Plantation Novels."

By Matthews' rule, books with emotions in the title are historical romances (The Flame and The Passion, Love's Tender Fury), while books with women's names in the title are historical novels (Maria, Fionna, Anya). Family stories, generationals and sagas are again another breed of book.

"I'd written many other types of books," says Patricia Matthews, "and my husband Matt (Clayton Matthews) has done a lot of family saga and generational things. I did mostly juveniles, science fiction and nonfiction before this. But my agent told me that a new kind of book was really selling, and he suggested I try it."

Matthews' first try was Love's Avenging Heart, which went directly onto The New York Times paperback best-seller list and sold over 1.5 million copies. All four of her subsequent novels have gone onto the best-seller list, making her the only author to have five consecutive novels on the list. Her sixth one, Love's Magic Moment, is out this month and is the story of a woman on an archeological dig in Mexico — both archeology and Mexico are personal passions of Mrs. Matthews. After Love's Magic Moment comes an as-of-yet unnamed book that takes place in Alaska and around the Yukon. Matthews spent several years living in Oregon, around lumber mills (a theme in a previous book, Love's Daring Dream) and is familiar with the wild outdoors of bleak winters, silent streams and tall, tall trees.

While the Matthewses travel about 25,000 miles a year researching their books — Patty likes to study each location she writes about unless it's very exotic or far away — they still spend most of their time in their modest redwood frame house that hangs off a cliff between Los Angeles and Pasadena. Patty practices her own brand of witchcraft and studies the occult when not writing. She claims to have made the charm that put her books on the best-seller list.

Her style is exceedingly different from Rosemary Rogers. Matthews writes short, staccato sentences and packs a lot of action into each page. While Rogers doesn't stint on the action, she gives much more description and uses a much more elaborate sentence pattern.

"I just write what I see in my mind. It's kind of like a screen up there; it's like a mind movie. I become all the characters in the story. I feel what they are feeling — male and female. I can even hear the voices and their different intonations and pronunciations of words."

If Patricia Matthews is the antithesis of her heroines, being overweight and doing her own housework in her modest little home, then Rosemary Rogers is the personification of the women she writes about. Dark-skinned and exotic-looking, she has long, flowing black tresses and a look of sexual prowess in her eyes that carries through to her every movement. The men she writes about are the kind of men she would like to meet. She divides her time between two California homes: one at the beach near Carmel, the other, a townhouse in San Francisco, spending her relaxing hours in her private redwood hot tub sipping wine from a goblet.

"I have no more discipline in my life," she laughs. "I think I've even forgotten how to take shorthand." No need to worry. She has a full-time secretary who tends to the details. All Rosemary needs to do is write — which she does late at night. "I have no schedule. I just sit at my typewriter at night and write for as long as it flows. It depends how fast the thoughts are coming. You know how the creative juices are. Sometimes there are 10 pages, sometimes 30."

Working until dawn, Rogers sleeps until noon or two and lives the life of a night person, claiming to be a bit "dazed" by her new lifestyle. "It's all like a dream."

Just like one of her books. FW

How to Cut Your Income Tax to Zero

Tax law says you don't have to pay taxes—even if you earn between $15,000 to $25,000 or more!

Nobody likes to pay taxes. And the tax laws in this country say you don't have to. Most people think that the wealthy are the only ones who can save thousands of dollars each year on their taxes. But anybody with an average income can take advantage of the tax law.

In the next 12 months you can reduce the amount of federal and state taxes you pay, to almost nothing.

Let me explain exactly what I mean. Tax shelter's nothing more or less than taking advantage of the tax laws that were put there for a reason. The reason is to help you and motivate you to invest so you will help the economy of the United States. (Your investment doesn't have to be cash, either. It can be just a bit of your time.)

The key to saving on your taxes is a little thing called "depreciation". You see, the U.S. Congress years ago decided that depreciation on certain kinds of properties could be deducted from your taxable income. (Depreciation in theory means, that your property goes down in value because of physical as well as functional deterioration.)

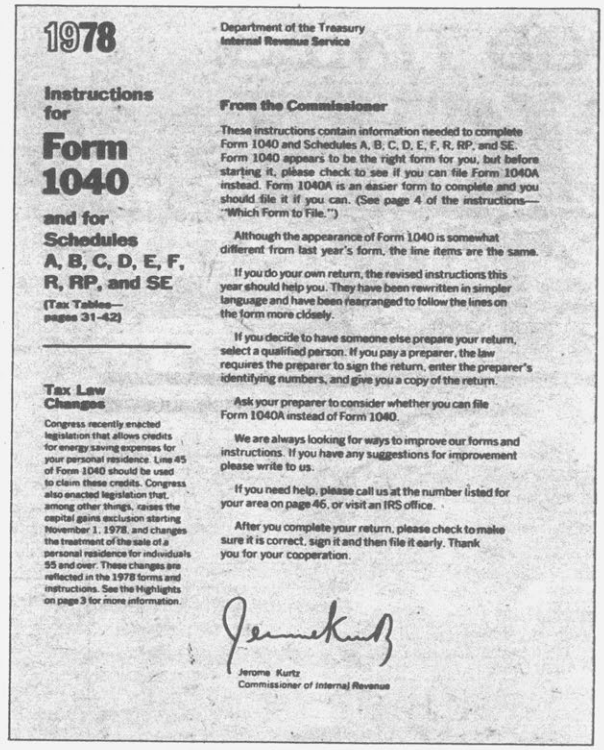

Of course, congress knew full well that properties in actual practice appreciate in value, but they still allow people to deduct the non-existant depreciation from their personal federal and state taxes.

So now, even if your income is only $15,000 to $25,000 a year, you can quite easily acquire enough property with enough depreciation that your tax bill is zero or close to it. And you can buy those properties without any cash of your own. Read on and you'll see how.

Here's a simple example: If you bought a duplex for a total of $75,000 and bought it entirely with someone else's money — and I'll show you how to do that in a minute — how much depreciation and tax savings would that give you?

Let's say you rented your duplex out for $800 per month and you have to pay back your loan of $75,000 in 30 years with a 10¼% interest. Your monthly payments would now be $700.11, leaving you with $100 to pay for taxes, insurance and other expenses. (The $75,000 loan would self liquidate by the rent you'd receive)

Now here comes the good news. This property would give you approximately $6,250 in depreciation. Your $6,250 could be deducted from your taxable income. How's that for a deduction!! That's without any cash investment on your part.

Instructions for Form 1040 and for Schedules A, B, C, D, E, F, R, RP, and SE

(Tax Tables—page 31-42)

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

From the Commissioner

These instructions contain information needed to complete Form 1040 and Schedules A, B, C, D, E, F, R, RP, and SE. Form 1040 appears to be the right form for you, but before starting it, please check to see if you can file Form 1040A instead. Form 1040A is an easier form to complete and you should file it if you can. (See page 4 of the instructions—"Which Form to File.")

Although the appearance of Form 1040 is somewhat different from last year's form, the line items are the same.

If you do your own return, the revised instructions this year should help you. They have been rewritten in simpler language and have been rearranged to follow the lines on the form more closely.

If you decide to have someone else prepare your return, select a qualified person. If you pay a preparer, the law requires the preparer to sign the return, enter the preparer's identifying numbers, and give you a copy of the return.

Ask your preparer to consider whether you can file Form 1040A instead of Form 1040.

We are always looking for ways to improve our forms and instructions. If you have any suggestions for improvement please write to us.

If you need help, please call us at the number listed for your area on page 46, or visit an IRS office.

After you complete your return, please check to make sure it is correct, sign it and then file it early. Thank you for your cooperation.

Jerome Kurtz
Commissioner of Internal Revenue

Tax Law Changes

Congress recently enacted legislation that allows credits for energy saving expenses for your personal residence. Line 45 of Form 1040 should be used to claim these credits. Congress also enacted legislation that, among other things, raises the capital gains exclusion starting November 1, 1978, and changes the treatment of the sale of a personal residence for individuals 55 and over. These changes are reflected in the 1978 forms and instructions. See the Highlights on page 3 for more information.

