Confusion Rampant In Gas Plans

WASHINGTON (UPI) — When congressmen talk about what killed President Carter's standby gasoline rationing plan they use words such as confusion, fear, cowardice and distrust, reflecting the emotional nature of debate on the issue.

Carter himself said he considered the House vote against the measure "an embarrassment and indeed a shock."

The plan, controversial from the outset, grew more complex as the week wore on and the president tried to calm fears and make it acceptable to a voting majority.

He changed the proposal in major ways twice in the closing hours of Senate debate Wednesday, and one new section was read to the Senate literally seconds before the scheduled vote.

The maneuvering won in the Senate, but then the House got the plan without fully understanding it and voted it down 246-159.

"There was enough confusion created; confusion and total destruction of credibility," said Rep. Dave Stockman, R-Mich.

In changing the plan to make it win votes in rural areas, the administration lost votes in industrial state delegations like California and Pennsylvania.

Rep. John Brademas, D-Ind., an assistant Democratic leader, said many members apparently feared the public would think they were voting to implement gas rationing immediately rather than just giving Carter power to act in an emergency.

House Speaker Thomas O'Neill said House members worried too much about parochial interests and too little about the nation.

Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Texas, mentioned a recurrent theme among conservatives: the rationing plan is "government intrusion ad infinitum" into the lives f Americans, he said.

Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., called the proposal "a bureaucrat's dream" with so many complications of statistics and allotments that its administration would be chaotic.

Rep. James Florio, D-N.J., said the House vote "reflected the confusion and distrust" many constituents have voiced to their congressmen.

"They are angry and suspicious of the oil companies for making the problem worse than it need be," Florio said.

Rep. John Erlenborn, R-Ill., said Carter's plan "changed three or four times within a 36-hour period" and House members needed "a clearly thoughtout plan."

Several members, such as Rep. Jim Collins, R-Texas, protested Carter's plan involved a large "transfer of wealth" because it would have allowed people to sell their gas coupons.

Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., said the House action was an "act of political cowardice. This is just an incredibly gutless bunch. When they could very easily vote with you they vote against you. There are some very decent, honest people here, but there are also the gutless ones — and too many of them."

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., said, "There was considerable irresponsibility and there was a good number of my colleagues who had their heads in the sand."

Rep. Philip Sharp, D-Ind., said "The whole thing was plagued by the philosophy, 'Anybody but me.' There is just no sense of a national commitment ...there was so much demagoguery."

WHAT'S UP AT THE DOCK — After weeks of battling the long gas lines at the gas stations, many Californians headed to the beaches and waterways for relaxation Saturday only to find the same long gas lines when it came to filling up their boats. Boats lay off this Marina Del Ray station waiting their turn to fill up as one boater prepares to leave after getting his quota. (AP Laserphoto)

Hunt Says Suit A Bid To Keep Educational Control

By United Press International

Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. Saturday said the state's suit against the Department of Health, Education and Welfare is a bid to keep educational control within the state and must not interfere with efforts to provide quality higher education in North Carolina.

"It is unfortunate that, at this critical time for our state, our university system is embroiled in the controversy with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. This is no time for angry rhetoric," Hunt said in remarks prepared for graduation exercises at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

"The university has gone to court to maintain its right to make educational decisions. But we must not let ourselves be blinded to what's really important: providing full and equal opportunities to all students at all 16 of our campuses so that those students, in turn, can provide leadership and courage and vision and energy for our state," he said.

"We in North Carolina," Hunt said in his only departure from his text, "have that responsibility and must make these decisions."

Hunt also said the state's "university system has been the catalyst for progress in North Carolina throughout our history, prodding our consciences, testing the limits, demanding that we do better. It must continue to do so."

Several members of the Charlotte faculty and a number of students wore white armbands, a protest they said of Hunt's refusal so far to act in the case of the Charlotte Three, a trio of black men convicted of arson in the 1969 burning of a stable. They did not disrupt his speech, and applauded his remarks.

The Charlotte graduation, where 1,714 students received degrees, was one of several at colleges and universities across the state Saturday.

In Raleigh, Florida's top educator, without making any direct reference to North Carolina's desegregation case, called the state's university system a model for the south and nation Saturday.

Dr. E.T. York, speaking at North Carolina State University's graduation exercises, said educators "in the rest of the South and throughout much of the nation look upon this university and this university system as models of what our universities might aspire to be in terms of quality and excellence."

Florida, with one predominantly black campus among nine, has settled its desegregation case with HEW, while North Carolina, with five predominantly black campuses among 16, is in court with HEW.

UNC President William Friday, a graduate of NCSU, sat behind York at the graduation exercise. A day earlier UNC had won continuance of a temporary restraining order keeping HEW from moving to cut off some of $89 million it provides the UNC system.

At North Carolina State, Chancellor Joab L. Thomas conferred more than 3,000 degrees in the sciences, technologies, humanities and the arts.

Larger Pay Raise ?

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Teachers and state employees can expect a larger pay raise than originally recommended by Gov. Jim Hunt, legislative leaders said Saturday after wrapping up most of the work on the proposed two-year state budget.

The size of the final salary increase is still undecided, but it is likely to fall somewhere between the 5 percent included by Hunt in the proposed budget and the 7 percent sought by groups representing teachers and government workers.

"I think it'd be reasonable to say there'll be some additional increase," said Senate Appropriations Chairman Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir. "How much? It would just be a guess."

A 24-member special subcommittee of the House and Senate appropriations committees met in an unusual Saturday session and completed action on almost all remaining budget requests.

The committee's budget package remained slightly out of balance — about $10 million off — but final projects of revenue for the next two years were expected to be presented by analysts early next week. Those figures, legislators said, are likely to bring the budget into balance and provide at least some of the money for further pay raises.

Rep. Ed Homes, D-Chatham, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said there "absolutely" would be an addition to the pay raise when the budget is completed.

"We're trying to find some availability and put it in the hands of state employees," Holmes said. "How much, I don't know."

Holmes said that at a minimum, the 5 percent pay raise will be increased by 1 percent. "I would not want to go lower than 1 percent and would like to go higher," he said.

Hunt has until this week stuck by his recommendation for a 5 percent salary increase with a 2 percent in new fringe benefits, while employee groups have sought a 7 percent raise plus 2 percent in new fringe benefits.

Hunt maintained the smaller proposal was the maximum allowed under President Carter's voluntary wage guidelines, until House Speaker Carl Stewart returned from a meeting with White House wage and price officials and said a large increase could be offered without exceeding the controls.

Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green, the first of top state leaders to support the bid for an additional 2 percent pay raise for teachers, attended the session and said afterwards the full 7 percent request was still "reasonable and possible."

Hunt's deputy budget officer Marvin Dorman said Stewart returned from the Washington meeting with "some new angles" on how a larger pay increase could be kept within the guidelines. He declined to elaborate.

"I think there's a chance there will be some kind of additional compensation, and still be within the guidelines," he said.

Holmes said he expected the new revenue projections would include additional money to cover at least a 1 percent increase. But in an interview Holmes said that to provide the full 7 percent sought by teachers and state employees would require "some hard trading with the finance committees."

That was a reference to insistence by House and Senate finance chairmen on a tax-cut package totaling $91 million over the two-year budget.

Adding 2 percent to the pay raise would cost the state about $42 million, and Green said he believed the money could be found without sacrificing any of the tax cut.

A final decision on the pay raise remains the only major decision left for the subcommittee, before its final budget package that totals nearly $10 billion over the biennium is presented to the full Appropriations Committees.

In its final changes the panel adopted most of a recommended increase for the education department. Included was $7.5 million to bring non-certified school personnel — aides, maintenance supervisors and clerks — onto the state salary schedule.

To compensate for that and other smaller education items, the panels agreed to cut $9 million from other portions of the education budget. They included $4 million each from remedial education and exceptional children programs, $1 million from developmental day care and $1 million from Hunt's community schools program.

"We wanted it all, but that was our top priority," Tom I. Davis, spokesman for the Department of Public Instruction, said of the education additions.

Presidential Scholar

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Sunday Editor

Rose High senior Jeen Kim is one of a few American high school students to be honored in Washington during June as a Presidential Scholar.

Kim recently received a congratulatory telegram from President Carter on Kim's selection as a Presidential Scholar, and was also formally advised of his selection by Edwin W. Martin, Deputy Commissioner, U. S. Office of Education.

Jeen Kim

The presentation ceremony will be held in the State Department on Wednesday evening, June 20, at which time approximately 100 American high school seniors will be given the Presidential Scholar Medallion.

If the schedule of President Carter permits, the ceremony will be held at the White House. Immediate members of the scholars' families are also being invited

Kim says his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Joong Ho Kim, plan to attend the ceremony. Dr. Kim is in the Math Department at East Carolina University, and Mrs. Kim is a librarian in the Martin County Schools. Kim has a young brother, David, a fourth grader.

A native of Seoul, Korea, Kim came to the U.S. when he was three, lived in Columbia, S. C. for three years and has been a resident of Greenville since he was six years old. All his school years have been spent in Greenville.

Winner of many honors, including a National Merit Scholarship, Kim has been accepted for attendance at Harvard University. "I'm leaning toward the study of economics or possibly political sciene, but I'm not sure just which at this time," Kim said about plans for his major. He has placed high in several math competitions, local, regional and state levels, and is a member of the Key Club, the Math Club and the Honor Society at Rose High.

Last summer he represented Greenville as the Community Ambassador, and spent several weeks with a family in The Netherlands.

Asked about his favorite activities other than studies, Kim said "I enjoy playing tennis and I've played baseball a little. I like playing the piano, and although my favorite is classical music, I play all kinds of music."

Soon after the June trip to Washington, Kim will be going to Salt Lake City, Utah to be honored along with other outstanding American high school seniors at the annual Banquet of the Golden Plate.

At this time, he is also waiting to find out if he is to be one of the eight finalists in the U.S. chosen to represent the nation in the International Math Olympiad to be held in England.

Commenting on his feelings when he received word he was chosen as a Presidental Scholar, Kim said "It was a very pleasant surprise for me. It was something I couldn't really expect, and when I received the telegram from President Carter I had a feeling I cannot describe.

"I would also like to thank my teachers, my parents and all who have helped me all along," Kim added.

One other North Carolina senior, Dagmar Herzog of Durham has also been chosen as a 1979 Presidential Scholar.

—Gas Explosion Kills Seven—

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Rescuers today recovered the body of the seventh person killed in a natural gas explosion that leveled a tavern and an abandoned rowhouse in northeast Philadelphia.

Eighteen others were injured in the fire and explosion Friday, and crews were searching the rubble today for more victims.

The blast injured people up to a block away, knocked a passing motorist unconscious, and hurled an elderly man through a plate glass store window, according to police.

One victim, Doris Hopp, 40, was crushed by flying debris while waiting for a bus across the street from the tavern, police said.

Police Capt. Wilbert LeVan had said before the seventh body was found that there was a possibility that one or two persons were still buried.

The explosion occurred shortly after 3 p.m.. after residents of the Frankford area had reported smelling gas, police said.

Rescuers today recovered the body of the seventh person killed in a natural gas explosion that leveled a tavern and an abandoned rowhouse in northeast Philadelphia.

Don Kenley, a spokesman for the Philadelphia Gas Works (PGW), said the explosion was caused by gas that had escaped from a broken main under the street and had collected in the basements of the bar and rowhouse. The gas could then have been ignited by the slightest spark, he said.

"We believe something caused the ground (under the street) to be washed away and the traffic overhead caused the unsupported main to be broken," he added.

The seventh victim was identified as Edward Brown, 47, a PGW customer relations specialist who had been sent to the scene. Kenley said Brown was believed to have been in one of the basements when the explosion occurred.

The blast crumbled George's Bar and the adjoining rowhouse, setting off a raging fire that burned for about 1½ hours, police said.

The Red Cross set up an emergency shelter for 40 families who were forced to leave their homes, but the shelter was eventually closed when all the families found lodgings with friends in the neighborhood.

About 300 homes were without gas and electricity, but service was restored early today.

The victims, in addition to Mrs. Hopp and Brown, were identified as Henry Traynor, 38; Gerald Ladzenski, 26, Anthony Kasiewski, 54; Harry F. Smith, 50, and Alfred C. Kahrklinsch, about 62.

Bar owner George Martin, 53, was in critical condition today at the St. Agnes Hospital Burn Center with multiple burns and other injuries. Two persons were hospitalized with serious injuries at Frankford Hospital, and four others were in stable condition, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Eleven people were treated at area hospitals and released.

The Planning group will consider rescending approval given to the two subdivision plans by the board last month.

The prior approval of the plans for the subdivisions was based in part of tentative approval from the Department of Transportation. A few days after the Planning Board's April meeting, the Department of Transportation withdrew its approval and asked the planning body to re-consider the matter because of the proposed location of the US 264 freeway.

The proposed Wilson-Greenville freeway, according to maps supplied by the DOT, would cut across both subdivisions.

Surprise Halt Of Gas Shipments Hits Ft. Bragg

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — A surprise halt by Texaco of gasoline shipments Friday promised to leave Fort Bragg's two main commercial service stations dry of regular gas through next Tuesday, plus leave the post's premium supplies threatened, officials said.

Station operators calculated Friday regular supplies would be pumped dry by mid-afternoon Saturday at the post's massive Smoke Bomb Hill station and the Mallonee Village Station.

Together, the two stations account for more than 70 percent of the gas sold at Fort Bragg and Pope Air Force Base, operators said. The 21-pump outlet at Smoke Bomb Hill, said to be one of the largest stations in the state, pumps more than 50 percent of the gasoline alone.

Adequate supplies of premium and unleaded gas continue to be on hand at all five stations on the military reservation, said Grady Light, service operations manager for the outlets. Supplies of regular at three of the stations were also adequate as of late Friday, he said.

How long the regular supplies hold out there will depend on how much of an added strain is generated by the empty tanks at the two main stations.

Looking ahead, the prospects are bleaker, he said. All post premium supplies may or may not be threatened by mid-month, depending on some uncertain shipments, and it is possible reduced allocations will trigger the temporary depletion of all grades of gas on post by the last week of May, Light said.

Pumps at the Smoke Bomb Hill Station were closed Monday, with the outlet's allocation for April on all three grades pumped dry. Some of the other stations also went without some grades of gas. All stations have been operating at reduced hours since March.

Texaco, the post's sole supplier, cut allocations for the stations from 85 percent in April to 80 percent in May. Then Friday, the distributors unexpectedly informed post operators not to expect another shipment of regular gas until next Wednesday, or another shipment of premium gas before at least May 16, Light said.

"They say they just flat don't have any gas to give us," Light said, expressing surprise at the message from Texaco.

Fort Bragg, without a doubt, is one of Texaco's largest customers in North Carolina, Light said. Last May, the five stations, combined pumped more than 900,000 gallons of gasoline.

With post supplies teetering off and on, its lost customers are likely to put added strain on supplies in the surrounding civilian community. Light said military personnel and civilians, alike, have been "fortunate" so far in having access to ample civilian supplies to draw from.

TAKE THE HIGH ROAD — Nearly 4,000 Cambodian civilians and soldiers marched into Khaw Lan, north of Trad, in Thailand Thursday. Part of the group of civilians came in on nine elephants. Tax-Exempt Housing Bonds Cut Revenues

By DAVID E. ANDERSON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The use of tax-exempt housing bonds has more than tripled in the past three years and could deprive the Treasury of sizable tax revenues, the Urban Institute reported Saturday.

The private, non-profit research group reported its findings in a 196-page study, "Tax Exempt Financing of Housing Investment," prepared under contract for the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The issuance of tax exempt housing bonds by local authorities has become a recent source of political controversy.

According to the study, "approximately $7.5 billion in long-term housing bonds were issued in 1978 — more than triple the level just three years earlier."

And during the first four months of 1979, it said, such bonds were issued at an annual rate in excess of $13 billion.

Originally designed to finance federally subsidized, low and moderate income rental housing, the tax-exempt bonds are increasingly being used to subsidize middle class, single-family homes.

Because their interest payments are exempt from federal taxes, housing bonds can be issued at below-market interest rates.

The savings are passed on to the home buyer in the form of lower-interest mortgages.

The Urban Institute estimated that, in the first four months of this year, cities and local governments issued $1.6 billion worth of the bonds for single family mortgage subsidies as compared to $567 million for all of 1978.

The study estimated that each billion dollars of bonds issued at today's market rate costs the federal government approximately $30 million a year in lost federal tax revenue.

If, as projected, the use of tax exempt financing continues to grow to the point where it takes up about half the residential mortgage market, the federal government would lose $17.6 billion a year in tax receipts.

Tax exempt bonds would then be "the nation's most costly housing program."

The study added, however, that "despite the rapid growth of tax exempt financing for single family homes, borrowing on the tax exempt market remains crucial to the nation's production of federally subsidized rental housing."

"Perhaps the most important decision to be made is whether federal authorities should try to limit tax exempt borrowing for housing."

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has introduced legislation that would terminate, with some exceptions, tax exempt borrowing for single family home mortgages.

His committee has scheduled hearings on this proposal for Monday and Tuesday.

NCC Against Nuclear Power

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The country's largest interdenominational body of Christians has spoken out against the use of nuclear power as contrary to humanity's moral responsibility for the earth and future life on it.

After three days of intermittent debate following years of preliminary studies, the National Council of Churches Friday called for a turning away from nuclear power, saying it imperils nature itself in the hands of fallible human beings.

Children Killed, Wounded By Bomb

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Eight Lebanese children were killed and six wounded when a bomb they were playing with exploded in a southern Lebanese village, authorities said today.

The eight victims, ranging in age from 8 to 13, were brothers and cousins from one family, said a spokesman for provincial governor in Sidon, administrative capital of southern Lebanon. The blast occurred Friday at the village of Babiliyeh, seven miles south of Sidon and 32 miles south of Beirut.

The leftist Beirut newspaper As Safir said the explosive was a U.S.-made "cluster" bomb dropped by an Israeli plane during raids earlier this week on Palestinian targets along Lebanon's southern coastal highway.

Must Consider Nuclear Risks

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The risks of having nuclear energy have to be lined up against the risks of not having it, says a spokesman for the company that built the ill-fated reactor at Three Mile Island.

Those risks "must be compared with the risks of not pursing the nuclear option and the energy shortages and international calamity that could result," said James C. Deddens, head of the Project Management Department of Babcock & Wilcox.

The company also designed Duke Power Co.'s Oconee plant reactors in South Carolina.

Delayed Reporting Nuclear Leakage

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The release of a small amount of radioactive gas from the Brunswick nuclear plant near Southport this week was due to operator error, the plant manager said Friday.

Although the leak occured late Tuesday and early Wednesday, Carolina Power & Light Co., the plant's owner, did not release any information about it until Friday.

And state officials said they were disappointed that CP&L did not notify them directly of the occurance, although the company says that , by law, it was not required to.

The leakage was small, and company and state officials said they believed it posed no danger to health or property.

Proposed Plant Put On Hold

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — A proposed Davie County nuclear-power plant has been put on hold for several months while the Nuclear Regulatory Commission re-evaluates the safety of nuclear power, a senior Duke Power Co. officer said Friday.

Duke Senior Vice President Warren Owen said a ruling on the proposed Perkins station had been expected this spring. But he said the NRC now appears to be totally involved in re-evaluating active nuclear plans and in working with Congress on its separate inquiry into nuclear safety.

Duke Power plans to build the three-reactor station on the Yadkin River in Davie County, about 20 miles southwest of Winston-Salem.

Jacksonville Policeman Slain

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A 24-year-old Jacksonville police officer died Friday after a suspect he was trying to apprehend slashed him in the neck with a knife, police say.

Authorities say 3-year-veteran Terry Lee Lanier was pronounced dead at Onslow Memorial Hospital shortly after the 11:15 a.m. incident.

Morgan's Dilemma

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C., reportedly is trying so hard to avoid choosing among Democrats for a federal judgeship that he's even thinking of choosing a Republican for the post.

Earlier this week Morgan invited U.S. District Court Judge Hiram Ward, a Republican from Lexington, N.C., to Washington to discuss the pending appointment to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va. The circuit job is a lifetime appointment that pays $57,500 a year.

Ward, a 56-year-old Nixon appointee, said Morgan "didn't indicate whether he'd decided on me or not."

Those who are reported to have appealed to U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell in Ward's behalf are Wake Forest University President Ralph Scales and Raleigh attorney Melville Broughton Jr., son of a former Democratic governor. Morgan and Ward were classmates at Wake Forest law school as young men.

Morgan says he hasn't decided who he'll recommend for the appointment even though Bell is pressuring him to submit a nominee soon.

Accidents Listed

On Friday, a vehicle driven by Lou Anderson Singleton, 108-C Myrtle Ave., collided in the Pitt Plaza Parking Lot about 5:30 p.m. with a vehicle driven by Jane Carol Hudson, 502 Oakdale Dr.

According to police records, damage to the Singleton vehicle was estimated at $300 and $50 to the Hudson vehicle. No charges have been made.

Also on Friday, a vehicle owned by Robert Bennett, Jr., Apt. 101-F Lakeview Terrace, was found on fire about 6:20 p.m. It was parked in front of Bennett's apartment.

Damage to the vehicle was estimated at $1,200. The burning vehicle was extinquished by the Greenville Fire Department. Police said the fire was probably due to faulty wiring in the vehicle.

On Saturday, a vehicle driven by Pamela Louise Simpkins, 1214 W. Grantham St., Goldsboro, struck a utility pole alongside Rotary Ave. about 2 p.m. Simpkins, who was taken to Pitt Memorial Hospital for minor injuries, was later released, according to a hospital official. Simpkins has been charged with a DUI, according to police.

Also on Saturday, a vehicle driven by George Thomas Hawley, Jr., A-2 Glendale Courts, struck a vehicle owned by Annette Lutz Lance, 4024 Alonzo Dr., about 12:37 a.m.

According to police records, damage to the Hawley vehicle was estimated at $125 and $195 to the Lance vehicle.

Hawley has been charged with a hit and run in that incident, according to police.

Planning Takeovers

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — Salvadoran government sources said Saturday the leftist revolutionaries holding the metropolitan cathedral and the Venezuelan and French embassies are planning more embassy takeovers.

Presidential press secretary Rafael Flores Lima said Friday the government was considering suspending constitutional rights as a result of the crisis.

Western diplomatic sources confirmed they knew about some aspects of the strategy, which also includes a call for a general strike and more mass demonstrations, such as the protest in front of the Metropolitan Cathedral in which at least 22 persons died Tuesday.

Bennett To Assume Duties

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (UPI) — The officers of the National Humanities Center Saturday asked Executive Director William J. Bennett to assume the center's executive and administrative duties.

Bennett would take over the job handled by Center President Charles Frankel, who was found shot to death with his wife Wednesday in their suburban New York home.

Bennett, who has both a doctorate and a law degree, has been the executive director of the center since it was founded. If he accepts the officers' request he would become director of the center

Distrust Is The Big Obstacle

Not being the trusting kind, pardon us if we have difficulty in exhibiting great enthusiasm for the SALT II agreement which has been reached by the Soviet Union and the United States.

The agreement limits, and reduces the numbers of missiles, bombers and submarine carrying missiles which each nation may maintain.

Each side may verify the compliance of the other side through the technical means each possesses, and each is prevented from interfering in the verification.

Even though the agreement has been reached, the Carter administration's fight has just begun. He must now convince two-thirds of the U.S. Senate that the treaty is desirable in order to have it ratified.

No one can disagree with the aims of the SALT II agreement, which is to limit the steady build-up of nuclear missiles. It has long been known that nuclear warfare would be disastrous, but many thought there would be a few survivors. Now, however, from what we are learning about nuclear power accidents, it becomes questionable whether any humans could survive the radiation of nuclear warfare. If they did future generations might be so altered as to be unrecognizable.

The major question is not whether an agreement between the two nuclear powers is necessary, but rather whether either side will be able to cheat on the agreement.

Thus the Carter administration's job will be to convince the Senate that the nation does possess the technology to effectively monitor Soviet compliance with the agreement.

We hope he can convince the senators — and us too — that the essential technology is there, and that the arms limitations will be properly carried out.

Blumenthal Maybe The Last To Know

Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal has admitted that the administration had "screwed up" in its predictions of the inflation rate for this year.

Instead of a 7.4 percent inflation rate, the prediction has now been raised to 8½ percent.

Secretary Blumenthal may well have been the last person in the nation to know. All he had to do was ask any wage earner who has been paying household bills in the face of raging inflation during this year.

"Ahoy! Margaret Thatcher here! I'm your new pilot!"

Want Low-Skill Workers?

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — An outspoken community college official has joined the ranks of those in North Carolina convinced that low-skill, low-paying jobs are part of the strategy being fostered by the power structure.

Raymond A. Stone is president of the Sandhills Community College at Carthage in Moore County. He responded to a recent column in this space commenting on the need for more training to produce better workers to take higher paying jobs.

"The socio-economic leaders of the state, the political power brokers, do not want high-skill training for Tar Heel employees. They are able to hire the present work force dirt cheap, lowest in the nation," Stone believes.

"If some of these highly-productive, low-paid workers acquire more skill, major national and international corporate chiefs would be able to woo them away from their present employers. And that would be bad for profits."

Stone finds this the reason that North Carolina spends from $3,000 to $8,000 "per elite student in the University system."

But common trainees in the community college system rate only $1,200 to$1,500. "While our political leaders may talk about the need for skill training, their words will remain hollow until adequate resources for such training are provided.

To train a tool and die maker will cost probably more than $3,000 per year; but to continue to produce English, psychology, political science, business administration, and a host of other nondemand majors ultimately will be far more costly," Stone said. Other experts have expressed similar opinions lately, including some labor leaders and research specialists at the university.

Efficiency

A group of 87 North Carolina towns in North Carolina have been the subject of a study by research analysts at Research Triangle Institute to determine efficiency in local government.

BILL NOBLITT

The researchers studied four basic municipal services: fire, police, garbage, and streets. A table showing what it costs to handle the job allows other towns to check up on their own operations.

City officials or citizens who wish to check up on their own efficiency can get data from the N.C. Department of Administration in a report called "A Productive Government: North Carolina's report on management initiatives in improving productivity in state and local government."

Recognition

You may not care if the fellow you see driving down the road is a county commissioner — but he might want everybody to know.

And so, again, a proposal is making its way through the General Assembly authorizing the state to issue special license Further, they would carry a number between double zero and 99 identifying the county.

State Senator Robert Monroe Davis, Jr., D-Rowan, is chief sponsor of the measure. Similar proposals in the past have not been enthusiastically endorsed by the public or legislators.

Sunday Morning Notes

A group of Rose High School French students traveled to Europe in April with their teacher, Mrs. Bernadette Morris.

In London they visited Hyde Park around 8 o'clock one evening.

It struck the group as odd that there were only a few people in the park at that time.

When they tried to leave they found out why. The park gates closed at 8:30 p.m.

The students and their teacher had stayed until around 9 o'clock.

The solution, they concluded, was to climb a fence in order to get out. The group tried one fence and it was too difficult. They tried another and . . . success.

The Greenville Civitan Club recently held its third annual Hole-In-One contest.

The club bulletin reported that Tom Brewer, Jr., son of the ECU chancellor, stopped by, paid his dollar, picked out three balls and a club and lobbed all three balls 96 yards onto the green.

The closest ball to the hole was four feet away.

It was his last dollar so he asked the chairman Doug Caldwell if he could hit again "for the fun of it."

"Go ahead," the chairman encouraged him.

The bulletin reports: "The teenager scooped the first ball with the nine iron, sending it high into the air. It came down on the green about six feet from the pin.

"His next shot landed two feet closer and was in perfect alignment with the cup and his first ball.

. . . And that would have been the winner, except young Brewer had taken the shots "just for fun."

The winner, by the way was Doug Rodman who came within one foot, three inches. Second place went to Harriett White at two feet, six and a half inches.

On a trip to Rocky Mount last week your columnist pulled up alongside a car driven by a pretty girl. The back seat was piled high with personal belongings. As the vehicle moved ahead it was clear why. The auto had a Pennsylvania license plate . . . and an ECU student parking sticker. It was obvious the young lady, finished with exams, was on her way to I-95 . . . and home.

A New Pea In Garden

By JON C. FRANDSEN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The hottest thing in home gardening since rototillers is a new edible podded pea that owes its existence to a fortuitous "cross" of science and law.

Its developer, Calvin Lamborn of the Gallatin Valley Seed Co. of Twin Falls, Idaho, says it might never have happened if Congress had not passed the Plant Variety Protection Act of 1970. Lamborn was working on the new pea about that time, starting with a "rogue" pea he had discovered.

He credits the law with opening "a new attitude toward the continued investment" in research of new varieties.

Before the act was passed, Lamborn said in a telephone interview, his company could put money and years of effort into developing a new variety, and another seed producer "could somehow get ahold of

Other Editors Say Experience Helps

(The Sanford Herald)

Greenwood elementary school principal Robert Price probably has found out as much about the problems of school bus drivers as all the study groups and panels that have looked into the question in recent years.

During the school year, Price has worked as a substitute driver at his school, having qualified for the task during the previous summer.

His conclusions after several experiences as a driver indicate that a good high school student driver is "as good a driver as you can get." In the matter of enforcing discipline, however, the student drivers have problems which he does not have. It is easier for Price to enforce discipline, he admits, because the youngsters on the bus know that he has the authority to do so. High school students who do not carry similar authority often might run into bigger problems when trouble arises aboard a bus.

Price's conclusions boil down to the idea that principals and teachers should interest students in good safety and that parents should do their part to see that children observe safety rules.

The task of driving a bus safely requires so much of the driver's attention that maintaining discipline can be a task that might detract dangerously from his attention to his road duties. All it takes on a heavily traveled highway is for the driver to be distracted for a brief moment — as little as one second — for a tragic accident to occur.

Millions of dollars are spent each year to see that our children receive the best education possible. To make certain that they are also transported to and from the schools in the safest manner possible is just as vital, if not more so.

Those charged with overseeing the bus system should take to heart the information which Price has provided and take the proper steps to improve the system. That includes any steps deemed necessary to make certain that the drivers can devote their attention, full-time, to the intricacies of handling the rolling stock. If monitors, with some sort of built-in authority, are necessary to take the disciplinary burden off the drivers, they should be provided. This is no place to be making any compromises.

THE INSIDE REPORT

Chilling Cuban Question

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — The appearance of a second Soviet submarine in Cuban waters has been definitely established by U.S. intelligence within the past two weeks, raising the question of just what the Soviet Union intends to do with its growing military power 90 miles off the coast of Florida.

With final agreement on the new strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT II) expected momentarily, Carter administration strategists are maintaining sealed-lip silence to avoid any new U.S.-Soviet hassle. But at high levels of the Pentagon, this question is being asked: is Moscow just "paying off" Fidel Castro for his expeditionary corps in Africa and elsewhere, or is Cuba being surreptitiously converted into a Soviet base for future operations in Latin America?

Submarine No. 1, a diesel-powered Foxtrot model, was delivered to Cienfuegos Feb. 7, along with two hydrofoil patrol boats. U.S. specialists believe the sub will be used to train Cuban submarine crews.

Submarine No. 2, tentatively identified as a W-2 ("Whiskey Two"), is also a diesel-powered boat with conventional torpedo tubes and no nuclear weapons. Although its precise purpose is a mystery, the proven existence of another lethal, snorkel-equipped sub in U.S.-controlled Caribbean waters may force the Pentagon into analytical studies that are dangerously overdue.

Surprisingly until now neither the Navy nor the Air Force has been asked to produoe contingency planning for neutralizing Cuba in the event of any future war. The "consolidated guidance" which, under top secret cover, is sent to the services each year from the office of the secretary of defense has utterly ignored the future possibility that Cuba might pose a threat.

Some responsible and skeptical specialists think they know the reason for this: if Secretary of Defense Harold Brown ordered up contingency plans on how to deal with hostile Cuba in a global conflict, hard answers would be absolutely essential to questions now being ducked.

Among these questions: what conceivable purpose does Moscow have in supplying Castro with submarines, no matter if they are new or old, powered by nuclear or conventional engines and possessing nuclear or conventional armaments?

What purpose do the Soviets have in supplying Cuba with a squadron — or possibly more — of MiG-23 late-model attack aircraft, whether or not armed with nuclear weapons? Does the Soviet Union plan to support Cuban forces, armed with those Soviet weapons, for future Africa-style exercises in Latin America?

These are real questions, not to be ducked any longer. There is solid new evidence, for example, that Soviet fishing fleets will soon make their first appearance on the Balboa or Pacific Ocean side of the Panama Canal. Their presence will enhance Soviet intelligence-gathering just as the U.S. begins to phase out total control of the canal under the new U.S.Panama treaties.

We reported last Nov. 15. about Brown's private warning to President Carter that MiG-23s being delivered to Cuba posed a problem of "high political sensitivity." Brown was reminding Carter of the Soviet pledge to President Kennedy during the 1962 Cuban missile crisis not to send offensive weapons to

PRACTICE IN PRAYER

The reason why some people claim that they get little or no result from prayer is that they don't pray often enough to keep themselves in practice. They are like a man who combed his hair once a year, and asserted he would never do it again because it hurt so much.

Some people never pray until they get sick, or find themselves confronted with the possibility of not being able to get something they desperately want.

We cannot bring prayers to our lips when we confront crises unless we have accustomed ourselves to believe that God is in the world, standing ready at all times to help those who turn to Him. It is as unjustified to believe that we can pray effectively in the face of a great crisis without ever having done it before, as it is to believe that we can play a musical instrument without ever having practiced upon it.

Housing Investiment Pays Off

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Housing is an investment you can live in, that requires little money down, that appreciates faster than the inflation rate, that provides tax deductions and, in a way, a savings account.

You have heard it over and over, and you listen again. Authors and lecturers, such as William Nickerson, Albert Lowry and Mark Haroldsen, grow rich on the word.

All preach the beauty of buying undervalued properties, improving them, and perhaps raising rents. They praise inflation to the extent housing prices exceed general price rises. They extol tax benefits.

The story varies in the telling, but the message generally is the same:

You spot a two-unit income property selling for $38,000. You are attracted by the basic soundness of the house.

You use the cosmetically poor appearance as an excuse for offering only $28,000. You bargain, and settle for $32,000. Already you are ahead; you'll only have to spend $3,000 to improve the appearance.

The bank offers an 80 percent mortgage, which means you put down 20 percent, or $7,000, on the $35,000 combined purchase and improvement price.

The existing rents are $250 for each apartment, which adds up to $6,000 a year, or about one-sixth the purchase price. More commonly stated, the purchase price is six times the rentroll.

You improve the property; you will not settle for six times. You raise the rents to $275 each, or $550 a month or $6,600 a year. Now the multiple is down close to five.

Just as importantly, you will have raised the market price. Houses in the area sell for about seven times the rentroll. That would mean your house's resale value is now $46,200. Agreed, you'd have to bargain hard to get it, but negotiating is an art you're developing.

There are other ways to figure your growing estate. Consider that inflation might be adding 10 percent a year (it was 12.1 for existing homes in 1978) to market value.

A 10 percent gain on $35,000 means $3,500 in current dollars is added to your estate. But since you put up only $7,000, your yield is figured on that basis. Before interest payments, it comes to 50 percent.

Since you're borrowing at 10.5 percent, you have some hefty interest payments to make, which effectively cut into your yield. But remember: Uncle Sam finances debt; it's tax deductible. And so is depreciation.

Add the cash flow (excess of rental income over operating costs) and the appreciation, and the equity buildup, and the tax deductions, and you have a return many times what you could get from a savings account.

Can it be done? It is being done. Can you do it? That's a different question. Timing and luck play roles. Judgment too. Handiness, free time, common sense, and credit-worthiness are involved.

To the editor:

Mayor Percy Cox has proclaimed the week of May 13-19 Mental Health Association in Pitt County Week in Greenville. Mayors of other county towns have promised to do the same.

The Mental Health Association in Pitt County precedes Mental Health Association on the state level. In looking through our files, I am constantly amazed at how many of the services in mental health in our city and county that we now take for granted had their beginnings in the Mental Health Association office with a few members nourishing an idea, educating the public to awareness of the need, taking it to state and national levels if necessary and finally producing the end product.

Our role has not changed. We represent everyone in Pitt County with mental problems. Our area has broadened — mental problems now encompass all problems of emotional health.

We educate. We motivate. We legislate.

We are a United Way Agency — not state or federally funded and the stronger our membership, the stronger our voice for Mental Health.

May is membership month and we have members who participate in name only and members who volunteer their services. We need both. This year we are trying to build a student membership — high school $1 and technical and college students $2. We believe that the future of mental health in Pitt County can be served by awareness of mental health concerns and promotion of mental health by our younger citizens.

To the editor:

This great government "of the people, for the people, and by the people" has lost sight of the very principles upon which it was founded. In the same manner as a new country grows and takes on an identity of its own, so a new government develops its own bureaucracy. Our government characteristic of its bureaucracy has taken on a life of its own, as it feeds off the labor and produce of the people only to spew it back out in unfruitful or ineffective social reform. If our government would return to us the money it squanders, "We the people" could increase our social well being in a manner personally suited to our individual needs rather than government policy. The general well being of the majority would increase, and this government "for the people" would become a government "of the people" and "by the people."

If our country follows the pages of history, a tax revolt is in the offing for us, but only if the American people have not lost their tenacity for "individual" freedom and the principles upon which our great country has been built.

Kirby C. Smith

To the editor:

I agree wholeheartedly with the views expressed by Ruth Trevathan's letter regarding the University's offensive new sign at the corner of Charles St. and Greenville Blvd.

This tasteless display of commercialism does not befit the dignity of Greenville's most visible institution. That ECU and the State of North Carolina would erect this automated billboard on its property is hard to believe.

The ECU Athletic Department hardly needs such a display to promote its events. A brick wall with a simple "East Carolina University" on it would have been much more appropriate.

As I Recall It

Mecklenburg Delegation Behind Biggest Hoax

By NOEL YANCEY

(Noel Yancey retired recently after 39 years of covering North Carolina news for the Associated Press. In this column, he retells some of the big stories he recalls.)

One of the biggest hoaxes ever pulled in the North Carolina legislature was the time some members of the Mecklenburg County delegation nearly sneaked through a local liquor-by-the-drink bill without other lawmakers knowing about it.

The bill had been passed by both House and Senate and was in the enrolling office and required only the signature of the presiding officers when the trick was discovered and the offending portion of the measure was removed.

"The only regret I have is that it didn't pass. We would have been drinking by Monday," said Sen. Mike Mullins, R-Mecklenburg, the author of the hoax which was staged back in 1974, five years before Mecklenburg County and Charlotte actually got liquor by the drink legally.

Mullins said he researched the subject for nearly six weeks before he actually staged it. When he had finished, Mullins had written an amendment to an innocent sounding zoning measure without mentioning the word "liquor." The hoax was based on the fact that in 1971, the legislature had passed a local mixed-drink bill for Mecklenburg County which the state Supreme Court later ruled unconstitutional. Mullins' amendment simply would have reenacted the 1971 law with some changes which he said were designed to make it constitutional.

The hoax apparently was discovered by the Institute of Government which analyzes all legislation introduced in the General Assembly, and word of the trick quickly spread through the legislative halls. The ploy aroused emotions ranging all the way from outrage to merriment.

"Only in Mecklenburg," commented a smiling Sen. Hamilton C. Horton. But some members did not appreciate being tricked, and Sen. Arthur Williamson, D-Columbus expressed the opinion Mullins' credibility in the Senate would suffer.

"They're not going to believe another thing he tells them," Williamson said.

The sense of outrage also spread to the Mecklenburg delegation. One of its members Rep. Jo Graham Foster had not been told of the attempt to get a mixed-drink measure passed by subterfuge.

"We didn't tell her because she is a dry," explained Mullins.

It was Mrs. Foster who made the motion to recall the bill from the enrolling office, where it was being prepared for the signatures of the presiding officers.

If the bill had been signed, Mecklen might have mixed drinks five years sooner than it actually had them.

"I think that's the most underhandedest move I ever saw," said Mrs. Foster, a school teacher who was not paying attention to her grammar at the moment.

"It just wasn't the right thing to do," a red-faced Rep. Carl Stewart, D-Gaston who is now House speaker, told a fellow legislator shortly after the hoax was uncovered.

Another who was upset by the trick was Rep. Frank Tomlin, R-Cabarrus. "I'm the last one who would try to block Mecklenburg from getting liquor by the drink. But the way they did this is just not right. They've lost more support and respect by trying to sneak it through," he said.

But Sen. Thomas Strickland, D-Wayne, saw humor in the situation. "As far as I'm concerned, I'd like to treat this as if it were a joke," he said.

The bill was finally returned to the Senate where the offending amendment was removed and the zoning bill was passed into law.

Asked later how he felt at being caught in the act, Mullins replied: "Like a football coach whose team just lost."

Living With The Land Of Oz, And 'Dorothy'

One of the strangest psychological phenomenons of the twentieth century is The Wizard of Oz. Erma Bombeck's household is not the only one that has experienced the wierd effects of this fantasy. Erma wrote a column several weeks ago about the adverse personality changes that resulted from her watching the movie for 21 years in a row. In our house it was Meg who was first affected. She assumed the character of Dorothy.

At first she was just begging me to let her hair grow long so that she would look like Dorothy. But after a few weeks she got so caught up in the fantasy that she would even cry when one of her friends persisted in calling her Meg.

As a romantic, I speculated that Oz had such a strange effect on Meg because it symbolized an escape from society to a world where imagination reigned supreme. Phillip said that Meg identified with the story because our house always looked as if a cyclone had hit it.

He didn't know what he was talking about. The cyclone didn't hit until two weeks later. When I walked into Meg's room, every toy she owned, all her books, and all her stuffed animals were in the middle of the floor. "Look at this big mess," she said proudly.

It was probably easier for Uncle Henry to build a new house than it was for us to clean up her room. It took Phillip and me 30 minutes just to put together the puzzles.

Meg, of course, protested when she was called upon to help. Dorothy had nothing to do with the big mess. She was supposed to be in her bed sailing through the skies to Oz.

"Well, I'm Glenda, and I just sent you back to Kansas," I said.

Unfortunately, a child's ability to maneuver her parents into doing her work is far more magical than any power Glenda ever had. Meg's involuntary participation in the clean-up effort did nothing to deter her from making another big mess the next day. But when I called Dorothy to come back to Kansas, she was nowhere to be found.

"I'm not Dorothy," Meg said. "I'm the cyclone. And I've already faded away over the rainbow."

The airy sweetness of Glenda deteriorated into the practicality of Aunt Em. "You're just pretending, Meg," I said. "Now help me clean up."

Even though I dragged her back to earth, somehow I still ended up doing most of the work. So several days later when I heard Meg suggesting to a friend that they make yet another big mess, my disposition began to match that of the Wicked Witch of the West.

I called Meg to me and said, "Dorothy, if you make another big mess, I'm sending the Cowardly Lion in there home, and you're going to stay in your room all by yourself until you clean it up."

"No."

"All by myself?"

"Yes."

She scampered back to her room. "Let's not make a big mess," I heard her say. "A little mess will do."

Next year I'll be rooting for the witch.

Deluxe Decoys, Art Of A Louisiana Craftsman

MERAUX, La. — So you think a decoy is one of those plastic ducks you can buy at your hardware or sporting goods store? Those plastic impersonators don't even belong in the same marshes with hand-carved duck decoys! Decoy carving is an authentic native American folk art and Louisiana carver Roy LeGaux of Meraux ranks among the most skilled.

Decoy carving reached its zenith late in the last century, during the heyday of market gunning, when daily bags in the hundreds were commonplace. With the passage of bird and waterfowl conservation laws, decoy making delcined. Old hunting decoys are now in great demand as collectors' items. Reminders of another era, they are of great sentimental value to their owners.

LeGaux's contemporary birds are very different from these old working decoys, however. Authentically fullbodied, they are intricately carved and painstakingly painted.

LeGaux first tried his hand at carving some ducks for a hunting trip 15 years ago. He enjoyed the effort, though by his own admission the carving was clumsy. Encouraged by his teacher at Delgado College, LeGaux continued carving and refining his techniques.

A varied background of jobs gave this 37-year old craftsman the knowledge and skill needed to bring his creations to a highly developed art form. LeGaux once worked as a taxidermist, gaining invaluable anatomical information onbirds firsthand. "I'll tell you," he declares, "when you've skinned as many ducks as I have, you get to know how their body is put together."

Sign painting taught him the nuances of shading to get depth and perspective in his birds. Working only with oil-base paints and mineral spirits, LeGaux does not believe in using a base coating — he has found the raw wood absorbs the oil, leaving a natural soft sheen.

LeGaux's venture into fulltime carving was made possible by the thrifty planning of his wife, Elaine. "She knew I wanted to go into carving," he confides, "so without my knowledge, she started systematically saving a little from each check until she told me enough was put back to pay our bills for at least a year. With that assurance, I set up shop."

