Good Progress Reported At SALT II Conference

By HELEN THOMAS
UPI White House Reporter

VIENNA, Austria (UPI) — Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev told President Carter Saturday "God will not forgive us if we fail" to control nuclear arms and stressed the Soviet Union seeks no advantages over the United States in SALT II, officials said.

The leaders of the two most powerful nations on earth met for more than five hours on the first summit business day in their efforts to prevent the "final catastrophe" of nuclear war.

"We have come to take one more step towards avoiding a nuclear conflict which some few might survive but which no side could win," Carter said in his toast at the working dinner in the U.S. embassy.

But in his toast over a roast beef and horseradish mousse dinner hosted by Carter, Brezhnev used the opportunity to criticize American hardliners and Chinese leaders who are opposed to the treaty and closer U.S.-Soviet ties.

"However absurd it may sound, there are those who oppose normal relations and peaceful cooperation between our two countries," Brezhnev said.

He added, "As I see it, Mr. President, it is our common duty to our peoples and, indeed, to the entire world not to allow such schemes to materialize."

The two presidents read general statement on their views in a 1½ hour morning session, got down to specifics of arms control in an hour and 50 minutes and then continued working through a two-hour dinner.

Brezhnev, in a summary presented by Soviet spokesman Leonid Zamyatin, told Carter in the afternoon session that the SALT pact is a realistic one even though the Soviet Union was not satisfied with every provision.

"The Soviet Union has no belligerent intentions with regard to the United States," Zamyatin said. "We are not seeking any advantages or benefits at the expense of the United States or anyone else.

"All the talk about the Soviet military menace are concoctions playing into the hands of those who want to sow hostility and provoke a confrontation."

"It was a good meeting," Carter said as he walked from the first meeting to his limousine.

They have two more meetings scheduled for today before signing the SALT II agreement Monday morning.

A U.S. official said Carter and Brezhnev in their opening statements agreed, "One miscalculation, one mistake, one nuclear explosion would be perhaps the ultimate and perhaps the final catastrophe."

"God will not forgive us if we fail," U.S. officials quoted the 72-year-old Brezhnev as telling Carter at the start of the session.

At a news conference later, Zamyatin was asked about the quote and said the Kremlin leader had actually said: "Future generations will not forgive us if we fail."

In his toast Carter stressed that "we must consider the wider possibilities of SALT II" that include further reduction in the arms race and closer cooperation in other areas of the world.

"That we have the power to destroy other nations does not mean we have a right or a need to control them," Carter said.

"I believe that our successful effort to limit nuclear weapons can be a framework for guidance toward new areas of cooperation, and for facing peacefully these areas in which we still compete."

Brezhnev in his toast also praised U.S.-Soviet cooperation in reaching SALT II and hoped the results of their meeting would "hearten the peoples of our two countries and all the peace-loving peoples on Earth."

U.S. officials said the treaty would be submitted to the U.S. Senate for ratification on Monday, immediately after it is signed. The treaty does not go into effect until it is ratified by both the Senate — where it faces a tough fight — and the Supreme Soviet.

With that in mind, Zamyatin sought to stress that in the nearly seven years of SALT negotiations, the Soviet Union had made numerous concessions.

"For the Soviet Union it has been very difficult," he said. "We are not satisfied with everything in this treaty but it reflects that which is realistically achievable at the given moment.

"We believe we have succeeded in reaching a mutually acceptable

Mary And Booker Dixon Parents Of Triplets

For Booker T. Dixon Jr. of Rt. 2, Grifton and his wife, Mary, the old adage "good things come in small packages" came true Wednesday as the couple became the proud parents of small triplet daughters: Annette Marie, Gwenette Nicole and Lynette Joyce, at Pitt Memorial Hospital.

Annette Marie was born first in natural delivery at 4:47 a.m. Wednesday, followed by Gwenette Nicole and Lynette Joyce in Caesarean childbirth at 5:12 and 5:13 a.m., respectively.

The triplets, who weighed 4 pounds, 11 ounces, 4 pounds, 3¼ ounces, and 3 pounds, 4 ounces, are all in good condition. Annette Marie is in the newborn nursery, with the other two sisters in the neonatal unit at the hospital. All three should be together within the week, officials say.

"We doubled our family at one shot," said Dixon, who works in the maintenance department at Cox Trailers of Grifton. The Dixons already have three children, Gwendolyn Michelle, 16, Reginald, 13, and Selina, age 2, at home.

Mary, who noted that Annette and Gwenette are identical twins, worked at DuPont in Kinston shortly before the triplets' birth.

"The doctor told us about four months ago that we'd have triplets," said Mrs. Dixon. "We didn't believe it until now."

Guerrillas Reinforcing Rebels In Nicaragua

By ALFONSO CHARDY

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — Hundreds of Sandinista guerrillas invaded southern Nicaragua Saturday to reinforce an advancing rebel column and President Anastasio Somoza's air force bombed rebel-held neighborhoods in Managua.

"We have an organized army coming in from Costa Rica, Gen. Somoza said in a telephone interview. "It blew away our border crossing pount at Penas Blancas with mortars yesterday. Reinforcements of theirs came in this morning straight down the Pan American Highway in trucks and we found an abandoned armored car at El Naranjo (just north of border.)

"There's still fighting at Sapoa, four miles from the border. They've made it that far. But the air strikes have begun. We have our little planes down there," Somoza said.

Somoza's air force attacked the Sandinista-held barrios of Luis Somoza and El Dorado after sunrise in another effort to flush out the guerrillas. Troops also were reported moving into the districs of Managua's eastern sector, the major Sandinista stronghold. Heavy fighting was reported throughout the area.

Thousands of civilian residents poured out of the barrios waving white flags, apparently heeding a government warning to flee for their lives before the attack began. Witnesses said guerrillas and troops used heavy weapons such as .50 caliber machine guns and mortars.

Radio Sandino, broadcasting from somewhere in Nicaragua, reported that the Sandinistas approved a provisional government should the guerrillas manage to conquer territory in the south. It would be reportedly called the Junta of National Reconstruction and would include five prominent Sandinista and opposition figures.

The radio identified four of the junta members as Violeta Chamorro, Alfonso Robelo, Sergio Ramirez and Daniel Ortega Saavedra. It said the fifth member has not been chosen. Mrs. Chamorro is the widow of publisher Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, once Somoza's chief foe. Robelo is the leader of the center-left Broad Opposotion Front. Sergio Ramirez is a member of the Sandinista-allied Group of Twelve and Ortega Saavedra is a Sandinista leader.

At Las Mercedes International Airport in Managua, a Colombian air force aircraft hit by gunfire while landing Friday to evacuate Colombians, was grounded with a damaged fuel tank and hydraulic systems. One crewman was wounded.

U.S. Embassy spokesmen said another 180 Americans would be evacuated aboard two C-130 Hercules aircraft that have been flying shuttle runs between Somoza's private airfield at Montelimar, on the Pacific Ocean, and the Panama Canal Zone. About 400 Americans were flown out earlier this week.

Military sources said at least 400 Sandinistas crossed the border from Costa Rica Saturday. Joined by 300 guerrillas who entered the country Friday, they were advancing along the Pan American highway and the shores of Lake Nicaragua toward Rivas, a southern provincial capital 16 miles from the border.

The highway runs along the narrow neck of land between the Pacific Ocean and Lake Nicaragua.

Nicaraguan government officials said they believed the Sandinistas, who have widespread sympathy in Latin America, would like to seize the territory from Penas Blancas to Rivas and declare it "free Nicaragua."

The guerrillas were reported by military sources to have reached Sapoa, a hamlet and forward military base on the highway four miles north of Penas Blancas.

Two giant palls of black smoke billowed over Managua Saturday from two fires, one at a gasoline station the other at a supermarket, in the barrios of the eastern districts where there has been heavy fighting for more than a week.

Rebels still held Leon, Nicaragua's second largest city, 55 miles northwest of the capital. The Sandinistas have occupied the city for three weeks, but there were no reports of fighting there.

Amateur radio operators reported guerrillas had seized San Rafael del Norte, just south of the Honduran border. The village was the first settlement seized in 1927 by Augusto C. Sandino, from whom the leftist guerrillas take their name.

Shocked Reaction To Malaysian Plan

By S.C. WEE

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (UPI) — Diplomats reacted with shock Saturday to Malaysia's vow to use force to repel Vietnamese refugees, but most believe the government acted to draw world attention to the problem and will not "shoot on sight," as it vowed.

"They might build boats and start sending them away, but I don't think they are going to shoot anyone indiscriminately," one diplomat said. "It is an explosive issue all right, and I don't want to say more."

A U.N. refugee official, R. Sampatkumar, appealed to Malaysia to reconsider.

"We hope that these extreme measures contemplated by the government will not be implemented and the movement of refugees out of Malaysia will be contingent on the finding of suitable resettlement in third countries," Sampatkumar said.

Deputy Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad said Friday his government would empower the police and navy to "shoot on sight" if any Vietnamese try to enter Malaysian territory, and he warned any "boat people" who scuttle their boats offshore as a ploy to be rescued would be ignored.

Mahathir also estimated 76,000 refugees already in Malaysian resettlement camps would be deported — sent back out to sea in boats.

A Malaysian opposition leader, Lim Kit Siang, attacked the government Saturday for "showing utter disregard for human lives and sufferings."

"Malaysia must not allow Vietnam's barbaric behavior to make us barbaric too," Lim said.

One Western diplomat said he could not believe that Malaysia, a haven of humanitarian assistance to the refugees until now, had turned "so barbaric."

Malaysia, Thailand, Indonesia and Hong Kong have been swamped by more than 500,000 Indochinese refugees, with many more thousands expected in the coming months.

Contends Criteria For UNC Are Unconstitutional

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorneys for the University of North Carolina contend that the federal government's desegregation criteria are unconstitutional and say that they may challenge them when UNC goes before an administrative law judge.

U.S. Eastern District Judge Franklin Dupree ruled last week that the Department of Health, Education and Welfare may not withhold federal funds from UNC until an HEW law judge rules on whether the university system is in violation of the Civil Rights Act.

Joseph Levin, an attorney with the Washington law firm representing the university, said Friday he may challenge the legality of criteria HEW used in determining that the university has failed to desegregate. UNC has until July 5 to respond to this charge and the contention that federal funds for the university should be withheld.

Two years ago, HEW established criteria, including "numerical goals and timetables," to measure desegregation at UNC and in university systems in five other southern states.

In addition to contending these criteria are unconstitutional, UNC's attorneys claim HEW failed to get the approval, required by law, of the president and the attorney general before trying to enforce the criteria.

Levin said UNC may raise this point when it files its reply to accusations made by HEW Secretary Joseph Califano in April when he initiated proceedings to cut off funds from UNC.

One of the goals HEW sought to enforce calls for a reduction in the disparity between the proportion of black and white high school graduates entering traditionally white colleges by at least 50 percent by the fall of 1982.

Another goal is a commitment by the state to eliminate within five years what HEW contends is unnecessary duplication of programs in the university system.

When UNC and HEW were unable to agree on program elimination they reached an impassse that resulted in Califano's move to cut funds and UNC's countermove challenging HEW's authority to withhold money.

Dupree blocked HEW's plan to make a limited deferral of new funds for the university and ruled that HEW's administrative hearing must be completed and the result approved by Califano before a final decision is made on withholding UNC's $89 million in federal funds. UNC can then appeal that decision to the courts.

Issuing Decals

The Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce is issuing membership door decals to all individuals and business members this week which encourage shoppers to support businesses which display the decal.

According to Charles Gaskins Jr., chairman of the Door Decal Task Force of the chamber, the decals are being issued to identify all chamber members.

"The decals read 'Support Businesses That Support The Community, Member 1979 Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce' and that is exactly what we encourage all chamber members to do," Gaskins said.

"The Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce is working in many areas of total community development. Total community development can only be achieved through total community support. The decals recognize the many volunteers working together to support our community," he said.

According to Gaskins, each chamber member will receive two decals for display.

The white and green decals which measure 4¾ by 3¾ inches are the first membership door decals ever issued to Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce members.

Refugee Families Rescued

MIAMI (AP) — Two Cuban families were saved by a Miami fisherman just when it appeared their desperate flight from Cuba had failed, authorities say.

U.S. immigration officials took 11 refugees, including a 2-year-old, into custody Friday at Key West. Officials said they would transport the refugees to Miami, where they probably would be allowed to stay.

Richard Gutierrez of Miami rescued the families when their boat began sinking off the small island of Cay Sal.

"They were bailing so hard they looked like human pumps," Gutierrez said. He pulled them aboard his 40-foot commercial fishing boat and took them the 110 miles northwest to Key West.

"When they saw me, they were so overjoyed, I couldn't hear what they were saying, they were screaming so loud," he said.

He said the Cubans told him they had left their country because "they were starving to death. For a family with three young children, they were given only one gallon of milk per month."

He said the group left the fishing village of La Isabela de Sagua, 80 miles east of Havana, June 13 and evaded air and sea patrols. They told him they were caught in a tropical depression that swept through the area later in the week but managed to anchor at Cay Sal.

Their boat reportedly began taking on water soon after they left Cay Sal on Thursday.

His grave will remain unmarked indefinitely, cemetery officials said. Prior to his death, Wayne requested the epitaph "Feo, Fuerte y Formal" — Spanish for "Ugly, strong and dignified."

Wayne's three sons, four daughters and 21 grandchildren attended the ceremonies, along with his estranged wife, Pilar.

During the dawn Mass at Our Lady Queen of Angels Roman Catholic Church, music from some of his 200 movies was played, including the theme song from "The High and Mighty." Other songs included "Red River Valley," and "Green Leaves of Summer."

Conducting the Mass was the archbishop of Panama, Marcos G. McGrath, who had visited Wayne about a month before he died. Wayne converted to Catholicism, the faith of his family, the day before he died.

Officials Urge Destruction Of Damaged Tobacco

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State agriculture officials are urging the destruction of herbicide-damaged tobacco after a major tobacco buyer said it would not buy the leaf.

Officials in North Carolina and South Carolina fear sales of the healthy leaves in both states may be hurt by the recent announcement.

Agriculture Commissioner James A. Graham of North Carolina said that it would be best if the contaminated tobacco were not sold because buyers might be wary of healthy tobacco from areas with heavy contamination.

Graham and Agriculture Commissioner G. Bryan Patrick Jr. of South Carolina both said Friday at a Raleigh meeting that they knew of a tobacco company that had said it would refuse the contaminated tobacco, even if it were given a clean bill of health by scientists.

Both commissioners refused to name the company.

A spokesman for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., the nation's largest cigarette producer, declined to comment when contacted in Winston-Salem.

Each state has as much as 3,000 acres damaged by the herbicide, which found its way into shipments of three grades of tobacco fertilizer produced by Smith-Douglass at its Kinston plant.

Graham said North Carolina was "strongly urging" Smith-Douglass to pay farmers for damage to the crops — damage that could total several million dollars.

He said a quick settlement by the company would eliminate farmers' needs to sell the contaminated tobacco.

J.J. Pointer, Smith-Douglass's president, said at the meeting that the comany was setting up procedures for handling farmers' damage claims.

If test show the tobacco cannot be sold it cannot be claimed under federal crop insurance, which offers protection only against natural disasters.

Pointer said the company still had not determined the source of the contamination. The state has stopped the sales of the three grades of affected fertilizer manufactured at the company's Kinston plant.

The announcement by the agriculture commissioners came after officials in the department said the herbicide, picloram, does not pose a health problem.

Dr. William Y. Cobb, director of the Food and Drug Protection division of the North Carolina Department of Agriculture, made the announcement at a meeting on crop contamination.

Cobb said the tolerance levels of other chlorinated pesticides established by the West German government for tobacco imported from the United States range from 200 to 5,000 parts per billion. His report to the Department on most tested crops showed less than five parts per billion.

No recommendation was made to take any of the affected vegetables off the market, although the department urged tobacco farmers to store damaged crops for the time being.

An extension specialist from North Carolina State said his department is conducting tests to see if the cured tobacco should go to market. Test results should be available in two weeks, he said.

Ghana Generals Executed

LONDON (AP) — Ghana's deposed military ruler, Gen. Ignatius Acheampong, and another former top general were executed by a firing squad today, according to a Radio Accra broadcast monitored here.

The British Broadcasting Corp., which monitored the Radio Accra announcement, said Acheampong and Gen. F. Uteka were shot to death at a military firing range 4 miles outside the Ghanaian capital of Accra after they were convicted by a military court set up by the country's new 13-dayold military regime.

Acheampong was overthrown in a July 1978 coup led by a fellow general, Fred Akuffo, who was himself ousted June 4 in a coup headed by a junior air force officer, Flight Lt. Jerry Rawlings.

Armed Guards For Nuclear Wastes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Armed guards will accompany some shipments of nuclear wastes under new federal restrictions prompted by concern over possible terrorist attacks.

Under rules published Friday by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, shippers must "avoid were practicable" transporting highly radioactive spent nuclear fuel through cities of 100,000 persons or urban areas with either a population of 1 million or a central city of 500,000 persons.

Don Kason of the NRC's office of nuclear material safety and safeguards said about 180 areas would be covered by the guidelines.

The rules call for the NRC to approve the routes in advance. If the populated areas cannot be avoided, armed guards must accompany the shipment, said Robert Burnett, director of the NRC's division of safeguards.

Calls Missile Political Ploy

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — A Presidential aide said President Carter's proposed MX missile is a ploy to get conservatives in Congress to back his SALT II agreement with the Soviet Union.

The statement was made to a group of Pembroke State University students Friday. Joe McCleary, deputy assistant to the President in charge of political liaison and personnel, made the comment in response to a question on the missile and the SALT II talks now under way in Vienna.

McCleary was asked if the proposed $30 billion intercontinental missile was a political ploy to pacify conservatives in Congress into supporting the SALT II agreement.

"Yes, you could say to a certain extent we are wasting billions of dollars to placate the conservatives in Congress," McCleary said. "But we'll be saving billions of dollars, because if the conservatives had their way, what we would spend (on defense) would be mind-boggling."

Orders Gunmen To Assassinate Shah

By SAJID RIZVI

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — A revolutionary court has ordered a team of Iranian gunmen to Mexico to try to assassinate Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, who has been condemned to death in absentia since he left his throne, officials said Saturday.

"I have told them they must carry out the sentence wherever (the shah) happens to be in order to take revenge from that traitor on behalf of the Iranian nation," Sheikh Sadeq Khalkhali, leader of Tehran's secret revolutionary court, told the newspaper Bamdad.

No details or confirmation of the Iranian death squad were available. Khalkkali said his gunmen had been in the Bahamas, the last stop in the shah's exile trip around the world, but were unable to carry out any attack on the shah there before he left for Mexico one week ago.

In Iran Saturday, the Kayhan newspaper reported Hossein Amiri, leader of a homosexual ring known as the "Yellow Scorpion" gang, died before a firing squad in the western city of Hamedan. His was the 300th execution reported since Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionaries seized power from the last shah-appointed government in mid-February.

Two Islamic judges found Amiri guilty of homosexual rape. He also was accused of raping a fellow jail inmate after his arrest. He was executed Thursday.

Another court in the southeastern city of Zahedan sentenced a man to a 40-lash flogging for "demonstrating in a drunken state" last November.

The Bamdad report about the assassination plot against the shah said Khalkhali sent a group of men to the Bahamas while the shah was staying at a Paradise Island resort.

They have now been dispatched to Mexico, the report said — the shah is living in a heavily guarded mansion at Cuernavaca, 50 miles from Mexico City — but it was not clear if Khalkhali meant they had already arrived.

In addition to the death sentence pronounced against the shah in absentia, Khalkhali said the shah's wife, Empress Farah, and the queen mother, Farideh Diba, also have been condemned to death.

Missile Decision Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress will be asked to give final approval to a plan that will direct President Carter to develop a "shell game" missile launch system unless he can prove another proposal is better.

House-Senate conferees approved the plan Friday as part of a $2 billion defense money bill that now faces final floor action in both chambers.

The bill said the president may develop either of two versions of the planned MX missile. But if he doesn't accept the so-called "shell game," plan he must justify his system to Congress.

The question is how to hide and launch, the planned missile.

Pentagon officials have indicated Carter is favoring a system where the missile would be shuttled up and down 20-mile trenches so the Soviets wouldn't know where to find them.

But the "shell game" system favored by Congress would provide 4,000 dummy missiles in addition to 200 real ones. The real and fake missiles would be moved from silo to silo so the Russians would never know which targets to strike.

Appointments To Boards Made By City Council

The City Council, meeting Thursday night, made several appointments to local boards and commissions.

The Council named Mrs. Della Dayson as the city's new member on the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority. Mrs. Dayson will serve a four-year term.

Terry Cagle was named to the Greenville Citizens Bikeway Committee, succeeding David W. Cartwright who submitted his resignation. In addition, the Council reappointed Dr. Jim Hix, Ms. Shirley Morrison, William Clark, Hal Smith, Miss Janet Dunn and Alfred S. King to new three-year terms on the committee.

Mrs. Billie Jean Trevathan was appointed to the Board of Adjustments as a second alternate. It was pointed out that J. B. Surles, who currently serves as first alternate, will move up to regular board membership, and Patricia Marshall, who is currently second alternate, will move up to first alternate on the Board of Adjustments.

D. C. Wade Jr., whose term on the Board of Adjustments expired this month, was reappointed to a new tenure on the board.

Earl E. Howell has completed his second term on the Planning and Zoning Commission and Thomas L. Edwards was named to succeed Howell on the board. Clarence Tugwell, who is filling an unexpired term which ends this month, was reappointed to a new term.

The Council reappointed Dr. Edgar W. Hooks Jr., Roy Carawan and Joseph Godette to new terms on the Recreation Commission.

Phillip Dickerson was named to the Environmental Advisory Commission to fill the unexpired term of Ollie Harrington, who resigned. Harrington's term expires in April of 1981.

agreement with equality of security for both sides."

White House press secretary Jody Powell, the U.S. spokesman, said Carter, in his presentation, called for restraint in troubled regions of the world and warned about the dangers of continuing nuclear buildups on both sides.

"He warned of the dangers of a miscalculation which could lead to a catastrophe," Powell said.

Powell said that Carter, at the end of the morning meeting, had stated he considered the initial encounter "to have been useful" and was "pleased with its outcome."

Zamyatin's statement that Brezhnev "expressed hope and also confidence" that the Supreme Soviet will approve the treaty in its present form brought laughter from western reporters who believe that body is a rubber stamp.

PCB Possible Dump Sites

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt is asking officials of 13 counties where PCB-laced oil was dumped last summer for permission to test county landfills as possible dump sites for the tainted soil.

Though administration officials refused to say whether a multiple-site plan had been agreed on as a way of disposal, they said the plan was the only one now being considered.

A Time To Curtail Spending

County Manager Reginald Gray sees the budget he has proposed for the fiscal year 1979-80 as something that will please no one.

"It is a budget that is not in keeping with what has been our goal and ambition for the citizens of the county in the past," he said, in offering to the county commissioners a $23.07 million figure.

Some $25.48 million was requested by departments and agencies and the budget compares to $22.7 million for the present fiscal year.

Salary increases of five percent were proposed, but Gray noted that the State Legislature has since done more for state employees. He said he would like to see the same for county employees.

There are some new personnel requested, including two new deputies, an additional jailor and matron.

There would be a rather large increase in the Social services budget — from $1.36 million to $1.55 million — but because of the human services nature of this, the county has little control over it.

Of particular concern to Gray was the matter of capital improvements, since the budget was drawn up on the hope that the $9 million school bond issue would be approved by the voters.

It wasn't and there is little in the proposed budget to meet the school needs for capital improvements. Nor is there likely to be since the county commissioners have said capital improvements cannot be provided for in the regular budget.

A lean budget, indeed, makes a lot of people unhappy, and, in fact, some real needs of the county will go unmet this year.

Nevertheless, with inflation rampant and taxpayers grumbling, this is not the time for excessive new spending at any level of government.

Jimmy Undeniably A Good Old Boy

President Carter is a good old boy. He established that last week by what he said about whipping Ted Kennedy.

The language was kind of earthy, but there's nothing wrong with that among good old boys — so long as women aren't present.

Unfortunately there were some Yankees on hand who blabbed it to the world . . . definitely not good old boy types.

Keep It From The Feds

RALEIGH — A summary comment on North Carolina's plan for vocational education was recently distributed to members of the State Board of Education which, in itself, contains an awful commentary on how the federal government can over-control things.

The plan itself had to be submitted to the federal level to assure funding of programs. All along, federal officials have said they encourage innovative thinking and new approaches.

"However, there are many initiatives to improve vocational education which are not discussed in the plan — for good reasons," the summary to the policy board stated.

"Initiatives having to do with articulation, vocational guidance and other important concerns of vocational educators are being dealt with in the State Master Plan for Vocational Education and other documents. The State Master Plan is entirely a state document.

"The Master Plan and other documents rather than the Annual Plan are being emphasized so that North Carolina can preserve for itself a fruitful degree of independence from the federal government — in order to improve vocational education in the state."

The clincher is, that once the federal government approves the plan submitted it becomes a contract and North Carolina "is no longer free ... to interpret or amend the plan unilaterally in the state's best interest," the summary dolefully reminds members of the State Board of Education.

Land Use

Gov. Jim Hunt's proposal for a Balanced Growth Policy in North Carolina sailed through the General Assembly handily, and sets up procedures whereby industrial and economic growth can be encouraged to benefit areas most in need, especially rural and small town locales.

But left undone is a companion piece on statewide land use management. Can one major program be done without the other?

Yes, Gov. Hunt responds to that question. North Carolina can get new industry and new jobs. That's no problem.

"But the desired quality of life for our citizens can never be accomplished without land use planning," Hunt says.

Unless planning follows the landing of new jobs and industries to assure citizens a good place in which to live as well as work "we are not going to have beauty and open spaces and recreational opportunities..." Hunt fears.

Land-use planning "continues to be a high priority item with me ... I regret we have not been able to accomplish this."

Remember Kudzu?

Remember when the experts said the multflora rose was the answer to a lot of erosion problems? Farmers were urged to plant them, and numerous roadside banks and gullies and even median strips were planted in the hardy plant.

In Western North Carolina, the Tennessee Valley Authority pushed the rose as a solution, and Tar Heels went along happily covering old pastures and field terraces.

Now the experts are trying to figure out how to control the pretty little plant which has become a devouring beast. Hedges which started out eight feet wide spread to 25 feet. Bunches of pesky rose bushes are springing up all over open land. Blackbirds eat the seeds which are dropped to the ground ready to sprout, smothering grass and other vegetation — and that causes even more erosion than existed in the first place.

The state's Department of Agriculture and county extension agents are waging war on the monster rose, now, in mountain counties.

Sunday Morning Notes

Somehow we had failed to light the election board posted outside the "The Daily Reflector" office for the referendums on school bonds and mixed drinks June 8.

It wasn't long after darkness began to fall that we heard about it from Greenville Utilities Director Charles Horne.

"Can't you folks provide lights for the board?" he asked.

Anyway one of our staff members quickly rigged a photo flood light so the outside board could be seen.

Our photographer Tommy Forrest and Banks Cozart attended the wedding of Barbara Elaine Wortman and Macon Moye Dail, Jr. in Hendersonville last weekend.

As you might know, Hendersonville is in the North Carolina mountains — at a much higher elevation than we have here.

As they were riding along one of the mountain roads, a storm developed and there was a sharp bolt of lightning.

"Be careful," said Banks. "We're closer to the lightning here than we are in Greenville."

That may be true but the lightning only has to travel a little further to get you here.

The rains came last Monday. Somewhere between four and five inches fell on the Greenville area.

It flooded the underpass on Dickinson Avenue drowning out a vehicle.

Then Green Mill Run did what it always does during heavy rains. It flooded Charles Street, Fourteenth Street and all the low lands through the city to the river.

It did a little more this time, rising in the university area until it flooded some cars in the parking lots.

Fifth, First and some other streets flooded after the storm drainage system became inadequate to carry off the deluge.

One observer commented, "If this keeps up the gas shortage will be over. We can just row our boats home."

That might be all right for a rainy day but drier times are ahead. Maybe we could have solar powered cars for the sunny days.

Other Editors Say Biggest Surprise

(Washington Daily News)

Our neighboring county of Pitt held a referendum recently on whiskey by the drink and a $9 million school bond issue.

Whiskey by the drink was defeated by only 231 votes, an extremely close outcome. The count shows that 6,335 citizens voted in favor and 6,567 citizens voted against the idea.

In the school bond referendum 4,487 voted in favor of the bonds and 5,179 voted against; a margin of defeat of 856 votes.

Most predictions were that the whiskey by the drink issue would be defeated handily while the school bond issue would pass in a close vote. It just did not happen that way.

We can look at the closeness of the vote in the whiskey referendum and express great surprise. We can look also at the closeness of the school bond vote and we can wonder why progressive Pitt County would turn back this issue. We can say to ourselves that had East Carolina University been in regular session both issues might have passed. However, that is pure conjecture.

Now what is the biggest surprise of all to us is not the defeat of either issue by such a close margin. The biggest surprise to us is that 56 percent of the voters of Pitt County stayed home and did not vote at all.

When we consider the rather heavy publicity campaign waged, particularly on the whiskey by the drink issue, we just cannot understand why people stayed home in such record numbers. The newspaper advertising, the blaring of radio commercials, the regular appeals on television, the signs on church marquees, the sermons alluding to the challenge, the street conversations, and the general atmosphere in PITT County all combined to cause one to feel that people would really come out and participate. They did not.

When emotions are touched so clearly, when the issues are so deftly stated, and when so much human effort is put forth to get out the vote and only 44 percent bother to cast ballots, the greatest defeat of all is not the school bond issue and not the whiskey by the drink issue. The greatest defeat of all is to democracy itself.

Yes, there'll be another day, another challenge, another opportunity, and another vote coming. Democracy itself will not be the public issue but it well might be the idden issue. We cannot keep on defeating democracy and continuing to enjoy the guarantees of freedom it offers.

Fifty-six percent of the Pitt County people apparently did not give a hoot either way. And we suspect the same thing would happen here in Beaufort County.

Chief George Clark of the Greenville Police Department today warned that persons parking cars on certain business streets longer than the one-hour limit would face possible arrest.

The situation is getting so bad, declared the chief, that local police will be instructed to start at once marking cars for the purpose of determining who is violating the city ordinance.

Clark also revealed that a plan is underway to curb truck parking on the main business streets, thereby tying-up traffic on numerous occasions. It is proposed that loading and unloading spaces in every other block be provided and that trucks be required to use the spaces instead of parking "all over the streets," as Clark described. They will have the alternative of using the back alleys for loading and unloading declared Clark, if the plans can be enacted.

THE INSIDE REPORT

Reagan's Scars In Dixie

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The slow unraveling of Ronald Reagan's once-impregnable southern base, given a glimpse when Arkansas Republicans gathered here recently for a fundraising dinner, was shown more clearly a few days earlier when state party leaders quietly sabotaged the Reagan campaign.

Notable at the fund-raiser was lack of enthusiasm for the front-running Reagan and rising support for John B. Connally. Such sentiment of the party elite would presumably be overriden by grass roots Reaganites in the Arkansas presidential primary. But five days prior to the dinner, over wails from the Reagan campaign, the State Republican Executive Committee abolished the primary and substituted a backroom system calculated to yield Reagan precious few delegates.

What's more, Arkansas delegate selection will begin extremely early, on Feb. 2, so that its impact will be felt elsewhere. The Alabama primary will follow March 11, with an anti-Reagan ambush planned there. Arkansas and Alabama, Reagan states at the 1976 convention, each promise him significantly fewer delegates this time, elsewhere in the country: the party faithful whispering that he is "over the hill," accompanied by complaints about shabby treatment from Reagan's campaign staff. Reagan's position with the southern Republican elite is even weaker today than four years ago when he was challenging an incumbent Republican president.

That is demonstrated by remarkable events in Arkansas. State Republican chairman Lynn Lowe opposed Reagan in 1976 but was swamped by Reagan voters in the state primary, sending total strangers as Reagan-pledged delegates to the Kansas City convention ("We never saw some of them before, and we never saw them again," says Lowe). To prevent a recurrence, Lowe devised plans this year to kill the primary.

Connally's national strategists supposed the change would be buried by Reagan forces. It was not. While key Reagan operatives in far-off Los Angeles were scarcely aware of what was happening in Little Rock, the new plan carried with only one state committee vote against it.

The new system turns back the clock to delegate selection by district party committees. That promises some delegates for the comatose campaign of George Bush, supported here by the influential Rep. John Paul Hammerschmidt. But mostly it is a potential bonanza for Connally and a potential fiasco for Reagan.

In Arkansas as in other southern states, Connally is the choice of the corporate boardrooms, the country clubs — and the Republican committees. Reagan is the choice of filling-station operators and crossroads merchants, who presumably would sweep an Arkansas primary for Reagan if they had the chance.

The anti-Reagan coup here cannot be duplicated widely. On the contrary, Mississippi is switching to a primary,

WORSHIP BY GIVING

In ancient Athens the wealthy citizens vied with each other in making great public gifts. One would defray the expenses of public games, another would present a building to the city, and still another would adorn a temple. These gifts were called in Greek "leitourgia", from which we get the English word "liturgy".

So the word which signified a public gift in ancient Greece has been brought over in the English language to indicate a form of worship. The implication is that to give is to worship. Whether we give money to the church or give gracious gifts to those around us, we are worshipping God by the act of giving.

The gift becomes the means by which we offer ourselves and all that we are, hope and think to the world around us and to God who made it. The "leitourgia" becomes the sacred "liturgy" in praise and adoration of the Most High. And the most complete gift ever made was by Jesus, who gave Himself that mankind might live.

Social Security 'Watergate'

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Next year could be "a Watergate year" in regard to Social Security, said Haeworth Robertson, its former chief actuary. A year, he predicts, of deception and irresponsibility. Of dishonesty.

The instrument will be "some action by Congress that will look good to the public," maybe a cut in the scheduled withholding tax that will ease immediate burdens — and compound future ones — said Robertson.

The motivation is a scheduled increase in the 1981 withholding tax, the result of 1977 amendments designed to make the system actuarially sound. But Congress, he fears, will roll back the scheduled increases.

"It will be irresponsible," he states flatly. We know the range of benefits that can be offered for a certain price, he said, and we know it would be "immoral to promise benefits we cannot afford."

But politics are politics, and 1980 is an election year. Elections are won in the present, of course, and in the realm of politics that often means the future takes care of itself.

But it won't, warns Roberston, who since leaving Social Security has served as vice president of William M. Mercer Inc., world's largest employee benefits consultant.

No, the system isn't about to collapse, he says. In fact, he maintains, "the financial problems will be relatively minor during the next 10 years or so." Then the troubles might begin.

In Social Security's case, the qualification "might" could even be too strong, especially to an actuary. To Robertson, the danger is inked in numbers: There will be trouble if the financing isn't sound.

If it isn't, then serious problems are scheduled to begin when post-World War II children are ready to retire. Since the oldest is 33, that would be after the turn of the century — just two decades from now.

Even if the tax isn't rolled back, he said he is "concerned that we have made promises we cannot keep and that we should be honest with that generation and tell them they have to retire later."

The program, he maintains, must be restructured for that generation, in part because there will be a preponderence of older people, many of them retirees, and a shortage of younger workers to support the system.

He insists the time for questioning is now, and suggests this be among the questions asked:

—Is the taxpayer, meaning both employee and employer, willing to pay? If not, then Americans shouldn't live with the illusion of superior benefits.

That's the issue for next year, when Congress considers whether or not to permit the scheduled increases to take place in 1981.

In that year, 1981, the scheduled tax rate leaps from 6.13 percent of income to 6.65 percent, and the maximum income on which the tax is assessed rises to $29,700 from the 1980 base of $25,900.

Observations From Editorial Columns

Just What We Needed

An interesting hit of things to come cropped up at a meeting of Goldsboro Aldermen the other night.

Board members were shown charts illustrating the agencies and programs involved with problems of the aged locally.

The proliferation of all federally funded programs is enough to stagger the imagination.

The person giving aldermen the latest rundown explained that because of confusion and duplication of effort, a new agency was needed to coordinate the activities of the others.

That sounded exactly what we need — another public agency!

What we really need is to liminate some already in existence. One of the biggest functions of the bureaucracy seems to be creating more bureaucratic positions. — The Goldsboro News-Argus

Fair Sentencing

Whatever it might have done or left undone, the General Assembly is to be applauded for taking a courageous stride into a thorny field of judicial reform.

In enacting into law a system of "fair sentencing", the Assembly has gone a long way toward repairing the public image of the state's system of justice. Although it is not a repair job with unconditional warranty, it should go a long way toward wiping away the tarnish which is summed up in the phrase, "a double standard of justice, depending on who you are."

Strongly supported by the Hunt administration "fair sentencing" assumes a relatively narrow punishment schedule for several classes of crime. When a court finds a defendant guilty of a particular crime,the punishment must come within those limits. If there are mitigating or extenuating circumstances, the judge may go beyond the limits — either way — but he or she must put in writing the reasons for doing so.

As in any major change of direction, there are potential problems. Some opponents have feared that a result would be a heavy new influx of prisoners into a penal system that is already bursting at the seams. In hopes of lessening that threat, the finished bill was considerably amended in both houses of the legislature.

Experience should point the way to further changes in the law. But we hope — and believe — that important in that experience will be an increase in public confidence in the quality of justice that the state's courtes mete out. — The High Point Enterprise

As I Recall It

A Story Told Of Lindsay Warren's Locked Door

By Noel Yancy

(Noel Yancy retired last year after 39 years of covering North Carolina news for the Associated Press. In this column, he retells some of the big stories he recalls.)

An old story has it that the Woman's Suffrage Amendment was defeated in the North Carolina Senate when one of the honorables kept another from voting by locking him in the toilet.

Hargrove "Skipper" Bowles of Greensboro told the story when he appeared before a legislative committee in 1971 in support of a bill he sponsored to ratify 50 years after it became law — the amendment which gave women the right to vote.

Bowles said the way he heard it, the trick was pulled by the late Lindsay Warren, one of the most skilled parliamentarians who ever served on the legislature. When the ratification issue was being debated by the 1919 Senate, Bowles said Warren noticed one of the bill's supporters leaving the floor. Warren, a leader of the opponents to women voting, followed the senator to the men's room and locked the door behind him.

Then Warren returned to the Senate floor. "He called for the vote, and it was defeated right then. That was the end of it," Bowles said in a recent telephone interview in which he recalled the 1971 bill.

"That was the understanding I had," Bowles added. "That was the way I heard it. I would not vouch for the truth of the story."

Bowles said he was reminded of the story when a legislator got up to leave the room during the 1971 committee session. "I said, 'Wait a minute. That's what happened to this bill back in 1919.'"

When I asked Secretary of State Thad Eure recently whether it was true that North Carolina's ratification of Woman's Suffrage was blocked by one senator locking another in the toilet, Eure said, "I heard the story all right, but I never heard who locked the door."

Lindsay Warren Jr. of Goldsboro who also had a distinguished career in the state senate, was inclined to doubt that his father locked the door on another senator.

"That story gets more embellished every time I hear it," young Warren said recently. He said he never actually discussed it with his father and did not know exactly what happened.

"I think it is more likely that he noticed the member had left the floor and called for the vote while he was gone," young Warren said.

He said if his father had actually locked the other senator in the john, the victim could have demanded another vote upon his return to the floor.

Whether or not the door was locked, the Woman's Suffrage issue was defeated in the North Carolina Legislature, and women won the right to vote without any help from this state.

Apparently that lapse rankled some of the state's women leaders. For they persuaded Bowles and Willis Whichard of Durham to sponsor ratification measures even if it was 50 years late. The measure was finally passed by both houses and enacted into law on May 6, 1971.

"It was purely a symbolic thing," Bowles commented, "but a lot of women wanted it done, and I agreed to introduce it."

abroad to Tehran in the first two weeks of May but took 9,376 out of the country.

The demand for passports has increased 66 percent since the revolution, with 2,000 people lining up every day to receive old imperial passports overstamped with Islamic Republic of Iran.

Cars are parked four deep outside the passport offices. Instant-photo merchants are doing a brisk business.

"We have worked for this country for many years, but no one seems to care," said an elderly woman as she and her husband waited at the airport for a flight to London.

"Now we are too old to fight for what we want, so we are leaving for Europe to have a comfortable and carefree life."

Another woman, identifying herself only as Mina, said: "We don't want to live in an Islamic republic. Although no one is certain what an Islamic republic is, it doesn't sound very good."

She said she and her family were going to Spain.

"At least in California, we will have good programs on television," said the young daughter of a departing doctor.

Some arriving travelers are enthusiastic, some wary about the Islamic revolution. Most of those returning to the country say they want to give their time and effort to the government. A few women are already clad in ankle-length veils as a sign of loyalty to Islam.

"I had a grant from the Ministry of Finance to study in England," said a young man loaded down with presents for his sisters. "I stayed in England until the former regime was overthrown. I didn't want to come back and work for them. I will work for these people with pleasure because they are a people's government.

Another young man said he had been studying in the United States on a grant from the navy.

"I don't know what to expect," he said. "I don't know if I want to work for these armed forces. I have to stay for a while and find out. It may turn out worse than I think, in which case I will return to the U.S."

"We are all anxious," said a well-dressed girl arriving from Vienna. "We want to sit around for a little bit to find out what will happen. I have my passport ready at all times in case I have to fly out."

which in 1976 would have given Reagan the delegation and perhaps the presidential nomination. There is no doubt Reagan today would win any Deep South primary. But the primaries are not today, and erosion is at work.

At a Mississippi fund-raiser in Jackson the night before the Little Rock dinner, pro-Connally talk was even more evident — partly because Big John himself was the speaker with another incendiary performance. Diehard Reaganism was a shadow of its 1976 self. Former state chairman Wirt Yerger, a Reagan fire-eater then, told us he is still for him (while unhappy about Reagan's campaign staff) but clearly could accept Connally — particularly after hearing his evangelical right-wing oratory.

Connally has the potential for eroding Reagan's Mississippi grass roots support as Ford never could. He also has in Sen. Thad Cochran (who introduceed Connally to the Jackson dinner as "our southern friend") the state's most popular politician. By the time of the June Mississippi primary, according to foxy courthouse politicians, Connally may have pulled ahead.

Long before June, however, will come the March 11 Alabama primary, where Connally will make his majór early southern effort to upset Reagan. Here, too, the Reaganites are losing a rules fight. Proportional representation is expected to replace winner-take-all, preventing a Reagan sweep of the whole delegation (as in 1976) even if he manages a plurality.

If Jimmy Carter gets his home state primary moved up to March, Reagan faces more of the same in Georgia: another early primary in state he carried unanimously in 1976 and where he now leads but where Connally sentiment is rising. Georgia's Republican national committeeman Carl Gillis, a bitter-end Reaganite last time, is drifting toward Connally this time. "Reagan has sort of lost his luster for me," Gillis told us. Contrary to the Reagan high command's denial, Reagan's erosion in the South is not the invention of Washington reporters.

Woman-On-The-Go Can Cite Accomplishments

WILMINGTON, N.C. — When liquor-by-the-drink was overwhelmingly approved in a recent New Hanover County referendum, pictures of a beaming Cammy Bain were splashed on the front pages of local newspapers. She had been in the public eye for weeks as director of the committee pushing for a positive vote, and a two-to-one margin rewarded her efforts.