But that's not all. If you are now making $20,000 a year, instead of paying $3,999 that you would normally pay, you now pay only $2,229. That's a nice little chunk of money to get back after you file your tax return.

But that's still not all. By using your cash rebate wisely, you can improve the value of your $75,000 property by 10% to 35%. How? By making the right kind of inexpensive improvements, which will allow and justify an increase in rent by 10% to 35% or more, which of course will increase the value of your property by a like amount. (And I do know what I'm talking about here, as I've been doing this for a number of years with millions of dollars worth of property.)

You see, income property is bought and sold primarily on the basis of its' income stream. Raise net income per year and you have raised the value by the same percentage — sometimes a higher percentage. Keep reading, there's more.

Now that your $75,000 property is worth more, you could sell it and pocket your profit, but there's a smarter and wiser step to take. Don't sell it, keep it. Why? Because of the tax shelter it's giving you. (If you need the cash, you might go ahead and sell it anyway, or better still, get a second mortgage on the new equity you created and keep the property and all the benefits it's giving you.)

You see, now you've got that tax shelter every year. What do you do now? Go out and repeat the process if you want more shelter. If your income is $30 - 40,000, you'll want to repeat the process several times until the point that your tax liability is zero or close to it.

It really is a great deal — you not only save thousands of dollars each year in taxes, but your net worth will be climbing rapidly. (Both because you are improving the property and as a bonus, your property is moving up in value ($7,000 to $8,000 each year)just because of that thing called inflation.)

But wait a minute, you say! How do I buy a property using other people's money without using any of my own? Well I thought you might ask that, so I'm ready with the answer.

In fact, I wrote a complete book about it. Now don't get upset and stop reading now! I know most books written on tax shelter and the buying of income property are fairly difficult, complex and confusing, but mine is not. I wrote it in language which anyone can understand and I know it works, because I've done it myself. In just 48 months I netted over one million dollars and paid less taxes in those years than the guy that makes $20,000 a year.

Tax shelters are nothing more or less than taking advantage of the tax laws that were put there for a reason.

So now here comes the sales pitch! I want you to stop paying so blasted much in taxes. Not because I'm trying to start a tax revolution, but first because tax laws are there that allow you the privilege or advantage of not paying any taxes and secondly, maybe our friends in Washington might get the general hint that we want them to spend less of our money.

Oh, yes, and I want to sell copies of my book, HOW TO WAKE UP THE FINANCIAL GENIUS INSIDE YOU! This will not only show you how to save thousands of dollars on your taxes (or even reduce them to nothing) but it also will show you how to build a very large net worth of several hundred thousand dollars or even more add $500 or $1,000 to your monthly paycheck.

Now, if you can't quite believe everything I've said (I don't really blame you. Most people, including myself, are basically sceptics.) then I would encourage you to check me out. Call or write my bank (Utah First Bank, 3135 South 1300 East), or my accountant (Charles Huber & Assoc., 1050 Beneficial Life Tower), or the Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce, (19 East Second South, All in Salt Lake City, Utah).

Also, when you order, why don't you postdate your check by 30 days, — and I guarantee and promise I will not cash your check for at least 30 days, thereby giving you time to read my material and benefit from it. If there's anything, and I mean anything at all you don't like, then send my book back and we'll send you your check back the same day.

But if you're going to do something, do it NOW. Don't put this paper down without taking action. In fact, if you've decided to order or if you have any questions, go to the phone right now, pick it up and call 801-973-4053 and you can order by credit card. (The same 30 day guarantee applies to credit card buyers.) The investment I ask you to make is only $10.00. I can offer my formulas and methods at this low price because of my huge volume. Incidentally, more than 400,000 people have already bought this book through the mail and I have literally thousands of testimonial stories of how people have saved thousands of dollars on their taxes and built their net worth by hundreds of thousands of dollars.

- Shelter your income by legally avoiding paying federal or state income taxes
- Add cash to your monthly salary
- Benefit from inflation rather than being hurt by it
- Buy income properties for as little as $100 down
- Begin without any cash
- Put $10,000 cash in your pocket each time you buy (without selling property)
- Double your assets every year.
- Buy bargains at one half their market value
- Allow you to travel one week out of every month
- Save 10% of your salary
- Reinvest your tax savings for even greater tax shelter

NOTE: All this can be done immediately and without leaving your job, but after you get going, you may want to quit your present job.

To order, simply take any size paper and write on it the words "Financial Genius" — Dept. G-526. Send with your name, address and a check or money order for $10.00 to me, Mark O. Haroldsen, 2612 South 1030 West, Salt Lake City, Utah 84119. As soon as we receive it, our girls will immediately send you a copy by return mail, so you won't have to wait weeks to receive what you've ordered. To speed up the process you can call 24 hours a day 801-973-4053 and use your credit card to order. We take all major credit cards.

MARVIN HAGLER: BROCKTON'S NEW HOPE

By Barry Stavro

"They can't avoid me any longer." So spoke Marvin Hagler, the bruising middleweight from Brockton, Mass., who at last has the middleweight title within his gun sights.

But until recently, Hagler's career had been one of frustration. For success in boxing, more than any other sport, comes from both physical talent and backroom politics. Hagler has always dripped of talent, but without political clout, all his efforts left him on the outside.

Wide World

Now 26 years old, Hagler has had 45 pro fights in six years, losing but two, both by decisions. Placed at the top of most middleweight rankings, Hagler's routine most nights of the week is the same. After running five miles in the morning, Hagler arrives at the Petronelli Gym in Brockton at 7 P.M. to work out.

The Petronelli brothers, Goode and Pat, double as his manager and trainer, and the three have slowly struggled together. Their gym is a small, one-room affair with two well-worn rings and assorted boxing paraphernalia lying about. The hardwood floors are dirty and musty, while the walls bear numerous photos of Hagler's fights.

In the photos Hagler looks dangerous. He shaves his head before fights, so it gleams under the lights. And his black torso is so heavily muscled that it's shaped like a capital V. Marvin changes clothes in the small locker room, pulling gear from a tiny wooden locker.

Hagler grew up in New Jersey and his family later moved to Brockton, long a hard-core New England boxing center and Rocky Marciano's hometown. Hagler drifted into the sport at 17, when one day he just walked into the Petronelli Gym and said he wanted to learn boxing. Most fighters know their vital statistics in their sleep. Marvin recites his, "I won 52 amateur fights, 47 by knockout. When I won some of them trophies at the Golden Gloves, it kept me going." At 20, Marvin turned pro.

As a southpaw, Hagler had trouble getting fights from the start, because southpaws do everything backwards. So, Hagler often camouflaged himself as a righty just to get fights.