A large garage adjoining LeGaux's house serves as a workshop where, according to his creative mood, he wields chisels, knives, burning tools or scalpels to turn Tupelo gum blocks into finished birds so authentic looking that many people think he's still practicing taxidermy.

"When we had a booth set up for the Governor's Conference on Tourism, people would come by and look at the 12 or 15 ducks, then move on without comment.

"I told my wife, our seed and produce and sell it to suppliers more cheaply" because they did not have the overhead of having researched and developed the new variety.

"It may have been unethical, but it was not illegal" before the protection certificates were issued, Lamborn said.

As an All-American Selection of the United States seed industry, the Sugar Snap has become so popular with home gardeners that suppliers are hard pressed to keep up with demand. Although it is not being grown on a mass commercial basis, some grocery chains have managed to stock small supplies. They sell out quickly.

The new pea can be shelled, but most cooks prefer to use it whole, raw in salads or on relish plates, or cooked briefly, either by steaming or stir-frying in a small amount of oil. Brief cooking is essential to maintain its crispness and flavor.

Since 1930, the U.S. Patent Office has given legal protection to developers of asexually produced plants — those produced by budding and grafting, for example. But until the 1970 act was passed, developers of new varieties of sexually reproduced seeds had no way to control their sale once the seeds went on the market.

The act established the Plant Variety Protection Office in the Department of Agriculture to determine what plant seeds qualify as "new and novel" varieties, and empowered the office to issue Certificates of Protection.

A certificate gives the owner control over the use of that variety, somewhat like an inventor has control over his patented inventions.

At this writing, the office has issued 590 certificates after evaluating 940 applications.

A plant examiner uses a computer to help determine whether to issue a certificate. He feeds descriptions of each plant into the computer, which selects similar varieties.

Kenneth Evans, a plant variety examiner, said the forms are complicated. For example, try explaining whether a zinnia's anthocyanin is absent or not. He suggested backyard gardeners who think they have a new variety ask a botanist for help.

Bernard Lesee, director of the agency, said five or six laymen had applied for certificates, and one has been issued for a new variety of cowpea, similar to the black-eyed pea.

Lamborn said the Sugar Snap pea began "as a curiosity" in 1969, when he discovered a "rogue" pea, cut into it and "found the pod was thicker than usual."

Cuba. Carter's response, never publicly explained, was that the MiG-23s were not offensive weapons and therefore violated no Soviet pledge.

Submarines now have been added to the list of weapons being supplied to Cuba, for a purpose never made clear to Congress or the American people. The administration appears to have decided the submarines are not "offensive" within the meaning of the 1962 Soviet promise.

Yet, even old submarines pose grave dangers to the security of U.S.-controlled sea lanes into and around the Caribbean, particularly if the Cubans do today what the U.S. was strong enough to forbid them from doing almost 10 years ago. In 1970, the U.S. successfully delivered what amounted to an ultimatum against Soviet-Cuban construction of submarine pens equipped to service nuclear Soviet submarines.

The preponderant nuclear margin the U.S. then held over the Soviet Union has vanished. A similar ultimatum today would be horse-laughed out of the Kremlin. Nothing at all is being said about Cuba's two submarines or about the strong probability that some kind of sub base is being built for them.

To Moscow, that might look like appeasement and an invitation to continue what one eminent U.S. naval authority privately told us was "the creeping escalation of Soviet power in the Caribbean using the Cuban proxy." The real Cuba story may be switching from the jungles and deserts of Africa and Yemen to the backyard of America. That would be a chilling change of clime.

After 25 Years Still Good Justice And Bad Law

BY JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — Twenty-five years have passed since the May morning that Chief Justice Earl Warren settled into his chair and began to read an opinion he had written for the Court. "Brown vs. Board of Education of Topeka," he began. "These cases come to us from the states of Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia and Delaware..."

The reading did not take long. Unlike other landmark decisions from the Warren Court that ran on for 50 or 60 pages, the opinion in Brown was amazingly brief. It was amazing in another respect: The decision was unanimous. In the most controversial litigation of the century, Warren had been able to pull his fractious brothers together without a concurring or dissenting word.

Time enough has elapsed to examine Brown and its progeny without jubilation on the one hand or rancor on the other. What emerges, in my own view, is a series of anomalies. The Court created a dramatic new constitutional right, and then postponed its enjoyment. The Court was dealing with the highest level of law, but based its decision primarily upon psychological knowledge. The overriding theme of Brown (and of Brown II a year later) was that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional, but subsequent busing cases have traveled 180 degrees around the circle: Racial discrimination in public education is constitutional after all.

After 25 years, Brown still fits the description that some scholars gave it at the time: Good justice, bad law.

As a moral statement, Warren's opinion ranks with the Court's finest hours. At the time he wrote, racial segregation prevailed by law in 17 Southern states. The rule of apartheid applied not to schools alone. In Virginia, by way of example, Negroes also were banned from certain parks, playgrounds, libraries, colleges and universities. The code of racial discrimination governed streetcars, buses, restaurants, hotels, theaters, housing and jobs. Segregation affected every aspect of social and economic life. For white and black alike, there was no escaping the prison of law and custom.

The Brown case smashed the doors. With bewildering speed (or so it seemed to much of the South), the last vestiges of state-supported discrimination were swept from the statute books. The Civil Rights Act dismantled segregation in the private sector. The moral force put in motion by Brown swept everything in its path.

That was the theory. In practice it was rather a different story. As a matter of law, Brown was shockingly bad. The very pole star of constitutional construction is the intention of the framers and the understanding of the ratifiers. Warren ignored the pole star altogether. History, he said, was "inconclusive." Legal opinions ought to be supported by legal reasoning, but in Brown there was none. The Negro petitioners won their right to attend desegregated schools. Any other petitioners, winning any other right, would have had its exercise the next day. Ten years elapsed before desegregation was even well on its way.

In a newly published book from Oxford Press, "From Brown to Bakke," J. Harvie Wilkinson III provides this measured appraisal: "Brown may be the most important political, social, and legal event in American's twentieth-century history. Its greatness lay in the enormity of injustice it condemned, in the entrenched sentiment it challenged, in the immensity of law it both created and overthrew... The story of Brown is the story of revolution."

As a Southern editor, I myself denounced the decision as a palpable usurpation of power. The Court had not construed the Constitution; the Court had itself effectively amended the Constitution. The Court had taken from the states a power they had exercised constitutionally, with repeated judicial approval, for nearly 90 years.

These criticisms were as valid as they were vain. Brown became the supreme law of the land, and sooner than other regions the South learned to live with it.

Momentous as the decision was, it has produced no millennial brotherhood. Owing in part to the lunacies of racial-balance busing, racial consciousness is more than ever a factor in American life. Borwn has led us to quotas, to minorities in decimal-point fractions, to affirmative action and to "benign" racism. On balance, things are better. Whatever damage may have been done to the rule of law, the blindfolded goddess who carries the scales of justice has been well served.

Needs More Time To Study Injunction Request

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A federal judge said Friday that he needed more time to decide whether the University of North Carolina should be granted a preliminary injunction in connection with its suit against the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

U.S. District Court Judge Franklin T. Dupree Jr. extented a temporary restraining order that prevents HEW from cutting off or withholding funds to the 16-campus system until he decides on the injunction request.

After listening to almost four hours of arguments, Dupree said he needed more time to study briefs that had been filed in the case.

The restraining order had been scheduled to expire Friday. A preliminary injunction would be the next step to stop the threatened cutoff until the university's suit is resolved.

Dupree also delayed action on a federal request that North Carolina's lawsuit against HEW be moved from Raleigh to Washington.

Ten lawyers — five from each side — presented their cases as representatives of the university, HEW and civil rights groups watched.

Dupree gave no indication of when he would issue a ruling on the injunction or the transfer requests.

"I will try to issue a ruling sometime in the very near future," he said.

The university filed suit against HEW last month in an effort to end HEW's nine-year proceeding against the system over the system's desegregation plan.

Charles Morgan, a Washington lawyer hired by the university's board of governors, said HEW's request to end duplicated programs at nearby black and white campuses masks its true intent.

"What they really want is the merger of these institutions outright, but they don't ask for it now," Morgan said.

Later in the hearing, Robert Reinstein, a U.S. Justice Department lawyer, denied that HEW wanted schools merged.

UNC president William Friday attended the hearing and later said the extension was what he had expected.

"He's going to read all the documents, consider all this. You can't ask for any other time frame. He's very thorough," Friday said of Dupree.

Kidnaped Woman Escapes

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (UPI — The wife of wealthy Chicago and Palm Springs investor Harry Chaddick was kidnaped for $1 million ransom but managed to escape unharmed from her captors, one of whom was slain by authorities, it was disclosed Saturday.

Elaine Chaddick, 65, held for three days, was found walking in the desert by her husband and FBI agents Friday night. News of the abduction was withheld by authorities until Saturday.

Before his wife was located, a package containing $193,000 was dropped by Chaddick at a designated spot in an isolated desert wash northeast of Palm Springs Friday night.

A motorcyle rider who picked up the money was shot to death when he opened fire on FBI agents and other law enforcement officers nearby, the FBI reported. The money was recovered.

During the shootout near the drop site about 15 miles east of Twentynine Palms in San Bernardino County, two occupants of a camper, a man and a woman, also fired on authorities. They then fled on foot and eluded searchers during the night.

No FBI agents nor other law enforcement officers were hurt in the shootout.

The unidentified motorcycle rider's body was taken to the San Bernardino County coroner's office.

Mrs. Chaddick was kidnapped Tuesday about 5:15 p.m. from her Palm Springs home. She was talking to her husband in Chicago when a man entered the home and asked her to sign a petition. She hung up the phone without knowing she was about to be kidnapped at gunpoint.

FBI spokesman John Morrison said Chaddick, 77, later received an anonymous phone call advising him to return to his Palm Springs home immediately. He did so and then received a series of phone calls advising him to leave the ransom at the designated spot.

The original ransom demand was scaled down from $1 million to $193,000 in telephone negotiations between Chaddick and the kidnappers, the FBI spokesman said.

After Chaddick called the FBI, the effort to rescue his wife was organized with the cooperation of Palm Springs police and the sheriff's departments of Riverside and San Bernardino counties.

Julie Baumer, Palm Springs city public information officer, said Chaddick was driven by FBI agents to the Yucca Valley, the general area of the money drop, and was the first to greet his wife when she was found Friday night walking in the desert.

Mrs. Chaddick, who came through the ordeal unharmed and in apparent good spirits, said her captors left her alone on a desert plateau while they went to pick up the ransom.

'Something's got to be wrong.' So, I made a sign 'Wood-Carving' and that did it! People declared they had thought the birds were stuffed, not carved. Then, comments started coming in like crazy."

For every bird he carves, LeGaux starts with a detailed pattern of the side and top view. After tracing the pattern on a block of poplar wood, he uses a band saw to cut out the rough shape, then starts the carving process with precision knives.

Every minute detail of each feather is drawn in, then outlined with a razorblade knife in graduating depths. This difference in feel, further enhanced by hairline burning, gives movement and life to the bird.

To ensure accuracy, this self-taught artisan uses a rather unorthodox method. First, he shoots and freezes a bird. Then, when ready to paint, he partially thaws the bird, pins and places it into position and uses this "real decoy" as a model.

Each bird is signed and purchase records are meticulously kept. LeGaux's favorite bird is the hanging full-bodied green-winged teal, but he enjoys the challenge of trying different types.

Like other modern day decoy carvers, Roy LeGaux admires the work of his predecessors — men who wielded axe, hatchet and pocket knife to turn cypress knees or blocks of lumber into effective duck lures for hunters. There is a growing interest in preserving, recording and collecting these early Louisiana decoys. And Legaux, along with several of his fellow carvers, is working now to establish a decoy museum for the preservation and display of examples of this native American folk art.

'Poor Little Rich Girl' Heiress Barbara Hutton Dead At 66

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Barbara Hutton, the F.W. Woolworth heiress known in childhood as the "poor little rich girl," has died of cardiac arrest, a spokeswoman for Cedars-Sinai Medical Center said.

She died a 66-year-old jet-setter, seven times married and three times a princess — yet a symbol of the cliche that money doesn't always buy happiness.

She said it herself once: "I hadn't a very happy childhood. Though I had millions of dollars, I had no mother and no home."

In later life, one marriage after another failed — sometimes at great expense to her. Her mates included Cary Grant. They were all rich or titled. None was born an American.

In recent years, her health declined and she shied from publicity.

On Friday, she was brought to Cedars-Sinai and pronounced dead on arrival at 5:10 p.m., according to hospital spokeswoman Tess Griffin.

The oft-hospitalized millionairess had been released from the hospital only eight days before, having been treated for pneumonia.

Paramedics were summoned to her penthouse home at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel at 4:19 p.m. Friday, and arrived three minutes later, but were unable to revive her, a spokesman for the Beverly Hills Fire Department said.

Miss Hutton was born in New York Nov. 14, 1912. Her parents were Franklyn Laws Hutton and the former Edna Woolworth, a daughter of the F.W. Woolworth, who had founded the Woolworth chain.

Miss Hutton's mother died when she was five — leaving her a clear future as a wealthy woman, but dooming her childhood to one of being shuttled from relative to relative, then from school to school.

At 18, she made her debut at a lavish supper dance. At 19, she was introduced at the Court of St. James, and at 20 she married her first husband — Alexis Mdivani, who claimed the title of "prince" of Georgia in old Russia.

A few months later, she came into her $20 million inheritance.

It had been a romantic courtship. Her family fought it by sending her on a round-the-world trip, but Mdivani pursued her to Bangkok.

In 1935, she divorced him in Reno, Nev., charging extreme cruelty. Later that year, Mdivani was killed in an automobile crash.

One day after the divorce, she married wealthy Danish nobleman Count Kurt Haugwitz-Reventlow. That was her longest marriage, ending in divorce six years later after the birth of a son, Lance.

In 1942, Miss Hutton married British-born actor Cary Grant. She would later say he was the husband "I loved most. He was so sweet, so gentle." But she said his acting career got in the way, and the marriage dissolved after three years.

Her fourth husband was Lithuanian Prince Igor Troubetskoy, whom she married in 1947. That marriage lasted until 1951.

Then came the briefest marriage, to Porfirio Rubirosa, an international playboy and the Dominican Republic's minister to France. They married in 1953, but separated and divorced after 73 days.

In 1955, Miss Hutton married German tennis ace Baron Gottfried Von Cramm. They were divorced in 1960. Her final marriage was to Laotian Prince and abstract artist Raymond Doan Vinh in 1964. They separated in 1966.

Miss Hutton was in and out of hospitals for nearly half of her life. In 1949, she was reported critically ill in Europe and down to 88 pounds after four operations in three years for intestinal obstructions.

Miss Hutton underwent cataract surgery in Beverly Hills in 1967, but was said to be bedridden and nearly blind two years later, when she spent Christmas in a $2,500-a-day hotel suite in San Francisco.

She underwent major hip surgery here in 1971 after tripping over a carpet in Rome and delaying treatment of the injury.

After the most recent hospitalization, on March 26, newspaper reports said she had consumed little for three years but Coca-Cola. Miss Griffin said, "She's certainly not on a diet of Coca Cola. As for anything that happened before, I can't say, because we don't intrude on patients."

Her body was being flown to New York for funeral arrangements, Miss Griffin said.

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A state representative who is a Lumbee Indian said Friday that the appointment of a non-Indian educator to the chancellorship at Pembroke State University will set education back for centuries.

Rep. Horace Locklear, D-Robeson, also called for the resignation of University of North Carolina President William Friday because of the appointment. Pembroke State had only Lumbee Indian students for many years.

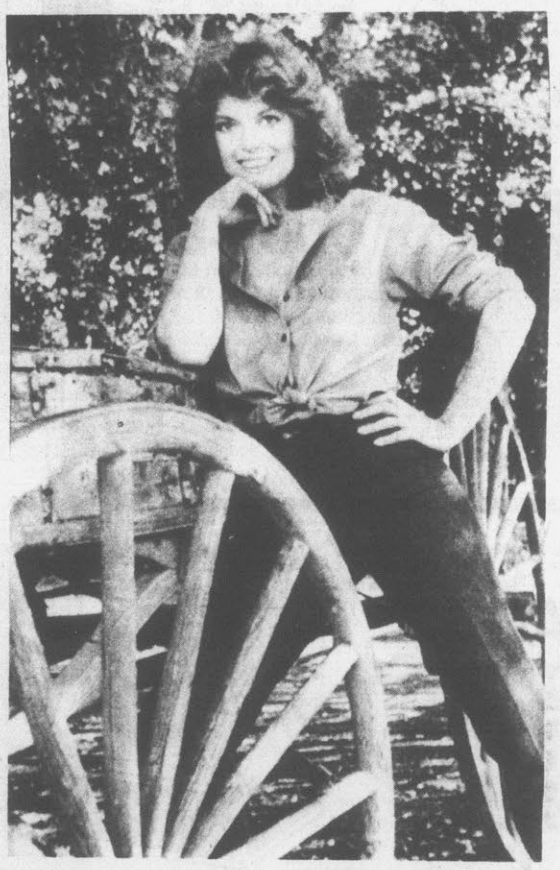

The UNC Board of Governors unanimously chose Dr. Paul R. Givens, 55, to become the next chancellor of Pembroke State. The action came at the board's meeting in Chapel Hill on Friday. Givens will succeed retiring Pembroke Chancellor English Jones. Givens is vice-president for academic affairs at Milliken University in Decatur, Ill.

Locklear said he and many people associated with Pembroke State supported the appointment of Dr. James B. Chavis, vice chancellor for student affairs, for the chancellor's job, Chavis is a Lumbee Indian.

He said Friday told him that Chavis was not chosen because the university Board of Trustees did not unanimously support him.

Locklear said the choice of Givens would lead to abandonment of Pembroke State by the community and would cause a decline in enrollment.

About 30 Indians walked out of the meeting of the Board of Governors when Givens name was placed in nomination. The state director of the Commission on Indian Affairs called the selection "a slap in the Indians' face."

BACK IN THE SADDLE — Actress Linda Gray of the television series "Dallas," strikes a modeling pose recently at her ranch outside Los Angeles. Linda, who always wanted to become an actress, compromised with her family who opposed it, and became a model. After years of successful modeling where she met her husband Ed Thrasher, a photographer and art director, Linda got her first big break, a guest starring role in "Marcus Welby, M.D." (AP Laserphoto)

Bluegrass Music Man Flatt Dead

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Lester Flatt, whose nasal-voiced singing and peppy guitar style epitomized the pulsating spirit of bluegrass music for nearly 40 years, is dead.

Flatt, who teamed with banjo player Earl Scruggs to produce songs like the theme of the television show "The Beverly Hillbillies," died of heart failure Friday afternoon at Baptist Hospital. He was 64.

Flatt and Scruggs, who joined forces in 1948, were best-known for "Foggy Mountain Breakdown," which they played during a chase scene in the movie "Bonnie and Clyde," and for "The Ballad of Jed Clampett" from "The Beverly Hillbillies."

Even though they broke up in 1969 during a highly publicized dispute over musical taste, Flatt and Scruggs were on reasonably good terms when he died.

"I hold nothing against him," Flatt said in an interview in February.

And Scruggs, seemingly syncronizing his feelings like he would have harmonized their music, said Friday: "I had nothing to hold against him."

Explaining the breakup, Scruggs said shortly after Flatt's death: "I wanted to update the work I was capable of doing. I had to form my own group."

Flatt, a slow-talking, easy-going entertainer who usually wore a white cowboy hat, had been hospitalized since April 23. He suffered a brain hemorrhage late last year and had undergone open heart surgery in 1975.

"The first time I saw Lester and Earl Scruggs it changed my life," said John Hartford, composer of "Gentle On My Mind." "I still haven't gotten over it. It was the most beautiful music I'd ever heard.

Bill Monroe, father of the bluegrass sound, said, "It's a sad day for bluegrass music. He was a wonderful man when he worked for me. He done his work good and he was always truthful. That goes a long way with me. It's a sad thing but the Lord knows best. I think his soul is safe with the Lord."

Flatt and Scruggs are credited with preserving pure bluegrass music and spearheading its resurgence in the 1960s.

ECU Summer Theater Is Returning This Summer

TALKS ABOUT SUMMER THEATER . . . Preston Sisk, General Manager of the Playhouse Theater and coordinator of the ECU Summer Theater, provided details on the two musicals to be presented in July and August this summer as the ECU Summer Theater reopens after a closure of several years.

After six sad summers without it, it's coming back. Edgar R. Loessin, chairman of the Department of Drama and Speech, East Carolina University, on Wednesday announced that East Carolina Summer Theater, an entertainment landmark that for years enlivened Greenville summers will be returning this summer.

The Summer Theater was closed temporarily in 1973, and each summer since, numerous patrons of the warm weather theater have expressed hopes it would be returning.

General Manager of the Playhouse Theater and coordinator of the ECU Summer Theater Preston Sisk announced that two Broadway musical revues will be presented. "Both will be staged by Producer-Director Edgar Loessin," Sisk said.

The musicals are "Starting Here, Starting Now," and "Side by Side by Sondheim."

"Each of the two will be presented for six evening performances plus a single matinee performance," Sisk commented. "All performances will be in the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall, which has a seating capacity of something less than 300, so I it will be necessary for patrons to think of making their reservations in advance."

"Starting Here, Starting Now," with lyrics by Richard Maltby, Jr. and music by David Shire, will open July 30 and run through August 4, with curtain time at 8:15 p.m. each evening. The matinee performance will be at 2:15 p.m. on Wednesday, August 1.

The second musical, "Side by Side by Sondheim," with music and lyrics by Broadway's Stephen Sondheim, as well as music by Leonard Bernstein, Mary Rodgers, Richard Rodgers, and July Styne, and continuity by Ned Sherrin, will be performed August 6 through 11, with 8:15 p.m. curtain time. The matinee will be Wednesday, August 8 at at 2:15 p.m.

In urging early purchase of tickets, Loessin points out that "in past years we've played to audiences nearly three times as large as we'll be able to seat this summer."

Tickets for the two shows are priced at $10, a savings of $4 over the single ticket price of $7 for each individual show.

Tickets may be ordered by calling 757-6390 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, or by writing to: East Carolina Summer Theater, East Carolina University, Greenville, 27834.

RALEIGH — In conjunction with observing National Historic Preservation Week in North Carolina during May 6-12, a dozen outstanding instances of preservations have been compiled by Dr. Larry E. The dozen chosen by Dr. Tise are:

Strings Festival At Rose High School Today

A Strings Festival by students in all the Greenville City Schools and students from A. G. Cox and Pace Academy is being held at 3 p.m. today in the gymnasium of Rose High School. There is no admission charge and the public is invited and encouraged to bring children.

The Festival program has been prepared jointly by three string teachers — Clauia Shoaf, Brenda Harrison and Candace Dixon. The three will share conducting honors.

The current strings program in the schools is an outgrowth of the Strings Project, founded several years ago by Dr. Rodney Schmidt of the School of Music, East Carolina University and is based on the Suzuki method of teaching strings.

For today's Festival concert, students in grades 7 through 12 will be playing various string instruments as members of Greenville City Schools Orchestra. The second part of the concert will feature younger children in grades three through six who will perform as soloists and also as an ensemble supported by the orchestra.

The opening portion of the concert will feature the older orchestra members in three compositions — Antonio Correlli's "Concerto Grosso;" "Concerto Ripiano" by Antonio Vivaldi; and "Andante" and "Allegro" by Mozart.

The elementary string players will perform "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star;" "Long, Long Ago;" the "Hunter's Chorus;" "Allegro" by Fiocco; and Lully's "Gavotte."

ONE OF THREE CONDUCTORS . . . Claudia Shoaf, standing, conducts members of the Greenville Schools String Orchestra in preparation for the Strings Festival concert in the Rose High gymnasium at 3 p.m. today. Young and advanced players from the city schools, a county school and Pace Academy will be performing, and there is no admission fee. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By June Parker

Sheppard Memorial Library has recently received several new books dealing with children and family problems. The first book is DEAR DR. SALK: ANSWERS TO YOUR QUESTIONS ABOUT YOUR FAMILY by Dr. Lee Salk, child psychologist and author of several best sellers. Dr. Salk discusses many of the most difficult questions and issues that arise within families. He covers such topics as planning family size, adoption, divorce, child custody, working parents, discipline, childhood fears, responsible attitudes toward money and personal property, and the need for privacy. The book is written in a question and answer format dealing with specific problems that real families have brought to the attention of Dr. Salk over the years.

YOUR CHILD CAN READ AND YOU CAN HELP: A BOOK FOR PARENTS by Dr. Jane Ervin is a comprehensive, well-organized book that describes ways parents can help their child to read. She describes the essential role parents play before their child even goes to school by explaining the kind of environment, experiences, and guidance that a child needs in his earliest years in order to be prepared to learn how to read. She recommends activities and games parents can do with their child in order to develop specific abilities and skills. Once the child is school-age, she shows parents how they can evaluate and reinforce the school's reading program. The book also includes a set of lessons for teaching a child to read, starting with the basics of vowel and consonant sounds and sounds and word syllables and progressing to the comprehension of short paragraphs. This book is a valuable tool for parents who want to improve their child's reading skills and appreciation of books.

The last book LEARNING DISABILITIES: A FAMILY AFFAIR by Betty B. Osman explores ways parents can help their children with learning problems. Betty Osman, an educational therapist who diagnoses and treats children with learning disabilities, explains the effect that the entire family has upon a child's learning problem. She focuses on the three most important areas of a child's life — home, school, and social situations while recommending that all persons who come into close contact with children learn how to recognize the early signs and symptoms of learning disabilities; that cooperation among teachers and parents is of primary importance; and that parents should learn when to intervene for a child and when to let the child handle his own problems when dealing with his own peers. One strong point of the book is that it covers a wide range of problems, causes, and treatments rather than presenting one faddish, simplistic answer for dealing with a learning disabled child. The book concludes with an appendix listing resources, diagnostic tests and tools, and a bibliography for further reading.

During the past year he was featured as Brass Clinician-Soloist at the N.C. Eastern Regional All-State Band Competition at East Carolina University.

Ayden Theater Workshop Is Presenting 'Finian's Rainbow'

AYDEN — The Ayden Theater Workshop will present the musical comedy "Finian's Rainbow" on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, May 17, 18 and 19 in the Ayden-Grifton High School Auditorium. Curtain time is 8 p.m. each of the three evenings.

Tickets are priced at $1 and are available at the Ayden Town Hall, from workshop members and at the door prior to performance. A cast of some 50 community people are in the show, directed by Doug Mitchell and Katherine Burke of the drama and music departments at Ayden-Grifton.

Don Watson has the role of Finian McLonergan; Margaret Joyner is Sharon McLonergan; Chris Phillips portrays Woody Mahoney; Mike McDermott is Og, the leprecaun; Pat McDermott is Susan the Silent; and Marcus Carraway is Senator Rawkins.

A popular choice of both amateur and professional groups since its initial success on Broadway in 1947, "Finian's Rainbow" relates the story of Finian McLonergan, an Irish immigrant to Rainbow Valley, Missitucky, whose fanciful schemes upset the social and economic order of the community.

A spirited musical full of contagion and romance, the score is notable for songs such as "How Are Things In Glocca Morra?," "When the Idle Poor Become the Idle Rich;" "Old Devil Moon;" "If This Isn't Love;" and "Necessity."

"Finian's Rainbow" is the fourth production of the Ayden Theater Workshop, which is funded by the Town of Ayden and the Grassroots Arts Fund of the North Carolina Arts Council."

REHEARSALS FOR FINIAN'S RAINBOW . . . are underway at Ayden-Grifton High School. The musical is to be presented at 8 p.m. on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, May 17, 18 and 19. Tickets are priced at $1. Here, a segment of the big cast is shown with the three lead players— Don Watson (extreme left) as Finian McLonergan; and seated, Margaret Joyner and Chris Phillips, as Sharon McLoneragan and Woody Mahoney, respectively. PBS Specials

CHAPEL HILL — Of three specials being aired over UNC-TV, Channel 25, Greenville this week, two deal with Oriental nations and one features music of Appalachia.

— At 9 p.m. Tuesday, May 15, dance, music and opera drawn from the rich folk history and geographic diversity of The People's Republic of China will be the subject of a 90-minute special, "From China to Us." Included will be a traditional Peking Opera, "Monkey Makes Havoc in Heaven," based on the Chinese myth of a wily monkey king who uses his ingenuity to outwit a pompous emperor; and the dramatic "Red Ribbon Dance."

The 150-member troupe performed at several places in the United States during last July and August, and the special was taped during its appearance in Minneapolis.

— On Thursday, May 17, at 9 p.m., the first of a television series that will encompass a broad look at several Asian societies and the forces that shape them will be shown.

While the program shows a considerable amount of the natural beauty and exotic qualities of each nation in the series, focus will primarily be directed to the historical, economic, sociological, religious, political and artistic aspects of each nation.

Nations and city enclaves to be covered in the weekly series are Indonesia, Thailand, the Philippines, Malaysia, Hong Kong, Singapore, and China. China will be the subject of a two-part special within the series.

— At 10:30 p.m. on Friday, May 18, foot-stomping, fast-strumming, hard-driving instrumentals topped with intense vocals will create "Appalachian Moods," a special featuring well known groups and individuals.

Among performers to be seen on "Appalachian Moods" will be the Black Mountain Bluegrass Boys, the Wild Turkey String Band, and folk singer Christine Niemann. They will bring to life a blend of music styles including bluegrass, traditional old-time mountain music, and contemporary folk songs.

Today's show is filmed using an outdoor set, and includes a fashion show in two parts — Margie White, manager of Galleon Esplanade in Nags Heads showing fashions; and Hawaiian fashions filmed by Ms. Currie. Both parts will be shown on slides.

Another guest is Bill Bloeser who grills steaks using the high flames outdoors method; and the regular butcher demonstrates a "quick stroganoff."

The "Hospitality House" show for Sunday, May 20 will also be a half-hour show and will feature scenes from the musical "Showboat."

Boston Opera Housed In Ornate New Home

By JOHN J. MULLINS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The room where the performing seals lived, complete with a tank for swimming and an elevator to bring them up to the stage, has been converted into a shops-dressing room-office storage area.

The concrete wall that filled the wide, towering proscenium arch has been removed.

The Savoy Theater on Washington Street has been converted again, this time into a home for Sarah Caldwell's Opera Company of Boston. The company has staged its productions at the Orpheum Theater.

The Opera Company bought the Savoy last October from Sack Theaters Inc., the movie-house chain, for $885,000. Sack holds the mortgage on the Savoy but Thomson J. Smillie, Opera Company manager, said the company could own the theater outright by coming up with about $600,000.

He thinks it is possible to do that by November.

The ornate, red and gold and tan Savoy was built in 1928 for $5 million as the B.F. Keith Memorial Theater, a tribute to the man, who, with Edward Albee, is credited with founding vaudeville in America.

It would be "the most beautiful playhouse in the world," Albee said, and the beauty remains.

There are mirrored walls and tapestried walls, great crystal and brass chandeliers from France, Ionic columns of Italian marble and niches for statues. A staircase sweeps up to the balcony from the rear of the interior lobby.

The architect was "obviously influenced by the Paris Opera House," Smillie said.

The Keith Memorial was operated for one season as a vaudeville playhouse and then fell victim to the Depression and movies, including "talkies." It became a movie theater, and "it's been a movie house for 50 years," Smillie said.

It was renamed the Savoy, and eventually Sack converted it into two movie theaters. The concrete-block wall put in to fill the proscenium arch was adorned with a screen, and moviegoers sat in the orchestra to watch the film projected on it.

A ramp was built on the stage behind the concrete wall, and another screen erected for a second theater, with the audience sitting at right angles to the moviegoers out front. The last film was shown in September.

The primary project in the $205,000 renovation was ripping out the first five rows of seats in the orchestra and drilling through the concrete floor to expand the orchestra pit capacity from 30 musicians to 110, "a Wagnerian-sized orchestra."

Part of the renovation completed in March was reconverting apartments on one side of the stage to their original use as dressing rooms and to administrative offices.

"Back stage and under the orchestra is literally a small city of apartments... built for vaudeville actors," Smillie said. Touring actors lived there with their families while playing the Keith Memorial.

Here they found a nursery and the seal room, Smillie said. These are being converted into such things as workshops, costume shops and dressing rooms.

"They'll all be pressed into service," he said, but added, "We won't have seals."

ECU's Dr. Charles Sullivan Edits Folklore Newsletter

ECU News Bureau

"The Children's Folklore Newsletter," a new quarterly publication sponsored by the Children's Folklore Section of the American Folklore Society, is being edited by Dr. Charles Sullivan, III, of the East Carolina University Department of English.

"Children's folklore is a young, vigorous and rapidly growing field," Sullivan commented. "Those who work in it wish to record and study the sayings and customs of children, much the same way traditional folklore has been studied and preserved."

Folklorists believe that a great deal can be learned about the values and impulses of a cultural, ethnic or national group by examining its folkways and tales.

Each issue of the newsletter will feature a glossary of terminology used by children identified by age and geographical location.

Sullivan himself contributes news in the current issue of a political jingle about President Carter now popular among Greenville schoolchildren.

A "Notes and Queries" column in the newsletter is provided as a forum in which folklore scholars may share research interests and solicit similar findings by persons in various parts of the nation and carries announcements of forthcoming conferences on aspects of folklore.

Dr. Sullivan is an alumnus of the State University of New York at Albany and holds DA and PhD degrees in folklore and mythology from the University of Oregon.

He is an assistant professor at ECU, where he teaches courses in Northern European mythology and American folklore. Among his research interests have been literary fantasy and science fiction as well as traditional and modern folk legends.

Tale Of A Strange Adventurer

STEDE BONNET — GENTLEMAN PIRATE. By Norman C. Pendered. Manteo, Times Printing Company, Inc. Paper, illustrated with drawings by Rosa Griffin. 147 pages, $4.95.

ECU's Dr. Norman C. Pendered makes something of a specialty of writing about pirates. Earlier, he authored a book and several articles on Blackbeard. Now he has turned his interest to a high seas robber of different, finer qualities, Barbados born (Major) Stede Bonnet.

Despite Pendered's uncertainly of approach — he mixes passages of known history with ones incorporating fictional conjecture, this small volume turns out to be an absorbing tale of adventure and history laced with oblique insights into the life of a complex man of changing moods and character.

It was not until he was well established as a leading citizen, a successful plantation owner and operator, married with small children, that Stede Bonnet obeyed the call to a different mode of life. "The 'Gentleman Pirate' paid with his life for a few precious months of freedom before he was captured and hanged at Charleston, South Carolina in 1718," Pendered writes, "but for one brief, glorious period in his life, Major Stede Bonnet lived life as he wished . . ."

One of the intriguing, and perhaps unanswerable questions about Bonnet is that of motivation — what would lead a man, respected and established, into the perils of a swashbuckling life that held better than an even chance for the eventual infamy of death on the gallows?

Pendered provides a few clues, but perhaps wisely does not overplay speculation in the absence of firm facts. "One thing seems certain: as he became an adult Stede Bonnet appeared to be lacking in certain masculine traits in character. He was by no means the manly man he desired to be." And again, "Perhaps there was some truth to the rumor that he took up piracy because he was unhappily wed . . . and chose this means to escape the bonds of matrimony."

Preparations for becoming outfitted for piracy, Bonnet's excursions to the coastal mainland, his successes and failures, the partnership with Blackbeard and Bonnet's intense dislike for the ungentlemanly qualities Blackbeard possessed, and the capture and trial of Bonnet are all well chronicled by Pendered based on extensive research.

Pendered has succeeded in giving an excellent view of this unhappy man and the times in which he lived. The book will have wide appeal to young and adult readers. Hopefully, it will serve to trigger Pendered (or some other author) to attempt a more perceptive study of this strange, tortured man.

Entertaining Tales About Tobacco

TALES OF THE TOBACCO COUNTRY. By Thomas A. Williams. Greenville. Era Press. Illustrated by Dale Verzaal. 142 pages. Paper, $6.95. Hardcover, $10.95. (Available at The Book Barn, or by mail from Era Press, Box 1673, Greenville, N. C., 27834. Add 50 cents for mail orders).

Anyone who likes a potpourri of old and new tales, history, poetry and comedy, all related to tobacco, that aromatic weed, will find much pleasure in Dr. Williams' quoted and original material.

A farm boy native of the tobacco country of Georgia, Williams has a deep-rooted nostalgia for bygone tobacco days, plus the ability to write well and to choose judiciously from other material.

Dale Verzaal's illustrations are excellent, and the book is a fine example of bookmaking with large margins and an attractive format.

Some of the material, while not relating directly to the cultivation, harvesting, sale or use of tobacco, has a valid kinship to rural life on tobacco farms in the South — especially in pre-television days.

A collection of spooky stories in "Of Graveyards and Ghosts" falls within this category; as does Williams' sensitive evocation of initiation into a Southern ritual told in "On The Trail of the Coon."

While many readers may already be acquainted with the amusing story of English author Charles Dickens' encounter with indiscriminate spitting by "gentlemen" of the New World — an experience that explains "Why Charles Dickens' New Fur Coat Turned Brown," Williams introduces us to another Englishman whose plight was more lamentable.

"The Adventures of Ebenezer Cooke, Gent." is taken from an account in an old publication with the title: "The Sot-Weed Factor, or, A Voyage to Maryland. A Satyr in which is described the Laws, Government, Courts, and Constitution of the Country; and also the Buildings, Feast, Frolics, Entertainments and Drunken Humours of the Inhabitants of that Part of America."

Boiled down to simpler terms, Cooke's long poem is a smug justification written by a dandy who didn't make it big in tobacco in the new land, but who eventually "condescended" to return to live among the American barbarians. On the second attempt, he opted for a career in law, in which he was successful.

Cooke also became the Poet Laurette of Maryland and wisely refrained from unduly ruffling his new countrymen with the acid tones and snobbishness of his earlier writings.

In "Tobacco Poets" Williams selects samplings of poetry indicative both of praise and condemnation of the weed in the years its use was becoming the rage in England and in Europe.

One anti-tobacco poet versified: — "It taints the breath, the blood it dries; It burns the head, it blinds the eyes; It dries the lungs, scourgeth the lights . . ." In contrast, there's praise by the poet who rhapsodized: "Tis a friend to the distress'd, Tis a comforter in need; It is social, soothing, blest; It has fragrance, force, and zest: Then hail the kingly weed'"

"Tales of The Tobacco Country" comes at a time when new battle lines are being sharply drawn over the centuries old question — "is it good or evil?"

Whatever one's inclination is on the issue, chances are the average reader will find considerable entertainment in the colorful collection of tobacco lore and history put together by Williams.

Quake Hits Maine

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — For the second time in two months, southern Maine has recorded a minor earthquake.

Friday's quake registered only 2.3 on the Richter scale and occurred around Bath and Wiscasset, about the same area that felt a 3.96 quake on April 17. Dr. Edward Chiburis, assistant director of the Weston Observatory in Massachusetts, said Friday's quake was considered an aftershock of the earlier one. The Sagadahoc County Sheriff's Department in Bath said it wasn't even aware of the latest tremor.

Early Indians Had Cavities

BY DICK WEST

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Back in the days before somebody invented junk food, young American Indians lived on what consumers now think of as "natural" ingredients.

No pies or cakes. No ice cream and soda pop. No Twinkies or Tootsie Rolls. Not even any fruit, melons and honey. About the only sweets in their diet were berries and wild grapes.

And was the gladsome cry of "Look, Ma, no cavities!" heard throughout the land?

Not so often as one would suspect.

Despite the absence of the sugary goop that gets blamed for much of today's dental decay, a lot of Indian kids had rotten teeth.

Archeological studies of Indian populations residing in this country before the arrival of Columbus show that as many as 60 percent of the children had cavities.

The research on prehistoric Indian skeletal remains was conducted over a 17-year period by Dr. Lucile St. Hoyme, an assistant curator at the National Museum of National History here.

In presenting her findings in a report to the American Association of Physical Anthropologists, she does not interpret the discovery as shedding any light on whether, or to what extent, sugar causes tooth decay.

She merely points out that Indians had dental problems before European immigrants began introducing them to food items currently viewed as bad for teeth.

Something, obviously, was causing their cavities, but Miss St. Hoyme believes life style was more to blame than diet.

She notes in the report that when groups of roving hunters began settling down in permanent villages, they were exposed to increased health hazards.

Poor sanitation and greatest risk of contagion, among other factors, gave village children a higher disease rate than was indicated by her examination of the bones of earlier, nomadic Indians.

Even when they recovered, childhood illnesses interfered with tooth formation and left them with defective enamel. Thus, they "grew up to become cavity-prone adults," she says.

One of her colleagues said Indians of that period "didn't have any dental care, in our sense of the word."

Toothpicks were used when pieces of meat got stuck between the teeth, and some individuals may have had cavities in the front teeth filled with a mixture of ground fish bone and stone, he said. But the motivation was cosmetic rather than hygenic.

New Voices Rise Up

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alexander Ginzburg, the exiled Soviet dissident, says no authority can crush the human rights protest movement in his homeland because new voices always rise up to replace any that are silenced.

The movement is "unstoppable," he told a congressional commission set up to monitor compliance with human rights provisions of the Helsinki Accords.

"No matter how many people they put into prison, no matter how many people are put into exile, the number of people who speak out always remains the same," Ginzburg said.

"The numbers always will remain the same because people will always be coming up to take their places," he said.

"I'm glad to announce that despite all the arrests, the Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group is actively continuing its work, that new members have joined and that our arrests have not deterred them," Ginzburg said.

He asked for support for those who continue working in the movement, especially those who are not well known in the West.

Ginzburg, 42, is one of five Soviet political prisoners who were exchanged last month for two Soviet spies. He spoke in Russian and his remarks were translated by an interpreter.

He said his release is in no way a signal the Soviets are softening their attitude toward political dissidents.

"Some people try to represent this simple human gesture as an improvement in the general situation," he said.

"If one saves a drowning person does that mean the condition of everyone else is improved?" he asked.

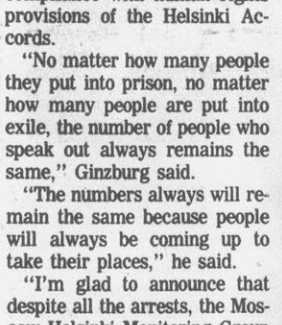

He said that when he entered a "special regime" prison camp last year, after his conviction of anti-Soviet agitation, he found conditions were worse than those which some dissidents had been imprisoned for exposing.

He said most prisoners develop such serious illnesses as tuberculosis and heart disease, and he complained that medical attention is inadequate or nonexistent.

Noting that he is not a military specialist, he said he has no opinion on the new strategic arms limitation treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union other than that "I do not trust the Soviet Union."

The Philippine Islands were transferred from Spain to the United States in 1899.

Kinston Men Set World Tennis Playing Record

KINSTON, N.C. (AP) — Two Kinston men braved rain storms and 80-degree weather to pass the world's record for tennis playing at 11:48 a.m. Friday.

Ricky Tolston, 26, and Jeff Sutton, 23, volleyed for 102 hours and 48 minutes to top the old record set by two Austrians. They were still playing late Friday afternoon.

In addition to earning contributions for the American Cancer Society by their play, the two are trying to get their names entered in the Guiness Book of World Records for the longest continuous playing of tennis by two persons.

The pair began the marathon at 5 a.m. Monday and were allowed five-minute rests every hour under the Guiness guidelines. Tolston and Sutton let their breaks accumulate over the hours to allow for longer breaks. The most sleep either has gotten during the ordeal is about one hour.

They have survived on a special diet of vitamins and protein and consume several quarts of a special drink daily.

The unfavorable weather the Kinston area has experienced the past few days failed to hinder the players' efforts. They played through several rainstorms.

When the sun shines, Tolston and Sutton take refuge beneath canopies that are suspended over the court so they don't get sunburned.

Both say they plan to do "a lot of celebrating" over thier accomplishment — after they get some sleep.

Needed: Volunteens

Teen volunteers are presently being recruited to assist Greenville agencies and programs this summer. Volunteers between the ages of 15 and 19 are needed to work in such fields as health services (candy striper, hospital aide), swimming instruction, recreation, education (tutoring), libraries (librarian's aide), mental health, boy scouts, elderly programs, special populations, and office work.

The Volunteer Program is a summer career exploration and leisure time program sponsored by the Greenville Office of Volunteer Services under the Recreation and Parks Department and the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service.

For more information about the volunteer program or to request an application, contact Nancy Harrington, coordinator of Volunteer Services at 752-4137 or write her at P.O. Box 202, Greenville, N.C. 27834.