Ironically, this project was one Mrs. Bain terms "a cause I don't feel as deeply about as most others". Yet it earned much wider publicity than her other achievements.

In Wilmington, "Cammy Bain" is synonomous with spirited work, political savvy, and effective organization. The 32-year-old wife and mother is more involved in community affairs than many elected officials.

Raised in Charlotte, North Carolina, Cammy had politically active parents. Her father was a devoted party worker, and her mother is now serving her fourth term as a county commissioner. When Cammy entered Randolph Macon Women's College in Lynchburg, Va., she was ripe to be a campus radical.

"I almost got kicked out of school for taking part in a sit-in at a restaurant that wouldn't serve blacks", she recalls. "Then I got in trouble by tutoring black children when their parents boycotted public schools during a rape trial."

After graduation, Cammy tried social work for a few months in Boston, and then joined VISTA. "They trained me to deal with black power," she relates. But it hardly prepared her for her first assignment: "After this training in black power, I was sent to an Apache Indian reservation in Arizona! I tried teaching English there for seven months, then gave up VISTA. The organization wasn't well run. But it did give me insight into what it's like being a minority person."

Back home in Charlotte, Cammy worked for a year on a daily newspaper, met Roy Bain, a budding lawyer, and was married in 1969. While her husband studied law, she provided support working as a librarian and secretary. And she kept in touch with politics by campaigning for George McGovern in his presidential bid.

After the Bains moved to Wilmington, Cammy — now the mother of a small son — joined the local newspaper staff. A year later she quit work to have another baby. This was when she became heavily involved in Wilmington's community and political affairs. A leader in the League of Women Voters, she also initiated the Women's Political Caucus, and single-handedly organized a successful candidate's workshop. Workshops and forums became her specialty, and her projects have included a women's candidate workshop a public forum for local candidates, and a workshop on women's needs. Meanwhile, she helped manage a victorious county commissioner's campaign, became active on the YWCA board, and was named to the state Council on the Status of Women.

And now, with the mixed drinks vote behind her, Cammy Bain has two new jobs to gear up for: directing the local Volunteer Action Center, and mothering a third little Bain. Seldom still, rarely at home, she is nevertheless a mother who enjoys and nurtures her children. Tiny Elizabeth has been carried and strolled to board meetings and rallies, and she and her older brother seem contented to share the whirlwind life their mother leads.

What activates this activity in politics and civic imrpvement? "I like to feel I'm involved in change," Mrs. Bain explains. "It's not all altruistic, but I do want to make things better and to be busy at something worthwhile."

Is this contrary to the traditional picture of the gentle, helpless Southern woman? "I think the picture's wrong," Mrs. Bain asserts. "Southern women are really very strong. There is plenty of steel in them." — MARJORY MEGIVERN, free-lance writer, Wilmington, N.C.

Where Would We All Be Without Ignorance?

The idea that people should be trained for parenthood just as they are trained for any other occupation is currently one of the most popular banalities in America. I can't pick up a magazine without seeing this repeated by some prominent authority like a pediatrician or one of Charlie's Angels.

Of course, nobody except nonparents really believes this. Let's face it; the preservation of the American way of life depends upon ignorance. No woman in her right mind would elect to have a child if she knew that children outgrow the terrible twos when they're 21 and that the average length of potty training is four years.

When I began training Meg, I thought that it would be sort of like knitting a sweater. It would take two months at the outside, and then the project would be complete.

That was two years ago. I am still training Meg.

She regards going to the bathroom as an unconscionable infringement on her rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. She can turn blue in the face, twist her body into the most unimaginable contortions, and start dancing an Irish jig, but when I ask her if she needs to run to the potty, the answer is inevitably, "No."

It's not that she's dishonest, it's just that potty training will make a sneak out of the most truthful of children. I have found wet panties in the closet, in her pajama drawer, under the bed, and behind bushes. Unfortunately, I have often found then two or three days after they were taken off.

No woman who has ever gone through this can even begin to understand the agony of trying to train a natural libertine. I have tried every potty training method known to woman but nothing works.

As some of you remember, I started with potty training in one day. I gave that up after three months.

I have also tried threats. I have told her that the next time she wet her pants I would make her wash her own clothes. On a stone. In a river. In South America.

She didn't believe me.

Once I even accepted a friend 's suggestion that the less said about it, the better. I ignored the accidents for several days. Meg thought this was just grand. She went off training completely.

Then I tried incentive, which is a euphemism for bribery. Meg got a dime for every day she didn't wet her pants. But the novelty of the dimes wore off lots faster than her aversion to the bathroom.

We got to a point at which we were having long discussions about the value of dry clothes.

"People won't like to be around you if you keep wetting your pants. Do you realize that?"

She shook her head solemnly.

"And nobody will like to hold you in their laps for fear you will wet them."

She shook her head again.

"And nobody will want to take you anywhere because they might have to take you back home and get you dry clothes. Do you understand?"

She was beginning to squirm. "Yes, Mommy. But can I go now?"

I looked down and saw that an ever-widening circle was darkening the seat of her pants.

A Happy Enterprise By The Golden Roamers

James J. Kilpatrick

VANCOUVER, CANADA —An Alaskan cruise by way of the inland passage turns up some of the most beautiful scenery on the North American continent. This particular cruise has turned up something else as well —one of the happiest, warmest enterprises of recent discovery — the Golden Roamers of Washington State.

Twenty-two of the Roamers boarded the Princess Patricia when she sailed north from Vancouver. They got off at Skagway to continue by bus into the wilds of the Yukon. Fourteen other Roamers came aboard in their place for the ride back south toward Seattle. They ranged in age from 65 to 88. No teen-agers at a high-school picnic ever had more fun than these oldsters on their "Alaskan Adventure."

This particular enterprise is the loving labor of Jim Krefting of Seattle. He is a big, bulky guy in his late 40s —competent hands, a hundred-watt smile. He came up with the idea of chartering travel clubs restricted to persons over 55. Some months ago he brought in 30-year-old Jim Below as an associate. Together they're gradually building up a small business with a large potential.

At the moment, the Golden Roamers consists mostly of a small Seattle office, a middle-sized van, a large bus and the two hard-working fellows named Jim. Five local chapters are scattered about the state of Washington, chiefly in Seattle and Spokane. Upward of 1,500 persons have signed up at annual dues of $15 for singles, $25 for couples.

Over the past year, one or the other Jim has escorted a brood of oldsters to Reno for seven days at $115 all-inclusive; to Hawaii for 14 days at $1,200; or merely to Vancouver, Portland or the Longacre Raceways for the day. This autumn will see the Golden Roamers on a transcontinental look at fall foliage from New England to North Carolina. Another group will head for the British Isles. Less ambitious members will roam to Portland for the Festival of Roses. Call them tours, excursions or adventures — these trips are the breath of life to old folks on the go.

The Roamers who signed up for Alaska were divided into two groups. Krefting shepherded the larger group of 22 onto the Princess Patricia, kidded them along, played bridge with them, looked after their tickets and baggage. Meanwhile Jim Below had gone ahead with his smaller group, driving the Roamers' bus over the Alcan Highway. They traded places at Skagway.

Before Krefting talked him into joining the firm, Below had been making a living, incongruously, as a professional gambler. He is still bemused at his sudden emergence as den mother to the geriatric set, but he loves it.

"Old people," he says, "are absolutely the greatest. They want to see everything. They don't want to miss anything. On one of our trips to Reno, a 92-year-old stayed up all night playing blackjack and shooting craps. In Alaska, wild horses couldn't have kept them away from a can-can show. They took a two-hour boat trip down the Yukon. They're curious and they're knowledgeable and they're fun."

Their elderly charges look upon the two Jims as a pair of favorite nephews. May Hilmer, 88, of Spokane, recalled an incident on a muddy road somewhere out of Whitehorse. The Roamers' bus went into a dangerous slide down a hill and across a bridge, barely missing a big truck. "Jim Below was just great," she said. Her eyes sparkled. "He got that bus under control, and we got out of there." She hadn't had so much fun in years.

Krefting's hope, after he gets more experience under his belt, is to franchise Golden Roamer chapters in other states. His present operation is earning a small profit, but he has kept introductory prices unrealistically low. He and his sidekick are working too constantly to permit sufficient planning and management. This is a small business that may make it big, or may go under. It's hard to say.

But the market is there. A recent report from the National Committee on Careers for Older Americans puts the number of Americans over 55 at 46 million — about 20 percent of our total population. Such a potential for roamin' in the gloamin' could keep a fleet of steamships sailing and a host of buses rolling. On to the golden years! The best, as they say, is yet to come.

Truckers Seek National Shutdown Wednesday

Independent truckers Saturday rebuffed a government emergency order and called for a nationwide shutdown by all truckers starting Wednesday night. Their protest was punctuated by arson, gunfire and beatings.

Tractor-trailer rigs blocked diesel fuel pumps across the nation, gunfire smashed windshields in Missouri, Kansas and Alabama, and incidents of arson were reported in Tennessee and Missouri.

A carload of unidentified men, reportedly wearing Teamsters Union hats, jumped and beat several truckers in parked rigs near Nashville late Friday.

No serious injuries were reported in any of the incidents, part of a 10-day protest against rising fuel costs, the 55 mph speed limit and state weight limits.

Administration officials Saturday told a small group of independents the White House could not condone the violent outbreaks.

They held a two-hour meeting at the Capitol to explain Friday's emergency order by the Interstate Commerce Commission which allows truckers to recoup losses from rising fuel costs through a 5.6 surcharge on their customers. The meeting ended with truckers refusing to end their protest and the White House refusing to make any commitments for further relief.

"That (the 5.6 percent surcharge) won't cover the increased cost of diesel fuel in the last two months," said Marlin Seaholm, a director of the Western Montana Independent Truckers Association.

The independents charged fuel costs had risen well in excess of 5.6 percent since January — 25 to 30 percent in most areas of the nation.

Protest leaders Saturday told Rep. Bill Boner, D-Tenn., the country faces "a national emergency by the middle of the week" if independent drivers remain idle.

"We think President Carter has to stop eating his Vienna sausages and bring his butt home," said one truck driver in Milwaukee, referring to President Carter's summit meeting in Vienna, Austria. "The real problem is here."

About 100 independent trucking representatives from 12 states met in Cleveland Saturday and called for a nationwide truck shutdown.

"We are recommending that all truckers take an extended vacation until our demands are met starting at 11:59 p.m. Wednesday. We are asking for their support (Teamsters). We supported them during their strike," said Bill Hill, the spokesman for the newly formed Independent Truckers Unity Coalition.

"They are going to have to make their own decisions about joining us. We are hoping that we won't have any trouble. We will work with any group of truckers to quickly resolve this problem. Unity is the key."

The Ohio Teamsters spokesman said, "The Teamsters oppose any shutdowns because it violates the contract."

The meeting was attended by independent truckers from Alabama, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Nebraska, South Dakota, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Ohio, New Jersey, New York and West Virginia. Hill said those attending the meeting represent "thousands" of independents.

Blockades and other strike-related activity were reported Saturday in the New England states, Alabama, Missouri, Kansas, Tennessee, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Nebraska, South Dakota, Georgia, Florida, Utah, Colorado, Montana and Washington.

Truckers burned several junk cars near Nashville and the cab of a truck was set ablaze in Mountain Grove, Mo., a few hours after the driver was threateneed anonymously over a CB radio. Newton County Sheriff Joe Abramovitz said only the mattress of the rig was damaged and the driver has refused to press charges.

A group of independent truckers presented a list of their demands to Colorado Gov. Richard D. Lamm Friday and Lamm emerged from the meeting saying he might have to call in the National Guard to prevent violence.

Officials predicted worse traffic snarls and possible spot food shortages if the strike persists.

Refinery Officials Asked To Explain Lack Of Production

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal energy officials are summoning major U.S. refinery executives to explain why they're not producing more gasoline amid indications that those who don't give the right answers might get less crude oil to work with.

In testimony Friday to a House subcommitee, Assistant Energy Secretary Alvin L. Alm said the administration is considering an order that would "allocate crude away from firms that are not using their refineries to full capacity."

Alm said the president has this power under an existing emergency fuel-allocation law.

Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger said he will "offer invitations" to the nation's seven largest refiners to explain why they aren't using growing crude oil inventories to make more gasoline.

Oil companies lose crude oil unless they can justify why they aren't producing more gasoline and heating oil, Alm told the House Commerce subcommittee on energy and power.

Charles DiBona, president of the industry lobbying group, the American Petroleum Institute, claimed oil companies "are running through their refineries all of the crude oil that they can safely run."

But Alm said that though crude oil imports increased last week by 800,000 barrels, the amount of oil refined dropped from 14.6 million barrels to 14.4 million barrels a day.

Alm said there's no apparent reason why more gasoline can't be refined and that, while supplies will remain tight this summer, he doesn't expect long lines in many places. He also predicted soaring heating oil prices next winter — possibly going as high a 80 or 90 cents a gallon in the Northeast.

In other energy developments:

—The full House approved a Republican-sponsored resolution asking the administration to document that gasoline shortages are real and not contrived. The vote was 340-4.

—Schlesinger announced administration support for a bill to provide up to $2 billion in subsidies for coal oil and other synthetic fuels.

—The Interstate Commerce Commission sanctioned a 5.6 percent surcharge to help independent truckers cope with the rising cost of diesel fuel. The agency said it hoped the move would spur striking drivers to return to the road.

—A coalition of industry, labor and academic leaders asked for creation of a White House mobilization board to tackle the energy problem. The group asserted that existing U.S. energy policy is plagued by "confusion and chaos."

—The Internal Revenue Service issued temporary regulations exempting gasohol — a gasoline substitute that combines petroleum and alcohol — from some excise taxes.

—The Energy Department voiced continued support for the country's first coal gasification plant in North Dakota, despite a federal judge's objection to the project on grounds the utility's customers should not have to foot the bill.

May Ask For Congressional Probe

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C. says he's not surprised to hear allegations of Army recruiting malpractice, and he says he might call for a congressional probe of those allegations.

The Army is currently conducting its own investigation of allegations that recruiters coached enlistees to help them pass tests. Morgan, in a telephone interview with the Charlotte News, said he will ask for a congressional hearing if he's not satisfied with the results of the Army's investigation.

"I think the threat of having a hearing, where they'd have to account for everything in public, would have a salutary effect on them," said Morgan, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Homosexual Question Faces Church Court

By DAVID E. ANDERSON
UPI Religion Writer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Judicial Council of Unitec Methodist Church, the denomination's "supreme court," has been asked to decide whether an admitted homosexual is eligible for an appointment to serve a church.

The petition, filed by the New York Annual Conference of the 10-million member denomination, is the latest step in the controversy over the re-appointment of the Rev. Paul Abels to Washington Square United Methodist Church in New York City's Greenwich Village area.

The New York Conference reappointed Abels last year over the objections of Bishop W. Ralph Ward.

Both supporters and opponents of Abels believe the decision to ask the Judicial Council for a definitive ruling has much wider ramifications.

Like a number of other mainline Protestant denominations, the United Methodist Church has been embroiled in the homosexual issue for several years. The issue is expected to be before the church's General Conference (convention) in 1980.

Consumers Will Pay

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Consumers have been spared repair and cleanup costs stemming from the Three Mile Island nuclear accident, but they will have to pick up most of the tab for replacement power.

The Public Utility Commission, after a month of hearings, ruled Friday that Metropolitan Edison Co. and Pennsylvania Electric Co., part owners of the crippled plant, can charge customers for 85 percent of the replacement power costs the companies estimate they will incur in the next 18 months.

Delay On New Nuclear Units

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Carolina Power & Light Co. announced Friday it would delay the completion dates for two units of its Shearon Harris nuclear plant in Wake County.

The company cited lower-than-predicted growth in demand for electricity as the reason for the delay.

The company will also delay one of its coal-fired Mayo units in Person County.

To Discharge Airman Addicted To Reading

By JIM BOARDMAN
Associated Press Writer

MOUNTAIN HOME, Idaho (AP) — The Air Force has begun proceedings to discharge Steve Ristau, the Airman who said he would face court martial before he stopped reading his Bible while on sentry duty.

"I don't have any choice," Ristau said Friday when asked if he would accept the discharge. "I'd like to file suit. ... I want to stand up for the Bible. I really didn't want a discharge, but if they're forcing me out there's not much I can do about it."

Ristau, 20, of San Mateo, Calif., said he expects to be discharged Monday or Tuesday.

"If he accepts an honorable discharge it would look like all he wanted to do was get out of the Air Force," said his wife, Becky. "It's not what he wants, but that's what people will think."

Two weeks ago, Ristau refused an order by Maj. Mel Grover to stop carrying and reading his Bible while on sentry duty at the southwestern Idaho post.

"I can't do that. It's against my faith," said Ristau, a Southern Baptist. He refused lesser punishment and demanded a court martial.

The military court, which had been scheduled to hear his case Monday, could have sentenced him to six months at hard labor and confinement in the stockade for that period.

Ristau said his attorney, Capt. Lynn Jordan, was recommending that he fight the discharge and file a civil suit against the Air Force.

"I don't know if that would be right," he said. "It's really hard for me to know what to do. I'm going to make a lot of people mad. They just want me out and they want me to be quiet."

As a born-again Christian, Ristau said he doesn't want to be viewed as a rebel. "That's not the basis of Christianity."

But, he said, "I'd like to have a chance to tell my side in court with a judge and jury instead of being kicked out. I don't think it's too fair that I didn't get to present my case. They want me out quick."

Air Force spokeswoman Lt. Lynn Dakin said Friday that Col. William Wilson, commander at Mountain Home Air Force Base, recommended the discharge.

The Air Force had said Thursday it would give Ristau an honorable discharge reserved for those who can't adapt to military life. Later, officials said his rank — senior airman — is a step too high for him to be eligible for that kind of discharge.

The only other form of honorable discharge he could be given is reserved for "misconduct or defective attitude," Mrs. Dakin said. "If they were to discharge him now it would be a real messy one."

She said the final decision on Wilson's recommendation will be made by Lt. Gen. James V. Harginer, commander of the 12th Air Force at Bergstrom Air Force Base near Austin, Texas.

Ristau said his attorney told him the documents for the discharge had been flown to Bergstrom by jet Friday afternoon.

Watchtower Marks 100th Anniversary

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — The Watchtower, the magazine Jehovah's Witnesses hand out after a knock at the door, is marking its 100th anniversary.

The magazine sprang from tiny origins on Pittsburgh's North Side to a circulaton of 9.2 million copies worldwide.

"I'm almost as old as the magazine," said Noble M. Williams, 80, who was handing out the magazine for a dime on a Pittsburgh street corner Saturday.

"I've been reading it for 44 years. After I read my first issue, I couldn't miss the second," Williams said.

Williams, of Holly Springs, Miss., and 6,000 other Witnesses were to gather Sunday at Pittsburgh's Civic Arena for a golden anniversary celebration. F.W. Franz, society president, was to be the keynote speaker.

Charles T. Russell started the semi-monthly publication July 1879 with an initial circulation of 6,000 issues. Now the periodical is translated into 82 languages.

The magazine interprets Bible passages and is distributed door-to-door by Witnesses who talk about their faith and sell the magazine. Most Witnesses spend at least 10 hours a month working the neighborhoods.

Since 1914, Witnesses have pointed to Bible passages as evidence the world is in its "last days" and God's kingdom is forthcoming.

Writer Awarded Damages

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Superior Court jury has awarded $185,000 to a little-known writer who claimed that actor Warren Beatty and screenwriter Robert Towne stole her ideas to create the Oscar-winning 1975 movie "Shampoo."

The 9-3 decision Friday upheld accusations by Bernice Mann of West Los Angeles that Beatty and Towne plagiarized a script she wrote called "Women Plus." Columbia Pictures also was named in the suit.

Beatty starred in the film and collaborated with Towne on the script. Actress Lee Grant won an Oscar as best supporting actress in the movie, which also starred Goldie Hawn.

Mrs. Mann, a manicurist who quit her job after developing Parkinson's Disease, based "Women Plus" on her experiences in beauty salons. She submitted the work to Columbia, but says it was never returned.

Her attorney, Lee Landrum, noted similarities between the main character in "Shampoo" and the central male figure in "Women Plus." Other characters also were very similar, he added.

Beatty and Towne denied at the trial that they were guilty of plagiarism.

Joel Lawler, the attorney for Towne and Beatty, unsuccessfully argued that the two scripts contained only general similarities and that Mrs. Mann's ideas were not unique.

Extensive Oil Spill Along North Carolina Coast

POLLUTED SHORES — Tar like pellets of oil darkened the beaches in scattered concentrations from Cape Hatteras to Duck along North Carolina's Outer Banks Friday. At Hatteras Lighthouse where the oil was heaviest, workers used brooms to sweep up the globules before they were loaded in plastic bags for disposal. (AP Laserphoto)

CAPE HATTERAS, N.C. (UPI) — Most of a section of Cape Hatteras beach closed by an oil spill of unknown origin was reopened late Saturday afternoon after being closed during cleanup efforts.

A four-mile section from the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse north to the town of Avon was reopened by the National Park Service after crews completed work, leaving only one mile of beach still closed, officials said.

Work crews also cleaned up a section of beach about 3.5 miles north of Oregon Inlet, 25 miles north, which had been contaminated by the spill first reported on Thursday.

Meanwhile, Lt. Cmdr. Al Melis, a Coast Guard spokesman, said the spill was more extensive than originally estimated and an overflight revealed traces of oil as far north as Duck, a Dare County town more than 50 miles north of Cape Hatteras.

"Not all of the area between Duck and the light is contaminated. We've got areas of clean beach as well as areas of contamination," he said. "It poses no threat to fish or birds.

"What this oil is is a nuisance," he said.

Melis said the cleanup would probably take longer than originally estimated.

"We just have more on the beach than we thought. Yesterday we were looking at three or four days (for cleanup), but now it will probably be something more than that."

The cause of the spill, first reported late Thursday, remained undetermined, but Melis said the oil appeared to have come from a tank-cleaning operation on a commercial tanker.

"When a tanker is going to use its tanks to carry a different grade of oil, wash out the old grade with a high-velocity stream of water that breaks the oil into small particles," he said.

"It's usually pumped into another tank, but occasionally through error or deliberately, it is pumped over the side."

Melis said federal law prohibits overboard discharge of oil withi the 200-mile limit and sets a $10,000 fine for violations.

He could not describe the type of oil in the spill, beyond saying it was a heavy grade oil, or estimate the amount.

"The gallonage is not very much when you look at the problem it creates. Instead of coming up on the beach and being two or three inches thick, it's in a very thin layer," he said.

"It's very uncomfortable if you step in it or get it on your clothes."

Robey Morgan Top Hollerer

By CRAIG WEBB

SPIVEY'S CORNER, N.C. (UPI) — A 64-year-old man who learned to holler as a boy outscreeched, outyelped and outyelled seven other men Saturday to capture the rain-drenched National Hollerin' Contest.

Robey Morgan of Wendell combined a series of whoops and cries done to the tune of the hymn "Showers of Blessings" to win the 11th annual event, as heavy rains cut down the traditional crowd of 10,000 to several hundred.

Charles Wood, the self-proclaimed mayor of the fictional town of Lizard Lick, finished second, while Danny Jackson of the host hamlet of Spivey's Corner was third.

Morgan said he grew up hollering in his hometown of Zebulon.

"We boys used to holler across town from one to another and we'd all have a particular holler," he said.

A former used car dealer, he is the first non-farmer to win the contest, which was started to preserve hollering, a communications form used primarily by farmers to call in cattle or summon help from neighbors in the days before telephones.

Wood's second-place "rain-dance holler" was appropriate for the nationally-publicized contest in the eastern North Carolina town of Spivey's Corner, which bills itself as the "Hollerin' Capital of the World."

Nell Cambareri, a 25-year-old New Jersey native now living in Greensboro, won the whistling contest for a rendition of tunes including the Mexican Hat Dance and the "12th Street Rag." Earl Matthews, 8, of Salemburg, was a picture of puffed-cheek concentration as he won the fox horn-blowing event.

A strong rain drenched the site of the day-long festivities on a high school football field, reducing the number of contestants and spectators, and forcing the cancellation of some events.

But a battery of television cameras and photographers was on hand to record the event.

Contest organizer Ermon Godwin Jr. reported 1,400 listeners had passed through the gates to the contest, but the crowd dwindled as the rain continued to fall throughout the day.

Godwin said it was the first time rain had marred the activities.

"The way we look at it, the Lord has blessed us for 10 years with a nice day," he said. "We're in the farm belt, and farmers know they are going to have a bad crop. We're just going to have to make the best of it."

Inflation Hits Prison Inmates

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Prison inmates say that like everyone else they're feeling the effects of inflation.

Central Prison inmate Eugene Safrit has filed a grievance with the Inmate Grievance Commission asking that prison policy be changed to allow inmates to possess $25 and withdraw $25 weekly from the Inmate Trust Fund. They are now allowed to possess no more than $15 and can withdraw only $15 weekly from the trust fund. The fund keeps for the inmates money sent by their families or money they earn from the inmate incentive program which allows them to earn up to $1 a day on jobs in prison or on road gangs.

Safrit filed his grievance, which was signed by 335 other inmates, after his request for an increase in his allowance was denied by a Correction Department officer following a hearing.

Safrit said that by time an inmate buys his soap, toothpaste, shaving cream and razor blades in the canteen, there is little left to buy the meager luxuries the canteen offers — cigarettes, gum sandwiches, candy and the like.

Fred Morrison Jr., executive director of the Inmate Grievance Commission, said Warden Sam Garrison is studying the matter and has indicated he would not object to some increase in the allowance. However, Morrison said Deputy Prison Director W.L. Kautzky has said he doubts if the allowance will be increased anytime soon.

Morrison said he has asked Safrit to have half a dozen inmates keep an account of their canteen expenditures for a week and give him a written report. He said he also is investigating how much money prison systems in other states allow inmates to possess.

Morrison said he would present this information to the commission at a meeting July 6 and possibly will recommend that the commission urge the Correction Department to approve some increase for inmates throughout the state prison system. He pointed out that the money involved belongs to the inmates.

Justice Department Studying Exemption

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A U.S. attorney says a law exempting private and church-school students from taking the state's competency test is under scrutiny by the Justice Department.

H. M. "Mickey" Michaux said Saturday that's he has forwarded a copy of the law passed by the General Assembly this year to the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division. He said he sent a copy of the measure after Justice Department officials requested it.

Michaux said he thinks the law should be challenged on constitutional grounds because it exempts only private and church-school pupils from the test. He said the law is being applied unequally.

Michaux made the remarks at a meeting of the North Carolina Black Leadership Caucus Saturday at St. Augustine's College in Raleigh.

Deal Broken Off

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — Southern Railway and Prudential Insurance Co. have broken off a deal to finance and build a $50 million hotel and office tower in downtown Charlotte.

But officials of the railroad, which owns the strategically located property near the Raddison Plaza and the Civic Center, say they hope to find a new developer within a matter of days.

Several local and out-of-town developers have made Southern offers for the property, located across 4th Street from the Civic Center.

The complex is to have a 400 to 500-room hotel linked to the Civic Center by a covered walkway over 4th Street, one or more office towers, retail shops and parking facilities.

"Negotiations are pretty well advanced with other developers," said Southern spokesman Charltes Morgret Friday. "In the absence of snags, it's anticipated we can announce a new agreement, probably within a matter of days and certainly no more than a few weeks."

Dairy Farmers Say Price Raise Not Sufficient

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — An upcoming increase in the price processors pay dairy farmers for milk will not be enough to offset constantly rising costs of such things as feed, fuel, machinery and veterinary service, dairy farmers say.

A change in the milk pricing formula approved by the N.C. Milk Commission last week gave the farmers an increase of 1.7 cents per gallon.

But dairy farmers in several counties say the rise is not enough to enable them to beat inflation.

"This is a vicious circle we're working in," said C. Lewis Clemmer, a Guilford County dairy farmer. "They raise the prices so little that any increase in grain prices gobbles up what little you get."

Other farmers expressed similar sentiments.

Meanwhile, Geoffrey Benson, extension economist at North Carolina State University, said increases farmers received for raw milk in the first quarter of 1979 are not the chief cause of skyrocketing milk prices in grocery stores.

"Retail prices in the last six months have gone up by a much greater amount than farm price increases would justify," Benson said.

He said the amount processors pay farmers for raw milk averages about $1.20 per gallon, but by the time milk reaches the grocer's shelves, it averages $1.95 per gallon.

Changes in the prices processors pay farmers are governed by a formula index. When the index rises 2.96 percent, the price to farmers rises 20 cents per 100 pounds (1.7 cents per gallon).

Although farmers feel 20 cents per hundred is not enough to beat inflation, they would not be getting that much if the milk commission had not authorized a 5-cent per hundred pound increase at its meeting Tuesday. Under the old formula, farmers were paid only one and one-third cents per gallon more for every 2.96 percent rise in the index, Benson pointed out.

He said the additional increase will enable farmers to recover 52 percent of cost increases due to inflation. The old formula enabled the farmer to recover only 40 percent of the increase.

"But he is still having to absorb about half of the inflation rate," Benson stated.

Grain and fuel costs are daairy farmers' largest expenses, said Mac Ivey, a Guilford County dairy farmer. "Fifty percent of my gross income goes for feed," Ivey said. "Fuel has increased tremendously in price. It is definitely a big factor because haulers' (companies that haul milk from farm to processor) costs have increased because of the cost of diesel fuel," he said.

Haulers just received a 5-cent per hundred pound increase, Clemmer said. Because dairy farmers pay the cost of transporting milk to the processor, that increase is just enough to wipe out the added increase the Milk Commission allowed farmers.

Rare Chance To View Cicadas

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (UPI) — North Carolina this summer is getting a rare look at cicadas, an insect often mistaken for a locust and one that comes above ground only every 17 years.

After three weeks above ground, the cicadas, often referred to as the Rip Van Winkles of the insect world, are beginning to die, but their offspring are hatching and will fall from tree branches to dig into the ground and repeat the cycle.

Jo Ann White, an associate zoology professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, said the cicadas won't emerge again until 1996.

For 10 years, she has been studying the black, red-eyed insects in an effort to discover why they spend so long underground and what brings millions of them out almost simultaneously.

Cicadas have the longest lifespan in the insect world, but she said they are not the same insect as the locust which has plagued the world since biblical times.

The 17 years the cicada spends underground may be a survival strategy, Ms. White said. Birds and other animals like their taste, but by emerging in hordes too large to eat and at intervals longer than most birds' life spans, they may be outwitting their predators.

The reason for the simultaneous emergence of millions of the insects is unknown, but a few come out a year off schedule, she said.

"It could be that cicadas count something, maybe winters, to know when to emerge. If we had a cold spring one year and the leaves fell off the trees, a hormone change in the tree might fool the cicadas into thinking an extra year had gone by, and they would come out early."

During their years underground, cicadas shed their skins four times while underground, she said. The process, known as molting, occurs once more as they emerge and then seek a mate.

Within weeks, they die, but only after the females lay eggs in tree branches.

Despite their numbers and appearance, Ms. White said cicadas eat very little and the only harm done to trees occurs when females lay too many eggs in the branches.

While underground, "young cicadas suck on tree roots for xylem, which is 99 percent water, but amazingly they don't harm the trees," she said.

Goddess For N.C. Museum

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The newest addition to the N.C. Museum of Art will be a 2,000-year-old bronze statue of the Greek goddess Athena.

The announcement of the purchase was made Friday by the museum's art commission. The price was not disclosed.

Museum Director Moussa M. Domit called the 7¾-inch, armless statute "the finest Hellenistic bronze that we know of in the country."

The statue, believed to have been sculpted between 300 and 100 B.C., was offered by a New York City dealer. Museum officials declined to identify the dealer and the purchase price. The price will be paid from funds contributed by the N.C. Art Society, the private organization that founded the museum.

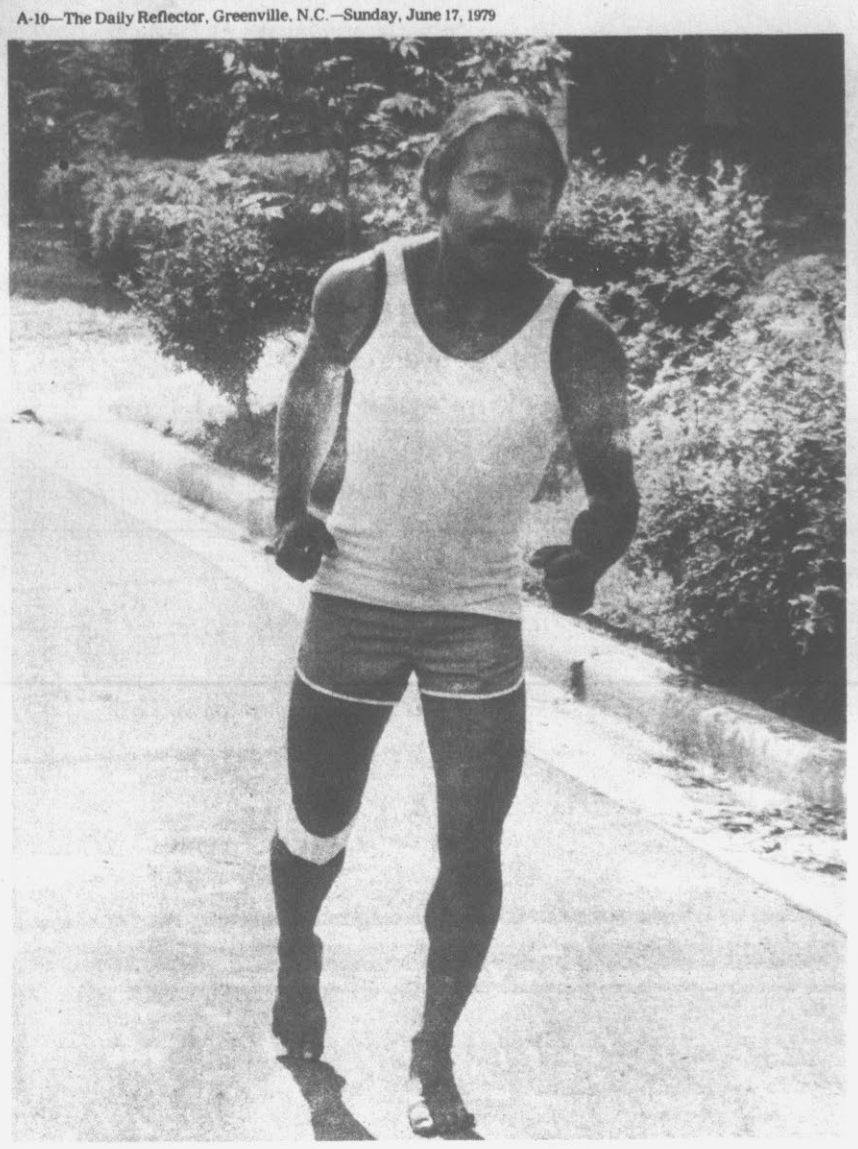
PUBLIC NOTICE

The Planning Department of the City of Greenville is in the process of gathering information for a revised land use survey and analysis of the city and its extraterritorial area.

During the second week of June, 1979 between the hours of 4-7 P.M., employees of the Planning Department will be conducting a door to door survey, asking citizens questions pertaining to various planning concerns. Questions will be brief requiring only a few minutes of your time.

The information you provide will be helpful and your cooperation will be greatly appreciated.



A CURRENT FAVORITE . . . in recreational activities that effectively doubles as a good health practice is jogging. Men and women of all ages, as well as teen-agers, jogging along the streets of Greenville are a familiar sight. The jogger here is Jack P. Oxendine, Jr., a Lumbee Indian living in Greenville.

Text And Photographs

By Jerry Raynor

President Carter, Governor Hunt, and Mayor Cox have all told us, officially, that June is Recreation Month.

Much as we appreciate being informed by our leaders that June is the ideal month for recreation, this is a fact that any boy or girl, out of school for summer, school can testify to without the prompting of a proclamation.

For each of us, recreation can mean many different things. It can be organized sports provided by the Recreation and Parks Department — softball, baseball in competitive leagues for all ages, tennis, swimming, or exercise classes to lose ungainly fat.

For others, it means group participation in crafts, card games, nature walks, day camps.

Recreation can be an individual affair, something we like to do in our spare time, an activity that can require very little or an extensive outlay in equipment dependent on the activity. In this category are things like going fishing, jogging, taking walks, rocking in a chair and dreaming, nuturing flowers in the back yard, or discovering where birds are nesting.

With children, the urge to be active, to play until exhaustion sets in, is a natural instinct. And for the young ones, there's so much to choose from — swinging, playing in the dirt making mud pies or sand castles, chasing butterflies or playing hop scotch, the first clumsy attempts at playing ball, riding bicycles, skating, hide-and-seek, there's so much to choose from.

A few of the hundreds of ways in which recreation forms part of our daily lives are shown in the photographs on this page.

Our leaders are right — recreation is a word with special meaning in June, the first month of the warm summer season.

A TURN AT THE SWINGS . . . Swinging is another favorite forms of recreational play. Whether its an old tire tied to a rope over a tree limb, a home-made wooden seat with chains, or a contemporary brightly painted affair with plastic seats, the joy of swinging is the same. The two young ladies getting ready to sail away are sisters Eva Collins, 4 (left) and Naomi Collins, 3.

INNOVATIVE APPROACH . . . When standard equipment is not available, that doesn't pose a problem for innovative children. Here, nine-year old Curtis Lee Glover (left) explains to Dwain Williams, 8, how ball can be played with a piece of broomstick and a crumpled can. The two were waiting for the city pool to open and batted the can to pass the time away.

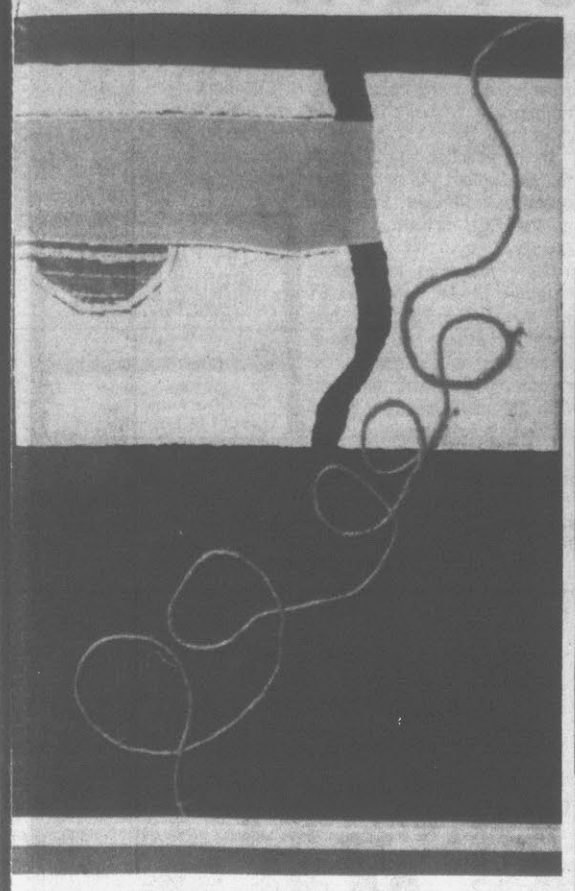
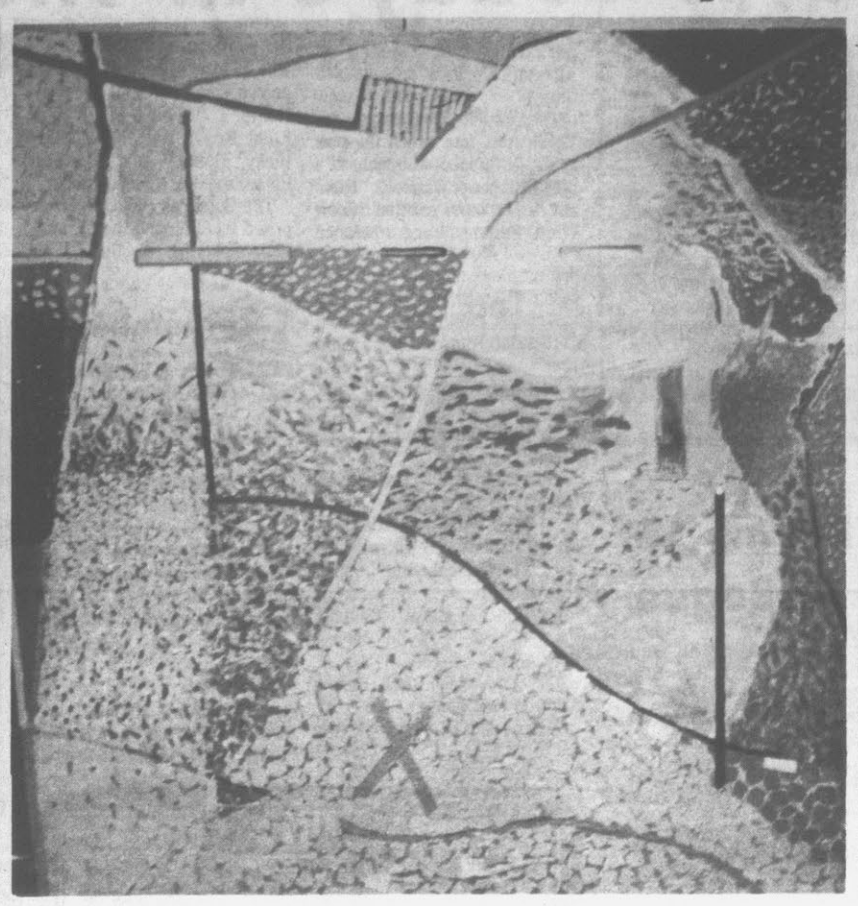
THE APPEAL OF SAND . . . For the very young, a sandbox shared with friends is an ideal form of recreation. These youngsters, mostly two and three-year olds, were photographed at Elm Street Park. Their mothers sat on benches nearby, ready to respond to any youthful crisis that could arise.