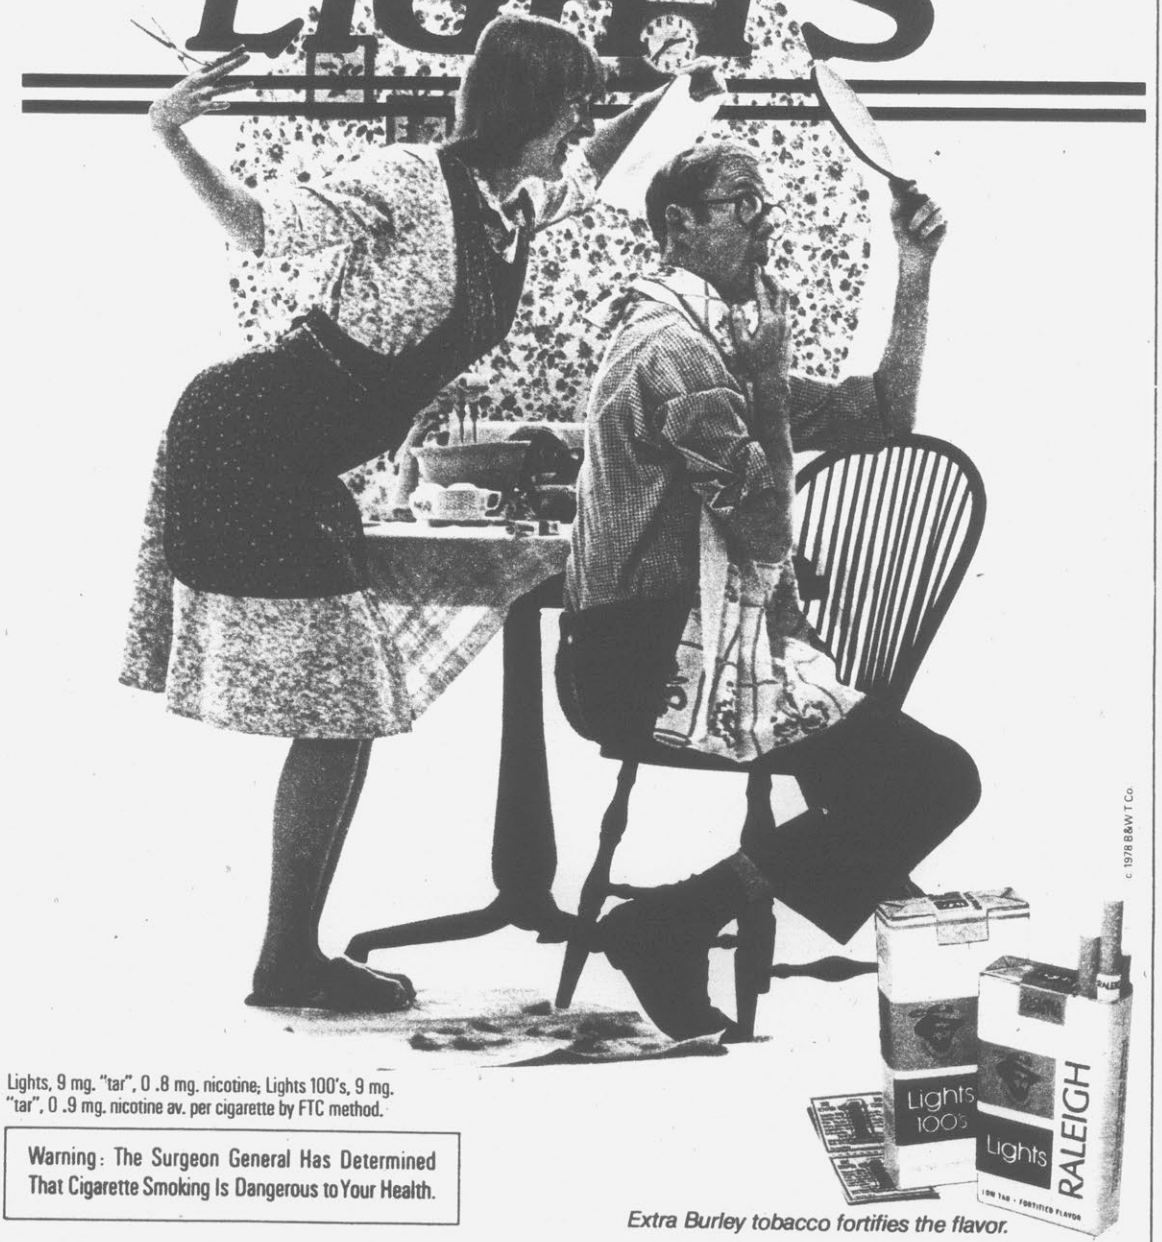

As Hagler walks out to the gym to begin exercising, he recalls, "Somebody said I had an attack style of fighting, like a Doberman pinscher or a German shepherd. I like that, because you gotta be vicious." He's also rock hard. In over 100 amateur and pro fights, Hagler has never been knocked down. Not even Muhammad Ali can make that claim.

Three years ago Hagler took a fight with Philadelphia middleweight contender, Willie Monroe, on short notice even though he was ill. It turned out to be a big

INTRODUCING

THE FIRST CHEVY OF THE '80s

efficient enough to offer small-car economy.
It gives you the usefulness of a station wagon

THE 1980 CHE

Citation is a car of many virtues.
It's compact, but it's big inside.
It's versatile, but sporty, too.
It's quick, but also very smooth.
It's brand new, but it has already gone through more preproduction testing than any car in Chevy history.

MID-SIZE ROOM FOR 5 ADULTS

Citation's engine is mounted sideways, so the passenger compartment can be bigger. In fact, in EPA interior dimensions, Citation is classified as a mid-size car. With the back seat folded down there's room enough for two adults in front, and 30 bags of groceries in back.

0 TO 50 IN 9 SECONDS FLAT

That's in engineering tests with the available 2.8 Liter V6 and automatic transmission. And that's acceleration you'll appreciate on a freeway. California figures not available. Citation is equipped with GM-built engines produced by various divisions. See your dealer for details.

THE PULL OF FRONT WHEEL DRIVE

The heart of Chevy Citation is its front wheel drive. Power pulls the car rather than pushes it. With 65% of the weight of the car over the driving wheels, you get good traction on wet roads, snow and mud.

CARRIES BIG LOADS (AND KEEPS IT A SECRET)

EVY CITATION

our big Chevrolet Caprice. And there's a rear compartment panel linked to the hatch so what's inside is protected from view. The panel can be easily removed when you want more load height.

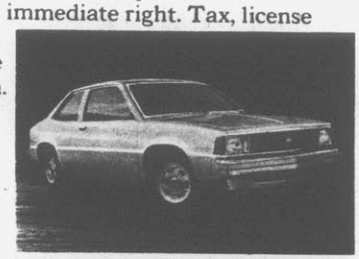

IMPRESSIVE GAS MILEAGE ESTIMATES

With standard 4-cylinder engine and 4-speed overdrive transmission. Citation's EPA estimated miles per gallon is (24) (city), and estimated 38 highway. Remember: Compare estimated MPG to the estimated MPG of other cars. You may get different mileage depending on your speed, trip length and weather. Your actual city mileage will be less in heavy city traffic. Your actual highway mileage will probably be less than the estimated highway fuel economy. California estimates lower.

PRICED AS LOW AS $3983

That's the Manufacturer's Suggested Retail Price including dealer prep for the 1980 Chevy Citation 2-Door Coupe shown at the immediate right. Tax, license and destination charges extra. If you order available equipment, it will cost extra.

SEE IT AT YOUR CHEVY DEALERS, APRIL 19th.

YOU'VE GOT TO DRIVE ONE TO BELIEVE IT.

What we would like you to do is drive a Citation. For we want you to judge the way it feels.

The way it rides.

The way it can make a stretch of road seem straighter, smoother, even shorter.

And probably more fun.

We urge you to visit your Chevy dealer soon and test drive the first Chevy of the '80s.

The 1980 Chevy Citation.

It could be just the car you've had in mind.

HAGLER

break because, even though Hagler lost the fight on a close decision, he went on to knock out Monroe twice in rematches.

Goode Petronelli, who trains Hagler, remembers, "Joe Frazier..who was Monroe's manager, told Marvin, 'You got three things going against you: You're a southpaw, you're black, and you're good.'"

Since then, Hagler has been building his reputation as a dangerous opponent. Two years ago he fought then-undefeated number-one contender, Mike Colbert, who ended up in the hospital with a fractured jaw. Last year Kevin Finnegan, ex-European champ, fought and lost to Hagler twice and left enough blood on the ring floor to make the Red Cross wince. Perhaps Hagler's most impressive accomplishment occurred with former crosstown rival, Vinnie Curto. The pair was to have a showdown match in Boston when, suddenly, three days before the fight, Curto panicked and skipped town, fleeing 3,000 miles to Seattle.

As a result, Goode Petronelli concedes, "You have to practically get someone in a corner and hit him over the head with a hammer to get him to fight Marvin." Hagler has already called middleweight champ, Hugo Corro, "a sissy" for not fighting him. And Vito Antuofermo, Corro's next scheduled opponent, turned down a huge payday to fight Marvin last fall. In fact, promoters have often had to overpay Hagler's opponents in order to make the match, with Hagler taking the lesser cut.

"When I was a kid I thought fighters who were rated number one or two would fight anybody in the world," Hagler said. "Now I know different. They won't fight anybody. They just want to hold onto their ranking."