The volunteer program has been conducted in Pitt County since 1976 and each summer has placed teens in helping roles from one to thirty hours of service weekly.

Volunteers fill out an application which provides information on interests and skills and possible placement preferences. After placement, they receive notification of a date and time following the closing of school to report to their agency assignment.

Hours of service are negotiated between the volunteer and the agency. Following the completion of the summer volunteer services and prior to the opening of school, a recognition ceremony is held and volunteers receive certificates for completion of their duties.

Adelle Moos, director of Volunteer Services at Pitt Memorial Hospital, says, "Teenage volunteers play an integral role in the hospital summer auxiliary program. We look forward to having these youths serve their community through us in the months ahead."

Gases Tracked

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — Gases releasd by the volcano, La Soufriere, on the Caribbean island of St. Vincent, are being tracked through the stratosphere by satellite to the delight of scientists, who say the eruptions may provide them a rare opportunity to study the distribution of aerosols from a single point.

Tragic Story Of Burned Out Youth

CHICAGO (AP) — He was 19 years old when he broke a window on the 40th floor of the 100-story John Hancock Center and plunged to his death, but his father said Jerry Bourdosis had been like "the living dead" for the past three years.

George Bourdosis, a Circuit Court bailiff, said his son, who jumped to his death Wednesday, was burned out on drugs.

"For three years, Jerry was like the living dead. Now he's finally at peace," said Jerry's father.

Jerry was buried Saturday.

His parents told Chicago Tribune columnist Jeff Lyon that Jerry was smoking marijuana when he was a high school freshman, that he took anything to get high, and finally discovered angel dust, or PCP.

His parents said Jerry began acting crazy. During the televised funeral service for Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn., his parents said, Jerry leaped to his feet.

"I have to protect President Kennedy," he announced and ran outside, according to the account. He came back dragging a cardboard box which he had found in a vacant lot. "That's for the president," he said, and knelt down to guard the box.

"He would have hallucinations," his father said. "Sometimes they would come a week after he took the drug. There's no telling with that stuff. I tried to get through to him but I couldn't. His mind was fogged."

The elder Bourdosis said Jerry began threatening suicide. He was hospitalized for three months after trying to starve himself to death and had to be fed intravenously.

He got out in January, his parents said, and went to live in a flophouse. His father said he took food and cigarettes to his son every day but most of the time Jerry didn't talk.

Bourdosis made arrangements for another stay at the hospital, but Jerry refused to go inside. That was Tuesday night.

Sometime the next day when the family left for work, Jerry dressed and rode downtown to the Hancock Center.

On his body, police found a slip of paper with the name "Debra" on it. She was a fellow drug addict from the flophouse.

Killed In Ambush

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — A shot apparently fired by a sniper from ambush killed a prominent Myrtle Beach businessman as he was driving away from his home, authorities said.

A bullet believed fired from a high-powered weapon struck the van of Roy Lowry Friday morning, pierced his upper right chest, then tore a hole in the side of the vehicle.

Lowry, about 38, owned the Lowry Magnavox store in this resort city. He was a director of the Greater Myrtle Beach Chamber of Commerce, president of the congregation at St.Phillip's Lutheran Church and a Little League football coach.

"It was no hunting accident," said Horry County Coroner Dargan Cartrette. "They (the sniper) knew what they were doing, and they knew who they were looking for."

Two men were questioned by police late Friday. No charges had been filed. Police declined to speculate on a possible motive for the slaying.

The shot was apparently fired from behind a large pine tree about 20 yards from where Lowry stopped his van before beginning to make a left turn on to Chestnut Road, authorities said. the tree is about 75 yards from Lowry's home.

A motorist driving down Chestnut Road said he heard the shot and saw Lowry, bleeding heavily, stumble from the van.

The wounded man ran across the road and collapsed. Residents who came to his aid said Lowry never regained consciousness.

Coroner Cartrette said the wound was so serious Lowry probably would have died even if medical help had been immediately available.

Adopt-A-Pet

Cats and kittens are available through the Pitt Co. Humane Society Adopt-A-Pet service this week.

One person has two adult cats to give away. Both have been neutered and both are declawed and both will make wonderful pets for adults. One is three years old and black; the other "tiger" with white paws, four years old. Both are affectionate. To adopt either or both of these, one may call 758-8153.

Another has a tabby female who adopted her garage as a place to have her kittens. There are four kittens, one white, two black, and one "tiger" like his mom. To adopt any of these, one may call 752-3593.

To place an animal for adoption through the Humane Society, one may call 756-8413.

Volunteer Greenville

Volunteer opportunities through Volunteer Greenville have been announced by Nancy Harrington, coordinator of the agency. Some current needs are:

— The Mental Health Association needs volunteers on Monday and Tuesday afternoons to address and stuff envelopes.

For further information on these and other volunteer needs, call Ms. Harrington at 752-4137, extension 262, or contact her at the office located at 2000 Cedar Lane.

For me, the car doesn't make sense unless the loan does too.

It's surprising how many people will spend hours and even days shopping for a good deal on a new car, then turn around and take the first loan that comes along. Regardless of rate, term, whatever.

Here's a practical approach to auto financing. Shop as hard for the loan as you do for the car. Compare rates. Ask about terms. And make your last stop Planters National Bank.

Then, if our loan beats everybody else's, you can go directly through us or your dealer. And come out feeling as good about the loan as you do about the car.

Watson Moves By Struggling Pate

By DENNE FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Defending champion Tom Watson took advantage of Jerry Pate's four-putt collapse on the final green Saturday to take a one-shot lead after 54 holes of the windblown $300,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

Watson notched a 1-under 69 for a three-round total of 5-under 205 over Preston Trail Golf Club's par-70, 6,993-yard course.

Pate only had to two-putt from 40 feet on the 18th green for a 5-under 65, but ran his first putt three feet past the hole. His second putt dove quickly to the right, and he had a four-foot comebacker which he missed.

The shocked Pate had to settle for a 3-under 67 and a 54-hole 206.

Larry Nelson, who started the day as the leader, seven under, staggered to a 4-over 74 to finish at 207. Nelson called a shot on himself when his ball moved on the par-5 15th hole.

Pate, the former U.S. Open champion who hasn't won in a year, said: "I've never four-putted in a tournament before, but I three-putted on the last green to lose the PGA."

His second putt "jumped as soon as I hit it. I thought I had hit a good putt and I thought I hit the next one good, too. I four-putted just as easy as that."

"Putting is the only thing that has kept me from winning on the tour. I've been putting poorly," Pate said.

Watching closely in the 18th fairway during Pate's ordeal was Watson, who was a shot behind him when the 54th hole began.

"I saw it. I watched every putt. I've done that myself several times on the tour," Watson said. "He just kept running the ball by. The pin was in a tough position. I had a 15-foot uphill putt on that green and left it short. I think Jerry scared me."

Another notable blowup belonged to Lanny Wadkins, who started the day 6 under par, but had an 8 on the devilish par-3 225-yard 11th hole.

Watkins hit his tee shot in some weeds, knocked his next shot in a bunker, then tried to explode out. The ball stayed in the bunker and rolled back and hit Wadkins for a 2-stroke penalty. He got on the green in 5 and 3-putted.

Winds gusting out of the north to 17 mph made the course play difficult, although there was sunshine after two days of torrential rains which caused three delays.

Watson, who had eight 1-putts and holed a 100-foot chip for a birdie, said: "It is going to take an 8-under-par to win. But this course is really playing tough."

Watson birdied the 17th hole with a two-foot putt to pull within a shot of Pate, who birdied 14, 16 and 17 before his incredible 4 shots on the final green.

Others still in contention included Bruce Devlin, 72, and Bill Rogers, 69, each of them at 209.

At even par were Morris Hatalsky, 68, and George Burns, 76 after starting the day 6 under. Arnold Palmer, who began the day at even par, blew to a fat 76 thanks to a double-bogey start on the first hole. Lee Trevino was in a group of three at 1-over-par 211 after shooting 69.

Disputed Call Keeps Bucs Going In 3-2 Win

By GARY MIHOCES
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Willie Stargell and Omar Moreno each drove in a run after a disputed umpire's call kept alive a seventh-inning rally that gave the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 3-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds Saturday.

With two out in the Pirate seventh, Rennie Stennett was at second base and Phil Garner at first when Stargell came to bat as a pinch hitter against reliever Frank Pastore.

On a two-strike pitch, Stargell jerked his body and bat but the pitch was called a ball by home plate umpire Bob Nelson. The Reds aregued that Stargell had swung and appealed to third base umpire Harry Smail, but Smail ruled no swing.

Stargell followed with a single to right that scored Stennett with the tying run. Moreno then singled off Dave Tomlin to drive in Garner with the winning run.

Moreno also singled home a third-inning run that gave Pittsburgh a 1-0 lead off Cincinnati starter Fred Norman. In the sixth, Champ Summers' RBI double off reliever Jim Bibby gave the Reds a 1-1 tie.

Ken Griffey stole second in the Cincinnati seventh and came home with the aid of two Pirate errors to put Cincinnati on top 2-1.

Pirates starting pitcher Bruce Kison allowed only one hit over the first five innings before leaving with a finger injury. Bibby, Kent Tekulve and Grant Jackson allowed just two hits the rest of the way.

Bibby, 3-1, got the victory, Pastore, 1-3, took the loss and Jackson got his fourth save.

Otis Melvin Tops Field At Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — East Carolina University's Otis Melvin pulled off a double victory in the Pitt Invitational yesterday and garnered Outstanding Runner laurels for the meet.

Melvin won both the 100-meter and 200-meter dashes in both meet and stadium records to win the top track honors of the day. He finished the 100 in a time of 10.3 seconds, breaking the old mark of Tyrone Hicks of Ohio State, 10.6, set last year.

In the 200, Melvin snapped the tape in 20.6 seconds, breaking a mark set last year by another ECU runner, Calvin Alston. Alston's old mark was 21.3. Alston is sitting out this season with an injury.

Bobby Phillips of East Carolina placed second in the 200-meter dash, clocking in at 21.7 seconds.

In the long jump, Darrell McCoy finished second with a leap of 24 feet, 6 inches. Bill Miller, who ran a 3:50.7 in the trials, came back with a 3:48.2 in the finals of the 1,500-meter run, good enough for fifth place.

Marvin Rankins finished third in the 110-meter hurdles with a time of :14.1. Valentine Robinson was fourth in :14.4.

Russell Parker finished third in the high jump with a leap of 6-10.

Nettles' Double Lets Yankees Nip Angels

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

NEW YORK (AP) — Graig Nettles doubled Thurman Munson home from first base in the bottom of the ninth inning Saturday, giving the New York Yankees a wild 6-5 victory over the California Angels in a 27-hit slugfest played during a steady rain.

Munson opened the ninth with a single off Dave Frost, 2-1, the third California pitcher. Nettles, after twice failing to bunt, ripped a 3-2 pitch into the right field corner for the game's 12th extra-base hit.

The Yankees' 16 hits included four doubles, two triples and a solo home run by Chris Chambliss. The Angels collected 11 hits, including two doubles and three triples.

Chambliss snapped a 3-3 tie with a sacrifice fly in the fourth inning and gave the Yankees a 5-3 lead in the sixth with his third homer of the season and first in a month.

The Angels chased New York starter Luis Tiant with a run in the seventh on a walk and Rick Miller's triple. Newly acquired Jim Kaat pitched out of trouble by getting Rod Carew on an inning-ending double-play grounder with runners on first and third.

The Angels tied it in the eighth on Don Baylor's double and Brian Downing's single before Dick Tidrow, 2-1, pitched out of trouble.

Tidrow got out of the inning with the help of a weird double-play after coming on with runners on first and third and none out.

He knocked down Carney Lansford's smash and trapped Joe Rudi between third and home. Catcher Munson ran Rudi back toward third and then threw to first baseman Nettles to erase Downing, trying to go from first to third. Rudi was then run down to complete the double play, and Bobby Grich grounded out to end the inning.

Tiant had an earned run average of 8.53 in four previous starts and was clipped for three runs and five hits in the first two innings. But he settled down after a 25-minute rain delay at the start of the third and blanked the Angels on two hits over the next four innings.

The Angels scored twice in the top of the first on Rick Miller's single, an infield out, Carew's RBI single and Rudi's double. The Yankees tied it against Dyar Miller in the bottom of the first on Nettles' two-out single, Reggie Jackson's triple and the first of two doubles by Lou Piniella. Jackson has driven in at least one run in nine consecutive games, three short of the major league record.

California took a 3-2 lead in the second on Lansford's triple and a single by Grich, but the Yankees tied it in the third on a triple by Munson and Nettles' groundout.

Dyar Miller, making his first major league start after 182 relief appearances, surrendered a run in the fourth on another double by Piniella, Jim Spencer's single and Chambliss' sacrifice fly. He gave way to Dave LaRoche in the fifth.

The nationally televised game was played almost entirely in rain that was accompanied by wind and raw temperatures in the 50s.

Austin Ends Evert's Streak

ROME (AP) — Tracy Austin snapped Chris Evert Lloyd's six-year, 125-match clay court victory streak at the Foro Italico Saturday, 6-4, 2-6, 7-6, to gain the final of the women's Italian Open against Sylvia Hanika of Germany.

The teen-aged Austin's victory ended the longest victory streak in recorded tennis history. She had been indomitable on that surface since Aug. 12, 1973, when she was 19 years old.

"Well, at least the pressure is off," Lloyd said. She had said frequently that her clay-court streak was one of her most prized achievements.

Hanika, a 19-year-old German, outlasted Australian veteran Evonne Goolagong earlier in the day in a 2-hour and 15-minute match, 7-5, 3-6, 7-5.

The Lloyd-Austin match took nearly three hours, with the first set alone consuming an hour and 20 minutes. Austin won the third-set tiebreaker 7-4.

"I was physically tired at the end of the first set," Austin said. "After I lost the second set and was down 2-4 in the third, something happened. It must have been nervous energy or something, but I felt good again."

That was the turning point as Austin rallied to tie 4-4. The players then divided the next four games and forced the match into a tiebreaker.

Austin rushed to a 5-1 lead in the tiebreaker before netting three consecutive shots that enabled Lloyd to close the gap to 5-4.

"I was thinking about winning and became too careful," said the 16-year-old Austin, a California high school student. "Then I decided to go for it."

Ahead 6-4 in the tiebreaker Austin wrapped up the match at the net. Evert was pounding returns in rapid-fire succession. Austin was leaping and appeared to be swatting flies before she finally iced the shot that gave her the victory.

It was the second time Austin has beaten Lloyd, who only recently was deposed as the top-ranked player in the world by Martina Navratilova. Austin also beat her during the women's winter-tour championship at New York's Madison Square Garden in March, before Chris' marriage to British pro John Lloyd.

The opening set of the Austin-Lloyd encounter was a match of patience and perseverance. Volleys of up to 44 hits marked the set, with neither player attacking. Lloyd rushed to a 3-0 lead in the second set, relinquishing only one point per game to her opponent. Tracy won the fourth and seventh games before succumbing 6-2. It took 36 minutes to close the set and shadows had covered the entire playing area.

Ron Lyle Captures Split Decision Win

By JACK STEVENSON

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Heavyweight Ron Lyle kept his professional boxing career alive as he survived a third-round knockdown and went on to capture a split decision from Scott LeDoux in a 10-round bout Saturday.

The 37-year-old Lyle, only recently exonerated from second-degree murder charges, used his left hook in gaining the decision by the scantest of margins from the 30-year-old LeDoux, from Anoka, Minn.

LeDoux, 225, floored the 218-pound Lyle in the third round and then followed with a right cross that put the Denver boxer into the ropes again.

From then on, it was a come-from-behind effort for Lyle and only one point separated the fighters in the judges' cards at the end.

Judge Art Lurie scored it 46-45 for Lyle and judge Harold Buck saw it 45-44 for the winner. Judge Charles Minker had it 45-44 for LeDoux.

The Associated Press had LeDoux ahead 47-45.

Scoring was on the five-point must system in which the winner of a round receives five points, the loser four or less.

Lyle, the 3-1 favorite, was unmarked while LeDoux was bleeding from the nose in the fourth, was cut over the nose in the fifth and had his right eye nearly closed in the eighth.

Giants Slip By Phillies, 4-1

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Ed Halicki pitched a two-hitter and drove in a run and Johnnie LeMaster collected three singles as the San Francisco Giants beat the Philadelphia Phillies 4-1 Saturday.

Del Unser, playing in place of the injured Greg Luzinski, got both hits off Halicki — a line-drive single to right with two out in the fourth inning and a bunt single with one out in the ninth.

Halicki, 3-3, struck out eight and walked three in pitching the Giants to their seventh victory in the last nine games.

Rain, Ongais' Wreck Delay Indy Runs

Injured driver Danny Ongais helped from wrecked car.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Danny Ongais, trapped in his race car for more than 20 minutes, was hospitalized in stable condition Saturday after crashing into the inside wall during a hurried practice session before the start of Indianapolis 500 qualifications.

A steady rain delayed the track opening most of the day, but nearly 40 cars were able to practice once the rain let up and the track dried off.

Time trials were then rescheduled for Sunday, when the forecast called for dry weather with partly sunny skies and temperatures in the 60s.

Ongais, clocked at 191.205 mph on the lap just before the crash, spun coming out of the fourth turn. His Parnelli-Cosworth slid backward about 550 feet, struck the inside wall, did another half-spin and slid another 150 feet into the wall again. He slid about 100 feet along the wall before coming to rest.

There was no fire.

A track observer said Ongais apparently lost control after going low to avoid two slower cars in front of him. He was trapped inside the cockpit until a Speedway rescue crew cut the chassis from around him, lifted him onto a stretcher and took him to the infield hospital.

He later was taken to Methodist Hospital downtown.

Dr. Steve Olvey of the Speedway medical staff said it "appeared there is some tenderness in the lower spine. We're sending him to the hospital for more complete X-rays than we can do here. It appears that everything seems okay."

Ongais, 37, Costa Mesa, Calif., had been regarded as one of the favorites for the pole position for the May 27 race. He was one of seven drivers who topped 190 mph during the week-long practice, with his best lap at 193.133.

The former motorcycle and drag racing champion was seeking his third start in the Indy 500. He tied for the second-fastest qualification speed of 200.122 mph and started in the middle of the front row last year and led the race for 71 laps, but he wound up 18th after engine trouble knocked him out after 145 laps.

The lengthy rain delay, coupled with Ongais' crash and the required half-hour of practice before any qualifications may be attempted, wiped out the entire session of time trials.

By the time the track closed at 6 p.m., EST, 42 cars had made practice runs. Ongais' 191.205 was the fastest lap, followed by defending champion Al Unser at 191.164.

Last year, the first two days of qualifications were rained out before Tom Sneva captured the pole position with a record four-lap average at 202.156 mph. Sneva finished second to Unser last year and to four-time champion A.J. Foyt in 1977.

A U.S. Auto Club restriction on manifold pressure cut speeds dramatically this year. The week's top practice lap was Foyt's 194.890.

The lower engine "boost" was one of the key points in the dispute between USAC and the breakaway Championship Auto Racing Teams. Ongais, whose Interscope Racing team was aligned with CART, was not one of the drivers whose cars were originally rejected by USAC.

A three-day hearing in federal court resulted in the reinstatement of 19 CART entries, including the Chaparral driven by Al Unser and the cars piloted by former Indy champs Bobby Unser, Johnny Rutherford and Gordon Johncock. With the exception of Foyt, an original CART director who went back to USAC, all the top speeds in practice this past week were turned in by CART drivers.

Rick Mears, the fastest rookie qualifier in Indy history a year ago and Bobby Unser's teammate with Roger Penske this year, had a lap last week at 193.5. Al Unser's top lap was 193.382; Rutherford's 191.085, Bobby Unser's 190.921 and Sneva's 190.921.

Nadia Comaneci Returns Atop Gymnastics World With Victory

COPENHAGEN (AP) — Romania's Nadia Comaneci, transformed from a wonderchild to a young woman, was firmly back on the throne of women's gymnastics Saturday, adding two single-apparatus titles to the combined European Championship crown she had grabbed Friday.

The 17-year-old Romanian girl, who now towers a head over her closest mini-girl rivals and weighs 105 pounds, overcame a fall in the uneven bars to round out her triumph with a floor excercise routine. The routine was in a new style for Comaneci, and she promised to have it fully developed for next year's Olympic games in Moscow.

It was not the same Nadia who, at the age of 14 scored seven flawless marks at the Montreal Olympics. Nor was it the same Nadia who, hampered by too many pounds and too little concentration, lost her world championship title at Strasbourg, France, last year.

There was the old immaculate precision and timing, but also a new self-confidence and a style designed to give a new chance to a matured gymnast in the fierce competition with the small, hard-faced, pigtailed school girls who dominate gymnastics.

After winning three out of four disciplines Friday for the overall title, Comaneci started out strongly Saturday to win the vault, but then — blinded by a photographer's flash — had a bad fall from the upper bar in the uneven bars and finished fourth.

Shaken, she made no better than third on the balance beam, her favorite event, but then finally came back convincingly to take the floor excercise title.

Comaneci told reporters that after the accident on the uneven bars, the interval between events was too short for her to regain her composure for the balance beam.

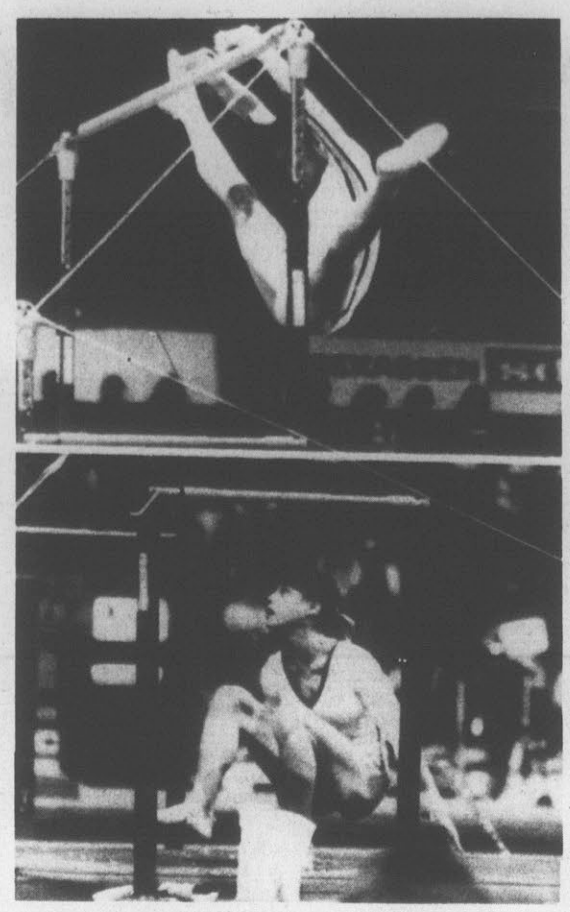

"Some of the things I now do are so new and difficult that I still do them best when Bela Karoli, my coach, is at my side," she said, adding that she expected to have polished the new routine — including consecutive flipflops — in time for the world championships at Dallas next December.

Eighteen-year-old world champion Elena Mukhina of the Soviet Union, who was relegated to a humiliating overall fourth, took the title in the uneven bars. She had left the arena in tears Friday night and explained Saturday that she had been ill only 10 days before her arrival here and had not been quite in shape.

It was an all-East European affair — with one exception.

She was Switzerland's 16-year-old Romy Kessler who had not qualified for the finals. But when Mukhina withdrew from the beam competition — allegedly because of a warm-up mishap — the Swiss girl moved into the top league on the strength of a 9.40 mark in the overall.

Sundberg's Homer Powers Rangers

TORONTO (AP) — Jim Sundberg's home run in the eighth inning powered the Texas Rangers to a 3-1 victory over Toronto Blue Jays Saturday.

Steve Comer, 3-3, got the victory while Dave Lemanczyk, 2-2, took the loss. Last month Lemanczyk registered a one-hit shutout over the Rangers, with Comer again the opposing pitcher.

Toronto took a 1-0 lead in the fourth inning when Roy Howell singled home Bob Bailor, but Texas tied the score in the sixth on Buddy Bell's sacrifice fly.

Sundberg blasted Lemanczyk's second pitch over the left field fence for his second home run of the season to put the Rangers ahead to stay. Texas got an insurance run in the ninth on a triple by Al Oliver and a single by Pat Putnam.

Comer left the game after walking Rico Carty with two out in the eighth inning. Rex Kern walked slugger John Mayberry, then Sparky Lyle came on and struck out Howell, who had barely missed a home run one pitch earlier when his drive over the right field fence curved foul by inches.

Rampants Outlast Beddingfield, 4-3

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Rose High School's Rampants struggled to a 4-3 victory over Wilson Beddingfield Friday night, but a controversial call brought about a protest of the game from the Bruin coach.

With Rose leading 2-1 in the top of the fifth inning, Mack Smith hit a long fly ball that appeared to be starting to curve foul along the right field line. But the towering drive then struck one of the power lines above the field, dropping down into the grasp of rightfielder Will Barrett.

Umpire Tommy Warrick called Smith out on the play, citing ground rules that cover the situation. Under those rules, lines which run above fair or both foul and fair territory are judged by where they strike the ground whether foul or fair, or if caught, the batter is out.

However, Bruin coach Ernest Hall argued that the ball did not strike the line crossing the field, but rather, one totally in foul territory. After umpires refused to change their call, he protested the game.

Mike Williams went all the way in the win, claiming his sixth victory in eight decisions. He gave up seven hits, and only one of the three runs against him was earned. He walked just one batter and struck out 11.

Beddingfield threatened in the first two innings, but failed to score. With one down, Kenny Thorne singled and moved to third on a hit by Graham Whitley. Whitley, however, was thrown out trying to stretch his single into a double for the third out. In the second, a misjudged fly by Greg Dail resulted in one hit, and Jim Barnes beat out a slow roller than was then overthrown at first to put runners at second and third with two outs.

The Bruins came right back, however, scoring a game-tieing run in the top of the third. With two away, Smith connected with a line shot over the fence in right for a solo home run.

Rose rallied in return to regain the lead, 2-1 in the bottom of the third. Mark Shank reached on an infield hit and was sacrificed up. Will Barrett singled to center, scoring Shank.

The Rampants picked up another run, for a 3-1 lead in the fifth. Shank led off with a walk and with one away, Barrett also walked. Skip Topping reached on an infield hit that loaded the bases, and Williams reached on an error, scoring Shank.

After a single and a wild pitch put a runner on second with none out in the fourth, Williams struck out the Bruins to end that threat, but they came back with two unearned runs in the sixth to tie it at 3-3.

With one away, Jeff Lucas reached on an error and was sacrificed up. Doug Godwin lined a hit into right that got past the diving Barrett to roll to the fence for a run-scoring triple. Donald Williams then reached on an error to score courtsey runner Keith Whitley with the tieing run.

But again, the Rampants came right back to regain the lead. Neal walked and Daise went in to run for him, stealing second and moving to third when the ball was overthrown. With one down, Shank walked and Mark Douglas laid down a bunt on the first base line. The ball was fielded by the catcher, who turned to check on Daise, then found it too late to make a play on Douglas, loading the bases. With two outs, Topping reached on an error, scoring Daise with what proved to be the winning run.

No one had more then one hit for either team.

The win boosted the Rampant record to 13-5-1 overall and to 7-5 in the Division I standings. Beddingfield dropped to 12-8 overall and 5-7 in the league.

The Rampants have two games remaining this week. They play Tuesday in their home finale against Bertie at 7:30 p.m., then travel to Northern Nash to close out the regular season in a 4 p.m. Thursday game.

To qualify for post-season play, the Rampants must win both games, and hope that both Northern and Hunt both suffer at least two more losses in their remaining games.

'Go, Bird, Go' So Bird Left--Early

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The crowd chanted, "Go, Bird, Go" — and in the fifth inning, Mark Fidrych did.

"I just stunk," said the Detroit pitcher after leaving early during a 5-1 loss to the Milwaukee Brewers Friday night.

The start was the first appearance by Fidrych at Tiger Stadium since April 17, 1978 . He lasted 51-3 innings Friday night, a victim of three runs in the sixth — two on a double by Paul Molitor.

While Fidrych was the main attraction, Detroit-born Lary Sorensen of the Brewers was the star, pitching a five-hitter.

Orioles 8, Mariners 3

Al Bumbry and John Lowenstein blasted home runs and Steve Stone hurled a six-hitter to lead Baltimore past Seattle. It was the Orioles' 18th victory in their last 21 games and fourth straight over Seattle.

Stone gave up all of Seattle's runs in the first inning, when Willie Horton hit a two-run homer. Bumbry hit his homer leading off the first and Lowenstein's three-run blast highlighted a four-run burst in the third.

Angels 4, Yankees 1

Don Baylor hit a three-run homer in the fourth inning and Jim Barr scattered eight hits for his first American League victory as California defeated New York.

Baylor's fifth homer of the season was the Angels' only hit of the inning, but it followed right fielder Reggie Jackson's two-base muff of Dan Ford's fly ball and a walk to Rod Carew.

Rangers 3, Blue Jays 1

Bill Sample scored one run and drove in another to help Texas beat Toronto for Jon Matlack's first victory of the season. The left-hander scattered six hits in only his third start of the season after being plagued by bone chips in his pitching elbow.

Twins 4, Indians 3

Bob Randall's double in the ninth scored Ron Jackson with the winning run, leading Minnesota over Cleveland. Jackson had doubled off loser Sid Monge with two outs prior to Randall's hit.

Hot-handed Mike Marshall, 6-1, pitched the last two innings in relief of Twins starter Paul Hartzell.

White Sox 5, Royals 3

Bill Nahorodny and Ralph Garr hit two-run homers to lead Chicago over Kansas City. Nahorodny's third homer capped a three-run second and Garr's fourth came in the fifth to snap a 3-3 tie after the Royals had scored twice in the top of the fifth without the aid of a hit.

Red Sox 11, A's 2

Carl Yastrzemski and Butch Hobson had two hits apiece in an eight-run fourth inning as Boston breezed past Oakland. Yastrzemski ignited the uprising against Oakland starter Matt Keough with a single.

Startled Bird

Detroit Tiger pitcher Mark "The Bird" Fidrych looks up from the sports page as his picture is snapped prior to making his first regular season appearance since April 17, 1978, Friday night. It wasn't a good night for the Bird, however, as he left in the fifth inning of a 5-1 loss to the Milwaukee Brewers. (AP Laserphoto)

Eight Thinclads Made Regionals

TARBORO — Rose High School qualified five athletes for this week's high school regional track meet during sectional qualifications Friday at Tarboro High School.

In addition, one each from Roanoke, Williamston and Conley qualified for further competition.

Bertie High School took first place in the team competition with 56 points, while hosting Tarboro was second with 45 and Southern Nash was third with 28. Rose finished fourth with 20.

Conley was 11th with nine points, while Williamston and Roanoke tied for 12th with eight points.

Ron Butler of Rose and Chris Morning of Roanoke were the only first place winners. Butler took first in the discus with a throw of 144 feet, 11¾ inches. Morning won the high jump with a leap of 6 feet, 8 inches.

Other Rose qualifiers were Curtis Little with third in the shot put at 54-9½; Ted King was third in the pole vault at 12-0; Quinton Eaton was third in the 440-yard dash in :49.95; and Steve Blackwell was third in the 880-yard run at 2:00.5.

Bernard Hill of Conley was third in the long jump, while Victor Rodgers of Williamston was third in both the high jump and the triple jump.

The top three in each event move on to the regionals.

Fred Matney Captures Sectional Title Again

WILSON — Fred Matney became the first player ever to win back-to-back singles titles in the Eastern sectional tennis tournament Friday.

Matney, the defending champion, had to struggle to get past Ben Reichert of Roanoke Rapids, the same player he beat last year for the title.

The match lasted three hours as Matney lost the first set, 6-4, then came back to win the second 6-3. The third and decisive set saw Matney trail through the first four games, as neither play could break the other's serve. Finally, with the score tied at 4-4, Matney broke Reichert's serve for a 5-4 lead, and went on to hold his own serve for a 6-4 win that clinched the title for him.

To gain the finals, Matney, in addition to four earlier matches on Wednesday, defeated John Bell of Northeastern, 6-0, 6-2 and Cliff Rose of Fike, 6-1, 7-6, on Friday. Matney was down 5-3, in the second set of that last match before coming on to win.

The other Rose entry that made it past the opening rounds was the doubles team of Larry Talbert and Jeff Quinn, who lost in the semifinals to Brad Harold and Mark Jenkins of Goldsboro.

Fred Matney

The two, along with Matney, however, qualified for the regionals to be held Wednesday in Kinston.

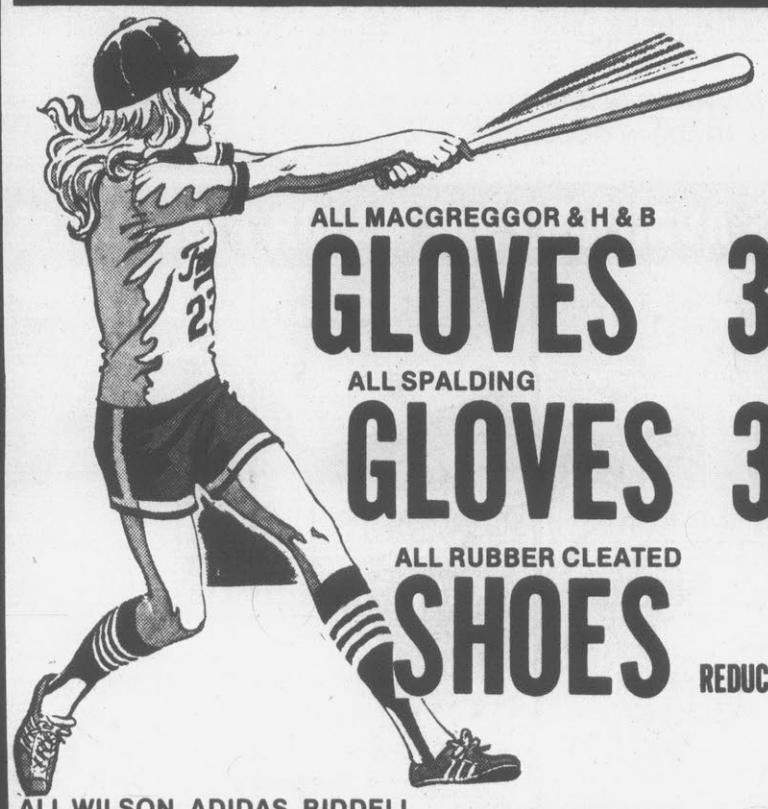

Fike, by the luck of a draw, took first place in the team standings with 44 points, while Rose finished second with 43. Wilson, in the draw, had a player pick up one point by receiving a first round bye, then got two more on a default before losing in his first actual match.

Roanoke Rapids finished third with 40, while Rocky Mount had 28, Tarboro 22, Hunt 19, Northeastern 17, Goldsboro 13, and Washington 12.

Conley Weathers Storm, Tops Hawks

WINTERVILLE — D. H. Conley's baseball team had its mind on the weather during Friday night's game with North Lenoir and it almost cost the Vikings a victory. They won, however, 4-3.

A thunderstorm loomed west of A. G. Cox school where the game was played and the Vikes, rushing to get the game in before the clouds broke, nearly made a fatal mistake.

They played the first four and a half innings in just 40 minutes and held a 2-1 lead going into the bottom of the fifth, what would have been an official game had the rains come at that point. But the rains didn't come and the Hawks scored a pair of runs in the top of the sixth for a 3-2 lead.

The Vikes tied the game in the bottom of the frame as the clouds continued to hold and relief pitcher Ben Wilson struck the Hawks out in order in the top of the seventh.

With one away in the bottom of the frame, it began to rain, but Wilson doubled to center field and Emery Vines came in to run for him. That brought up Curtis Spencer. A wild pitch sent Vines to third and Spencer was disappointed to get a walk.

With Micah Dixon at bat, Spencer took off for second on a double steal attempt. The Hawk catcher looked Vines back at third and then threw to second. The throw was wild, however, and Vines sped home with the winning run.

"The weather was a big topic tonight, and our guys couldn't quite get their minds on the game," Conley coach Walter Claybrook said. "But they showed a lot of courage when they did come back to win after they had been ahead the whole game and then got behind."

Claybrook said the game was well-played on both sides. Each team used a pair of pitchers and all four did well, the Conley coach noted.

Mike Edens started on the mound for the Vikings and pitched 5⅔ innings, giving up all three North Lenoir runs. "Mike did a good job, but we planned to bring Ben in when things got tight because he threw junk when we played them over there and they couldn't hit it."

Wilson came in in the fifth after Maurice Goodall had led off with a double for the Hawks, moved up on Gary Alphin's out and scored on a single by Guy Sanderson. When Edens walked Kevin Battle, Claybrook put Wilson on the mound.

He forced the first batter he faced, Gary Radford, to hit a ground ball to first, but Sanderson scored on the out. The final batter grounded out to short.

Both teams scored in the first. In the top of the frame, Battle singled up the middle with two away and scored on a double to center by Radford.

Sammy Tucker led off the bottom of the inning with a double and Arnelle Credle sacrificed him to third. He scored on a base hit by Edens.

Conley's second run came in the third. Tucker again led off and singled to left. Credle sacrificed him to second and he went to third on Edens' infield out. Wilson laced a single up the middle to bring him in.

Neither team scored again until the Hawks' two runs in the sixth. Conley tied the game in the bottom of the frame when Carl Arnold singled with one away, went to second on Roy Lassiter's walk and scored on an infield hit by Dixon Page.

Claybrook said he was pleased with the victory, but his team is still not getting key hits. "We're still leaving too many men on base," he said. The Vikes left nine men stranded Friday night.

Conley's record jumped to 11-9 overall and 7-7 in the Eastern Carolina Conference with the victory. North Lenoir is now 6-10 and 5-9.

Phoenix Suns Listen To Coach, Play Defense To Top Sonics

By TONY BAKER
AP Sports Writer

SEATTLE (AP) — Basketball coaches preach defense. The players practice offense.

On Friday night, the Phoenix Suns, one of the National Basketball Association's most offensive-minded teams, heard Coach John MacLeod's sermon from the sidelines to play defense down the stretch.

The Suns responded before the Kingdome crowd of 28,935 with some of their best defense of the season for a 99-93 victory over the Seattle SuperSonics and a 3-2 lead in their best-of-seven Western Conference championship series.

A triumph over the slumping Sonics in Game 6 in Phoenix on Sunday will send the Suns into the NBA finals for the first time since 1976, when they lost a hard-fought series to the Boston Celtics.

The defeat left the Sonics, who lost a seven-game series to the Washington Bullets in their first appearance in the NBA finals a year ago, on the brink of elimination from the playoffs.

"Seattle was doing a good job with their defense, but we just kept with it and showed some perserverance," said MacLeod. "I thought it was a very good game for us."

It was the third straight subpar performance for the Sonics, who had dropped two games to the Suns earlier in the week at Phoenix.

"We're a better team than we played tonight," said Lenny Wilkens, the Seattle coach. "We didn't do what we should have done.

Moments later Davis converted a three-point play and the Suns went ahead for good 83-82 on a Mike Bratz jumper with 5:08 left. Westphal added a pair of free throws that capped a 7-0 Suns run for an 85-82 lead.

After two Lonnie Shelton free throws, Don Buse scored an uncontested layup and Davis canned a long jumper for an 89-84 lead. Buse added two more free throws after he was fouled by Shelton for a 91-85 advantage with 1:28 to go and the Sonics were dead.

Actually, MacLeod said, the final minute of the third period provided the swing in momentum that carried the Suns the rest of the way.

"I thought the big turnaround for us was at the end of the third quarter when we made a run at them," the Phoenix coach explained. "It gave us a big lift going into the fourth quarter."

Alvin Scott's three straight points cut a seven-point Seattle lead to 66-62 with 50 seconds left in the third period. The Suns then pressured Seattle in back court and Bratz stole Fred Brown's inbounds pass and was fouled.

Bratz made both free throws and then John Johnson's inbounds pass was intercepted by Bayard Forrest, who shoveled it off to Westphal. Westphal's basket tied the game at 66 with 33 seconds to go. Paul Silas wisely called a Seattle time out and Brown followed with a long jumper with 11 seconds left that pushed the Sonics ahead 68-66 after three quarters.

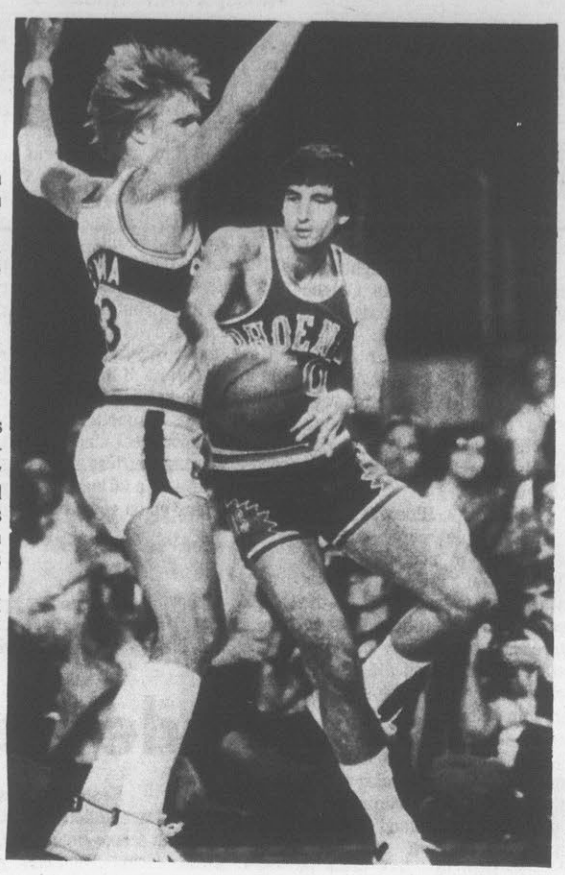

The victory was the Suns' first in their last seven games in Seattle and snapped a 12-game Sonics winning streak at home.

"This series isn't over yet," said Suns forward Truck Robinson. "We've got one more game to win. They are the second best team in basketball record-wise and I definitely don't want to come back here."

Davis, the silky-smooth Phoenix forward, sat out all but 4:21 of the first half after picking up three quick fouls. He scored just two points in the first half, but finished the game with 17.

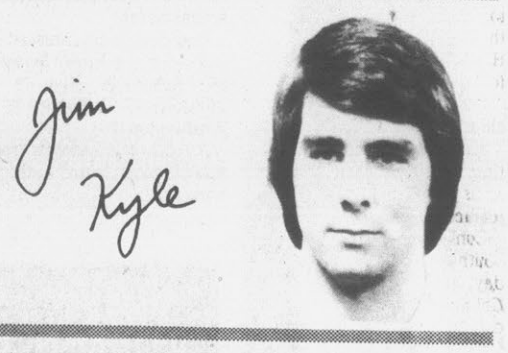

"I'm confident we'll win if we play our game," Davis said. "But we can't take them too lightly."

Westphal led all scorers with 27 points. Dennis Johnson paced Seattle with 24 and Brown added 16 and Shelton 14.

SEVERAL BILLS HAVE been introduced into the state legislature to help relieve some of the financial problems of the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission caused by the inflation of recent years.

One bill, Senate Bill 778, would essentially result in a 25 per cent average increase in the various state hunting and fishing licenses. This falls short of the 40 per cent increase proposed earlier by the Commission, but will offer some immediate assistance, the Commission said.

"If this bill, along with other financial bills, passes, we will not have to cut back on present programs or eliminate any of the several dozen positions as outlined in our contingent emergency plan," said Robert B. Hazel, executive director of the Commission. "It appears that passage of this bill and the others would provide just enough to keep us in business until a more permanent solution can be found. However, these measures will provide no funds for expansion of any wildlife programs."

Under SB 778, hunting and fishing license fees would increase as of Sept. 1, 1979. For example, the resident combination license would go from its present $10 cost to $12.50 and the sportsman's license would jump from $25 to $31. "Because of the time required for printing, current licenses, which are scheduled to expire on August 1 would be honored until September when the new licenses would become available,"

The 25 per cent increase would generate as much as $1.8 million at the current sales level. However, the Commission warns that past experience indicates initial buyer resistance could lower this to about $1.5 million.

In addition to SB 778, there is a "fur resources" bill, SB 563, which would increase fees for trapping and fur dealer licenses and provide funds earmarked for management of the state's furbearing animals.

Other financial bills which could assist the Wildlife Resources Commission have also been introduced. They include: a bill (SB 565) to provide for voluntary donations for nongame and endangered species through an income tax refund deduction; a bill (SB 744) to return interest paid on the Wildlife Fund (this interest, generated from license dollars, currently goes into the state general fund); a bill (SB 564) to increase the fees for motorboat registrations to $5 for one year and $13 for three years; and a bill (HB 656) to establish a state waterfowl stamp.