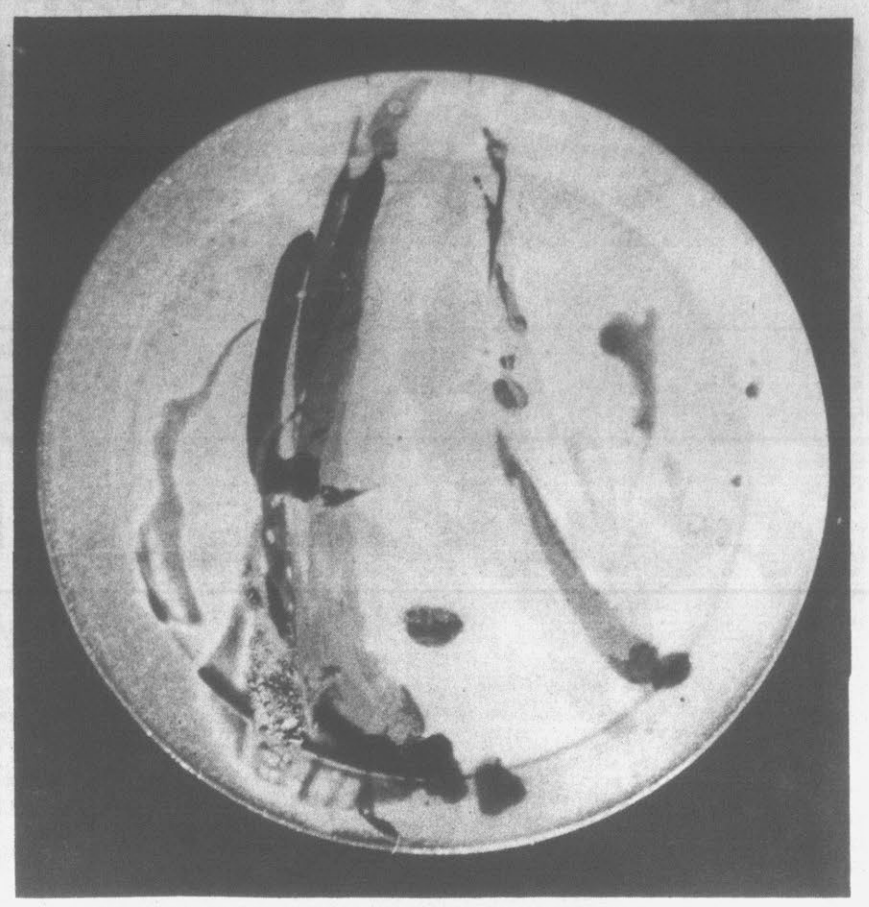
Young Artists In Exhibits At Gray Gallery And Art Center



PAINTING BY MARY A. WALKER



FANTASY LANDSCAPE BY TONY EDER



DECORATED PLATE, MADE BY PATRICIA KNIGHT

Four artists — Anthony T. Eder and Patricia Prins Knight at the Gray Gallery; and Ralph Steeds and Mary Anne P. Walker at the Greenville Art Center, are exhibiting art that offer representative insights into the work of young contemporary artists.

The four have in common a clean, precise style devoid of the more loosely defined areas and patterns that often has characterized much recent art in the mainstream of abstract painting. The basic techniques of abstraction are still present in all the work, except that of Steeds, but their personal use of these techniques shows a greater concern for control.

This is true even in the paintings by Eder. A fine colorist, his paintings have the lyrical infusion of impressionistic work that has been fragmented, redirected into abstractions that are as crystal clear as the color of flowers shining against air cleansed by a summer rain. Other Eder paintings rely on large areas of solid colors, often a deep blue, incorporating edgings of contrasting colors. These are evocative of serene seascapes.

Ms. Knight's pottery offers an excellent example of the pleasing effects that free (yet controlled) areas of organic designs can give on a solid field of clay. Her large, practical plates in basic earth colors, also in deep blues and grays, reveal the natural beauty that can be achieved in free flow decorative designs that poetically highlight, but never dominate the surface of her pieces.

She also shows pots, pitchers and other pieces with designs in a more conventional mode. Here too, her touch is light, free, sure.

The two artists whose work is exhibited at the Art Center are both faculty members of Pembroke State University.

Most of the drawings by Steed incorporate meticulously drawn details which opens up a multitude of contrasting areas of black, white and gray within a single subject matter. These are beautifully drawn, and derive their strength from an obvious insightful knowledge and love of nature in it manifestations of shapes, moods, light.

His attention to densely packed details paradoxically evokes a fantasy world at the same time it projects a clearly delineated study of nature.

Of the four, Mary Walker achieves the boldest impact with a minimum of details. Her works (such as the one illustrated on this page), are direct, simplified arrangements of shapes and areas that rely on a sure manipulation of color and placement of her materials. A string glued across the painting's surface, the positioning of a plain unadorned area of paper, its torn edge encircling a second area of intricately drawn details, result in works that are arresting and effective.

Also at the Gray Gallery, there's a current showing of paintings, prints and drawings by graduate students of Indiana University. This fine collection with works in color and in black and white, further exemplifies the trend to a more disciplined control of subject matter by today's younger artists.

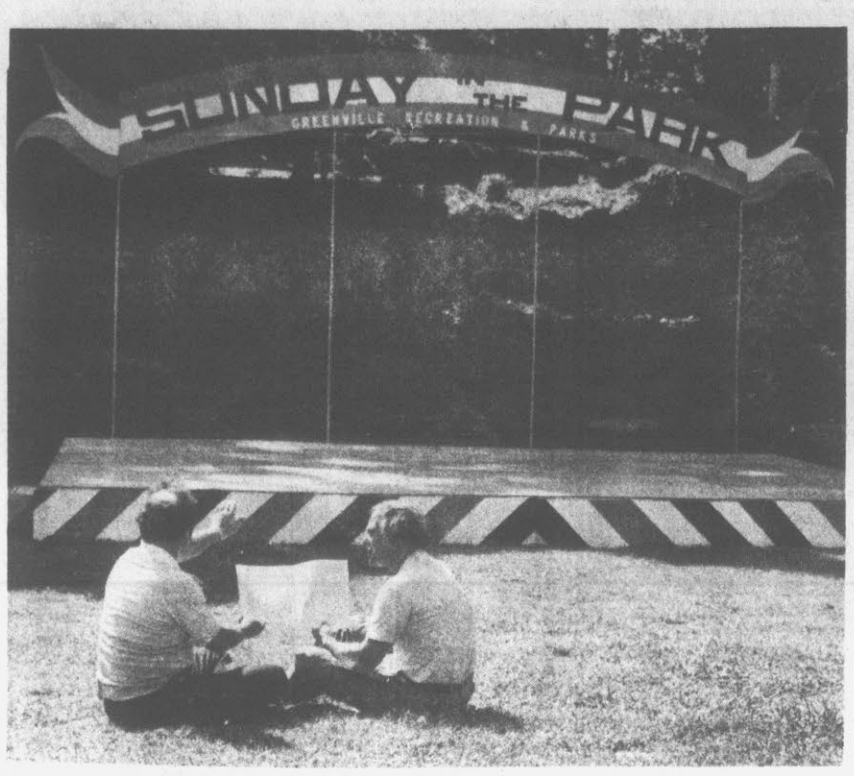
'The Wind Machine' Is Today's In The Park Fare



FRIDAY PLANS . . . On Friday, conductor Barry Shank (left) discussed the placement of his musicians with Sunday in the Park coordinator Stuart Aaronson, at the band stand site between East Third and East Fourth Streets. Today's concert by the "Sunday in the Park Wind Machine" conducted by Shank begins at 7 p.m. It is free and the public is invited.

Barry Shank and his "Sunday in the Park Wind Machine" is the contingent of music making entertainers to be on hand at 7 p.m. today for the second of 1979's Sunday in the Park series.

The "Wind Machine" concert will be held at the usual place — the grassy slope east of Reade and between East Third and Fourth Streets. In the event of (predicted) rain, the concert will be held at 7 p.m. Monday, June 18, at the same site.

Today's opening will call attention to America's Proud Heritage, with Jim Rees of the ECU Dept. of Drama and Speech narrating the "Pledge of Allegiance," in a musical setting.

The varied program of the Three Acts into which the program is divided will include a performance of Wagner's "Rienzi," a potpourri entitled "Snow White Fantasy," and a Stephen Collins Foster Fantasy which will include several of his well-known songs — "Old Folks At Home," "Jeannie With The Light Brown Hair," "Old Kentucky Home," and a lesser known melody, "Glendy Burk."

The Oom Pah Band, one composed from among the 25 musicians playing in the "Wind Machine," and funded by the City of Greenville for public appearances, will play two numbers — "Joyce's 71st" and "Get in on."

In the selection "Jazz Suite," featured soloist will be alto saxophonist Jim Forger, a member of the ECU School of Music faculty.

Other selections for today's "Sunday in the Park' concert will include "On The Mall," and there will also be two groups of three songs to be presented as "Name That Tune" medleys, with the public having to guess at what's being played.

The Sunday in the Park series is funded by the City of Greenville, is under the auspices of the Recreation and Parks Department, and is coordinated by Stuart Aaronson.

Listeners are reminded to bring along items such as pillows, blankets, chairs, etc. to make for more ease while sitting on the green slope of grass.

Anglican Church Roots Reach Far Back In Eastern Carolina

ECU News Bureau

Roots of the Anglican Communion in Eastern North Carolina reach back to the age of absolutism in Europe and actually to the revocation of the Edict of Nantes by the great French King Louis XIV, says an East Carolina University professor.

The tracing is to an ancestor of ECU professor Keats Sparrow, the Rev. John LaPierre, 1675-1755. A child of Huguenot parents, LaPierre fled France with 400,000 other French Protestants after Louis XIV ended nearly 90 years of religious toleration in 1685.

Sparrow recently completed a study of the letters of LaPierre, several of which are preserved in the North Carolina Letter Book of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (SPG) in Foreign Parts.

"They provide a vivid picture of the hardships of Carolina colonial life and of the difficulties the early clergy encountered in carrying out their duties," said Sparrow.

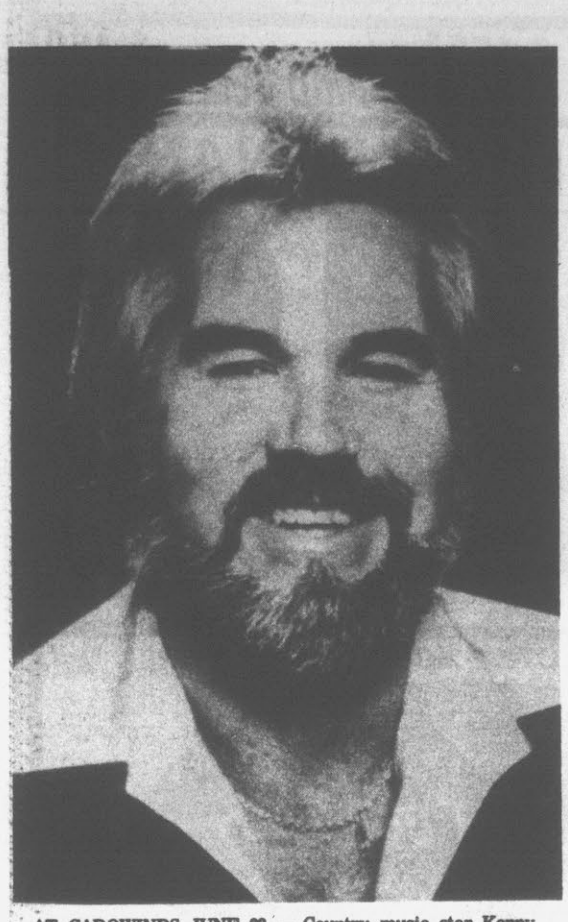
LaPierre's connection in the Carolinas came about after his ordination into the Anglican ministry by the Bishop of London in 1708, following which he came to America as a missionary for the SPG.

From 1708 to 1728, LaPierre served as Rector of St. Denis's Parish in South Carolina and in 1712-1713 and again in 1728 of the French Protestant Church in Charleston. In 1728, he moved to the Cape Fear section of North Carolina and officiated at St. Philip's Church in Brunswick (Brunswicktown) where he oversaw the building of the first chapel and at St. James's Church in Wilmington.

In 1735, LaPierre moved to New Bern and until his death acted as the first Rector of the Craven County Parish.

Since until 1746 Craven County Parish encompassed many of the counties that are near present Craven County, LaPierre regularly visited neighboring chapels as a circuit rider. He is thus believed to be the first Anglican minister to officiate in what are now Pamlico, Beaufort, Lenoir and Pitt counties.

Dr. Sparrow, an ECU professor of English, is a lineal descendant of the Rev. LaPierre. A report on Sparrow's studies of the life and letters of LaPierre was the featured address at the recent 1979 annual meeting of the North Carolina Huguenot Society in Chapel Hill.



AT CAROWINDS JUNE 23 — Country music star Kenny Rogers will be in concert at Carowinds in two shows, at 3 and again at 8 p.m. on Saturday, June 23. Tickets are $2 and are in addition to the regular $7.95 admission into Carowinds.

Inspires Praise

MILAN, Italy (AP) — A widely influential but controversial Swiss Roman Catholic theologian, the Rev. Hans Kung, has praised Pope John Paul II's first encyclical as proclaiming a "new Christian humanism."

In "the light of Christ," it "places at the center man, his dignity, his fundamental private and social rights," Kung said in an intervew.

New Interest Shown In Clydesdale Horses

By LANCE J. HERDEGEN

BANGOR, Wis. (UPI) — Dan Jones' family has been raising Clydesdales for almost as long as the huge horses have been in this country.

So, Jones says, watching television commercials featuring a smooth-stepping team of the draft horses that a beer made famous "can get a little frustrating at times."

"At shows, people always come up and ask about the 'Budweiser horses.' That's all we hear, 'Where are the Budweiser horses?' I tell them that's a Clydesdale and they say, 'Yeah, but where are the Budweiser horses?'"

He said interest in draft horses hit a low spot about 1950 when tractors had taken over nearly all plowing and pulling. It started to climb slowly after that and really took off the past five years.

"For years it was a hobby, now it is money and hobby," he said of the farm's current horse operations.

An interest in riding in general, especially dressage and cross country, has sparked part of the new interest in draft horses, he said.

"People like to breed their horses with Clydes because they get more style and movement," Jones said. "You cross a Clydesdale with a thoroughbred and you get a flashy show horse."

The Jones family has raised Clydesdales since before the turn of the century. The breed was first officially established in Scotland in 1878.

Grandfather Eben Jones, first of the family born in the United States, purchased a Clydesdale from an importer in 1893 shortly after settling in western Wisconsin. The Joneses, although mainly dairy farmers, have shown Clydesdales at the Wisconsin State Fair every year since 1913.

Last year, the farm — which keeps about a dozen animals for breeding and showing — competed and took home blue ribbons at the Wisconsin, Indiana and Ohio state fairs, Boone County Fair in Illinois, Dairy Cattle Congress show at Waterloo, Iowa, and Great Lakes Draft Horse Nationals at Detroit.

Jones said his father, Floyd, who died recently, should be given most of the credit for establishing the Jones Farm as one of the nation's top breeders of Clydesdales.

"My father did most of the showing. My grandfather never really showed much. Grandpa liked to sit in the barn and talk. My father did most of the breeding to get us where we are right now."

A dairy sciences graduate of the University of Wisconsin, Jones, 28, got his start in the show ring at age 6 at the Wisconsin State Fair.

"I was given an old mare that knew where to go and just went there," he said with a smile. "I didn't do anything — just hold onto the end of the rope."

Even though they consume a 40-pound bale of hay a day as well as large amounts of grain, he said, some people keep the gentle animals as pets.

Grant For Study Of NC Shrimp

ECU News Bureau

Community traditions, family influences, market conditions and other social factors which affect North Carolina's shrimp fishery are being studied by an East Carolina University sociologist.

Dr. John Maiolo of the ECU sociology faculty received a grant of $8,532 from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration-UNC Sea Grant program for his project, which began this month.

Purpose of the project is to provide information regarding the nature and types of social factors surrounding the shrimp industry for use by the state in shrimp fishery management.

More complete knowledge of the sociocultural context of shrimp fishery will better equip the state in the handling of unexpected natural and economic developments, Maiolo said.

HORSERACING — Famous events in British horseracing are depicted on a new quartet of stamps released on June 7 to mark the 200th running of the Derby. Scenes shown are from races in 1936, 1839, 1793, and 1684, on 9, 10 and one-half, 11 and 13 pence stamps respectively. Paintings from which designs for the stamps are taken are by Sir Alfred Munnings, F. C. Turner, J W Sartorius, and Francis Barlow. (Photo Courtesy the British Post Office.)

Aboriginal Art Show Opening Today

By MICHAEL MATROS

RALEIGH — "Art of the First Australians" opens today at the N. C. Museum of Art, with viewing hours between 2 and 6 p.m.

Like the American Indian, the Australian Aboriginal developed a complex culture over thousands of years, one based on a perfect unity between man and the environment. And also like the Indian, the Aboriginal's cultural traditions have been jeopardized by the relatively recent arrival of the white man on his continent.

"Art of the First Australians" provides a rare opportunity to examine the kind of art being produced on that long-isolated continent less and less since its colonization by the British, according to Museum Director Moussa Domit.

"We hope this exhibition stimulates an interest in this quite remarkable body of work," Domit said.

Art forms foreign to most western eyes dominate the exhibition, for Australian Aboriginals made their images in such unusual ways as painting on the ground and in the sand. Sand paintings, with an obviously short life span, have been imitated by today's Aboriginals with acrylic paints in earthen colors on canvas and board.

These works, whose artistic excellence is becoming widely recognized, can be seen in the show along with other, older works, such as paintings on dried slabs of bark, and artifacts — weapons and household items.

Most Aboriginal art is sacred, reflecting the mythology of the eternal Dreamtime, when great spirits gave form to the physical world and determined the natural way of things on earth. Many art works were methods of reaching those spirits, often in a ceremony, after which the art usually was destroyed, its purpose fulfilled.

The sand paintings are abstract, rich in religious symbol on several levels, with spots, curves, and lines of subtle color. Bark paintings, too, are based on religious traditions, but they are more likely to be representational, presenting stylized likenesses of men, serpents, fish, and Australian mammals such as the kangaroo and echidna.

Much of the ceremonial art of the exhibition is three-dimensional, as exemplified in a number of wooden mortuary poles and log coffins. There are also numerous ceremonial animals stylistically carved from wood and decorated with various designs.

Other items include domestic ones — string bags, woven baskets, several vessels, and the distinctive style in these pieces also carry over to weapons — clubs, spears, and boomerangs.

The exhibit, sponsored by the Australian Exhibit Organisation, is arranged by the Aboriginal Arts Board of the Australia Council of which Wandjuk Markia is chairman.

The show will be on view at the N.C. Musuem of Art through July 22. Museum hours are 10-5 Tuesdays-Saturdays, and 2-6 Sundays. There is no admission charged, and the public is encouraged to attend.

Hospitality House Today

"World Trade" is the theme of Kay Currie's "Hospitality House" over WITN-TV, Channel 7, today. The show will air for 45 minutes, from noon until 12:45 p.m.

Lee Lively, director of International Trade in North Carolina, will talk about the reduction of tariffs and of the trade agreement in Geneva.

Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham is another guest, and will talk about how recent rains have affected the state's largest export, the tobacco crop.

In the kitchen, roast chicken with orange glaze is featured in a winning North Carolina recipe. The cook is Angie Latham Crome, with the N. C. Dept. of Agriculture.

Mansion Closed

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Governor's Mansion will be closed for public tours during the summer. Public visitation will be resumed again in mid-September.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Ann Noble

"People who need poeple... are the luckiest people in the world." Some of Sheppard Library's newest additions are about fascinating people, including the writer of this hit song. Barbara Streisand's hit from Funny Girl was written by Jule Styne. For nearly 50 years he has been writing such popular tunes as "Three Coins in a Fountain", "Just In Time", "Let It Snow", "Let Me Entertain You", and "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend". Recently arrived at Sheppard Library is JULE: THE STORY OF COMPOSER JULE STYNE by Theodore Taylor, an interesting account of his musical career and his personal struggles.

People... such as Margaret Trudeau, are a public enigma. Her autobiography BEYOND REASON will perhaps dispel some of the myth and the mystery surrounding her. She reveals her experience of life at the top, as the youngest First Lady in the world, including the pressures of public life which led to her renouncing it.

Henry Kissinger is another person who has certainly been in the public eye. In TRAVELS WITH HENRY by Richard Valeriani, the prize-winning NBC television correspondent has written a "witty chronicle of life on the diplomatic road" with Kissinger. Valeriani followed the former Secretary of State around the world, gaining insights (and anecdotes!) about Kissinger's behavior and diplomatic ability.

A final people-pleaser: CONFESSIONS OF A MUCKRAKER by Jack Anderson with James Boyd. Anderson tells the story of two contrasting characters — his own and Drew Pearson's — their methods of attack, their defense against powerful interests, and their ability to open the doors that revealed the hidden side of life in Washington during the Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, and Johnson years.

Showing Abstract Films

RALEIGH — "New Work in Abstract Video," a series of experimental videotapes produced since 1973 by some of the field's most noted visual artists, music specialists and computer engineers, such as Aldo Tambellini, Peter Van Riper, Mary Lucier, Skip Sweeney, Ron Hays, and video pioneer Nam June Pak, will be shown at the N. C. Museum of Art periodically through July 29.

The showings will be at noon on Tuesdays and Saturdays, and on Sundays at 2 p.m. on the museum's first floor, beginning Tuesday, June 19. Admission is free.

Over A Million Saw Dresden Exhibition

SAN FRANCISCO — Over a million and a half people have seen "The Splendor of Dresden: Five Centuries of Art Collecting, An Exhibition from the German Democratic Republic," in its three-city tour of the United States over the past year.

The exhibition, made possible by a grant from IBM with additional funding from other endowments and trusts, completed its tour early in June in San Francisco with 554,516 visiting the California Palace of the Legion of Honor to view the show.

Earlier, it showed in Washington D. C., where nearly 600,000 visited the exhibition, and before coming to San Francisco, was at the Metropolitan Museum in New York where another 400,000 saw the exhibition.

The exhibition, from the collections of the Staatliche Kunstsammlunger Dresden (State Museum of Dresden) was organized jointly by the museums of the three American cities in which it was shown.

Open Courses: Green Monsters

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — To hear some pro golfers tell it, men in blue blazers and striped ties, like Shakespeare's witches, stand over cauldrons and concoct a brew that turns respectable golf courses into snarling monsters for the U.S. Open.

In 1951, Oakland Hills in Birmingham, Mich., was changed so drastically that it was not until the final day that a player was able to break par, one of them being Ben Hogan, who won with a score of 287. The other one was the late Clayton Heafner, who came in second.

At the presentation ceremonies, the normally reticent Hogan commented over the loud speaker: "I am glad I brought the beast to its knees."

Cary Middlecoff complained that the fairways were so narrow that golfers and spectators had to walk them single file, Indian fashion. Another pundit said when spectators applauded they had to clap their hands up and down, instead of sideways.

At Oakmont, Pa., where a 200-1 longshot named Sam Parks, Jr., won in 1935, the sand bunkers were furrowed with a heavy rake that made them look like stairways. Some of the greens — the double 18th being an example — were as big as polo fields. From some lies you could hardly see the flagstick.

Winged Foot in in Mamaroneck, N.Y., in 1975 was a golfers' nightmare. Most of the par fours called for No.2 and No.3 iron shots to postage stamp greens that were hard as marble tops and generally slanting away from the line of fire.

Holding such a green with a long iron was virtually impossible. The intracacies of the assignment destroyed the games of golf's finest players, Jack Nicklaus, Gary Player and Lee Trevino among them, and bespectacled Hale Irwin persevered to win the Open with a very unprofessional score of 287.

They dubbed Irwin "Merlin the Magician."

For years golfers on the pro tour have complained that the U.S. Golf Association, seeking to preserve scoring standards of Old Tom Morris and Harry Vardon, continually tricked up courses for the sacred and prestigious Open.

Thus, the golfers insisted, they were forced into the unhappy position of playing 20 to 45 tournaments — depending on the period — under one kind of conditions and the Open under another.

It was a different game.

The site of the Open always was announced a couple or three years in advance and sadistic USGA officials spent the intervening period fashioning fairways as narrow as gun barrels, growing rough as tenacious as barbed wire and turning putting surfaces into dinosauer graves.

Some greens were cut so low and made so lightning fast that putting was like nudging a ball down stone steps and trying to stop the ball on the fourth step.

The golfers for years have been crying to high heaven — and still are. The golf fathers steadfastly defend their handiwork.

Grumbling hasn't been as pronounced as usual here this week, where the 79th U.S. Open is being played over the

Irwin Not Impressed By 3-Shot Lead

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Hale Irwin was decidedly unimpressed with his three-stroke lead over on-rushing Tom Weikopf going into Sunday's final round of the 79th United States Open Golf Championship.

"It's still a coin-toss," the aggressively competitive Irwin said after he'd taken charge of the world's most prestigious event with a four-under-par 67 in Saturday's third round.

"You can't taken anything for granted, particularly in this game on this golf course."

Weiskopf, like Irwin one of golf's most respected performers but, again like Irwin, in something of a slump for the last year or so, agreed.

"What will happen, we won't know until the last putt is holed tomorrow," he said. "I'm just happy I have a chance to win it."

He got that chance with some exceptional putting that produced a four-under-par 67. Like Irwin's, his effort was keyed around an eagle-3.

"I haven't putted this well this year," Weiskopf continued. "I'm very close to playing the way I'm capable of playing."

But he, too, was taking nothing for granted.

"Hale is an exceptional player," Weiskopf said. "He's an Open type player."

Irwin will take a score of 209, four strokes under the elusive par on the tough old Inverness Club course into Sunday's showdown. Weiskopf has a 212 total, one under.

Those two — each the holder of one major title — provided the tournament's most dramatic moment.

It occurred on the 523-yard, par-5 13th.

Weiskopf played in the group immediately in front of Irwin. As he stood in the fairway, he trailed by four shots. He gracefully lashed a 2-iron some 8 feet from the flag and had that putt for an eagle. And he made it, cutting the lead to 2 shots while the stony-faced Irwin watched from the fairway.

But Irwin, winner of the 1974 American national championship, had a reply. The 34-year-old — who has a history of playing his best golf on the game's most demanding courses, also chose a 2-iron. He hit it some 18 inches from the hole and made that for an answering eagle-3.

Weiskopf managed to get one shot closer before the hot, muggy day was over, setting up Sunday's 18-hole showdown between a couple of the game's great players, each of whom has been in a slump.

Behind Weiskopf, it was two strokes back to Jerry Pate and Tom Purtzer, tied at 214. Purtzer, who shared the lead at the end of two rounds, slipped to a 75 while Pate closed up with a 69.

Joe And Phil's Dad Has Lot To Remember

By GARY MIHOCES
Associated Press Writer

LANSING, Ohio (AP) — He once threw his sons knuckle balls in the backyard. Now both are in the big leagues.

So this Father's Day finds 66-year-old Phil Niekro Sr. with a houseful of mementos and a headful of memories from the long baseball careers of his two pitching sons — Phil Jr. of the Atlanta Braves and Joe of the Houston Astros.

"I'm proud of them and happy they don't have to work for a living," the former coal miner said on the front porch of his frame home, where he lives with his wife, Ivy, in this small Ohio community.

"But a lot of times I wish they weren't pitchers, it's too hard on my nerves," added the smiling father, who hasn't attended any games for several years because of health problems that limit his traveling.

Phil Jr., age 40, was 8 when his father taught him the knuckler. Last May 1, he won his 200th career game by knuckle-balling the Braves to victory in Pittsburgh.

He traveled here the next day with a ball from that game. The inscription: "Dad, my 200th win, they are as much

Angry McEnroe Comes Back From Penalties

By GEOFFREY MILLER
AP Sports Writer

LONDON (AP) — John McEnroe, arguing with the umpire and shouting at the crowd, officially was penalized Saturday before defeating Vijay Amritraj of India in a stormy third-round match in the Stella Artois Tennis Tournament.

McEnroe won 7-6, 6-1 and moved into the quarterfinals of the $125,000 event along with six other Americans and Victor Pecci of Paraguay.

The row, which shattered the sedate atmosphere of the Queen's Club, erupted almost as soon as McEnroe went on court. The 20-year-old left-hander refused to start the match, saying he needed more practice serves.

The umpire ordered Amritraj to serve, but McEnroe still refused and threatened to walk off. Under the new conduct rules of the Grand Prix, the first point was awarded to Amritraj as a penalty.

McEnroe continued his antics and the umpire imposed a game penalty. But Frank Smith, the Grand Prix supervisor of the tournament, went on court and overruled the umpire. He ordered a penalty point to be imposed on McEnroe, to be deducted from his first service game.

So the match was restarted. Amritraj won the first two games. McEnroe gradually got his emotions under control and began playing well, but the turmoil was not over.

In the seventh game, as Amritraj served for a 5-2 lead, a man walked along the front of the grandstand and disturbed McEnroe's concentration.

McEnroe waited until the point was settled. Then he walked across the court and shouted at the spectator, "Are you in the human race? Jesus."

The next outburst came in the tiebreaker of the first set. McEnroe served a double fault. He walked to the umpire's chair and queried the call.

"You're the biggest cheat I ever saw in my life," McEnroe said. Then he won the next two points for the set.

Between these temper tantrums, McEnroe played excellent tennis. In the tiebreaker, he saved a set point with a deceptive second service. In the second set, he outmaneuvered Amritraj and raced away with the match.

McEnroe still was ruffled at a press conference afterward.

"I wanted a few more practise serves before starting," he said. "I had only had two. Nobody would throw the ball to me.

"There are some things that are unnecessary. One of them is whether we take five minutes or five minutes and 10 seconds to get ready. I don't think tennis needs that."

As for the disagreement with the umpire over the double fault, McEnroe commented, "I did say something to him, but I don't remember what. If you heard me say it, why ask me?"

Pecci, the 6-foot-4 Paraguayan with the big service, spoiled an American clean sweep in the third round by defeating Tim Wilkison 6-2, 6-1.

In the day's other matches, Dick Stockton downed Richard Lewis, the last remaining British contender, 7-6, 6-2; Sandy Mayer eliminated Brian Gottfried 7-6, 6-7, 6-3; Nick Saviano demolished Ferdi Taygan 6-0, 6-2; and Roscoe Tanner overcame Marty Riessen 7-6, 6-4.

Tanner unleashed 13 aces on the fast grass court.

With the tournament behind schedule because of the week's rain, officials planned to stage the quarterfinals and semifinals Sunday.

The quarterfinal line-up: Pecci vs. Bob Lutz, Stockton vs. Arthur Ashe, Saviano vs. Tanner, and Mayer vs. McEnroe.

The final, for a first prize of $17,000, has been rescheduled for Monday.

Sparky Is Beginning To Wonder As He Drops Third Tiger Start

By HARRY ATKINS

DETROIT (AP) — Sparky Anderson promised the Detroit Tigers they would have a lot of fun when he took over as manager, but all the laughter was in the California Angels' clubhouse Saturday and Anderson was 0-3 as an Americian League skipper.

"You know, I can't say I can win a game in the American League," Anderson said, only half jokingly, after the Angels defeated the Tigers 4-2. "Cripes, before long I'm going to be looking around."

Pinch hitter Joe Rudi singled off Detroit relief ace John Hiller to break a 2-2 tie in the eighth inning and Tom Donohue added another RBI single off Hiller.

Brian Downing, the Angels' designated hitter, drove in California's first two runs with a third-inning single after Anderson ordered an intentional walk to load the bases with two out.

"I like DH-ing," Downing said. "It's a lot easier to hit than when I'm catching. But I'll probably get benched when we get some of our guys back, we've got so much offense."

"We're reaching back," said second baseman Bobby Grich. "You can do that when you're winning. It's fun. You want to see how far you can go. All the guys are playing like a bunch of pros."

Willie Aikens singled with one out in the California eighth and went to second as Downing walked. Hiller relieved starter Jack Morris, 4-3, and Rudi, batting for Larry Harlow, singled on Hiller's first pitch to score Aikens.

After a wild pitch advanced the runners, Grich was intentionally walked to load the bases and Donohue singled to score Downing.

Dave Frost, 4-3, allowed five hits in 81-3 innings before Dave LaRoche got Jason Thompson to hit into a game-ending double play following a single by Steve Kemp. Thompson hit solo homers in the fourth and seventh innings for Detroit's runs. They were his seventh and eighth homers of the season.

The Angels took a 2-0 lead in the third after Dan Ford drew a two-out walk and Don Baylor doubled. Anderson ordered Aikens passed to load the bases but Brian Downing spoiled the strategy with a two-run single up the middle.

Downing, the Angels' designated hitter, extended his hitting streak to nine games. He has driven home 36 runs this season, 14 in the last 10 games.

Grich extended his hitting streak to 17 games, longest for the Angels this season, with an infield single in the sixth inning.

The victory was the first for Frost over the Tigers in three career starts.

California has won four of its five games against the Tigers this season and four in a row overall.

Besides Thompson's two homers and Kemp's ninth-inning single, the Tigers' only other hits were singles by Ron LeFlore and Alan Trammell. Trammell opened the eighth with a single but pinch-hitter Phil Mankowski grounded into a double play.

Morris allowed six hits and six walks in 71-3 innings. Following Donohue's RBI single off Hiller, Dave Tobik came on and prevented further scoring while leaving two runners stranded.

Martin Back?

NEW YORK (AP) — Controversial Billy Martin will return to manage the New York Yankees this week, according to a published report.

The New York Daily News said in its Sunday edition that Martin, who resigned last July after managing the Yankees to two pennants and a World Series, will take the helm when New York opens a seven-game homestand against Toronto Tuesday. Official announcement would come Monday, The News reported.

Martin would replace Bob Lemon, the man who replaced him as Yankee manager last season and led the team to a second consecutive World Championship. It was not known in what capacity Lemon, who was scheduled to become the team's general manager next year, would be retained.

Blalock's Hot Beginning Gives Her Five-Stroke Lead In LPGA

By MEL REISNER

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Jane Blalock birdied the first three holes Saturday and stormed to a five-stroke lead after three rounds of the $100,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament at Locust Hills Country Club.

Her 69 over the 6,206-yard, par-73 course matched her opening-round performance and gave her a 54-hole total of 208.

"When I get playing well, I usually am very steady," said Blalock, who recorded her third consecutive sub-par round. "I feel like I've played better today than I have previously, and I'm going to put on my skates tomorrow."

The closest challengers to Blalock, a 10-year tour veteran who ranks sixth in winnings this year, were Dot Germain at 213 and Vicki Fergon, Pat Meyers and Alice Ritzman, all at 214.

Sally Little and Jerilyn Britz stayed within striking distance at 215.

Pat Bradley, who has struggled with a fever all week, was a casualty of the 90-degree weather and the pressure of the third round. She began the day just one stroke behind Blalock after posting the best round of the tournament with a 67 on Friday, but she ballooned to 79 with seven bogeys and one double bogey and fell 11 strokes off the pace at 219.

The Sarah Coventry Tournament winds up Sunday.

Germain, Meyers and Ritzman shot 5-under-par 68s for the low rounds on a day when 16 players broke par.

Blalock made the turn in 32 strokes after her three opening birdies and another at No. 8, but suffered bogeys at the 10th and 11th holes.

"I didn't think it got to me (the first bogey), but I guess it must have because I hit my worst tee shot on the next hole," she said.

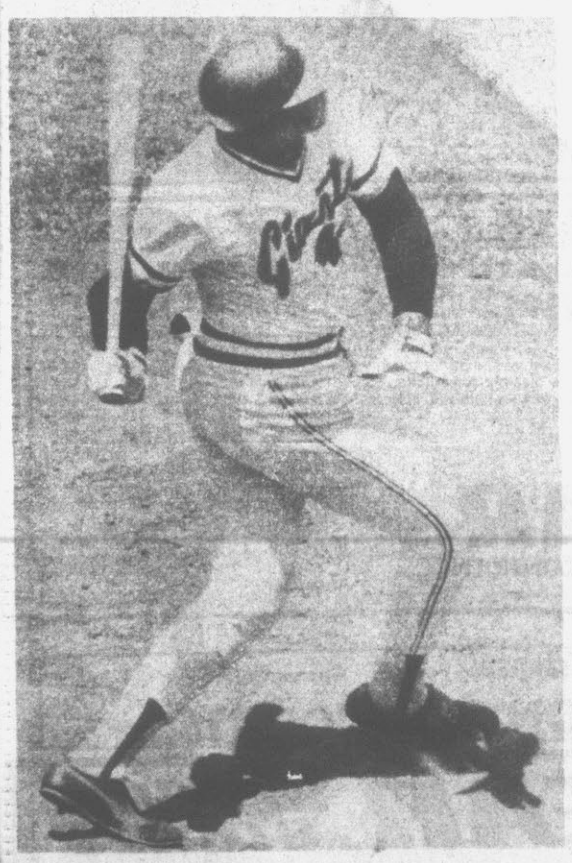
However, Blalock knocked in five pars and two birdies to end the round at even-par 37 on the tough back nine. Little, playing in a threesome with Blalock and Fergon, made an early run at the leader. But Blalock gained a stroke on the tough seventh hole, a 206-yard par-3.

Blalock saved par with a 10-foot putt after chipping from the fringe while Little two-putted following her chip shot from a sand trap.

When Blalock birdied No. 8 to Little's par, she had opened a six-shot lead on the field.

Germain rolled in eight birdies — four each on the front and back nines — in applying what little pressure was brought to bear on Blalock during the day. The score tied her personal record for lowest career round, but she said she didn't see the effort as a charge after Blalock.

"I wouldn't call it gambling," she said. "She's (Blalock) such a fine player I wasn't really thinking of catching her."



McCovey hits first of two homers.

McCovey's HRs Sparks Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Willie McCovey belted his fourth homer in three games Saturday, a 425-foot two-run shot that powered the San Francisco Giants to a 6-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The home run gave the 41-year-old slugger 11 for the season and 516 for his career, most by a left-handed hitter in National League history. All of McCovey's homers this season have come since May 16.

John Curtis, 2-3, blanked the Cardinals for six innings and finished with a five-hitter.

The Giants jumped on loser Silvio Martinez, 4-2, for a run in the first inning. Bill North led off with an infield hit, stole second, continued to third on catcher Steve Swisher's throwing error and scored on Rob Andrews' sacrifice fly.

McCovey's homer, following a two-out walk to Jack Clark, made it 3-0 in the third and the Giants scored single runs in the fourth, fifth and sixth.

Terry Whitfield's leadoff homer accounted for the fourth-inning run.

Clark's two-out double, a walk to McCovey and Darrell Evans' single produced a run in the fifth. The Giants scored an unearned run in the sixth following a pair of errors by shortstop Garry Templeton.

Borzov To Try Comeback

MOSCOW (AP) — What ever happened to Valery Borzov?

The Soviet news agency Tass on Saturday provided some details about the track star, who captured two gold medals at the 1972 Munich Olympics in the 100-and 200-meter dash.

Now Borzov says he might compete in the 1980 Moscow Olympics, although he will be 30 years old when the Games begin.

"My strength has not been sapped by any means and I do not feel tired from sport," the 29-year-old Borzov told a Tass correspondent. "I think I shall start in the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

"No one has ever run the 100 meters at the games at the age of 30. I should like to try it."

Tass said that two months before the Montreal Games in 1976, Borzov was injured and had to stop practicing. Late last summer, Borzov could not go to the European Championships in Prague because the old injury flared up again.

Then, in order to continue practicing, he "resolved to undergo a surgical operation," Tass reported, but gave no details of what the problem was.

Last autumn, Tass said, Borzov started regular practices and "specialists believe he is now running easily and fastly," Tass said.

wellknown Inverness Club course, but there have been beefsnevertheless.

And Frank D. "Sandy" Tatum, president of the USGA, saw fit in his normal "State of the Game" message to the press earlier in the week to bring the issue into sharp focus.

Without saying so, he obviously was replying to a story in one of the slick golf magazines, which addressed itself to the doctoring and tricking up of Open courses and which charged that, as a result, the tournament was producing a rash of nonentities as champions.

"In their effort to make the Open not just a tour event, have they turned it into a crapshoot, a ribbon clerk's delight, so booby-trapped it requires no more skill than playing a pinball machine?" the Golf magazine critic asked rhetorically.

Tatum defended the USGA, saying, "We are not trying to humiliate the greatest players in the world, we are trying to identify them."

It is true that in the early history of the tour, the pros played on easy courses and often under winter rules to foster low scoring. Rounds of 65 and 66, and better, fascinated the public and bolstered gate appeal. In recent years, however, the PGA Tour's attitude has changed. Behind such pressures as could be applied by Anold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus and others, the tour shifted to tougher courses and greater challenges.

Tatum insisted that for the last quarter of a century orso, the Ope, has followed a fixed formula for its championship courses aimed at a proper balance.

"Our feeling is that a good pro golfer should be able to drive the ball in an area 25 to 30 yards wide. Missing, he should be penalized. He should be able to pitch to a green. Should he miss, he should be penalized. A birdie should not be easily bought. It should require brilliant shotmaking."

Complaints against the Inverness course have been mild, mainly centered on small greens and restructuring of four holes — the third, fifth, sixth and eighth.

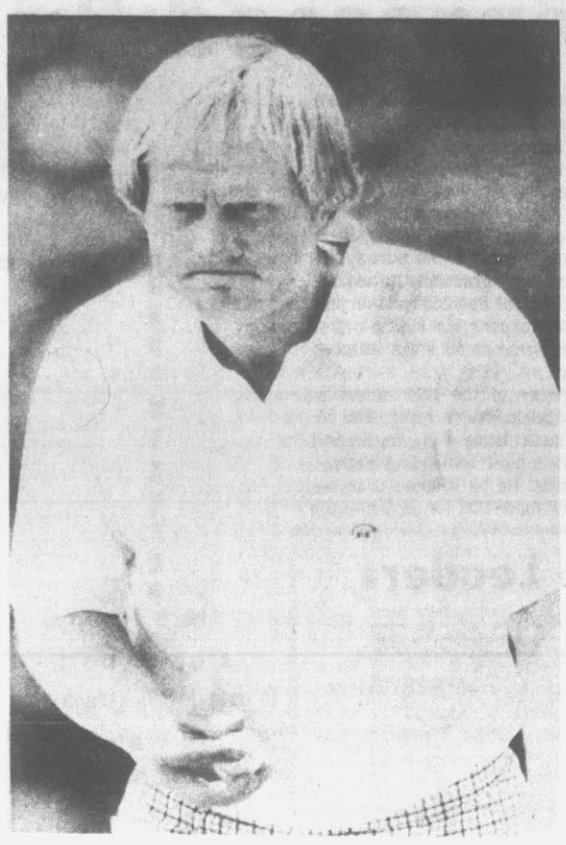
"Changing a course like this is like changing a Mona Lisa," said Andy Bean.

Robert Trent Jones, perhaps most renowned of modern architects, agreed that courses should retain their individual character.

"But alterations are necessary because the game is constantly changing," he said. "Introduction of the steel shafts and revision of the swing by Ben Hogan — the shortened backswing and improved accuracy — dicate that.

"If Hogan had used hickory clubs, like Bob Jones who had a sweeping arc, he would have broken all the shafts."



A Grim Nicklaus

Jack Nicklaus had this grim expression as he waited to putt on the ninth green in the third round of the 79th U.S. Open at Inverness Club Saturday in Toledo. Nicklaus, a three-time winner of the U.S. Open, barely made the cut with a 151 for 36-holes and finished the third round with a 223, 14 behind leader Hale Irwin. (AP Laserphoto)

Bonnett Takes Pole, Then Wins Qualifying Race In Michigan

By JERRY GARRETT
AP Motorsports Writer

CAMBRIDGE JUNCTION, Mich. (AP) — Neil Bonnett, who hours earlier captured the pole position for Sunday's 400-mile Grand National stock car race, roared back Saturday afternoon to win a bruising 100-mile qualifying race for the 1979-80 International Race of Champions series.

Bonnett, who was the winner last March in the 1978-79 IROC finale at Atlanta, edged out Bobby Allison by less than a car length. Darrell Waltrip was a few feet behind Allison.

Two car lengths behind them there was a photo finish for fourth, the last qualifying position. The last four finishers in the eight-car starting field were eliminated from further competition.

Buddy Baker, diving low on the track from the eighth position coming through the final turn, nosed out Cale Yarborough by a foot. Dale Earnhardt, on the high side, was sixth by a bumper.