Finally, Bob Arum stepped in. Arum, one of the most influential promoters in boxing, signed a three-fight deal with Hagler that included the promise of fighting the winner of the Corro-Antuofermo championship fight in May.

So the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow is on Marvin Hagler's mind as he speeds through his sit-ups and shadowboxing. Then Hagler climbs in the ring and works out with his trainer. They run through a boxing choreography, with Hagler throwing full punches at Petronelli's gloves, positioned by the head or kidneys. Hagler is honing his wares: the jab, uppercut and hook are exploited in every imaginable combination.

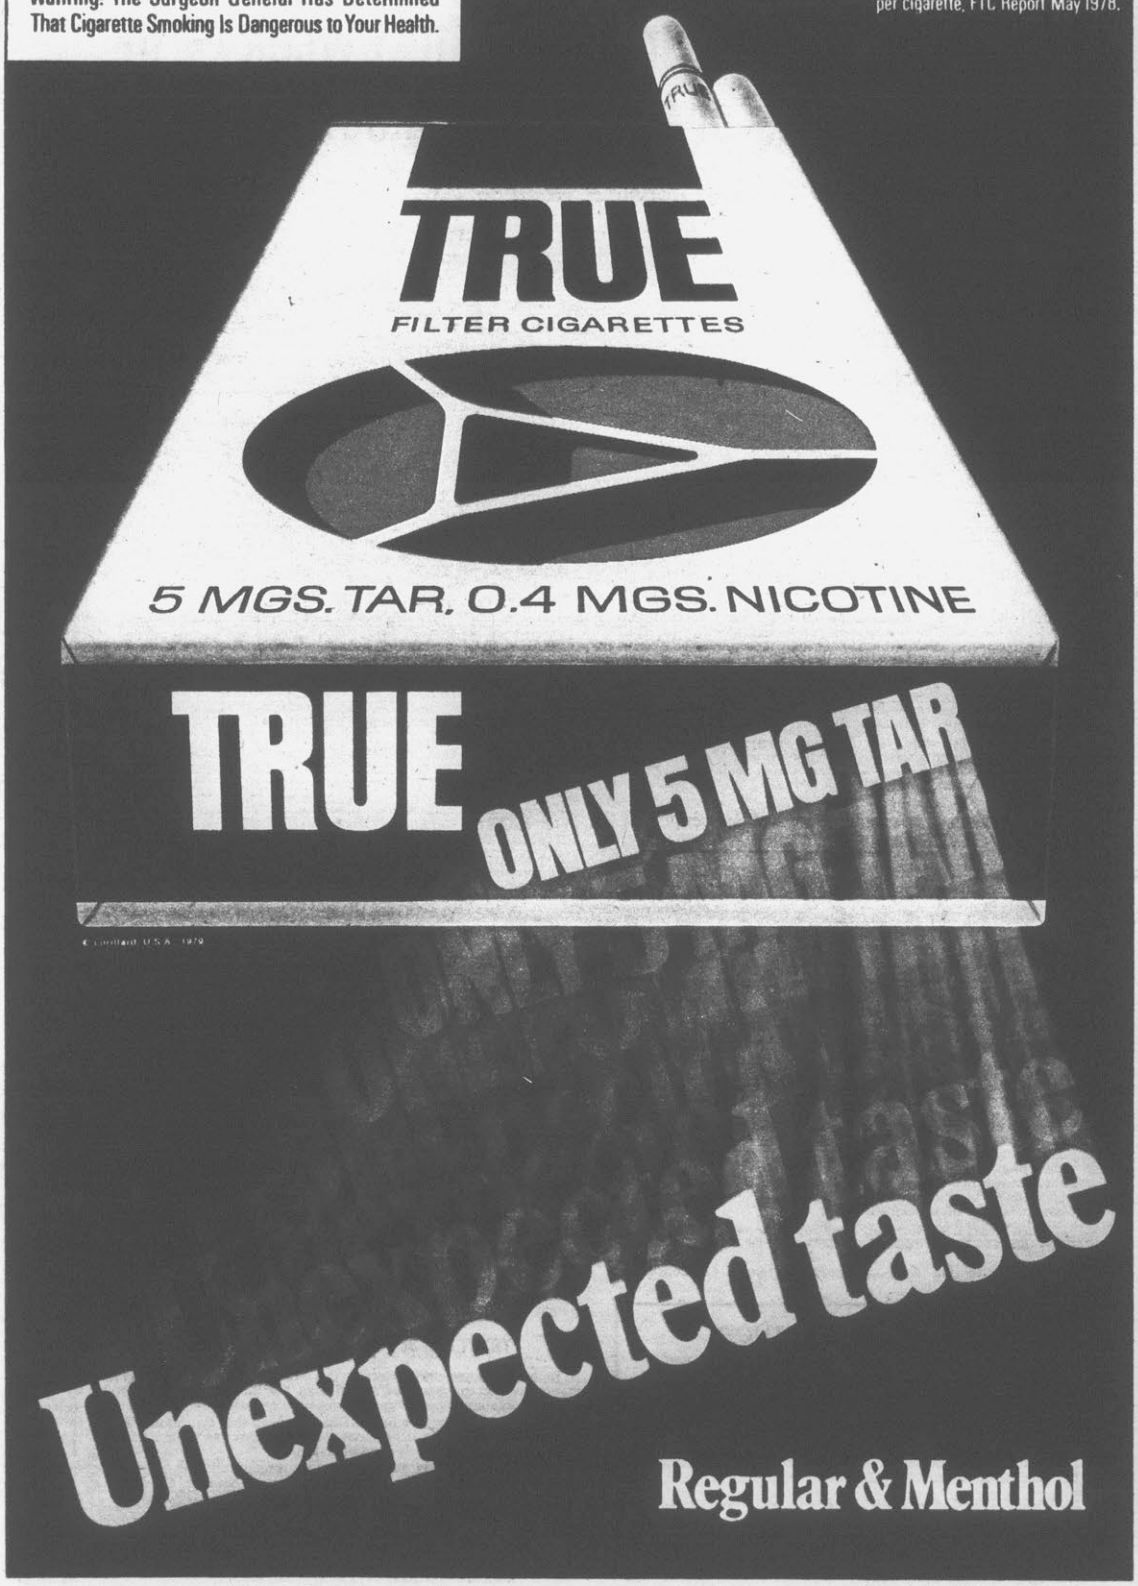

After six active rounds, Hagler leaves the ring, with rivulets of sweat dripping from his glistening head. He returns to his small locker to change. It was only last year that Marvin was able to quit construction work because bigger boxing paydays were on their way. He is both optimistic and pragmatic now that he is so close to his big chance. "I'm feeling good, working hard. Getting close to smelling that green. And TV. I need that national exposure." He won his third TV fight in February, and is looking forward to more, especially his promised title shot in September.

But he warns, "I've been living on promises all my life. I won't believe it until I'm in that ring." He adds in a somber voice, "I been working out of this same corner for nine years. I knew I was better than those guys, so I trained harder."

He pulls on a Marvelous Marvin Hagler T-shirt. "But they can't avoid me any longer," he repeats slowly, looking hard, angry and eager for more. FW

Now Through MEGATETICS

YOU CAN LOSE 30, 40, EVEN 50 POUNDS IN LESS THAN A MONTH

—says Ronald R. Romano, D.C.

Dear Reader:

Never before has it been possible to lose so many pounds, so quickly, and so easily as with a revolutionary new weight-loss program set forth in a new book by Dr. Ronald R. Romano.

The program is called the Megatetic Weight Reduction Program. It's based on scientific findings on caloric absorption—the way your body absorbs the food it consumes.

The Reason Why Overweight People Are Often The HEALTHIEST People—A Fact Overlooked By Just About Every Diet Until Now

Just about every other diet until now has disregarded the fact that overweight people tend to absorb more of the nutrients and calories from their food than do slender people, says Dr. Romano.

Indeed, in today's society, the fittest (healthiest) individuals are overweight. They digest foods with greater efficiency, whereas many slender people are slender simply because they digest and absorb foods poorly.