Union Carbide 9, Kiwanis 8

Union Carbide evened its record at 1-1 with a 9-8 victory over the Kiwanis Friday in the North State Little League.

The Kiwanis fell to 0-2 with the loss.

The Kiwanis scored first, getting a run in the top of the first. Scott Davis singled and William Smith walked. Davis moved up on a passed ball and a double steal scored Davis.

Union Carbide came back to move ahead with three in the bottom of the first. The Kiwanis added one in the second, but Union Carbide got two for a 5-2 lead. They added two more in the third to up the lead to 7-2. The Kiwanis came back to score five in the fourth, however, to tie it at 7-7. Then, in the top of the fifth, the Kiwanis got one more for an 8-7 lead.

But Union Carbide came back with two in the bottom of the fifth to win it. Jeff Howard was hit by a pitch and moved up on a passed ball and a stolen base. With two outs, Frederick Hurt walked and a passed ball moved him up and scored Howard. Three straight walks followed to Steve Rhodes, Chris Stokes and Billy Hall, scoring Hurt with the winning run.

No one on either team had more than one hit. Duane Roeser went all the way to record the win for Union Carbide.

Big Value 13, Moose 1

Big Value Drugs won its second straight Tar Heel League game, downing the Moose, 13-1, Friday.

The Moose fell to 0-2 with the loss.

A BIG COMEDOWN

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Hack Wilson, who was named to the Baseball Hall of Fame by the Veterans Committee this year, was only 5-6 but weighed 200 pounds.

In 1930, he hit .356 for the Chicago Cubs, hit 56 home runs for a National League record and drove in 190 runs, a major league mark.

The following year, Wilson dipped to an incredible .261, a drop of 95 points, hit only 13 homers, a falloff of 43, and had just 61 RBIs, 129 fewer than the previous season.

Caught Short Of Home

St. Louis Cardinals' pitcher Bob Forsch is tagged out at home plate by Atlanta Braves' catcher Bruce Benedict while attempting to score from third base during the third inning Friday night at St. Louis. Rau Misses No-Hit Bid

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

Doug Rau must have felt a pang of anguish, watching Chris Speier's hit sail over Ron Cey's head. But it wasn't nearly as painful as the hurt Bob Forsch felt, watching Jeff Burroughs' hit sail over the wall.

When Speier chopped the ball off the Dodger Stadium turf and into left field for a clean single with two outs in the eighth inning Friday night, all Rau lost was his no-hitter. But by that time Los Angeles had pounded four home runs and wrapping up the one-hit 7-0 victory over the Montreal Expos was merely a formality for Rau.

When Burroughs pounced on Forsch's fastball leading off the seventh inning, though, it broke up more than a no-hitter. It also broke a scoreless tie and started the Atlanta Braves on their way to a 3-0 victory over Forsch and the St. Louis Cardinals.

In the rest of the National League, Cincinnati beat Pittsburgh 8-4, San Francisco edged Philadelphia 2-1, New York shut out San Diego 4-0 and Chicago defeated Houston 5-3.

It was the second time Speier had done this to Rau. He did it with a leadoff single in the eighth inning in a game four seasons ago when he was with San Francisco. Rau still wound up with his first victory after four losses.

Braves 3, Cardinals 0

Bob Forsch, who had thrown a no-hitter last year and was trying to go one up on his brother, Ken (who pitched one for Houston against Atlanta this year), had retired the first 15 Braves he faced and 16 of the first 18.

But Burroughs jumped on a 2-0 pitch in the seventh inning and ended the no-hitter and shutout and saddled the winless Forsch with his third loss. The Braves added two unearned runs in the eighth.

Reds 8, Cubs 4

Cincinnati's Dave Concepcion had a pair of singles, a triple, a homer and four runs batted in against Chicago. Junior Kennedy, a reserve getting a chance because second baseman Joe Morgan is injured, was just about as big at the plate for the Reds. He had four singles and scored four runs.

Giants 2, Phillies 1

Bob Knepper, who had blanked the Phillies last May 1, shut them out for seven innings this time and took matters into his own hands at the plate, too.

In the fourth inning he hit a double off Steve Carlton to break a scoreless tie after Johnnie LeMaster had singled. The winning run was Darrell Evans' homer in the sixth.

Mets 4, Padres 0

Steve Henderson walked and John Stearns hit a two-run homer in the fourth inning, then Henderson homered in the eighth as the Mets handed San Diego rookie Steve Mura his first loss and ended their four-game losing streak.

Cubs 5, Astros 3

Barry Foote's run-scoring double highlighted a three-run second inning that helped the Cubs hand Houston its sixth loss in eight games.

AMBIDEXTROUS JIM

NEW YORK (AP) — Pro Golfer Jim Nelford putts left-handed and plays all his other shots from the right side. It goes back to his youth.

"When I was growing up," Nelford said, "my father was left-handed and my mother right-handed. I used whichever set of clubs I could get. When I got my own set, my father said I should play right-handed exclusively, but I felt more comfortable putting southpaw and I've never changed."

Roanoke Downs Washington, 3-1

WASHINGTON — Roanoke High School kept its slim Northeastern Conference title hopes alive with a 3-1 victory over league-leading Washington Friday night.

The win boosted the Redskins' record to 13-5 overall and 8-4 in the conference. Washington fell to 10-2 in the league, but would have to lose its remaining two games for Roanoke to have a chance.

Roanoke scored first, getting a run in the second. Steve Wallace singled and Wesley Johnson reached on an error. Clay Roberson reached on a fielder's choice, scoring Wallace.

It stayed 1-0 until the seventh when all the remaining scoring occurred.

Roberson led off the Roanoke half of the seventh with a single and Anthony Latham walked. Glenn Cargile singled in Roberson, and Street Lee singled to load the bases. Wally Keel reached on an error, allowing Latham to score.

Washington tried to rally, scoring once in the bottom of the seventh. Stone singled and Brooks walked. Barnes then singled in Stone.

The Redskins travel to Tarboro on Tuesday.

WHEAT SWAMP — North Lenoir High School scored five runs in the first inning, then went on to post a 9-1 softball victory over D.H. Conley on Friday.

Conley's only runs came in the top of the seventh inning. After their first in the first, the Lady Hawks picked up two each in the fourth and fifth innings.

Gillette was the winning pitcher.

Maria Jones led the Conley hitting with two, while Roberson, Artis and Redmon each had two to pace North Lenoir.

Conley, now 10-6, was to play Southwest Edgecombe on Saturday, then travels to Ayden-Grifton on Monday.

By GREG THOMPSON
AP Sports Writer

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Forty-two points and playoff pressure notwithstanding, it was just another night at the office for the Iceman.

"This is my job and the job is not over yet," unruffled George Gervin said Friday night after he poured in 42 points — including a near-record 20 in a crucial third-quarter surge — to spark the San Antonio Spurs to a 118-102 playoff victory over the shell-shocked Washington Bullets.

The victory gave the upstart Spurs a commanding 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven NBA Eastern Conference championship series. The reeling Bullets, the defending NBA champions, must win at home Sunday or else be eliminated.

"It was just one of those nights. You have one of those nights every now and then," added Gervin, the NBA scoring champion for two consecutive seasons. "We've got a 3-1 lead and they've got their backs to the wall."

The Spurs were nursing a 60-59 lead with 8:11 remaining in the third quarter when Gervin took charge and scored the team's next 18 points.

He singlehandedly outscored the Bullets 18-9 over the next 5½ minutes to give the Spurs to a 78-68 advantage with 2:29 remaining. In one stretch, he reeled off eight straight points.

San Antonio increased its lead to 84-72 by the end of the quarter and led by as many as 20 points in the final period.

"We weren't able in any way to contain Gervin. I don't know how many points he had, probably 50," Washington Coach Dick Motta said before the final boxscore arrived. "We tried a lot of different people on him. I finally put (6-foot-7 forward) Greg (Ballard) on him, but by then I think Gervin had gotten bored with it.

"It was so easy for him, it was boring."

Gervin, celebrating the birth during Wednesday night's game of his third child, put in 19 of his 31 shots, some on dunks, others on soft 25-foot jumpers. Even with his blistering shooting, the Spurs managed only 45 percent as a team.

"It was an unbelievable performance," raved San Antonio Coach Doug Moe. "He got free and he hit the shots. He's tough to stop when he's not hot."

"I turned to (Louie) Dampier on the bench when he hit the first three (in the third quarter) and I said, 'This game is history.' He's probably one of the only guards in the league who can dominate a game," said center Billy Paultz.

The 20 third-quarter points was only one shy of the NBA playoff record of 21 points in a quarter, set in 1947 by Philadelphia's Joe Fulks.

CBA Downs Chargers

PIKEVILLE — Charles B. Aycock High School rolled up a 9-2 baseball victory over Ayden-Grifton Friday night.

The Chargers gained the initial lead in the game, pushing over their first run in the top of the first. Ed Coley provided the spark with a home run.

But Aycock came back with two in the second to take the lead for good. Jeff Best got things started with a solo home run, tieing it at 1-1. Dan Jones then singled and stole second. He scored with Keith Jackson singled.

What proved to be the winning run came in the third for Aycock when Greg Hare homered.

The other Aycock runs came in the fifth and sixth, when three crossed in each inning.

Ayden-Grifton's other run came in the sixth when David Smith reached on an error and scored when Corkey Teachey doubled.

Best led the Aycock hitting with three, while Hare and Wesley Satterfield each had two. No one for Ayden-Grifton had more than one.

The Chargers, 2-16, were to play host to Southern Nash on Saturday, then will travel to Southwest Edgecombe Monday night to replay a protested game.

Bucs Among NCAA Best

East Carolina's baseball team was ranked third in the nation in earned run average, according to the latest statistics released by the NCAA.

The Pirate ERA of 2.45 ranked behind only Pan-American at 2.33 and Jackson State at 2.41. Miami (Fla.), rated second in the nation according to one poll, is fourth behind the Bucs at 2.57.

ECU's Rick Derechailo was 16th in home runs with an average of 0.30 per game. Jim Auten of UCLA leads that category with a 0.52 average, while UNC-Chapel Hill's Jim Atkinson is 11th at 0.32.

Signs With L.A. Rams

HAMPTON, Va. — Derwin L. Tucker, a native of Greenville, N.C., was a fourth round draft pick of the Los Angeles Rams in the recent NFL draft.

Tucker, the son of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Tucker of Hampton, graduated from Bethel High School in Hampton, where he was a high school all-America selection. He played his collegiate football at the University of Illinois, where he was a defensive back. Chosen several times as the Big Ten Defensive Player of the Week during his career, he was selected this spring as the Outstanding Defensive Player for the Ilinii.

The 6-3, 194-pounder is the grandson of Robert L. Tucker and Annie Tripp, both of whom live in Greenville.

Astros To Be Sold

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros officials say execution of a substantive agreement to sell the National League club to a New York Naval architect would have a positive effect on the team.

"I think we have a good environment at this time and I likewise think if this materializes it will be positive," said Tal Smith, president and general manager of the Astros.

Officials of the Astros parent firm announced Friday the sale to John J. McMullen, who also is a limited partner in the New York Yankee ownership.

Other club owners will be asked to approve transfer of the ownership next Wednesday in Chicago.

No sale price was revealed but sources indicated the transaction that would include operation of the Astrodome and its adjacent convention facilities would draw from $15 to $20 million.

W.E. Odom, president of Astrodomain Corp., made the Friday announcement. Without revealing the prospective buyer, Odom had said on Thursday the league might be asked next week to consider an ownership transfer.

Odom said the agreement provides for McMullen to purchase Astrodomain's stock in the Houston Sports Association, which holds the National League franchise, the 40-year lease on the county-owned Astrodome, and the entertainment operations of the adjacent Astrohall and AstroArena.

Astrodomain has been operated since 1978 by Ford Motor Credit Co.

Earvin Johnson Decides To Turn Pro, Ends His College Career

By MALCOLM JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — In the end, Earvin Johnson decided the challenge of playing professional basketball was more alluring than another year as the campus darling of Michigan State cage fans.

So Friday, he announced he's cutting short his college career after two brilliant years and turning pro. And he said the millions of dollars waiting for him were not as important as testing his skills against the best players in the game.

The Michigan State sophomore flash, saying he's accomplished about everything possible as a Spartan, will offer himself in the June 25 National Basketball Association draft.

The announcement came as no surprise, since the 19-year-old Johnson led MSU to the NCAA championship this spring after two straight Big Ten titles. But the 6-foot-8 "Magic Man" said the decision still was not easy.

"It's been rough, you know — I've been going through a lot," the Lansing hometown hero told a packed news conference. "I thought it would be best for me. It'll be a challenge to me to go to the NBA and test my skills. We did a lot in college that I thought would take four years — but it took only two."

"So next season...I'll be turning pro."

The Los Angeles Lakers pick first in the draft, and have indicated they are keen on Johnson. He went to Los Angeles earlier this week to get a look at the city.

"It was nice — the only thing I don't like is the gas thing," Johnson said, referring to California's gasoline shortage.

In Los Angeles, Lakers owner Jack Kent Cooke said the "chances are good we will draft him, but that decision I have not made. I believe Earvin Johnson will easily be the most exciting player to play in the NBA since Julius Erving."

MSU Coach Jud Heathcote had a predictable reaction to Johnson's announcement, which he said means the Spartans, "instead of a super club, will be just a good club" next season.

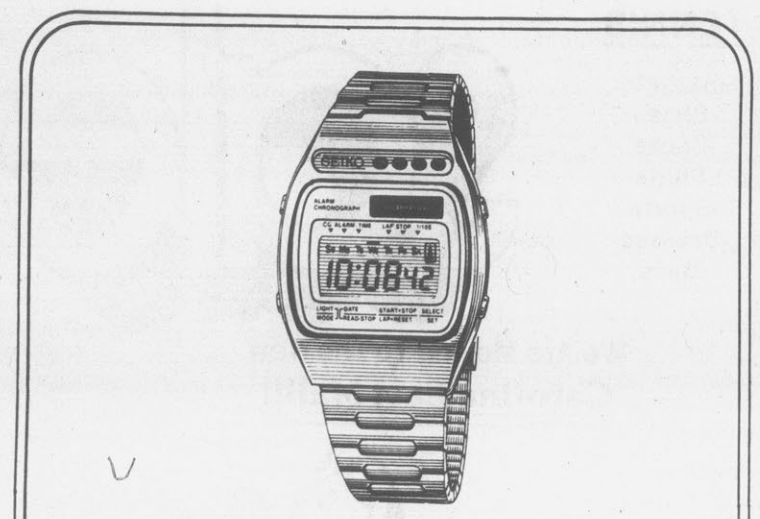

"I thought of two things, vomit and suicide," Heathcote said wryly. "And I might still do both." But he declared he was behind Earvin whatever his decision.

Johnson said he stayed up until 4 a.m. Friday making up his mind — and there were plenty of arguments pulling him toward home. Saturday midnght was the deadline to announce.

The lanky Johnson, who dazzled Spartan fans and opponents with his ball-handling wizardry, only touched on the importance of money in making his decision.

He said he expects "a nice contract," in the range of $600,000 a year in a four-or five-year period. Published reports this week said Los Angeles proposed a four-year contract worth at least $2 million but Johnson did not confirm that.

Johnson stressed he does not have dollar signs in his eyes.

Leisure Time On Ocracoke Ferry

RELAXING TRIP — Motorists relax on board one of North Carolina's 15 car-carrying vessels as they travel from Cedar Island to Ocracoke on North Carolina's Outer Banks. Leisure time is ample because the ferry trip is 23 miles across the Pamlico Sound and takes about two hours. (AP Laserphoto)

CEDAR ISLAND, N.C. (AP) — Motorists frequently snooze during the trip from Cedar Island to Ocracoke on North Carolina's Outer Banks.

If they're not napping, drivers may toss bread crumbs to the sea gulls, play cards or leave the car and stroll during the two-hour journey.

Leisure time is ample because the trip is made across 23 miles of Pamlico Sound on a state-operated ferry, one of 15 car-carrying vessels in North Carolina's ferry system.

Since starting with a single run between Ocracoke Island and the hamlet of Hatteras on the Outer Banks in 1957, the state's ferry system has grown to a multimillion-dollar operation that last year carried more than 1.3 million passengers and nearly half a million vehicles across the sounds and bays along North Carolina's coast.

With the possible exception of Louisiana's Mississippi River ferry system, North Carolina runs the most extensive ferry operation in the Southeast. The state shelled out $5.24 million for ferry operations last year but made less than half a million dollars on tolls.

Three of the state's seven routes are free. The maximum toll on any route is $5 for the two-hour cruise across Pamlico Sound to the banks.

The Outer Banks — a string of narrow, sandy barrier islands stretching down the North Carolina coast — are becoming increasing popular tourist attractions, and the two ferry routes to Ocracoke are the most popular in the ferry system. They are so popular that reservations are advised for travelers wanting to avoid the likelihood of being left on the dock when the 30 or so spots for vehicles on the boat fill up.

"Last July we had a fellow who wanted to get on a boat that was full. He said he was a (U.S.) senator," said Eugene Pond, a district superintendent in the ferry system.

The man got quite belligerent when his senatorial claim didn't have any effect.

"He couldn't have been a senator. A senator would have had better sense than to act like that," Pond said.

To get to Ocracoke, it's either take the ferries from Cedar Island near Morehead City or Swan Quarter to the north or make a 200-mile drive up the coast from Swan Quarter to bridges connecting the banks and the mainland.

The trip to the tiny village of Ocracoke is not just a boat ride across a bit of water. It is an excursion across Pamlico Sound, which, according to legend, was a haven for 18th-century pirates.

During the journey, ferries chug completely out of sight of land. Flocks of sea gulls frequently follow a boat all the way across the sound, swooping down to gobble bread crumbs tossed by passengers.

The trips are generally peaceful across the calm sounds, with passengers' stomachs easily rising and falling on gentle tides and wind waves. The serenity is a prelude to the isolation and quiet tourists and residents find on the Outer Banks.

The ferries are a mainstay in a world quite different from the flat farmlands of eastern North Carolina or the commercial Piedmont or the mountains to the west.

Most of the crewmen who run the ferries grew up in that different world. They are clannish among themselves and given to understatements when visitors inquire whether it's as much fun to be a captain on a ferry as it appears to be.

"I'd rather do it than anything else I know. I guess I just like being on the water," said I.D. Midgett, captain of the ferry Edward Hyde on the Ocracoke-Swan Quarter run.

Midgett, who lives in the appropriately named Outer Banks town of Waves, negotiates the shoals and shallows of the sound on two round trips a day. Like those of all ferry workers, his tour of duty runs seven days straight, followed by seven days off.

The Hyde, a $2.3 million vessel, is the flagship of the ferry system. It has quarters on board for three of its six crewmen and a deck lounge for passengers.

The Hyde and other ferries run year round, including holidays, and only rarely cancel their runs because of bad weather. About the most serious accident to befall the ferry system has been a vehicle on deck breaking loose during rough weather and banging its way around the boat. "People around here depend on the ferries and the tourists love the trips in and out," said Foy Shaw, who runs a hotel on Ocracoke.

"The only complaint I've ever heard is from people who drive down (from the northern area of the banks) and don't have a reservation and the ferries are full. But they usually just stay overnight, enjoy the village here and take the ferry out the next day."

N.C. Maps Available

The 1979-1980 state transportation map, now available, includes some 500 cartographic revisions, including the addition of the I-95 section from Kenley to Gold Rock, and the 4-lane US 264 from Zebulon to I-95 near Wilson.

The Department of Transportation and the Department of Commerce have ordered 1.2 million maps for distribution to the public at a cost of $138,000 or about 12 cents each.

Maps may be picked up free-of-charge at drivers licensing offices, highway division offices, truck weight stations, many public libraries, and at other locations.

Persons requesting maps through the mail should send a self-addressed, stamped envelope (an envelope able to hold a map 4½-inches by 8 inches with 40-cents postage) to the Public Affairs Office, Department of Transportation, P.O. Box 25201, Raleigh, N.C. 27611.

To Make Their Town A Living Laboratory

TRIANA, Ala. (AP) — Some 100 residents of this north Alabama fishing village, where the local diet relies heavily on fish from polluted streams, have taken the first step toward making the town a living laboratory for the study of the effects of DDT on humans.

Some of the 1,000 or so people in the town — most of them black — have been eating contaminated fish from Indian Creek and Huntsville Spring Branch for 30 years.

The problem was brought to light last year when the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Environmental Protection Agency said the streams, which flow into the Tennessee River, were contaminated by tons of DDT.

The chemical was once widely accepted as a highly efffective insect killer, but now is banned as a hazard to the environment because its residue does not break down with time.

Now a dozen disease specialists from the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta have set up a makeshift clinic at City Hall to take blood samples and run other tests on Triana people who want to take part.

The head of the team, epidemiologist Kathleen Kreiss, said Friday that the tests will be made on as many as 600 people and it could take up to six months for all the blood samples to run the course of laboratory processes.

When the CDC took blood samples from 12 volunteers in February, the results showed high concentrations of DDT residue. In some cases, the levels were 14 times higher than those found in people who worked in plants that make the now-banned pesticide.

Dr. Kreiss said if similarly high residues are found in the bodies of other residents, she will try to set up a registry of the people so their medical histories can be followed by physicians studying the effects of DDT on the human body.

And, she said, Triana could be the site of future testing programs.

The problem began in 1946 when Olin Chemical Corp. set up a DDT plant at the Army's Redstone Arsenal, between Triana and Huntsville. The plant was closed in the early 1970s.

TVA said thousands of tons of DDT has washed from the plant site into the area's streams, contaminating the water and the fish.

Those who signed up Friday were asked to fast overnight so blood samples could be taken 18 hours after an initial examination that included urinalysis, a blood sample, lengthy questionnaires about medical problems and personal habits of fish consumption, and checks of blood pressure, height and weight.

Some 50 commercial fishermen in the area will join the program Sunday. They claim their businesses have been ruined by the contamination of the waterways.

A team of six physicians from the Meharry Medical College in Nashville, Tenn., were on hand to observe the clinic in possible preparation for an active role in studying DDT effects.

But No Backrubs

CRANFORD, N.J. (AP) — For the man who has everything — except a wife — two Union County women have an answer.

For $20 an hour, "Rent-A-Wife" will water plants, clean house and do the shopping. And though the service is geared toward single men, Gail Kennedy and Freddi Kaiser, both divorced, don't discriminate.

"A lot of women scream 'I could use a wife,' " Mrs. Kennedy said.

Mrs. Kaiser said the idea was born from a session of "Coke drinking and hand wringing... We'd been doing it all our lives but never got paid for it." She added, though, that there are limits to what the service takes on.

"We've been invited to orgies and dinners for two. One caller asked 'Do you do backrubs?' We don't."

The enterprising women won't babysit, either.

Iacocca May Provide Firepower To Regain Profit

By JEFFERY L. SHELER
UPI Auto Writer

DETROIT (UPI) — The automobile business, says Lee A. Iacocca, is not for the weak or fainthearted.

"You must be smart and tough and know what you're doing," said Iacocca, reflecting on one of the most celebrated and mercurial careers in the history of the auto industry.

Smartness, toughness and a shamelessly driving ambition had carried the rough-hewn son of an Italian immigrant from the coal country of Pennsylvania to the pinnacle of two of the world's largest auto companies.

It sustained him in the dark days after a devastating fall from power at Ford Motor Co. and helped him bounce back undaunted to the top of another "Big Three" auto firm.

Now, after six months at the helm of the troubled Chrysler Corp., Lido Anthony Iacocca — the man in charge — again is mustering those traits as he grapples with perhaps the greatest challenge of his career.

When Iacocca accepted Chrysler Chairman John Riccardo's invitation to become president last November, he was handed the reins of a company awash in red ink and struggling to remain a viable competitor in the U.S. automotive market.

Riccardo, object of mounting personal attacks from stockholders upset by the firm's $250 million loss in the first three quarters of 1978, made it clear he needed Iacocca's "extra firepower" and said his main charge would be "to return Chrysler to profitabilty."

The reward, Riccardo said, would be commensurate with the task. In addition to a salary approaching $400,000 plus bonuses and a one-time payment of $1.5 million, Iacocca would be given absolute control over the corporate hierarchy within a year.

Iacocca, a tough-talking man with Roman features and dark stern eyes that seem always to glower, accepted with no feigned humility.

"I might not only save a blue chip company and 200,000 jobs, but also help the Big Three become an honest Big Three," he told an interviewer days after he stepped into the job, referring to the smallness of Chrysler in comparison to auto giants General Motors and Ford.

"This is really a new challenge, a new career, and I think I am going to enjoy it. I really do."

Iacocca wasted little time learning the ropes of the No. 3 auto firm.

Almost immediately he pinpointed weaknesses in the company's marketing force, engineering ranks and manufacturing system that were costing the company millions of dollars.

Lateness in getting new models out of engineering and onto the assembly line had cost the company dearly in the marketplace, cutting Chrysler's share of U.S. sales to less than 11 percent.

Quality problems surfaced on some models that had been rushed through the design process. Employee rolls — both in the plants and the offices — were overweight and needed paring.

Acknowledging there was "no one magic wand" that would correct all the problems, Iacocca went to work plugging the gaps.

His first target was the company's Highland Park executive suites.

In his first few months as president, Iacocca directed a series of top level shakeups in the firm's marketing, manufacturing and engineering departments. Not surprisingly, he chose to fill key posts in those departments with men he knew and had worked with during his 32 years at Ford.

He made repeated raids on Ford's ranks, luring three former Ford colleagues out of retirement and convincing one key executive to quit his job at Ford and join Chrysler.

One of Ford's top designers, Harold K. Sperlich, who preceded Iacocca to Chrysler, was promoted to group vice president in charge of engineering and product development.

"I would hope that talented people, be they in the dealer ranks or employees or what have you ... would be attracted (to Chrysler)," Iacocca told reporters.

He said he would "pick up the phone" in a minute to recruit other Ford employees "of that caliber" if the need arose.

Wielding the "free hand" authority granted him when he took the job, Iacocca ordered other cost-cutting measures including cuts in unneeded production and the indefinite layoff of hundreds of white-and blue-collar workers.

Four months after he began, there were signs his efforts were paying off. In February, Chrysler reported a relatively modest $48 million profit for the final quarter of 1978 to finish the year $200 million in the red.

"Even though I had high expectations for what he could do, I'd have to say it's going better than what I thought," Riccardo said, sizing up Iacocca's first 90 days at Chrysler.

It prompted Iacocca to cautiously predict 1979 "could be a profitable year" for Chrysler. He will confront Chrysler's stockholders for the first time May 15 in Syracuse, N.Y.

Many people were surprised that Iacocca, a millionaire whose entire adult life was spent in the pressure cooker of the auto industry, passed up a comfortable retirement after his highly publicized ouster from Ford. He reportedly turned down dozens of offers for higher paying jobs outside the auto industry before joining Chrysler.

"First of all, I didn't want to retire at 54," Iacocca explained. "I had my health and I liked this town, and I'd been in the business 32 years with one employer.

"I really didn't want to be banished from the auto scene. I love this stuff. I want to continue to do it."

Still, there are obvious differences — even handicaps — that make running a problem-plagued company like Chrysler a more complex task that heading a much larger corporation like Ford.

"Sure, there are a lot of problems when you don't have money running out your ears," he told reporters. "But here it's exciting. It's challenging. You get one shot at it and you've got to do it right the first time.

"I find I'm more excited every day. I'm like I was in the Ford Division days when I was a young kid."

After attending Lehigh University and Princeton on full scholarships, Iacocca joined Ford as a sales trainee in 1946, and for 10 years chalked up the experience and reputation of an aggressive, imaginative salesman.

By 1956, he was head of Ford's Philadelphia sales district and his performance caught the eye of Robert S. McNamara, then Ford's vice president and general manager. He became McNamara's protege and, in 1960, was named vice president and head of the company's Ford Division.

It was there he established himself as a strong "product man," and in 1964 took credit for introduction of Ford's highly successful Mustang — an achievement that prompted Time magazine to label him "the hottest boy in Detroit."

In 1970, Iacocca succeeded Semon "Bunkie" Knudsen as Ford president after Knudsen, a former GM man, fell from Henry Ford II's favor in much the same way Iacocca would eight years later.

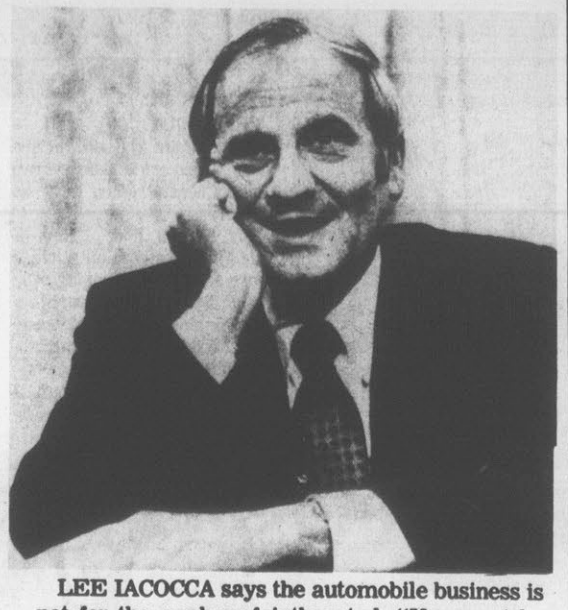

Along the way, Iacocca married. He lives with his wife, Mary, and two teen-aged daughters in the Detroit suburb of Bloomfield Hills.

Iacocca brought to Chrysler the strong-handed, flashy management style that became his trademark at Ford and which, some believe, was a key factor in his downfall at the No. 2 auto firm.

His one-man showmanship is in stark contrast to the well-oiled, efficient but dismal grey "perpetual motion machine" that runs General Motors Corp. Even Ford's upper echelon, with Iacocca gone and Henry Ford II soon to retire, is taking on a faceless genre.

He still refuses to discuss the events that led to his falling out with Henry Ford II and his sudden dismissal last summer.

"I'm Iacocca," he said. "I never look back."

Blood Service Support Recongized At Event

The blood committee of the Pitt Red Cross held its first annual awards and recognition luncheon Thursday at Pitt Memorial Hospital.

Committee chairman Ott Alford made the various plaque and awards presentations recognizing area contributions and leadership to the county's blood program.

The highlight of the presentations involved the recognition of Billy Ross for his many years of service to the county's blood program and the presentation of a permanent, framed plaque that will be placed at the Tar River Sub Center here.

Plaques were presented to various individuals and organizations for service and cooperation with the blood program, including: Bob Whichard as past blood committee chairman; Coca Coca and Pepsi Cola bottling companies; the Moose Lodge; Bob Carraway on behalf of the Gallon Donor Club; Betty Bailey as volunteers chairman;

Slim Short for WNCT's "Carolina Today" segment on the Pheresis machine; "The Daily Reflector"; the Grifton chapter of the National Junior Honor Society; the Greenville Jaycees; and representatives of D. H. Conley, Rose High, Farmville Central, Ayden-Grifton and North Pitt High Schools.

In addition, recognition awards were presented to representatives from Procter & Gamble, Eaton Corp, Union Carbide, Burroughs Wellcome, Greenville Utilties, the Greenville Public Works Department, the Inter-Fraternity Council at East Carolina University, the ROTC at ECU, and Lester Bunting and Lyman Daughtry as eight-gallon blood donors.

Members of the area blood committee were also recognized by Alford, as were the past chairmen of the committee and past chairpersons of the Service League.

Special recognition was given to Mrs. Ruth Taylor, executive secretary of the Pitt Red Cross, and also to Don McGlohon for making the luncheon possible, hospital adminstrator Jack Richardson, Chris Rowe of the Tar River Sub Center, and Dr. Lee West and Dr. Billy Bost.

Alford cited Ted Gartman as chairman of a new ad hoc committee to secure 2,000 new blood donors in the county.

The blood chairman reported that 3,600 pints of blood have been collected so far in the fiscal year with three more visits scheduled.

Memory Of A Son Being Kept Alive

MEMORY IS KEPT ALIVE — Fred Brown leans against 1959 Chevrolet that keeps the memory of his son alive. "He's dead in body, but in spirit he is with us still", Brown says. (UPI Photo)

By RICHARD H. GROWALD
UPI National Reporter

DEFEATED, Tenn. (UPI) — Fred and Maude Brown stroll through the garden to the 1959 Chevrolet parked against the shed and three white cats leap from the hood and race away through the dandelions of spring.

Mrs. Brown runs her right hands along the right and cream right rear fin. Her husband, his 68-year-old hands puffed by arthritis and gout, has to content himself with gently laying his right hand on a door handle.

"This is our son Mack's car. He's dead in body. But in spirit he is with us still. Mack is as alive as this car," Brown said.

Mrs. Brown reaches inside and caresses the steering wheel. Brown nods.

"Yes, we live in a place named Defeated. But Defeated is only a name. Mack's not defeated," he said.

This is central Tennessee, just north of the town of Carthage which produced Cordell Hull, Franklin D. Roosevelt's Secretary of State. It is tobacco country and for two centuries among these hills and hickories life has never been deluxe.

The names tell the story. The hill to the south is Devil's Elbow. Beyond it lies a town named Hog Town. This is Defeated, named for a pioneer disaster when the Indians won a battle. Farther up is the town of Difficult.

In the Defeated general store, next store to Brown's house, John B. Hackett, 78, laughed and pointed over the road to the stream. "Difficult is up Defeated Creek," he said and smiled again over a favorite local joke.

"It was so difficult getting up the hill before the road paving that the town up there was called Difficult," he said. Both Defeated and Difficult have general stores and the contents tells of differences.

Both deal big in power saws and horse bridles. But Defeated's store has cans of taco sauce and oyster stew and the carrying charges for the mountain folk is 1 percent a month.

Up in Difficult, General Store keeper C. C. Williams runs charge accounts at a cheaper 8 percent a year. He also has cans of pork brains in milk, sells jew's harps and sells for $15 the old patchwork quilts his son the real estate agent found above the Devil's Elbow.

Time does not speed in the hills. In Difficult 78-year-old Williams taps the dirt beside his gasoline pump. "Just under here you can find the foundation stones of the store here that got washed away in the May Fresh," he said.

A May Fresh is a mountain rainstorm. A visitor asks how well Williams remembers that May Fresh.

"Not too well. It was May 19, 1842," he said.

Down in Defeated, the Browns ignore time in keeping the memory of their son alive. His bedroom — chenille-quilted bed, dresser, mirror, framed high school diploma — is as he left it in death May 15, 1972.

"Mack was born with a bad lung," Brown said. "At age eight we took him to a doctor who said the bottom half of one lung was terrible bad and had to be cut out."

Mrs. Brown leaned against the 20-year-old Chevrolet.

"Well, Mack got upset and said he didn't want to be cut up by no knives and he carried on so that Maude said no, they wouldn't use no knives on Mack if he didn't want."

Mrs. Brown used her right foot to push away some of the grass risen by spring rains up around the new set of radial tires she has had put on the car.

"Mack grew up and he was ambitious. Wanted to be a truck driver in spite of his lung trouble. The doctors told him no, he couldn't stand truckin'."

Mrs. Brown opened the screen door and went inside the house.

"But Mack made it. Trucked all over. He so wanted his Million Mile Certificate."

Mrs. Brown emerged holding a framed certificate that said Mack E. Brown of Defeated, Tenn., trucked a million miles.

"Mack just made it. He got the certificate and then it was over. He had to go to bed. Mack asked the doctor if it was too late for the operation and the doctor said, yes, it was too late.

"Mack would have these spells. His head and fingers would turn blue. That meant a race to drive him to the hospital. Well, we got an oxygen tent and the equipment and installed it in Mack's room here and so he spent the last years here.

"Mack loved life. His little brown dog took sick and Mack took the dog into the oxygen tent with him but the little dog died and Mack sort of took that as an omen."

Brown shifted the sling holding his swollen left hand.

"In the last hours Maude and I held Mack in our arms."

"He was 39 when the Lord took him, undefeated here in Defeated."

Mrs. Brown laid a hand on her husband's shoulder.

A spring rain fell and the cats zipped under the Chevrolet and Mrs. Brown reached in and flicked on the windshield wipers. They worked.

Activity Wings Define Ranch Plan

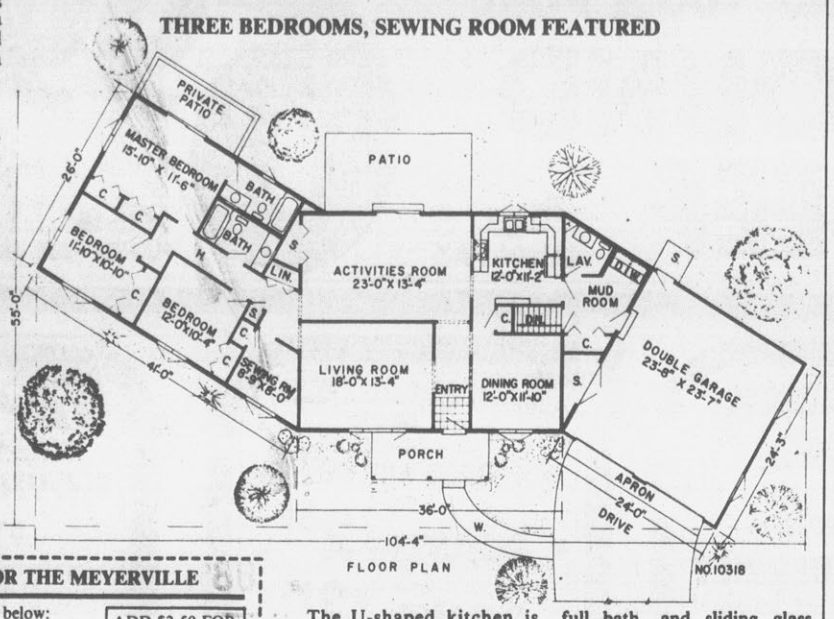

THREE BEDROOMS, SEWING ROOM FEATURED

With bedrooms occupying one wing, family living areas a second, and garage and mud room a third, the Meyerville, a family-oriented ranch plan, emerges as a well-defined, livable home.

In all, plans call for three bedrooms and two and one half baths and include storage areas, sewing room, and formal dining room.

Exterior lines are simple, with horizontal and vertical siding combined for interest. Inside, as tiled entry shields the formal living room from incoming traffic and allows access to dining room and activities room.

Adaptable to everyday use, the activities room stretches 23 feet and offers a storage closet. Sliding glass doors join the area to a sizable patio. The neighboring living room provides a quiet spot for more formal moments.

The U-shaped kitchen is efficiently planned with ample counter space, and is easily reached from the activities room or formal dining room. Conveniently sandwiched between kitchen and double garage are the mud room, with closet and laundry niche, and the half bath. Another storage area edges the garage.

To the left of family living areas is the bedroom wing, where the master bedroom is lavished with double closets, full bath, and sliding glass doors to its own patio.

Besides another full bath and two bedrooms, the area includes a closeted sewing room that can double as a den or nursery. Linen and storage closets are off the hallway.

Decorating A Tot's Room Is Hardly Child's Play

By BARBARA BASLER
AP Newsfeatures

Decorating a child's room is anything but child's play.

Of course, the decorating can be fun, but it is also challenging because the child you are decorating for today will be a pre-teen or young adult tomorrow.

"If the room is too cute, too adorable, the child will outgrow it," cautions Ms. Ann Heller, an interior designer who specializes in editorial decorating — creating those picture-perfect rooms that appear in decorating magazines and advertisements.

And, as a parent, she has used her own childrens' rooms as a kind of laboratory, decorating and redecorating them to try out new ideas, new colors, new patterns.

"In decorating a child's room I think it is important to stick with simple, versatile furniture that will grow with the child, and change with the child," she says.

"I avoid anything ornate — French Provincial for instance — and anything gimmicky, like the cowboy look for a little boy's room. That's because when it comes time to up-date the room for an older child, these pieces won't blend easily."

Furniture, she explains, should be simple so that it can indeed blend with changes in the decor. And it should be versatile, to serve one purpose at one age, and another later.

For furniture that fits both these requirements, Ms. Heller suggests something in the Shaker style, or a campaign piece or a parson's table.

The parson's table, for example, can be used to store and display stuffed animals in a young child's room. Later, it can serve as a desk or a dressing table.

Any decorating project is a matter of time, taste and money. And in decorating a child's room, Ms. Heller suggests investing your money in the permanent, "the things that will have an 18-year life span."

"I would put my money into a good mattress and box spring for the child," she says. "And I would invest in a good floor of polished wood or vinyl because both are attractive, durable and versatile."

Later, when the child is older, Ms. Heller says, carpeting can be added to the room, "but I would avoid carpeting in a youngster's room, because it doesn't take punishment well."

Finally, Ms. Heller says, she would invest money in "the kind of furniture we've been discussing — a few good, simple pieces that will never intrude on the room or the person living in it."

By investing in the bed, the floor and a few good pieces of furniture, you are then free to "improvise and have fun," Ms. Heller says. "You can go crazy with fabrics, paints, wallpaper and artwork. And all these can be changed as the child grows up, and the basics will still be stylish and functional."

Morever, if you improvise some inexpensive and attractive pieces on your own, you can change them or dump them with-out wasting huge sums of money.

Ms. Heller, for example, likes to create her own headboards.

"In one child's room I took two pieces of tall lumber, 4 inches wide and 4 feet long, and placed them behind the bed, on either side. In between, I can use paint or wallpaper for more of a headboard effect, and later, I can add another piece of wood to serve as a shelf."

Ms. Heller says that in decorating a child's room you should consult the child.

"Talk to the child and find out his likes and dislikes," she advises. "That's the way children develop their own taste."

Of course, she says, "consulting the child doesn't mean giving him everything he wants. That may not be possible or practical. But, then, he has to learn that, too."

GARDEN CLINIC

N.C. State University Answers Timely Gardening Questions

Q. How can I rid my yard of fire ants? I live on a canal. (H.S., Jacksonville)

A. Thoroughly drench the mounds with a pesticide called "Star Bar Fire Ant Killer." You should be able to buy this pesticide at your local FCX or garden supply store. Use of gasoline or other pesticides will only cause the fire ants to relocate their mounds. (Charles Apperson, extension entomologist)

Q. My tomatoes were attacked by worms last year in midsummer. How can I avoid this problem in 1979? (E.S., Rocky Mount)

A. Tomatoe fruitworms are common and most abundant from late July until frost every year. Weekly sprays or dusts of the insecticide carbaryl (Sevin) are necessary to produce worm-free fruit. Remember that the insecticide must cover the foliage to ensure contact with worms. Check with your local agricultural extension agent or pesticide dealer for additional help. (K.A., Sorensen, extension entomologist)

DA VINCI PAINTING

Improving the energy efficiency of a building is known loosely as retrofitting, a word most of us had never heard of until a few years ago.

Retrofitting is the central theme of a new book, "From The Walls In," by Charels Wing. He is a scientist-teacher who, with the help of his wife, some students and $8,200, took a 14-room, two-story house and transformed it into a residence that, without the benefit of solar orientation got through a Maine winter on four cords of wood.

Wing is a man who leaves nothing to the imagination. There is no aspect of retrofitting that escapes his attention. Included among the subjects given detailed treatment are such things as forces and units, stresses in the house frame and building loads, as well as the more familiar matters of heat losses and gains, insulation, vapor barriers and weatherstripping. This, then, is a book by a person with a sicentific mind who provides calculations that are likely to cause some readers to skip pages of tables and computations.

Wing's mathematical sorties presumably are of inestimable value to the serious student of construction. In fact, he founded a place called "Cornerstones: The Wing School of Shelter Technology," located in Brunswick, Maine. There, he and his wife, Susan, educate people on how to design and build their own homes and how to retrofit. Previously, Wing received a doctorate in physical oceanography from MIT, where he built a gravity meter that tracted the attention of government space officials and got him a job as a principal investigator on the Apollo experiment.

This paragraph of advice from the Wing book demonstrates his gift for words, as well as providing a clue to what retrofitting often entails.

"When shopping for a house to retrofit or even when considering extensive renovating to your present house, fantasy is an ever-present danger. Retrofitting is a creative art, and fantasy is a necessary ingredient in architectural activity. But fantasy knows no limits; unbridled fantasy magnifies results while reducing cost and labor estimates. My personal fantasy factor is 2X — everything costs twice as much, takes twice as long, is twice as hard — as I have learned from hard experience ... So listen hard to what may be the best advice I have to offer. The key to success is fantasy bounded by reality."

"From The Walls In" is published by Little, Brown & Co. $9.95, a paperback original.

Mowers Can Claim Fingers And Toes

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — This year, some 77,000 people, as many as live in Wilmington, Del., or Reno, Nev., will be injured mowing their lawns; and some 10,000 of these will lose fingers or toes, predicts the Consumer Products Safety Commission.