Benny Parsons tried to make it four abreast, but came up seventh. Donnie Allison lost the draft and finished three-quarters of a lap behind.

Bonnett, who started sixth, took over the lead for keeps on the 39th of 50 laps. Except for laps 37 and 38 led by Bobby Allison, Bonnett was in front from the 11th lap.

There no caution flags, although there was considerable bumping and banging. Waltrip and Yarborough slammed each other midway through the race, then rubbed fenders again a few laps later. Bobby Allison traded some paint in the early going with Waltrip and Bonnett.

"I sure can't complain about the way my car was running," Bonnett said. "I just hope the Mercury goes that good tomorrow. As hot as it was today, it seemed the motor would lose horsepower in the draft and didn't run as well.

"I tried to give it some fresh air by running it up front. I think I'll use that fresh air strategy again tomorrow.' '

Bonnett was extremely pleased with his Grand National car's performance, too.

"This thing is just a pleasure to drive," he said after time trials. "It works so good, I'm almost afraid to climb out of it and leave the driver's seat unoccupied.

"Someone'll come by and try to take it."

The development was hardly a surprising one for Bonnett's Mercury prepared by the famed Wood brothers. It the ninth pole position in 19 tries for their cars.

"Their drivers change, but their cars just keep on winning and winning," said Bonnett, who won the Mason Dixon 500 last month in his third start for the team. "Knowing that, there's a lot of people around here who would like to plop down in that driver's seat.

"I'm gonna try and keep that thing occupied."

Buddy Baker was third fastest at 161.588 mph, followed by Joe Millikan at 161.483 mph, Cale Yarborough at 161.222 mph and Bobby Allison at 160.898 mph.

Based on previous performance by the Wood brothers car, Bonnett would appear to be the one to beat in Sunday's 12:30 p.m. EDT race.

Bonnett's predecessor in the car, David Pearson, won exactly half of his 18 starts at the two-mile facility in southern Michigan's scenic Irish Hills area.

Bonnett himself has not had especially good fortune here. He finished dead last in this race a year ago.

Yarborough is the defending champion.

Goolagong Tops King In Three

By WINSOR DOBBIN
AP Sports Writer

CHICHESTER, England (AP) — Australian Evonne Goolagong gained the finals of the Chichester Grass Courts Tennis Tournament with a hard-fought 1-6, 6-4, 10-8 victory over American veteran Billie Jean King Saturday.

She will meet Britain's Sue Barker in Sunday's final.

Barker defeated young South African Tanya Harford 5-7, 6-2, 6-3 in another bitterly contested match.

Cawley and Barker both will be playing their second straight finals. The 27-year-old Australian won last week's Beckenham tournament, while Barker won at Manchester.

Goolagong was be favored over the 23-year-old Briton, who she leads 6-1 head-to-head.

The 35-year-old King looked like she was going to repeat her shocking quarterfinal success over the world's No. 1-ranked women's player, Martina Navratilova, when she quickly took the first set against Goolagong.

But her lack of competition practice finally caught up with her. This is her first tournament since last year's Wimbledon.

"I'll go over that match, think about it, dream about it, and throw up," she said after failing to take advantage of her first-set lead.

"Evonne played really well" King admitted afterward. "I tried to do a bit too much and felt a bit sluggish."

The two players battled for more than two hours before Goolagong got the vital break to take a desperately tight final set.

The two former Wimbledon champions treated the crowd to tennis of the highest quality, with the stylish Australian producing some exquisite passing shots.

"I felt really good and relaxed," said Evonne afterward. "I kept plugging away and I was getting in more and more balls as the match went on."

The 20-year-old Harford found her 20th match in 12 days too much of a strain.

She played well in the first set, but allowed Barker to dominate the match from then on.

Harford, who beat Virginia Wade and Pam Shriver in the preceding rounds, said afterward, "I just ran out of steam. Toward the end I couldn't summon up any energy."

The winner of Sunday's final will collect $15,000.

Irwin Leads...

Lee Elder, one of the few black players on the PGA Tour, and Larry Nelson were next at 215. Elder had a 69. Nelson, who was tied with Purtzer at the end of 36 holes, had a terrible day. He made double bogey on the fourth hole, never made a birdie and had to settle for a 76.

Bob Gilder, Australian David Graham and Bill Rogers were at 216. Gilder had a 69, Graham 70 and Rogers 73.

Big Andy Bean, a runaway winner last week in Atlanta, topped the group at 217. He holed a 6-iron approach for an eagle-2 on the ninth hole, highlighting his round of par 71.

South African Gary Player, who needs a second U.S. Open title to complete a second career sweep of all the game's major titles, scored a hole-in-one with a 6-iron on the 185 yard third hole. He finished with a 72 but was well back at 218.

Nelson and Putzer were the only men under par starting the day's play. Nelson quickly took himself out of it. He drove poorly on the fourth hole, had to play out short, was in the fringe in three and took three more from there. It was a double bogey and it was all downhill for the little man from that point.

Purtzer, who had gained his share of the lead with some remarkable scrambling over the first two rounds, couldn't keep it up forever. He suffered a gradual erosion over the final nine holes, making bogeys on the 10th, 13th and 17th.

That left it up to Irwin, whose only victory of the 1978 season came in the Australian PGA, and Weiskopf, who has been bothered by stomach problems most of the year and whose home burned earlier in the year.

Weiskopf, long noted as one of the golf's more elegant strikers of the ball but an indifferent putter, turned it all around.

His putting bordered on the uncanny.

He birdied two of his first three holes and one-putted the first seven greens. Among those were par-saving putts — critical strokes that kept him in the running — from 25 and 15 feet. And he saved par again, this time from about 8 feet, on the ninth hole.

The eagle on the 13th — even though Irwin answered it with firm authority — was the key. He followed with a bogey on the next hole, but got the stroke back with another 8-10 foot putt for birdie on the 15th.

Irwin birdied the second hole and chipped it from 20-25 feet for birdie on the third.

Joe, Phil...

yours as they are mine."

Joe, 34, earned his 100th victory this year. After some years of uncertainty, he's off to a 10-2 start, his best ever.

"If I can be half the man you are, I will have accomplished something in life," says a memento from Joe. "Thanks for being my father."

Phil Niekro Sr. was born in a nearby coal patch. His parents, Polish immigrants, died when he was young.

"Actually, our name was spelled Niekra in Poland," he said. "But here we got the 'o' on the end."

Instead of high school, he went into the mines. But The Depression gave him time for amateur baseball.

"I started out as a first baseman, but I had such a good arm they made me a pitcher," said the father, who stands about 6 feet 1, like his sons, with long arms and large hands.

After arm trouble took away his fast ball, he found the knuckle ball — the spinless pitch that dips and flutters at the whim of air currents.

"A fellow named Nick McKay, who was in the minors for a while, showed me how to throw it," he said.

"In those days, hardly anybody threw the knuckle ball. It was all I could throw."

He pitched for several amateur teams. "I got $3 for a game one time."

His first child was a daughter, Phyllis. She would join in the backyard play upon later arrival of the sons. The kid across the street loved sports. He'd be a teammate of Phil Jr.'s in school before winning his own acclaim as basketball's John Halicek.

"They'd wait for me on thea steps with the gloves," Phil Sr. said. "I'd come home from the mine and play. They wouldn't even give me a chance to go in the house."

Phil Jr. started knuckle-balling at age 8. "It's the easiest pitch there is as far as strain on the arm," said the father.

Though he lacked a big league fastball, Phil Jr. signed with the Braves in 1958, spent six seasons in the minors, then made the majors.

Joe had a top fast ball and only toyed with the knuckler as a teen. Signed by the Chicago Cubs in 1966, he pitched in the majors the next year.

He later slipped back into the minors, but he's come on strong in recent years with Houston — especially this season. And he too has become a knuckle ball pitcher.

"Joe couldn't control it at first," said Phil Sr. "But he's getting it over good now."

Joe is 10-2 after a recent win over Philadelphia, also beaten this week by Phil.

Mrs. Niekro listened on radio. She gets all Atlanta games and tunes in Houston when she can. The father doesn't listen. It makes him edgy.

"Win or lose, the main thing is that they pitch a good ballgame," he said.

Brewers Nip Royals, 3-2

By MIKE O' BRIEN

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Robin Yount's eighth-inning single scored Ben Oglivie with the winning run Saturday, lifting the Milwaukee Brewers to a 3-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Oglivie led off the eighth with a single off Steve Busby, 2-4, took second on a sacrifice and raced home when Yount slapped a ground ball just beyond the reach of diving first baseman George Scott.

Busby carried a four-hitter into the seventh when the Brewers tied it 2-2 as Paul Molitor led off with a double, advanced on a sacrifice and scored on a double by Cecil Cooper. Busby pitched out of further trouble when he picked Cooper off second and struck out Gorman Thomas.

The Royals took a 2-1 lead against Jim Slaton, 6-3, when Amos Otis led off the sixth with his sixth home run of the season.

The Brewers took a 1-0 first-inning lead on a double by Sal Bando, a walk to Cooper and two-out walks to Oglivie and Sixto Lezcano. The Royals tied in the third when Frank White singled, stole second and scored on a single by Todd Cruz.

Seaver Is Satisfied

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

So far this season Tom Seaver hasn't had much to cheer about. But Friday night was different.

"I'm very satisfied with that game," said the Cincinnati Reds pitcher after a six-hit, 6-3 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Seaver has had his share of low-hit games in a splendid National League career, but he has been hampered by a muscle injury in his lower back this season and is struggling just to make the .500 mark. His latest victory put his record at 4-5.

Elsewhere in the National League, the New York Mets edged the Atlanta Braves 2-1, the Houston Astros stopped the Montreal Expos 2-1, the Pittsburgh Pirates turned back the Los Angeles Dodgers 6-2, the Chicago Cubs nipped the San Diego Padres 2-1 and the San Francisco Giants outscored the St. Louis Cardinals 9-6 in 13 innings.

Seaver also helped the Reds with his bat, contributing a two-run double that put Cincinnati on top to stay at 4-3.

In the fifth, the Reds boosted their lead to 6-3, when Bench hit his fifth homer of the season with Foster on base with his third single of the game. Phillies starter Larry Christenson, 1-4, took the loss.

Mets 2, Braves 1

Lee Mazzilli drove in both runs on singles and Craig Swan fired a two-hitter to lead New York over Atlanta. Swan, 7-4, struck out seven and allowed no walks but was involved in a bench-clearing incident in the sixth inning after he hit Atlanta starter Phil Niekro in the helmet with a pitch.

Atlanta Manager Bobby Cox was ejected when he confronted Swan on the field after Niekro was struck. The confrontation brought all players to the field, and Cox had to be restrained by the umpires and the Braves' coaches.

Pirates 6, Dodgers 2

Dave Parker's two-run single capped a five-run ninth inning, leading Pittsburgh over Los Angeles behind the combined six-hit pitching of Bert Blyleven and Kent Tekulve.

Bill Robinson singled in the ninth, stole second and came home on a base hit by Phil Garner for the Pirates. Omar Moreno later singled home two runs with bases loaded.

Blyleven, 3-2, gave way to Tekulve in the eighth. The Pirate reliever recorded his seventh save despite a two-run homer to Joe Ferguson in the ninth.

Giants 9, Cardinals 6

Willie McCovey's three-run homer with one out in the bottom of the 13th inning lifted San Francisco over St. Louis.

McCovey connected on reliever Darold Knowles' first pitch and sent the game-winning blast sailing over the right field screen at Candlestick Park. McCovey, who also hit a solo homer in the fourth, now has 10 home runs this season and 515 in his career.

Astros 2, Expos 1

Art Howe's double scored Denny Walling from first base in the ninth inning to lead Houston and Joaquin Andujar over Montreal.

Elias Sosa, 3-4, the fourth Expos pitcher, issued a one-out walk to Walling before Howe drove in the run that made a winner of Andujar, 6-4, who checked the Expos on five hits.

The Astros tied the game 1-1 in the fourth inning when Cesar Cedeno singled, stole second and scored on a two-out single by Walling.

Open's Eighth Tee Tree

The pine tree at left was planted overnight to discourage contestants from driving through that area onto the seventh fairway, a short-cut to the eighth green. Stacey Is Watching The Action This Week

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Hollis Stacy, who in less than a month will be making a bid for a third consecutive U.S. Women's Open golf title, is going to school this week — man-watching.

But she has no delusions about women cracking the male domain on the fairways.

"No way," the petite, curly-haired Atlantan said. "They are two different games. I don't know of any of the women who would want to try the men's tour."

Holding a microphone and following a hand-held camera, she is following the action by foot, providing color and details as play progresses.

"It was a little hard to adjust at first," she said. "The guys are so much more powerful. When I try to tell the TV audience what club the guy will use on the next shot I have to think of what number club I would use in that situation and add two to compensate for the man's greater strength."

Hollis has favorites, and they aren't necessarily the darlings of the galleries.

"All of the guys have good swings but some are smoother than the others — Gene Littler, Jerry Pate, Lee Trevino, for instance," she said. "They swing so easily I feel the swing is more like mine and the other ladies.

"Tom Watson has a very fast swing. Arnold Palmer swings so viciously he almost falls off the tee. When he's letting out, Jack Nicklaus' feet almost leave the tee. It's hard for me to relate to them."

If Hollis wins at Fairfield, Conn., July 12-15, she will become the first woman in history to win three straight Opens, surpassing such luminaries as the late Babe Didrikson Zaharias, Patty Berg, Mickey Wright and Betsy Rawls. Mickey Wright won four, but never more than two in a row. Betsy Rawls is the only other to win as many as three.

Stacy does not consider Nancy Lopez, the new sensation of the LPGA tour, her only rival.

"Nancy is a wonderful player and she has done a lot for our tour," the 25-year-old Rollins College product said, "but there are a lot of other players who will be just as dangerous — if not more so — in the Open.

"Donna Caponi Young is playing great. Joanne Carner is always tough, even with her bad hand."

LaPlante, Young Hot In AAU Track Events

WALNUT, Calif. (AP) — The "name" hurdlers in the National AAU Track and Field Championships are Renaldo Nehemiah and Edwin Moses, but Deby LaPlante and Candy Young stole the show on opening day.

The 26-year-old LaPlante became the first American woman ever to run the 100-meter hurdles in less than 13 seconds, clocking a 12.99 in her qualifying heat Friday as the three-day AAU championships opened at Mount San Antonio College. The wind, however, took the glimmer off that accomplishment as it was over the allowable two meters per second.

But the doggedly determined LaPlante came back in the semifinals to run a 13.07, bettering her American record by three-hundreths of a second.

Young, a 17-year-old high school junior from Beaver Falls, Pa., rewrote the world junior record (19 years old and under) twice in the women's 100-meter hurdles, running a 13.20 in a qualifying heat, then shaving seven-hundreths of a second off that in the semis.

LaPlante, a freshman at San Diego State, said she was thrilled — briefly — when she heard the time in her qualifying heat.

"When they announced the time after the first heat, it sent chills through my body," she said. "Too bad it was wind-aided."

In one of Friday's four finals, Mary Shea of Cardinal Gibbons High School in Raleigh, N.C., ran an American record 32 minutes, 52.5 seconds in the women's 10,000 meters, bettering Peg Neppel's old mark of 33:15.1 set in 1977. Sue Brodock also rewrote an American women's mark with a 24:07 in the 5,000-meter walk, shattering her old standard of 24:10.

In another women's final, the Oral Roberts University Track Club, with Madeline Manning running the anchor, won the 3,200-meter relay in 8:31.4.

Marco Evoniuk of the Colorado Track Club won the only men's final scheduled for opening day, taking the 50-kilometer walk in 4 hours, 10 minutes, 33 seconds.

Most highlights during qualifying on the first day of the AAU's annual meet were provided by the women. Lorna Griffin threw the discus 190 feet, five inches, just nine inches off her American record. Shotputter Maren Seidler bettered her year-old meet record by two feet with a toss of 61-8. Brenda Morehead ran the second fastest 200 meters ever by an American woman, 22.56.

Meanwhile, world-record holders Nehemiah (13.00 in the 110-meter hurdles) and Moses (47.45 in the 400-meter hurdles) breezed through qualifying. Nehemiah won his qualifying heat in a leisurely 13.88, then came back with a 13.30 in the semifinals.

Moses, running easily, was timed in 49.70 in his 400 hurdles heat.

Neither hurdler is expected to face much of a challenge in his event. Greg Foster's absence with a sprained ankle took away Nehemiah's top challenger, and no American is close to Moses in his event.

"When I can run two seconds slower than normal and still win, it's not good," said Olympic champion Moses. "It makes one lackadaisical."

Nehemiah, however, viewed an apparent lack of top-notch competition in a different light.

"Greg's absence doesn't really bother me. Anyway, the AAU meet is different. You're not really relying on one person to push you. It's you against the field."

UNCC Inks Forward

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Greg Johnson, a 6 foot, 6 inch, 250-pound forward from Cincinatti, signed a grant-in-aid to play basketball at the University of North Carolina-Charlotte.

Johnson, a transfer from the University of Cincinnati and Kentucky Business College, will enter UNCC this fall as a sophomore with three years of basketball eligibility remaining.

Johnson chose his hometown university over UNCC two years ago when he graduated from Lockland High School in Cincinnati as a Parade Magazine All-America pick. He was also the 1976 Ohio Class-A player of the year in both major wire-service polls.

Johnson injured his ankle in pre-season as a Cincinnati freshman, but still managed to produce seven points and five rebounds a game. He was redshirted after six games. That led to his decision to transfer to Kentucky Business College last year where he averaged 9.2 points and 8.8 rebounds per game and dished off 206 assists.

Honeymoon, Drought End

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The honeymoon is over for Sparky Anderson in Detroit, the long drought ended for Tom Underwood in Toronto and the Kansas City Royals' seemingly endless ninth inning finally — and mercifully — came to an unhappy conclusion for the Brewers in Milwaukee.

Anderson, in his second game and second defeat as Detroit manager, was booed during the Tigers' 8-7 loss to the California Angels.

Underwood broke a personal 15-game losing streak — four short of the American League record — in pitching the Blue Jays to a five-hit 6-0 triumph over the Oakland A's.

And the Royals, who trailed 11-2 against Milwaukee ace Mike Caldwell after four innings, erupted for eight runs in the ninth, including Willie Wilson's second three-run homer of the game, and turned back the Brewers 14-11 behind a 21-hit assault.

Elsewhere in the AL, the Texas Rangers exploded for a season-high eight runs in the fifth inning to beat the New York Yankees 9-5, the Cleveland Indians pounded out 19 hits and buried the Seattle Mariners 13-3, the Baltimore Orioles edged the Minnesota Twins 6-5 and the Chicago White Sox outlasted the Boston Red Sox 8-5.

Royals 14, Brewers 11

The Brewers built their big lead on Dick Davis' grand slam homer, a three-run blast by Sal Bando and Charlie Moore's two-run shot. But Wilson singled in the eight-run ninth and added a three-run inside-the-park homer. Before the Brewers' third out, George Scott delivered a two-run single, Pete LaCock hit a sacrifice fly and RBI singles by Frank White and U.L. Washington tied the score before Wilson lined a shot to the left field corner and circled the bases.

Angels 8, Tigers 7

Bobby Grich hit a pair of home runs and Carney Lansford and Dan Ford hit one each as California handed Anderson his second defeat in two games as manager of the Tigers. Ford's ninth-inning blast off Dave Tobik snapped a 7-7 tie. Anderson was booed when he came out to remove pitcher Steve Baker in the eighth inning.

Blue Jays 6, A's 0

Underwood recorded his first victory since last Aug. 8. The Blue Jays collected 12 hits and scored singles in all but the first and fourth innings. They got the only run Underwood needed in the second when Rico Carty walked, took third on John Mayberry's single and scored on Bob Bailor's sacrifice fly.

Rangers 9, Yankees 5

Al Oliver's two-run homer highlighted Texas' eight-run fifth inning that broke a 1-1 tie. John Grubb singled home the first two runs of the inning and Oliver's homer made it 7-1 and chased Ed Figueroa. Jon Matlack held the Yankees to one run until they scored four times in the eighth.

Indians 13, Mariners 3

Toby Harrah and Ron Pruitt each drove in a pair of runs to spark a seven-run second-inning that helped the Indians to their fourth consecutive victory and 11th in the last 15 games and put them over the .500 mark at 31-30 for the first time this season. Harrah had three hits.

Orioles 6, Twins 5

Al Bumbry drilled a tie-breaking two-out, two-run triple in the top of the ninth inning after Minnesota relief ace Mike Marshall walked Doug DeCinces and Terry Crowley with two out. The Twins scored a run in the bottom of the ninth, but Tim Stoddard came in and struck out Roy Smalley and Jose Morales with two runners on base.

White Sox 8, Red Sox 5

Mike Squires drove in four runs with a single, a two-run double and a suicide squeeze bunt. He singled a run home in the first inning, capped a five-run second with a two-run double and laid down a perfect squeeze bunt in the seventh. Jim Rice and Carlton Fisk homered for Boston, but Rice also lost Squires' fly ball in the lights in left field and it dropped for a two-run double.

Oklahoma Court Says No Time For Baseball

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahoma's highest court has ruled 7-0 that it has better things to do than decide the outcome of a baseball game between two fourth-grade pee-wee league teams.

But Friday's ruling doesn't send the game back to the playing field. It sends it back to a Tulsa County district judge, who has ordered city-wide playoffs postponed until the case is settled.

To the attorney for the Patrick Henry Giants, the loss of a game on a rules infraction is a matter of principle and fair play. But league lawyers say the pee wees are no place for judicial hardball.

"Ten-year-old kids don't need this kind of litigation," attorney Sam Bratton told the Oklahoma Supreme Court. "They need to go out and play baseball.

"The floodgates are open, your honors," he said. "We're urging the court to take a stand and draw the line somewhere at what disputes can be brought into court."

It all started May 16 in Tulsa when the Giants beat the Marshall Hawks to clinch the league title, but a rhubarb developed over whether they had broken the rules in substituting two players.

A league official later gave the game to the Hawks by default, dropping the Giants into a tie for first place with another team, and sending Giants' lawyer Frank Greer into the Tulsa court.

Babe Ruth

Aaction Movers 3, Wachovia Bank 2

Aaction Movers slipped to a 3-2 victory over Wachovia Bank Friday night in the Babe Ruth League. The win left Aaction with a 5-5 record, while Wachovia dipped to 1-8.

Wachovia got both of its runs in the first inning. Ed Frazier singled and Sammy Hodges reached on a fielder's choice. Both moved up on a passed ball and Troy Hudson sacrificed Frazier over. Mike Tucker singled to score Hodges.

In the third, Aaction came up with its first run. Bill Kittrell walked and then came all the way around on an error on a pickoff play.

The other two Aaction runs came in the sixth. Bill Owens reached on an error and Bryan Dye singled. Scott Wilson doubled in Owens and an error let Dye score with the winning run.

Coca-Cola 2, Planters Bank 0

Coca-Cola handed league-leading Planters Bank its first loss of the year Friday night, taking a 2-0 victory.

Coke moved to 4-5 in the league while Planters dropped to 10-1.

Both of the runs came in the fourth inning. Paul MacMillan singled and stole second. Jeff Porter doubled in him. John Catlett reached on an error allowing Porter to score.

Porter led the Coke hitting with three, while Mitch Brann had two. No one had more than one hit for Planters.

Little League

Big Value Drugs 17, Moose 8

Big Value Drugs romped to a 17-8 win over the Moose Friday in the Tar Heel Little League, and took a step closer to the league title with it.

Big Value is now 9-2, while the Moose drop to 1-11. Big Value has a magic number in the league of two for the title.

The Moose scored first, getting a run in the top of the first. Charlie Littleton walked and Roy Deyton doubled. Daryl Perkins grounded out, scoring Littleton.

Big Value came back with two in the bottom of the first to take the lead. Eric Jarman singled and moved up on a passed ball. He scored on a double by Steve Wall. Wall moved up on an error and scored on a wild pitch.

Both teams scored single runs in the second, but Big Value scored four more in the third.

Then, in the fourth, Big Value scored ten to take a 17-3 lead after another Moose run scored in the top of the frame.

Wall opened, reaching on an error and Sterling Edwards cracked a home run. Les Turner singled and Kevin Lang walked. Matthew Saieed singled and a walk to Lloyd May scored Turner. Mike Gavigan reached on a fielder's choice, getting Lang at the plate, but Brian Walsh walked, scoring Saieed. Jarman singled in May, and Wall singled to score Gavigan. An error let Walsh in, and a wild pitch scored Jarman. Edwards doubled in reached on a fielder's choice.

Edwards and Turner each had three hits, while Jarman, Wall and Gavigan each had two for Big Value. The Moose only got three hits.

Kiwanis 20, Union Carbide 6

The Kiwanis romped to a 20-6 victory over Union Carbide in the North State Little League Friday.

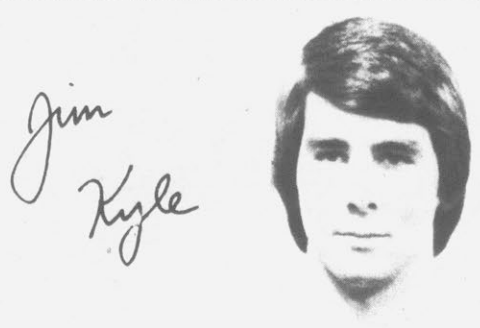
The Kiwanis put the game away with seven runs in the top of the first. Scott Davis doubled and Robert Ehrmann walked. Ryan Clark reached on a fielder's choice, loading the bases. Van Alston walked, forcing in Davis. Robert Evans reached on a fielder's choice, scoring Ehrmann, and Scott Scharinger walked, bringing in Clark. William Smith walked, and that brought home Alston. Evans scored when James Hathaway walked, and Jason Galloway doubled in Scharinger and Smith.

Union Carbide got its first in the first. Steve Rhodes walked and so did Frederick Hurt. Both advanced on a wild pitch and Dwight Smith sacrificed in Rhodes.

The Kiwanis went on to score seven more in the second, three in the third, and three more in the fourth. Union Carbide got two in the fifth and two in the sixth.

Ehrmann led the Kiwanis hitting with three, while Galloway, Davis, Alston and Evans each had two. Union Carbide got only two hits off Alston's pitching.



THE NORTH CAROLINA Wildlife Resources Commission has gotten some relief from its financial difficulties and a new game law to work with thanks to the recent passage of a pair of bills by the state General Assembly.

The legislature approved a bill that provides for an average 26.7 per cent increase in hunting and fishing license fees to help alleviate the Commission's financial problems. Robert B. Hazel, executive director, stresses the relief is only temporary, however.

"We are very much pleased," Hazel said of the bill's passage, "Of course, we've been careful to point out all along, the passage of Senate Bill 778...is really not a long-term answer to the Commission's financial problems.

"Inflation has hit the agency hard, and this increase will only meet our present budget and pay the upcoming legislative salary increases," Hazel said. "It will provide only about $1.7 million in additional revenues. That won't provide money for any type of expansion, but it will keep us from having to adopt the rather drastic cutback plan that would have been necessary without this increase. It's a stopgap measure, but it will certainly help...."

The legislature also passed a game law revision to update the state's old game law, passed in 1935. "The new game law gives us the tools to properly manage wildlife. The old law was outdated and it contained numerous contradictions and fuzzy authority. It had gotten to the point where we hardly had a law at all."

Hazel said the new law covers many gaps and loopholes which were evident in the old law and also resolves many contradictions. More importantly, he said, it improves the uniformity of penalties, provides for heavier fines and gives courts the authority to suspend licenses. It also gives the courts the authority to levy replacement costs against those convicted of illegally destroying wildlife or its habitat.

THE NESTING SEASON for ducks and geese across the Maritime, Ontario and Quebec Provinces in Canada has begun, for the most part, earlier than usual, according to officials of Ducks Unlimited.

Warm early spring weather, along with an abundance of rain, has helped the nesting waterfowl of Canada and officials are looking for a productive nesting season.

THE NATIONAL WILDLIFE Federation will be holding one of three annual conservation summits in the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina this month. The summit will be at the Blue Ridge Assembly, a YMCA conference center near Black Mountain, from June 23 through June 29.

The summit offers interesting courses in dozens of subjects ranging from bird study to camp cooking and conservation issues. It is staffed by experts and the sessions combine learning with enjoyable field experiences and recreation.

Williamston Gains Forth Straight Win

WILLIAMSTON — Williamston's American Legion baseball team won its fourth league game without a loss Friday night, slipping past Goldsboro, 7-5.

The win left Williamston tied with Rocky Mount for first place in the league. Goldsboro slipped to 3-4 with the defeat.

Williamston pushed over two runs in the first to take the lead. Anthony Latham singled, as did Randy Ellis, who then stole second. Joseph Holley singled, scoring Latham, but Ellis was tagged out at the plate. Glenn Cargile reached on an error, scoring Holley for a 2-0 lead.

In the third, Williamston added a third run. Ellis singled, stole second and took third on a passed ball. Trent Ange reached on an error, allowing Ellis to score.

Goldsboro got its first run in the fourth. That came on a solo home run by Terry Coates.

In the sixth, Williamston added three runs for a 6-1 lead that Goldsboro could never overcome. Cargile singled and Eldred McQueen got a hit. Toby Holliday singled to load the bases. Hank Edwards hit a sacrifice fly to score Cargile, and Keith Clark walked to load the bases. Latham then singled in McQueen and Holliday.

Williamston added another insurance run in the seventh, while Goldsboro rallied for three in the seventh and one in the ninth.

Coates, Satterfield and Greg Brown each had two hits to lead Goldsboro. Cargile had three to pace Williamston, while Latham, Ellis and Holley each added two.

Williamston was to face Rocky Mount for undisputed possession of first place Saturday night.

Marty Robbins Doesn't Race To Win, But Just For The Fun

By JERRY GARRETT
AP Motorsports Writer

CAMBRIDGE JUNCTION, Mich. (AP) — Marty Robbins, the popular country-western singer and composer, makes one of his increasingly rare ventures into the world of Grand National stock car racing — "my hobby" — in Sunday's $165,000 race here.

The 53-year-old Robbins, who has had open heart surgery, has started in 25 Grand National events dating back to 1968, and he recorded his career's best finish at Michigan International Speedway in 1974, a fifth place.

"I really don't race to win," Robbins said candidly Friday during a break in practice. "I know I'm not gonna win. I didn't come up here with the idea of winning. I just came up here to see the guys — I only get to see 'em three or four times a year — and if I make the race fine. Then we'll go out there and give it everything we've got."

Robbins drives a Dodge prepared by his friend Cotton Owens, one of the sport's master mechanics in his heyday 10 years ago. The Dodge isn't a popular model on the circuit this season, and Robbins has no illusions about what his car can do.

"Buddy Arrington has run well this season with a Dodge. But really he has better stuff than we do," Robbins said. "I only have the one car — most of the teams have three or four cars — and I'm racin' on the same engine I was three years ago."

Still, Robbins remembers fondly the time he finished so well here, and the charge of adrenalin he felt a few times when he was able to run up front.

"I was really tickled that time I finished fifth here. I just ran and ran and ran. You know, I could have finished fourth. I didn't have a radio in the car — I just needed to look at the scoreboard really — but I wasn't payin' attention," Robbins recalled. "I was in fourth and Gary Bettenhausen came up behind me. I thought he was racing Richard Petty for the lead, so I waved him by.

"I found out later he was on the same lap with me, and I had given him my position."

Another time, several years ago, in Texas, Robbins was having one of the best races of his career. He started 10th and quickly jumped up to fourth, hot on the heels of Petty, Buddy Baker and Cale Yarborough.

"I was really pumpin.' I knew I could outrun 'em. The car was really right. I was thinkin' I had a chance to win if I stayed in there. But after the first pit stop, the distributor blew up," he recalled. "I was only a little disappointed though. Mostly it was a great feelin' — that when everything was right, I could run with the best of 'em.

"You like to feel like you belong out there."

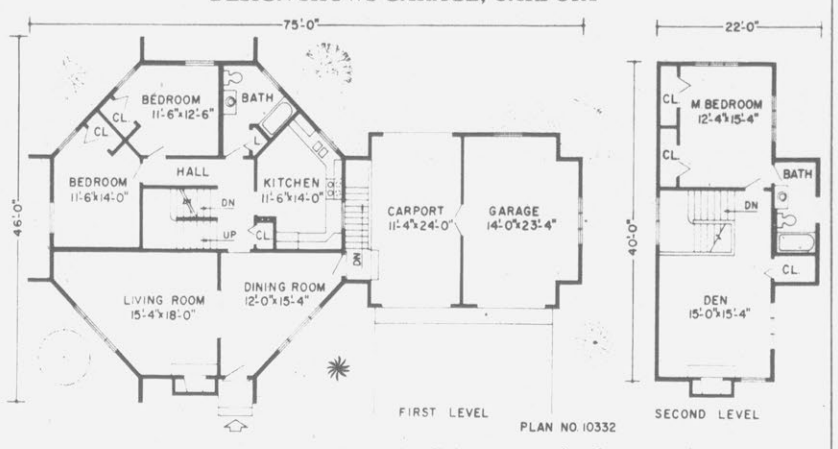
Master Bedroom, Den Fill Second Level

By Jerry Bishop

With an upper level devoted solely to master bedroom and den, the Elmgate, a three bedroom contemporary, creates a floor plan with a special appeal for parents. Also part of the unique floor plan are the living room with wood-burning fireplace, the full-sized dining room, and a garage connected to the home by a carport.

An eye-catching exterior shows the multi-sided facade, vertical siding, and a dominant brick chimney. Guests enter through a paneled front door into the 15-ft. dining room. Note that the side entry via carport keeps family or guests out of rain or snow.

DESIGN SHOWS GARAGE, CARPORT



PLAN NO. 10332

Adjoining the dining room is the sizable living room, with wood-burning fireplace and a wall arrangement that makes possible some innovative furniture placement. An expanse of windows promises a bright, airy place to relax with family or entertain friends.

The kitchen, situated next to the dining room, shows three sections of cabinet and counter space and enough room for a small breakfast area. Completing the lower level are two closeted bedrooms and a full bath with linen closet.

For parents, the second level may be a welcome retreat, with its double closeted master bedroom and connecting bath. In addition, the den suggests an enjoyable library or sitting room, complete with closet and cozy wood-burning fireplace.

A large garage and carport provide shelter for two automobiles, and the basement includes laundry and storage space.

New Bath Products Make The Scene At N.Y. Show

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Shower curtains are the best selling, home-decorating impulse items on the market, according to manufacturers of bath products.

People are changing their shower curtains about twice a year, which means the average customer is not buying a shower curtain because it's needed but because it's wanted, explained a manufacturer at the National Bath, Bed and Linen Show in New York recently.

The show, an annual event, introduces new bath products to retailers from all over the country.

The reason for the popularity of shower curtains and related products is that the bathroom, because it is so small, is the least expensive room in the cats. To be specific, they were Kliban's Cats, which made a first, highly popular appearance in a book of cartoon illustrations by B. Kliban. The cats have been on letter paper, book bags, pillows, sheets and towels. And now shower curtains and matching bath accessories house to redecorate. Because it is also one of the most heavily used rooms, fashion-conscious consumers tend to get tired of the decor sooner and to require a change.

Manufacturers are nothing if not cooperative with consumers seeking new products. Consequently, the types of shower curtain shown at the market mined virtually every decorating vein.

Among the newsmakers at the Bath Show were a couple of will be found in local stores soon, featuring Kliban's Cat in Red Sneakers, his Super Cat and his High Class Cat. (The shower curtains are manufactured by Ames.)

Besides the humorous cat curtains, humor of a rather spicy nature turned up in see-through shower curtains (by Saturday Knight, Ltd.) depicting a burlesque stage and a disco dance studio.

Funny shower curtains go over big in cities, according to retailers attending the show. For suburbanites, however, a traditional floral theme is likely to be more appealing.

Also already reported as popular sellers are lace shower curtains in combination with vinyl liners.

And here's an odd fact about shower curtains which you can interpret any way you like: People buy more vinyl shower curtains in the summer time. They purchase more fabric shower curtains during the winter months.

That's something to ponder in those spare moments before you drop off to sleep.

Rehabbing To Beat The Cost

By ED LION

CHICAGO (UPI) — Want to own your own home in the city, but find the cost of condominiums or a house in good shape is too high?

Architect Gertrude Kerbis says rehabilitating old buildings can be an inexpensive way to go — and can even be less expensive than a home in the suburbs.

"Many people couldn't afford to buy new homes because of inflation," Ms. Kerbs says. "If you're strapped financially, this can really be a good deal."

She is currently rehabbing a building for her own home and office. She figures some such structures can cost half as much per square foot as a condo.

For instance, she estimated conservatively that a three-bedroom condo in Chicago costs $65 a square foot. A three-bedroom home in the suburbs costs about $45 a square foot. A rehabbed building — including purchase price and repairs — can fall conservatively in the $30 to $40 a square foot range, she said in an interview.

She said her own rehabbed building works out to about $25 a square foot because she was the first in the area to buy for rehabbing.

She said the first often sells for less because, as more buildings in a neighborhood are renovated, the risk is cut.

She sees rehabbing as a way to combat urban blight and rejuvenate neighborhoods.

"The phenomenon of rehabbing is like a wave, it spreads. It's really a neat way to save neighborhoods."

For those reasons Ms. Kerbis advises prospective rehabbers to consider their situation and goals.

"Each building is a different case," she said. "You can't come up with hard and fast rules. It's sort of like being a doctor — you have to study each operation."

Ms. Kerbis said successful rehabilitation can be loaded with pitfalls. She recommends the following general steps to help pave the way:

—Carefully choose an area you want to live in. Many that are ripe for rehabbing are on the fringes of fashionable neighborhoods.

—But watch out for gang areas. A rehabbing that works can start a chain reaction that leads to a revival of the neighborhood. But if it is in a bad area and the neighborhood continues to slide downhill, you may find yourself in an undesirable place.

—Cruise the neighborhood to conduct a "windshield visibility study, looking for buildings that meet your needs."

—Before buying, bring in a professional builder or architect to conduct a "brick and mortar" survey just to be sure. "It's well worth the money," Ms. Kerbis said, although rehabbers should make sure professionals don't influence them to spend more than they want.

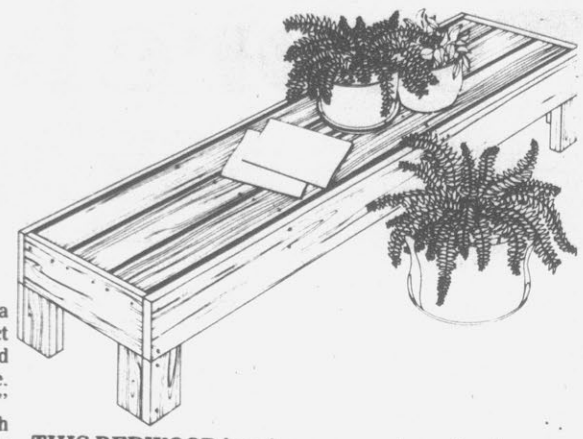
—Come up with a budget and checklist of thing that must be done, "even though you always seem to be spending more and more."

—It often pays to contract work yourself rather than go through a general contractor, which can be more expensive. "Check with authorities about building permits and fire code regulations."

—In overhauling, it often pays to rewire and upgrade plumbing lines "while the walls are down, otherwise if you do it later it can get expensive."

—It could be a good idea to live in the building before or during work to get an idea of what should be done.

—It's always wise to install smoke and fire alarms and take other safety measures.



THIS REDWOOD bench can support people, plants or both. It can be built with 1 by 4s, 2 by 4s and 1 by 6s. While it can be any desired size to fit in with the room in which it is placed, this particular one is 54 inches long, 19½ inches wide and 12 inches high.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — There is aluminum siding on our house. It has been there for many years and seems to be in good condition, but we would like to change the color of it. Can it be repainted and, if so, will it last as long as or longer than paint on wood?

A. — Yes, it can be repainted. Because it is all but impervious to moisture, the aluminum's new coat of paint is likely to last two or three times as long as paint applied to wood.

Q. — I am getting ready to put a new finish on some old furniture. I have a belt sander. Can this be used for the final smoothing of the wood surface or must that be done by hand?

A. — Your query makes it evident you know what the problem might be. A belt sander usually is used for heavy-duty work, such as the removal of old finishes or for smoothing of rough surfaces. However, if you use a very fine grade of abrasive paper and work very carefully, you will be able to get a good result with a belt sander. Should you not wish to take that extra care and if you do not have an orbital or other finishing sander, then you should use a hand sander.

Q. — I do not understand how young people can buy homes these days. Is there something about the situation that I do not know?

A. — A survey last year showed that 45 percent of all home-buying families had more than one wage earner. That's one explanation. Another is that, despite the high prices and soaring interest rates, people have discovered that home ownership gives them at least a partial defense against inflation, since most houses appreciate 10 to 15 percent in value every year.

Q. — We have some insulation batts between the joists of the floor in the attic, but want to add more. Can the new batts be put down right over the old? And should the vapor barrier of the new batts be face down or face up?

A. — These are getting to be the most frequently asked questions. The new layer of batts can be placed over the old. The new insulation should not have a vapor barrier. If you already have purchased it and it does have such a barrier, remove it or slash it freely with a knife, then install the slashed part face down.

Q. — We have an old vacation house which has been empty for several months. During that period, the panes in many of the windows were broken by rock throwers. I now have the enormous task of replacing them. I did a couple of windows a few years ago and know pretty much what to do, but I am a little fuzzy about the glazier's points that hold the glass in place. How many of them should be used? And am I right in assuming they are put into place before the putty is applied to the window channel?

A. — There is no prescribed number of glazier's points that should be used. Even if there were, the number would have to be changed for windows of different sizes. Place the points into the frame about 3 or 4 inches apart. There is no need to measure, since it makes no difference if they are not precisely the same distance apart. Of course, the points go into the frame before the glazing compound or putty is applied. If done the other way around, it would be difficult to place them properly. Incidentally, some glazier's points come with a special small tool that makes it easy to insert them.

Q. — I often see denatured alcohol recommended to get dirt and grime from an old piece of furniture, but just as often I see turpentine or mineral spirits recommended. Is there any difference?

A. — They are both solvents. Denatured alcohol will clean furniture on which varnish, lacquer or paint has been used, with little danger of softening or otherwise disturbing the finish, although it should be used sparingly. But turpentine is recommended for cleaning a shellac finish because denatured alcohol might soften it.