Recognizing this simple, scientific fact, Dr. Romano realized that if there were some way by which to make overweight people less efficient in digesting and absorbing the calories they consume, this would be a real breakthrough in weight loss. At last, there would be a method by which a person could lose weight quickly and easily, and without the bothersome exercising which normally undermines other diets and causes an inevitable return to obesity.

Thus it developed that Dr. Ronald R. Romano, Director of the Cedars Institute and Polyclinic in Florida, began a search to formulate a weight loss program that would not only take advantage of the decreased-absorption principle, but would overcome these other problems as well.

After intensive research, Dr. Romano discovered that there was a commonplace product which, when used as part of his Megatetic Weight Reduction Program, will dramatically reduce the number of calories absorbed from every meal you eat.

Now—The Commonplace Product That Keeps You From Absorbing Calories

These tablets are so safe, they're available without prescription in any drugstore. They are so commonplace, they are available under seven familiar brand names. In fact, you may even have some in your medicine cabinet or purse this very moment.

These commonplace tablets which, until now, weren't used for dieting at all—work in two ways to reduce the calories you absorb.

First, they reduce stomach acidity and inactivate the prime digestive enzyme. Second, by neutralizing gastric contents, the stomach is caused to empty sooner than usual. This gives the body less time to act on the food, and thereby reduces the calories you absorb.

By doing this, says Dr. Romano, "These tablets, which are to be used only on a temporary basis, will help you lose pounds and maintain your lowered weight more easily than you believed possible."

You Will Achieve Slenderness In 30 Days

These tablets became the center of Dr. Romano's dramatic weight loss program, which he termed Megatetics. In the Program, he combined the tablets with several other effortless principles which enable you to take in less food, absorb fewer calories—and burn up more of these calories.

"Truly," says Dr. Romano, "you will lose weight and inches faster than you ever dreamed possible."

The result of this "triple powered" Program of (1) consuming less, (2) absorbing less, and (3) burning up more, was a 30-Day Weight Loss Program of such remarkable power, Dr. Romano says...

"It seems incongruous to expect a rapid reversal, and almost immediate slenderness. Yet, this is exactly what the Megatetic Program is capable of...30, 40, even 50 pounds in less than a month—25 pounds or more the very first week.

"If, for some reason, you are more than 50 pounds overweight—don't worry. Megatetics will produce a 50-pound weight loss each and every month until you achieve your proper weight.

"You will find Megatetics faster than any other diet or exercise program you've encountered. If somehow you are only 10 pounds above your desirable weight, then Megatetics will have your weight where it belongs in only seven days.

"Incredible? Yes! But true nonetheless. Not only will all those excess pounds melt away, but so will the inches. During the 30-Day Program you may have to buy at least one new wardrobe, and probably two. The fat will disappear so quickly that after one week, your present clothing will hang on you like so much burlap.

"But let's face it—the rapid and enormous reduction in weight and size is only part of the benefits of Megatetics. More importantly, you will be able to maintain your new slenderness for life with only minimal effort."

READ THESE THRILLING CASE HISTORIES

LURLENE McC. had been grossly overweight ever since the birth of her first child, some 14 years before. She was 38 years old. Her weight was 168 pounds. She had always been successful in losing weight on several previous occasions, but always gained the weight back. During her 30-Day Megatetics Program, Lurlene lost 43 pounds. Today, more than 18 months later, Lurlene is still maintaining her desirable weight. She says, "I don't think I'll ever be fat again."

LOUISE G. was a middle-aged housewife. She had been on numerous diets. She had even tried shots and pills, but nothing seemed to have any permanent effect. During her 30-Day Megatetics Program, Louise lost 37 pounds. Since she was extremely overweight, a second month on the Program was called for, during which she lost an additional 35 pounds—a total of 72 pounds in just two months.

She says, "The speed with which I lost weight! I never would have believed I could lose so fast. Over the years, I've tried to diet many times, but always gave up after a short period. If I had to pick the one thing that helped me be successful, I would say it was this: The speed with which the pounds came off. Each day brought me another step closer to where I wanted to be."

BARBARA R. was 28 years old and 187 pounds. She had been overweight as long as she could remember. She had tried many different diets and exercises. During her 30-Day Megatetics Program, Barbara lost 43 pounds. During the Program, she gained so much new energy, she painted and redecorated her apartment all by herself. Her new figure, matched with some attractive new clothes, produced a remarkably beautiful young woman.

JANET T. was 25 years old, 5'4½" and 154 pounds. When she began her 30-Day Megatetics Program, she was single and worked in the back office of one of the larger law firms. Through the Program, in less than a month, she achieved her weight loss goal. She began to take an interest in clothes and cosmetics. In a few months, the change in Janet's appearance was so great as to be unbelievable. Recently, she wrote a letter to Dr. Romano:

"After losing all that weight, I began to feel good about myself. I wanted to meet people and go out on dates. I began to date one of the junior partners and last month he proposed to me. We're going to be married next month and I want to invite you to the wedding. Without you and your diet program, I'd probably still be working in that back room."

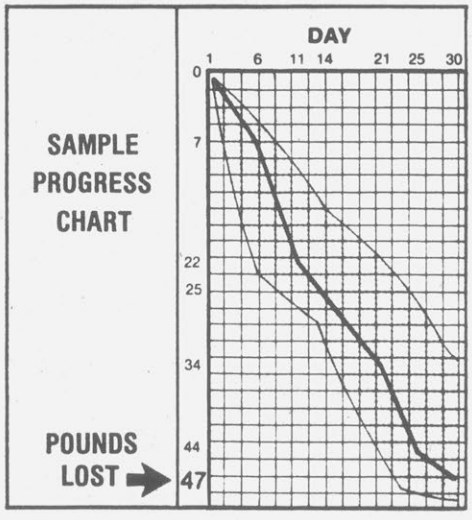

Dr. Romano's new book, which completely describes his remarkably effective weight loss plan, is called: "DR. ROMANO'S MEGATETICS WEIGHT REDUCTION GUIDE"...and it explains, in simple, step-by-step instructions, exactly how to use the principles of reduced absorption to dramatically reduce your weight without the use of routine, strenuous exercises.

BATTLING BASS IS REEL SPORT

By Fred Nofziger

The most popular sport fish in America is the bass, which has an appeal that lures some five million anglers annually to seek out this finny critter in its watery lair — any fresh body of water offering food and cover, from the narrow, fast-running stream to the wide, deep lake.

The bass is a cantankerous fish that hides, sulks and changes its taste in lures and location in any given body of water, frequently and without warning. The bass comes in a variety of colors, none too brilliant; has contours from snout to tail fin, all ugly; fights like a back-alley brawler when hooked; and is known by many colloquial names. And some of the most popular bass are not bass at all, but members of the sunfish family.

Bass or not, the largemouth leads the most popular sport-fish parade by far. It is a prolific breeder, hits artificial lures with gusto and is found in every state except Alaska. The northern largemouth in Florida, Georgia and California has a string of colloquial names: big mouth, black bass, green bass, linesides, moss-back, Welshman, lake bass, keghead, lunkerbass, bucketmouth.

The smallmouth has nearly as wide a range as its big-mouth brother. The northern smallmouth and a subspecies, the Neosho smallmouth found in the rivers of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Missouri also have a string of local names such as green bass, browny, bronzeback, black bass, redeye, jumper, green trout, tiger bass, Oswego bass, swago bass or just plain smally.

The spotted bass ranges from the upper Mississippi Valley south to the Gulf states, west to Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas and east to Florida. It is also called the Kentucky bass, linesides bass, green bass, green trout, diamond bass, southern bass and rocky bass.

The redeye bass, a black bass resembling the smallmouth, may also be called shoal bass or Chipola bass. Its red eyes and fins are its most distinctive markings. It is sought in the upper tributaries of the Alabama and Chattahoochee river systems in Alabama, and the Savannah River drainage basin in Georgia, as well as in Florida and Tennessee.

Rock bass are members of the sunfish family. It is often called a rock sunfish. Its range is from Vermont to lower Lake Winnipeg in Manitoba and south to the Gulf states.

The two true members of the bass family are the white bass and the yellow bass.