It has reached the point, says the commission, that it is considering setting safety standards for lawn mowers, including a requirement that motors cut off when the handle is released.

Most accidents take place when people attempt to clean a blade or grass chute while the mower is running, the commission reports.

The most obvious, and often ignored, way to prevent accidents is to turn the motor off when adjustments must be made, says Larry Voss' who as building and grounds supervisor is responsible for mowing 128 acres of lawn at the Reynolds Tobacco headquarters here.

Mowing goes on every day in spring and summer, and safety is a constant concern for Voss, who notedthat "a mower can turn a stone the size of a golf ball into a 170 mph projectile."

He gives these safety tips for handling power motors:

— Learn to operate the mower properly and keep it in top condition. As the old saying goes, when all else fails, read the instructions;

— Rake away stones, sticks and other objects before mowing;

— Wear sturdy leather shoes to protect your feet. Steel-toed safety shoes are even better.

— Push, never pull, power mowers to avoid pulling them over your toes.

— Mow across slopes or banks when using a hand mower, up and down with a riding mower. Never mow slopes when the grass is wet.

— Never leave the mower unattended while it is running.

— Don't allow children or young teen-agers to operate power motors. They don't appreciate the potential hazards.

— Never refuel the engine while it is running or hot. That's just asking for a fire or explosion.

— Don't use a plug-in electric mower in the rain, or when the grass is wet.

Denies Mandatory Controls Plans

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The Carter administration continues to deny it has any plans to institute mandatory wage-price controls, but the pressure to do more about the inflation problem is clearly growing.

Top administration officials acknowleged this past week that inflation is expected to reach 8.5 percent this year — or one-and-a-half percentage points higher than the wage guideline they are asking workers to observe.

Others in the private sector are predicting even higher rates of inflation. The Business Council, a group of corporate executives, forecast, for example, that inflation will be 9.5 percent this year.

For the first three months of the year the consumer price inflation has been running at an annual rate of 13 percent. Even if inflation slows, as it is expected to, there is broad agreement that for the fullyear it will wind up well above the 7 percent wage guideline that is part of Carter's anti-inflation program.

So far, comments from Washington indicate that the short-term solution is simply to let workers take the inflation loss and hold to a 7 percent guideline. But there may be efforts to tightened guidelines for prices.

Some economists already are writing the obituary for the voluntary wage-price program unveiled last fall. At the time, government economists were predicting that the program could bring down this year's inflation rate to 6 or 6.5 percent.

"It does appear that the guidelines are falling apart," Herbert Neil, vice president and economist at Harris Bank of Chicago, recently commented.

In other developments this past week:

—The House of Representatives rejected President Carter's standby emergency gasoline rationing plan amid arguments over how gasoline should be alloted to geographic regions.

—Gasoline lines continued to plague California where sales in many areas were limited by a system tied to odd-even license plate numbers. Elsewhere shortages forced Sunday closings or shorter hours at some stations. The Justice Department announced it would look into anti-trust implications of a threatened shutdown of gasoline stations for May 17 through May 20. The threatened shutdown is led by California dealers angry at Energy Department regulations on profit margins.

—The United States and China moved closer to a formal trade agreement. Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps and Chinese officials signed an agreement settling claims dating back to the Communist takeover in 1949. American businessmen will be paid 41 cents on the dollar for the $196.9 million in claims from property the communists seized. The U.S. government, which had frozen Chinese assets in this country, agreed to return an equivalent amount to the Chinese.

Fascinating Fragments Of A Slave's Life Story

SOAKING UP THE SOLAR — Lunch time brings a break for office workers in mid-town New York as they take advantage and soak up a few sun rays for their faces using cardboard reflectors Thursday. Temperatures were expected to reach into the 90's bringing thousands of New Yorkers out of the winter and into the summer. (AP Laserphoto)

By Dr. H. G. JONES
For The Associated Press

CHAPEL HILL, N. C. (AP) — Charity Bowery was like many other slaves who had never been permitted to learn to read or write.

When she told her story in New York in 1838, she was imprecise about her age and the names of her previous owners.

She thought that she was 65; that would have made her birth year about 1773, just before the Revolution. One thing she was sure of: She had lived on a plantation called Pembroke, about three miles from Edenton, on North Carolina's Albemarle Sound.

History is the loser because Charity did not record the surname of her first master, for he was a good man who promptly ran off any overseer who mistreated his servants.

Her mistress, too, was a loving person who treated all slaves with great kindness and who gave each of her children one of Charity's brothers or sisters.

Charity apparently was a favorite in the household, for she was allowed to learn skills that were often limited to the white females — spinning, knitting, weaving.

And when Charity married, a preacher performed the ceremony, "for mistress didn't like to have her people take up with one another, without any minister to marry them."

Finally, before her death, the master's wife instructed her children that Charity and her husband were never to be separated.

Inherited by a son who got into financial trouble, the couple was, at Charity's suggestion, sold to a man named McKinley (or perhaps McKinsey), "a fine old Christian heart."

This new owner soon died, however, and Charity found his widow far less humane. Later it was learned that in his will McKinley had ordered Charity and her husband manumitted — freed from slavery — but the widow refused to divulge the instructions.

Charity continued to live in bondage, and her husband died without ever knowing about the provision for freedom.

Intent upon earning enough money to buy the freedom of some of her children, the widowed Charity set up an "oyster board" alongside the road near Edenton, and in her spare time she sold oysters and crackers to passersby.

Among her regular customers was a kind old man who always called her "Aunt Charity." One day, to Charity's surprise and delight, the man purchased her and five of her children from Mrs. McKinley.

She was even more thrilled when her new owner announced that he was emancipatng Charity and her youngest child, Kitty.

To prevent being re-enslaved, Charity and her child would have to go to the north. Before she left, however, she took all of her savings to her former mistress, Mrs. Kinley, and sought to buy the freedom of her 12-year-old son, Richard.

The widow refused, and instead sold the boy to a speculator. Then Charity offered to buy her little orphan grandson, Sammy. Again Mrs. McKinley refused.

Free at last, she was haunted by the fact that 15 of her 16 children were still in bondage. One of them was so loyal to a wealthy white woman that she was permitted to visit New York with her mistress.

Charity learned that the girl could be emancipated for $400, so the aging freedwoman began taking in washing to earn the necessary money.

It is not known if Charity lived long enough to buy the freedom of this daughter, for in 1838 her health was failing. However, we do know that she lived long enough to express her feelings toward her cruel former mistress.

Charity Bowery's story was told in 1839 by Lydia Maria Child and published by the American Anti-Slavery Society.

Lia Dunn Recalls Five Evacuations

By PATRICIA MOORE

Crises had forced Lia Dunn to abandon her home five times before she immigrated to the United States.

On the morning of Feb. 19, she made her sixth evacuation. She had been warned of possible danger of poisonous fumes from the Coastal Chemical plant fire a few miles away.

But this time was different. Dr. Dunn knew she would be returning to her tranquil home in a local subdivision.

The previous evacuations had occurred during wartime. Then, bombs were exploding. Sirens were wailing. Food was scarce. At one time during World War II in Germany, she slept in a bed warmed by heated bricks and awoke to frozen toothpaste.

What was Lia Dunn thinking on Feb. 19 as she departed from her house?

"I thought to myself that five times I had left my home, turned the key in the lock and left it for all time, going out with just what I could carry and never returning. Those times I left my home because of communists or bombs...much more horrible than this," she said. "You cannot compare the two."

Not only did Dr. Dunn survive World War II in Germany, but she also, as a young child, lived through the Russian Revolution.

Her father was a Russian civil servant stationed in the Baltic Sea area that later became Estonia. It was there he met her mother, who was of Baltic-German descent.

When the Bolshevik Revolution began in 1917, he was arrested and placed on the "death list" because he was a member of the Russian nobility as well as a civil servant and former Czarist army officer. At the time, the family was living in Valga.

Though she was only 11 years old during those unsettled times, Dr. Dunn remembers the house searches her mother, sister and she were subjected to following her father's arrest. "It was usually at night that they would hit the door and say 'Obysk'" (search), she remembers. "Mother and I never undressed anymore. We went to bed in clothes so that if they came, we would be dressed for it."

The search group was comprised of several men in uniform, accompanied by two women whom the frightened population referred to as gun wenches. The women were worse than the men. "They searched pockets, looked under mattresses," Dr. Dunn says. "One woman spat in my face."

Once, when her doll's china closet was locked and the gun wench could not open it, she took the bayonet on her gun and smashed the door open. It was common for the searchers to throw crystal and china against the fireplace. "Money and jewelry they stuffed in their pockets," Dr. Dunn recalls. One of the searches resulted in the family's grand piano being demolished.

How does she feel now, recalling those tumultous days?

"It was once upon a time, such a very long time ago," she says without emotion.

But there was good to remember, too. Her father survived, in spite of the death list.

"A boy who had worked for father had become a man of power," she relates. "He learned that my father was in prison, and because my father had been very good to this man, he told the prison head he needed my father to work." Through a misunderstanding, her father was released from imprisonment in Riga and immediately went into hiding.

However, neither mother nor family knew this. Instead, they read a newspaper article detailing her father's execution.

To provide financial support, her mother resorted to selling jewelry and teaching violin and music lessons. The servants left because the communists frowned on service to the bourgeoise. Fear and suspicion were prevalent.

Fortunately for the family, courage also existed. A merchant who knew them traveled hundreds of miles to tell her mother that the husband-father survived, contrary to the newspaper account.

And then, "one unexpected morning, he was there," she remembers. However, it was some time before her Russian-born father could again work in Estonia, which declared its independence from Russia in 1918. Eventually, he learned the language and gave private accounting courses and did bookwork.

Because nobility was a liabili-

Parents Anonymous Aids Parent And Child

By JOE WING
For The Associated Press

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — Before you whack little Willie again, you might well call (800) 421-0353. In California, it's (800) 352-0386.

That's the toll-free number of Parents Anonymous, the largely volunteer national organization dedicated to the proposition that no child should be abused physically, emotionally or sexually.

One of the three women answering the hot line at headquarters here is Alice Loper, who is long accustomed to the tense voices of mothers and fathers driven half frantic by their kids.

Untold numbers of parents never make such calls. Instead, they go beyond the screaming stage and hit, kick, bite or burn their children, bounce them off walls or twist arms until bones crack.

Some 1.5 million cases of child abuse were reported in 1978, and Parents Anonymous estimates that three or four times as many went unreported. As a result, they say, thousands of youngsters die each year and thousands more suffer permanent physical, and emotional, damage.

Mrs. Loper, well aware of this, tries quietly to learn from the caller whether a child is in actual danger.

"Maybe it's a threatening situation," she says, "and then we never refuse to talk. If you just hold them on the phone long enough you may save a life. If you've had children of your own you can assure them that spilling a glass of milk isn't the end of the world. Sometimes they end up laughing."

But time on the 800 line is precious. Other uptight parents may be waiting. If the crisis is not acute, Mrs. Loper tries to refer the caller to one of the 900 or more P.A. chapters around the country. Or suggest that they form one of their own.

It is in these chapters, each consisting of about five or six parents and a volunteer professional sponsor, that the fundamental work of the organization is done.

That's because no telephone conversation is likely to solve an abuse problem. It takes weeks and months of talking, handholding and mutual aid to wean some parents from the habit of unleashing wrath on children.

Chapter members meet once a week to relate their compulsions towards violence, to offer one another suggestions that have worked for them (try kicking a chair instead of hitting Susie), to draw strength from the sponsor, and to assure one another of understanding and love.

"Don't say never," says a tract put out by New York City's independently organized Parents Anonymous group, "Just say not today."

Leonard Lieber, the national administrator, says the No. 1 problem is emotional, not physical, abuse. Lieber, a marriage counselor and clinical social worker with a master's degree in social work, founded Parents Anonymous in 1970 along with a woman known as Jolly K.

"Almost any abuse destroys a child's self image and in that sense is abusive," he says. "Just not speaking can be abusive, or not spending time with a youngster, or telling him how bad he is."

Is abusive behavior becoming more common?

"Things are about the same as ever," says Lieber, "but people are more willing to look the problem in the face."

Lieber, a middle-aged father separated from his wife, speaks from the headquarters he shares with Margo Fritz, director of training, three aides and stacks of literature.

"Every parent has an abuse problem now and then," he says, "and every parent does something that he regrets later. But corporal punishment in itself is not necessarily abusive."

What, then, constitutes abuse? Mrs. Fritz, mother of three and a former social worker in Los Angeles County, explains:

"The distinction is between restraining a child for his own good and dumping on him the anger that originates from another source."

Often, she says, it's a bad relationship between parents, Or self-hate that stems from a parent having been abused as a child.

P.A.'s booklet for new mothers has this to say:

"It is perfectly understandable for a parent to feel very angry at a child who has been crying for a long time. You can't leave, and you can't turn it off, and you feel guilty because there is nothing you can do.

"It is essential for your wellbeing that you have at least one person you can trust to take care of the baby for several hours so that you can get out of the house. Non-stop child care turns the nicest people into witches."

Lieber says that P.A. now has 45 state organizations, some of them with their own toll-free lines; that the work is carried on in places as distant as Australia and Europe, and in places as unlikely as prison wards; and that chapters have been growing at a rate of more than 100 a year. He estimates that 15,000 to 20,000 hot line calls are fielded annually.

The cost, he says, is $500,000 a year, mostly federal funds, with a budget of $150,000 for headquarters.

It gets results, according to Jean M. Baker, Ph.D., of Tucson's Behavior Associates. She was director of a P.A. evaluation conducted some time ago for the U.S. Office of Child Development.

She says 69 percent of the P.A. members who answered a questionnaire said the program had benefited them a great deal, and 28 percent said it had benefited them some.

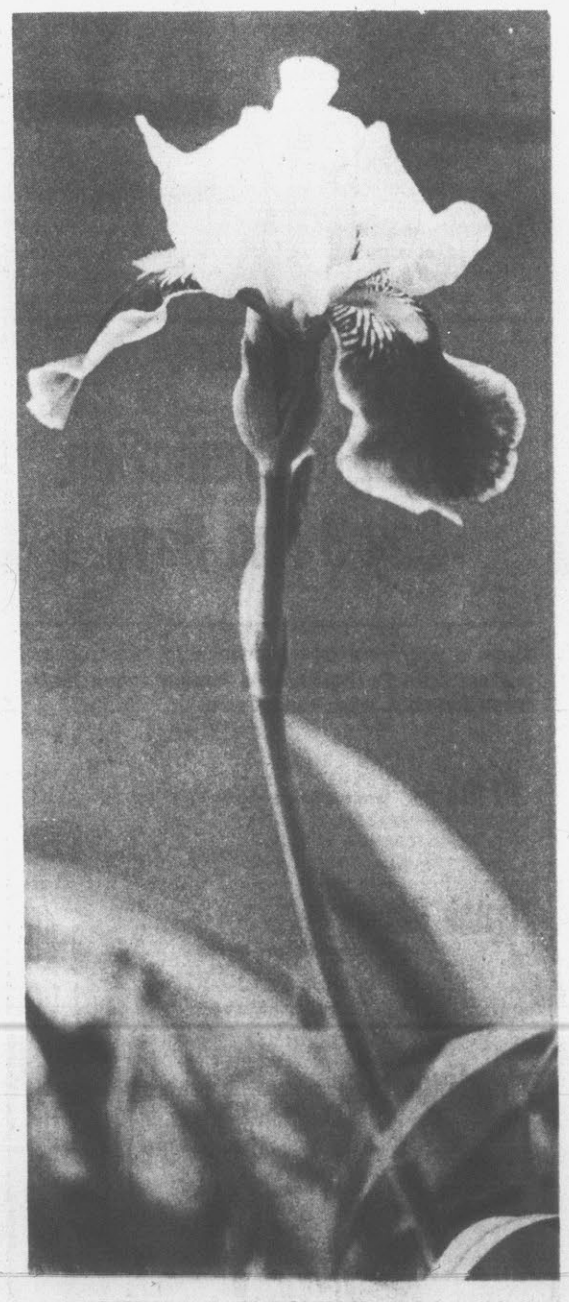

P.A. doesn't like to separate children from parents or to call in authorities, says the report, "but it does not take a wait and see attitude if a child and family are in danger and a parent refuses to lessen a potential hazard."

Who are abusive parents? They span all income and educational levels. Seventy-five percent of those in the survey experienced some sort of abuse in childhood, and 17 percent suffered sexual abuse. Seventyseven percent said they practiced verbal abuse towards their children, 62 percent physical abuse or neglect, 71 percent emotional abuse or neglect. Usually just one child in a family is singled out as a scapegoat.

P.A. started after Jolly K, a handsome 5-foot-10½ mother and confessed child beater, had gone to nine local and county agencies for help with her own abusive behavior — behavior stemming from a childhood spent in three dozen foster homes and institutions and from her broken first marriage.

She says she was on the verge of destroying both herself and Faith, the younger of two daughters, when she met Lieber, then a social worker in a mental health clinic. He helped her to a certain extent, she says, then challenged her to do something herself about her problem. She still is a P.A. consultant and troubleshooter. She uses the nickname, she says, because it helps convince parents that their anonymity will be respected.

"Child abuse is a family problem," Mrs. Fritz has written, "affecting the function and lives of every member of the family. As a rule, one parent will be the active abuser, while the other is the passive abuser. It is rare indeed that one parent can honestly claim total ignorance of the other's abuse problem."

A MOTHER'S DAY LOVELY. . .Irises bloom generally around Mother's Day though this year's season has been a little early, the Shirleys say.

Their Flower Favorites Are Irises And Lilies

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

FARMVILLE — "The irises bloom for three weeks or so around Mother's Day," Mrs. Bobbie Shirley said, "and then the day lilies are opening for about the same length of time around Father's Day. Ralph and I love each bloom of both in its season—and all our other flowers, too."

"Ralph's just as bad as I am," Mrs. Shirley said of her husband of nearly 37 years. "Every morning as soon as I get up, I go out to see what new blooms have opened, what shades I can see, what color beards the new irises have, how beautiful each one is. Before he goes to work, Ralph does the same thing. And as soon as he comes in from work, he's out to see the flowers again. But I've beat him to it — I've already been out several times during the day."

"Work" for Ralph Shirley is being an attendant in the Emergency Room of Pitt County Memorial Hospital. "I love it," he said. "You can't work around a place like that and not forget all about yourself."

"Work" for Bobbie Shirley is providing day care for four children in their home at 204 W. Pine Street here. Each of the children, two boys both four years old, and two girls, aged nine and 10, started staying with the Shirleys when he or she was about two months old. "They all seem to feel at home here and we feel about all of them as if they're grandchildren," Mrs. Shirley said.

Mrs. Shirley said the children respect her flowers and seldom pick or trample any. "I think children grow up to love growing things if they're taught to early," she said. "Our son, Steve, always said he'd sooner break a piece of furniture than one of mama's flowers."

The Shirleys have two sons, Mickey, who lives in Ohio, and Steve of New Bern. There are three grandchildren.

"I can't ever remember," Mrs. Shirley said, "when I didn't have a flower yard. I did even as a small child."

But, she said, it's only in the past four years or so that she and her husband have developed their enthusiasm for irises and day lilies.

"We like them," she said, "because there's so much variety in color and form." Their yard attests to the variety — they have more than 30 types of irises and more than 25 types of day lilies.

"We also like them," she said, "because they come back and add to their numbers every year. Every spring we visit Powell's Nursery in Princeton or Mrs. Jernigan's lily farm near Newton Grove and buy fans of whatever varieties we don't already have. Usually my sister, Dixie Hinson, who lives next door, and my niece, Martha Allen, who lives out near Joyner's Crossroads, go with us. We all share and share alike, so basically each of them have every variety that we do."

Mrs. Shirley, a young 62, said, "I think appreciating beauty in plants, people, everything around you keeps you young, plus having a healthful, steady routine — and being lucky. I know I'm lucky. I don't feel any different from the way I did years ago. I have what some people might consider a sameness in my routine, but I like everything I do. The children keep me on the go and we have good meals and regular hours and I'm out working in my flowers every single afternoon from early spring till late fall.

"Some folks might call the digging and weed pulling and planting that Ralph and I do every afternoon work, but we don't. To me, it's relaxation — one of the things I enjoy most in the world.

"Look at this lavender iris!' Did you ever in your life see anything so beautiful?"

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Let's hear it out there today for the Non-Mothers. There aren't any songs sung for them. There aren't any appropriate cards written for them. There aren't any days set aside for them. But they exist.

They are people who experience all the joy, the caring, and the pain of motherhood. They just weren't there at the delivery.

Some Non-Mothers are disguised as teachers who spend more time with the children than their mothers. They contribute ambition, hope, expertise, time, and a sense of self to a child. After all, isn't that what a mother is all about?

Other Non-Mothers are older brothers and sisters of a child who share bedrooms, pizza and their lives. They take them to the bathrooms, the movies on Sunday and hold them when they're rejected by a parent and there is no one else to cling to. Isn't that what a mother is all about?

There's the father Non-Mother, who pinch hits occasionally at getting meals, mopping up, or sitting through a pageant when the mother can't do it. He offers a back-up system of support, sharing and security. Isn't that what a mother is all about?

Some Non-Mothers have experience. They're called grandparents, and whether their custody of a child is occasional, part-time or full-time, they add to the child another dimension of another time — another set of values -an appreciation for things that endure. Isn't that what a mother is all about?

There are Non-Mothers who are paid for being a mother, but it takes nothing away from their involvement. They kiss away the hurts, listen to their stories and, what is more important, are there. Isn't that what a mother is all about?

There are a lot of Non-Mothers who touch a child's life in a million ways and who, at first glance, don't seem to fit the role. An angry motorist whom a child has never seen before will yell at him to get his tricycle out of the street. A guidance counselor will tell him to get off his bottom and work! A shop owner will chew him out for lifting a piece of penny bubble gum.

At a moment when he needed it, he was picked up and pointed in the right direction by someone who took the time to care about him. Isn't that what mothering is all about too?

ty in the newly established country, Dr. Dunn began to feel like a second-class citizen.

By the time she approached young adulthood, she found more barriers to her desire for success. "Having a Russian name and a Germanic background was not easy in Estonia. The only people who would hire us were Germans or Jews," she recalls.

So, in 1938, she left for Germany. Her intention was to find a job, gain a better education and return eventually to Estonia.

But Hitler and the Third Reich were on the rise.

Lia Protopopoff and her relatives were, in simple terms, faced with Hitler on the one side and communists on the other. Baltic Germans were given an opportunity to leave Estonia and Latvia. "For most of them, this saved their lives," Dr. Dunn says.

Many of those who did not leave when the communists moved in shot themselves. Dr. Dunn remembers that an aunt and an uncle who remained in Estonia were deported by the communists to Siberia in a cattlecar and were never heard from again.

Then the second world war began. Lia Dunn was in Germany.

"Everyone had to work or not get rations," she says.

She chose to work for a private steel firm rather than for the Nazis. But when the steel firm opened a branch in Russia, Dr. Dunn was sent to its Kiev branch because her knowledge of languages was valuable. She was proficient in Russian and French and "perfect in German."

Later, when the Germans left Russia, Dr. Dunn took time out for gall bladder surgery. She was also reunited with her parents in eastern Germany. Upon her recovery, she worked for a news agency, first in Vienna and later in Berlin. Then came more surgery.

In January 1945 she was called to the office of the Supreme Command of the Navy and given orders to translate broadcasts from Radio Russia. She lived outside Berlin in a camouflaged barracks. Air raids took place twice a day, from 10 to 11 in the morning and again at night, depending on the moon and the weather.

Then she, along with other office personnel from the Supreme Command of the Navy, was evacuated to northwest Germany.

"All these events bring you to rethink your values," she says. There had been a time in her life when one would have been upset if a maid broke a china cup that belonged to a set of 24. "But in wartime — war everywhere around, bombs everywhere — people lost factories and came out with a smile. You don't think of material things. If your loved ones were alive somewhere, you were thankful.

"One lived from one day to another. When I was in the bomb shelter, I prayed, 'Dear God, if I have to die, let a bomb kill me and not cripple me. So many were crippled."

The unconditional capitulation of Germany ended the bombing, but not the suffering. Dr. Dunn traded her remaining jewelry for cigarettes from the Canadians who first occupied northwest Germany. She then took the cigarettes to farmers and bartered with them for bacon and potatoes. The black market was also a source of necessities.

Her knowledge of languages led to a job in postwar Germany working as interpreter for the U.S. Resettlement Department of the International Refugee Organization.

War and circumstance ended forever her hope of becoming an editor.

Has this made her bitter?

"If something happens to you alone," she says, "you can feel bitter. When everybody is cold, when everybody is hungry, when everybody is suffering from the same things, you cannot feel bitter; you just try to survive."

For many years, living in the United States had been a far away dream. She believed that in the United States, everyone had a chance — it did not matter where you came from.

In 1951, she came to the country where everyone, "if not an imigrant, is a descendant of one. You are accepted as soon as you come. I've never felt like a second-class citizen here."

She settled eventually in the deep South and married Charles G. Dunn, a Southerner born on the Alabama cotton plantation of his grandparents and a former Marine who had served in the Pacific. He, also, was no stranger to war and suffering.

She earned the Ph.D. degree in Germanic languages and literature from Tulane Univeristy and taught at Loyola in New Orleans. After her husband retired, the couple moved to Greenville, where she taught for a number of years at East Carolina Univeristy. Mr. Dunn died in 1970.

Last year, a friend she had not seen for 28 years persuaded her to visit Germany. The trip provided her with an unexpected insight. Traveling through Italy and Germany, she found she longer belonged to the old world

The best part of the trip for her was coming home. When the customs officials at Dulles Airport said, "Welcome back home, I could have hugged them," she says. "I was glad to be home."

Fashions repeat

NEW YORK (UPI) — Old fashions never die, they just phase back in in new guises, says the Jewelry Industry Council. For example: the wide-shouldered look and ankle strap shoes popularized by Joan Crawford in movies of the '40s and '50s and decollete necklines of the same period, filled in with big beads and multi-strand necklaces. The matched look in jewelry is also back, the council says: bracelets and necklaces, rings with matching earrings and necklaces set with such stones as tiger's eye, jade, opal and coral.

Cooking Is Fun

TURKEY TERIYAKI

Repeated by request, this method of treating turkey wings suggested to me by cookbook author James Beard.

4 whole turkey wings, about 4¾ pounds
Salad oil
2-3rds cup soy sauce
¼ cup cream sherry
2 tablespoons minced ginger root
2 large cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon grated orange rind

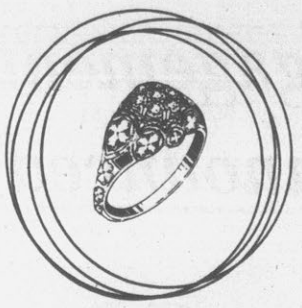

Cut off wing tips; freeze tips for use in making stock. Cut each of the wings, at joints, into 2 portions. Dip in oil. Roast, uncovered, in a single layer in a shallow pan into which they just fit, in a preheated 375-degree oven for 45 minutes. Stir together soy sauce, sherry, ginger, garlic and orange rind; pour over wings. Cover pan tightly with foil. Continue roasting at 375 degrees until tender — about 45 minutes longer. Makes 4 servings.

ORANGE-BRAN GRIDDLE CAKES

The soft, puffy kind.

1 cup all-purpose flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup whole bran cereal
Grated rind of 1 orange
1 cup orange juice
1 large egg
1-3rd cup corn oil
¼ cup honey

Stir together flour, baking powder and salt. In a small bowl stir together bran, grated orange rind and orange juice. In a medium bowl beat together egg, oil and honey. Stir in bran mixture. Add flour mixture and stir just until dry ingredients are moistened. Drop batter by ¼ cupfuls, well apart, onto an oiled preheated griddle. Cook until brown on bottom side (bubbles will not appear on top); turn and brown other sides. (These are on the sweet side; we like them with sour cream or yogurt; you may prefer butter and honey.)

Special Tribute On Mother's Day

By Abigail Van Buren

1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I hope you will use my letter on Mother's Day as a tribute to all those brave, unselfish mothers who gave up their babies.

I am a new mother whose heart is overflowing with gratitude to a 15-year-old girl I have never seen. I understand that she is a beautiful, intelligent person who became pregnant accidentally and decided on her own that her baby should have a better life than she was able to provide for it, so she put it up for adoption.

As soon as our son is able to understand, I shall tell him about his "real" mother and what a courageous person she is.

BLESSED IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR BLESSED: Thank you for an appropriate letter for Mother's Day. I agree that giving up a child for its own good is the ultimate in unselfishness. God bless those mothers who did.

DEAR ABBY: I am an 11-year-old boy with a problem. My father died so long ago I don't even remember him, but Mom has a man living here at our house. He has been living here for about a year. Most all my friends know that my Mom is a widow, but what do I say when someone asks whose car is parked in our garage.

NO ANSWER IN ELGIN

DEAR NO ANSWER: Don't lie. Tell them the car belongs to a friend of your mother's. It does, and he is.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a physician who has just passed his 50th birthday.

He tells all his male patients who reach 50 to slow down. If they smoke, he orders them to quit, but HE's a three-pack-a-day man.

He puts all his overweight patients on diets, but HE is considerably overweight himself and can't stay on a diet for two days. He insists that daily exercise is a MUST, but HE doesn't exercise at all.

He says that an annual vacation is essential to good health, but HE hasn't had a vacation in six years. And this will floor you: He wants all his patients to have a complete physical checkup every year, but HE hasn't had one for 10 years!

What's wrong with him, and how can I get through to him?

DOCTOR'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE. He's human. He finds advice much easier to give than to take. You can get through to him (maybe) by insisting that HE consult a colleague for a checkup. If he refuses, ask him to keep paying those life insurance premiums, so that you and your next husband can retire in comfort.

DEAR ABBY: Since I read so much about mothers who can't get their teenagers to keep their rooms picked up, I must share this amusing incident with you:

My home is always neat—with the exception of my 15-year-old daughter's bedroom, which is a disaster. Drawers open, clothes thrown everywhere, bed unmade, etc.

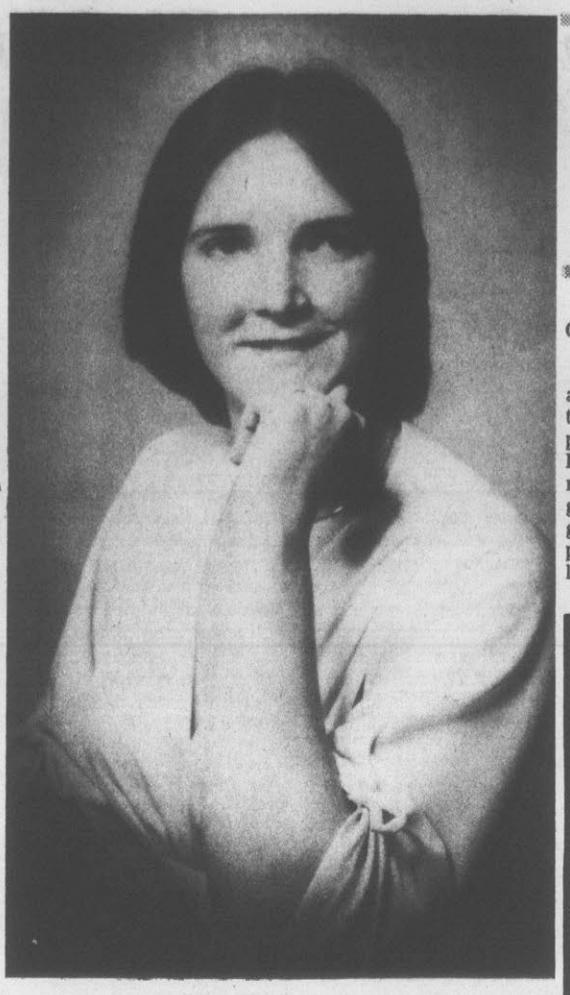

I fussed, threatened, punished, but to no avail. Finally, I just gave up and kept her bedroom door closed so I wouldn't have to look at the mess.

Last week our house was robbed. For some strange reason, the burglars took only the television sets and cameras. The police came out to investigate. They asked me to accompany them while they checked every room in the house to find out if anything else was missing.

When they opened the door to my daughter's bedroom, one gasped: "Good grief—they certainly ransacked THIS room!"

I calmly replied, "No. It always looks like this."

Goober gobblers

SUFFOLK, Va. (UPI) — The average American is expected to munch about nine pounds of peanuts this year, says John Rousset, product manager for a major packer and distributor of goobers. Rousset attributes the growing popularity of the peanut to people looking for low-cost protein. His plant alone, which packs house brand nuts for A&P stores, will process and pack over 20 million pounds this year of peanuts grown in eight states, from Oklahoma and Texas to Florida, Georgia and the Carolinas. Rousset says each pound of peanuts contains nearly 120 grams of protein, plus other nutrients such as B-vitamins and minerals.

Gardner-Burton Vows Solemnized On Friday

Oak Grove Free Will Baptist Church was the scene of the Friday wedding ceremony of Nancy Lynn Burton of Greenville and Robert Glenn Gardner of Elm City. The Rev. Don Kevitte performed the double ring ceremony at 7:30 p.m.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Carrie O'Neal of Greenville and Thomas G. O'Neal of Farmville. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Gardner of Elm City.

The bride, given in marriage by her mother and father, selected a formal gown of crystal organza with a low neckline and bodice inset of lace flowers. The dress featured chiffon sleeves with wide cuffs, laced with flowers and a flowing skirt covered with a layer of chiffon and an inset of flowers. The bride wore baby's breath in her hair and carried a bouquet of pom pons, miniature blue carnations and baby's breath.

Maid of honor was Patty Burton of Greenville, sister of the bride. Bridesmaids were Patricia Proctor of Rocky Mount and Sandra Williams of Elm City, sisters of the bridegroom. The honor attendant chose a dress of baby blue print and carried a long-stemmed blue chrysanthemum. The bridesmaids wore dresses of yellow and navy blue, and carried yellow and blue chrysanthemums. Ann Marie Keel of Elm City, niece of the bridegroom, served as flower girl. She chose a blue floor length dress and carried a flower basket filled with blue rose petals.

MRS. ROBERT GLENN GARDNER

The father of the bridegroom served as best man. Ushers were William Proctor of Rocky Mount and John Williams of Elm City, brothers-in-law of the bridegroom. Scott O'Neal of Greenville, brother of the bride, served as ring bearer.

The reception was held Thursday, with the cake cutting at the church. A color scheme of baby blue and white was carried throughout the fellowship hall.

The bridal couple will reside in Elm City after the ceremony.

Rose High students recently participated in elections to determine next year's Student Government and class officers.

Jeffrey Atkinson will head the SGA next year with Mary Beth Ferrell as vice president. Jackie Brown is the new secretary and Jennifer Davis will serve as treasurer.

HE'S DAD AGAIN AFTER 29 YEARS

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — It's been 29 years since Willie Williams has had to change diapers on a child of his own, but he'll soon be getting back into the routine.

Williams and his wife, whom he married last year, recently became the proud parents of a 6-pound, 14-ounce girl.

They have known each other "all our lives." That might not seem so unusual, until you consider that Williams is 81, and his wife, Geraldine, is 31.

"I've got five children and the baby," Williams said. "The new one looks just like me."

Before the birth, Williams said, his youngest child was 29. "I've got about 14 grands and 10 or 12 great-grandchildren," he said.

Mrs. Williams has three other children, ages 10, 9 and 7, who live with her and husband. Williams is retired from the Republic Steel mine.

Keep it mild

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. (UPI) — Taming the flavor and aroma of garlic is simple: leave the cloves whole or in large pieces and cook them a long time in roasts, soups or casseroles. For a stronger flavor, puree, crush or mince the cloves and use them raw or add to food just before serving, says the Fresh Garlic Association, a trade group representing most of the nation's garlic growers.

- 2 tablespoons butter
- 3 medium (1 pound) golden Delicious apples, pared and coarsely shredded (3 cups lightly packed)
- 2-3rds cup sour cream
- 1 tablespoon sugar

In a 10-inch skillet bring beans and water to a boil; cover and boil gently until tender-crisp and water has evaporated — about 8 minutes. Add sour cream, sugar, lemon juice and salt; mix well; reheat but do not boil. Makes 6 servings.

'Living Planet' Is At Smithsonian

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was just about 13 years ago, when man got his first look at earth as seen from outer space, that documentary movie makers Francis Thompson got the idea for his latest film, "Living Planet."

"It happened in 1966 when, from the barren surface of the moon, photo satellite Lunar Orbiter I took the first picture of the earth as a celestial body," Thompson recalls.

"That was the day I began to think of doing a film that would give us a new perspective on our planet, the only celestial body in our part of the cosmos with life," he adds.

Thompson's new film recently replaced his aerial thriller, "To Fly," at the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum here. That documentary, directed by Jim Freeman and Greg MacGillvray, had been seen by 4 million people since it went on view in July 1976.

An earlier Thompson film, "To Be Alive," was a popular attraction seen by millions at the 1964-65 New York World's Fair and was honored as the best documentary short subject of 1965.

"Living Planet" opens with a shot of earth as seen from outer space, plunges viewers into a tempest, and takes them on a breathtaking aerial odyssey over four continents on the museum's giant Imax screen, five stories high.

It moves from lush jungle to barren desert to polar north. The spectator flies over the Andes, stampedes with wildebeests, hovers over a monastery on a rocky precipice in Greece, attends a wedding on a Cyclades island, swoops under the Eiffel Tower in Paris and cruises the skies perched atop an L-1011 TriStar's vertical tail fin.

The Trauma of Hysterectomy

I had a hysterectomy operation two months ago. Since then I've been extremely nervous and can't get back to myself. I'm high-strung and can't sleep. Is this unusual following a hysterectomy? Where can I get more information about it? — Mrs. R.A., W.Va.

Dear Mrs. A.:

Surgery is frequently followed by a period of weakness, fatigue and nervousness. Any operation under general anesthesia is a trauma to the physical and emotional reserve of the patient.

It is unreasonable to expect that the body can immediately recover its strength so as to allow you to go right back to full activity.

The removal of the uterus carries with it a degree of psychological strain superimposed on the surgery itself. Many women who have had a hysterectomy take a particularly long time to recover from the emotional impact of this particular operation.

No booklet or medical column can substitute for the vital information your own doctor can supply. Today, all doctors and surgeons know that an operation alone is not considered the end of treatment. Psychological support is given in addition to the vitamins, nutrition and rest so important in the post-operative convalescent period.

An operation is really not considered complete until the patient is able to function with restored physical and emotional strength.

You have a perfect right, after such a short time, to have the feelings you describe. With patience, removal of emotional stress, and added rest you will soon be restored to your previous level of energy and calm. There are now excellent tranquilizing drugs that can carry you through this particularly restless period.

Twice in the past two years I suddenly lost my eyelashes. At the age of 16 this is a terrible thing. Is there any way that I can prevent this from happening again? — Miss E.E.N., Texas.

Dear Miss N.:

An allergic reaction to cosmetics is the most usual cause for this condition. A number of cases have recently been reported of sensitivity to nail polish. At first it may sound strange that an allergy around the eyes could be traced to such a distant cause. Yet it does happen.

Sometimes, a local infection around the base of the eyelashes themselves can cause them to fall out.

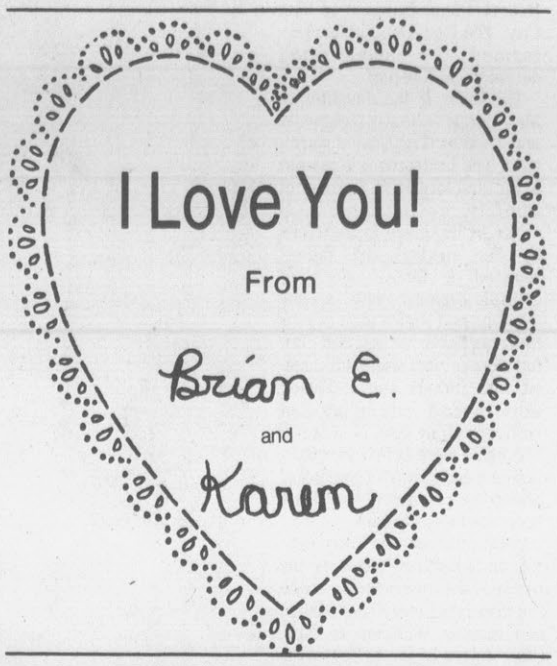

The temporary loss of eyelashes has been noticed in some people who are under severe emotional strain. If you have reason to suspect this, talk it out with your doctor. He may recommend a psychological consultation.

By any chance, have you been using artificial eyelashes? Sensitivity to the glue is also a possibility.

Old Five-And-Dime Still Main Street Landmark

By DICK BROWN
The Fayetteville Observer

LAURINBURG, N.C. (AP) — The traditional long, narrow red-and-gold sign is faded and there's a letter or two missing, but the message remains clear.

It spells out five and 10 cent store, a one-of-a-kind reminder of a past era when nickels and dimes represented real buying power.

Ownership has changed, but not the image, and that's why Eubanks remains one of Laurinburg's Main Street landmarks.

It was probably the city's first and, for several years, only dime emporium.

The chains were to come later, but when the late Henry M. Eubanks settled at Laurinburg in 1914, the downtown business sector was the typical small-town montage of general stores and small shops.

The newcomer to town selected a location formerly used by the McDuffie brothers — John, Dan, and Jim — for a general store. It had burned out, and charred timbers can still be seen in the full basement that is a Main Street rarity.

A five and dime was a new merchandising concept, primarily confined to the larger cities at the time, and Eubank's venture was a modest success as well as a novelty from the very beginning.

The owner, a native of Monroe with previous experience in the hardware business, started small and the years have failed to add much to either space or stock.

Eubanks liked to recall the early days when he was approached about adding his store to the still fledgling Rose's chain, which was just organizing its initial small-town network across the Carolinas.

"I turned them down flat," he liked to tell his friends proudly, "but I kept my doors open while they had some real problems in the beginning."

For 30 years Eubanks and his wife, Lula, operated the business, holding fast to the original F.W. Woolworth principles of high volume and small profits. Competition moved in, but the town's first five and dime held its own like a David against Goliath.

The founder died in 1944 and a short time later there was a new owner — D. F. Cade, a Fayetteville native who had begun his merchandising career with the nationally known S.H. Kress company.

"I bought the business from Mrs. Eubanks in the fall of '44," Cade, a North Carolina State College graduate who was used to hard work and long hours, said.

At the time he was already the owner and operator of a similar five and 10 in neighboring Hamlet.

"I had started there around 1940 under the name Cades'," he said, "and kept both stores open for several years. I decided to hold on to the Eubank name because of the good reputation the store already enjoyed among Laurinburg people."

And so it has been Eubanks the past 65 years, a warm, homey sort of place that basks in a mellow glow of nostalgia with its 1914 vintage fixtures, tin ceiling, and original light fixtures.

Cade, who likes to describe himself as a "merchant, inventor, and philosopher," prides himself on the simplicity of the operation, and, above all, its reputation "as the place to go when you can't find it anywhere else."

"Local people have been saying that for years," he said, "and we would like to think they have always been right."

The hardwood counters, stained the traditional reddish brown that was the long-time dime-store trademark, are filled with items ranging in price from a few cents to several dollars. There are even jars of penny candy and gum to go with the standard dishes, toys, jewelry, and clothing.

"We have tried to keep it like it used to be," today's owner said, "and we still like to consider ourselves a five and 10 instead of a variety store."

Cade began his dime-store career in 1932, at the height of the depression, with the Kress chain, working variously at stores in New York, Nashville, Rocky Mount, and Wilmington.

"I went into business for myself by buying out a store already operating in Hamlet," he said. "I had gotten to know Mr. Eubanks on buying trips to Baltimore and other markets, and, after his death, decided Laurinburg would be an ideal location for expansion."

Admittedly Cade has bowed to progress through the years, but he has resisted change as much as possible.

"Certainly," he said, "prices have gone up and the merchandise we stock today is far different from what it once was. Still, it's nice to know that while other dime stores are closing their doors and moving away from downtown, we are still going strong."

As a result, the Eubanks of today remains a unique throwback to an era that gave birth to songs such as "I Found a Million Dollar Baby in a Five and Ten Cent Store," and was as American as apple pie, hot dogs, and baseball.

Cade and his wife, the former Kathleen Beaver of Salisbury, who has been a working partner through the years, intend to keep it that way.

"Sure we could retire," he said, "but the dime store has been a way of life for us too long to change. It may look like a dull grind to others, but we wouldn't know what to do without it."

Or, to quote a bit of his homespun philosophy, "there is beauty in simplicity, and there is nobility in purposeful living."