GARDEN CLINIC

N.C. State Univ. Answers Timely Gardening Questions

Q. When is the best time to look for North Carolina peaches for my freezer? (Y.W., Claremont)

A. July. Most yellow-fleshed, free-stone varieties of peaches ripen in July and early August, and this is the type of peach generally desired for freezing. (Mel Kolbe, extension horticulturist)

Q. Large black ants are eating my peony flowers. What can I spray to eliminate them? (B.W., Raleigh)

A. If you will carefully examine your peonies you will find that the ants are not eating the flowers. Instead, they are feeding on "honeydew" secreted by aphids or scale insects. Aphids or scale may be controlled by spraying with malathion, diazinon (Spectracide) or Orthene. (R.L. Robertson, extension entomologist)

Q. What can I do to keep slugs out of my strawberry bed? (Mrs. J.W., Walstonburg)

A. Use a bait containing Sevin. Or you might use a bait containing metaldehyde plus calcium arsenate. Scatter the bait along the bed at dusk. Keep off fruit and follow label directions for use. Slugs like moist, decomposing litter such as that found in strawberry beds. Of course, the fruit is a welcomed addition to their diet. (Ken Sorensen, extension entomologist)

Q. Is there any scientific evidence that marigolds benefit other plants when planted in a garden? (M.T., Charlotte)

A. None of which I am aware. Certain types of marigolds have been shown to reduce certain kinds of nematodes in soil. Most of this research has been done in pots in a greenhouse and usually does not work in the field. Mixed with other plants, marigolds have no beneficial attributes other than attractive flowers. (R.K. Jones, extension plant pathologist)

Frozen Food In Energy Squeeze

NEW YORK (UPI) — Frozen food is caught in a space squeeze in supermarkets. It's growing in popularity but hurt by the rising cost of energy.

A trade magazine study of 22 major grocery chains operating or serving 3,682 stores nationwide says store management is reluctant to expand freezer space because of the high cost of electricity.

The study by Supermarketing magazine indicates stores are cutting back on duplicate items of different brands, package size assortments and variety within brands.

Jury System Attacked In Personal Injury Cases

By LeROY POPE
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — The jury system, regarded as a keystone of American liberty, is coming under attack from the property and casualty insurance industry.

The huge judgments obtained from juries in personal injury cases by attorneys such as Melvin Belli are leading to proposals that jury trials of personal injury cases be abandoned or even outlawed.

Dr. Werner Pfenningstorf, a research attorney for the American Bar Foundation in Chicago, says nowhere in the world except America do juries any longer hear personal injury cases. He says American society soon will reach the point where it no longer can tolerate "huge damage awards and other abuses to the free enterprise system."

In an article in The Producer, a magazine published by the big Crum & Forster insurance group, Dr. Pfessingstorf said he foresees the adoption in the United States of some form of mandatory government property and casualty insurance "similar to that which has been available in Europe for hundreds of years."

Dr. Pfenningstorf said his own observation of the jury system for personal injury cases in the United States was that it could work fairly well in smaller communities "where people have a sense of responsibility to each other," but that it breaks down in the large communities where litigants and jurors are protected by relative anonymity. There a public psychology develops that the insurance companies can well afford to pay high damage awards.

However, in a booklet published by the American Bar Foundation in 1975, Fenningstorf said that while jury trials in personal injury cases are more expensive than many other kinds of legal services, only a minority of the cases actually go to trial and the legal costs are small in comparison with the judgments that may be obtained.

In this booklet, Dr. Pfenningstorf devoted much of his article to discussion of the American phenomenon of the lawyers' contingency fee for personal injury cases, which is not permitted in European countries. You can't sue for auto accident injuries in Europe without paying your lawyer in cash and putting up money for court costs. But there are mandatory government insurance plans that provide basic remuneration fairly promptly.

Some insurance leaders in the United States have been campaigning for abolition of the contingency lawyers' fees in accident cases for several years now. If contingency fees were abolished (although hardly anybody believes that will happen) the lawyer's chance of making a killing out of a jury trial of such a case would disappear.

Ironically, this opposition to the contingency fee is being raised in America at the very time when British lawyers, seeing the bonanzas made out of it by some of their American contemporaries, are proposing that the contingency fee finally be permitted in Britain.

Jury trials of personal injury cases were common in Britain until 1940, although not on a contingency fee basis, according to an article in the August, 1977, number of Best's Review, another insurance trade paper. But with the outbreak of World War II and the total mobilization of Britain's manpower and womanpower, the article said it became almost impossible to impanel a jury for a civil accident injury case.

After the war, jury trials of civil accident cases were resumed but by 1966, Lord Denning, chairman of the Court of Appeals, said they had virtually disappeared and all personal injury damage cases tried in Britain are heard by the judge alone.

Apparently there is no absolute right to a jury trial of such a case in England and a judge can refuse a jury trial if the plaintiff's lawyer does not cite reasons for it the judge considers imperative.

The article in Best's Review, written by John Griffith, a London Queen's Counsel, a type of lawyer peculiar to Britain, said the British Bar and the British Public had gravitated towards non-jury trials of civil accident cases largely on the basis of three considerations other than cost. He listed these as:

Assessability — Judges are believed to be better able than jurors to correctly assess the injuries and the proper compensation.

Uniformity — Judges can be depended on, where jurors cannot, to see that similar claimants get similar compensation and thus preserve the principle of democratic fairness and protect the interest of the community as well as those of the claimants and the defendants and their insurance companies.

Predictability — The English appear to believe that the victim of an accident and the person unfortunate enough to cause it as well as the insurance companies ought to be able to measure with some degree of accuracy months in advance how the court is likely to handle the matter. There should be no shocking surprises as sometimes are handed down by a runaway jury in America.

The insurance people and some lawyers are concerned about much more than the question of whether or not jury trials of personal cases should be gradually done away with. They are concerned by a growing psychology that "people are entitled to legal redress if anyone or anything interferes with their ability to enjoy life," said Chicago lawyer Philip Corboy. He said people seemed to believe society ought to be risk free.

To which San Francisco lawyer Scott Conley added "this attitude is aided by the belief that there must be of a pot of gold at the end of every whiplash."

Limits Food Production

ROME (AP) — For farmers in some developing countries good things do not necessarily come in small packages.

In Cyprus, Egypt, Iran, Jordan, Pakistan, Tunisia and Sudan, a single farmer may own as many as 10 small parcels of land located some distance away from one another and sometimes no larger than a patch of grass supporting two goats or a single olive tree.

A recent survey conducted by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations indicated that nearly two-thirds of the agricultural holdings in the seven countries mentioned suffered from this "fragmentation" problem.

Causes of the problem vary from country to country, but are basically three: deep-rooted inheritance customs which provide equal division of the land among the family sons; previous land-reform measures which broke up large estates into small parcels, with some of the good land and some of the bad going to each beneficiary; and pressure of increased population on limited land resources.

The overall effect, the FAO experts say, has been to reduce productivity and farm income. Thousands of hours are wasted each year in moving tools and draft animals from plot to plot, arable land is taken up by criss-crossing paths and boundaries, and irrigation and contour plowing are complicated by a multitude of owners often not willing to work together.

Because of such problems, the introduction of new, high-yield grains and other green-revolution technologies is notably slower than on larger properties.

The governments of the countries concerned are aware of the fragmentation problem and have legislation to bar or discourage the sale of very small land parcels.

The American Male Witnesses Transition Period

By JOHN P. HAYES
For The Associated Press

He was always taught that he represents power, wealth and strength. In recent years, he's been told that he's egocentric, chauvinistic, insensitive, weak, and sometimes, unnecessary.

Even more, he's been told he is responsible for the woes of American women.

Partly as a consequence, some experts believe, the American male is in a transition. Some suffer an identity crisis. Across the country, clergymen, psychiatrists, physicians and other professional counselors report they're meeting American men, particularly middle-aged men, who are defensive, confused, and bitterly searching for a place for themselves and a place in society.

Some find their identity in this transitory period. Some, indeed, recognize they were thrust into an identity that doesn't fit any more.

Transitions, crises, or, as Gail Sheehy described them in her book by the same name, passages, are as old as Adam. What is new is that now men are freely discussing the frustrations, doubts, fears and concerns. "Never before have men had a cultural hook to hang these expressions on," explains Dr. Frank Furstenberg, associate professor of sociology at the University of Pennsylvania.

"Now we're talking about transitions and writing about passages and we've developed a language or vocabulary that helps us perceive this issue. Once the notion is felt, then it has consequences. People feel their lives should change, and they feel obligated to do something about it."

A lot of men would dismiss Furstenberg's theory with the statement, "My father never went through any transition or crisis." But, counters Furstenberg, "His father endured it silently because he wasn't expected to talk about it.

"In sociology that's called pluralistic ignorance, when many people are experiencing the same thing but nobody knows it. Now we're breaking that down."

The women's movement deserves much of the credit (or blame) for "breaking it down."

In "Dominus," a book by Natalie Gittelson, who also wrote "The Erotic Life of the American Wife," hundreds of men explain how their lives have been changed by the women's movement.

"As the '70s began, and with them the epoch of militant feminism," says Ms. Gittelson, "I was collecting material for a book about the then already more independent lives of women ... As the '70s drew to an end, and perhaps also the epoch of militant feminism, I (have written) this book about men's lives. 'Dominus' is a report from men themselves about how the present status and the new psychology of women have affected not only their erotic lives but also their entire experience — in office and factory, campus and kitchen, as much as in the bedroom."

In evaluating the research of her books, Ms. Gittelson says she feels obliged "to make an observation that will startle only those astonished by irony: the so-called feminist revolution has transformed the consciousness of American men more dramatically, more decisively — and perhaps more dangerously — than the consciousness of women."

The publisher of the new Vision magazine, Casey L. Clinger, says:

"The 1970s female liberation movement slapped society in the face and told the world to wake up — to appreciate women for what they are — equal. For a variety of reasons women began to assert themselves — they began to question the societal values inculcated into them from birth. ... "Taking their cue from women, men too have begun to examine their attitudes and actions. While there are those people who claim that women have been suppressed by men, there are seemingly few people who realize that men have suppressed themselves just as much."

In a scientific approach to men's contemporary problems, Dr. Daniel Levinson of Yale University produced the radical book, "Seasons of a Man's Life." He says the women's movement has influenced men by forcing them to think about gender. "What does it mean to be a man? What do men want from women? And from men?" are questions Levinson says men are asking themselves today.

"Men are seeing how life and development are limited by too narrow a conception of masculinity," continues the psychiatrist who followed the lives of 40 selected men and studied their adult growth development. Levinson's research, the foundation for Ms. Sheehy's "Passages," shows that every man must pass through a series of age-linked phases which underlie his personal crises, govern his emotional states and attitudes and even shape his behavior. Prior to this the notion was that adult growth was completed in early life.

Such findings come at a time when the women's movement and other social factors have pushed many men toward a greater self-awareness. Some men have accepted what feminists say about them and adjusted to different lifestyles and values.

Others, while outwardly accepting the women's movement, can't come to terms with it privately and are looking forward to the day when their lives will return to "normal."

But most men have been unprepared for this self-analysis. As Levinson says, "they become defensive in their marriages, sex lives, at work and in friendships." And some of those who find no solution to this stress grapple with anxiety, depression, liquor, affairs, drugs and divorce.

Dr. Peter L. Brill, director of the Center for the Study of Adult Development at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania, says: "There is nothing more beautiful in the world than the man who resolves his midlife crisis. He comes out of it with a sense of knowing. He becomes a mentor for others and feels value and potency. He feels an emotional depth that hasn't been there for 20 years."

Most affected by this identity crisis, according to Brill and Levinson, is the middle-aged man, whose values were taught and put in practice before the dawn of women's lib.

"Few people understand the way men have been socialized in this country," Brill says. "What men have been taught about emotion is destructive to them. It hurts marriages, it ruins friendships with other men, it makes men more competitive than is healthy or necessary.

"Eighty percent of all American men will experience a moderate to severe crisis around the age of 40, or in midlife," says Brill, so it's important that they understand the phenomenon so it can become a positive event in their lives.

"Before age 40," explains Brill, "people focus on the number of years they've lived. After 40, they think of the number of years they have remaining. Age 40 is a psycho-social marker for men and when we hit it, it causes us to ask, 'Who am I?' and 'What's my life about?'"

"What happens is that the man needs love, closeness and family during this time. But in our society people marry early, so the kids are teen-agers when the father turns 40 and at about the same time the wife goes out to develop herself. Just when the man's ready to return to the family, having sought his dream for so many years, his family has scattered."

For some men, Brill says, the midlife transition is liberating, "but the best we know is that most men don't resolve their midlife crises. They're afraid to or they don't know how. They leave it but they enter a state of staleness, boredom, emptiness."

In Philadelphia, Brill conducts workshops which, he says, have had "powerful impact" on participants, who are taught skills to identify and attain goals in their lives.

"It would be nice if there were a recipe to give to men in transition and crisis," says Levinson of Yale, "but there isn't. Some people are turning to their family physicians, clergymen or psychoanalysts, but many people don't want professional help.

"The best we can tell them is that a transition is a time for review and exploration ... a time to explore the self. People lead narrow lives. They only live out a small part of what's in themselves. Let in the 'me' I haven't done much with."

Says Objection Not Theological

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Departing from the usual Eastern Orthodox position, one of its top scholars says there are no "theological objections" to ordaining women.

However, there can be other reasons, the Rev. Demetrio Constantelo, a church historian, told an ecumenical dialogue involving area Roman Catholic, Lutheran, Episcopal, Disciples of Christ and Eastern Orthodox representatives.

He said the question of women priests can be definitively addressed only in an ecumenical council of an undivided church.

TENSE SITUATION — Pencil-thin steel rods are "ensed up" by construction foreman Tom Schaefer to provide support for this "floating" stairway in Steelcase Inc.'s showroom at Chicago's Merchandise Mart. Opposing forces, channeled through the rods, give both support and rigidity to this first-of-its-kind structure. Designed by architect Harry Weese, the Steelcase structure uses the principle of "disintegrity", a type of dynamic tension first described by Buckminster Fuller. (AP Laserphoto)

HARVEST CONVOY — Gene Martin and son Bret relax a moment near two new combines before readying four other combines, six grain-hauling trucks, three service trucks, a pickup truck, three trailer houses and a converted bus. Vehicles form a convoy that takes the Martin family wheat harvesting crew to Texas, Montana and the Dakotas. (UPI Photo)

Big Money Involved As Harvest Combines Roll

(Editor's note: Each year, convoys of combines and trucks make a wheat harvest trek from Texas to Montana and the Dakotas. The machines must be in top condition because time equals money on their strict schedules. Here is one harvest crew getting ready.)

By THOMAS D. BILLAM

VIOLA, Kan. (UPI) — A greasy hand attached to a brawny brown arm thrust out from under a gray — and in some areas, rusty — harvesting combine. A voice asked for a five-eighths-inch bolt, a nut and a lock-washer.

Gene Martin rummaged through a stack of bins, tossed the items under the machine to his 20-year-old son, Bret, and hurried back to his welding. Another son, Bill, 23, was busy taping newspaper on a custom parts and fuel truck that was to be spray painted that night.

It was less than a week before Martin Harvesters planned to head to Texas for a 3½-month journey. One combine was not yet picked up from Independence, Mo., another sat outside their machine-shop shed with rusty chains and worn gears, and the new parts truck still needed a lot of work before it would be road-worthy.

"It takes a good two months to get all the combines and trucks ready," said the elder Martin from under a welding hood. "We check everything. We definitely want no breakdowns in a field or on the road.

"Every time we break down we lose money. We can cut six, eight, 10 acres an hour. We lose $100 an hour for each machine that's down. If you don't cut any acres, you don't earn any money."

The procedure is routine for Martin, who began harvesting with his dad in 1941 and branched out to his own crew in 1958. His wife, three sons — two of whose wives will go along as drivers — twin teen-age daughters and several hired hands make up the crew that will work, eat and live together in three trailer houses and a converted bus till the harvest ends in autumn.

In addition to the living units, the harvest convoy that would set out from just north of Viola included six grain-hauling trucks, six combines, three service trucks and a pickup truck, most of which use diesel fuel. One machine is Bill's, four belong to Martin and another is owned by partner George Hockett, whose 16-year-old son will drive it. "We're talking about half a million dollars," Martin said.

Talk of money set Martin off. He complained of the interest rate on machinery loans up to 18 percent from 14.4 percent the year before, the cost and availability of diesel fuel and gasoline, the increasing costs of parts for combines and the combines themselves — he just bought a new Gleaner N-6 with two headers for $85,000 — and the limited amounts he can charge for cutting.

"Last year we got $9 an acre, 10 cents over 20 (for each bushel more than 20 per acre) and 10 cents for hauling (each bushel)," Martin said. "This year we'll have to have a little more."

"And we hope to have in 20-some thousand (acres cut) beforor we come home."

The shortage of fuel was a concern to Martin, but he did not foresee any trouble obtaining what he will need for the machines during the harvest because the crew frequents the same service stations every year. Bill added that the crew did not have any trouble during the 1973 fuel "crisis."

Martin feels the gasoline and diesel fuel shortage is founded on greediness of oil companies, and not on an actual lack.

"You just know they've got the oil," Martin said. "I know of wells around here that have oil that are plugged off. Soon as the price gets high enough, there'll be enough to go around."

Shaking his head, Martin pulled a welding torch outside to heat up a stubborn sprocket that needed replacing. Flinging the sprocket onto a junk pile — but still thinking of money and costs he claims have gone up 20 percent since last year — Martin laughed, "there goes another $30."

"A set of cylinder bars is $350, a new grate is $450, gears about $100. Add on concave bars, fingers, sprockets, chains, belts and it's up to $1,500 or $2,000 before you know it," he said, lamenting preparation costs. "And that's just parts. A dealer would charge you $15 an hour for the labor, and we work two months for nothing."

Bret and Bill kept on working in silence punctuated by the clicks of wrenches, thuds of hammers, the hissing of a welder or the whine of a grinder. Bret seemed not to notice gas splashed on tape and gauze that was protecting the tip of his left little finger, cut off a week earlier in a construction accident.

"We've always dreamed of making enough money in a summer to come home and take a couple of weeks vacation," said Bill, who first climbed on a combine at age 7. "But it never seems to happen."

Hockett paced across the Martins' huge shed and nodded in approval of what his experienced eyes saw. He squinted his eyes, pointed his finger and proclaimed harvesting was like any other business.

"You can't learn it overnight," he said. "Nowadays guys think they can buy a couple of machines, throw a fuel tank on a truck and think they're harvesters. Hmmph."

"Well, we make mistakes every year," Martin said. "But we remember them."

Famed Bomber Slowly Rotting

By LES SEAGO
Associated Press Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — They stripped away 38 years of olive-drab paint recently and the Memphis Belle gleamed like a new-minted penny.

But beneath her bright aluminum skin, the once-famous World War II bomber was suffering from a massive case of rot.

"It's so bad we don't know where to start," Master Sgt. Donald Hawkins said. He's one of the Tennessee Air National Guardsmen who has volunteered to refurbish the Belle.

"She's been left unprotected for so long, just neglected, that I don't know whether we can do much good. It's a shame," he said.

The Boeing B-17 was once the pride of the Army Air Corps. With a scantily clad pinup on her nose she flew off to bomb the Germans in 1942.

Despite Luftwaffe fighter pilots and flak gunners, the Belle and her crew finished 25 missions over occupied France in the days when bomber crews' life expectancy was measured in days.

She and they flew back to the United States to sell war bonds and for a reunion of her pilot, Capt. Robert Morgan, with Margaret Polk of Memphis, the original Memphis Belle.

But World War II fame was brief, and the Belle finished her flying days as a trainer and squadron hack. In 1946, someone recognized the Belle awaiting the smelter's furnace at Altus, Okla. An anonymous donor provided the $350 needed to rescue her and fly her to Memphis to serve as a war memorial.

The Belle was mounted on a pedestal in front of the National Guard armory. She sat there behind a chain-link fence until last year with only an occasional touch of paint. Vandals stripped away her control wheels and instruments, leaving names and obscene doggerel scratched in her skin.

Air Guardsmen moved the Belle to Memphis International Airport last year for restoration. Her self-appointed guardian is Frank Donofrio, a businessman and World War II infantry officer, who is trying to raise $2 million for a building to house the bomber.

Corrosion is the major problem. Aluminum will not rust, but left unprotected from moisture it corrodes.

A bomb-bay door hinge is so corroded it fell apart when the Guardsmen began working on it. "We'll finish stripping her down and then give her a coat of primer paint to give the protection we can," another volunteer, Senior Master Sgt. Sid Daniel, said. Daniel said restoration might take years.

"It'll never fly...," he said. "We'll be doing good just to repair her so she can go on display again."

Debate Revived: Who Really Killed Jesse James?

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. (AP) — A handful of historians carefully dug into an abandoned grave last fall. What they found revived a century-old debate about the life — and death — of Jesse James.

Is a .38-caliber bullet they unearthed the slug that "laid poor Jesse" in his grave? Or was it a .44-caliber slug, as the man who pulled the trigger had claimed?

Jesse James has been immortalized in song, prose, film. But the true story behind the legend may never be known. It literally has been whittled away by tourists, fraught with conflicting accounts and glossed over by the prospect of a quick buck.

Was he an American Robin Hood? A greedy murderer? Whatever he was, this outlaw who pioneered the daylight bank holdup and perfected the art of train robbery isn't forgotten. Tourists by the thousands flock to his stomping grounds in Northwest Missouri, and debate over his death on April 3, 1882, still rages.

The grave of Jesse Woodson James was still fresh when his grieving but practical mother, Zerelda, started selling tours of the family log cabin for a quarter. For another two bits, she'd take your picture next to the gravemarker or let you have a pebble from the gravesite. When the pebbles ran low, she'd send a neighbor's kid to the nearby creek for more.

Today, the Jesse James business is booming. "He's become bigger than life," says one historian.

The 20th century team sifting the empty plot on the farm near Kearney, Mo., was mindful of misadventures there more than 75 years before. Jesse's ornate iron casket with glass sides fell apart when his family tried to move it, and some bones fell back into the grave. The remains were moved to a cemetery. But what had been left behind?

The recent excavation turned up pieces of coffin, bone fragments, a tuft of hair and the bullet. No major archaeological find, but enough to answer a few historical questions — and raise many more.

Some 700 books have been written on the James Gang, most of questionable accuracy..

"I'm amazed at the lack of scholarly research on Jesse James," says Milton Perry, a Clay County historian. "Only now are we beginning to know more about the real Jesse James. The real person and the folklore hero aren't much alike."

The greatest Jesse James legend is that he robbed from the rich to give to the poor, but, Perry says, "there's no evidence that the James Gang ever gave to the poor."

Folklore depicted Jesse as lashing out at hated institutions of the day. Banks were a target because they took property from farmers, trains because they ran roughshod over farmers when track was laid.

"The James Gang was innovative; it attacked institutions rather than individuals," Perry says. "People sort of applauded and envied anyone who could rob those hated institutions."

But the evidence indicates that James, like other outlaws, was interested only in loot, and he personally killed 16 persons.

Until recently, it was generally accepted that Jesse was killed by a .44-caliber bullet.

A police firearms expert in Independence, Mo., says the .38-caliber slug found in the James Farm grave could be the fatal bullet. It was old enough, he said, and its condition was "consistent with other slugs which have passed through a victim's skull."

The Pony Express Historical Association in St. Joseph, owner of the murder site, assails that conclusion. A spokesman, Gary Chilcote, claims a hole in the wall at the murder scene is proof that the fatal slug exited Jesse's head.

The hole certainly is proof enough for tourists. Over the years they have managed to widen it to the size of a large potato by collecting keepsake splinters. Chilcote believes one of the early tourists probably retrieved the bullet for a souvenir.

A newspaper story published four days after the murder says an autopsy showed the bullet lodged in Jesse's head. Autopsy records haven't been found, however.

Until all the evidence is in, history buffs in these parts will continue the controversy. And controversy means tourists.

Jesse James' life and death are depicted in sequence near St. Joseph and Kansas City today: The farm near Kearney where he grew up, the Liberty bank 10 miles away where the gang staged its first holdup, and the St. Joseph house where Jesse met his death.

The cabin where Jesse James was born, reared and later hid from authorities rests on rolling farmland overlooking a shallow creek. Its wood planks, brittle after 120 years, need repair.

A $50,000 restoration is underway there, and Parks Director Stephen L. Davis says, "I'm still hoping we'll find a bag of loot stashed somewhere."

The scene of Jesse's first bank robbery, the Clay County Savings Association in Liberty, has been restored. Visitors can buy James Gang souvenirs in the gift shop, and their dollars are beginning to replace the $60,000 Jesse James carried out of town in 1865.

More than 20,000 annually visit the site in St. Joseph where Jesse was murdered.

On the day of his death, Jesse James was discussing bank robbery plans in his house with two new cohorts — Charley and Bob Ford. During the conversation, Jesse noticed a framed inscription on the wall, "God Bless This Home," was crooked. He stood on a chair to straighten it.

The Ford brothers drew their guns — they had been waiting for such a moment. Bob, a baby-faced man of 21, pulled the trigger ending the James Gang's 16-year reign.

The gang had been blamed for nearly every robbery in the country — no matter that some were pulled off at nearly the same time hundreds of miles apart. Historians give this final toll: 11 banks, seven trains, three stagecoaches, one county fair and a payroll messenger.

At the grave, Jesse's mother erected the gravestone bearing these words:

Animal Rights And Research Raise Big Fuss

WASHINGTON (AP) — The small brown monkeys with big ears and large eyes can't even imagine the fuss they are causing.

They sit quietly at the center of international wrangling over lofty questions of justifiable research versus animal rights. Meanwhile, their availability for research decreases, and some persons fear a serious shortage of the valuable research animal.

Some say it is cruel to experiment with animals, others that it is necessary to help man conquer diseases and afflictions. In between is the rhesus monkey, a bare-faced creature standing two-feet tall as an adult, not counting its 12-inch tail.

This heavy-browed animal with close-set eyes is revered in India as the reincarnation of Hanuman, the Hindu monkey god.

While not considered a god by American scientists, the rhesus has become invaluable because of its biological similarity to man. It is considered practically irreplaceable in some work.

"There is a shortage of rhesus monkeys and we are in trouble," says Dr. Robert Whitney, director of the Animal Resources Program at the National Institutes of Health. NIH is the lead department in the federal Interagency Primate Steering Committee, which deals with research animal issues.

Whitney says scientists are not yet complaining too much about the shortage because bans on the export of monkeys from producing countries are relatively new.

"But there is going to be a real crunch five or six years from now if they don't get monkeys elsewhere," he said.

Critics of traditional animal research say they will continue lobbying internationally to cut off, or at least cut down, the supply of animals. They say much of this animal work is unnecessary and uncontrolled.

"There are very good alternatives to a lot of animal research that have been developed," says Shirley McGreal of the International Primate Protection League. "In a hundred years, people will look back to our concentration camps for monkeys and be appalled."

The league and other groups claim responsibility for much of the current shortage because of their campaigns in supplying countries.

The rhesus squeeze began about four years ago when India, the biggest exporter, cut its annual supply to the world from 50,000 to 20,000 monkeys. U.S. researchers traditionally use about half of the world's monkey exports.

In April 1978, India ended all exports because of claims animals were mistreated in laboratory experiments and also used in military radiation research.

The latest blow came last January when Bangladesh, the next-largest rhesus supplier, stopped all exports. Concern about possible military experiments, conservation and disagreements with animal trading companies were cited as reasons.

American officials say there are indications Bangladesh, after getting assurances about the proper use of the animals, may resume limited rhesus trade in the near future.

Dr. Benjamin Blood, executive director of the federal interagency committee, said reports that the monkeys were used in neutron bomb and other weapons work are unfounded. Critics say they have evidence of the military experiments, but Blood says investigation by his group disproves the claims.

"We have very definite verification of no primates being used for weapons development," Blood says. "Monkeys were used in radiation exposure research to determine how to handle it and treat it. But this work is just as important for civilians as for the military."

Whitney says the United States ideally needs about 14,000 new rhesus monkeys a year, but last year less than 11,000 were available.

Rhesus colonies in the United States are producing about 5,000 monkeys a year, barely enough to meet government-required testing of drugs and vaccines, Whitney said. Dealers also are having trouble because export bans put breeding stock in short supply.

Raising monkeys is a relatively high-risk, low-return business, too. The monkeys now cost $450-600 each, compared with $100-250 in 1975.

Females normally produce only one baby a year. Although the rhesus has a lifespan of more than 20 years, it doesn't mature until it is about 4 years old, the age at which it is most in demand.

"That's a long wait on an investment for a low return," Whitney says. "And monkeys are susceptible to about every disease humans are. Tuberculosis, for instance, can wipe out a colony in 30 days."

The use of rhesus monkeys has declined considerably since the 1950s when the kidneys of hundreds of thousands were needed each year to make the Salk polio vaccine. Export bans, increased costs and greater conservation have further cut the numbers used in the United States from about 30,000 a year in the early 1970s, Whitney says.

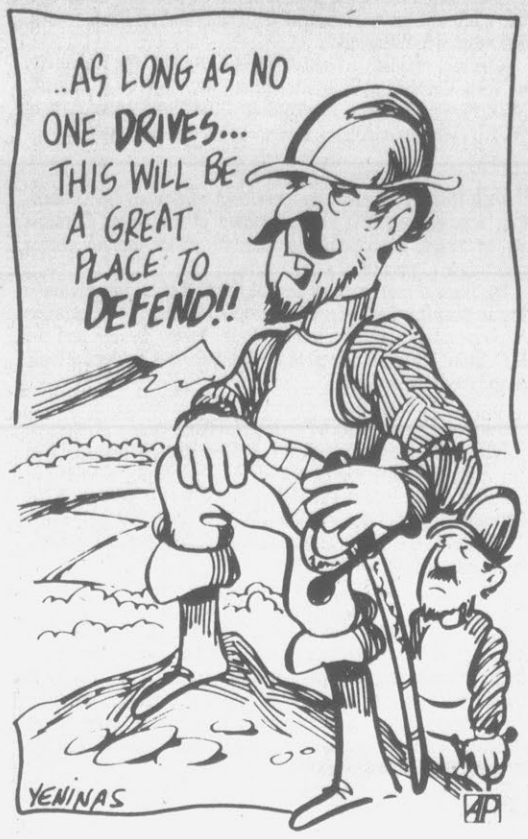
Santiago Is Smoggy City



SMOGGY SANTIAGO — When Pedro de Valdivia, the Spanish conquistador founded Santiago, Chile in 1541, with an eye on its defenses he did not anticipate motor cars and industry and geography would help smog conquer the city. (AP Laserphoto)

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — This is Santiago. Color it gray.

Make the eyes and throats of the four million inhabitants red.

Coat the cars and buildings in grimy dust, the dust that hangs over the city like bomb fallout and has exceeded internationally accepted levels by as much as 70 per cent in recent weeks.

And the snow-capped Andes peaks that are Santiago's postcard image — leave them out of the picture, hidden in smog.

Santiago is one of the world's smoggiest cities, maybe the smoggiest in certain months. This year things have gotten worse at a staggering pace and now for the first time — years after U.S. cities imposed pollution rules — authorities here are trying to do something.

They are requiring checks of auto exhaust systems and levying fines against smoky vehicles. A TV ad campaign also is being used to raise public consciousness, and there are calls for limiting traffic.

And why is Santiago so smoggy?

Environmental expert Eugenio Cruz Vergara explained that in most cities the components of smog are carried to altitudes of 30,000 to 40,000 feet by wind and heat. But natural factors, he said, hold the smog cap over Santiago as low as 200 feet. If it dropped to ground level, it could kill hundreds or even thousands, Cruz Vergara said.

Much of the blame rests with Pedro de Valdivia, the Spanish conquistador who founded Santiago in 1541. He was thinking of protection against invaders when he laid out the city with the Andes at its back and the rolling coastal range in front.

The result is the city has only two entrances for wind, from south and southwest. The winds collide at the city's eastern edge and send the pollutants back into town instead of carrying them up and out.

Valdivia, of course, didn't anticipate the motor car and industry. Cars and buses are kept on the streets of Santiago years longer than in richer countries, and they are big polluters. Walking behind a line of Chilean buses is certain to set off coughing and choking.

Officials also say many new imported cars do not have the pollution control devices required in the manufacturing country, especially those from Japan.

At the same time, the number of cars is growing rapidly because of the military government's open-door import policy. The number of cars increased 13.8 per cent in Santiago during in April alone.

Santiago also has a low annual rainfall — about 14 inches — most of it in July and August, the Southern Hemisphere's winter. Spring and early summer, September into January, are the cleanest because the heat makes dust rise. With the end of summer, things get bad, and by now — late fall — the city is gasping for rain to clean the air.

In recent days, health officials say, the amount of dust suspended in the air has reached 444 micrograms per cubic meter; the World Health Organization has set 256 micrograms as the maximum tolerable. Sulfur trioxide is almost at the WHO's maximum tolerable level.

Officials say there is more dust and sulfur trioxide this year than last. And now, after years of just being polite to environmentalists, the government and people seem convinced something must be done.

Now cars have to be tested for exhaust emissions before new license plates are issued. A small team of health inspectors also is spot checking smoke and carbon monoxide emissions on vehicles stopped at random. On the first day, fines were levied against drivers of 80 per cent of the vehicles checked. The fines range from $20 to $400.

The public service TV announcements declare: "Pollution: Fault of a few, problem of everybody." On World Environment Day, June 5, a group of bicylists rode through a downtown mall wearing gas masks.

Seminars are being held and among suggestions are: Keep cars out of downtown or restrict access with tolls; synchronize traffic lights to reduce stops and starts; move industries out of town; eliminate buses on routes parallel to subway lines; return to electric trolleys.

Even these measures may not be enough. Environmental engineer Carlos Pintz says that if people want to keep living in Santiago they will have to surround themselves with devices to continually clean the air. He says these will become as common as heaters and ventilators.

Associations Gather In Ga.

ATLANTA, GA. — A four-state conference of the Federal Land Bank Associations and Production Credit Associatons will be held here June 17-19 at the Marriott Hotel, according to C. W. S. Horne, president of the Federal Land Bank and Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia.

Attending the business sessions will be over 600 farmer-directors, presidents, and guests of the 46 Land Bank Associations and 58 Production Credit Associations in North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida.

Abortion Meeting Set

The Pitt County Chapter of Citizens Against Tax-Funded Abortions (C.A.T.F.A.) will hold a public meeting 7:30 p.m. Monday in the fellowship hall of the Arlington Street Baptist Church, 1007 W. Evangelists Find Broad Appeal In Mass Media

By RONNIE LOVLER
Associated Press Writer

Praise the Lord and change the channel. The air waves have been "born again."

Religious broadcasters, primarily Christian evangelists, have discovered the saving grace of the mass media — its appeal, format and ability to bring in the bucks.

Sermons have been replaced by Johnny Carson-style talk shows, the hymns by disco-gospel and Jesus rock.

"You can reach thousands of people at one time," says Wayne Miller of Florence, S.C., host of "Good Morning Jesus," a religious talk show seen on 24 television stations.

Evangelists' move to the air waves during the past decade has been so successful they no longer have to count on donated time from commercial stations, once a practice the stations used to meet their public service mandate.

The industry claims 1,000 radio and 35 television stations are broadcasting Christian programs fulltime. The growth rate, they say, is a radio station each week and a television station per month.

Fulltime representatives are employed to buy time on radio, UHF, VHF and cable television stations for what has become a $500 million annual business for the major evangelical broadcast outfits. Most of the money comes from viewers and listeners who respond to the never-ending requests for donations.

The latest broadcast technology is used to beam the message of salvation: Trinity Broadcasting Network of Santa Ana, Calif., and the Christian Broadcasting Network of Virginia Beach, Va., use satellites.

CBN has announced plans for a fourth commercial network to air Christian soap operas, comedies, dramas and news.

Pat Robertson of CBN; Jim Bakker of People That Love, a Charlotte, N.C.-based religious network; and Paul Crouch of Trinity have joined pioneer evangelists Oral Roberts and Billy Graham as titular heads of the "electronic church."

And behind them are hundreds of mostly local ministers finding followers — and new careers — on the air.

Florence's 30-year-old Miller says he would "like to see every church have a television ministry."

A suave, mustachioed man, Miller founded his church seven years ago. Currently, he pays a Florence station to produce his program but he has plans to build his own studio in a few years.

James Thompson, president of WGGS-TV, an evangelical station in Greenville, S.C., says his Faith Church formed the station six years ago so "the work of God could be promoted over television."

"Gospel has impact and television has impact," Thompson says. "Gospel is the message and television is the most effective means of spreading the message."

Thompson produces a nightly religious talk show, but also airs syndicated programs such as Robertson's 700 Club and Bakker's PTL Club.

The 700-Club, takes its name from a fund-raising telethon held in the fall of 1963, when Robertson made a public pitch for donations to keep his media program going.

The son of former U.S. Sen. A. Willis Robertson of Virginia, Robertson needed $7,000 each month to maintain his momentum. He put out a call for 700 "faith partners" who would pledge $10 a month and the 700 Club was born.

Since then, Robertson has parlayed his media outreach program into a multi-million dollar empire that is soon to spawn what he hopes will become the fourth major national network, the Continental Broadcasting Network.

Continental Broadcasting will be made up of four UHF television stations in Norfolk-Portsmouth, Va.; Atlanta, Dallas and Boston; and six radio stations — one in Norfolk and the others in upstate New York. All now form parts of the CBN, which has an appraised value of between $35 million and $40 million.

Robertson decided to operate his network as a commercial venture following reports of tax disputes between the non-profit CBN and the city of its headquarters, Virginia Beach, Va.

David Hazzard, a spokesman for CBN, says network offerings will include sports, news, soap operas, situation comedies and family movies.

Writers already are at work on soap opera scripts which Hazzard says will focus on a Christian approach to living. Instead of showing a marital dispute ending with one partner leaving in a rage, CBN would show the couple resolving their problems through prayer.

"We would show someone reading the Bible, going to a counselor who would tell him how the Lord could help," Hazzard says.

Ben Armstrong, executive director of the National Association of Religious Broadcasters in Morristown, N.J., says more Americans are now listening to Christian programs than attending traditional churches.

A study conducted for the association shows that 47 percent of the U.S. population take in the electronic church during a week, while only 41 percent attend a service in person, Armstrong said.

Armstrong finds part of the appeal a result of the personalized, individualized nature of the evangelical movement.

"There was a change of mood in the country from the 1960's when there was a revolutionary feeling," he said. "In the 70's, there was a shift back to the basics.

"People are starved for what helps them," Armstrong said. "They want somethig spiritual, of a personal nature and they are supporting it financially."

Jim Bakker's PTL in Charlotte, N.C., received a record $1 million in donations on a single day last year when he broadcast an appeal for contributions to ease the network through a financial crisis.

Bakker and his family were also recently given a $195,000 house by a Floyd County, Ky., couple who described the gift as their "way of helping."

Pair Wed in Tampa

TAMPA, FLA. — Former Greenville resident Miss Patsy Jo Godwin was married Friday at 6:00 p. m. in the First Reformed Church of Tampa to Ralph Edmund Wittliff of Tampa.

Mrs. Wittliff is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fresh W. Godwin Jr. of Tampa and the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Taylor of Lucama. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Edmund R. Wittliff of Tampa.

Officiating at the double ring ceremony was the Rev. Leon Roggen. The bride's father gave her in marriage.

The honor attendant to the bride was Jackie Finlason of Tampa. Mark Timmes of Gainesville, Fla. was the bridegroom's best man. Ushers were Greg Porter and Bob Delledonne, both of Tampa.

Organ music was provided by Mrs. Judy Larson.

The bride wore a floor length satin and chiffon gown fashioned with a fitted bodice and a chiffon ruffle adorned with Alencon lace and satin ribbon. The skirt was four-tiered and ruffled and extended into a chapel train. Each tier was trimmed with the same lace and satin ribbon as the bodice. The veil, two-tiered and of illusion, was trimmed in Venise lace and fell from a Camelot cap. The dress and headpiece were made by the bride's mother. The bride's flowers were spring posies — daisies, mums, carnations, cornflowers and baby's breath.

Both bride and bridegroom are graduates of the University of South Florida with degrees in accounting. The bride is employed at Chloride Inc. of Tampa; the bridegroom at Zayre. They will honeymoon in Clearwater, Fla. and live in Tampa.

A buffet supper was held at Sweden House, with guests greeted by Katrina Barnes of Lucama. The wedding cake was a gift of Max and Maggie Theodore.

The rehearsal dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom Thursday night at Mama Mia's. The bridal couple chose this occasion to remember attendants with gifts.

Attending from Greenville were Mrs. Jo Ann Sutton, Mrs. Betty French, Miss Jo Ann French, Mrs. Ann Smith and Miss Tammy Smith.

Terri Jo Ross, Mr. Little Married

AYDEN — Miss Terri Jo Ross and Gregory Keith Little were united in marriage Saturday at 7:00 p. m. in the Ayden Free Will Baptist Church.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Don Leslie Carson of Ayden and Harry R. Ross of Kinston. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Betty Hardesty of Ayden and the late Thad Linwood Little.

The Rev. C. H. Overman performed the double ring ceremony. A program of nuptial music was presented by Miss Jeanne Overman and Miss Patricia Buck, the latter of whom accompanied herself on the guitar and sang, "We've Only Just Begn," "The Twelfth of Never," and "The Wedding Song."

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her stepfather, the bride wore a white formal-length gown of organza, chantilly and venise lace. The gown was designed with a high see-through neckline with appliques of venise lace, empire bodice trimmed with chantilly and venise lace with ruffle cap sleeves. The A-line skirt was scattered with flower appliques with borders of matching lace and attached brush train. Her headpiece was venise lace Bandeau attached to a fingertip tier mantilla trimmed and appliqued with venise lace. She carried a cloud of baby's breath with white daisies and white miniature carnations.

Miss Becky Little of Ayden, sister of the bridegroom, was honor attendant. She wore a formal floral gown of organza in yellow, green and apricot with a blouson bodies, scoop neckline caplet sleeves, and a full circular skirt. She carried apricot pompons with baby's breath and streamers.

Bridesmaids were Miss Teresa Griffin of Winterville, Miss Diane Walls of Ayden, and Mrs. Barbara Butler of Vanceboro. Each carried a colonial nosegay of yellow daisies, apricot miniature carnations and baby's breath.

Stanley Little, brother of the bridegroom, of Ayden was best man. Groomsmen were Mike Vanscoy of Ayden, Billy Cozart of Ayden, and Randy Butler of Vanceboro.

The bride's mother wore a green gown with matching chiffon cape and carried a ring bouquet of white miniature carnations. The mother of the bridegroom wore a rose gown with attached chiffon cape and a white miniature carnations corsage. Ms. Mary Nichols of Atlanta, Ga. and Ms. Letha Bradshaw of Ayden, grandmothers of the couple, were remembered with corsages.

Miss Teresa Little of Winterville, cousin of the bridegroom, presided at the guest register. Mrs. Betty Robertson directed the wedding. After the ceremony, the mothers were remembered by the couple with red roses.

The bride graduated from Ayden-Grifton High School and attended Pitt Technical Institute. She is now employed by Pitt Technical Institute.

The bridegroom attended Ayden-Grifton High School and Pitt Technical Institute and is employed by Jack McRoy as a carpenter. The couple will reside in Ayden.

The reception was given by the bride's parents in the church fellowship hall. Mr. and Mrs. Carl King of Ayden greeted guests. Mrs. Kathleen Hardee of Greenville, great aunt of the bride, served cake. Ms. Peggy Carson of Greenville poured punch.

Friday night following the rehearsal, the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Betty Hardesty, and stepfather, Sid Hardesty, entertained at a party in their home.

Make Dry Run

Before packing the trunk of the car with heavy luggage, try a "dry run" with the empty bags and make a diagram so you'll know which pieces fit where.

Be Choosey

When buying grapes, be choosey. Look for bunches with well-colored, plump berries firmly atttached to green pliable stems.