Extremely prolific, good to eat and easy to catch, the white bass ranges throughout the Great Lakes (except Lake Superior), the Mississippi Valley and then across Texas to northeastern Mexico. The yellow bass is most abundant in large rivers and lakes of the upper Mississippi drainage area.

Fred Nofziger, when not writing about outdoor life, wanders through woods and streams.

Knowing where to seek the bass is one of the most important factors. In a word, bass need "cover." Mature bass need it both for protection and to catch their own prey.

Once you have been bitten by the bass-fishing bug and have had some experience with this finny scrapper, you will never forget the heart-thumping moment when a bass bursts out of the water in a froth of white spray, fighting to dislodge the lure caught in its jaws... nor the thrill of adding the exhausted battler to your stringer for good eating later. AN EASTER MONDAY EGGFEST

By Marilyn Hansen

If you are wondering what to do with all those gaily decorated Easter eggs, we've a passel of hard-cooked recipes for you. Of course, you can eat the eggs right out of their shells with a speck of salt, but many of you may be inspired to whip up some imaginative dishes with your Easter basket leftovers.

BACON 'N' EGG SPINACH SALAD

- 1 lb. fresh spinach
- ½ cup vegetable oil
- ¼ cup sugar
- 2 tablespoons vinegar
- 1 teaspoon finely grated onion
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon dry mustard
- 6 slices bacon, crisp-cooked, drained and crumbled
- 5 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
- 1 hard-cooked egg, sliced

1. Wash spinach thoroughly in lukewarm water; drain. Chill to crisp.

2. Combine oil, sugar, vinegar, onion, salt and mustard. Beat or whirl in blender until dressing becomes thick and syrupy and sugar is thoroughly dissolved.

3. Tear spinach into bite-size portions; place in large salad bowl. Add bacon and chopped eggs. Pour dressing over all; let stand about ½ hour.

4. Toss to thoroughly mix salad. Garnish with egg slices.

NOTE: For convenience, prepare dressing ahead and refrigerate.

Makes 6 servings

HI-PROTEIN SPINACH SPREAD

- 1 package (12 ozs.) frozen chopped spinach
- 1 pint cottage cheese
- ½ cup mayonnaise
- 1 tablespoon onion powder
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- 2 teaspoons chili powder
- ¼ teaspoon curry powder
- 1 teaspoon prepared mustard
- 12 drops Tabasco
- 2 hard-cooked eggs, finely diced

1. Cook spinach as package directs. Drain well and squeeze out as much liquid as possible.

2. Put cottage cheese into covered blender and blend smooth (or press through fine wire sieve).

3. Mix in mayonnaise, onion powder, salt, chili powder, curry powder, mustard and Tabasco.

4. Put in medium bowl, stir in spinach and mix well. Fold in diced eggs. Chill.

5. Serve with crisp crackers or use for sandwiches on rye, pumpernickel or whole wheat bread.

Makes about 3¾ cups

EGG SAUCE

- 2 hard-cooked eggs
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 1½ cups milk
- ½ teaspoon salt
- Dash finely ground black pepper
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice

1. Separate the hard-cooked eggs. Chop the whites and mash the yolks with a fork. Set both aside.

2. In a small saucepan, melt butter. Stir in flour all at once, stirring until smooth. Pour in milk and heat to boiling, stirring constantly until sauce thickens. Reduce heat and allow to simmer one minute.

3. Stir in salt, pepper, lemon juice and the eggs. Heat over low heat until heated through.

4. Serve Egg Sauce with a simply poached fish, such as cod or haddock. The sauce is also tasty over toasted English Muffins.

Makes about 1½ cups sauce

SCOTCH EGGS

- 1 to 1½ lbs. bulk pork sausage
- 8 hard-cooked eggs
- 1 egg, beaten
- ⅓ cup fine dry bread crumbs
- Oil or shortening for deep-frying

1. Divide sausage into 8 portions. Flatten into patties.

2. Place a peeled egg in center of each sausage patty and fold meat over to completely enclose egg. Press edges together to seal.

3. Dip in beaten egg and roll in bread crumbs until thoroughly coated. Deep-fry in hot fat (350°F. to 375°F.) 7 to 9 minutes or until crisp and browned.

4. Drain on absorbent paper. Serve hot or cold. Store in refrigerator.

Makes 8 appetizer or snack servings or 4 main-dish servings

CLASSIC RICE SALAD

- 3 cups cool cooked rice
- ½ cup finely chopped onions
- ½ cup finely chopped sweet pickles
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- 1 cup mayonnaise
- 1 teaspoon prepared mustard
- ¼ cup diced pimientos
- 4 hard-cooked eggs, chopped

1. Blend all ingredients thoroughly. Chill. Serve on lettuce leaves, if desired.

2. Garnish imaginatively: pickle fans, carrot curls, radish roses and tomato wedges would all make attractive additions.

Makes 6 servings

GRIBICHE SAUCE

- 3 hard-cooked eggs
- 1 teaspoon prepared mustard
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- 1½ cups olive or vegetable oil
- ½ cup vinegar, preferably tarragon vinegar
- 3 sweet gherkins
- 3 stuffed green Spanish olives
- 1 tablespoon chopped parsley
- 2 teaspoons chervil leaves or snipped chives
- 2 teaspoons tarragon leaves

1. Chop hard-cooked eggs very fine; set aside.

2. In blender, combine mustard, salt, pepper, olive oil, vinegar, gherkins, olives, parsley, chervil and tarragon. Cover and blend about one minute or until gherkins and olives are chopped fine.

3. Add chopped hard-cooked eggs; stir to blend.

4. Use this colorful piquant sauce over cold poached fish, cold cooked asparagus or as a dressing for mixed greens.

Makes about 3 cups

PIZZA RUSTICA

- 1 pkg. active dry yeast
- 1¼ cups warm water
- ¼ cup olive or vegetable oil
- 4½ cups (about) unsifted all-purpose flour
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon ground black pepper
- 2 containers (16-oz. size) ricotta cheese, drained
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
- 1 clove garlic, chopped
- ¼ cup grated Parmesan or Romano cheese
- ½ cup finely chopped parsley
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon ground black pepper
- 1 egg
- 6 hard-cooked eggs, peeled
- 1 egg yolk
- 1 tablespoon water

1. In large bowl, sprinkle yeast over ¼ cup warm water. Stir to dissolve. Add remaining water and olive oil.

2. With large spoon, beat in 1½ cups flour until smooth; continue beating 2 minutes. Add salt, pepper and enough remaining flour to make a stiff dough.

3. Turn out onto lightly floured board. Knead until smooth and elastic, about 8 to 10 minutes. Place in oiled bowl, turning to oil top. Cover; let rise in warm place, free from draft, until doubled in bulk, about 1½ hours.

4. Punch dough down; divide in half. On large greased cookie sheet, roll ½ of dough into a 14-inch circle.

5. Make ricotta filling: in medium bowl, combine ricotta, onion, garlic, parsley, Parmesan, salt, pepper and egg. Beat until smooth.

6. Spread ricotta filling on dough to within one inch of edge. Arrange the 6 hard-cooked eggs in the filling, spacing them evenly.

7. Cut ⅓ off the remaining dough; set aside. Roll remaining large portion into a 13-inch circle; place over filling. Bring edge of bottom dough up over top dough. Seal edge and scallop edge prettily.

8. Roll rest of dough into six 6½-inch long strips. Arrange on top of pizza, radiating from the center to edge; pinch to seal. Beat egg yolk with water and brush all over dough.

9. Bake pizza on lowest shelf of oven for 10 minutes, at preheated temperature of 475°F. Reduce heat to 450°F. and bake 20 to 30 minutes longer, or until a deep golden brown. Cut into wedges and serve with hot pizza sauce.