Eubanks remains a bit of both — simplicity and purpose — and it provides Main Street, Laurinburg, with a part of the past that is rapidly vanishing from the American scene.

Ethel Merman's Voice Turns To Disco Music

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — There's no business like disco business — just ask Ethel Merman. She's gone disco.

Miss Merman has put her booming voice back into such old hits as "There's No Business Like Show Business" and "Everything's Coming up Roses," added a disco beat and, voila, something she hopes will reach all audiences.

But, for heaven's sake, why a disco album?

"The vice president of A&M records asked me if I would be interested in doing a disco version of some important songs I introduced," the 70-year-old Miss Merman said in her easily identifiable tones.

"I jumped at it because I thought it was a sensational idea. I go all over doing concerts with the philharmonic and symphony orchestras, but now this is a whole new ballgame. I'm very high on it."

She recorded her portion of the new songs in only two days in March. The rest was put together in the studio. The tunes, if "Show Business" is any example, sound very much as they did originally with just an updated, disco-rhythm background.

"It makes you want to dance," she said, snapping her fingers and tapping her toes in time to "Show Business."

She said several disco dancers brought in for publicity photographs "went wild" when they heard the album cuts.

They even taught her a few fancy steps.

"I didn't know I could do it as well as I did," she said with a laugh.

Miss Merman hopes the new album, to be called "Ethel Disco" and set for release the beginning of June, will introduce her to a whole new audience.

"The reaction has been fabulous. It's great for the older people who go to discos. A lot of them aren't acquainted with the contemporary songs that the discos play, but these they will be. They know these songs. They can sing along with them. They've seen me do them."

Other cuts on the album include "I Get A Kick Out of You," "I Got Rhythm" and "Alexander's Ragtime Band."

"Each one is different," she said. "I feel like I'm establishing a new first."

Although she likes the disco beat, Miss Merman said she misses those great old show tunes, the kind you keep humming and singing after leaving a theater.

"They don't write songs like those anymore. Today, I can't understand all the lyrics."

Miss Merman, who became a name with a brass-band voice by singing "I Got Rhythm" in the film "Girl Crazy," is very proud of the fact that she listened to the advice of George Gershwin who told her never to take a singing lesson.

Old Chemical Dumping Site Scares Some People

By NORMAN D. SANDLER

CHARLES CITY, Iowa (UPI) — For half the 50 years Salsbury Laboratories has helped provide a sound tax base and jobs in this Iowa town of 9,000 residents, authorities now say it has also been creating an "environmental timebomb."

In 1953, the firm began depositing chemical waste with state approval at a site called LaBounty along the Cedar River flood plain.

Charles City's No. 1 employer, a leading manufacturer of livestock pharmaceuticals, dumped byproducts from production of livestock chemicals including a feed supplement that cuts the maturation time for broiler chickens and a first-ever mass vaccine.

Tons of waste accumulated along the river, which flows south to the population centers of Waterloo and Cedar Rapids.

Armed with geologic samplings, Salsbury was confident underlying bedrock and upward pressure beneath the site prevented seepage into the river or an aquifer (a water-bearing bed or rock, sand or gravel) that provides drinking water for 300,000 people throughout northern Iowa.

But in late 1977, that confidence was challenged. The Iowa Department of Environmental Quality, in an action contested in the courts, ordered Salsbury to remove potentially hazardous waste from the site at a cost some pegged at up to $50 million.

Tests showed as much as 195 pounds of arsenic were entering the river daily. Traces of a chemical dye known as ONA were found in drinking water supplies downstream, raising the specter of contamination from the Salsbury plant.

In all, government officials estimated, the site contained six million pounds of arsenic and at least 26 organic compounds, 17 of them designated priority pollutants by the Environmental Protection Agency.

LaBounty was listed among 103 sites around the country the EPA deemed potentially dangerous to public health.

"What we have is a potentially explosive environmental situation — an environmental timebomb — just waiting to go off," said one state official. "What we're trying to do is defuse it."

Despite the company's charge of "public hysteria," the Salsbury case was likened to the Love Canal at Niagara Falls, N.Y., where suspected cancer-causing agents were detected in homes built above buried chemical waste.

DEQ Director Larry Crane placed LaBounty "in the top 10 and probably one of the top five" most dangerous chemical waste deposits in the country, igniting a fierce debate over whether LaBounty could trigger an environmental disaster comparable to the Love Canal.

Salsbury officials amassed evidence to bolster their contention the threat is not as serious as officials implied.

The EPA analyzed wastewater from the plant and concluded there was a strong likelihood it was carcinogenic, but the finding was challenged by Salsbury and analyses by the state.

J. Pat McDonnell, Salsbury's pharmaceutical development and analysis manager, said the EPA concentrated the water 160 times before testing and noted tests by private and state laboratories disputed the finding of carcinogenicity.

"It's sort of like the saccharin thing," McDonnell said. "If you feed a rat enough of it, you'll have different results from what you'd have under normal conditions."

McDonnell said the government used "scare tactics" to highlight the danger posed by the Salsbury waste. Testing by a Salsbury-hired firm, he said, showed a toxicity level equivalent to alcohol and less dangerous than herbicides freely applied to nearby farm fields.

CHEMICAL WASTE covers the ground at LaBounty dumping site of Salsbury Laboratories, in this 1975 photo from the Iowa Department of Environmental Quality. The site has since been covered with dirt and surrounded by a dike. Authorities call it an "environmental timebomb." (UPI Photo)

Salsbury is not accused of violating environmental standards, either in its discharge of treated liquid waste or runoff from the LaBounty site.

Rather, the controversy revolves around differing scenarios concerning the fate of millions of pounds of arsenic and other pollutants.

The possibility of large-scale contamination hinges in part on the stability of the underlying geologic foundation and upward pressure it exerts to prevent waste from seeping underground and threatening the aquifer.

Salsbury officials insist the rock structure is sound. As long as the pressure holds, there is little chance of contamination and they argue there is no evidence it will subside or reverse.

"It was there in 1953 and it's there now," said Russell Smith, chemical production and engineering manager. "Unless you have a force driving those chemicals down, nothing's going to happen."

The government, however, takes a different view.

Crane insisted there are no assurances hydrostatic pressure preventing downward migration of the pollutants will not ebb. And if the pressure fails or the underlying bedrock fissures, he said, contamination could occur.

"We're very concerned about what might happen if we lose that pressure," he said. "We're not saying it will happen, but it could and if it does it'll be too late to do anything about it."

Conflicting threat assessments have stymied action on isolating the waste. Since December 1977, Salsbury has shipped its byproducts — at much higher cost — to a government-approved out-of-state disposal site.

Moves to ensure the LaBounty site's safety, owever, have been hampered by Salsbury's own legal action and what an Iowa legislator termed "one of the worst cases of being caught in the bureaucratic maze I've ever seen."

The evolution of the Salsbury case discloses a string of bureaucratic obstacles and policy decisions that two decades later appeared to have been wrong. It is regarded by government officials as epitomizing an emerging national crisis — the problem of coping with industrial wastes that for years were buried, injected into waterways or simply dumped, as in the LaBounty case.

To some degree, Cooper said, Salsbury is a victim of changes in the government's anti-pollution program, classifying as hazardous organic chemicals the company never considered when its dumping began in 1953.

"We're as anxious to resolve all these questions as they are — even more so, with the uncertainty hanging over us," he said. "Maybe if we'd known 25 years ago what we know now we wouldn't have this potential for hazard. But we didn't.

"We were going with state of the art and now we have these organics that no one knows what to do with."

Crime Victims Compensated

By BILL RAWLINS
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — On Aug. 20, 1978, Gary Jack Gill of McMinnville was beaten and robbed in a Warren County parking lot. His jaw was broken and he was hospitalized in Murfreesboro.

On Feb. 16, he received a check for $4,071.80 from the state of Tennessee — the first victim of a Tennessee crime to be compensated for his injury and loss of earnings under a law which became effective July 1, 1978.

The money came from a fund, now totaling $94,000, produced by a $21 tax imposed on those convicted of such things as beatings, shootings and robbery. Prison officials can also withhold part of the earnings of prisoners on work release or in prison industries — collections which totaled $863.50 through January.

Rep. Steve Cobb, D-Nashville, who sponsored the law said, "I am pleased that victims of crime are beginning to file for awards. But I'm disappointed at the size of the fund, which is much smaller than it should be."

He has introduced legislation designed to tighten collection and reporting procedures.

Criminal Court and Circuit Court clerks are responsible for collecting the $21 tax on conviction, but Austin Gaines of the Law Enforcement Planning Agency, said that a recent study showed only 62 of 95 counties had sent in taxes.

In addition, Monika Reed, research supervisor for the Tennessee Corrections Institute, said the state Board of Pardons and Paroles could make the victim's compensation payments a condition of parole — but it has not been done.

That means, she said, there is no way to collect compensation funds for victims once an inmate is released from prison.

To file a claim, a person must prove that he was the victim of a crime that resulted in injury to him or death to a relative. Claims may be filed no later than a year after the crime. The district attorney general investigates the claim, presenting information in support of or in opposition to the award.

The amount of the award is determined by the judge — with emergency claims of no more than $500 permitted in hardship cases. Emergency funds are deducted from the final compensation.

Espionage Level Said Frightening

LOS ANGELES (AP) — New York is the "spy capital" of the nation in numbers, but the amount of espionage in Southern California's aerospace industry "is frightening," says the new head of the FBI's Los Angeles office.

Herbert Clough Jr. said Thursday that Southern California is an espionage plum because "the goodies are here." Some 50 percent of all classified government contracts are in Southern California, he said.

He said a new FBI program to alert firms to the dangers of espionage has been effective, but would not discuss details.

Begin Producing Gas Additive

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Phillips Petroleum Co. has begun commercial production of a gasoline additive it says will make more unleaded gasoline available to motorists,

The product, Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether, is added to gasoline and brings up the octane rating without the addition of lead, which is now restricted, the company said Thursday.

Unleaded gasolines, which now make up nearly 40 percent of the national market, are expected to make up three-quarters of the nation's gasoline demand by 1985.

Constituents Solidly Behind Congressman Diggs

By PAUL VARIAN

DETROIT (UPI) — Black burly construction worker James Thomas chose to be represented in Congress by a convicted felon. He considers that vote sacred.

No more so than Rep. Charles C. Diggs Jr., D-Mich., elected by landslide to a 13th straight term last November despite a 29-count conviction for payroll padding.

Diggs, 56, the nation's senior black congressman after nearly a quarter-century in office, now uses that endorsement as a weapon — perhaps his only weapon — in a determined fight to avoid expulsion by his white colleagues.

"I continue to believe that the right of my constituents to representation in the House, exercised last November by re-electing me with full knowledge of these problems, is of paramount importance," Diggs told the House Ethics Committee after it charged him with 14 counts of misconduct.

"I trust that any further committee action on this matter will reflect an understanding that the rights of a constituency must prevail."

Thomas, 31, interviewed at random at a downtown construction site, used street terminology to convey precisely the same sentiments.

"Power to the people!" he said. "The people put him in office and it should be up to them to put him out. The right to vote is something sacred."

Diggs was convicted of inflating salaries of staffers and taking $66,000 in kickbacks to help pay off personal and business debts that had creditors hounding him for 20 years. He is appealing a three-year prison sentence.

People in the closely knit, inner city community that has been the root-source of power for Detroit's leading black politicians since World War II contend Diggs is the victim of a double standard of justice.

"Everybody's got their hand in the pie a little bit," Thomas said. "He just got caught. I think they're just trying to make an example of him — a scapegoat.

"I think he should get the same justice Nixon got. Crime is crime."

Diggs, only son of an undertaker-turned-politician who wound up in prison for bribery, got into extensive debt through mismanagement of the family mortuary business, two costly divorces and private schooling for his six children. An intensely private man, he kept his financial problems a secret and never abandoned his high style of living.

Diggs held patronage power in Washington and became Congress' foremost expert on African affairs, but his political strength now lies in the close ties he kept with people back home.

"The people on the East Side are pretty conscious of roots, and I believe that's the source of Charlie's strength," said Mayor Coleman A. Young, like Diggs a survivor of the city's now-extinct "Black Bottom" ghetto.

"I can't imagine any action by the House that would change the attitude of the people. I think Charlie got a raw deal."

State Democratic leaders are keeping their distance from Diggs, but agree with Young's assessment of Diggs' steadfastly loyal constituents.

"They suspect that Charlie's been screwed over by Whitey," said one white party official.

Constituent Thomas, who never has been represented in Congress by anyone else, said he continues to support Diggs because "he's done more good than he's done bad" in his years in office.

He cited instances in which Diggs helped locate a close friend reported missing in Vietnam during the war and exerted personal pressure on the city to clean up his neighborhood.

Diggs expressed disappointment with disciplinary proceedings of the Ethics Committee and concern that it could affect his criminal appeal. But he has refused to talk with reporters since a news conference he held in Detroit two days after his trial ended last fall.

Aides said Diggs visits his district on the average of every other weekend and has left the country at least once in recent weeks at taxpayer expense — a trip to Puerto Rico as part of a congressional inquiry into drug smuggling.

A group of black businessmen held a fundraiser in February to help him defray his legal expenses, but local party leaders said Diggs has specifically cautioned supporters against any public crusade on his behalf.

Diggs' 13th District extends from Detroit's newly revitalized downtown riverfront to the city's northeast border with white, affluent Grosse Pointe.

Though still about two-thirds black and relatively poor, there has been an influx in recent years of both white and black professionals and merchants of various ethnic origins that has given the area a more diverse makeup.

The district has been solidly Democratic since World War II and its politics is controlled by Mayor Young, the United Auto Workers union and the black separatist Shrine of the Black Madonna.

Diggs has begun paying off his debts and some observers believe he will try to win leniency by making full restitution before his appeals are exhausted. Others expect Diggs to resign from office as part of a court bargain to avoid jail.

If Diggs' seat does become vacant, Young predicted there will be "candidates coming out of the woodwork." Several already are lining up for what one state Democratic leader called "a lifetime job" — close associates of the mayor among them.

But Diggs supporters are warning all would-be successors to avoid jumping the gun.

"You can't have a funeral for a guy who isn't dead yet — and he's not dead yet," said district party chairman George Atkins. "If he's vindicated, I wouldn't want to be one of those people out there trying to take him on."

CHARLES C. DIGGS, D-Mich., was elected to a 13th straight term last November despite a 29-count conviction for payroll padding. Diggs is using that endorsement as a weapon in a determined fight to avoid expulsion. (UPI Photo)

Behavior Clue From Thumbs

By JO-ANNE BYRNE

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — Little children use their thumbs for comfort and soon discover the appendages are a useful eating tool. As time goes by they take thumbs and their usefulness for granted.

Now Linda Nelson says those same old trusty digits amount to "almost a shorthand of how an individual will behave."

Ms. Nelson reads thumbs and teaches palmistry at Mercury Academy.

"The shape of the thumb and how it's set in the hand shows how a person will behave in various situations, particularly situations of stress," she said in an interview.

"You can hide your hands, but somehow the thumbs waggle about for people to see."

Sitting with one's thumbs closed in signifies reticence, Ms. Nelson said, whereas a person with relaxed open hands is inclined to be more open in relationships.

She suggested watching the set of a politican's thumbs to get a fix on his true intentions.

A person whose thumb base is short and stubby is generally pragmatic, she said, while a thumb with a long stocky base indicates a rationalist. A waisted thumb, thinner in the middle than at each end, implies a person whose first response is an emotional one, she said.

A thumb twiddler can't make up his mind, she said, while crossing one's thumbs indicates skepticism. A fleshier thumb shows a person who doesn't stay angry long and one who has a sense of humor, while a clubbed thumb, sometimes called "the murderer's thumb," can indicate anger not kept in check, she said.

An artistic nature goes with a rounded thumb, while someone with a more pointed thumb can be "given to fits," she said; a person with a flat thumb is generally laconic and can be possessed of a dry wit.

The "hitchhiker's thumb" that bends backward shows an impulsive and flexible person, she said, while a rigid thumb denotes a certain rigidity of nature.

The thumb reader looks at the tip of the digit to determine will. Ms. Nelson said, the joint to determine reason and the knuckle, logical response. The stronger the knuckles, the stronger the ability to reason, she said.

Calling the study of palmistry "a religious observation in a sense," Ms. Nelson examined my thumbs.

As she said they show I don't trust people on first meeting, I listened carefully (she said I'd listen to anything) while she told me I was a perfectionist in a non-perfect world and liked to keep things crisp and clear-cut.

She also said I had the ability to maintain a low profile, kept my emotions under control and found it hard to accept praise.

I left stuffing a candy bar in my mouth. I slipped on the ice, landed flat on my back and broke into tears. So much for any prognostications from that fat little thumb palmists call "the god Phalange."

Mahogany Man's Art Emerged From His Craft

By TAD BARTIMUS
Associated Press Writer

BELIZE CITY, Belize (AP) — Art, like love, is where you find it.

George Gabb found it here, in this British colony that hugs the Caribbean coastline below Mexico's Yucatan peninsula. He found it in old yearnings, born of his mixed blood, and in the native rosewood and mahogany.

The rich grain of the hardwood under his chisel beckons him to follow it, but the 51-year-old sculptor fights back against the mahogany's veins of amber and gold.

"Now wood, you're gonna do what I want you to do this time," he mutters, chipping steadily as his eyes follow a blackboard sketch.

"You must have a lot of self-discipline to be a carver. The grain will try to lure you away from your ideal, but you must fight it. You must stick to your inner vision."

There are no art museums here, no art schools, no art teachers. Gabb and his contemporaries are the self-taught founding fathers of this small nation's modern cultural heritage.

Gabb is an aristocratic mix of Mayan, African and white ancestry, and he makes his living carving wood. His body speaks of his 20-year career. His shoulders are as tough as a linebacker's. He has the biceps of a weight lifter. His rubber thongs mingle with the sweet-smelling wood shavings and rosewood dust, a craftsman at home among the resin, splinters and wax of his trade.

The grandson of a Welsh logger, his paternal grandmother was an African slave imported to cut logwood in the mid-1800s. Logwood was shipped to England to make dyed material color-fast.

As more timber men explored Belize's dense southern forests, they discovered vast stands of mahogany and rosewood. Those exportable riches still are a pillar of Belize's economy.

The youngest of 16 children, Gabb has a sixth grade education. His deep voice develops a melodious rhythm as he expounds on his work in three-syllable words. He gives credit to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky for helping him build torque to attack a weatherbeaten stump. He says a good philosophy and good music are the keys to his creativity.

Gabb is not a rich man and doesn't want to become one.

"If you get too attached to material things, you become like a domesticated chicken — you cease to fly."

As a teen-ager, eking out a living making trinkets from seashells, Gabb met an American woman who carved wooden bowls for sale. He asked if he could work over some of her rejects. He remodeled them, allowing the grain and defects to show. Soon they outsold the perfect bowls.

"I didn't find art," he says, "art found me."

A few years later he had his own shop, searching for inspiration that would carry his sculpture beyond birds, boats and fish, that would express his feelings.

"Always before I had fashioned tangible objects, things we can see and touch. But an artist owes society something. I owe this society reflection about itself."

He tried to express his feelings in a poem. He debated with friends the meaning of the phrase "broken tension." He asked a 12-year-old girl to dance to mood music and clicked away with his camera, recording her movements. Then he locked himself in his workshop with chalk and blackboard.

"I drew an outline on the blackboard of the girl dancing, then I allowed my hand to just go until I got one movement, over and over .... Suddenly, on its own, my hand shot out. Release! I had drawn 'broken tension.'"

That futuristic carving led him to more introspective and bold concepts. His work got bigger. His mixed heritage emerged in the massive heads he created with his chisel. At the age of 30, he allowed himself to cry for the first time in his adult life.

Foreigners discovered him and bought his work. He taught by invitation at a junior college in Michigan. Last year he taught young Indian carvers in British Colombia. At home, the government commissioned him to fashion gifts of mahogany, rosewood and zericote — a nut tree — for visiting dignitaries.

"The Archbishop of Canterbury has one of my carvings," he says. "So does Prince Philip. One is on Her Majesty The Queen's yacht Britannia. It is a modern sculpture, but it is mounted on a Victorian stand. Sometimes you have to make concession to formality."

Another showpiece is a 100-pound zericote sculpture, gleaming like a coffee-colored diamond, the shine brought out by a thousand strokes of the waxed cloth.

"I never knew my African grandmother. I know she didn't look like this. I made this head a composite of Belize's ethnic groups, a Caucasian nose, a Negro's full mouth, wild Mayan eyes. Yet to me, it is her, fierce and ready to shout."

Courts Require Advice On Marijuana

WASHINGTON (AP) — At first glance, it looked like someone at the State Department had been smoking something.

Why else would the government advise marijuana users to smoke their marijuana through a water pipe or take it in brownies to avoid the effects of the herbicide paraquat which is sprayed, with State Department help, on Mexican marijuana fields?

It turns out the State Department had no choice. It was forced, by a court suit filed by a small organization that wants to legalize pot, to consider how to mitigate paraquat's harmful effects on marijuana users.

The National Enviromental Policy Act of 1969 requires federal agencies to assess the impact on the environment of government actions at home and abroad.

So the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws found out about the paraquat program, distrusted government assurances that the herbicide was not harmful to smokers, and went to court to insist on an environmental impact statement.

The State Department resisted, lost in a lower court, appealed and finally settled out of court on April 24, agreeing to provide an impact statement.

It paid the Mitre Corp. $255,211 for a several-hundred-page document that discusses everything from the effect of the marijuana eradication program on family life among the Mexican campesinos to the effects on American marijuana smokers — and how they can be mitigated with water pipes and brownies.

The statement says the government spent $68.8 million since 1970 on the program, on helicopters, communications equipment, a $3 million "electro-optical illicit crop detection system," pilot training, mapping, computer services, protective armor for aircraft and crews, a hangar, "specialized interdiction vhicles," weapons and contract technicians, services and equipment.

It probably represents the most sweeping review the government has ever made of the fallout from American policy on marijuana.

The case illustrates how a small organization with limited resources can use the law and the courts to force the government to give a public accounting of itself.

Peter H. Meyers, NORML's full-time lawyer, is chiefly responsible for the suit. He said its preparation cost about $100 for paper and his salary.

Dozens of government lawyers, in at least nine agencies, were involved in reviewing and commenting on Mitre's report. A draft was prepared, and comments were solicited. Each of 163 comments had to be answered in the final report.

Yet NORML is not satisfied with the product, and plans to return to court, seeking more detail — and hoping the government ultimately will decide to give up the fight and the paraquat program.

The out-of-court settlement specifically gives NORML the right to return to court to challenge the adequacy of the impact statement.

Says Meyers of the State Department's first try:

"It doesn't explore enough the long-and short-term consequences of paraquat to the health of marijuana smokers. It doesn't look deep enough into the effect of paraquat on the health of Mexican peasants, the Mexican water supply or endangered species. And it doesn't adequately look into what paraquat might be doing to crops and animals raised on the West Coast of Mexico and exported to the United States."

The report estimates that 16 million Americans use marijuana and at any one time 85,600 of them are probably smoking marijuana contaminated with the herbicide.

It says paraquat — odorless, colorless and tasteless — probably carries only a slight risk to the health of moderate marijuana smokers.

As for heavy users — those who smoke 10 marijuana cigarettes a day — "the health effects of long-term use of paraquat-contaminated marijuana are not known."

"The threat to human health from short-term exposure to paraquat contaminated marijuana is minimal," the report says. "However, a limited educational effort may be justified to inform the marijuana user that (1) visual distinction between Mexican and Colombian marijuana is virtually impossible and (2) it is extremely difficult to tell the difference visually between contaminated and uncontaminated marijuana."

As for mitigating measures, the report says, "The United States government would be reluctant to suggest 'better' ways to undertake an illegal activity."

But, it says, use of a water pipe, in which the smoke passes though water before reaching the smoker's mouth, "would decrease the amount of paraquat entering the inhaled smoke" and "the toxic effects of contaminated marijuana consumed in foods such as brownies or bread would be less severe" since "paraquat is poorly absorbed through the stomach and intestines."

Discussing the campaign's impact among peasants of western Mexico who find raising marijuana and poppies for opium more profitable than raising traditional crops, the report says there was "resistance and resentment" and "violence, fights and homicides due to the narcotics war."

"As long as herbicidal spraying continues, there would be a degree of physical and biological risk (in Mexico)," it says. "The government of Mexico could reduce such risks by identifying areas of extreme environmental sensitivity to the herbicides employed, such as rare or endangered species' habitats and sites adjacent to drinking water sources. In such areas, manual eradication might be used."

The State Department says its role has been to assist the Mexican government in a program Mexico wanted to undertake in any event.

The Mexican government has fought marijuana fields — initially with sticks, machetes and hoes — since the 1940s. What the United States provided was chemistry and technology.

Motherhood Is Still Unlicensed

By JO HARING
For The Associated Press

Mothers ought to be licensed.

Day-care centers are. Teachers are. Doctors are. Almost all professions dealing with children requrie some sort of test to indicate readiness to practice.

Except motherhood.

The only test for motherhood is endurance. It may be the only profession where all training is on the job and by the time it's mastered, the job is over.

It's true that most young women who aspire to motherhood understand sibling rivalries and traumatic experiences and negativism. And instinct may tell them what to do when an older child tries to smack the baby or the toddler utters his first four-letter word.

But how many are prepared for the everyday crises?

Like when a child flushes five pounds of baking potatoes down the toilet? Or slams the car door shut with the keys locked inside? Or hids his cooked carrots in his shoe?

While Dr. Spock addresses himself to ear infections and diaper rash, and Ginot directs our attention to formative personalities, where is the authority who counsels on dealing with fingerpainting in tomato soup or stomping raisins into the carpet or greating a visiting pastor with an obscenity?

A well-ready young mother may know just how to handle a sudden case of bedtime jitters or stuttering. But what expert has prepared her for the day her child goes visiting through the neighborhood wearing only his cowboy boots and a smile?

It just seems reasonable that before a young woman commits herself to motherhood, she should be able to demonstrate that she knows what she's getting into. So here's a list of questions to help determine mother fitness:

Which of the following is the most adhesive ? A, miracle glue; B, soggy rice cereal; C, dried peanut butter; D, dried egg yolk; E, a mixture of all of the above.

Answer: B, C and D are all correct. (A bonus for anyone who answered E, indicating either wide experience or strong intuition.)

Answer: C. Anyone who had to ask what kaopectate is may not be ready for motherhood.

Answer: D. See next question.

Which of the following would a child most like as a Christmas gift? A, a battery-operated remote control car; B, a complete electric train set; C, a fully-equipped playhouse; D, a large empty box.

Answer: A, B or C. Anyone who answered D should be counseled to enter another profession.

'This house was old when I got here,' Miss Jenny says of her former home.

Now A Real Home!

By REBECCA BUFFALOE
Reflector Staff Writer

WINTERVILLE — "I like this place fine," said "Miss Jenny" Brock as she indicated with a weather beaten arm her new housing arrangements at Winterville Apartments.

"This place is a home," she continued. "My other place was just a shelter."

For "Miss Jenny," as she's known around the Winterville community, the conveniences of apartment living outweigh the duties she assumed at her former home on Myrtle Street.

"Yes, I've chopped my own wood, toted my own wood and done my own cleaning, as well as raised my own garden, right up til I moved here in January," she remembered. "I had something of everything in that garden but money."

Memories come and go for "Miss Jenny," who estimates her birthdate to be June 30, 1883. She survived three husbands, but had no children of her own.

"I was born on the Tucker farm near Ballard's Crossroads," she said. "Last time I went by there, our house was still standing."

As she named off her sisters and brothers — Jake, Ollie, Agnes, and Guy, who's still living — "Miss Jenny's" eyes lit up as she remembered life on the farm.

"I was born on a farm and there ain't nothing I haven't done," she noted. "I didn't get no school; when I got big there was so much work I couldn't go."

Her inability to "get schooling" kept "Miss Jenny" from learning to read and write, but her stubborn desire to learn has prompted her to begin taking lessons this year.

"Miss Jenny's" decision to move was made when the town of Winterville was approved for a Housing and Urban Development Community Development Single Purpose Block Grant.

The funding will allow the town to renovate designated areas, bringing the homes up to approved standards. Mrs. Brock's home was one of the first to be purchased by the government for demolition.

However, while she is waiting for the transactions to take place, "Miss Jenny" is unable to receive financial assistance from the government, and is using her small pool of funds to buy necessities.

She's aided in her housework duties by a chore provider, Mrs. Tempie Suggs. Another helper, Mrs. Mary Elbert, often runs errands for "Miss Jenny" such as going to the post office or the store.

A high point in "Miss Jenny's" life is her Monday trip to the Pitt Council on Aging's Monday lunch, where she's been going so long, "everybody knows me."

However, things have not been so bright since she has moved in her new home. Although the surroundings are pleasant, the children often ride bicycles up on her walk, which disturbs her a great deal. And then there's the money.

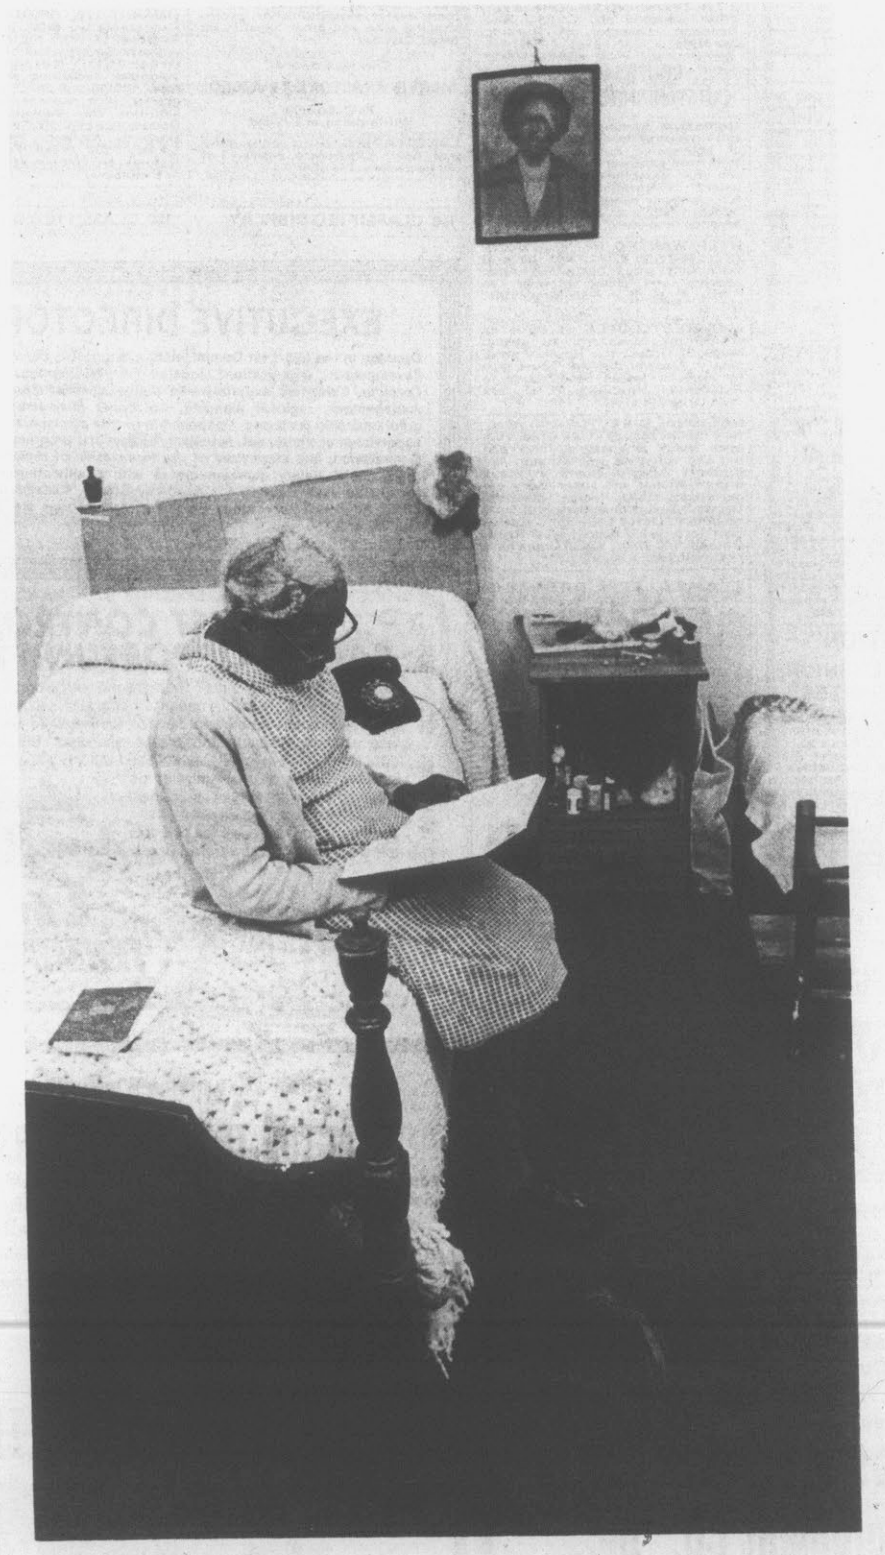

"Can you see when I'm getting my money?" she asks, her brown eyes pleading. "I've had to go to the doctor so many times lately, all my savings are gone."

Although she's arranged to pay for things when the treasured check arrives, "Miss Jenny" doesn't relish the idea of borrowing money.

"No, no, no way," she said, her voice adamant. "I don't like to be ten miles down the road on credit. Let them hurry up and buy my house."

When told that she would be seeing herself in the paper, "Miss Jenny" seemed pleased, then had this to say:

"I can go look in the mirror and see all I want," she said, cocking her head. "Now, can you tell me when I'm getting my money?"

...When you're thinking of buying a new home.

New homes built to Greenville Utilities' E-300 STANDARDS of energy efficiency can cut energy consumption by as much as 40 percent when compared to a house built to comply with state minimum building code standards only. That kind of savings can put hundreds of extra dollars into your pocket that would otherwise be wasted on expensive "energy leaks."

Homes which qualify for GUC's Energy Efficient Home Award have been carefully inspected by one of our representatives during construction. Each energy-conserving feature of the home is evaluated and assigned Energy Efficiency Value Points. To qualify for the Award and to be certified by GUC as an energy efficient "E-300" Home, a minimum of 300 EEV Points must be earned.

If you're buying or building, consider the many benefits of an Energy Efficient Home: Economical—lower heating and cooling bills, Quiet, Clean, Comfortable, and many, many more.

To find out more about the E-300 Home, contact the Energy Conservation Office at Greenville Utilities, 752-7166, Extension 234.

Look for the E-300 Sign of Savings. It identifies a home that is specially constructed to save energy and save you money.

DATSUN SAVES AGAIN

with the highest gas-mileage car you can buy.

Datsun 210 Hatchback.

- Here's an economy hatchback that's as light on the road as it is at the pump.
- Listen to the solid thunk when you slam a door of the 210's sturdy all-steel unibody. Feel the luster of a finish that gleams like it was still liquid.
- Relax in the comfort of standard reclining bucket seats, and the knowledge that whichever 210 you choose—hatchback, sedan, or 5-door Sportwagon—you're not paying through the hose.

35 EPA EST. MPG / 47 EPA EST. HWY

Optional 5-speed manual. Use these numbers for comparisons. Actual mpg may differ depending on speed, trip length and weather. Actual highway mpg will probably be lower than EPA estimate.

AND AGAIN

with the only small pickups that run on regular gas.

KING CAB™

- Five Datsun pickups have given America a one-truck mind. They're all built like the big rigs, but without big appetites.
- All haul more than some standard Ford and Chevy half-tonners (the exclusive Heavy-Duty can carry a one-ton payload of people and cargo). And all on regular gas!
- So buy a Datsun, and stop pouring your money down the tank; start putting it in the bank.

ONLY AT HOLT

STRRRETCH BED

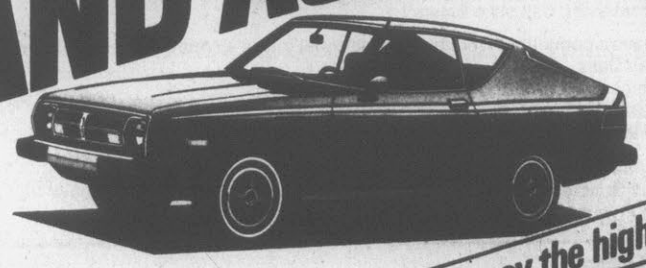

LTL HUSTLER

21 EPA EST. MPG / 30 EPA EST. HWY

4 speed manual. Use these numbers for comparisons. Actual mpg may differ depending on speed, trip length and weather. Actual highway mpg will probably be lower than EPA estimate. Cab Chassis and Heavy Duty Model lower.

AND AGAIN

with SX appeal... and Datsun MPG!

- The frisky, thrifty 200-SX. Fun was never so economical, so affordable. Because this spiffy hardtop sports GT standards... at a Datsun price: race-proven 2-liter OHC engine; 5-speed stick, power front disc brakes, steel-belted white-sidewall radials, full instrumentation including tach, stereo radio with 3 speakers, fully reclining bucket seats, cut-pile carpeting and lots more. Air conditioning and automatic transmission are available.
- So get Datsun's SX-iest; it's fun you can bank on.

5 speed manual. Use these numbers for comparisons. Actual mpg may differ depending on speed, trip length and weather. Actual highway mpg will probably be lower than EPA estimate.

17 Datsuns run on regular gas. Why pay the high price of unleaded?

Autism Is Subject Of True Drama

Virginia native Kathryn Harrold stars in what could be her most important career role yet when she portrays Suzi Kaufman in the TV adaptation of a real-life story called "Son-Rise: A Miracle of Love."

The two-hour movie airs on NBC Monday, May 14 (9 p.m.), and tells the story of a couple's personal struggle and dedication in helping their only son overcome his infliction of autism, a form of childhood schizophrenia. Starring as Barry Kaufman is James Farentino.

"It is an incredible experience playing a woman who is so strong, so determined and such a good mother," Kitty, as her friends and family in Tazewell, Va., know her, says. "I consider myself a feminist, a supporter of the equal rights amendment, but I also think there are some women who are created to make their career being a mother. Suzi Kaufman is one of them.

"I didn't meet the Kaufmans before we did the film, but I did visit with them on the phone after we'd finished. Then I met them personally in Washington, D.C., the first of May, and I felt I'd known Suzi all my life.

"Both Suzi and her husband want to share their story with people, to give them hope and to tell them that possibilities are infinite — that if they have hope that it is possible to bring about change. They are just incredibly positive," she adds.

Kitty also says that the positiveness is one major trademark of their film's story in that the Kaufmans never refuse to accept doctors' prognoses that their son, Raun, will never live a normal life. Barry Kaufman gives up his highly successful career in advertising and Suzi devotes as many as 80 hours a week working with Raun.

Repeatedly, Raun tends to slip into his own world of fantasy, but eventually the Kaufmans' work reaps rewards, the result of 9,700 hours of therapy.

"I have to admit I cried when I saw it," Kitty admits.

Networks, PBS Join Together

Wonder of wonders! There's something new coming to television!

ABC, CBS and NBC are calling an end to their ratings war — for two hours, at least — and joining forces with PBS to present the medium's most memorable moments from the past season on "The Television Annual: 1978/79," airing Monday, May 14 (9 p.m.), on ABC-TV.

For the first time in the history of television, viewers will be able to review an entire TV season, seeing the good and the bad; remembering the year right along with the stars. Among the well known personalities who will be on hand, in addition to the network's executives, are LeVar Burton, Michael Learned, Dick Clark, Olivia Cole, Lola Falana, John Houseman, Adam West and Burt Ward.

The program will be divided into several areas of television programming.

The drama segment will dwell on three areas — Our Heritage, which includes such shows as "Centennial"; Women, encompassing the vast number of shows about the progress the fairer sex has made; and The Professions, because of the features and physicians and attorneys.

There will, of course, be a portion of the program devoted to comedy, as well as one about children's programming. Quinn Cummings and Adam Rich will be featured in this segment. The two will talk about the quality of children's programming, then entertain with a song-and-dance number, "We Can't Smile Without You."

Pantomime artists, Shields and Yarnell, will introduce the film clips that will be shown on the portion of the show dedicated to variety specials, and science fiction and sports will also be featured.

In the news section of the program, three network news anchormen — Frank Reynolds (ABC), Walter Cronkite (CBS) and John Chancellor (NBC) — will explain the various ways in which a history-making story is covered to thoroughly inform the viewer.

These newsmen will concentrate on one of the most momentous stories of the past season — the Middle East — and will follow it from President Carter's setting of the stage for peace talks at Camp David between President Sadat of Egypt and Prime Minister Begin of Israel to the actual signing of the treaty on March 26 in Washington.

Cicely Tyson, one of America's most distinguished actresses, represents women in drama when "The Television Annual 1978-79" looks back at the past year's accomplishments in all areas of television. The two-hour special airs on ABC, Monday, May 14 (9-11 p.m.).

Show Hosts In Big Demand

Who says so? No less an authority than Bob Barker, a noted television game show host. He currently keeps things moving on "The Price Is Right."

Barker is also in great demand to host many special-events broadcasts, such as parades and international beauty pageants — and the 1978-79 "Sixth Annual Daytime Emmy Awards" presentation, which he'll be doing Thursday, May 17 (3 to 4:30 p.m.), on CBS-TV. Joining Barker as presenters in the ceremonies will be a host of stars from the daytime shows, among them are John McCook, Jaime Lyn Bauer, Brenda Dickson and Victoria Mallory.

"Teen-age kids always ask me how they can become game-show hosts," says Barker. "I'm hard-pressed for an answer because I can't see any good way to go about it, nowadays. That, I think, may explain the shortage of qualified newcomers.

"So, I tell them to get a thorough education and to read widely, so that they can converse at least a little bit on almost any subject because any subject is likely to come up on a game show. I tell them the most important requirement is to get plenty of practical experience in handling different types of people in ad-lib broadcast situations. But darned if I can tell them where to get that experience."

Barker points out things were different years ago when he was getting started. "I worked for a radio station in Springfield, Mo., and, in those days, small-town stations did lots of man-in-the-street remote broadcasts from local gathering places — parks, drugstores, schools, the courthouse and so forth. I was always interviewing strangers, ad lib, on the air. That gave me an ideal background for hosting.

Bette Davis In Movie

Bette Davis and Gena Rowlands star in "Strangers: The Story of a Mother and Daughter," to be broadcast Sunday, May 13 (9 to 11 p.m.), on CBS-TV. Co-starring in the poignant contemporary drama, set in a New England fishing village, are Ford Rainey, Donald Moffat, Whit Bissell and Royal Dano.

After an absence of more than 20 years, Abigail Mason (Rowlands), returns to the home of her widowed mother, Lucy Mason (Davis), for an uncertain reunion. Neither woman has seen nor communicated with each other for over two decades. The past, which the two women shared with the now dead husband and father, must now be dealt with.

Feeling there is a price to pay for the past, Lucy, isolated and bitter in old age, browbeats, belittles and attacks her daughter. Abigail, employing humor, patience and a childhood habit of pestering, defends herself. Ultimately, however, the daughter lashes out in anger.

Eventually, peace is achieved, a summer is shared, and Lucy grows in Abigail's presence. But a crisis arises, and their bond, so painfully achieved, is again threatened.

Describing Lucy Mason, the character she portrays in the drama, Bette Davis says: "It's the kind of role I enjoy doing because the character at first is one the average person has no sympathy for. She comes to win you over only as you see what has made her the way she is — totally honest about herself."

Gena Rowlands thinks that her role in 'Strangers' is a challenge to both performer and audience. "It is," she explains, "about a love-hate relationship between a mother and a daughter — a situation familiar to millions of women, even if they don't openly acknowledge its existence."

Rowlands says that she finds "a remarkable acceptance and interest" in such complex emotions among fans and colleagues.

"As soon as I mention the subject matter of 'Strangers,' people confide their own or some friend's experience with a similar situation," she notes. "It's as if knowing the story is going to be up there on the screen suddenly gives them freedom to share a burden they believed they were carrying alone."

Bette Davis, (r) and Gena Rowlands star in "Strangers: The Story of a Mother and Daughter," Sunday, May 13 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Action-Packed Film On Disney

Marc McClure (who starred as Jimmy Olsen in the movie "Superman") plays a daring sail-plane pilot, who is blackmailed into smuggling a $500,000 cargo of heroin across the Mexican border, in "The Sky Trap," premiering on NBC-TV's "The Wonderful World of Disney," Sunday, May 13 (7 to 9 p.m.).

A chase between U.S. Customs planes and a plane believed to belong to "The Hawk," an infamous drug smuggler, ends with Hawk's craft crashing in mountainous terrain. The agents recover several kilos of marijuana from the wreckage, but there is no trace of the Hawk.