Avoid soft or wrinkled grapes, those with bleached areas around the stem end, and any "leaking" grapes. Ripe and ready to eat when harvested, grapes should be refrigerated after purchase. Just before serving, wash them under a gentle spray and pat dry.

1915 Teachers Had Rough Rules

By Abigail Van Buren

1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 83, in good health, drive my own car and read you faithfully in the Alliance, Ohio, Review.

I'd like to share something with you that I've kept for many years. Perhaps you'd like to put this in your "My, How Times Have Changed" file.

It was published in the Cabell County (W. Va.) Board of Education's school bulletin in 1915:

RULES OF CONDUCT FOR TEACHERS

1) You will not marry during the term of your contract.
2) You are not to keep company with men.
3) You must be home between the hours of 8 p.m. and 6 a.m. unless attending a school function.
4) You may not loiter downtown in ice cream stores.
5) You may not travel beyond the city limits unless you have the permission of the chairman of the board.
6) You may not ride in a carriage or automobile with any man unless he is your father or brother.
7) You may not smoke cigarettes.
8) You may not dress in bright colors.
9) You may under no circumstances dye your hair.
10) You must wear at least two petticoats.
11) Your dresses must not be any shorter than two inches above the ankle.
12) To keep the schoolroom neat and clean, you must: sweep the floor at least once daily; scrub the floor at least once a week with hot, soapy water; clean the blackboards at least once a day, and start the fire at 7 a.m. so the room will be warm by 8 a.m. Just sign me...

AN OLD TIMER

DEAR OLD TIMER: Those "rules of conduct" sound more like a prison sentence than a teacher's contract. Fortunately, times have changed!

DEAR ABBY: My husband sometimes goes to topless bars with some of his buddies. I'm sure he wouldn't cheat on me; he just likes to look.

He comes right home, and I know he loves me, but I still don't like the idea of him going to topless bars. What is your opinion?

JEALOUS IN BALTIMORE

DEAR JEALOUS: It doesn't matter where a man works up an appetite as long as he comes home to eat.

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure you've heard a lot of men complain because their wives are cold and unresponsive.

May I tell you about my marriage?

My husband and I both work. In the evening I try to draw him into a conversation by asking about his work. His answers are short and dull. I try to generate conversation by telling him about my work, but he's clearly bored.

I've tried to discuss the news, politics, and even make small talk about people we know, but he cuts me short and picks up a newspaper, magazine or turns on the TV.

On Sunday he likes to stay home and watch whatever sport in on TV. After that more TV. Then he starts looking for an affectionate bed partner. Abby, I wonder how many women can get turned on by a stranger she hasn't talked to all week?

ICE-COLD CONNIE

DEAR CONNIE: Maybe when he says 'Hello' he's told you all he knows.

Do you wish you had more friends? For the secret of popularity, get Abby's new booklet: "How To Be Popular; You're Never Too Young or Too Old." Send $1 with a long, self-addressed, stamped (28 cents) envelope to Abby, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Mr. Garrett Wed In Wilson

WILSON — Radford Marvin Garrett III, whose parents live in Greenville, took Mary Kathleen Pittman of Rt. 2, Wilson as his bride Saturday at 2:00 p. m. in St. Timothy's Episcopal Church here.

Garrett is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Radford Marvin Garrett Jr. of 605 E. Tenth St., Greenville. The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Malory Alfred Pittman Jr. of Rt. 2, Wilson.

The Rev. Downs Spitler officiated at the double ring ceremony and the bride's father gave her in marriage. The bridegroom's father served him as best man.

The bride wore a formal gown of sheer white sato-peau with a Victorian neckline appliqued in reembroidered alencon lace with accents of seed pearls and irridescent sequins extending into a chapel train. Her full-length mantilla of French illusion was bordered with pearls and lace. She carried a cascading bouquet of gardenias, white roses, stephanotis, babie's baby's breath and sprengri fern.

The maid of honor was Miss Alice Cox Horton of Wilson. She wore a formal gown of seafoam green with deep Bertha collar forming a capelet and a free-flowing accordian-pleated skirt. She carried a silk nosegay of mixed pastel flowers accented with baby's breath.

Bridesmaids were Miss Mary Louise Parker of Elm City; Miss Myra Dwight Garrett, Miss Frances Elizabeth Garrett, and Miss Mary Grimes Garrett, all of Greenville; Miss Elizabeth Thorne, Miss Bridget Daniell Wray, Miss Betty Whitehead, and Miss Theresa Michaud, all of Wilson. Each of them was dressed identically to the maid of honor.

Junior bridesmaids, also dressed like the maid of honor, were Chassie and Norrie Post of Atlanta, Ga. They carried matching baskets of silk flowers.

Ushers were Christopher Sholes Garrett, Julian White Rawls, William Ronald Taylor, Thomas Donald Taylor, and Samuel Kevin Price, all of Greenville; Malory Alfred Pittman III, John Stephen Pittman and Thomas Michael Smith, all of Wilson; Jeffrey Miles Minges of Kinston; and John Lynwood Hunt and George Graham Hunt, both of Oxford.

The organist was Charles Bakow; the crucifer, Vance B. Young.

The bride attended Sweet Briar College in Virginia and UNC-Chapel Hill. She was a member of Kappa Delta Sorority and made her debut in 1976 in Raleigh.

The bridegroom is a tobacconist associated with J. P. Taylor Company of Richmond, Va. He attended East Carolina University and belonged to Kappa Alpha Fraternity.

The couple will take a wedding trip to Hilton Head, S. C. and will reside in Wilson.

The wedding reception was held at the home of the bride. Aqua and white tents covered the tables decorated with spring flowers.

Parents of the bridegroom hosted the after-rehearsal dinner at the Wilson Country Club, New Hope Hills. The bride's table was covered by a cutwork lace cloth that belonged to the bridegroom's late grandmother, Mrs. Radford M. Garrett Jr.

Following the dinner a dance was given by friends of the bridegroom's family. Music was provided by Five Degrees South.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Fathers used to be a lot like a kitchen clock. They had a familiar face, were always in the same spot, kept pretty good time and were never missed or appreciated until the day they stopped ticking.

The truth is until a few years ago, people actually knew very little about fathers. Whenever there was a car to be parked or brought around (especially when it rained or snowed), they were there.

They spent a lifetime changing fuses and answering the phone when everyone else was busy. They were one of the few who could find the garbage can in the dark, blow up a plastic swimming pool without fainting, and deal with mice. They alone held the secret of what number motor oil was used in the car and their name was always being used in vain like, "Ask your father," or "Wait till your father gets home."

They were rarely in family photos because they were always taking them.

It's only been during the last three or four years that research has made some rather amazing discoveries about fathers. They have human characteristics, love their children, fight to have them born, fight for custody of them, and experience an empty nest syndrome when they leave.

A letter from a woman in Oxnard, Calif., posed a rather interesting question to me. She asked, "What do you say to a father who allowed no one else to 'hit' you because 'they don't love you enough to hit you'?

"What do you say to a father who worked Christmas eve and Christmas day so Santa Claus could bring you the Betsy Wets doll you had your heart set on?

"What do you say to a father who walked with you down the aisle to be married and when the minister asked who gives this woman away, shouted in a loud, proud voice, 'I don't ever give my girl to anybody. If this young man wants to marry her, he has my permission, but only if he swears to me that if it becomes necessary he'll return her to me!

"What do you say to a father who has leukemia but who insisted on teaching his three-year-old grandson how to ride a bike without training wheels because he wanted Grandpa to help him?"

How indeed? You run, walk, hike, call, crawl, fly, or just stand in the back yard and shout, "Thank you for being!"

OUR DOCTRINAL STANDARDS—Our first and final rule for all doctrine, faith and practice is God's Holy Word, the Bible. We believe the Bible is the written Word of God, without error in the original manuscripts, and of infallible and divine authority in all matters of faith and practice. Therefore, all of our teaching and preaching is from the Bible.

OUR CHURCH'S VISION—All of our teaching and preaching is centered in the Bible. We believe God's Word provides the answers to today's situation, just as it did 2000 years ago. Just as man breaking God's laws disrupts the ecological balance, so man breaking God's spiritual laws upsets man's relationship with other men and God. Submission to God's Word, the Bible, is the key to resolving these problems.

Rena Beaman, Charles Shackleford Wed Friday

Rena Wanelle Beaman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Beaman of Greenville, became the bride of Charles Eugene Shackleford, son of Mr. John Shackelford and the late Mrs. Minnie Jenkins Shackleford, Friday, 7 p.m. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. L. Newton in the Greenville Church of God.

A program of wedding music was presented by Obie Godley, organist. Rena Riggs, soloist, sang, "Whither Thou Goest" and "The Wedding Praver."

The church was decorated with a 15-branch brass crescent candelabra with an arrangement on each side of white chrysanthemums and yellow cushion poms. Palms of emerald greenery were also used. The couple knelt on a brass kneeling bench. Pews were marked with white bridal satin.

The mothers of the bridal couple were remembered with white carnation corsages. The mother of the bride wore a formal length dress of light turquoise blue with a scalloped lace jacket. The bridegroom's stepmother wore a formal length rose dress.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal length gown of white organza over white peau de soie, designed with an open neckline featuring a stand-up Queen Anne collar outlined in scalloped chantilly lace with pearl clusters. The empoire bodice was overlaid in imported French chantilly lace, with sheer organza shepherdess sleeves trimmed in scalloped chantilly lace. The A-line skirt was enhanced by a panel of knife pleated organza from which the reddingcote design flowed to an attached chapel length train of imported French chantilly lace edged and trimmed at the hemline with scalloped lace. The bride wore a tiered illusion veil, held in place by a camelot cap overlaid with chantilly lace beaded with pearls. She carried a colonial nosegay of white daisies and yellow gypsophilia, with white lace bows and streamers with daisies in love knots. White lace ribbons were interspersed throughout the bouquet.

The matron of honor was Mrs. Gaye Neal of Winterville. She wore a formal length orchid dress and carried a white chrysanthemum with greenery, orchid bows and streamers. Bridesmaids were Nora Shackleford, sister of the bridegroom, and Teresa Manning, both of Greenville. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Damone of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Col. (Ret.) and Mrs. James Hickey of Vadito, N. M.

The bride given in marriage by her father, and her son, Joseph Allan Garris, chose a floor length peach gown with attached cape and peasant neckline. She carried a bouquet of variegated flowers and sonia roses, with matching flowers in her hair.

Carol Klingenschmidt of Greenville served as honor attendant. She selected a navy blue floor length gown with a sheer cape in shades of blue and gray. She carried a bouquet of variegated flowers with navy streamers.

Miss Tammy Damone of Tarboro, niece of the bride, served as flower girl. She wore a light blue dotted swiss gown with puff sleeves and lace trim and carried a basket trimmed in light blue ribbons.

Guests included the bridegroom's parents and grandparents, as well as Mrs. Bonnie Belle Bedsole of Wilmington, great-aunt of the bride. The three-tier wedding cake featured rosebuds which matched the bride's gown.

High Heels Can Be Hazardous. . .

By KAREN BACHMAN

CHAPEL HILL — From their beginnings in the 16th Century to the moment a little girl wobbles in her mother's shoes, high heels have been a hallmark of women's fashion.

This spring, high heels are back. And, said a podiatrist at North Carolina Memorial Hospital, so are a large number of women patients.

"I know within a few months of these shoes being on the market again, I will have to add on to my waiting room," said Dr. Richard S. Lotwin. The reason is, "they're not very sensible. A body on a high heel is much like a camera on a tripod that's had one leg lifted. You have to do a lot to keep it from falling." But that hasn't stopped women from wearing them.

"What they do is enhance attractiveness," said Lotwin. "They give a woman a long, leggy look. Even ladies with fat ankles don't look so fat when they're standing on their toes."

To compensate for the forward shift in body weight the shoes cause, Lotwin said women inadvertently highlight the more sensual parts of their bodies, and adjust their gait "so there's more hustle to the bustle."

But they're also responsible for a string of ailments that include sprained ankles and broken bones, back pain, calf pain, hammer toes, bunions, foot ulcer, athlete's foot and degenerative arthritis of the joints. Medical attention associated with high heels can range from regular visits to the doctor to surgery, he said.

"In the first place, high heels were invented by an idiot," Lotwin said. "Most toe boxes (inside the shoes) are triangular shaped while most feet are almost rectangular shaped, sort of like trying to put a square peg in a round hole."

High heels have nothing to do with function, he added, but they do change how our body works and reacts.

High heels on a woman change her center of gravity, Lotwin said. "And there's not much to stand on. The result is less force to push a person into an abnormal position."

"It's not just the heel, but the shoes' narrowness, too," he added. The foot's 26 bones are lifted to unnatural positions, pushing a woman's weight forward. That, he explained, can cause a spontaneous break.

Back pain occurs from the way women hold their spines to compensate for the forward thrust the heels cause, Lotwin noted. The raised foot can cause permanent contracture of the calf muscle. And the problems don't necessarily go away after the women stop wearing the heels.

"I've seen models and older women who have worn high heels for too long who couldn't get their heels down on the ground with their shoes off." Lotwin pointed out. "Their calf muscles are in a permanent state of contracture and they have to walk on their toes."

If they try to change into something like a pair of tennis hsoes, Lotwin said they're likely to injure their Achilles tendon. The healing of such injuries can be accompanied with the development of dense fibrous tissue, and the muscles can lose some of their elasticity forever.

Alarming as that may sound, Lotwin said that's not the worst he sees happen.

"What price beauty? I can't tell you how many women come in asking me to cut off their little toes, which I refuse to do."

How long can a person wear the shoes before doing any damage the podiatrist can't say, but any wear at all increases the risk of falling.

"In reality, the only people that benefit from high heels are the shoe industry and the podiatrists and orthopedic surgeons that treat the results of wearing them," said Lotwin. "Certainly not the patient."

Miss Rita Faye Manning Wed

Rita Faye Manning and Gary Wayne Stallings, both of Greenville, were united in marriage Friday, 7 p.m., at Faith Assembly of God. The Rev. Larry Downy conducted the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Glenn Manning of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Henry J. Stallings and Mrs. Judy Stallings, both of Greenville.

The bride, given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, wore a formal length gown of white silkened organza over peau de soie designed with a high neckline, encircled with silk venise lace. The empire bodice was enhanced by appliques of venise lace that extended on down to and around the waistline. The sheer long sleeves were styled with miniature lace rows edged in ruffled organza trimmed in lace. The modified A-line skirt and attached chapel length train were edged in matching lace, with floral lace appliques on the full skirt. The bride wore an illusion veil edged in cluny lace held in place by a camelot cap overlaid in lace. She carried a bouquet of white carnations, with baby's breath and white streamers.

Debbie Manning, sister of the bridegroom of Greenville served as matron of honor, with Kim Davis of Greenville, cousin of the bride, as maid of honor. They wore formal length pale green dresses and carried white mums with green streamers.

Bridesmaids were Kathy Lloyd and Sharon Burroughs, both of Greenville. They wore formal gowns of pale yellow and carried white mums with yellow streamers. Junior bridesmaid was Robin Cates of Greenville, cousin of the bride, who chose a formal gown of yellow and white. She carried white mums with yellow streamers. Rice girl was Dawn Cates of Saratoga, cousin of the bride. She wore a dress identical to the junior bridesmaid's gown.

Tony Manning of Greenville, uncle of the bride, served as best man. Ushers were Mike and Wilbur Manning of Greenville, brother and uncle of the bride. Ricky Cates of Greenville, cousin of the bride, served as ring bearer.

A reception was held following the ceremony. Mrs. Jean Davis and Mrs. Geraldine Manning assisted in serving the cake after the couple cut the traditional first slice. Mrs. Angela Corey also assisted in serving refreshments. Mrs. Annette Bunting presided at the register. Mrs. Jerry Smith served as the wedding director.

The bride is a rising senior at North Pitt High School. The bridegroom is a graduate of D. H. Conley High School and is employed as a brick mason with Manning Construction.

BERRY PRESERVES

Well worth making.

1 quart (about) fully ripe strawberries, rinsed and hulled
4 cups sugar
¼ cup ruby port
¾ cup water
1 box (1¾-ounce) fruit pectin

Crush, do not puree, enough strawberries to measure 2 cups. Gradually stir in sugar. Turn into an electric blender and whirl until mixture is blended. With a long-handle spoon stir in port; let stand in blender container for 10 minutes. In a small saucepan stir together water and pectin; stirring constantly, bring to a boil and boil 1 minute; gradually stir into fruit mixture in blender. Whirl until just mixed — about ½ minute. At once pour into sterilized ½-pint (no larger) jars; cover with caps and screw bands. Let stand at room temperature until set — usually 24 hours. Store in freezer. Makes five ½-pint jars plus about ½ cup.

Patio Dinner

Bride-elect Jennifer Kim Jones and her fiance, J. Patrick McLaughlin, were special guests at a patio dinner given in honor of the engaged couple by the bride's parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Elwood E. Jones entertained at their residence Saturday. Wedding attendants and other guests were served a four-course dinner and dessert of homemade cake and ice cream.

By DENNIS MONTGOMERY
Associated Press Writer

BUTLER, Tenn. (AP) — Settling in the steel glider on the shady porch of her home in the hollow, Mrs. Virginia Maude Bunton thought of the woman far away in Utah whose twin daughters joined at the head were recently separated by surgeons.

She knows the agony of the mother.

"I think of her often," Mrs. Bunton said. "You are all the time worried. I guess as long as they live there will be worries."

Mrs. Bunton toys with the idea of telephoning Salt Lake City, if only to offer Patricia Hansen some understanding.

Her own daughters were born joined at the head 23 years ago.

It was on Aug. 9, 1956, that Mrs. Bunton, her father and a neighbor lady climbed into a Plymouth at 3 a.m. and twisted through the hills to the Elizabethton hospital 30 miles away.

She was 21 years old and three months a widow. It was her third delivery and it nearly killed her. A day later her tired father, a missionary Baptist preacher named John McCloud, reappeared with the news that she'd had given birth to Siamese twins, joined above the right foreheads. Together they weighed but 7 pounds and 3 ounces.

Doctors expected neither tiny Teresa Kay nor Virginia Kate to live.

They did and last week the two girls were reunited after a year of being miles apart. Teresa had married and moved to Indiana and Virginia — Ginny, as she is called — had stayed at home on the family tobacco farm in the Iron Mountains.

On this day, Mrs. Bunton remembered.

"I just wanted to die," she said, "because I didn't know what to do, you know. I look back and I don't know how I did it."

Ginny's fingers absently drum on the piece of perforated plastic that guards the gap in her skull and protects her brain. She'll wear it taped beneath her dark brown hair for the rest of her life. Teresa has one as well.

A shy, reticent girl who fared not so well as her sister in the separation, Ginny squints her hazel eyes and struggles to remember when it was she understood that other children were different.

"Our mother told us about it and then she showed us, you know, in the newspapers," she said.

Teresa says, "It was when I was about 10 or 11 years old, probably, when I realized what it was all about. It really felt good to be one of them, a Siamese twin, and that we lived and lived to be separated and we lived afterwards, too, because we are the only two known except for these other ones."

Her mind was on 18-month-old Lisa and Elisa Hansen struggling for survival as she and Ginny had.

The excitement the births caused around Butler did not extend beyond the mountains. A four-paragraph Associated Press dispatch was the only notice of them printed in Nashville's morning newspaper.

But word reached the late U.S. Rep. B. Carroll Reece from the Bunton's upper East Tennessee district. On Oct. 3, Reece flew Mrs. Bunton and the infants to the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness, a clinical center at the National Institutes of Health at Bethesda, Md.

Dr. Maitland Baldwin took charge of the case and the government stood the expense. The girls' father, Raymond, was a 39-year-old disabled veteran when he died of a heart attack and his children were entitled to medical benefits.

The tissue linking Ginny and Teresa was less than 3 inches by 4 inches. But there was an outside chance the brains were bridged and the operation would be but the third of its kind.

On Dec. 11, in a seven-hour surgery, the girls were parted. They were four months and two days old.

For the first time, the babies slept in separate cribs. Soon each rested with a large doll so they wouldn't miss one another.

Though a University of Illinois specialist, Dr. Anthony N. Silvetti, successfully grafted sections of embryonic calfskin across the open skulls, the girls lost copious amounts of fluid from their brains.

Forty-two days later, Ginny developed Friedlander's bascillus meningitis.

Ginny clung to life but developed epileptic seizures and still takes phenobarbital each day to stave them off.

The girls were 14 months old before they returned to Bunton Hollow.

But with the supplementary surgeries and check-ups, the NIH hospital became their second home throughout their childhood.

Baldwin died in 1970 and the twins lost interest in bone grafts or other attempts to make them whole.

Once they tried to implant a steel plate in Teresa's skull, but it wasn't successful.

"The place, it's really soft," she said. "When the plastic headpiece is off — you can take it off and see the heart beat."

Until they were 13, the twins wore padded bonnets for protection. They attended public school their first year, but from then on, through high school, they were tutored at home.

The girls had photos made for the high school annual and attended Johnson County High in Mountain City for the first time on May 31, 1976 — graduation day.

A year earlier, Rick Ward had come down from Indiana to visit his grandparents. In December he married Teresa and they moved to Granger, Ind., a suburb of South Bend.

Ginny stayed in the hollow and sometimes she sounds lonely. Girlfriends? "I've not got none," she said. "No, I've not got no boyfriend right now either. I did have one."

"I cook and do the house work and mow the yard and I watch TV and listen to records."

Ginny reads each night from her Bible, a leatherbound volume where she keeps a newspaper photo of Ginny and Teresa connected. She goes to church three times a week. And she writes to her sister often.

Ginny and Teresa saw each other for the first time in nearly a year on June 5 when The Associated Press reunited them in Granger for photographs.

"I always just thought of myself as normal," Teresa said. "I'm proud to be one of the Siamese twins, just really proud to be one."

Sometimes Ginny wonders, "Why me?"

Teresa wants to have children of her own.

"I've always dreamed of having twins, a little boy and a little girl," she said.

That brought the Hansen twins back to mind.

"Whenever I find out there is an article about it, we'll go out and get it because I'm fascinated about the way things are going with them and, like I said, I hope they have a really happy life and get along okay, well as we have."

"I hope their life," Ginny said thoughtfully, "is a better one."

Olympic Skater Now A Dancer

FOND DU LAC, Wis. (AP) — Cherrie Stroukoff, whose husband went from Olympic skating to ballroom dancing, recommends a dance floor for enhancing domestic harmony.

"One couple openly told us it definitely saved their marriage," says Mrs. Stroukoff, who runs the Fondy Academy of Dance with her husband Peter. "Now they have candlelight dinners and go out together again."

Stroukoff, a member of the U.S. Olympic team in 1968, and his wife met about five years ago in Tulsa, Okla., while both worked at a dance studio there.

Stroukoff later managed a Fred Astaire studio franchise in Nashville, Tenn. Then, three years ago while visiting relatives here, the couple decided to open their own studio.

The Stroukoffs, both 30 and parents of a 7-year-old daughter, say dancing is both a hobby and their profession. They tell anyone who asks that it is a main ingredient in a happy household.

"Dancing makes you aware of the other person," Mrs. Stroukoff said. "When dancing, you constantly are thinking of what can make your partner's part easier."

"We are both always trying to make the other person look better," Stroukoff said. "Our whole day is spent this way."

The Stroukoffs, whose studio is a 25-by 28-foot room in their home, specialize in teaching adult couples ballroom dancing, polka, discotheque routines and even belly dancing.

When they find time, they travel to Chicago and as far as California in search of professional trainers who can expand their repertoire. They occasionally compete in dance contests.

Stroukoff is from a family of ice skaters — his brother, Andy, was the nation's No. 2 ice dancer last year.

Dancing by itself, said Mrs. Stroukoff, isn't guaranteed to save a deteriorating marriage.

"Most professional dancers I know who have married their partners eventually split up or at least go out and get another partner," she said.

But she said she had yet to see marriage spoiled by dancing, and had never known a reasonably sound marriage that wasn't improved by it. "It's a great way to get people back together again, or closer together," she said, acknowledging it might not be the first thing a marriage counselor would recommend: "It's something most people wouldn't think of."

She said she and her husband tried to suggest that idea to their customers by dancing for them. "People expect so much in a first marriage, and when it fails, you are willing to try harder at the second marriage. But you have to find happiness in yourself."

Mrs. Stroukoff was born to Assembly of God Church missionaries in Borneo, where she said she had learned Western and Oriental dances before finishing high school in America.

The Stroukoffs have hired three teaching assistants to help handle their growing business, whose patronage is getting more oriented to couples, she said.

"This year, we have more couples than we do singles, while last year there were more single customers than couples," she said.

"That may just mean a shift in disco dance styles. Tastes change from season to season, you know," she said. "But certainly we are seeing a lot more couples, and we like to think we've had something to do with it."

When the Face Lift Falls

I had a face-lift operation two years ago. I invested a lot of hope and money in having this done. Now, everyone admits there is absolutely no change in how I look. Some think the skin has dropped so much that I look even older than I did before the operation. I would have another face lift by another plastic surgeon if I thought I wouldn't be headed for disappointment again. What is your opinion? — Mrs. S.L., Ill.

Dear Mrs. L.:

Even the most skillful plastic surgeons prepare their patients for the possibility that the facial lift operation will not hold up indefinitely. It is true that in most instances five to eight years is considered the "life span" of such an operation. But the number of years is no reflection on the surgical skill of the plastic surgeon. Rather, it depends on the physiological makeup of the patient's skin and healing capacity.

Unfortunately, it is impossible for surgeons to anticipate the final result of any cosmetic surgery, or how long it will be sustained. Surgeons, therefore, spend a great deal of time with their patients before the operation informing them of the uncertainties, the risks and even the disappointments that are sometimes associated with cosmetic surgery. In fact, surgeons even try to dissuade patients from such operations if they feel the results will not fulfill all their hopeful dreams.

Slight revisions of the operation may often bring gratifying results. It would be wise to go back to your doctor and discuss this possibility with him.

Changing doctors for another face lift does not guarantee or insure a better or longer-sustained result.

I have an allergic nose. It runs clear fluid, it itches and I sneeze incessantly. For years this happened only in the fall, the ragweed season. Now my miseries have extended to the spring. In addition, I've started to wheeze when I take deep breaths. Can allergies change from time to time? I haven't been doing anything different. I live in the same neighborhood and I have no animals. — Miss D.M., N.Y.

Dear Miss M.:

You certainly give a classical description of the miseries of allergy. Your story is not an unusual one. Normally, the offending substance or pollen in the air fits into a time cycle. Sometimes, one or more irritating pollens, working in conjunction with each other, may produce these symptoms at different times of the year.

The body responds in peculiar ways to offending substances. Some people develop nasal symptoms, others may develop itching eyes, still others get giant hives of the skin. And in many instances, the bronchial tubes are irritated and produce asthmatic wheezes that are not a true asthma.

Allergies do "change" and must be actively treated with the new drugs that are now available.

PEDICAB DRIVER John "Doc" Halliday gives two passengers, Jill Belliveau and Sharon Atkan, a ride to the beach at Waikiki in Honolulu. An estimated 180 pedicabs are operating on the island.

Pedicabs Relief To Tired Feet

By HOLLY KURTZ
Associated Press Writer

HONOLULU (AP) — When the feet get tired and there's standing room only on the buses, the visitor in Waikiki can hop a ride on a pedicab — a cross between a bicycle and an Asian rickshaw.

The pedicab drivers travel the streets of Waikiki along with the cars, taxicabs and buses, pedaling tourists for an average 5-15-minute ride to hotels, restaurants and shops.

It's an open-air vehicle, with one wheel and the driver's seat in front, and two wheels with a cushioned seat in back wide enough for two adults.

"It's a novelty, like cable cars are to San Francisco," says driver David Grollnek, 25, who came to Hawaii from Los Angeles in 1977.

"It's too nice a day to take a bus," said Helen Cameron of San Diego, Calif., who took the 10-minute ride from the center of Waikiki to a morning hula show.

"A pedicab is typically Hawaiian, not in a rush. I came here to escape the hustle and bustle," she added.

The going rate for two people traveling 10 or 15 minutes is $5, and a single person usually pays $3 or $4. Traveling to a location outside Waikiki may cost $10 to $15 for two, and a one-hour tour runs $20.

Fares are not regulated; they are set by the driver, who pays $8 for a 12-hour rental of a pedicab and then keeps his fares and tips.

There's no exact count, but pedicab-company owners and city officials estimate 150 to 180 pedicabs are in operation here, almost all in the Waikiki resort area.

Young men and women become pedicab drivers for different reasons.

"I can pick my own hours and I'm my own boss," says Kevin Kennedy, 22, an electrical engineering major at the University of Hawaii.

"This is my living," he noted. "Some pedicab drivers are here just to have enough money for the bike and food and a couple beers. Some just earn enough for a ticket to Australia."

Grollnek says the job offers a cultural lesson.

"Everyone's the same. They just have different customs," he says. "It's like going around the world and staying in one place."

Female pedicab drivers say they don't want riders to feel guilty that the women are working too hard.

"The women are just as capable," says Sharon Freeman, 21, who came here from San Francisco nearly three years ago.

"You can socialize, get a tan and make pretty good money," said Miss Freeman, who was working another part-time job in addition to the pedicab driving. Now she's going to try living on the driving alone.

About $30 a day is average take-home pay, she said. Many drivers say they average $30 to $50 a day, but some veteran drivers have reputations of making more than $60.

Some people have complained to lawmakers that pedicabs are a traffic nuisance and that drivers — free to set their own rates — charge non-English speaking tourists more than other customers.

Uganda Assured Church Relief

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — On a tour of this country, recently liberated from the dictatorial rule of Idi Amin, the head of World Vision International promised at least $500,000 for relief and reconstruction.

The Rev. Stanley Mooneyham, who met with the new Uganda president Yusufu Lule about its needs, said "eight years of Idi Amin have brought the country to its knees economically, socially and psychologically."

In New York, meanwhile, the Episcopal Church's Presiding Bishop's Fund authorized immediate disbursement of $50,000 in emergency aid to Uganda, and an additional $100,000 in the coming months. The World Council of Churches has appealed for $600,000 in ecumenical aid.

Artist Is Painter Of Carousel Steeds

OLD ORCHARD BEACH, Maine (AP) — With flowing manes and showy tails, the colorful carousel horses strain and run, nostrils flaring, feet high in the air.

Repainting the antique carousel is a labor of love for Vincent Staley, a 74-year-old artist in temporary residence at this oceanside resort.

Staley works with care, studying each flower on the saddle, slowly painting the carved blankets and straps, getting the carousel ready for the summer tourist onslaught.

"This is the second largest carousel in the world, that I know of," he says. "And the only other one like this one is gone now. No, this is one of the last big, carved wooden jobs."

He restored the ride he's now repainting in 1971 after Palace Playland bought it from its owners in Euclid, Ohio. A 1901 classic, it had been in storage for years.

"This beauty was built by the Philadelphia Toboggan Company," said Staley. "Back in those days they didn't mass-produce things. They had this one model and they only made two of them."

There are 16 sections to the merry-go-round, each of them 13 feet wide. The dozens of horses lined up in four rows range from show horses to jumpers.

"I bet you didn't know that all these rides were set up the same. The show horses — the big, pretty ones — are always on the outside. They get smaller as you get toward the inside, with small and medium jumpers," says Staley.

"And they are all designed after real horses; that one there is an appaloosa, there's a pinto. And over there is a thoroughbred ... I call him Big Red."

The white-bearded Staley, entering his 60th year as a commercial artist, respects the craftsmanship that went into making the horses he restores.

"There are 250 pieces in those horses. The company that built it hired Italian and German carvers who were making 20 cents an hour in Europe. They came here for big money — 30 cents an hour."

An antique carousel is worth "maybe a million dollars," he says, "but who could put a price on such a thing?" He ticks off what he thinks are the best rides on the continent and their locations: Atlanta, Toronto, Niagara Falls, N.Y., and, yes, Old Orchard Beach.

Staley has taken on an apprentice who now does only sanding and undercoating but will one day take over his shop.

Campaign Managers Are Unloved, But Necessary

By PETER A. BROWN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Campaign managers are about as popular in presidential races as the oil companies are with motorists, but they're just as necessary in getting where you want to go.

Six months before the election year even begins virtually everyone with White House ambitions has recruited their staffs — many from the campaign junkies who are regulars in the political circus known as a presidential campaign.

"A staff, especially these days, is very, very important. In a way candidates are no longer judged just on their own merits. A lot of judgments of how you (a candidate) are doing is made based on the quality of their staffs," says John P. Sears, Ronald Reagan's campaign manager.

Former California Gov. Reagan is the Republican frontrunner, in part because the brains behind his campaign is Sears, who helped put Richard Nixon in the White House in 1968 and evict Gerald Ford from it in 1976.

But former CIA Director George Bush has put together an impressive team headed by James A. Baker III, who directed Ford's 1976 fall campaign which came from 20 points back to lose a squeaker.

In addition to Baker, Bush has recruited Robert Mosbacher and Peter E. Teeley, who were Ford's 1976 finance chairman and a campaign press secretary respectively. He also lured away David Keene, Reagan's southern coordinator in 1976.

President Carter will field a new campaign team because his top aides from 1976 now hold White House jobs, but it is certain the key political decisions will be made at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., is taking dead aim at Carter in the Democratic primaries and although he hasn't named his campaign staff, it appears they'll be inexperienced in national politics.

Presidential campaign managers must combine the management skills of a corporate executive with the instincts of a political ward healer. Traditionally, the campaign manager who does the hiring and firing, takes the heat for the mistakes and the ruffled feelings, and stays in the background when all goes well.

"It's like running a business. Whether it be the soliciting of volunteers, marketing techniques or budgeting of money or hiring the right people," said Evan Dobelle, Carter's campaign manager. "You also have to have the confidence of the candidate and broad experience in the political world."

"But just as important is your plan," says Sears. "Politics is not a science, its not a business. It's often more like an art form — its a creation. Its people and putting them together."

Dobelle is a former mayor of Pittsfield, Mass., who switched from Republican to Democrat when he signed on with Carter for the 1976 election. He says he has worked on 37 state, national and local campaigns since 1960. Assisting him as political director will be Jack Walsh, a former aide to Boston Mayor Kevin White.

Dobelle may have the title, but there's little doubt senior White House aides, especially Hamilton Jordan — Carter's 1976 campaign manager — will make the key decisions in the president's re-election campaign.

Sears, who ran Reagan's primary campaign against Ford that came within a few delegates of deposing the incumbent — and crippled him for the fall campaign against Carter — has become something of a media figure in his own right.

He got his first taste of presidential politics in 1966 when he left Nixon's New York law firm to join the former vice president's successful campaign for the White House.

Hooked ever since, Sears is an expert in the nuts and bolts of politics and works only for Republicans, but leaves the ideology to others within the conservative Reagan camp.

"As a manager your job is not to pass judgement, but maximize your candidate's support. I've never tried to affect a candidate's position," says Sears, a Washington lawyer when not trying to elect a president.

Sears and Dobelle agree experience in previous campaigns is valuable, but overrated.

"Every one who starts isn't experienced. The only way you get experience is to do it," Dobelle said, referring to Carter's 1976 campaign team, known as the "Georgia Mafia," none of whom were involved in presidential politics before.

Sears warns not to "overvalue experience. Everyone of these (presidential campaigns) is new. Every race is different, markedly different. You can't assume anything because other things have been true in the past. You have to look at where the electorate is going and where it will be situated at the time of the election."

Generally, campaign managers come from two groups — those who are former aides to the candidate, or who are recruited by him because of their reputation.

In the latter category are political consultants who have set up their own businesses and make a living running campaigns, not only for the White House, but for Congress and governor as well. Former Texas Gov. John Connolly and Sen. Robert Dole, D-Kan., are employing such consultants to run their campaigns.

However, use of such services — which are very expensive — has declined recently because of federal law limiting campaign spending.

Here are brief discriptions of the others who will be calling the shots for their candidates during the presidential campaign:

Baker — a Houston lawyer who came to prominence as Ford's chief delegate hunter prior to the 1976 GOP convention and was then given the overall job of running Ford's campaign against Carter. A former marine and Princeton graduate, Baker, 49, has eight children.

Gray Davis & Tom Quinn — Top advisors to California Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. who are expected to direct his challenge in the Democratic primaries to Carter. Davis, 36, ran Brown's 1978 re-election campaign and is his chief of staff. Quinn ran Brown's 1974 campaign and is now director of the state Air Resources Board. Quinn has been Brown's national political scout.

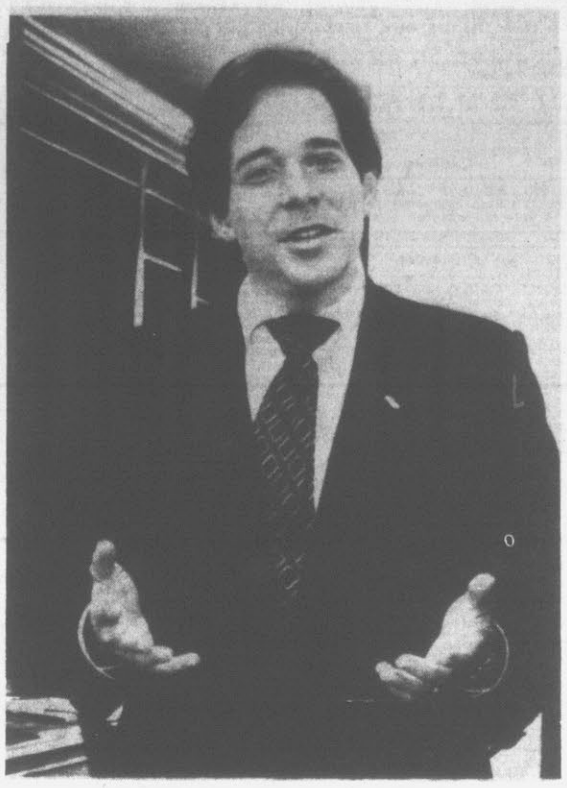
Eddie Mahe Jr. — Director of former Texas Gov. John Connolly's campaign, Mahe is a free lance political consultant, who hires out to work on Republican campaigns. His 1978 clients included Sen. Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire and Gov. Richard Thornburgh of Pennsylvania, both of whom were surprise winners. Mahe is a former deputy chairman and executive director of the Republican National Committee.

James D. Nowlan — Manager of Illinois Rep. John Anderson's longshot candidacy. Nowlan last year ran Illinois Sen. Charles Percy's re-election campaign. Nowlan, 37, is a former state lawmaker, aide to Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson and political science professor.

Don Sundquist — Campaign manager for Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee, for whom he has worked as a campaign aide since 1964. Sundquist, 43, is a former national chairman of the Young Republicans. A businessman who has taken a leave from his firm for the campaign, Sundquist is also a former aide to Bill Brock, now Republiican national chairman who is also from Tennessee.

Thomas D. Bell — Chairman of the board of Response Marketing Group, a Washington-based management and communications firm that is handling Kansas Sen. Dole's campaign for the GOP nomination.

Jerry Harkins — Newly named head of Illinois Rep. Philip Crane's Republican campaign following mass staff resignations. A former staff aide to Crane and Missouri chairman of Sen. Barry Goldwater's 1964 presidential campaign, Harkins retired from politics in 1972 and became a banker in Dannellson, Iowa.



EVAN DOBELLE, may have the title as President Carter's campaign manager, but there is little doubt senior White House aides will make the key decisions. (UPI Photo)

Cosmetologists Heard Speaker

President Pat Tripp presided at a short business meeting of the Pitt County Affiliate of the National Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association recently to announce plans for the National Beauty Salon Week, October 7-13, with the theme "Today's Hairdresser Is Better Than Ever."

Clairol consultant Deborah Coleman of Raleigh, guest speaker, explained Clairol's modified haircoloring formula. She demonstrated how to use the color wheel and how to customize shades for exact tone and depth. She concluded the session with a question and answer period.

Mrs. Tripp reminded members that affiliate meetings will not be held in July and August. The next meeting will be held September 10, with guest artist Mary Milton, North Carolina Hair Fashion Committee member, presenting the new fall-winter release.

Balloonist Says Sport Soaring

By SKIP WOLLENBERG
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Hot-air balloonist David Eastland says last year's flight across the Atlantic by three Americans gave the sport its biggest lift in years.

"This will probably be one of ballooning's biggest growth years in history," the 40-year-old, nine-year veteran of pleasure and commercial flights said.

The first successful trans-Atlantic balloon flight ended in the summer of 1978 in France where the sport had been born 195 years earlier.

Eastland teaches a non-credit course in hot-air ballooning at the University of Tennessee-Nashville.

It's the fourth time he has taught the course. He has 20 students, 11 of them women.

"Most of them are a little different from average folks. They are looking for something a little different, something more exciting, to do," he said.

The course, which usually includes a flight, is often filled by mail-in registration weeks before classes begin.

Eastland said the sport of hot-air ballooning had originated in 1783 in France, but had died out in the early 1800s because there was no easy-to-use fuel source available to keep the balloons inflated.

"There were some balloons used for observation in the Civil War, but since it isn't a steerable aircraft, it wasn't possible to go from Point A to Point B with any degree of accuracy," he said.

Not that the early balloonists didn't try. Eastland said early pilots had experimented with pedals, sails and hand cranks to steer the aircraft.

A breakthrough for the sport came in the 1960s, when manufacturers developed synthetic fabrics such as nylon for the balloon "envelope" and propane for a fuel.

Nylon is sturdy, lightweight and able to withstand the ultraviolet rays of the sun. Propane was cheaper and safer than hydrogen or helium as a fuel.

There are 1,500 to 2,000 balloons in the United States today, Eastland said.

Eastland flies commercially for companies which have advertisements on their balloons. He also owns three of his own, each towering about seven stories when inflated. He said balloons cost about $9,000 each, but that after the initial investment each flight cost about $15 for fuel.

He and about 50 other balloonists met last fall in St. Louis with the three ballooning pioneers who crossed the Atlantic.

"It was the first time since landing that they had had a chance to talk and share their experiences with other balloonists," he said.

"One of them said he had to feel a little bit of sadness about it because they had accomplished something that all of us had dreamed of doing," Eastland said.

Fleetwood Brougham

Here is an example based on data taken from the 1979 Gas Mileage Guide, First Edition, September 1979 published by the EPA.

BURT LANCASTER stars as Moses, a man driven to free his people, the Israelites, from bondage, in "Moses — The Lawgiver," a series of six drama specials based on the Book of Exodus, Sunday, June 17 (10-11 p.m.) on CBS. Others in the series will be shown on consecutive Sundays.

Moses — The Lawgiver

"Moses will lead the Israelites from Egypt into the Promised Land, whether they like it or not," Burt Lancaster promised while filming a scene from "Moses — The Lawgiver."

The "like it or not" sounded threatening, referring to a people being freed from bondage and led into their new liberty.

"In theory they wanted to be free," the actor explained. "But as it says in the Bible, the Israelites were mostly an uneducated people. Sure, they were slaves in Egypt, but they had food to eat, a bed to sleep in, and clothes to keep them warm. They suffered unbelievable hardships on the long trek to Canaan. Many became discouraged, many questioned Moses' leadership, and many resented his harsh treatment. Many wanted to return, as incredible as it may seem."

The story of the Israelites' long and tortured progress from bondage to the Promised Land is the subject of "Moses — The Lawgiver," a series of six drama specials to be presented on Sundays (10 to 11 p.m. on CBS-TV), beginning June 24.