Makes 6 to 8 servings

PIZZA TOMATO SAUCE

- 1 can (15 ozs.) tomato sauce or 2 cans (8-oz. size) tomato sauce
- 1 teaspoon oregano leaves
- ½ teaspoon basil leaves
- ½ teaspoon sugar
- 2 tablespoons water
- Few twists freshly ground black pepper
- 1 tablespoon olive or vegetable oil

1. Combine all ingredients in a small saucepan. Heat to boiling; reduce heat and simmer, uncovered, 5 minutes.

Makes about 2 cups

10 "MUSTS" FOR YOUR MEDICAL EXAM

By Paula Dranov

For most of us, a routine physical is a nerve-wracking experience. Even when we're well, the prospect of a head-to-toe checkup — all those questions, all those tests, all that scrutiny of our bodies — is unsettling. And it's become all the more so now that doctors have at their command a mysterious array of tests specifically designed, we may suspect, just to prove we're not as healthy as we feel.

A modern medical checkup is a thorough and sophisticated procedure, but it does offer more than just routine reassurance that we're really in good shape. Here are 10 key elements of a complete checkup:

1. Medical History: This is vital if you're seeing the physician for the first time. Irrelevant and embarrassing as some of the questions may seem (do you perspire easily? how's your sex-life?), they're designed to give the doctor a more complete picture of your overall health than the physical exam alone will reveal. A medical history inquires into your own past health (childhood disease, any operations, hospitalizations), the diseases your parents, brothers and sisters have had, your personal habits (do you smoke? how much exercise do you get?), the medications you take (vitamins? tranquilizers? the Pill?), your marital status, occupation, recent travels as well as your family's ethnic origins. (Some diseases are more common among — or peculiar to — certain ethnic groups.)

2. Blood Pressure: Probably the most significant of the routine tests, blood-pressure readings can be a valuable early warning of such potential problems as strokes, heart attacks, kidney damage and blindness. Normal or low blood pressure isn't any problem (in general, the lower, the better), but high blood pressure requires treatment. Fortunately, it can be lowered and controlled with medication and diet.

3. Eyes: Signs of a number of diseases, from arteriosclerosis to vitamin deficiency, may show up in the eyes. By feeling the eyeballs through the eyelid, a doctor may find that they're unusually hard, a symptom of glaucoma. An instrument called a tonometer is then used to measure intraoccular pressure. By asking you to follow a moving finger, the doctor can determine whether there's any weakness in the eye muscles. A similarly simple test can indicate whether you have a problem with peripheral vision (a sign of brain tumors, strokes or glaucoma). By looking into your eyes with an ophthalmoscope, the doctor can see if you've got a cataract, and by inspecting the inside of the eye, find signs of arteriosclerosis, diabetes, high blood pressure, even tuberculosis or some infections.

4. Neck, Chest and Heart: Here's where the stethoscope comes out. The doctor listens to the carotid artery in the neck for a sound that indicates a constriction. The rhythm of the heart and any murmurs indicating an abnormal flow of blood are picked up by the stethoscope, while the sound of the lungs tells the doctor if you're wheezing from chronic bronchitis or asthma or if there's anything in the lungs but air.

5. Your Hemoglobin: This indication that there's adequate oxygen in your blood is picked up via a routine blood test. It's one of about 14 different tests run on the same blood sample and is derived from a count of the red and white cells.

6. Cholesterol and Triglycerides: Of all the 14 blood tests, these are the ones we've heard most about recently. Cholesterol and triglycerides are blood fats, and the higher the level of one or the other (or both), the higher the risk of heart disease.

7. Rectal Exam: This is the part nobody likes, but it's considered vital for detecting hemorrhoids, polyps and cancer. The doctor may use one of two instruments, a proctoscope or a sigmoidoscope to examine the bowel. Related to this exam is a test of the stool for blood that may be due to hemorrhoids, an ulcer or cancer.

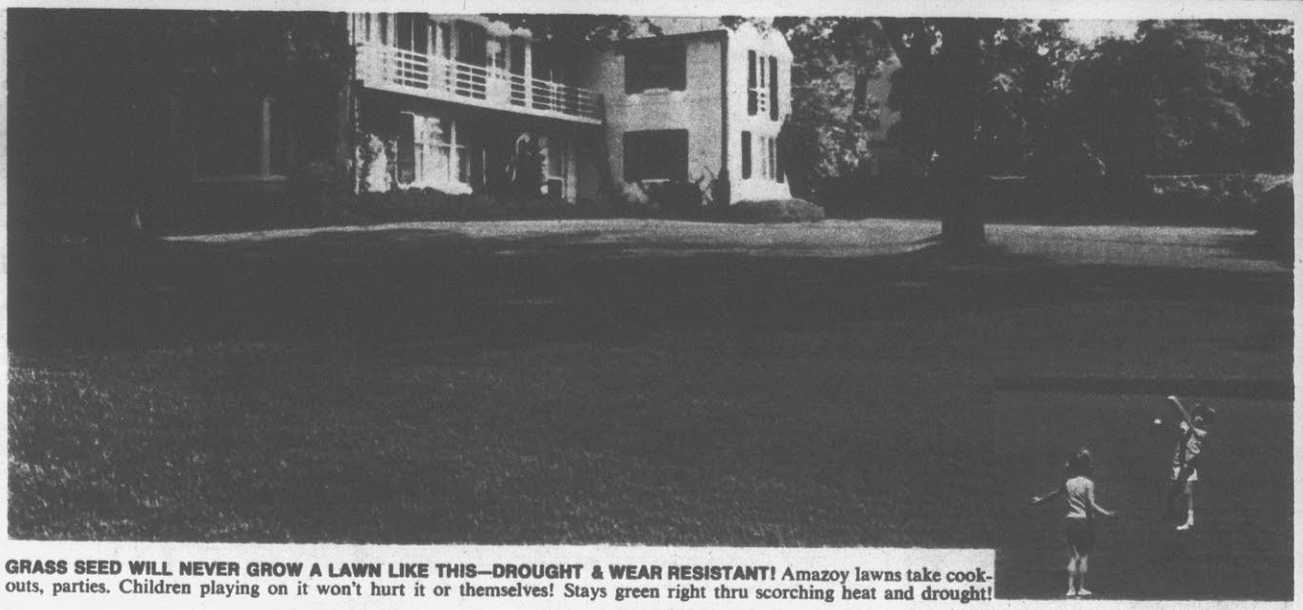

8. Chest X-Ray: All sorts of things show up on a chest X-ray — the size of the heart, a "shadow" on the lung that may mean a tumor or may just be evidence of tuberculosis that's been cured or an infection you once had. It also can reveal pneumonia that doesn't produce much in the way of symptoms.

9. Electrocardiogram (EKG): This test requires hooking you up to a machine that records the electrical impulses that characterize the heart's activity. The test can detect disturbances in cardiac activity and pick up indications of such problems as an inadequate blood flow to the heart, enlargement of portions of the heart or changes in activity due to a previous heart attack.

10. For Women Only: A woman's physical always should include a breast examination, a Pap smear (the test for cervical cancer) and a pelvic examination. While doctors disagree on whether or not an annual checkup is a necessity for all adults, most insist that women never skip the gynecological exam. FW

GRASS SEED WILL NEVER GROW A LAWN LIKE THIS—DROUGHT & WEAR RESISTANT! Amazoy lawns take cookouts, parties. Children playing on it won't hurt it or themselves! Stays green right thru scorching heat and drought!

Lady Plugs In Zoysia Grass Saves Time, Work & Money

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER. UP TO 200 AMAZOY ZOYSIA GRASS PLUGS FREE

By Jack T. Johnson, Agronomist

Every year I see people pour more and more money into their lawns. They dig, fertilize and lime. They rake it all in. They scatter their seed and roll and water it.

Amazoy is the Trade Mark Registered U.S. Patent Office for our Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass

Birds love it! Seeds which aren't washed away by rain give them a feast. But some seed grows, and soon it's time to weed, water and mow, mow . . . until summer comes to burn the lawn into hay, or crabgrass and diseases infest it.

That's what happens to ordinary grass, but not to Amazoy Zoysia.

"MOWED IT 2 TIMES," WRITES WOMAN

For example, Mrs. M. R. Mitter writes me how her lawn ". . . is the envy of all who see it. When everybody's lawns around here are brown from drought ours just stays as green as ever. I've never watered it, only when I put the plugs in. . . . Last summer we had it mowed (2) times. Another thing, we never have to pull any weeds—it's just wonderful!"