It is later learned that the plane was stolen from Florence Stone (Patricia Crowley), a middle-aged widow who runs a financially troubled private airport.

While practicing for a local cross-country sailplane competition, Mrs. Stone's teen-aged son, Grant (McClure), spots a suspicious dirt road resembling a landing strip. He lands his glider, narrowly missing a dirt bike ridden by a beautiful young woman, Marti Benson (Kitty Ruth). Grant and Marti are confronted by two bruisers, Hoover and Wilks (Martin Kove and Dennis Fimple), who accuse them of trespassing. Joe Reese (Jim Hutton), Mrs. Stone's assistant, arrives in time to sooth the angry man.

Later, Marti and Grant return to the scene and find a small, camouflaged hangar. As they examine the hangar, a plane piloted by Hoover and Wilks roars down upon them. The kids manage to elude the plane and return to the Stone's airfield.

A few days later, Grant's sail-plane is stolen. Reese receives a phone call informing him the glider is in Nogales, Mexico. He and Grant arrive in Nogales and find the plane on an abandoned runway. Upon his return, Grant and Marti discover a package of heroin in the glider. Hoover photographs their discovery and warns them that he will give the evidence to Federal agents unless they agree to cooperate with him.

Focus Is On Fish

Fish have been swimming in the seas for about 400 million years, which just may explain why there are so many fish stories around. Host Hal Linden tells a number of them on the next edition of "Animals Animals Animals," airing Sunday, May 13 (11:30 to 11:55 a.m.).

An animated poem, "Song of the Sea," shows how four fish croon a tune in the depths of the sea, with Linden explaining: "since fish all have scales, singing was really easy."

Snoopy Bids Farewell

Supper dish on head and suitcase in paw, Snoopy, Charlie Brown's bumbling, bumptious and beloved beagle, bids farewell to Peanutland to return to his first owner, a lonely, ailing little girl named Lila, in "Snoopy Come Home," an animated Peanuts movie special to be rebroadcast Monday, May 14 (8 to 9:30 p.m.), on CBS-TV. When he leaves, a heart-broken Charlie and the rest of the Peanuts realize how much the unique little canine means to them.

Seeds for Snoopy's departure are planted when he receives a letter from Lila telling of her yearning for his return, and the little beagle is torn between granting the hospitalized girl's request or staying with his best buddies amid the comforts of Peanutland.

Before making his final decision, the dogged canine, who has never left home base except for a refresher course in obedience at the Daisy Hill Puppy Farm and occasional flights of fancy, sets out with his feathered secretary-friend, Woodstock, to pay Lila a visit in the hospital far from Peanutland.

A heartbroken Charlie Brown sobs quietly over the loss of his dog, in "Snoopy, Come Home," animated feature film to be presented on Monday, May 14 (8-9:30 p.m.).

Bob Hope At The Palladium

"Bob Hope At the Palladium: A Lifetime of Laughter," a tribute by Bob Hope to one of the world's few remaining variety theaters on the occasion of his first appearance there in some 25 years, will be telecast by NBC Monday, May 14 (8 to 9 p.m.). Richard Burton, in a rare television appearance, and singer-actress Raquel Welch are special guest stars; Leif Garrett, Susan George and Leslie Uggams are guest stars.

The special was taped in its entirety at the Palladium, following a week of soldout performances headlined by Hope and featuring Uggams.

During the past 70 years, the Palladium has presented popular music from the era of vaudeville through jazz and swing up to contemporary disco music. In musical segments reflecting each of these eras, the special focuses on the theatre as the site of command performances for Great Britain's royal family.

Burton, the versatile actor equally at ease in Shakespearean stage productions and feature films, has received numerous Oscar nominations, for such films as "The Robe," "Becket," "The Spy Who Came In From the Cold," "Equus," "Anne of a Thousand Days" and "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?"

Welch, in her third appearance in a Hope special, has become an established night club performer of international stature after starring in over 20 films, including "Fantastic Voyage," "Fuzz," and "The Three Musketeers."

Garrett, the popular teen singing idol whose current hit, "I Was Made for Dancing," is rising on the charts both in the United States and Europe, has numerous acting credit in television and feature films.

No Help From Grandfather

Their great grandfather is King Vidor, one of Hollywood's legendary directors, a man whose films include "The Big Parade," "The Crowd," "Our Daily Bread," "War and Peace" and the original, 1931 version of "The Champ."

So how did Michael and Casey Adams, three-and-a-half year old identical twins, get their first acting job?

"My husband's uncle knew an agent who knew another agent who was looking for twins for a role," says Mrs. Linda Adams, the boys' mother.

Twins frequently are sought when the character is very young because they can spell one another in front of the cameras. Michael and Casey took turns portraying an autistic child in "Son-Rise: A Miracle of Love," a fact-based drama to be presented on "NBC Theatre" May 14 (9 to 11 p.m.).

"No one in the film crew knew the boys were King's great grandsons until the movie was half-finished," said Mrs. Adams. "After the boys were offered the role we asked King about it and he encouraged us to go ahead and do it. He thought it would be a fine experience."

James Farentino and Kathryn Harrold star in the drama as loving parents who struggle determinedly to help their autistic son by sometimes unorthodox methods after refusing to accept grim medical prognoses about him.

The most difficult thing for the boys was portraying a child who says nothing and spends much time staring vacantly into space.

"It was hard for them to stare for long periods," said their mother.

Another problem was that the director decided early on that Michael was easier to work with so Casey didn't get in front of the camera until late in the afternoons.

"By that time he was tired and grumpy because he hadn't had a nap," said Mrs. Casey. "But toward the end of the picture's filming the director tried it the other way around and it worked beautifully."

Mrs. Adams isn't sure the boys will do any more acting. "When it was over they seemed happy to be done with it. But as the weeks pass they seem to miss it," she says.

"Whatever happens it's been a great experience for all of us. And they did it on their own — without help from their great grandfather."

What A 'Gimmick'

"Taxi" star Andy Kaufman has an unusual 'gimmick' that he uses during his personal appearances — he offers $500 to any woman who can wrestle him to the floor of the stage. Thus far, he is undefeated in 10 bouts.

She Chants Spells

Lee Grant stars as a concerned mother dealing with a problem teen-age daughter who chants to inflict terror on her enemies, in "The Spell," airing as "The CBS Late Movie," Tuesday, May 15 (12:30 a.m.).

James Olson, Susan Myers, Barbara Bostock and Lelia Goldoni also star.

Fifteen-year-old Rita Matchett (Myers) is self-conscious about her obesity and fed up with being teased by schoolmates. Gym teacher Jo Standish (Goldoni) is sympathetic to her. Then, a popular and pretty girl in the gym class, one who leads the teasing, mysteriously falls while doing an aerial ballet on a rope.

At home, Marion, Rita's mother, tries to make harmony within her family — there is a great deal of friction between Rita and her pretty 12-year-old sister, Jill (Bostock); and Glenn (Olson), the father, admits that Rita's attitude makes her difficult to love.

Study Of Contrasts

Though each is a child of the turbulent 1960s, Bess Armstrong and Laurel Lee are a study in contrasts.

Armstrong, the actress, portrays Lee, the writer, in "Walking Through the Fire," broadcast on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies" May 15 (9 to 11 p.m.).

The feature, which was adapted from a book of the same title by Laurel Lee, is a chronicle of her struggle with deadly Hodgkin's disease, which was endangering her life and the life of her unborn baby.

During the ordeal, Laurel Lee grasped onto her firm faith and the writing of a day-by-day journal to help her achieve an optimistic spirit and peace of mind. She retained these qualities for the duration of her illness, even when she emerged from it shorn of her husband and penniless.

Lee's youth was one of change, risk and impulse. She was expelled from Pacific University (Forest Grove, Ore.) for hitchhiking, then enrolled in the University of California at Berkeley, a hotbed of social and political protest movements of the 1960s. Her habit of hitchhiking this time brought her not expulsion, but a husband (they met when he gave her a ride).

The couple left college to homestead in Alaska but left after a month, deciding that homesteading in Alaska hadn't been as much fun as getting there.

They then hitchhiked around the U.S. and Canada, winding up in Portland, Ore., where they settled down and had two children. At this point, Laurel was stricken with Hodgkin's disease, and her hospitalization and treatment began.

Bess Armstrong portrays a young mother battling Hodgkin's disease, which is also endangering the life of her unborn baby, in "Walking Through the Fire," to be broadcast on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," May 15 (9-11 p.m.).

When she was released from the hospital, still weak, she was forced to go on welfare. She moved with her young children into an apartment that was so small that 6-year-old Matthew Lee had to sleep on a closet shelf.

Bess Armstrong was born in Baltimore and attended Bryn Mawr School for girls for 14 successive years. She claims that she never realized that everyone did not stay in one institution for their schooling until she reached college.

Bess was a classical violinist from an early age and throughout her young life studied at music camps and played in orchestras and quartets.

While she is an avid walker, she "can't ever remember hitchhiking."

Saga To Continue

A near-decade of one of TV's most celebrated situation comedies, "All in the Family," comes to a close this season, but the saga of Archie Bunker will continue with "The Archie Bunker Show," which will air on CBS.

"All in the Family" co-star, Jean Stapleton, who has portrayed Edith Bunker for the past nine years, will make several appearances throughout the season of the new show.

Louis L'Amour Western Airs

What better place for Jesse James than a western called "The Sacketts?" Except that Jesse James, in this case is a large, floppy, longhaired dog who figures in one of the key scenes of NBC-TV's four-hour western drama "The Sacketts," Tuesday and Wednesday, May 15 and 16 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Jesse James (age indeterminate) never had an acting lesson in his non-professional life. Owned by an elderly cowboy, known on the Canon City, Colo., location as "Antler Bill," the dog gave an authentic touch to the frontier town, as he shambled down the dusty main street.

Unfortunately, Jesse didn't realize they were shooting a television movie. He thought all those nice, dirty, tobacco-chewing cowboys were for real. In fact, he nearly caused the show's major "shootout scene" to come to a halt.

According to the plot, Oscar-winner Ben Johnson, plays a veteran cowboy who has been wounded by the bad guys in the Bigelow gang. He has to hobble down the stairs of a wooden house on an improvised crutch, just in time to sit down on a crude chair and take a shot at the guy trying to wipe out the three Sackett brothers, Tell, Orrin and Tye (Sam Elliott, Tom Selleck and Jeff Osterhage).

Nobody bothered to tell old Jesse that the fierce-looking cowboy with the crutch and the rifle, was playing a big scene. When Jesse saw him, he began to growl and the hair stood up along his spine. All this was being filmed.

Never missing a beat, Johnson said, "Shut up dog, and lay down" and took up his post so he could take aim at the villains.

Now Jesse may be an amateur, but he knows a dog-loving, hard-nosed fellow when he sees one. He stopped growling, circled lazily and flumped himself down under Johnson's chair on the veranda. Never glancing his way, Ben finished the scene.

When Director Robert Totten called "cut," the film crew burst out laughing and applauded good, old Jesse. Nobody was more tickled than Ben Johnson.

At the end of the day, Jesse James was paid ten dollars for his impromptu growl. After all, he was non-union, and the movie was about the Sackett brothers, not the James boys.

The epic drama focuses on three brothers — Tell, Orrin and Tye Sackett — in the turbulent years when Anglo-Saxon and Spanish-speaking settlers fought one another in the emergence of the New Mexico Territory.

This is the first time any of L'Amour's 74 novels have been dramatized for television, and the presentation has been acclaimed by the National Cowboy Hall of Fame as "the western of the decade."

PART I: After Orrin Sackett's bride is killed and his brother, Tye, avenges the murder, the boys' mother urges them to go West and join their brother, Tell. The two join a cattle drive and head for Abilene.

Bettie Davis On Motherhood

"You have to wonder why I'm so cruel to my own daughter. She's trying hard to make up an old quarrel but I'm terrible to her. You tell yourself you don't care. But you wait to see what happens — whether I get what I deserve. Then, bit by bit, you learn more. You realize why I behave that way. And soon you come to understand."

That, in her own words, is the story of Bette Davis' powerful portrayal of a bitter mother in "Strangers: The Story of a Mother and Daughter," a television movie in which she stars with Gena Rowlands, airing Sunday, May 13 (9 p.m.), on CBS.

"So much of the character reflects my own New England background," Davis declares. "People there have a special, gritty quality. They take nothing for granted. They can be hard, and they may have trouble expressing their feelings. But they're worth getting to know because they have integrity."

No, the character does not reflect Bette Davis' relationship with her own mother. She notes: "Acting is pretending. I don't think it has anything to do with motivation. It has much to do with observation — a good eye for how people speak and behave under stress."

Her own parents separated when she was 7, and her mother went to work to educate Bette and her sister, Barbara. Davis says: "I owe everything I am in life to my mother. From the time I was very young, she had a hunch that some day I was going to do extraordinary things. She was very protective, and she helped me enormously. I can't say enough for her efforts."

Miss Davis is close to her own three children, two daughters and a son, and says she's learned "You have to be honest when it comes to your children; there is no greater role than the role of a mother."

The production's screenplay, by Michael de Guzman, was originally built around a father and son relationship, but de Guzman changed it a few years ago when he read a newspaper article in which Davis lamented the lack of good roles being written for women.

"I decided to change it when I read this," de Guzman said. "I based the mother especially on Bette Davis. Although I'd never met her, I knew of the New England background she came from; we were born within 30 miles of each other."

Two of his friends, both producers, happened to sit with Davis at a film conference and described de Guzman's story to her. She expressed interest, and 18 months later, the script was delivered.

Watch Those Muppets

Never underestimate the power of a Muppet!

Jim Henson's lovable zanies of TV's "The Muppet Show" have proved again that no one — but no one — is immune to their charm by luring virtually every top celebrity in Hollywood to their recent glamorous bash at the Ambassador Hotel's Cocoanut Grove, favorite pleasure-place of superstars of Hollywood's youth. The entire party was filmed as part of "The Muppets Go to Hollywood," which airs on CBS-TV Wednesday, May 16 (8 to 9 p.m.).

Some of the famous faces in the audience — such as Candice Bergen, Raquel Welch, Phyllis Diller, Jean Stapleton, Vincent Price, Twiggy, James Coburn and Mel Brooks have already contracted a severe case of Muppetmania by contact: they've been guests either on "The Muppet Show" or in "The Muppet Movie," a feature film to be released in June.

Prize-Winning Comedy Airs

"You Can't Take It With You," the classic, Pulitzer Prize-winning Kaufman and Hart comedy about a slightly daft family who conduct their lives exactly as they please, will be broadcast Wednesday, May 16 (9 to 11 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Jean Stapleton and Art Carney star, along with a distinguished cast which includes Barry Bostwick, Blythe Danner, Marla Gibbs, Howard Hesseman, Polly Holliday, Beth Howland, Robert Mandan, Kenneth Mars, Harry Morgan, Mildred Natwick, Tim Reid, Eugene Roche, Paul Sand and Joyce Van Patten.

The comedy chronicles the deliciously madcap life of 75-year-old Grandpa Vanderhof (Carney) and his daughter, Penny (Stapleton), as well as the other Vanderhof family members — both official and semi-official — who populate a roomy uptown Manhattan home.

Feisty Grandpa Vanderhof, who just up and quit his job one day, has spent the last 30 years blissfully collecting snakes — who crawl around an aquarium in the living room — and attending college commencements. Daughter Penny, a genuine chip off the old block, is in the process of writing her eleventh play, the notion of playwriting having hit her one day when a typewriter was delivered to the house by mistake.

There are some other wonderfully wacky relatives, too. Essie (Howland), Penny's daughter, is a nut on ballet and spends all of her days in toe shoes. For eating money, she whips up candy, in the kitchen, which her husband, Ed (Sand), goes out and peddles. Ed's into the xylophone, the instrument providing continuous music for Essie to dance to.

Below stairs, Penny's husband, Paul (Roche), gets a bang out of making fireworks, the results of which he's apt to demonstrate in the living room. Paul's eager assistant is Mr. DePinna (Morgan), who came to the house eight years prior to deliver ice and never left.

Rounding out the Vanderhof menage is Rheba (Gibbs), the black cook; Donald (Reid), Rheba's friend; Mr. Kolenkhov (Mars, a burly Russian dancer), and granddaughter Alice (Danner), a lovely — and down to earth — young woman.

One day reality steps into the picture when Grandpa gets a visit from an IRS agent, peeved that he has not paid taxes for 20 years. Further, Alice and her boss's Yale-educated son, Tony Kirby (Bostwick), have fallen in love.

How everything works out to everyone's satisfaction (with the possible exception of the IRS agent) is the essence of a comedy chock full of inspired absurdity and hilariously outlandish antics.

The hilarious comedy "You Can't Take It With You" gives one family's view of how to live. (l to r) Beth Howland, Paul Sand, Jean Stapleton, Harry Morgan, Art Carney and Eugene Roche all come to television on Wednesday, May 16 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Enjoys Playing An Oddball

He was the snarling, mean half-breed Jake Pasquinel in "Centennial," but currently Stephen McHattie is evoking laughter as an irreverent Anglo reverend in NBC-TV's new limited series, "Highcliffe Manor," which is colorcast Thursdays (8:30 to 9 p.m.).

"The only thing the Rev. Ian Glenville has in common with Jake is that they both paddled canoes," McHattie said, explaining:

"In Highcliffe, I'm a South African minister actually on the lam who winds up at the 'think tank' foundation on Highcliffe Manor off the coast of Massachusetts.

"As Rev. Glenville, I claim to have paddled a canoe with my valet all the way from Capetown. I'm out to prove my theory that the Black man is indigenous to America and that he paddled across the Atlantic to Africa to keep warm.

"Therefore, I contend that all of the blacks in Africa should be shipped back to their rightful native land, the United States of America.

"If you suspect this is a far out show, you're right," says McHattie, adding, "and I'm only one of several oddball characters at the manor."

For the Canadian-born McHattie who comes from a classical stage background, this is his first major role in a comedic vein.

McHattie first achieved stardom when he received critical acclaim for his 1976 portrayal of the late James Dean in the television production, "James Dean: Portrait of a Friend."

"I had misgivings about playing the screen idol, who died in a car wreck at age 25," McHattie recalls.

"Many people have strong feelings, obsessive feelings about him. He is still alive to a lot of people, especially actors," McHattie said.

"And then the Pasquinel role was pretty heavy, too, so I'm delighted to be doing 'Rev. Glenville's the name, God's my game' — a funny character who is oblivious to weighty problems of the world."

Pike's Peek

BY CHARLIE PIKE
PFA Staff Writer

HOLLYWOOD — Certainly a lot of debate is surfacing as to whether KATE JACKSON asked out of her "CHARLIE'S ANGELS" contract and was accommodated, or was fired when she demanded an incredibly high salary hike. Regardless, don't believe those printed reports that Kate takes drugs. It's a fact that she doesn't, and never has. Furthermore, she may very well file a suit against the publisher of such a story.

Speaking of suits, CAROL BURNETT has reportedly filed a suit against a certain weekly tabloid headquartered in Florida. Reportedly, the proof her attorneys have against the publication for falsifying information in a story about Carol could lead to a court decision that will encourage other Hollywood stars to take similar action against the 'newspaper.'

WINGS HAUSER (Greg Foster) of "THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS" and his girlfriend of two years, NANCY DALZIEL, will wed in June, with the actor's eight-year-old daughter, BRIGHT, of whom Wings has had custody since his divorce from his first wife seven years ago, serving as honorary bride's maid.

Even though BETH HOWLAND and POLLY HOLLIDAY of "ALICE" have important roles in CBS' presentation of "YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU," and even though they do appear on the screen together in the special, they don't exchange a single word of dialogue.

Insiders at ABC say that it won't be the least bit surprising if the network revamps its new primetime schedule to put a couple of its proven winners back in their familiar timeslots before Fall.

It may not mean a lot in the Neilsen ratings, but there are advertisers taking notice of the fact that CBS recently won eight Peabody Awards while NBC captured three and ABC two, and within the confines of the networks, the Peabodys are more important than the Emmys.

VICTORIA PRINCIPAL is making it no secret that before she and CHRISTOPHER SKINNER slipped into Las Vegas for their private wedding ceremony the last week of April, they agreed that they'd not have children, a decision she'd like to see brought to the small screen in her role as Pam on "DALLAS."

GREG EVIGAN looks so at home behind the wheel of that huge semi-trailer rig on "B.J. & THE BEAR" on NBC for good reason. Before the show went into production, Greg went to school to gain his certificate as a licensed truck driver.

Mod Squad Is Back

The Mod Squad's Pete, Julie and Linc are back after seven years off the force to help their old boss, who is the victim of mysterious sniper attacks, and they are thrust into a world of crime they neither know nor understand in "The Return of the Mod Squad," a world premiere movie airing as "The ABC Friday Night Movie," May 18 (9 to 11 p.m.).

In 'Return,' Pete Cochrane (Cole), Julie Barnes (Lipton) and Linc Hayes (Williams) were undercover cops in the 1960s, who disbanded and went their separate ways. They are called back to the force when a series of sniper attacks are made on their old boss, Adam Greer (Andrews), now a deputy chief. All evidence indicates that the gunman is someone who still lives in the "flower child" world of the 60s. Pete, Julie and Linc try to unravel the case, but find their way blocked by new techniques, new procedures and new kinds of crimes and criminals. Then, as they get closer to the killer, they find that they, not Greer, may be the intended victims.

Leif's First Special

Leif Garrett, the popular teen-age actor and concert and recording artist, stars in his first contemporary musical, comedy, variety hour, "The Leif Garrett Special," Friday, May 18 (8-9 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Seventeen-year-old Leif Garrett stars in his first television special, slated to air Friday, May 18 (8 to 9 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Joining the teen heart-throb of millions on the show, appropriately titled "Leif," are Marie Osmond, Bob Hope, Flip Wilson, Brooke Shields and a new feminine duet from Japan called Pink Lady.

"There's not really any theme to the show," the personable singer/actor says, "it's mostly just variety. I'm singing, Marie is singing and there are skits with Marie, Brooke, Flip and myself, and I do an interview with Bob Hope."

Still, the list of guest stars were not arranged merely for the sake of having guest stars.

"The great thing about it is that I was involved in putting the show together right in the beginning, and was also involved in the many changes we made as we went along. Their first script was nothing like the end result. We changed it because there was a lot of stuff that didn't quite work — not only myself but our guest stars — so we made alterations."

"I wanted to have Brooke and Marie on the show because I like them both and I'm friends with both of them," Leif explains. "And, when I did the Osmond Family special in London, I said to Marie, 'Hey, if you can, why not do my special?' She said, 'Sure.'

"Flip is a guest because he's one funny guy and better than that, he doesn't really do Geraldine anymore and we got him to do that for the show. It's a skit while I'm singing and he comes out. It's so funny I had a hard time keeping a straight face."

As for Hope, Leif says simply, "I wanted him because he is a great human being."

Pink Lady will be making their American TV debut, but in their native Japan, Leif explains, "They're about the hottest disco group in the country."

Besides appearing with each of the guest stars, Leif will also be featured in a concert-solo spot in which he'll sing many of his hit records.

There's still an additional facet about the show that makes it special. As the star and host, Leif becomes the youngest U.S. performer in TV history to have his own show.

Who Can Top Reggie Jackson?

REGGIE JACKSON — anyway you slice the New York Yankee outfielder, he comes up dripping with charisma and a flair for the dramatic. The Yankees challenge their dreaded rivals the Boston Red Sox, when the two Eastern Division foes battle in Fenway Park in Boston Saturday, May 19, beginning at 2:15 p.m. on NBC.

Call him Superstar, call him Motormouth, call him the Candy Bar King — anyway you put it, Reggie Jackson is the kind of sports figure that leaves fans, sportswriters and baseball officials gasping for more. Or for much less.

Whether you love or hate the New York Yankee outfielder (and almost everybody either feels one way or the other), few will NOT admit that he commands the kind of attention usually designated for kings and politicans.

Reggie and the rest of the Bronx Bombers return to the scene of their post-season playoff game last year when they enter Boston's Fenway Park Saturday, May 19. NBC will be there to televise the action when these two Eastern Division combatants face each other (beginning at 2:15 p.m.).

Few will forget the late-season heroics of Jackson and his teammates last year, when they overcame a 13-game lead by the Bosox and caught them, passed them, then fell back into a tie that final day of the season. Next was the defeat in the memorable playoff tilt.

Naturally, Reggie slammed a deep homer into the center field stands that ended up being the difference in the one-run affair.

One run is not very much, but it meant the Yanks had another chance to win a World Series, which they did, while the Sox had to settle for something that is beginning to become a bad joke in Beantown — the perennial second place.

Whether there's a pennant race this year or not, there's always Reggie. Two seasons ago, he set the baseball world on its ears with an evening that even he may have trouble topping. In the final World Series game against the Los Angeles Dodgers, he slammed three homers, each one longer than its predecessor.

This is the same Jackson, however, who has NEVER hit over .300 in 11 seasons in the major leagues, strikes out more than he wishes to remember, and fields sometimes atrociously, and sometimes — well — fairly well.

Golf From Fort Worth

CBS Sports will broadcast the final two rounds of the 72-hole, $300,000 Colonial National Invitation golf tournament Saturday, May 19 (4 to 5 p.m.), and Sunday, May 20 (4 to 6 p.m.), from the Colonial Country Club in Fort Worth, Texas.

The broadcast will include play at the par 3, 169-yard 13th hole; the par 4, 431-yard 14th hole; the par 4, 442-yard 15th hold; the one-shot, par 3, 200-yard 16th hole; the par 4, 387-yard 17th hole; and the par 4, 434-yard 18th hole.

In recognition of the fact that Ben Hogan won the National Invitation a record five times, and also because he redesigned several of the holes over the years, Colonial is known as "Hogan's Alley." Almost all of the trophies "The Ice Man" garnered in his illustrious career are on permanent display in a room adjacent to Colonial's main lobby.

The Teen Scene

It may come as a shock, but the teen rage in England at the moment is none other than JOHN SCHNEIDER of CBS-TV's hour-long series, "THE DUKES OF HAZZARD." P.S. — John's the blonde!

GREG EVIGAN is the only cast or crew member of NBC's "B.J. & THE BEAR" who calls his chimp co-star by the animal's stage name, Bear. Everyone else refers to the chimp by his real name, SAM.

ERIK ESTRADA gives credit where credit is due by saying that it's the teen audience of "CHiPs" that's made the series the success it is. Because of that, Erik is devoting a great deal of his hiatus visiting with youngsters in the ghettos of some of the country's larger cities and encouraging them to seek an education and/or a vocation.

PARKER STEVENSON is all but signed to star in a new series pilot which will find him in a role a bit more mature than that of "THE HARDY BOYS." But there will be the similarity, since the projected series will be of an adventure nature.

With "FAMILY" not returning to a weekly time slot until January, look for KRISTY McNICHOL to show up on at least one major made-for-television movie if ABC has its wish. The network fully realizes Kristy's drawing power.

LEIF GARRETT's hour-long special is being considered by CBS for a mid-season series.

"500" Time Trials On ABC

Who will be on the all-important front row of the Indy "500" will be determined by the Time Trials. ABC will provide coverage of these trials on a split "Wide World" program Saturday, May 19 (4 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 6:30 p.m.).

The Indy "500" Time Trials, leading up to the famed Indy "500," will be presented Saturday, May 19, live on ABC's split "Wide World of Sports" program (4 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 6:30 p.m.). The pole position (on the inside of the front row of three cars) will be determined by these all-important time trials.

Lap speeds — particularly during practice and time trials — will not be as fast as last year because of new restrictions placed on the maximum allowable blower pressure for all types of turbocharged engines in an effort to equate their horsepower output and encourage the development of unblown stock block engines. But the "spread" between the fastest and slowest cars in the starting lineup should be reduced noticeably.

A record-breaking total of 103 cars are entered in the race and will be vying for that all-important front row. This number includes 31 of the 33 drivers in the starting field last year, nine other Indianapolis veterans and 12 rookies without previous experience.

Former winners hopeful of leading the pack again are A.J. Foyt (1961, '64, '67 and '77), Al Unser (1970, '71 and '78), Bobby Unser (1968 and '75), Johnny Rutherford (1974 and '76), Gordon Johncock (1973). Sharing the spotlight will be such 'chargers' as Danny Ongais and Tom Sneva.

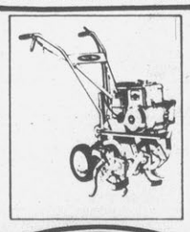

The rookie contingent is headed by Billy Engelhart and Dana Carter — both 'graduates' of USAC's spring car division — and Hurley Haywood, a former co-winner of 24-hour races at LeMans and Daytona as well as the 12-hour Sebring race.

Dana, brother of Pancho Carter and half-brother of Johnny Parsons, gained most of his racing experience in midgets as well as sprint cars. He was third in the 1978 USAC sprint car standing and he finished 10th in USAC's 200-mile championship car race at Ontario in March.

Haywood's latest 24-hour victory was scored at Daytona Feb. 3-4 with Ongais and Ted Field as co-drivers of a turbocharged Porsche entry.

Forty V-8 Cosworths and 37 four-cylinder Drake Offies, all turbocharged, dominate the assortment of 12 engines.

Frazier Says 'No'

Joe Frazier's amateur boxing team will take on Muhammad Ali's team in Atlantic City, N.J. The event's promoters offered Joe $50,000 to go two rounds against Ali on the same card, but Frazier declined. He feels that the three Ali-Frazer fights are classics, not to be tarnished by any sideshow clowning.

The Preakness Is Steeped In Traditions

All of the beautiful stateliness and colorful aura of "the sport of kings" will be in full blossom as the finest thoroughbreds in the world enter the starting gate for the running of the Preakness, second leg in the coveted Triple Crown of horse racing. ABC will televise the sporting event Saturday, May 19 (5 p.m.).

The race will take place at the Pimlico Race course in Baltimore, Maryland, and will extend to the full one mile and three-sixteenths length.

Perhaps no sport in the world has the celebrated and royal pomp of horse racing. Since medieval times, horse owners have received various silver and gold ornaments as prizes for having the winning thoroughbred. Back in the days of James I of England, the custom was established of rewarding the silver bell to the horse winning certain important races. Legend has it that on one occasion the silversmith failed to produce a flawless bell until his third attempt, and thus began the practice of awards for the horses finishing second and third.

One of the more colorful of today's trophies is the Woodlawn Vase of the Preakness. During the American Civil War, the vase was buried for safekeeping, and later dug up. In 1917, it was presented to the Maryland Jockey Club as a permanent trophy for the Preakness.

Two years older than the Kentucky Derby and six years younger than the Belmont Stakes, the Preakness takes its name for the first winner of a test for three-year-olds at the Pimlico spring meeting in 1870.

"A group of sportsmen at a dinner party in Saratoga, N.Y., one evening in 1868 agreed to run a sweepstakes in Baltimore two years later," wrote William H.P. Robertn in "The History of Thoroughbred Racing in America."

"Originally, there were only seven subscribers, but the idea caught on so well that 'The Dinner Party Stakes,' as it was known, had attracted 30 nominations by the time it closed in October."

ORSON AND BILBO — Orson Bean speaks for Bilbo Baggins, principal character in "The Hobbit," the animated special to be colorcast on NBC, Saturday, May 19 (8:30-10 p.m.).

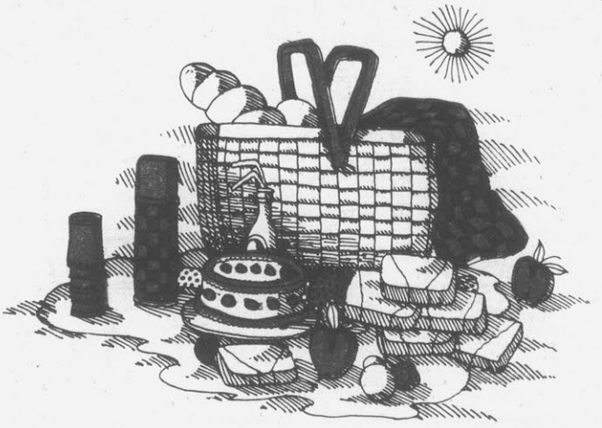

James Taylor On SNL

Michael Palin, of Monty Python fame, makes his third appearance as host, and singer/songwriter James Taylor returns as a musical guest on the May 12th telecast of "NBC's Saturday Night Live" (11:30 p.m. to 1 a.m.). Palin and Taylor join repertory stars Dan Aykroyd, John Belushi, Jane Curtin, Garrett Morris, Bill Murray, Laraine Newman and Gilda Radner.

Since his last appearance on the program (January, 1979), Palin's television series, "Ripping Yarns," for which he writes and on which he performs, has been televised on PBS stations throughout the country. He says a book, oddly enough called "Ripping Yarns," and more episodes of the series are in the works. He has also completed a role in the film "Monty Python's Life of Brian."

Today, nearly a decade after his days as an unknown street corner musician in London, Taylor is one of contemporary music's finest singer/songwriters. His ninth album, "Flag," was released in April and has been called his most personal statement to date. "Sometimes I have my doubts about being so personal in my songs," he says, "but there's no sense in holding anything back. I can only write about myself anyway. It's the personal gratification of songwriting that makes it all worthwhile; the navigation through life by self-expression."

...and that means you might need to take a look at your summer sportswear. Whatever shape you're in, we do our best to make you look great in slacks, sport shirts, shorts, swim trunks, knits and, of course, a pair of Bass Weejuns or Sperry Topsiders. Also great gift ideas for Graduation and Father's Day.

Raeanne Rubenstein

What price, when mom comes to stay?

FOR NANCY FRIDAY, author of My Mother/My Self

How do you feel about mother-daughter homes? My mother is a widow. She, my husband and I get on very well, but I'm nervous about asking her to live with us. —R.B., Bay City, Mich.

● There are certain responsibilities we all face. We all pay income tax. We don't like it, but we know it must be done. We all have certain real responsibilities to our parents, but, like the income tax, if the cost is too high, we rebel. If you don't want to call your mother, but do it out of duty, after a while you will begin to feel resentment, and it will come out one way or another. If you feel you owe it to your mother to have her live with you and your husband, think very carefully about the psychic price to you. If you feel that having your mother live with you and your husband will be a pleasure, things will probably work out for the three of you.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

We all know how domestic animals mother their young, but what about the way that wild animals treat their babies? —N.F., Laredo, Texas

● J.Y. Henderson, who has spent 40 years watching over the animals at Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, throws some light on what sort of mothers circus creatures are. Said the chief vet: "Although elephants rarely ever breed in captivity (an elephant calf born last year in the Knoxville zoo is the exception), they're very attentive to their babies in the wilds, never letting them out of their sight. Tigers are more unusual. They either completely reject their cubs at birth, or else they go to the other extreme and care for them until they're old enough to be independent." In the circus, if mom tigers or leopards refuse to nurse their cubs, then the trainer must step in and become a mother substitute. Sometimes circus folk must find a wet nurse for the little ones.

Sam Siegel / Metropolitan Photo Service Inc.

FOR JOHNNY BENCH, catcher for the National League's Cincinnati Reds

Is it true that your mother was against your becoming a professional athlete and did everything she could to stop you? —D.O., Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

● Absolutely not. My mother loves to see her "boy" play baseball, and she always has. If it were up to her (and I'd let her), she'd still be willing to wash my uniform every night after the game. The only thing she always worries about is that I might get hurt.

FOR LORETTA LYNN, country singer

Since you're one of eight children, have six of your own and are a grandmother, do you consider yourself an authority on raising kids? —A.E., Terre Haute, Ind.

● No way. I still have a lot to learn. There's no formula for doing right. I did the best I could and hoped for the best. When Betty Sue followed my example and got married at 14, I was against it. But how could I stop her? When I tried, the first thing she said was, "Well, you did it, Mom, and look how well yours turned out." How could I say it was just luck?

FOR OLIVE OSMOND, mother of Marie Osmond

Marie often says she had a weight problem as a kid. Is that true? —Jane Liddon, Huntington, W. Va.

● When Marie was 12, she was so chubby we had to buy her clothes in the husky department. She carries pictures of the way she looked then, just to remind her of what can happen if she eats too much. Marie keeps thin by being careful; no sweets. She starts off with energy-giving cereal for breakfast, with a protein drink. During the day she has lots of vegetables and fruit, not much meat.

FOR SENATOR WILLIAM PROXMIRE (D.-Wis.)

Let us worn-out moms in on your secret! What do you do to keep yourself looking so young and full of energy? —O.A., Canton, Ohio

● Challenging, interesting work doesn't of itself age any of us. Its stimulus helps keep us young. A daily routine of calisthenics, five miles of running, moderate eating, no smoking or drinking and adequate rest all help me to keep in tip-top shape. And, lest you've forgotten all about it, so did the hair transplants!

FOR ERNEST L. BOYER, U.S. Commissioner of Education

● Parents are the first teachers. Children won't learn how to read and write and speak without parents who read to them, talk with them and show that language counts. It begins in the crib, and it's no less important when children are in school. This crucial parent-teacher partnership must be reaffirmed.

FOR GRACE L. MITCHELL, mother of attorney F. Lee Bailey and author of The Day Care Book

Was Lee difficult to handle when he was a child? —Elizabeth Martin, Pomona, Calif.

● He wasn't difficult — he was unusual and different. In the early years, I would ask myself, "What have I created?" He was a square peg in a round hole. A loner. Although he was not a bad boy, when he was in junior high school, I seemed to spend an awful lot of time in the principal's office. That's because he refused to be squeezed into that round hole.

PRO AND CON

Should the Federal Government Be Forced to Balance Its Budget?

PRO Gov. Lee Sherman Dreyfus, Wisconsin

Getting the Federal budget balanced is essential. We need a handle on Government spending to help control inflation. I am convinced that unless Congress acts, we will have a Constitutional Convention mandating it. In Wisconsin we are not allowed to run a deficit, and we pass a revenue bill which establishes a spending ceiling before we consider spending programs. This puts a lid on resources available for appropriation. This is a pattern the Federal Government could follow to avoid a Constitutional action. If they do not, I will support the Constitutional ceiling, despite my misgivings about the rigidity of the Constitutional approach to mandating Federal budget-balancing.

CON Rep. Robert N. Giaimo (D.-Conn.), Chairman, House Budget Committee

We are all for balanced budgets, and Congress is now moving strongly in that direction. But to mandate one through a legal mechanism would be unwise and even dangerous. The Government must have the flexibility to act before an emergency, such as a depression, occurs. If the economy approached a depression, producing a balanced budget would require deep program cuts or sharp tax increases, either of which would be economically unwise. I believe we will achieve a balanced budget soon, without a Constitutional requirement, by making hard choices and exercising discipline restraint. Fortunately, Congress is finally showing signs that it is willing to make these hard choices.

LINDA LAVIN ISN'T SINGLE OR A PARENT...BUT SHE SPEAKS FOR BOTH

By Isobel Silden

Street-smart Alice survives by slinging hash — but she does have some splashy moments with boss Vic Tayback.

CBS

Who speaks for the single parent? Linda Lavin does, in her role as Alice on CBS television Sunday nights. She became a self-appointed spokeswoman when her series began in 1976.

Neither single nor a parent, Linda takes life and its responsibilities seriously, but with humor. And if that sounds contradictory, it's because the lady is, too.

TV makes her appear larger than life-size. She is not recognizable as she makes her way through the crowded studio dining room. No pink apron, no sensible shoes. Instead, she's a glamorous lady in a gaucho hat and a raincoat. It's a soggy day in Los Angeles, but not for Linda Lavin. She looks so self-contained that floods don't appear to enter into her consciousness.

Alice does. She wants to talk about Alice, whose identity she has molded to fit her as comfortably as her wardrobe.

The series was created after the successful 1974 movie, Alice Doesn't Live Here Any More, in which Ellen Burstyn played a widow with a son to raise.

Creator Robert Getchell then shaped Alice into a viable television format, and Linda was plucked from the New York theater to play the title role.

"When the pilot was sold as a series, I contacted Gloria Steinem, whom I'd met several times; I'd found her very open and warm. I asked for help in researching the character, and she gave me material dealing with single women with sons.

"When the show went on the air, research showed there were eight to 12 million single parents in this country. I felt a lot of responsibility to them.

"We want to say to single parents, 'You are not alone in having the burden of a child. You may not have everything, but you can have a good life.'

"When we first went on the air, 60 percent of our audience were women and 40 percent men. Now I think the percentages are almost even. Men can relate to us, too," she says with satisfaction.

And Linda relates to Alice as a woman she understands.

"She has street smarts. But she hasn't had the advantages of education that I've had. She is so innocent, so naive. If I had the same background, I think I'd be very much like her. I'm a small-town girl, too, from Portland, Maine."

From Portland, Linda intended to go to college in Boston, close to home. Instead, she enrolled at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Virginia: "I went to visit a friend, who said I should see the campus. I found a different society, sound and texture."

From college, Linda went to New York and worked on and off-Broadway, beginning in 1965. She has a Tony nomination for her role in Neil Simon's Last of the Red Hot Lovers. She also has an Obie (off-Broadway) nomination for her work in Jules Feiffer's Little Murders. On Broadway, she made a name for herself in It's a Bird... It's a Plane... It's Superman; Carl Reiner's Something Different; Paul Sills' Story Theater. She starred and toured in On a Clear Day You Can See Forever. And she performed in Joseph Papp's New York Shakespeare Festival; with the Second City improvisational troupe and the Yale Repertory Company. In 1969 she married Ron Leibman, currently starring in the Kaz series. It is a tempestuous mating, and she prefers not to discuss it.

What does Linda think will happen with Alice in upcoming episodes?

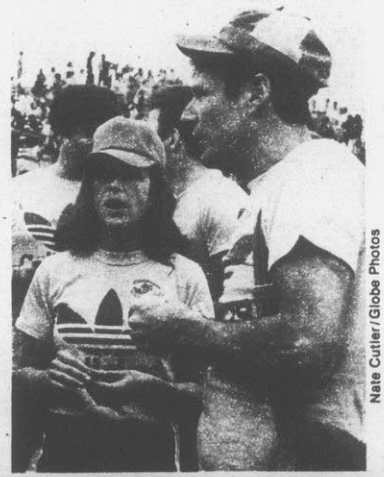

"I would like Alice to get more involved next season, perhaps with Parents Without Partners. And if the show goes five, six or seven years, I'd hate it if she didn't have a relationship of some sort. We just found out how old she is this season, when she was interested in a younger man. She said, 'He's only 25, I'm 10 years older than he is!'" Linda is a couple of years older than Alice.

She does not believe that Alice has to stay single in order to maintain the format of the show. "She might have the courage to remarry," Linda says. "She's not ready yet, but she's taking psychology courses. She might grow."

As she brings the conversation around to her recent involvement with the Equal Rights Amendment, Linda glows with enthusiasm. She is a newcomer to Hollywood's ranks of outspoken individuals plumping for the passage of ERA. "I wasn't active in the feminist movement until I attended some workshops. Then I realized that ERA does affect me, even though I'm in show business: I can get a loan from a bank, but the Social Security laws affect me like any other woman."

Linda agreed to speak for ERA in Sparks, Nevada, along with Ed Asner.

Isobel Silden specializes in writing profiles of entertainment personalities.

Despite the reassurance of his presence, she admits to having been "very nervous. The night before, I decided to go as Alice, in uniform, shoes and apron. I could speak to the audience as 'a working woman,' instead of as an actress.

"And it worked! There was a man there who told me his mother had been a waitress, who had also raised him alone. 'Where is she now?' I asked him. 'She's retired, at home, in her apartment.' 'Bring her over here,' I told him. And he did. Dorothy is her name. We had a good talk. She's living on Social Security, with help from her son and his wife. Before we talked, the family had supported a Congresswoman who was opposed to ERA. It wasn't until I pointed out to them what the passage of ERA could mean to Dorothy that they realized what power they had in their votes.

"The Congresswoman was defeated, and we won an ERA election in Sparks, Nevada!" Linda's voice is not raised, but her spirits obviously are.

She feels that Alice reflects an attitude of equality. "Last year, there was an episode where Mel hired a man and paid him fifty cents an hour more than we were getting. So we quit. Mel said the man had more responsibilities. I asked him, 'What am I raising, a millionaire midget?' Again, it gave me a chance to speak for women."

She agrees that the series and Alice's philosophy came along at the ideal time in history, and she approves of her character's gradual growth, slightly flawed though she thinks it is.

"She's emerging, like many of us: We talk too much, we try too hard, and sometimes we get ourselves in trouble. Hers is a kind of pomposity. She waves banners, not always with grace. But always she is a free and decent survivor."

Wherever she goes, Linda gets recognition from waitresses. "It's generally the same: I walk into a restaurant, and the waitresses call out, 'What are ya doin' out there? Come back here and get to work!'" She laughs with joy.