"Moses had 'chutzpah,'" Lancaster continued, using the Yiddish word that means a combination of nerve, gall, dash and daring. "Moses drove his people. And Moses, himself, sinned, by holding his people to the letter of the law, and refusing to consider their problems as human beings."

Off screen, the personality of Lancaster includes chutzpah, which is why, according to producer Vincenzo Labella, "we wanted him to play Moses. This is a quality an actor cannot create. He has to bring it to the role."

"I was hoping I had charisma," Lancaster responded. "But if I have nerve, I got it as a kid growing up in a tough part of town."

He had to be tough to survive in some of the roughest spots in New York City. And that quality won him his first role. A theatrical producer's representative spotted him in a New York elevator and thought he would be great for the tough sergeant's role in a Broadway play.

Lancaster is an unusual combination of aggression and modesty, as far as his acting ability is concerned. He'll turn down a role he doesn't like, or go after one if he happens to like it.

"The day you stop stretching yourself, that's the day you toss it all in and go sit by the fire," Lancaster said. "And I'm not ready for that.

"I hate this business sometimes, but it's my business, making pictures. What else can I do? What else do I want to do? Nothing."

True Adventure Story airs

"The Man Who Loved Bears," a compelling true adventure of a young naturalist and the helpless grizzly cub he raised and taught so that she could survive in the majestic Colorado wilderness, airs as a family special on ABC-TV Sunday, June 17 (7 to 8 p.m.).

The program is narrated by Henry Fonda.

For Marty Stouffer, 30, the naturalist and filmmaker who became intrigued with grizzlies in Alaska, a dream began to take form when he encountered a huge male girzzly bear in the Colorado mountins where grizzlies were believed to be extinct. Stouffer resolved to find a mate for "the last grizzly in Colorado" with the hope of reestablishing the misunderstood giants in a remote wilderness area of the state.

With his credentials, Stouffer was able to adopt a five-month-old orphan cub from a midwest zoo. With the help of a zoo veterinarian he learned how to prepare formula and solid foods for his new charge.

THIS ADORABLE CUB is raised and loved by Marty Stouffer, but the man must also teach the bear to fear human beings so that she can live safe and free in the wilds in "The Man Who Loved Bears," a true story premiering Sunday, June 17 (7-8 p.m.) on ABC.

Later at a remote mountain cabin he shared with Griz, as he has named the cub, the full impact of what Stouffer had undertaken struck home. As "surrogate" parent, the now uncertain teacher wondered whether he could teach Griz how to forage for roots and grubs, how to fish, what dangers to avoid — all the things she would normally learn from her mother. Griz's life was in his hands.

But grizzlies, the largest terrestrial carnivores in the world — although they are really omnivorous — are extremely intelligent.

John Ford: A Director, Came From Obsession

Dan Ford, stage manager for NBC-TV's "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson," has written a biography of his famous film director grandfather, John Ford, entitled "Pappy: The Life of John Ford."

The book, which he spent four years writing, will be published by Prentice Hall and is due for a September release.

"This is the end product of an eight-year obsession with my grandfather's life and career," Ford commented during a break in a 'Tonight Show' music rehearsal at NBC-TV's Burbank, Calif., studios.

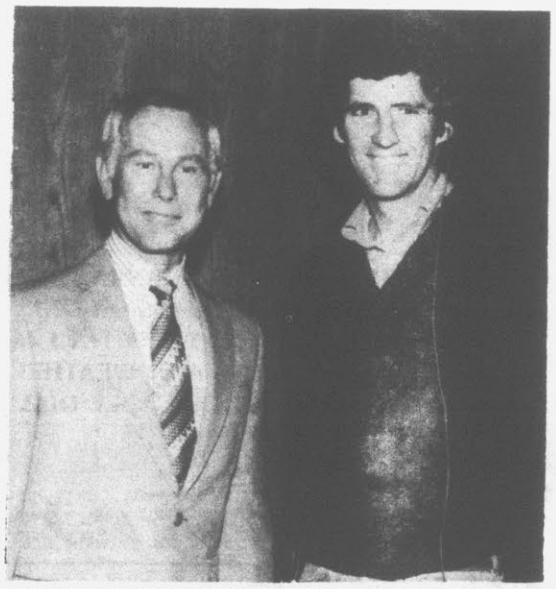
"It began in 1971 when I co-produced a TV documentary called 'The American West of John Ford.' The real importance of that film was that it gave me the opportunity to study his films — particularly the early silents that I wasn't familiar with.

"I began working on this book in March, 1973, and the more I learned about him, the more complex he became. I was more impressed than ever with the length and breadth of my grandfather's career."

In a career that spanned 50 years, John Ford made 136 pictures, winning Academy Awards for "The Informer," "The Grapes of Wrath," "How Green Was My Valley," "The Quiet Man" and two wartime documentaries "December 7th" and "The Battle of Midway."

"His personal life, Dan points out, "was as varied as his professional. Instinctively liberal, he was caught up in many of the social issues of his day: Irish nationalism, Spanish Republicanism, the labor battles in Hollywood, the fight against the McCartney hearings. He also served in the OSS during World War II, attaining the rank of admiral.

"He was a sentimentalist to a fault, extremely generous to those he liked, possessed great wit and charm yet could be cantankerous, sometimes cruel, difficult to like and extremely difficult to get close to. Yet he was one thing above all else — fascinating."



JOHNNY CARSON AND NEW AUTHOR — Johnny Carson with Dan Ford whose first book "Pappy: The Life of John Ford," will be published in September.

A 'Bounce'

Hal Linden hops to it with the kangaroo and quickly jumps to the following conclusions: A female kangaroo is called a flyer; a male kangaroo is called a boomer; a baby kangaroo is called a joey; and elderly kangaroo is called an old man; and a kangaroo herd is called a mob. While this may be news to the kangaroo, it is well documented on the segment of "Animals Animals Animals" airing Sunday, June 17 (11:30 to 11:55 a.m. on ABC-TV).

In the course of the program, there's a journey to the New York Zoological Society's Wildlife Survival Center on an island off the Georgia coast, where Hal finds out many other things he never knew — or maybe just forgot — about the kangaroo.

For instance, a kangaroo can jump 15 to 20 feet. It can cruise along at about 15 miles an hour. The kangaroo is a marsupial, which means it is an animal that carries its young in a pouch. That the aborigines came to Australia about 30,000 years ago. That the aborigines painted kangaroos on the walls of their caves and carved them on huge boulders. And that boomerangs can boomerang, as an animated fable about a kangaroo named Kang, who was pretty good with the boomerang, proves.

With graphics, 'Animals' traces the kangaroo in history, art and literature. And there is the animated story of "The Jumping Kangaroo," in which a kangaroo, a wallaby and a koala bear meet up with two of the strangest things. Hal also has "Some Thoughts on Kangaroos," that, not very surprisingly, sometimes have absolutely nothing to do with the kangaroo, but are certainly worth thinking about.

Lynn Kellogg sings a song about the kangaroo especially written for the segment, and Roger Caras, animal expert and environmentalist, provides a thoughtful commentary about the kangaroo.

HELPING OUT AT HOME — Goofy sets an example as a perfect husband as he helps with the family chores, in "Goofy's Salute to Father," an animated comedy on NBC-TV's "The Wonderful World of Disney" Sunday, June 17 (7-8 p.m.).

Salute To Fathers

"The Wonderful World of Disney" pays homage to fathers with "Goofy's Salute to Father," rebroadcast Sunday, June 17 (7 to 8 p.m.), on NBC-TV.

Win a few, lose a few, that's old George (Goofy) . . . a carefree bachelor on the loose. Surfing at the beach in the summer, grandstanding on the playing fields in the winter, but not allowing anything to interfere with nightclubbing when the sun goes down. Unless, of course, a poker game is in progress or George can hear the dice clicking in a crap game. And if everything else seems dull, he can always bet a few bob on the horses.

Then, one day, George takes a look at himself. What is life without a mate, a loving wife to share this wonderful life? So how does he find the perfect partner? By learning to dance.

A few frantic nights of tripping the light fantastic leads and George heads straight to the altar with his sweetheart. Then, presto! Our hero's leisure time is consumed by baby bottles and diapers.

"George . . . the bottle," doesn't mean a shot of red eye, he soon discovers.

"As soon as Junior grows out of the infant stage, I can take it easy," says George.

Dad doesn't get to take it easy, but he does witness the wonderful sight of a child growing up:

Junior's first word — "where did that kid learn such language . . . certainly not from me," says Papa.

Junior's first step — right in the soup.

ART CARNEY stars in the gentle tale of a cross-country trek by a man and his cat in "Harry and Tonto," on "The ABC Sunday Night Movie" June 17 (9-11:15 p.m.).

A Man & His Cat

Paul Mazursky's "Harry and Tonto," airing as "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," June 17 (9 to 11:15 p.m.), is a bittersweet comedy centering on the cross-country odyssey of an old man named Harry and his faithful cat, Tonto. Intentionally episodic, the film is a wry and frequently touching string of brief vignettes, some of them realistic, some fairy-tale-like, but all linked by a pervasive humanism.

Art Carney won the Academy Award as the spirited senior citizen who meets a series of funny, eccentric, lovable characters — including a young female hitchhiker and a Las Vegas playgirl — as he travels with his cat and his dreams.

Ellen Burstyn is featured as Harry's daughter. The film also has featured performances by Chief Dan George, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Melanie Mayron, Herbert Berghof and Avon Long.

Harry is a fiercely independent man who is a widower, but who is never lonely, sharing memories, jokes and general observations with a colorful collection of neighborhood friends. And, of course, his cat, Tonto.

An eviction notice changes Harry's settled world, but he is by no means ready to resettle in someone else's home. So after a brief visit with his son, Harry is off — with the faithful Tonto tucked under his arm — to see the country.

Harry's trip, like the rest of his life, is full of people and experiences; on the way to visit his daughter in Chicago; Harry encounters a teenage runaway hitchhiker who joins him in a detour to visit his old — very old — girlfriend. Departing Chicago, the two add Harry's ready-to-break-free grandson; in Vegas, he feels young again after meeting a golden-hearted playgirl; then after gambling and getting drunk, Harry winds up in jail.

What's Up?

Barbra Streisand and Ryan O'Neal star as two off-beat individuals whose paths cross when they become part of an all-out effort to locate four misplaced identical suitcases, in "What's Up, Doc?," a slapstick comedy directed by Peter Bogdanovich, on NBC-TV's "The Big Event" Sunday, June 17 (8 to 10 p.m.).

Howard Bannister and his fiancee, Eunice, are assigned separate rooms on the 17th floor of a hotel in San Francisco, where Howard intends to compete for a valuable fellowship.

Long Time Fan

When Emily McLaughlin, "General Hospital's" nurse Jessie Brewer for the past 16 years, visited the popular El Gato Club in fashionable Encino, Calif., recently, she had a delightful surprise.

John Knows About Pain

The fact that John Beradino, who stars as Dr. Steve Hardy on ABC-TV's daytime series, "General Hospital," was once a professional baseball player who helped the Cleveland Indians win both the American League pennant and the World Series in 1948 will probably come as no surprise to most sports fans. But, what they may not know is that John's athletic career got off to a rather shaky start at USC, where he started off as one of the smallest football linemen in that school's history.

"I first got interested in football and baseball as a student at Belmont High School in Los Angeles," says Beradino, a 16-year veteran of "General Hospital." "I eventually got a football scholarship to USC, but once I got there I discovered I was much too small to be playing with some of those giants. I was less than 150 pounds, yet the coach insisted on putting me on the line.

"I was getting beaten to death and I couldn't study at night because of the pain, so I went to the coach and told him I thought he's picked the wrong guy for the line, and that I was a backfield man more suited for running, kicking and passing. His reply was that I would simply play where I was put."

Fun Time At The Captain's Place

Dick Latessa, currently on Broadway in Neil Simon's "Chapter Two," and Janie Sell and Arte Johnson join in the fun and merriment on "Captain Kangaroo" (8 to 9 a.m.), this week on CBS-TV.

Monday, the Captain starts week 'R' of Picturepages, and Latessa, as Keller the Seller, brings his new invention with him to show to everybody. Then, the Royal Magicians find they must entertain the grumpy king.

Mr. Pennywhistle takes Bernard shopping for records Tuesday, and Pierre and Madam Cure come up with some useful inventions. Wally wonders if he'll ever recover when he gets a cold and Willy tkaes care of him. The Captain Nemo crew explores the Arctic on a snowmobile, and the Captain reads the story "My Little Brother."

Wednesday, the Captain and Dennis run into probelms when they try to build a new toolshed for the Captain's Place, and Captian Nemo saves an injured dolphin from a ravenous pack of sharks.

Farley (guest Arte Johnson) searches in his workshop for the perfect gift for Mr. Green Jeans Thursday, and Captain Nemo enlists the aid of a dolphin to save a trapped diver.

Professor Wasky runs into a sticky problem when he invents Super Duper Glue on Friday's segment. Wally and Willy must figure out how to change a light bulb, and Captain Nemo's ship, the Nautilus, becomes a life jacket for an injured whale.

JAPANESE ACTOR Shintaro Katsu provides an unorthodox, myth-shattering look at contemporary Japanese in John Nathan's documentary portrait, "The Blind Swordsman." "The Blind Swordsman" will air Sunday, June 17 (8 p.m.) on PBS.

The Fiery Katsu

His staff and film crew, fiercely loyal and devoted, refer to him in awe as "Owner," using the English word, and what "Owner" says is law.

"Owner" is Shintaro Katsu, 46, Japanese actor, producer, director who is the beloved hero of Japanese of all ages for his creation of the most popular film hero to appear in postwar Japan — Zato Ichi, The Blind Swordsman. Part Two of John Nathan's "The Japanese," "The Blind Swordsman" (airing Sunday, June 17, 8 p.m. on PBS) paints a vivid portrait of this unorthodox, quixotic and incredibly self-possessed man.

Trained from early childhood by his musician father to become a virtuoso in the playing of the Japanese instrument, the samisen, Katsu broke with tradition after touring the U.S. in 1957 with his father's troupe and being completely taken, as well as impressed, by Hollywood's movie industry. He apprenticed himself to the Dai-Ei Movie Studios and for a number of years played heavies and second-fiddle toughs who were usually killed before the movie ended.

In 1961, Katsu, whose first samisen teacher was blind, sought and won the role of Zato Ichi, a blind outlaw with a deadly cane sword swifter than any sighted eye could follow.

Katsu went on to star in 25 Zato Ichi features, establishing himself and the immensely popular series as one of the leading box office attractions in Japan's postwar movie industry. Nathan and his film crew caught up with Katsu as he was preparing to produce, direct and act in the third television series of "The New Adventures of Zato Ichi."

Nathan's documentary, filmed in Kyoto in the spring of 1978, follows Katsu on a whirlwind tour into every corner of the turbulent world he dominates.

Q: I would like some information about the actor who plays Travis Sentell on "Search For Tomorrow." O. COLLINS, FLORENCE, S.C.

A: He's Rod Arrants, whose first ambition while growing up in California was to be a Christian street minister. He lives with actress Pat Estrin (they were castmates on "Lovers & Friends") and has a son, Dylan, by his first marriage.

Q: What happened to Donna Douglas (Ellie Mae on "The Beverly Hillbillies")? C. JOHNSON, DOBSON, N.C.

A: Donna went into real estate after the series ceased filming and was quite successful. Now, however, she's decided to get back into show business and we should be seeing her on the screen soon.

Q: Where are the cast members of "Sing Along With Mitch" nowadays? A. J. LEVIT, PORT ROYAL, S.C.

A: There were about 18 regulars on the show. Of these, Leslie Uggams, Diana Trask, Bob McGrath ("Sesame Street") and Rita McLaughlin ("As the World Turns") have had continued success where their careers are concerned.

Q: Please tell me who the young actors are who play the members of the basketball team on "White Shadow." Y. KING, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

Q: How did Leif Garrett begin his career? C. McABEE, GOLDSBORO, N.C.

A: Leif was five years old when he began his professional acting career, with a role in the hit movie, "Bob & Ted, Carol & Alice." In the ensuing years, he has tabulated a long list of movie and TV credits, as well as a string of recordings.

Q: What happened to "Flatbush"? K. DUPREY, FLORENCE, S.C.

A: The controversial series proved to be "too hot to handle," and CBS, bowing to the opposition, pulled it from their schedule.

A New Life

After two-and-a-half years as Mary Ryan on the highly rated daytime dramatic serial, "Ryan's Hope," Kate Mulgrew knows what it's like to work hard and long hours.

However, now relocated in Hollywood, where she moved to film "Mrs. Columbo" and is now in the midst of putting together another series for NBC-TV, she does admit that she's having to adjust to a whole new life.

"I didn't pursue this, it pursued me," Kate says in a candid, business-like manner that typifies her attitude toward her career and the new series. "I was on my way to do a play and they called me and asked me to stay out here for a new series. I considered it very, carefully, weighed the pros and cons, and then agreed.

PLAN BACKFIRES — Charles Ingalls (Michael Landon, l) and Jonathan Garvey (Merlin Olsen) plan to teach their sons a lesson by sending them on a wild goose chase, but the youngsters' ingenuity surprises them, in "Men Will Be Boys," on NBC-TV's "Little House on the Prairie" Monday, June 18 (8-9 p.m.).

'Gauge' For Writing

Michael Landon, star and executive producer of NBC-TV's hit "Little House on the Prairie" series, is also recognized as one of Hollywood's top writers — and that came strictly by accident.

"It was back during the 'Bonanza' days," says Landon. "We finished a show on Friday, and then the producer came in and told us that we didn't have to report to work on the following Monday because the next script wasn't finished yet. He said we all had a week off.

"That was great news to some of the guys, but not to me. I was up to my neck in debt, and really needed the money. If we didn't work, we didn't get paid, and I just couldn't afford a week without pay."

So Landon went home that weekend, and wrote his first script. When he brought it to the producer on Monday, it was approved and the cast went back to work.

Landon has been writing ever since. He did many "Bonanza" scripts before that show ended its 14-year-run, and he writes nearly half of the scripts for 'Little House.'

Landon wrote that first 'Bonanza' script in longhand while sitting on the floor — and that's still his favorite method of writing. "I just grab a notebook, a pencil, and start in. When I'm finished I turn it over to my secretary, who types it into script form. It works out fine."

JAMES COBURN stars as a prominent economist who resorts to murder to cover up a shady past, in "The Internecine Project."

Espionage Thriller

When a prominent economist is offered a high-level government post, he turns to murder to eliminate the skeletons in his closet, in "The Internecine Project," a suspense movie to be broadcast for the first time on television on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies." June 19 (9 to 11 p.m.). James Coburn and Lee Grant star.

Robert Elliot (Coburn) is a sophisticated and brilliant economist working for an international conglomerate, supervising and arranging industrial spying and political sabotage. But, to the public, he is the epitome of the distinguished academic. To the great satisfaction of his employers he is up for a high-level post as a Presidential advisor.

There is, however, a problem — the four operatives Elliot has used to carry out his dirty work. They must be eliminated before they can expose his shady past. Elliot devises an intricate scheme, setting each of the four on the track of the others in a deadly game in which only he will be the winner.

Grant stars as a reporter, once in love with Elliot, who is aware of how far he has let power corrupt him. Keenan Wynn plays a wheeling-dealing lawyer behind the corporate manipulations.

suspense movie to be broadcast as "The CBS Tuesday Night Movie." June 19 (9-11 p.m.).

Carson Hosts

Television and nightclub comedian Shecky Greene talks about his then-ill health and William Devane tells how he used to have 'double days,' when "The Best of Carson" is broadcast on NBC-TV's "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson," Tuesday, June 19 (11:30 p.m. to 1 a.m.).

Also appearing on the telecast are Paul Williams and author Cyra McFadden.

Greene goes into detail with host Carson about how he couldn't use his voice for several months and almost had to give up his work in show business. Devane, who starred in "From Here to Eternity," did odd jobs in New York while he was acting on what were called 'double days.'

An Ambitious Journey

Ellen Burstyn, in her Academy Award-winning performance, stars as a young widow who embarks on an ambitious journey to start a new life and career as a singer, in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore," a romantic comedy-drama on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies" June 18 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Kris Kristofferson also stars with Harvey Keitel, Alfred Lutter and Diane Ladd.

Burstyn portrays Alice Hyatt, a 35-year-old mother who, accompanied by her 12-year-old son, Tommy, leaves a dreary Oklahoma town when her marriage abruptly ends following her husband's fatal traffic accident.

With her original hometown, Monterey, as a final destination, Alice heads west with stops planned along the way where she hopes to entertain at piano bars to finance the trip. By the time she reaches Albuquerque, she has become lonely and begins to date a younger man, Ben, who she soon learns is married.

Later, in Tucson, she fails to find a singing job, and finally decides to become a waitress. One morning she meets rancher David Barrie. Initially she remains aloof, even though Tommy quickly becomes a close buddy of the man.

When she and David do become friendly, Tommy responds with adolescent jealousy, ultimately winding up in jail for shoplifting. This crisis pits Alice against David and imperils their budding romance. Weeks later, when David extends an overture of peace, it is Tommy who is instrumental in pointing out the correct path to take.

The film is peopled with an astounding range of characters who touch on Alice's life, characters that are almost uniformly vital, high-spirited and credible. Keitel's stint as Ben, the cocky ladykiller, is jarringly intense, with Kristofferson providing perfect counterpoint as the strong but kindly rancher, David Barrie.

A Chandler Classic Airs

Robert Mitchum plays Raymond Chandler's gritty, laconic detective, Philip Marlowe, who, in the course of tracking down a mysterious, elusive woman named Velda, uncovers much more than he needed to know in "Farewell, My Lovely," NBC-TV's "The Big Event," airing Tuesday, June 19 (9 to 11 p.m.). Charlotte Rampling, John Ireland and Sylvia Miles co-star.

Velda was the girlfriend of Moose Malloy (Jack O'Halloran), a hulking ex-convict who wants her back in spite of the fact that she apparently forgot him as soon as he went to prison. To find the lady in question, Marlowe embarks on an investigation that takes him from the top to the bottom of Los Angeles society in the 1940s. Along the way he comes to a number of dead ends and finds some not-so-innocent victims of the corruption that pervaded that society.

The landscape of "Farewell, My Lovely" consists of cheap motels, greasy chop suey joints and tacky bungalows, all made even more bawdy by the constant flash of neon signs.

Rampling provides the film's dusky mystique as the mysterious Mrs. Gayle, the young wife of an accommodating old judge, and she plays against Mitchum with a husky voice and smoldering eyes.

Mitchum makes Marlowe into his own personal creation, a tired tough guy who's seen it all and knows the world is rotten. However, he still keeps a sentimental spot inside for Joe DiMaggio and bright-eyed orphans.

Miles gives a gem of a performance as an aging ex-chorus girl who exchanges some information and her life story for a cheap bottle of booze, only to be killed for her trouble.

Has Been Delayed

Production on "Urban Cowboy" has been delayed because the film's star, John Travolta, was reportedly bitten by a dog.

Blair Stars

Linda Blair, who was nominated for an Oscar for her performance in "The Exorcist," stars with Carol Lawrence, Lee Purcell, Jeremy Slate and Macdonald Carey in "Stranger in Our House," an NBC World Premiere thriller about a young girl's terrifying encounter with witchcraft, to be colorcast on "NBC Wednesday Night at the Movies" June 20 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Rachel Bryant's (Blair) life becomes a nightmare after her cousin Julia's (Purcell) parents die in an auto accident and the girl moves in with the Bryant family. Unsettling events occur and Rachel's position in the family is slowly eroded as Julia gains more and more power in the household.

When Rachel's parents refuse to believe her story about Julia's ungodly powers, the terrified girl turns to an elderly neighbor, Professor Jarvis, for advice on how to overcome the evil forces around her.

JERRY LEWIS AND BERNADETTE PETERS are two of the ringmasters on the "3rd Annual Circus of the Stars," Wednesday, June 20 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Circus Dreams Fulfilled

Valerie Perrine shut her eyes tightly as sharply pointed arrows whizzed past her body; standing some 50 feet above ground, Cathy Lee Crosby, a professed acrophobic, gritted her teeth and pushed higher; Tony Lo Bianco, eyes dashing right and left, put a tiger, leopard and panther through their paces; Lee Meriwether trembled as she inched her way across a thin high wire; and Gary Collins advanced steadily and slowly on a bicycle high above the circus ring.

Sweaty palms and racing pulses notwithstanding, nearly all of the 32 celebrity performers did their thing on the "3rd Annual Circus of the Stars," to be rebroadcast Wednesday, June 20 (9 to 11 p.m.), on CBS-TV, and all shared the same feeling — the desire to fulfill a childhood fantasy of being a fearless circus performer.

"I remember, as a kid of four growing up in Los Angeles, when the circus used to unload the trains at the corner of Jefferson and Cienega, and I would always go watch it," said Collins. "I think I must have gone to the circus every year when I was growing up. My favorite part was the sideshows on the midway and those daring young men on the flying trapeze."

Mary Ann Mobley, Collins' wife, also attempted a balancing act, but on a pole perched on Dirk Blocker's shoulders. "The circus was a big thing in our lives when I was growing up in Brandon, Miss., about ten miles away, and we'd all make plans to go down," she recalled.

Aerialists' stunts were also Lee Meriwether's favorite acts as a child, and she remembers getting her biggest circus thrills from the overall excitement, glamour, color and danger. "As a child, I loved everything about it," she says. "The pageantry and the daredevils were my favorites," added the star, who wowed the audience by walking the high line, forwards and backwards.

Tony Lo Bianco combined daredevilry with two childhood loves — animals and the circus. He entered the ring with three natural enemies — a tiger, panther, and a leopard — all with their full sets of claws and teeth, not tranquilized in any way. Tony, who had only a few days to get his act together, said he didn't have time to be afraid of the big cats.

FRANK SINATRA whoops it up with "Laugh-In" regulars Toad the Mime, Nancy Bleiweiss and Kim Braden (l-r) in the Wednesday, June 20 repeat presentation (8-9 p.m.) on NBC.

'Skylab' Is Falling

CBS News will present a CBS News Special Report: "Skylab Is Falling," sometime in late June or early July, when NASA's crippled space vehicle is expected to re-enter the earth's atmosphere. The late-night, half-hour special will have reports from various correspondents, including Morton Dean, who has covered major space shots for CBS News, and Bill Plante, who has been following the Skylab story for the network.

Experts from NASA are presently predicting that the 79-ton Skylab will re-enter the earth's atmosphere sometime between June 26 and July 9, and that the debris, while scattering over an area some 4,000 miles long and 100 miles wide, will not pose any more danger than that posed by a falling meteor.

The orbit of the six-year-old space vehicle takes it over all portions of the globe between 50 degree N and 50 degree S latitudes, an area that contains 90% of the world's population, and most of the world's major cities (except London, Berlin and Moscow). But a recent study done for NASA by a private laboratory, estimates that the chance of Skylab's debris falling on a city of more than 100,000 is one-in-seven, while the chance of anyone being struck by any piece is one-in-150. About 500 pieces of the huge space station are expected to survive the fiery re-entry; 10 of them will weigh a half ton or more. Unlike the Soviet satellite Cosmos 954, which confounded expert opinion when it crashed into the Arctic reaches of Canada in February 1978, the danger from Skylab's re-entry is not radioactive material but these heavy pieces of "space junk."

Disco Crime Explodes!

James Darren and Yvonne Elliman guest star in singing and dancing roles in a two-part "Hawaii Five-O" segment, rich in rock singing and disco music — both integral elements leading up to an explosive situation. The episodes will encore on two consecutive Thursdays, June 21 and 28 (9 to 10 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Ross Martin, Nehemiah Persoff, Richard Dimitri and Antony Ponzini are featured in guest star roles.

Elliman portrays entertainer Yvonne Kanekoa, whose potential for stardom ignites a three-way war among Five-O Chief Steve McGarrett, played by series star Jack Lord, the declared Hawaiian crime syndicate, Kumu, and an organized crime syndicate from the West Coast.

Ray Santoro (Ponzini), a member of the Kumu, kills Bernie Adams (John Barry), a member of the mainland syndicate, in order to force his way into a partnership with an unwilling Sonny Kanekoa (Dimitri), the owner of a flourishing discotheque. Santoro is impressed with the talent of Sonny's sister, Yvonne (Elliman), and he tries to take over the management of her from her current manager, Johnny Munroe (Darren).

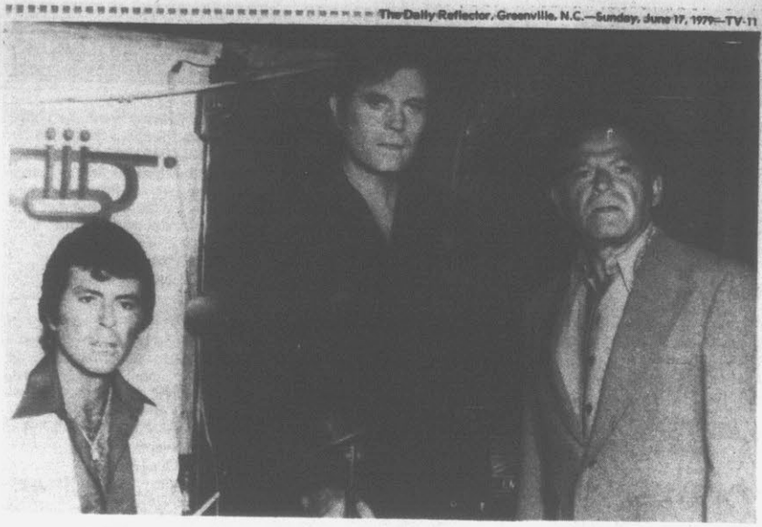
Yvonne soon realizes that they'll soon be in the middle of what she terms "World War III." Meanwhile, McGarrett, investigating the murder of Adams, realizes that what is on the surface is merely the "tip of a very dirty iceberg."

It was television that made the personable James Darren a heart-throb to millions of women more than a decade ago, and yet in more recent years he's concentrated on performing across the country and has very seldom accepted a TV guest starring role.

But his role on "Hawaii Five-O" is one he considers to be special.

"I've known Jack (Lord) for years, but I'd never done a show with him in all the time 'Five-O' has been on the air," he said.

"I'd been asked a couple of times, but I had other commitments, so this was the first time I was free to say yes. Besides, I hadn't been to Hawaii in eight years and I had this marvelous fantasy of how I'd combine work with a vacation. Unfortunately, it didn't work out that way; I was kept too busy."



JAMES DARREN (l) and Nehemiah Persoff (r) guest star in "Hawaii Five-O," starring Jack Lord as Steve McGarrett, on Thursday, June 21 (9-10 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Always Working!

Handsome Perry King is one of those Hollywood actors who works all the time — movies, television, theater — so it is of more than passing interest when he says his portrayal of convicted murderer Lee Bishop in "The Innocent and the Damned" brought him more reaction than any role he ever played.

The encore colorcast of the six-hour drama (formerly titled "Aspen") focuses on the murder trial of gigolo Lee Bishop, convicted of killing a 15-year-old, who fights an 8-year battle on Death Row to avoid execution.

"I never got as much fan mail as I did for that role," King says with surprise. "I guess people responded emotionally to Bishop's plight and they expressed it in their letters. Frankly, it took me by surprise, although it shouldn't have, because I would have played the whole six hours just for the privilege of the scene when Bishop finds out 20 minutes before he's scheduled to die that he has a stay — and faints.

"I researched the role by visiting a prison and I talked with a prisoner who was that close to dying and asked him how it actually felt. He told me it was like being at the end of a tunnel and you feel the whole world closing down. I tried to reflect that in the scene. The enormous relief of hearing he wasn't going to die made fainting the logical outcome.

All through the drama the viewer is not sure whether Lee Bishop is innocent or guilty. They know he had a bad lawyer (played by John Houseman) and his defense was a shambles, but whether he was actually guilty of the crime for which he was convicted is left up in the air until the final scene.

SPOTLIGHT

A Natural Born Actor

Astounding young actor Gary Coleman is only 11 years old — but has the style, timing and delivery of a veteran performer.

"I don't really know where the desire to become an actor came from," says his mother. "It just one of many interests that he asked about — and he seemed to be a natural at it."

Gary, the only child of Willie and Sue Coleman, started acting in TV commercials in Chicago at the age of 6. He was born in Zion, Ill., where he still resides except when his series, "Diff'rent Strokes," is in production. During this time, Gary and his mom live in an apartment in Hollywood.

In addition to acting, Gary is interested in astronomy, space, aircraft and books. He not ony reads books, he writes them too — and even illustrates them with his own drawings. He also likes to play a little golf now and then.

Gary, who also oversaw the decoration of his all-red bedroom, likes to sleep with his socks on, and says his best friend is his 113-pound German shepherd, Champion.

GARY COLEMAN

When he isn't acting, reading, studying or writing mystery stories about lost hamsters, he is active with his hobby, a collection of miniature electric trains.

Gary's diminuitive size is attributed to the fact that he was extremely ill as a young child and had a kidney transplant when he was five. Since his surgery, Gary always has a 'birthday party' for his new kidney in December. "I invite all my friends, then we have ice cream and cake and sing 'Happy Birthday' to my kidney!" he exclaims.

Gary's brief television career has included appearances on "The Edge of Night," "The Jeffersons," "Good Times" and "America 2-Night".

His Love For Animals Triggered His Career

"How can you kill something that's fighting for its life?" asked the actor, star of "The Eddie Capra Mysteries," airing Friday, June 22 (10 to 11 p.m. on NBC-TV).

Baggetta doesn't stomp on any insects or bugs. He picks them up and throws them out.

It was his benevolent nature toward critters in general that prompted his commitment to acting.

"I was attending Los Angeles City College, unsure and afraid to make the plunge into acting," he recalled. "My major was chemistry. I didn't know what I really wanted to be besides an actor.

"Then, one day we had to dissect a frog! I gave up and just walked out of the class. I couldn't do it. I love animals — anything alive," said the former New Yorker.

That decision triggered Baggetta's switch to a theater arts major. He made straight A's but flunked out of school when he failed scenic design.

Goldie's Return

Goldie Hawn, who gave birth to a daughter, Katie, in April, will return to feature films with a starring role in "Private Benjamin."

No 'Talking Down'

Lawrence Einhorn reeled off the names from memory: "Cindy Williams, Marvin Gaye, Quinn Cummings, Wolfman Jack, Tony Danza, Jimmy Osmond, Richard Hatch — and those are just a few of our guests for this season. Do you know that some of the biggest names in show business have called us, asking to do the show? 'Kids Are People Too' is a show for kids, but we don't talk down to them and we sure don't expect our guests to do so."

Einhorn, who serves as executive producer and director of the ABC-TV series for young people, bubbles over when discussing 'Kids,' which won the 1978-79 Emmy Award as the Outstanding Children's Entertainment Series.

"We take the point of view that to appeal to young people — our target audience is between 12 and 15, although many of our viewers are younger — we must remember that they have been exposed to adult entertainment, that they're preparing to move into an adult world."

The interview techniques that host Michael Young employs "are similar to those an adult talk show host might use, but the thrust is different. For example, the adult show host might ask Cindy Williams, 'How did you get the job on 'Laverne & Shirley'? Michael would ask, 'How do you prepare for the kind of job you have now?' or 'What should a teenager do to try to get where you are?'

"We also invite the mother of a guest celebrity and allow the audience to question both of them."

When Einhorn and his staff first considered using the press conference, he worried about the kinds of questions the teenagers would ask. "I'm happy to report that no one have ever asked, 'What's your favorite color?' Instead, they asked Lawrence-Hilton Jacobs' mother how she felt when her son gave up art for acting (she backed him up), and wanted Reggie Jackson to tell them all about the feud with Billy Martin?"

Einhorn has added another element on an occasional basis — historical guests. "So far we've got Fredd Wayne appearing as Orville Wright talking about the invention of the flying machine and the Wright Brothers' historic flight at Kitty Hawk, and we've got a wonderful Ben Franklin, played by Victor Pinheiro, talking about his childhood, his inventions and the discovery of electricity." Einhorn wishes they could do these vignettes every week, "but it's an enormous job for an actor to prepare the characterization and be able to answer audience questions. We'll do it as often as we can."

THE PINK PANTHER, a cartoon character who has been a perennial favorite with viewers both young and old, stars in his own program "The All New Pink Panther Show" Saturdays, 12-12:30 p.m. on ABC. Joining the freewheeling feline in his series are "Crazylegs," a hair-braned crane and his son Junior, who spend most of their time pursuing a pesky dragonfly, who manages to outwit them at every turn.

Pike's Peek

HOLLYWOOD — JEFF CONAWAY has confirmed the rumors that he and RONA NEWTON-JOHN (OLIVIA's older sister) will be wed on July 4th. "The invitations are being printed," the "TAXI" co-star says, "but we're keeping the location of the wedding a secret . . . for obvious reasons."

The rumor mill has it that DEAN MARTIN and ex-wife CATHY HAWN are discovering that love can be more wonderful the second time around.

KATE JACKSON and ANDREW STEVENS begin production of their first independent movie this month, a remake of "TOPPER." Appropriately, they've named their company COSMO, which was Topper's first name, as if you didn't know.

SUSAN ANTON's TV series for NBC is now on hold as a possible mid-season replacement for next January. But in the meantime, her first major theatrical film, "GOLDENGIRL," which has yet to be released theatrically, has been sold to TV for a reported $5 million.

MARIE OSMOND was still being romantically linked to "BATTLESTAR GALACTICA" star DIRK BENEDICT when it was announced that she'd marry JEFF CRAYTON in August. Simply, Marie just couldn't get that serious with someone outside of her Mormon ties. It's understood that Marie and Jeff originally met during the production of Marie's would-be half-hour situation comedy pilot that will be submitted to ABC as a possible mid-season replacement.

DAVID SOUL and his ever-loving LYNNE MARTA are back together after being apart for some time, which just shows how the decline in popularity of a TV series can affect one's private life. That is to say, very little attention was given to their break-up when it occurred.

Those who are supposed to know such things — Madison Avenue advertising agents — are predicting that NBC will all but revamp its Fall primetime schedule with the insertion of at least a couple half-hour situation comedies. The network added just one such show in its initial program announcement, but they considered 20 and no doubt a couple of those will find themselves hurrying into production before September.

The truth may never be known but it's said that there are several very big reasons why JAMES MacARTHUR is not returning to "HAWAII FIVE-O" this Fall, one of which involves JACK LORD.

Past Films

A series of historical film features focusing on the great moments and personalities of past Winter Olympics will be produced for ABC Sports. The features will be presented on the air by the network both in advance of and during its coverage of the XIII Winter Olympics from Lake Placid, New York, next February.

The features will incorporate both archive film footage of past Olympic performances and historical still photo animation. In addition, they will be enhanced with interviews with great Olympians and contemporary footage to be shot exclusively for this series.

The producer/writer/director of the feature series will be Bud Greenspan, who will be working with ABC Sports on both subjects and content. Greenspan has won numerous awards for his film and television productions dealing with historical sports subjects. Among his awards are two Emmys for "The Olympiad," a series of programs produced for PBS in 1976. Greenspan is also the author of the book, "Play It Again, Bud."

Brief

The Lake Placid Olympic Organizing Committee recently announced the names of the 52 runners who have been selected to carry the Olympic Torch from Yorktown, Va., to Lake Placid. The 26 men and 26 women chosen represent the 50 states, the District of Columbia and Lake Placid. According to LPOOC officials, they are well-rounded people: strong runners in challenging professions with a demonstrated interest in the arts. Among those who will relay the flame are a minister, a housewife, a lobsterman, a military officer and a college student. The oldest is 56, while the youngest is only 16 . . . .

Golfers Compete

Dave Marr and Bob Rosburg, ABC Sports' golf commentator for the coverage of the U.S. Open, are picking different men to win the premiere golf event in the world. Dave is siding with the favored Tom Watson, but Bob feels that Ed Sneed — after letting the Masters slip through his fingers — is mentally ready to win at Inverness Club in Toledo, Ohio.

Viewers will be able to see for themselves which of the commentators is correct or whether both are wrong when ABC continues its coverage of the event Saturday and Sunday, June 16 and 17 (2:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m., both days).

"I'd have to put a guy like Watson ahead of the pack to win," says Marr, "because of his recent record and also because he is the kind of precise player who will do well on the short and narrow Inverness course. The U.S. Open winner from last year, Andy North, will have his hands full trying to win again. Not since Ben Hogan in 1951 has a player won an Open two years running."

Dave's choice surely isn't a long shot. Last year, refusing to rest on his laurels, Tom Watson became the first golfer ever to sweep the PGA Tour money title, PGA Player of the Year Award and the Vardon Trophy in back-to-back seasons.

Watson also earned his first million dollars faster than anyone ever had on the Tour. His career winnings passes seven figures approximately six years and seven months after his first check on the Tour.

Rosburg agrees that Watson is the favorite, but he's picking dark horse Ed Sneed. "I was playing with Ed in Palm Springs the other day, and I've never seen anyone so eager or determined. He is in a terrific frame of mind, and I think he has enough momentum to go all the way at the Open. I have my doubts about how well Nicklaus will do. I don't think he has prepared himself for the tournament. Jack may think he's ready, but he just hasn't played enough to get in shape for the Open. I'm not sure Jack has the incentive to really commit himself anymore."

Although Rosburg has never been to Inverness, Marr remembers playing it in 1957 when the U.S. Open was last held there.

TOM WATSON became the first golfer ever to sweep the PGA Tour money title, PGA Player of the Year Award and Vardon Trophy. Now he is vying for another win in the U.S. Open. ABC Sports continues it coverage of the event Saturday and Sunday, June 16 and 17 (2:30 to 6:30 p.m. both days).

JOCKEY Steve Cauthen is expected to run in the Oaks Horse Race in Epsem England. NBC will present taped coverage of the legendary English event on "SportsWorld" Sunday, June 17 (4 p.m.).

Grew Up Around The Horses

Steve Cauthen attended his first Kentucky Derby in 1963, the year Chateugay defeated Candy Spots. Cauthen was three years old at the time. Fifteen years later, he was at the top of the horse racing world.

In 1978, the young jockey rode the famed Affirmed all the way to the Triple Crown, defeating rival Alydar three consecutive times to capture the coveted racing jewel.

The question now is: did the younster peak too early?

Cauthen may get a chance to begin another comeback in the Oaks Horse Race. Taped coverage of the race, run in Epsom, England, will be presented on NBC-TV's "SportsWorld" Sunday, June 17 (4 to 5:30 p.m.). In addition to the race, highlights of the men's competition in the United States Gymnastics Federation Championships and the NASCAR Dogwood Classic from Martinsville, Va. will also be featured.

Cauthen, the jockey some consider the most talented ever, received more honors than a lot of sports figures 20 years older. He was the winner of Sport's Illustrated's annual Sportsman of the Year award in 1977 and has already surpassed $7 million in winnings at the track.

"He's a nice little boy," says jockey agent Lenny Goodman. "Outside, he's a baby. Until you put him down on a horse. He puts the goggles down and he's no more baby. You wouldn't know him from Cordero or Arcaro or Baeza."

Cathen's father, Ronald (Tex) Cauthen, is a horseshoer on the Kentucky-Ohio racing circuit and owns a 40-acre farm near Walton, Kentucky. Also, his mother, Myra, is a licensed trainer as well as owner of thoroughbreds and his uncle is a trainer.