And from Iowa came word that the state's largest Men's Garden Club picked a Zoysia lawn as the "top lawn—nearly perfect" in its area. Yet this lawn had been watered only once all summer up to August!

CHOKES OUT CRABGRASS

Thick, rich, luxurious Amazoy grows into a carpet of grass that chokes out crabgrass and weeds all summer long. It will NOT winter-kill. Goes off its green color after killing frost, regains fresh new beauty every Spring—a true perennial!

DON'T BE MISLED! THERE IS ONLY ONE AMAZOY

Amazoy plugs are taken from genuine Z-52 Meyer Zoysia . . . guaranteed winter-hardened for 3 full years under the supervision of trained agronomists. Over a HALF-BILLION plugs sold (outsells the others 10 to 1)! So don't take chances with inferior plugs. Accept No Substitute for Amazoy Zoysia! If it isn't Amazoy, you're not getting the plugs that made Zoysia famous.

FOR SLOPES, PLAY AREAS, BARE SPOTS

NO NEED TO RIP OUT PRESENT GRASS PLUG AMAZOY INTO OLD LAWN, NEW GROUND OR NURSERY AREA

Just set Amazoy plugs into holes in ground like a cork in a bottle. Plant 1 foot apart, checkerboard style.

When planted in existing lawn areas plugs will spread to drive out old, unwanted growth, including weeds—from part shade to full sun. Easy planting instructions with order.

YOUR OWN SUPPLY OF PLUG TRANSPLANTS

PATENTED STEP-ON PLUGGER IS . . . FREE WITH ORDERS OF 600 PLUGS OR MORE

Amazoy exclusive! No one else can offer you this patented 2-way plugger. Saves bending, time, work. Light, rugged, invaluable for transplanting. Cuts away competing growth as it digs plug holes.

Every Plug Guaranteed to Grow In Your Area • In Your Soil

- AMAZOY WON'T WINTER-KILL—has survived temperatures 30° below zero!
- AMAZOY WON'T HEAT-KILL—when other grasses burn out, Amazoy remains green and lovely.

Plug Amazoy into an entire lawn or problem areas. Plug it into poor soil, "builders soil", clay or even salty, sandy beach areas. I guarantee every plug, regardless. Any plug failing to grow in 45 days replaced FREE. Since we're hardly in business for the fun of it, you know we're 100% sure of our product!

CUTS YOUR WORK, SAVES YOU MONEY

Your deep-rooted, established Amazoy lawn saves you time and money in many ways. It never needs replacement . . . ends re-seeding forever. Fertilizing and watering (water costs money, too) are rarely if ever needed. It ends the need for crabgrass killers permanently. It cuts pushing a noisy mower in the blistering sun by ⅔.

NO SEED, NO SOD!

There's no seed that produces winter-hardy Meyer Zoysia. Sod of ordinary grass brings with it the problems of seed-like weeds, diseases, burning out, other ills.

Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass was perfected by U.S. Govt., Released in cooperation with U.S. Golf Assoc. as a superior grass.

Order guaranteed Amazoy now, get your bonus plugs FREE. Your order will be delivered at earliest correct time for planting in your area.

We ship all orders the same day grass is taken from the soil, shipping/handling charge collect via most economical means.

Life-Saving Alert

Thousands of Americans require emergency medical treatment each year, but for those who have existing hidden conditions such as heart disease or medication allergies, treatment can be complicated if rescue workers are unaware of the problem. For these people, Medic Alert is a system worth knowing about.

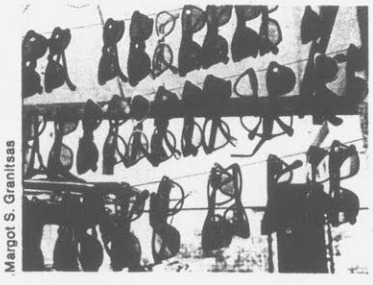

By joining Medic Alert, a member receives a bracelet or necklace with the universally recognized Medic Alert symbol on the front. On the reverse side is the member's identification number, a hotline telephone number and a list of medical problems. By calling the 24-hour emergency answering service, collect, additional background from the member's computerized file can be made available within seconds. For more free information about the Medic Alert system, write to Medic Alert, Box 1009, Dept. F.W., Turlock, Calif. 95380.

A Serious Spectacle

While some people consider eyeglasses the bane of their existence, there are many for whom they are an unaffordable luxury. Thanks to New Eyes for the Needy, the problem has been alleviated for a number of people, both here and elsewhere in the world. According to Jean O'Donnell, vice chairperson of New Eyes, the service collects one million pairs of eyeglasses a year. New Eyes tests the lenses of all the plastic-framed glasses to determine their prescription and then sends them abroad to fulfill orders placed by medical missions. The metal-framed glasses, and any other metal objects (such as old watches, jewelry and dentures) that have been donated are sent to a refinery where they are melted and the precious metal extracted. New Eyes is financed by the sale of this metal.

While New Eyes sends funds to agencies, hospitals and clinics, which then distribute glasses to the needy, about 6,000 pairs a year are furnished to individuals who have demonstrated their need. For more information on this service you can write to New Eyes For the Needy, 549 Millburn Ave., Short Hills, N.J. 07078.

Energy Alternatives

There's no doubt that the cost of petroleum products will continue to rise; the question now is, "What alternatives are there?" Researchers at both the University of California at Davis and at Texas A&M University have been studying the possibility of supplementing existing power with power created by agricultural wastes such as nutshells, wood chips, prunings and straw, resources that are now plowed back into the soil or burned.

John T. Goss, a professor of agricultural engineering at Davis, says that "if unwanted by-products of wood and timber production can be turned into fuel at a reasonable cost, we'll achieve more efficient disposal of agricultural wastes and we'll lessen our dependence on fossil fuels." The technology to do this has existed for quite a while in the form of "gasifiers," converters that transform wastes into gas that can then be used to run machinery. According to Goss, one California walnut cooperative is now putting in a steam generator that will be powered by the 40,000 tons of nutshells that the co-op collects yearly. The generator will produce enough energy to run the plant's operating machinery and cold-storage rooms.

But, Goss cautions, gasifiers are not the answer to our energy problems. "As long as we have petroleum available, most people will be willing to pay the extra cost. A new energy outlook, one that understands the need for solar and plant energy, will have to be accepted before the technology in these areas can be made readily available. But, when the necessity is there, it will be done."

Photographic Evidence

We know you don't have the Mona Lisa hanging on your wall, but nearly everyone owns something that should be protected against loss. Many insurance companies recommend that you keep a description of every insured item in your home, and what better way to do it than with a photograph? Recognizing this, Judy Bernhaut and Natalie Newfeld, two Livingston, N.J., women, created Photologue, a service which combines photographs of valuable objects with detailed written descriptions.

French Cultural Services

Ms. Bernhaut suggests that homeowners take careful photographs of their insured possessions because "any picture is better than no picture." Pictures and descriptions should be kept in a safe-deposit box or on file with the insurance company. As Ms. Bernhaut noted, "People should be compensated fairly for what they've lost, and replacing anything today costs an arm and a leg." Mmmmm, now where did you put that camera?

Lifestyles

Book Learning. Almost one out of every three American adults reads at least a book a month, says a Gallup poll conducted for the American Library Association and sponsored by a grant from Baker & Taylor, the country's oldest and largest book distributor. While more than half of all Americans aged 18 and over visited a public library in the last year, 20 percent of those questioned had no idea where the funding for a library came from, and only 43 percent said they would be willing to pay higher taxes to cover library costs. This, despite the fact that the cost of a book has risen 64 percent since 1970 and magazine prices went up 9.2 percent in the last year.

Herbs for Hens. People who have been avoiding eggs because they're high in cholesterol may be able to enjoy them once again, thanks to a New Jersey pharmacologist. Dr. Samuel Klein claims that by adding an inexpensive mixture of certain herbs to regular hens' feed, he can reduce the cholesterol in eggs by about 30 percent.

Television. The newest version of Pinocchio, the famous classic about a puppet who becomes a real boy will be presented by the Public Broadcasting Service beginning Saturday, April 21. Check local listings for the time in your area.