"Last summer I went back home to Portland. We went to a restaurant I had gone to as a child. And every waitress came over to say hello or to drop a French fry in my lap."

Linda never worked as a waitress in those between-acting jobs most actors experience. "It was the one thing I was sure I couldn't handle. It's hard work," she says fervently. Now, as Alice, "I have to wear support stockings, and my legs hurt all the time!" Those are not make-believe dishes that she and co-stars Polly Holliday and Beth Howland lug around.

One compensation for her hard work is the reality that she's in a hit show. And one of the factors in Alice's success, she agrees, is the prominence given to her young son, played by Philip McKeon, 14.

"He's really a wonderful kid. I had a gut feeling about him when we first met. We hit it off in a visceral way. I've learned a lot from being around him. I do feel a responsibility to show what we can do for women like Alice with a young son."

She feels real compassion for working mothers whose children are younger and who can't be left alone: "There simply are not enough day-care centers."

There are small frown furrows at Linda's brow, suggesting that her own life isn't completely carefree. She admits that she has been, and still is, in psychotherapy. What makes her happy?

She answers without hesitation: "Knowing I am loving, and being loved."

What makes her angry? "I fear ignorance and not getting along. I want healthy, constructive people around, people who illuminate. Lack of awareness is the most frightening thing. The only thing that works is hard work!"

Then she stands up gracefully, like the ballet student she still is, and goes back to work.

TEACH YOURSELF A WAY TO MORE VITAL LIVING

By Beverly and Vidal Sassoon

Beverly and Vidal regularly practice healthful yoga.

Few of us have perfect features or fit the current plastic beauty standards. But each one of us is capable of exuding a radiant glow of confidence.

Here are some shortcuts to vitality that work for us — and can work for you.

Dare to accomplish. This is what vitality is really about. The more energy you expend, the more you have to spend. The only thing that can sap your energy is tedium. Avoid it. You are working to make yourself a more beautiful person in order to be a more valuable person.

Make peace with your body. Each of us is born with a certain kind of body, a physical frame that is, practically speaking, unalterable.

Body types have been very broadly classified. There are ectomorphs — long-boned, narrow, tall and rather angular; endomorphs — voluptuously curved, softly rounded and rather short; and mesomorphs — the outdoorsy figures which are broad-shouldered and a little muscular. Mesomorphs' bones are bigger than those of ectomorphs; they are also not quite so plump as the endomorph, and flatter of body.

No one is 100-percent pure ectomorph, endomorph or mesomorph. But each of us has more characteristics of one type. The bones are there, the frame is there, and an endomorph will not be able to change into an ectomorph with all the diet and exercise in the world.

Instead, the smart endomorph will make her unique frame as supple and beautiful as anyone else's — and it will be her own.

Be forceful. Your most important mission is to contribute your mind, your energy, your talents and your love to improving whatever situations you can control. If you can pass along some of your talent, make life in your home, your neighborhood, your community richer, then you are a powerful force.

Stay vital through self-awareness. Your force is blocked or destroyed if you neglect the marvelous machine that is your body. Unless you are in peak physical condition, your morale will be low. Your store of energy, of vitality, will be wasted. You cannot contribute to the world if your mind is occupied by fretting over how terrible you look and feel.

For both energy and serenity, you might want to sample two of the systems that we find to be of great value: Hatha yoga and Transcendental Meditation.

Transcendental Meditation is a simple key to self-awareness and a direct route to achieving your private goals (not material goals, necessarily). Through meditation, you become wonderfully aware of the beauty of the physical world, without having to acquire physical things. Meditation brings happiness because it helps you assess your strengths and weaknesses, learn to achieve the things you want in your own way and become almost achingly aware of the beauty of this world.

Yoga builds strength, flexibility and balance, as well as self-control, patience and concentration. You also may find that you spend less time making up, since yoga improves the circulation and, thus, the complexion. Improved circulation keeps wrinkles away, too.

Find an exercise that revives you. We each have our own tricks for recharging energy and enthusiasm.

Beverly: I take 15 minutes to get the old feet off the ground. Lie down on a slant-board or with pillows propping up your feet and legs. Concentrate on tension sliding away from your feet, your legs, your back, your hips. Then a nice, warm bath with oil added and the bathroom door shut for privacy.

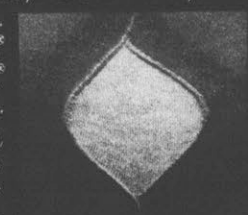

Vidal: I take 20 minutes to relax, lying on the bed with my feet braced high on the wall, my head and shoulders hanging over the side of the bed. Then if you can do a yoga head-stand or shoulder-stand, do it. Two minutes will give you a great surge of energy, and you will think clearly.

Learn to take risks. Testing, learning and growing are not limited to children. We all retain the capacity for wonder and exhilaration that a child knows high up in the blue sky on a tree limb. Too many people deny the child within and wall off the joy and the wonder. Don't be one of them.

Beverly and Vidal Sassoon are beauty experts, best-selling authors and the parents of four.

CAN THE FEINGOLD DIET TAME A WILD CHILD?

By Gloria Hochman

By the time Leslie was five, she had been dismissed from three schools and day camps, rejected by a frustrated speech therapist and banned from riding the school bus. She was also about to be sued by the outraged parents of a kindergarten classmate.

"Her behavior was exasperating and intolerable," remembers Herma Hurwitz, her mother. "She would hit other children for no reason, throw things all over the house, run up and down the school bus when it was moving. One day her teacher told me she was horrified to see Leslie go after another little girl, grab her by the hair and swing her right off the ground."

Mrs. Hurwitz says there were other problems, too. Leslie's speech was blurred. She had temper tantrums. She could not concentrate. She could not follow even the simplest instructions.

"I was so ashamed, so guilty and embarrassed," Mrs. Hurwitz says. "I was sure I was raising some kind of an animal. Trying to curb her behavior was like trying to put my hand in a fan to stop it from moving. Sometimes, I would hide in my room just so I could get some relief."

But Mrs. Hurwitz says she did not get relief until three-and-a-half years ago when she put Leslie on the Feingold diet, an eating regime that eliminates certain food additives and preservatives, notably artificial flavors and colors.

"Within a month, there was a startling difference in Leslie's behavior," Mrs. Hurwitz says. "She herself noticed it. She said to me, 'Mom, something inside me doesn't want to fight anymore.'"

Leslie is one of an estimated five million American children suffering from hyperactivity, which is said to be the fastest-growing childhood ailment. For an unknown reason, most are boys who are bright and physically healthy, but who cannot sit still or concentrate. They are unable to control their impulses and must respond immediately to everything they see, feel or hear. They will throw objects out of windows, dart in front of cars, scatter food throughout the house. Because their brains do not receive, store or dispense information appropriately, they often have learning disabilities. They may have problems with speech and hearing. They may also have aphasia, an inability to understand the spoken word.

Mrs. Hurwitz is among thousands of parents who say their hyperactive and learning-disabled children have been helped by the Feingold diet, named for its developer, Dr. Benjamin Feingold. They call it "miraculous, a lifesaver." They form organizations to spread the word to other parents. And they write thankful letters to the 78-year-old Dr. Feingold at the Kaiser-Permanente Medical Center in San Francisco, where he is chief emeritus of the department of allergy.

The medical profession, however, is not convinced. The stories of ecstatic parents, however dramatic, are only anecdotal and do not meet the rigors of scientific testing. And even scientifically conducted tests at several centers have produced only inconclusive and conflicting results.

The controversy simmers, and those involved know its resolution can have far-reaching effects. If, as Dr. Feingold hypothesizes, the widespread use of chemical additives has nurtured a nation of hyperactive children, the troubling issues have only begun to surface.

Should the government take greater responsibility for investigating food additives? Should foods containing chemical additives carry warning messages? Could there be a relationship between the increase in the manufacturing of artificial food colors and the rise in juvenile violence?

While food additives, particularly chemical dyes, have long been attacked as possible carcinogens, their purported link to hyperkinetic behavior is relatively recent and was not popularized until 1974 when Dr. Feingold's book, Why Your Child Is Hyperactive, was published by Random House.

In the late 1960's, when Dr. Feingold himself was recuperating from surgery, he began investigating hyperactivity and learning disabilities in American children, and was appalled at their widespread incidence. He recalled a former patient, a 40-year-old Oakland, Calif., woman, whose psychiatric problems vanished when she followed an additive-free diet to cure a painful case of hives. And he thought of other patients whose personality problems seemed to diminish when they were placed on diets that excluded artificial colors and flavors.

"I put the pieces together and felt that the answer to hyperkinesis might be as close as the kitchen cupboard," Dr. Feingold remembers. While the evidence was circumstantial, it seemed uncanny to Dr. Feingold that the increase in learning disabilities paralleled the soaring use of synthetic additives since World War II.

Dr. Feingold tested his theory on Johnny, a boy whose behavior had been erratic since he was five. A model child at times, he would suddenly and without warning turn into a terror, stomping, kicking furniture, telling lies and running his tricycle into the path of an oncoming car. He had superior intelligence but could not learn. Tests revealed no mental or physical abnormalities.

Johnny was put on a diet that eliminated most of the junk food he was accustomed to eating, and his mother kept a meticulous diary of his behavior, which she correlated with any dietary infractions. By the end of the year, it seemed clear to her that Johnny's behavior could be "turned off or on by what he ate."

Dr. Feingold continued to treat children with behavioral disturbances and reported a success rate of 30 to 50 percent, depending on the child's age. (More success was experienced with younger children.) In June 1973, he spoke at the annual meeting of the American Medical Association but received a lukewarm reception. He could not convince any of the leading medical publications to print his research. Nor could he interest any Federal agency in conducting studies that could prove or disprove his theories.

Nevertheless, international news-media coverage brought thousands of letters and telephone inquiries from agonized parents, most of whom had been ricocheting from doctor to doctor without finding a remedy for their children's disruptive behavior and school failures. After trying the diet with their children and finding it successful, many of them formed "Feingold Associations." Today, there are 125 such groups in the country, with 30,000 members.

Vickie Gelardi, president of the Feingold Association of New York, speaks for all of them when she expresses her anger at the "cold-shoulder" treatment Dr. Feingold and his followers have received from the medical profession. She has no faith in some of the studies that seem to invalidate Dr. Feingold's theories and accuses them of being biased, of making sweeping generalizations and of being funded by persons with vested interests in the food industry.

Studies conducted by Doctors C. Keith Conners and Charles H. Goyette, of the University of Pittsburgh, however, found a correlation between hyperactivity and the ingestion of food colorings.

And another study — directed by Dr. Bernard Weiss, professor of radiation biology and biophysics at the University of Rochester Medical Center, and submitted to the Food and Drug Administration a few months ago — reports "spotty responsiveness (or susceptibility to additives) in 20 of the 22 children examined."

"There is clearly a population susceptible to even low doses of additives," says Dr. Weiss. "If the dose is raised, the probability is that even more disturbed behavior would be evident." Dr. Weiss continues to analyze statistics from his study and may do more research.

Meanwhile, more Feingold Associations are forming and more parents seem to be label-reading at the supermarket. "I don't care what the studies show," says Mrs. Gelardi, whose son, Michael, is now 10. "I only know that my son used to be a monster and now he's a beautiful little boy. I used to get calls from school all the time. Michael was shooting pins at children in the cafeteria. Michael could not sit still for a minute.

"Today my son is getting high grades at school and is excellent in every subject. Everyone loves him. Michael tells me, 'Mom, I'd rather starve than be the way I was before.'" FW

How to Get Rich The Lazy Man's Way

I used to work hard. The 18-hour days. The 7-day weeks.

But I didn't start making big money until I did less – a lot less.

For example, this ad took about 2 hours to write. With a little luck, it should earn me 50, maybe a hundred thousand dollars.

What's more, I'm going to ask you to send me 10 dollars for something that'll cost me no more than 50 cents. And I'll try to make it so irresistible that you'd be a darned fool not to do it.

After all, why should you care if I make $9.50 profit if I can show you how to make a lot more?

What if I'm so sure that you will make money my Lazy Man's Way that I'll make you a most unusual guarantee?

And here it is: I won't even cash your check or money order for 31 days after I've sent you my material.

If you don't agree that it's worth at least a hundred times what you invested, send it back. Your uncashed check or money order will be put in the return mail.

The only reason I won't send it to you and bill you or send it C.O.D. is because both these methods involve more time and money.

And I'm already going to give you the biggest bargain of your life.

Because I'm going to tell you what it took me 11 years to perfect. How to make money the Lazy Man's Way.

O.K. now I have to brag a little. I don't mind it. And it's necessary – to prove that sending me the 10 dollars . . . which I'll keep "in escrow" until you're satisfied . . . is the smartest thing you ever did.

I live in a home that's worth $250,000. I know it is, because I turned down an offer for that much. My mortgage is less than half that, and the only reason I haven't paid it off is because my Tax Accountant says I'd be an idiot.

My "office," about a mile and a half from my home, is right on the beach. My view is so breathtaking that most people comment that they don't see how I get any work done. But I do enough. About 6 hours a day, 8 or 9 months a year.

The rest of the time we spend at our mountain "cabin." I paid $30,000 for it – cash.

I have 2 boats and a Cadillac. All paid for.

We have stocks, bonds, investments, cash in the bank. But the most important thing I have is priceless: time with my family.

And I'll show you just how I did it – the Lazy Man's Way – a secret that I've shared with just a few friends 'til now.

It doesn't require "education." I'm a high school graduate.

It doesn't require "capital.' When I started out, I was so deep in debt that a lawyer friend advised bankruptcy as the only way out. He was wrong. We paid off our debts and, outside of the mortgage, don't owe a cent to any man.

It doesn't require "luck." I've had more than my share, but I'm not promising you that you'll make as much money as I have. And you may do better; I personally know one man who used these principles, worked hard, and made 11 million dollars in 8 years. But money isn't everything.

It doesn't require "talent." Just enough brains to know what to look for. And I'll tell you that.

It doesn't require "youth." One woman I worked with is over 70. She's travelled the world over, making all the money she needs, doing only what I taught her.

It doesn't require "experience." A widow in Chicago has been averaging $25,000 a year for the past 5 years, using my methods.

What does it require? Belief. Enough to take a chance. Enough to absorb what I'll send you. Enough to put the principles into action. If you do just that – nothing more, nothing less – the results will be hard to believe. Remember – I guarantee it.

". . . I didn't have a job and I was worse than broke. I owed more than $50,000 and my only assets were my wife and 8 children. We were renting an old house in a decaying neighborhood, driving a 5-year old car that was falling apart, and had maybe a couple of hundred dollars in the bank.

Within one month, after using the principles of the Lazy Man's Way to Riches, things started to change – to put it mildly.

- We worked out a plan we could afford to pay off our debts – and stopped our creditors from hounding us.
- We were driving a brand-new Thunderbird that a car dealer had given to us!
- Our bank account had multiplied tenfold!
- All within the first 30 days!

And today . . .

- I live in a home that's worth over $250,000.
- I own my "office". It's about a mile and a half from my home and is right on the beach.
- I own a lakefront "cabin" in Washington. (That's where we spend the whole summer – loafing, fishing, swimming and sailing.)
- I own two oceanfront condominiums. One is on a sunny beach in Mexico and one is snuggled right on the best beach of the best island in Hawaii.
- I have two boats and a Cadillac. All paid for.
- I have a net worth of over a Million Dollars. But I still don't have a job . . ."

You don't have to give up your job. But you may soon be making so much money that you'll be able to. Once again –I guarantee it.

The wisest man I ever knew told me something I never forgot: "Most people are too busy earning a living to make any money."

Don't take as long as I did to find out he was right.

Here are some comments from other people. I'm sure that, like you, they didn't believe me either. Guess they figured that, since I wasn't going to deposit their check for 31 days, they had nothing to lose.

$260,000 in eleven months

"Two years ago, I mailed you ten dollars in sheer desperation for a better life . . . One year ago, just out of the blue sky, a man called and offered me a partnership . . . I grossed over $260,000 cash business in eleven months. You are a God sent miracle to me."
B. F., Pascagoula, Miss.

Banking deposits from zero to thousands

"It's all I can do to get to the bank with one wheelbarrow! I'm just going to have to get a second one to accommodate the volume . . . Since December, until the present time, I have built my business from zero up to where some days, my banking deposits are in excess of thousands." D. J. A., Westminster, Calif.

Made $16,901.92 first time out

"The third day I applied myself totally to what you had shown me. I made $16,901.92. That's great results for my first time out."
J. J. M., Watertown, N.Y.

'I'm a half-millionaire'

"Thanks to your method, I'm a half-millionaire . . . would you believe last year at this time I was a slave working for peanuts?"
G. C., Toronto, Canada

Getting everything we want

"We can't keep this to ourselves anymore – you were right! We're on the road to getting all (everything) we want in this world! We sold the $17,000 house we had and got another one . . . It's worth $65,000. We have a paid-for Ford pick-up, paid-for 17 ft. boat, we bought a Cadillac, we have a paid-for Grand Prix . . ."
Mr. and Mrs. M. L. P., Del Rey, Texas

$7,000 in five days

"Last Monday I used what I learned on page 83 to make $7,000. It took me all week to do it, but that's not bad for five day's work."
M. D., Topeka, Kansas

Can't believe success

"'I can't believe how successful I have become . . . Three months ago, I was a telephone order taker for a fastener company in Chicago, Illinois. I was driving a beat-up 1959 Rambler and had about $600 in my savings account. Today I am the outside salesman for the same fastener company. I'm driving a company car . . . I am sitting in my own office and have about $3,000 in my savings account."
G. M., Des Plaines, Ill.

I know you're skeptical. After all, what I'm saying is probably contrary to what you've heard from your friends, your family, your teachers and maybe everyone else you know. I can only ask you one question.

How many of them are millionaires?

So it's up to you:

A month from today, you can be nothing more than 30 days older – or you can be on your way to getting rich. You decide.

Sworn Statement:
"On the basis of my professional relationship as his accountant, I certify that Mr. Karbo's net worth is more than one million dollars."

Joe, you may be full of beans, but what have I got to lose? Send me the Lazy Man's Way to Riches. But don't deposit my check or money order for 31 days after it's in the mail.

THREE CHEERS FOR CHICKEN

By Marilyn Hansen

Other food prices may rise and keep rising, but chicken is a reliably economical food buy. Most people like it, too, so there's no reason not to serve it often.

EXOTIC CHICKEN SOUP

4 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup all-purpose flour
1 quart chicken stock
½ teaspoon ground cardamom
1 cup finely chopped, cooked chicken
1 cup light cream or half and half
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ground white pepper
1 tablespoon finely shredded orange rind

1. In a large saucepan, melt butter. Blend in flour. Remove from heat and add chicken stock and cardamom.

2. Stir over moderate heat until soup comes to boil and is slightly thickened.

3. Add chicken, cream, salt and white pepper; heat over low heat just to the boiling point.

4. Ladle into soup bowls; garnish with orange rind. Makes 6 servings

CHICKEN VERONIQUE

2 (2½ to 3 lbs.) broiler-fryers, cut up
3 tablespoons vegetable oil
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 tablespoon snipped chives
¼ cup dry white wine or dry sherry
1 cup heavy cream or sour cream
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ground white pepper
1½ cups seedless green grapes

1. Pat chicken dry. Brown chicken pieces in skillet in hot oil and butter.

2. Reduce heat, cover and simmer 30 minutes. Arrange chicken pieces in shallow casserole, set aside.

3. Add chives and wine to pan drippings. Heat to boiling, stirring to loosen all browned bits. Stir in sour cream, salt and pepper. Pour sauce over chicken.

4. Cover casserole and bake in preheated 325°F. oven for 30 minutes. Remove cover, stir in green grapes and bake 10 minutes longer. Makes 6 to 8 servings

TARRAGON CHICKEN

2 (2½ to 3 lbs.) broiler-fryers, cut up
½ cup butter or margarine
4 cloves garlic, crushed
2 teaspoons tarragon leaves
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ground black pepper
½ cup dry white wine

1. Preheat oven to 350°F.

2. Arrange chicken in foil-lined pan.

3. In small saucepan, melt butter. Stir in garlic, tarragon, salt, pepper and wine.

4. Brush basting sauce over chicken.

5. Bake chicken, basting frequently with sauce, for 45-60 minutes or until chicken is tender. Makes six servings

SWEET AND SOUR RED CHICKEN

2 (2½ to 3 lbs.) broiler-fryers, quartered
1 bottle (8 ozs.) red Russian salad dressing, regular or diet
1 envelope (1⅜ ozs.) dry onion-soup mix
1 jar (12 ozs.) apricot preserves
Orange slices
Fresh parsley sprigs

1. In large, shallow foil-lined pan, place chicken, skin side up, in a single layer.

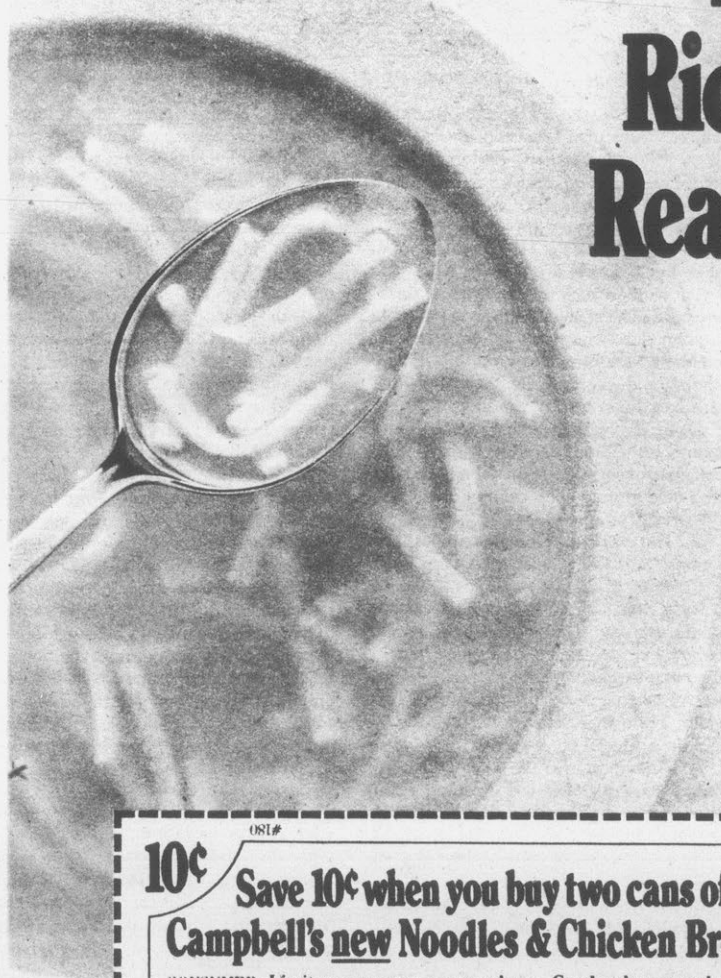

2. In medium bowl, mix together salad dressing, soup mix and preserves. If you wish to add a zippy flavor variation, add it now: 1 clove garlic, crushed; 2 teaspoons prepared mustard or a tablespoon soy sauce. All would be good.

3. Bake, uncovered, in a preheated 350°F. oven for about 1 hour or until chicken is fork-tender. Turn chicken twice during baking, basting with sauce.

4. Arrange chicken on serving platter; spoon pan sauce over chicken. Garnish with orange slices and parsley. Makes 8 servings

Editor's note: Chicken wings (2 lbs.) are great for this treatment. Cut each wing in half and snip off wing tip. Arrange wings in shallow baking pan; pour on sauce. Bake as above, turning several times until well done and glossy. Serve as finger-food appetizers with plenty of napkins.

WORKING COUPLES: WHO DECIDES WHERE THE MONEY GOES?

By Caroline Bird

Let's face it — there is no good way to keep money out of a marriage. On the contrary, managing money is one of the most important ways in which husbands and wives act out their values. What working couples do with the wife's paycheck discloses whether their values about having a second breadwinner in the family are traditional, neo-traditional, idealist or realist.

Since half of all wives now have jobs that provide 40 percent of the income of working couples, it's important to know who decides where the money goes. Recent research shows that husbands and wives deal with the wife's paycheck in four different ways:

1. Pin Money Couples are traditional couples who agree that the man should be the family breadwinner. They have the most trouble accepting the idea of a second paycheck. So theirs is the most dramatic solution: They ignore the wife's earnings.

Since the husband is supporting the family, these couples reason, any money the wife can earn is pin money she is free to save or spend as she pleases. Pin Money Couples assume that the husband owns all of the services a wife can provide. "I'm liberated because my husband lets me work," one Pin Money wife explained.

"That's right," her husband confirmed. "She can do anything she wants providing it does not interfere with the family." In their book, interfering with the family means delaying dinner or providing something a husband disapproves, such as a separate vacation or a piece of furniture he regards as extravagant.

Fewer than one out of 10 couples now think it's right for a wife to keep a private hoard. Those who do tend to be conservative, blue-collar families with less than high school education, and a few rich older husbands who regard a wife's job as an amusing extracurricular lark.

Oddly enough, the strongest supporters of a wife's right to absolute control over her earnings are women who have never worked because they think that taking care of a family is a full-time job. One homemaker who took a job after her children were grown saw no reason why she should even tell her husband what she was doing with her money.

"After 20 years of getting his meals and taking his clothes to the cleaners, and asking for every $10, I think I have a right to a little money I can call my own," she declared. He agreed.

2. Earmarking Couples are less traditional and more flexible. A very large proportion of working couples — some surveys say as many as two out of five — admit the wife's money into the family budget but segregate it for a special family purpose, something above and beyond the immediate basics the husband is providing. She may deposit her check, intact, in a special bank account.

A generation ago, a wife who continued to work after the wedding often banked her paycheck so that the family wouldn't miss it if she became pregnant — in which case, of course, the baby fell heir to a nice little nest egg.

In 1979, a wife's pay is more apt to be earmarked for something nice but not necessary, such as a trip to Europe or an extravagant piece of furniture. At least half the time, however, the piano money goes to repair the car or to replace the washing machine. Based on experience, earmarkers often tell each other to spend the nest egg on the intended purpose as soon as it accumulates.

Wives like earmarking better than husbands, especially when they earn considerably less than their husbands and feel that their pay gets lost in the family budget. Neither wants the family to become dependent on the wife's or "second" income, but they recognize that a husband needs "help" these days with his duty to support the family, just as they recognize that a working wife needs "help" from her husband.

Earmarking doesn't work for couples who are trying to change the traditional marital roles of breadwinning husband, homemaking wife. One wife who wasn't happy with the scheme insisted on "earmarking" her paycheck for the monthly payments on their house. "That's what I'm working for," she told her family, "a roof over all of our heads."

3. Pooling Couples. The most popular arrangement — preferred by close to half of all working couples — is for husband and wife to pool their earnings and budget the total together. "We just throw all our money together into one family pot," a young wife reports. "The way we figure, it's all our money." Very often they both deposit their checks in a joint account from which both can draw. Marriage counselors advise this plan, and so do specialists on family money management. But it takes a very strong relationship.

Some carefree and idealistic young couples manage to get by, at least for a time, on sharing everything — including breadwinning. Whoever has funds at the moment pays for whatever they both feel like spending. Pooling also works well for old married couples who know what to expect of each other and seldom do anything out of the ordinary, anyway.

For most couples, however, pooling means careful planning. Working couples frequently get in over their heads because each is counting on the other's income. Successful poolers have to constantly check with each other, especially if their money is in a joint account. Many of them consult the other partner before buying anything that costs more than $50 or $100.

Money management specialists and marital counselors advise couples to pool their money, but they don't recommend pooling every last cent. They point out that everyone needs a little "mad money" to spend without asking permission of anyone. But just how much mad money each partner needs is a sensitive issue. If money really doesn't matter, the partner with small earnings and large personal needs logically holds out a bigger share of her or his check. Some families find it difficult, in this money-conscious society, to give the partner with small earnings — most often the wife — as big a voice in family decisions as the partner who contributes most of the family pot.

4. Bargaining Couples are realists who take the opposite tack. They reason that money really matters, so the only way to keep it from spoiling the relationship is to count who contributes what as carefully as if they were roommates or friends.

Couples who bargain with each other about money are probably even rarer than those who assume that the wife's pay is pin money. Some scrupulously divide all household expenses: The husband may take care of the rent and the cars while the wife pays for food, tuitions, and household incidentals. They may even agree to split every bill that comes in down the middle or in proportion to their respective salaries.

Bargainers believe in separate accounts, and they take the advice of many lawyers to own as little as possible jointly. They tend to be activists in the women's movement, couples who have lived together before marriage or who have obligations left over from previous marriages.

Pin Money Couples, Earmarkers, Poolers, Bargainers — each couple works out in different ways where the wife's paycheck goes. All are probably in agreement about one thing, at least: When the money goes, it goes fast. FW

SURPLUS OF JOBS PREDICTED FOR 80's

By S.R. Redford

A surplus of jobs. Better fringe benefits. A shorter workday. Subsidized day-care centers. These changes in the working world may sound too good to be true, but they're all due in the coming decade, some labor experts say. Here, in more detail, are their predictions:

More Jobs in the 80's. Job specialists go wrong when they warn against occupations that are "overcrowded," says Herbert Bienstock, veteran Regional Commissioner for New York of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics. Bienstock says that the specialists are ignoring the statistical fact that we will soon have a surplus of all kinds of good jobs.

The big drop in the birthrate which began in the United States in 1962 has continued and will hit the job scene by the mid-1980's. "We're going to have a people-shortage crunch," says Bienstock. "Even with the wonders of science, there's still no way to produce a 21-year-old job applicant in less than 21 years."

Bienstock elaborates on the upcoming shortage: "Most job opportunities come from existing jobs, not from newly created jobs. We now have millions of people in their 50's and 60's who will soon be leaving their jobs permanently. We're not going to have nearly enough applicants for all those openings."

To take advantage of the new opportunities, Bienstock recommends studying business administration, personnel services, industrial relations, health services, accounting, sciences... "In fact, anything that leads to a white collar job. In our highly technological society, that's where the openings will be. A college degree will be more important than ever."

Better Job Benefits. Even if you don't belong to a union, your fringe benefits will probably grow during the 1980's. The reason is that new fringes and salary levels won by union workers become the models that influence jobs everywhere. Speaking in New York City at a recent Work In America seminar, Sol C. Chaikin, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, announced that during the 1980's unions will concentrate on:

- A Seven-Hour Day. Instead of aiming for a four-day week, the effort will be directed at shortening the five-day work week to seven or even six hours daily.
- Housing Assistance. If mortgages continue to carry between nine and 10½ percent interest rates, unions will press employers to offer housing assistance as a new kind of fringe benefit. Management would probably assume some of the mortgage interest or sponsor cooperative housing.
- New Job Security. This would protect against companies closing or relocating. Says Chaikin, "If necessary, we will try to have government legislation passed. Just as the government now has 'environmental impact' requirements in force when business wishes to operate or build a plant, so there could be governmental 'human impact' requirements if a plant wants to close or relocate."
- Higher Minimum Wage. This means raising the income of the millions of workers who still earn a minimum wage, or slightly more. Chaikin points out, "A higher minimum would, of course, raise other wages proportionally."
- Increased Retirement Income. This would raise the amount paid by private company retirement plans and increase the number of jobs and people covered.
- Increased Health Benefits. There will be more comprehensive family health coverage for more employees. This, says Chaikin, could be achieved either by collective bargaining or by a government Health Security Act.
- Day-Care Centers. Subsidies will come from government or business to help establish day-care centers for employees' preschool children.

THE MOST CHALLENGING BASEBALL QUIZ YOU'VE EVER TAKEN

By Jim Benagh

For baseball fans who think they have all the answers, here are some questions to ponder. The answers, in case you don't know them, follow the questions.

QUESTIONS

1. Since 1902, only one left-handed thrower has appeared in a major-league game as a catcher. Who was he?

2. In his first time at bat in the major leagues, this player hit a home run. In more than 1,000 other major-league games, he never hit another. Who was he?

3. These three pitchers, who once were teammates together in the major leagues, distinguished themselves in unusual ways. One was the only man to pitch to a midget in a major-league game. Another once pitched two no-hitters, a one-hitter and a two-hitter in a season when he posted a mere 5-19 record. The third was the only pitcher to be named Most Valuable Player after two different seasons. Who were the men?

4. Only one man ever wore a professional baseball uniform for a half-century without interruption, serving as player, coach and manager (in both the majors and minors). Who was he?

5. There were four major-league players whose big-league careers spanned four decades — 1930's, 40's, 50's and 60's. That is, they played at least part of their careers in each of those decades. One played in 1939 under an assumed name. Who were they?

6. These two men spent a combined total of 41 years in the majors, all for the same team and mostly as teammates. Though they both are in the Hall of Fame, neither ever played in a World Series game. Who were they?

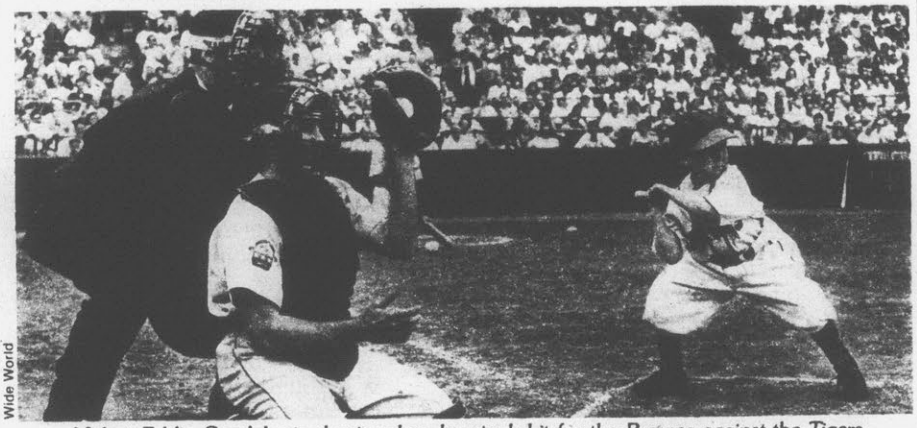

7. A much more fortunate player, who was traded often, was a regular for three different franchises in the World Series within a five-year period after World War II. Who was he?

8. "Pitchers don't make good managers" is an old baseball axiom, despite Tom Lasorda's and Bob Lemon's success with the Los Angeles Dodgers and New York Yankees last fall. Who was the last ex-big-league pitcher before them to pilot a team in the World Series?

9. Back in the 1940's, the big money in baseball went to "bonus babies," not free agents. The bonus baby was the untried amateur who was given a bundle merely to sign a contract. Who was the first bonus baby?

10. They were better known and sometimes only known by their nicknames. What were the real first names of (a) Babe Ruth; (b) Dizzy Dean; (c) Ducky Medwick; (d) Cy Young; (e) Satchel Paige; (f) Gabby Hartnett; (g) Goose Goslin; (h) Pie Traynor; (i) Rabbit Maranville; and (j) Home Run Baker?

ANSWERS

1. Dale Long, who was best known as a home-run-hitting first baseman. He was part of an experiment by Branch Rickey, who wanted to try him as catcher for the Pirates in 1951. Though Long never caught in a regular season game for the Pirates, he was summoned for emergency duty with the Cubs for a game in 1958.

2. Hoyt Wilhelm, the relief pitcher, hit a homer his first time up and never hit another. He also hit a triple during his next game.

3. Bob Cain was the Detroit Tiger pitcher who faced midget Eddie Gaedel. Virgil Trucks was the Tiger who had the low-hit games. Hal Newhouser, their teammate during the 1951 season, was the only two-time MVP among pitchers.

4. Jim Turner, whose notoriety reached its peak as a long-time coach with the New York Yankees, was in uniform from 1923 through 1972 in several capacities.

5. Ted Williams, Early Wynn and Mickey Vernon are three of them, and their names come easily to mind. But another American Leaguer, Elmer Valo, also played in all four decades, having been sneaked into a game by the old Philadelphia Athletics under a false name in 1939.

6. Ted Lyons, a 260-victory pitcher, and Luke Appling, a great shortstop, played for the Chicago White Sox. Their best finish in a pennant race was third place.

7. Eddie Stanley played second base for the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1947, the Boston Braves in 1948 and the New York Giants in 1951. All teams lost in the series.

8. Fred Hutchinson, a 95-game winner as a pitcher, was the manager of the pennant-winning Cincinnati Reds in 1961.

9. Dick Wakefield, a college star, signed for $50,000 when he turned pro with the Detroit Tigers in 1941. It touched off a salary war in baseball which has never ended.

10. (a) George Herman; (b) Jay Hanna; (c) Joseph Michael; (d) Denton True; (e) LeRoy; (f) Charles Leo; (g) Leon Allen; (h) Harold Joseph; (i) James Walter Vincent; (j) John Franklin.

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY

LINES ON LINES

Wrinkles are my life lines,
They show the life I've led,
The times of smiling, scowling,
Of being sick in bed.

Wrinkles, like a road map,
Reveal where I have been,
Show all the goodness in me
And just a little sin.

These lines all clearly show.
I wouldn't sell my wrinkles —
Make me an offer, though.

Travel Tips

If travel is on the agenda for this summer, try reading a few of the following booklets for advice and information.

If you're traveling by recreational vehicle or by car, either with a camper or without, How to Deal with Motor Vehicle Emergencies (#507-G), Motorhome and Pickup Camper Safety (#509-G), and Travel Camper Trailer Safety (#514-G) all offer useful tips on coping with the unexpected. All are free from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 39, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

If a trip abroad is what you're planning, the journey might go a bit more smoothly if you consult Your Trip Abroad (#73-G available for $1.40 from the above address). The booklet covers subjects such as customs, driver's license, insurance and student-discount sources. And if Europe is your destination, get a copy of Passport to Europe's Small Hotels and Inns by Beverly Beyer. The guide offers useful advice on traveling abroad and lists a number of reasonably priced hotels and inns in Europe. The Passport is available in bookstores nationwide, or for $3 (check or money order) from Passport Publications, Box 24684, Dept. ER, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

Tornado Watch

Tornadoes have had people quaking in their shoes long before one whisked Dorothy off to Oz. Tornadoes inflict about $75 million of damage yearly but researchers know little about twisters, field observation being a bit difficult.

But, in 1975, three Purdue University professors began studying them. In a chamber 23 feet tall and 13 feet in diameter, professors Christopher Church, Ernest Agee and John Snow are creating

According to Dr. Church, the thunderstorms that cause tornadoes are the product of weather patterns that create spiraling air currents. Tornadoes generally occur in the Midwest because warm moist air from the Gulf of Mexico clashes with the whirling winds that make up the low-pressure fronts that come off the Rockies. Intense high-altitude winds, called jet streams, suck the swirling winds upward, amplifying the spiraling effect. Tornadoes are born when this spiraling action is tremendously concentrated. And one tornado can generate as many as eight others.

The three men are gathering their data so that tornadoes can be predicted and engineers can construct buildings that can withstand the often 300 m.p.h. winds that make up a tornado.

The Sting

Frederic Lewis

Allergic reactions to insect stings affect thousands of people every year, and the symptoms range from hives to severe respiratory problems. Until now, victims of insect stings have relied on a weakly effective vaccine made from the crushed bodies of bees, but according to Dr. Robert Reisman, professor of medicine at the State University in Buffalo, N.Y., and Dr. Lawrence Lichtenstein, professor of medicine at Johns Hopkins University in Maryland, a new therapy now exists.

The treatment, which consists of a series of injections of actual bee venom over a period of eight weeks and then a monthly shot for as long as the patient exhibits signs of sensitivity, works on much the same principle as a smallpox vaccine. A patient is injected with the venom which then stimulates the body to produce antibodies. These antibodies protect the victim from the effects of a real sting.

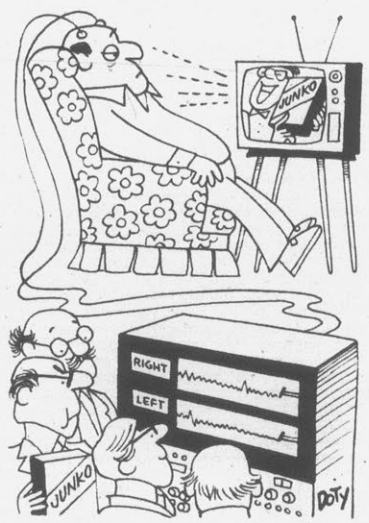

According to Dr. Lichtenstein, "The treatment should be used by anyone who has exhibited a life-threatening reaction to a sting. Since the treatment is costly, it might not be worth it to the person who has only mild problems, but then you never know what may happen the next time they're stung."

The treatment must be administered by a doctor, has been approved by the FDA and is available nationwide.

Mind Reading

If you sometimes turn off your television with a snort of disgust, you probably agree that "mindless" is the perfect word for some TV commercials. And Dr. Sidney Weinstein, president of Neurocommunications Research Laboratories, Inc., can prove it. Dr. Weinstein tests viewers' interest levels in advertising by measuring their brain waves and eye movement via sensors attached to the scalp.

"The brain has two sides, left and right," explains the doctor. "The right side deals with images and emotions, the left side with verbal persuasion. Advertisers can determine whether they're making their point by studying the reactions of the different sides of the brain. Some commercials excite much more total brain activity than others, and these are the ads we term successful."

With brain-wave research, Dr. Weinstein can get a very accurate reading of the interest shown by volunteers. "Brain waves reflect the true state of the individual," he says. "Screenings like this show that people's vocalized thoughts don't necessarily conform to what they actually think. People will often tell you what they think you want to hear, so that you'll have a certain image of them. Brain-wave research doesn't allow for that."

Lifestyles

Crime. The crime rate is rising twice as fast in the suburbs as it is in the cities, says a National Crime Survey report by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. In 1977, 16,183,000 household thefts took place, compared with 1,296,800 auto thefts and 1,083,000 robberies. An F.B.I. survey found that almost half of all burglars apprehended are under 17.

Fitness. On May 19 people in cities and suburbs across the country will be running for their lives. They'll be jogging to help raise $1,000,000 for the American Heart Association, which, in conjunction with the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co., is sponsoring National Run for Life Day. If you're in good shape and want to participate in the events, contact the Connecticut Mutual Life general agent or the local Heart Association chapter in your area.

Anniversaries. In 1879 a young New York farm boy opened his first successful "5 & 10 cent store," and Woolworth's was born. By the time he died, Frank Winfield Woolworth had built his empire into a chain of more than 1,000 stores. In 1913 Woolworth built a 792-foot Gothic structure in lower Manhattan that was the tallest building in the world at that time, and which many people still term "the most beautiful building in New York." This year marks the centennial celebration of the "5 & 10 cent store."

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

by HAL FOSTER

Our Story: DOCLOW, THE BANDIT, IS DISMAYED. HE AND HIS RUFFIANS HAD TAKEN OVER LORD CONDON'S CASTLE WHILE HE AND ALL HIS MEN WERE OUT GATHERING THE HARVEST BEFORE THE FROST CAME. BUT WHERE IS THE GRACIOUS LIVING HE HAD DREAMED ABOUT?

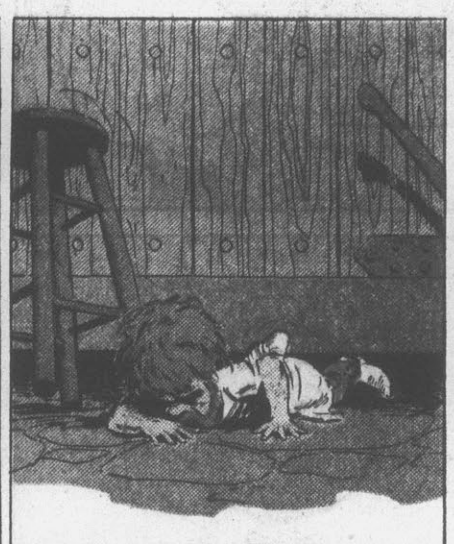

THE FLOOR WAS COVERED WITH GARBAGE. NO DISHES WERE WASHED, NEITHER WERE THE MEN. IN FACT, THE WHOLE CASTLE BEGAN TO STINK.

THEN HIS RASCALS BREAK INTO THE ALEHOUSE AND DOCLOW KNOWS IT IS TIME TO STRIP THE CASTLE OF ALL ITS TREASURES AND MOVE ON, ERE HIS GANG BECOME SODDEN AND USELESS.

IN THE DARK OF NIGHT ARN AND THE DWARF CREEP TO THE MOAT AND LISTEN. DRUNKEN HOWLING COMES FROM THE KITCHEN AREA. "WE COULD TAKE THE CASTLE NOW, UNARMED!"

JUST BEFORE DAWN A MISSHAPEN LITTLE FIGURE CRAWLS UNDER THE MAIN GATE AND RELEASES THE LOCK.