You might say Steve Cauthen went into the 'horse business' naturally.

"Dad put me up on a spotted brown-and-white pony when I was 2 years old," Steve recalls. "Later, he took me to the tracks in Cincinnati and Latonia, Ken."

After Steve showed obvious interest in becoming a jockey, his dad borrowed a movie projector and films so the two could study the techniques of other jockeys.

DANNY "LITTLE RED" LOPEZ will defend his WBC Featherweight championship title in a bout to be broadcast live by CBS Sports Sunday, June 17 (4 to 6 p.m.).

CBS Championship Bout

Danny "Little Red" Lopez sets out to defend his World Boxing Council Featherweight Championship title against the WBC's number-one ranked contender, Mike Ayala, on a CBS Sports Special to be broadcast live from San Antonio, Texas, Sunday, June 17 (4 to 6 p.m.).

"Little Red," so nicknamed because he was one of seven brothers and sisters who grew up on a Ute Indian reservation in Utah, became the WBC Featherweight Champion in November, 1976. It was at that time that he won a unanimous 15-round decision against David Kotey, with most of some 120,000 fans at the fight in Ghana cheering for Kotey.

Since then, Lopez has knocked out all eight of his opponents, defending his title successfully six times and winning two non-title bouts. His most recent defense was on March 10 in Salt Lake City when he KO'd Roberto Castanon in the second round. It was the loser's first defeat in 30 pro fights.

Lopez, who is 26 years old, stands 5-foot 8-inches tall and weighs about 128 pounds. He has won 40 of his 43 professional bouts — with 37 of 40 triumphs coming by knockouts — for an amazing percentage of 92.5. His last defeat was a 10-round decision to Octavio Gomez more than four years ago. He avenged that loss a year later by knocking out Gomez in the third round.

Mike Ayala, 21 years old, was born and raised in San Antonio, the site of this championship bout. In an extensive amateur career, Ayala recorded 152 victories in 158 bouts, winning the National Golden Gloves Championship in 1971, '72 and '73 before turning pro in 1975. On the way to his amateur titles, he twice defeated Thomas Hearns, who is now the fourth-ranked welterweight in the world.

As a professional, Ayala, who is nicknamed "Cyclone," has scored 22 triumphs in 23 bouts, with 12 of those victories coming by knockouts. His lone defeat was a TKO in May of 1977 against Rodolpho Martinez.

Currently the North American Boxing Federation's featherweight champion, Ayala successfully defended that title with a 12-round decision against Edel Bournda in San Antonio last November. In his most recent bout, this past February in Las Vegas, he decisioned Jose Nunez.

Also scheduled that afternoon will be a 10-round bout between U.S. Olympic champion Howard Davis, who is undefeated as a professional, and Mexican lightweight champion, Jose Hernandez.

He's 'Never Satisfied'

"I'm never satisfied. That's the way you should be. You should always try to better yourself. Team accomplishments are more important than anything I'll ever be able to do as an individual."

That's Ron Cey, premier third baseman for the Los Angeles Dodgers, talking about Ron Cey. But the man they call 'The Penguin' around Southern California could have just as well been talking for the entire Dodger team.

Those are the guys who follow their manager, Tom Lasorda, as if he were Moses. Unfortunately for the L.A. club, they haven't reached the promised land. Not yet.

For the past two seasons, the New York Yankees, who compare to the Dodgers like a pep band compared to a military organization, have squelched the Dodger Dream of success.

Tom Lasorda may bleed Dodger Blue, but players like Ron Cey wear it on their sleeves.

The Dodgers face the Atlanta Braves in the alternate game when NBC-TV presents the Game of the Week Saturday, June 23 (2:15 p.m.). The contest will pit the San Francisco Giants against the Cincinnati Reds.

Although Cey would be the last to tell you, he's one of major league baseball's most consistent hitters, as well as a bonafied long-ball threat. Although not of Herculean size, he has reached the 20-mark in homers the past four seasons.

Cey has knocked out round-trippers in the double figures for the past six campaigns. Add to that an average of 90 RBIs the past five seasons and you know why National League pitchers can't pitch around the third-baseman.

He holds two Dodger records in his seven years with the club. In 1974, he knocked in eight runs against the San Diego Padres, and he has played over 300 games at third base for L.A., a team mark.

But his finest moment came in 1977, during his "April Shower of Power." During that month, he batted .425, drove in 29 runs (a major league record) and belted nine homers. Cey ended up with 30 homers for the season and a hefty 110 RBIs.

No wonder Lasorda calls his Penguin "one of the most valuable clutch hitters in the game." Few Dodger fans, or baseball fans, for that matter, would disagree.

"YOU SHOULD ALWAYS try to better yourself," says Los Angeles Dodger Ron Cey, whose team faces the Atlanta Braves for NBC's alternate "Game of the Week" Saturday, June 23 (2:15 p.m.).

Robert Hays, the handsome young star of "Angie," can really relate to the "poor, starving actor" stories of show business. While working at the Old Globe Theatre in San Diego, the aspiring actor was paid $45 a week — $2 less than he would have received through unemployment insurance — for nine shows a week.

Mrs. Lillian Carter, mother of President Jimmy Carter, will be Johnny Carson's guest Thursday, June 21, on 'The Tonight Show." This will be 'Miss Lillians' first appearance on the program.

Jack Lemmon Stars

Jack Lemmon stars as a man made desperate by the corruption pervading his life and who struggles to regain his self-respect, in "Save the Tiger." The contemporary drama will be rebroadcast on "The CBS Saturday Night Movies," June 23 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Lemmon won an Academy Award for his portrayal of Harry Stoner in the film, which also stars Jack Gilford.

Stoner is a middle-aged garment manufacturer who awakens one morning to a nightmare: his business is going bankrupt, he is distraught over the emptiness of his life and he is overwhelmed by a sense of loss — of his youth, his vitality and his values.

Stoner, in a desperate financial situation, is forced to confront the seamy side of his business, pandering for his clients and seriously considering having a warehouse burned down for the insurance money. Thoroughly depressed, he meets Myra, played by Laurie Heinemann, a free-spirited young woman who opens his eyes and gives him a new perspective on life. After spending the night with Myra, Stoner comes to a deeper understanding and acceptance of himself.

FOR ROBERT BERGLAND, Secretary of Agriculture

What can farmers do to keep their sons "down on the farm?" —Mrs. Clara Lenore Strand, Osnabrock, N.D.

● Youngsters will not remain on the farm without an adequate income incentive, and the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture helps in this respect by keeping farmers informed of market and crop conditions; promoting the expansion of domestic and foreign markets; providing direct payments to farmers; providing loans at moderate interest to farmers who need special help. In addition, the Government helps finance higher agricultural education through the land grant college system. Further, improvements in the tax laws may eventually allow farmers to pass farms to their heirs without excessive taxation that forces sales, often to land developers. The average age of farmers is getting younger and in some areas migration to urban centers has slowed.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Is it true that Marlo Thomas and her father (Danny Thomas) don't get along? What do they fight about? Is he sore because she's not married? —M.G., Lakeland, Fla.

● They do get along — and they do argue. They first started having words when Marlo got to the dating stage. Recalled Danny: "I always got annoyed when she stayed out late, even if she was on a double date. Marlo complained because I'd be there, on the front porch, waiting for her." Well, Danny no longer can control Marlo's dating, or bicker about it, but they still have words — on different subjects. One of them is psychiatry: "I don't believe in it, and I don't think it helps, but she does. Nor do we have the same political views." As to Marlo's bachelor-girl status, Danny says, "She and I have an understanding. Our private lives are private, and neither one of us sticks a nose into the other's affairs."

He is the doubting Thomas.

FOR NATALIE COLE, singer and daughter of the late Nat King Cole

Seems to me that children of celebrities complain they had a hard life because of publicity. How about you? —S.G., Port Arthur, Texas

● I certainly didn't. I went to public schools where, at first, kids expected me to be snobby, but they soon stopped all that when they saw I had nothing to be snobby about. There was publicity all right, but it didn't have any adverse effect on me. I didn't get everything I wanted just like that.

FOR NICK NOLTE, actor

When did you and your dad finally make up? I heard he stopped talking to you after you decided to follow in his acting footsteps. —Pearl Williams, Fayetteville, N.C.

● Stop talking? Acting footsteps? Wherever did you hear those two? My dad (Frank Nolte) was a pump salesman. He was a real travelin' man. I was born in Omaha, and we lived just about everywhere. Dad, by the way, was an All-American candidate at Iowa State in 1934. In that, I wouldn't have minded following in his footsteps.

FOR BOWIE KUHN, Commissioner of Baseball

When did the tradition of throwing the ball around the bases get started? —Lisa Marsh, Muscle Shoals, Ala.

● Before the 1900's. Originally, it was the only form of warming up before the game started. In other words, it took the place of what is now known as infield practice. As time passed and infield practice became an important ritual in itself, the ball was then thrown around the bases before the first pitch was made to start the inning and before the first two outs were recorded.

FOR ABIGAIL VAN BUREN, advice columnist

How different are people and their problems now from the day you started writing, and how can a reader get to meet you? —Louise J. Panni, Hyde Park, N.Y.

● Today's readers are much more open about personal matters — sex, primarily. The problems that keep cropping up are those that deal with relationships between lovers, friends, parents and their children, in-laws, employer-employees, human relations. I do not meet those who write to me. Many ask to, but I do not do so as a matter of policy.

FOR RONA JAFFE, author of Class Reunion

Strange illnesses occur in your books — anorexia in The Last Chance and agoraphobia, epilepsy and Downs syndrome in this one. Why? — Jody Milford, Joliet, Ill.

● I'm just interested in medicine. We know a lot about Downs syndrome now because it has had publicity. We know too little about epilepsy, and it needs better understanding because epileptics are ashamed of stereotypes that surround them. Often, they can't get jobs because employers are afraid of what could happen if they have a seizure.

FOR JERRY STILLER, actor

I hear you're making a mess of your kids by being too lenient a father. True? —M.J., Little Rock, Ark.

● Not so. Also I object to the word "lenient." It implies I'm making life too easy for my kids. I'm not. Amy is 17, Ben, 13, and my wife Anne (Meara) and I were lucky to have kids with good sense. They're the lenient ones. They don't mind that we're away from them so much and only require we sit down and have dinner with them once a week when they can tell us what's happening in their lives.

PRO AND CON

Is There Too Much Sports On TV?

PRO Bess Myerson, consumer advocate, former Commissioner of Consumer Affairs, New York City

Wide World

Sports coverage on TV is a needed service to millions who might be unable to attend an event. But programming should have balance and economy. In one week there were 45 sports events in the TV listings — that is not balance and economy. When any type of programming dominates the screen, as is happening with sports now, then the medium's response to our diverse interests is limited. Many viewers write me, not only of this saturation, but of the packaging that goes with it — the promos, the pregame programs, the postgame programs, the endless commentaries, as if viewers are too dumb to understand what they see.

CON Chet Simmons, president of NBC Sports

NBC

Television gives the viewers what they like. The fact is, more people are interested in more sports. Not only have the NFL, the NBA and the colleges increased their schedules, but there has been a tremendous rise in the popularity of women's sports, keynoted with the national attention Billie Jean King grasped in her match with Bobby Riggs several years ago. Additionally, the Olympics have soared in popularity, spotlighting gymnastics in particular. As a result, at least 12 different gymnastic segments are featured on the three major networks. The American's interest in health has given sports a healthy boost; the high cost of going out has made TV a major leisure activity.

MICHAEL DOUGLAS: THE SON ALSO RISES

Rod Lewine/Transworld Features

The "second-generation dimple" with wife, Diandra, and infant son, Cameron.

By Isobel Silden

Michael Douglas has a lot to grin about these days. "For someone who was considered a second-generation dimple in the chin," he says, "I'm enjoying being considered a major power in the entertainment business. You gotta laugh at it: It's like any son going into his father's business."

The first-generation dimple, of course, is Michael's father, actor Kirk Douglas, who blazed to fame after three years in Hollywood with his fifth movie, Champion, in 1949. It has taken Michael somewhat longer to achieve stardom, but today he is the most successful of those sons who have followed their fathers into show business. It wasn't easy.

When Michael was five, his parents' marriage fell apart. His mother, actress Diana Douglas, moved to New York, taking Michael and his younger brother Joel with her. Although the boys often returned to Hollywood to visit their father, they spent most of their growing-up years in the East. It was only after graduating from Choate School in Connecticut that Michael returned to California.

He attended the University of California at Santa Barbara, and there he discovered the theater. He acted in several campus productions, and then returned to New York to begin his career in earnest. After graduation, he studied in New York, did several off-Broadway plays and a lot of television. He returned to Los Angeles, appeared in four films, and then the phone stopped ringing. When he was offered the role as the younger detective in Quinn Martin's The Streets of San Francisco, he took it because no one else wanted him.

Four years and 104 San Francisco episodes later, Michael had received three Emmy nominations, and had learned his craft well.

He left the TV series a year before his contract was up, in pursuit of his so-called "impossible dream." He wanted to bring Ken Kesey's One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest to the screen.

He pulled it off, of course. In fact, he succeeded so well that the film won five of the 1975 Academy Awards, and has grossed $130 million to date.

Until recently, however, his private life has not been so successful. He's had a number of romances, including a five-year liaison with actress Brenda Vaccaro which ended while he was working on the San Francisco series.

He was still a wild and crazy guy when he and his pal, co star Jack Nicholson, turned up at the inauguration of President Jimmy Carter. There he met 20-year-old Diandra Luker, and that was it. They were married in March 1977.

"Diandra is shy, intelligent, and has a fabulous sense of humor. That's why I adore her. She's funny and healthy. I could see having a life with her, raising kids." And so their son, Cameron, was born December 13, 1978. Michael will not commit to having more right now. He believes the new mother rates a rest.

"Diandra looks and acts like a lady. I wanted the responsibilities that go with marriage and family when I met her," Michael states. "Marriage relieves you of making lifestyle choices. If you are ready for the commitment and the obligations, there is peace and serenity in your life . . . I find a lot of personal security in making my son laugh."

What kind of model has Kirk Douglas been to his son? The senior Douglas says that he long ago recognized that "all kids go through a love-hate thing with their fathers. It's only in the last few years that Michael and I have become friends. I think of him as a human being whom I like, as much as I think of him as a son."

Michael, now 34, has obviously matured, and it's becoming. But his memories of his childhood are not entirely rosy. While he stresses that "Kirk and I have always talked over the years," he recalls that while he was growing up, "most of my time was spent coping.

"In one area we were fortunate, though," Michael continues. "My parents always talked to each other. Kids are flexible. If they see their parents talk, it's o.k. They can handle divorce."

For all the childhood traumas, Michael and his father have maintained a close relationship.

"My father is a very sensitive man," Michael says. "He had fears for me in this business: He considered himself tougher. At one point I tried to put together an artist's retreat in Vermont: painters, dancers, poets, authors, all doing their thing. It never happened, but it got a lot of press coverage. I think my father thought I'd OD'd on hipness."

Kirk's divorce when Michael was five meant commuting to see his famous dad.

Pictorial Parade

The hipness is gone now, replaced by dedication. Michael Douglas takes his career seriously.

"There are basically two kinds of actors," he says, "the clown who puts on a mask, and the guy who keeps stripping away, trying to get to a basic honesty. I think I'm the second kind, and it can be very painful. For that reason, if my son wants to acts when he grows up, I'd have to question his purpose. If it's autographs and sunglasses, that's one thing. If you're serious, you have to do your homework. I worked, studied and paid my dues.

"Being Kirk's son," he continues, "having his name, gave me a one-shot. People publicize the heck out of it. But then you have to deliver. Karl Malden pointed out that there used to be summer stock, places to practice without having your career ruined. Now you do three dog pictures, and you're out. Never mind that you have no control over anything. You're not box office."

He's box office now. He has just completed a new film, Running, which Universal will release in November. Again, he did his homework. He learned to run, losing 15 pounds and his cigarette habit as a result. He's pleased with the movie, and says, "It's a sweet film, a four-handkerchief film. You'll qvell over it!" (Qvell is a Yiddish word which means to burst with pride.)

How has his success affected him? When Kirk Douglas finally made it with Champion, the resultant hulabaloo prompted him to remark, "I haven't changed. It's the people around me who have." Michael agrees.

"Oh yes, people have changed," he says heartily. "They either look at you in a completely different light, because you have power, or they're not dismissing you as 'Kirk's son, the kid who did that TV series.' " There is gratification in his voice.

Michael is particularly proud of his recently released China Syndrome, a movie about a nuclear accident similar to the one at Three-Mile Island.

"I don't know how to explain how we felt when we saw what was happening at Three-Mile Island on TV. I haven't resolved it myself. I call it a religious experience, and it changed my life when we started seeing the people on the news. It was similar to our show. The shock went down our spines. We could never say it was a coincidence. I still think there is some reason why these events came together. It cannot be a coincidence that the movie was made, and a few weeks later, the real situation happened."

With no immediate plans, Michael is enjoying his wife, his son and the German shepherd, Banshe, that Diandra gave him as a wedding present. Their time is spent at their eight-bedroom home in Santa Barbara.

"My days are very leisurely. I run every morning, sometimes with Diandra. We play with the baby, and every day I go to the theater in Santa Barbara where the China Syndrome is playing to check the box-office receipts," he says.

Michael remembers his father telling him that he hadn't taken enough time to savor his successes. It's a lesson Michael has heeded, and he's very involved with his new family.

"I read an article that a baby's senses begin to develop three months before birth," Michael says. "I started talking to our baby while Diandra was pregnant. We'd studied Lamaze, but when we learned that the baby was in a breech position, Diandra had to have a Caesarean section. When Cameron was born, the nurse and I took him over to wash him, and he was crying. I said, 'Cameron, Daddy's here,' and he stopped crying!

"I am putting part of the profits from Syndrome into a special trust fund for Cameron's college education," he continues. "That's because I have all these guilts about posing with him bare-assed for a magazine when he was three-months old. I can only justify capitalizing on him when he's old enough to get mad at me."

And the relationship between Michael and his father has never been better.

"My father's been in London working on a film during all the Syndrome excitement, so he knows only what he's read and seen on TV. But we've been in constant contact. Kirk is proud as punch about the whole thing. He wrote me a lovely letter last week; he wrote that he is very proud of me, particularly about how I am handling it all." But, as far as that goes, father and son both have a lot to be proud of. FW

MY FATHER, MY SELF

Father has long been unfairly caricatured as a bumbler like Bumstead and Bunker. But finally Dad is no longer a family joke.

By Richard Louv

It was 1957. My father was sitting in the back of my third-grade class on a tiny chair made for a seven-year-old. He was wearing a business suit, and holding his gray felt hat between his knees.

The teacher asked my father, an engineer, to come to the front of the room. As he rose sheepishly to explain how an atom bomb worked, I was filled with pride — and some confusion. It was hard for me to grasp that my father would take time off work to speak to a class of third graders, even about such an earth-shaking topic. To me, a man's place was at his job, period.

On TV I'd only seen fathers portrayed as boobs when it came to child-rearing. Their involvement with their sons and daughters was mainly advisory or punitive. They spent a lot of time behind their newspapers.

After my father's classroom visit, I could not keep my eyes off him. This infuriated and embarrassed him, but I could not help myself. I was in awe of him, and of the gulf between us.

In 1979, is the gulf between fathers and sons narrowing? It's a difficult question to answer. Despite the thousands of novels which have dealt with the father-son relationship, social scientists still don't appear to know very much about it.

And father has been maligned by the media and ignored by the universities. According to Dr. Harold Feldman, human development and family studies professor at Cornell University, "Family studies are studies of mother."

Father looms small. Anthropologist Margaret Mead, in fact, was one of the first to suggest that fatherhood was not a biological instinct like motherhood, but a "social invention." And Maureen Green, author of the book, Fathering, says that because father "looms so large as a source of income, he has been allowed to loom so small as a person."

"No one is taking any notice of father..." Green writes. "As a topic, as a subject for research and conjecture by sociologists, by revolutionaries and journalists, father is forgotten. They are too busy concentrating on mothers."

While the feminist movement has brought some enlightenment to other family relationships, fathers and sons are still living in stereotypical patterns which have remained largely unchallenged.

"Girls tend to be lucky," Green writes, "since the model they need to give them daily reassurance that life can be lived is generally on hand demonstrating the fact. A boy has the harder task of understanding that the parent who is in charge of him for most hours of the day, the teacher who controls and encourages him in his first ventures outside the world of the family, both belong to the sex that he is not expected to join." If his father is not around, Green says, the boy may grow into an uncertain man who believes that there are only two ways of dealing with women: being totally aggressive or passive. She maintains that street-gang violence, where perhaps up to 50 percent of the boys are fatherless, is one outcome of uncertain masculinity: "A total and fearful rejection of everything female and feminine is usually one of the cornerstones of such a gang." The basic rules of civilization and education are seen by gang members as "feminine," since women are the only authorities — at home and at school — that many gang members have known.

If his father is not around, a boy may grow into an uncertain man.

As an example, Green describes writer Ian Fleming, whose father died when he was young, as the epitome of the uncertain, fatherless boy. "just as Fleming's creation, the ruthless Secret Service agent James Bond, sums up the fantasies of the fatherless...the James Bond books, full of sadism, contempt for women — disguised as a collector's catalogue of their attractions — and frequent plots to castrate the hero, can keep a psychiatrist amused even longer than other readers."

Feminists — and the growing legion of single mothers — would probably not agree that a father's presence is necessary for a son's development, and according to some recent studies, they may be right. The stereotype of the hard-working father who is ineffectual at home, lying on the couch watching television or sleeping, often is all too accurate.

The difference a dad makes. Ten years ago, Feldman conducted a major study of rural, urban and suburban teenagers, in order to find out how their fathers affected their behavior in school. "We found no difference between kids whose fathers were in the home frequently, and those kids who had no fathers. That was a real surprise. But when we studied this further, we found that most of the fathers who were at home were emotionally absent," says Feldman. "They were the ones lying on the couch, the 'breadwinners' who pretty much left the emotional needs of the family up to mother. But among the teen-agers whose fathers were both physically and emotionally present, there was a drastic difference. These kids did better in school, and they had a more positive attitude about themselves and about their families."

Doris Ettlinger

Psychologists have recently found that fathers not only talk less with their children than do mothers, but they talk differently. One study showed that fathers speak to their children an average of only 38 seconds in a 24-hour period. When fathers do talk with their children, the utterances are likely to be leading questions, such as: "Is this a car? Can you say car?" Some psychologists deem this kind of language to be an unconscious way of avoiding any real involvement. In asking a question, a father unconsciously may be choosing not to show very much of himself to his child.

"Fathers have traditionally been more distant from their sons than from their daughters, due, in part, to the 'masculine' mystique," says Dr. Robert Lewis, director of the Center for Family Studies, Arizona State University.

Up until the boy child is about nine months old, he is usually held and caressed by the father and mother much more than is the girl child. "Then there is an abrupt change, and the girl is fondled more," says Lewis. At about age six, a second "cooling off" takes place between the father and the boy: "Until age six, fathers play with the daughters just as roughly as with their sons. Then a subtle change often takes place. The father becomes more emotionally available to the daughter, while he continues to play rough — and at an emotional distance — with his son."

Fathers not only talk less with their children, but they talk differently.

Wide World

When father's mind is elsewhere. Even when fathers do spend more time with their children, the problem of communication is especially crucial. A study by psychologists Samuel Roll and Leverett Millan noted striking similarities between the upbringing of a group of young men who felt understood by their fathers, and a group which did not. As Human Behavior magazine asked: "What makes one boy's camp-out dream another's lost weekend? Or one man's spanking a lesson; the other's an exercise in child abuse?" Roll and Millan are not sure, but the chief difference between sons who feel secure with their fathers, and those who feel unimportant, is, as one son put it, "the problem of talking to someone whose mind is somewhere else."

ing of their daughters moving into what we have traditionally thought of as male roles, many fathers still cannot accept it if a son shows signs of being soft, loving, more artistic."

Feelings of detachment can have far-reaching effects. The typical teen-age father, for example, has an emotionally distant father who rarely had time for him, according to Richard D. Pancost, executive director of the Children's Home Society, which has produced a film on teen-age fatherhood. Pancost believes that fathers of adolescent boys are responsible for much of the sexual confusion in their sons: "The young man learned about sex from his peers, resented the fact that his mother discussed sex with his sisters but not with him. His father only made jokes about the subject, as a cover for his own embarrassment and insecurity in dealing with sexuality," Pancost says. "We have found the greatest resistance in accepting the need for an educational film on unmarried teen-age fathers to come from their own fathers."

But there is good news about fathers and sons, too. "You see many more young fathers with their children on the street these days," contends Dr. Lewis. "I think a new kind of father is emerging — one that can be closer to his child . . . My own feeling is that men in their 20's and 30's are beginning to question what it means to be a father. More and more groups of fathers are getting together to talk over their problems." Other evidence cited by Lewis is the growing number of magazine articles and books being written about fathers.

A new kind of father may be emerging, who can be closer to his child.

Father's new freedom. At the UCLA National Men's Conference last December, "nearly everyone said that they wished their fathers were more free to be warm and human with them," reports Lewis. "Many of them were also fathers and hoping to do better with their sons in this way."

One recent study showed that fathers want to be more involved with child-rearing, says Dr. Feldman. And in one survey of young couples, money was at the bottom of their list of priorities, even among college students enrolled in business school. "When we asked the students if they would rather have had their fathers in the home more often, over half of them said 'yes,'" says Feldman, "even if it meant there wouldn't have been enough money to pay for their college educations."

In the October issue of Ms., poet and-novelist Kenneth Pitchford wrote: "Our child, Blake, is now in fourth grade. One of the most touching things about this is that he 'instinctively' loves to take care of younger children. This isn't for approval or even for show. It's because his earliest memories include not solely his mother but, as far back and just as often, this grumpy, lovable old shoe of a person who snored sometimes when cuddling his baby asleep. It's what a Real Man does. Like his father. There's my reward."

Indeed, as my own potential fatherhood looms on the horizon, I have begun to ask certain questions. Should my wife and I both work part-time? Should I be a househusband for a while in order to allow my child to experience a full-time father? Am I secure enough in my own masculinity to give up part of my career, for the sake of my child?

"Those are the kinds of questions social scientists should have been trying to answer a long time ago," says Feldman. "But sometimes the right question is as good as an answer." FW

SLEEK, SPLASHY ONE-PIECE SWIMSUITS

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Fashion moves in cycles. Just when everyone has grown used to the two-piece or bikini swimsuit, one-piece suits are bidding for first place in the style sweepstakes.

But their look is definitely 1979. The body-awareness boom is evident in the sleek fit of this year's suits, with more kinds of necklines than fireworks on the Fourth of July.

Look for shirring and smocking, a design concept borrowed from blousewear, as a major dressmaker detail. When it comes to shapes, the maillot is still basic. Sun lovers will have plenty of strapless styles (forgoing the need to tuck in the usual straps on most swimwear), as well as the wrap, the V-neck, the tie-shoulder, the blouson and suits that are reversible to reveal another color. For those who cannot live without a bikini, the "mono-kini" abounds. It usually features baring cutouts, is attached in front but looks like a two-piece from the back.

The colors of this season's swimwear run from bright magentas, reds and blues to earth tones, some piped with white or yellow.

When you come to that moment of truth in the dressing room, here are some tips to help you select the right suit for you. Dark solids or vertical stripes give a longer, sleeker line. The neater, quieter prints tend to "slim" ample figures — but only the slender can carry splashy prints. Solid pastels and brights complement an already good figure. Make sure cutouts don't coincide with fleshy areas. If you can't insert thumbs easily under straps, try the next-larger size. FW

Officially authorized by the Saturday Evening Post

THE WONDERFUL WORLD

Limited Edition Deadline: August 31, 1979.

For more than 60 years, Norman Rockwell held up a mirror to America. We looked and saw reflections of ourselves: the way we live, love, laugh, cry—the way we feel about family, friends, neighbors, community, and country.

No other artist has looked so kindly on human nature. Norman Rockwell's wit was gentle, his wisdom genial, his warmth genuine. His paintings were inspired works of genius. How fortunate we are to have them—his lasting legacy to America!

Norman Rockwell was at his very best when painting covers for The Saturday Evening Post—perhaps because the Post, like Rockwell himself, was so perfectly attuned to the people. From 1916 to 1963, for two generations of Americans, Rockwell painted covers depicting life in America. It is impossible to think of Rockwell without thinking of the Post—and vice versa.

A magnificent tribute to America's best-loved artist

Now, by authority of The Saturday Evening Post, twelve of Rockwell's most memorable paintings will appear—for the first time—on beautiful bells of fine Bavarian porcelain.

Represented on these twelve bells are all the qualities that made Rockwell America's best-loved artist: the celebration of everyday delights...the tender recognition of human follies and foibles...the surprise of the eye-catching moment...and, above all, Rockwell's love of people: his faith in humanity's basic goodness.

Bells of fine Bavarian porcelain

Each of the twelve bells in this officially authorized collection will be flawlessly crafted in fine Bavarian porcelain. A wide range of ceramic colors will be used to recreate Rockwell's brilliant mastery of lighting, shading, texture, and color. In addition to the reproduction of his painting, each bell will also bear the famous Norman Rockwell signature.

The porcelain will possess a remarkable luminous quality causing the colors to radiate with a jewel-like glow. As an exquisite finishing touch, two bands of precious 22 kt. gold will be hand-applied to each bell.

A limited edition

PEOPLE QUIZ/By John E. Gibson

HOW DO YOU RATE WITH THE OPPOSITE SEX?

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. The extent to which sex appeal gives you an inside track with the opposite sex depends on whether you're a man or a woman.

2. Regardless of how much sex appeal a woman possesses, the amount she projects depends largely on one thing.

3. The attraction a girl has for a man — or a man has for a girl — depends for the most part on facial good looks, a girl's figure, a man's physique.

4. How much feedback you get from the sex appeal you radiate depends on whether the person is an introvert or an extrovert.

5. Regardless of how much sex appeal a woman may have, many men are "turned off" if she has a good sense of humor.

6. Outside of facilitating a possible romantic relationship, sex appeal (in itself) doesn't really do much for you.

ANSWERS

1. True. Studies at Canada's Simon Fraser University, which investigated the relationship between physical attractiveness and social success with members of the opposite sex, show that sex appeal does appreciably more for a girl's popularity with the opposite sex than it does for a man who is similarly endowed. It is interesting to note that other studies have shown that men tend to place a higher value on the physical attributes of the opposite sex than women do.

2. True. A team of University of Wyoming behavior scientists made a study of various factors affecting the impact of a woman's sex appeal on members of the opposite sex. A smile on a girl's face resulted in a significant boost in the sex-appeal rating accorded by impartial judges. It was found, for example, that "a woman who smiled the majority of the time (during which she was rated) was seen as more interpersonally attractive than a woman who seldom smiled."

3. False. Studies of physical attraction and personality variables conducted at Georgia State University indicate that it is "not so much a matter of how we look as how we act that determines how others respond to us and how attractive we are perceived to look." In other words, your general manner, what you say and how you say it — the way you handle yourself — is more effective than "looking like a million dollars."

4. True. Psychological studies at the University of London show that the extrovert is much more susceptible than the introvert to the charms of the opposite sex. Introverted persons were found to respond more conservatively to physical appeal, and to be less likely to be swept off their feet.

5. True. Dr. Martin Grotjahn, professor of psychiatry at the University of Southern California, concludes from his studies: The witty woman is feared by the insecure man — even if she is stunningly attractive — because wit and humor connote an element of aggressiveness and, therefore, seems to him potentially threatening. He points out, however, that the mature man, who does not insist on his imaginary superiority, will accept her wit and consider it a charming attribute.

6. False. So far as the fair sex is concerned, sociological studies at the University of Alberta (Canada) have demonstrated that men in general will go out of their way to help or advise a physically attractive girl much more quickly than they will take the trouble to render such service to a girl who is less-well endowed in the sex-appeal department. And psychological studies at Western Illinois University show that people who are physically attractive obtain greater rewards because they provide more romantic stimulation. FW

GARLIC: THE BULB THAT LIGHTS SUMMER DINING

Tom Cavanagh

By Marilyn Hansen

You probably use or taste this treasured food every week. Garlic, a member of the lily family, is also a close relative of the onion. Garlic plants have flat, grayish-green leaves which grow to a foot or two.

There are many strains of garlic grown all over the world, about 300 in all. The tissue-like skin ranges from white to dark wine shades. They grow with many cloves or few; with long cloves and stubby ones. Some produce bulbs above ground.

When purchasing, you should look for firm, plump bulbs with clean, dry, unbroken skins. In the home, it stores well in a dry, cool place in an open container. Refrigeration is not recommended.

Garlic contains the amino acid, alliin, which scientists say has antibiotic and bacterial effects. It has long been accepted as a purgative and is believed to promote cardiovascular activity and a beneficial, soothing action on the respiratory system.

Dieters may use garlic with a lavish hand as each clove contains only one to two calories and adds zest to a dietetic meal.

PESTO
Italian Garlic and Basil Sauce

- 4 large cloves garlic
- 1 cup fresh basil leaves
- ¼ cup pine nuts
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ½ cup olive oil
- ¾ cup grated Parmesan cheese

1. Peel garlic. Combine garlic, basil, pine nuts and salt in blender jar. Blend at low speed until ingredients are chopped fine and form a paste.

2. Gradually blend in oil alternately with cheese, blending until well mixed.

3. Use as sauce for pasta or flavoring for soups.

4. To store, turn into jar and cover wth a layer of olive oil. Cover tightly and refrigerate. Makes 1 cup

To prepare sauce with mortar and pestle: Chop, mash or put garlic through garlic press. Chop basil leaves fine. Place pine nuts in large mortar and crush fine with pestle. Blend in salt and 2 tablespoons oil to form a paste. Add garlic and continue working with pestle until well blended. Add chopped basil and continue blending with pestle until fine and well mixed. Blend in remaining oil alternately with cheese.

*If fresh basil is unavailable, pesto may be made when the basil is in supply and kept frozen, or a combination of dried basil and fresh parsley can be used as a good substitute. Replace the 1 cup of fresh basil leaves with 4 tablespoons of dried basil, 1 cup of fresh parsley, packed loosely (no stems), and ⅓ cup water. Blend all ingredients including cheese in a blender or food processor.

BAGNA CAUDA

- 6 large cloves garlic
- 1 cup sweet butter
- ¼ cup olive oil
- 2 tablespoons chopped anchovies
- Vegetables and bread sticks for dipping

1. Peel garlic. Mince or put through garlic press.

2. Melt butter in small saucepan. Add garlic and oil. Cook over very low heat 5 minutes until garlic is softened but not browned.

3. Add anchovies and continue cooking 5 minutes. Transfer to flameproof container and keep warm while serving.

4. Serve as a dip for raw or lightly blanched vegetables, such as cucumbers, fresh mushrooms, celery, zucchini, carrots, cauliflower, green pepper and green onions, and bread sticks.

Makes a generous 1 cup

Variation: Blend 1 cup whipping cream and a generous dash or two freshly ground pepper into garlic-butter mixture. Simmer 2 or 3 minutes.

SKORDALIA*

- 4 large garlic cloves
- ⅓ cup toasted walnuts or blanched almonds
- 1 large egg
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon grated lemon peel
- 1 cup olive oil or half olive oil and vegetable oil
- 2 tablespoons white wine vinegar
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- Several twists freshly ground black pepper

1. Have all ingredients at room temperature. Peel garlic.

2. Place walnuts in blender jar and blend to fine meal. Turn out and set aside.

3. Add garlic, egg, salt and lemon peel to blender jar. Cover and blend at medium speed a few seconds.

4. With motor running, remove cover and slowly pour in half the oil in a small, steady stream. Stop motor and scrape down sides of jar.

5. Cover, turn to medium speed, then uncover and add vinegar and lemon juice, then remaining oil in slow stream as before, stopping motor to scrape down sides of jar occasionally as sauce thickens.

6. Turn out and stir in walnuts and pepper. Serve with hot or cold fish, or toss with 1 lb. cooked fettucine noodles.

*Skordalia is the Greek version of Italian Bagna Cauda (hot bath).

2. Combine garlic, egg yolks, mustard, salt and pepper in blender container. Cover and blend until smooth.

3. With motor running, remove cover and slowly pour in half the oil in a small, steady stream. Stop the motor and scrape down sides of container with spatula.

4. Cover and turn to medium speed. Uncover and add lemon juice, then remaining oil in a slow stream as before, stopping motor to scrape down sides of jar occasionally as sauce thickens. Chill.

5. Serve sauce with hot or cold fish, cold meat or vegetables. A colorful platter of vegetables, steamed just until tender and served at room temperature or chilled, is ideal. Artichokes, green beans, boiled potatoes, carrots, asparagus, zucchini and cherry tomatoes (uncooked) make an especially good combination with the Aioli. Makes 1⅓ cups

GARLIC VINAIGRETTE

- ½ cup wine vinegar
- ¼ cup lemon juice
- 3 cloves garlic, lightly crushed
- 1 tablespoon dry mustard
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 1 tablespoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon freshly ground pepper
- ¼ teaspoon dried tarragon
- 1 tablespoon minced fresh parsley
- 2 cups olive oil

1. Combine all seasonings with vinegar and lemon juice and shake in a screw-top glass jar.

2. Add oil and shake thoroughly. Allow dressing to stand about an hour to blend flavors. Remove garlic before serving.

Makes about three cups

Editor's Note: Use over cool, cooked vegetables, salad greens or julienne-cut roast beef or roast chicken.

Getting More Out of Garlic

Crush garlic cloves the easy way. Use a garlic press or smash the cloves with a rolling pin between several thicknesses of waxed paper.

You can flavor foods easily with fresh garlic by cutting up garlic cloves and storing them in a jar of salad oil. Use this garlic oil to marinate meats, for salad dressings or for frying.

When a recipe calls for minced garlic, remember that a medium clove, minced, yields about 1/8 teaspoon.

If you have trouble peeling garlic cloves, rinse in hot water before peeling. The hot water tend to loosen the skin.

QUESTIONS

Did you enjoy touching bases with our last baseball quiz? Here are some more questions for you to field. The answers follow.

1. Only two major-league players have played all nine positions in a single game. Can you name them?

2. Only three men have ever started at four different positions in the major-league All-Star game. Who were they?

3. Can you name the three brothers who played in the same outfield in the same game?

4. Of baseball's original 16 major-league franchises at the turn of the century, which was the last team to make it to the World Series?

5. What are the two oldest ballparks in use in the National League?

6. Who was the first Little League graduate to make the major leagues?

7. As a major-league player, he hit only 117 home runs in 26 different big-league ballparks. Who was he?

8. Who was the pitcher who gave up Ted Williams' last major-league home run and Roger Maris's 60th home run, which tied Babe Ruth's record?

9. When he was born, his father named him after a Hall of Fame player. The boy grew up to reach the major leagues and became a Hall of Famer himself, the only Hall of Famer to be directly named after another Hall of Famer.

10. Who was a major-league manager, National Basketball Association coach and athletic director at a major college? He also, at one time, was selected to the all-time New York Yankee team.

Jim Benagh is the author of Incredible Baseball Feats and other books.

Wide World

Who is this first Little League alumnus to make the Big Leagues?

ANSWERS

1. Bert Campaneris of the Kansas City Athletics was the first to do it as a promotional gimmick in an official game in 1965. Cesar Tovar matched the feat while playing for the Minnesota Twins in 1968.

2. Hank Aaron and Stan Musial played all three outfield positions and first base in All-Star games. Pete Rose has played second, left field, right field and third base.

3. The Alou brothers — Felipe, Jesus and Matty — played in the same outfield for the San Francisco Giants in 1963.

4. The St. Louis Browns, forerunners of the Baltimore Orioles, didn't make it to the World Series until 1944, when most of the good major-league players were off fighting in World War II.

5. The Chicago Cubs' Wrigley Field is the oldest, but Candlestick Park, home of the San Francisco Giants, has jumped to second because of the new wave of National League parks.

6. Joey Jay, who came up to the Milwaukee Braves in 1953 and went on to win 99 major-league games.

7. Leo Cardenas never hit more than 20 home runs in a season but he once shared the major-league record for hitting them in the most different parks.

8. Jack Fisher.

9. Mickey Mantle, whose father named him after the great catcher, Mickey Cochrane.

10. Red Rolfe, who managed the Detroit Tigers, coached the Toronto Huskies in the first year of the NBA, and was athletic director at Dartmouth College. At one point, many baseball buffs rated him the best third baseman in Yankee history.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

Checking For Glaucoma

Most Americans feel that blindness is one of the worst disabilities one can suffer. Yet 60,000 people are blind because their glaucoma has reached an advanced stage, and two million more have the condition. The gradual blindness occurs because of an increase in pressure within the eyeball that causes damage to the optic nerve that connects the eye to the brain. Unfortunately, the most common form of glaucoma causes problems without any warning symptoms except the actual loss of vision, and once the damage is done, it cannot be reversed.

Since early diagnosis is so easy, blindness from glaucoma is especially tragic. Eye examinations often include glaucoma tests, particularly if you are over 35; if you have never had one, make sure one is included in your next exam. And for more information about glaucoma, write for Glaucoma — diagnosis, treatment, prevention, a pamphlet available for 50 cents from the Public Affairs Committee, Dept. F.W., 381 Park Avenue South, N.Y., N.Y. 10016.

Seeing Is Believing

Oh, what modern technology has wrought! Small enough to pass easily through the eye of a common needle, this computer memory chip can store 64,000 individual pieces of information — roughly equivalent to 1,000 eight-letter words. Each chip measures about one-quarter of an inch on a side and contains more than 155,000 components. Just a handful of these silicon and aluminum chips would hold all the information printed in the 30-volume Encyclopaedia Britannica.

What Price Beauty?

Shampoos, soaps, cosmetics and other personal-care products are a billion-dollar industry in this country. To make sure that you're getting your money's worth, Shari Bryant, a consumer-affairs adviser for a Chicago-based cosmetic manufacturer, suggests that you compare ingredients. The FDA now requires that ingredients be listed on all cosmetics labels, and you'll often find that products with radically different prices may contain similar components.

"Ingredients are listed in order of predominance and even if you don't know what those ingredients do, you can look on the back and compare," says Ms. Bryant. But, just so you do know, here's a list of some common ingredients that are used in personal-care products.

BHA. This is a preservative that keeps the fats and oils in lotions from becoming rancid.

EDTA. This compound helps products work well in hard water. It may be labeled as Disodium EDTA or Trisodium EDTA.

Glycerin. Glycerin compounds keep water and oil from separating. Glyceryl and glycol are two words that signal the presence of glycerin.

Lauramide DEA, Cocamide DEA. Derived from coconut oil, these are used to thicken shampoo and shaving cream and make them foamier.

Lauryl Sulfates. This is a cleansing agent which may appear under an alias such as Sodium Laureth Sulfate or Ammonium Laureth Sulfate.

Using A Ladder

Everyone has to use a ladder at some point or another, and during the summer, when most people paint their houses, the number of injuries due to falls from ladders soars. Every year nearly 90,000 people have accidents while using ladders.

There are a number of precautions you can take before you climb up those rungs. The Underwriters Laboratories, an independent testing service, suggests that you plant your ladder on a firm, level surface and make sure that it is long enough for the job. Quite a few ladder accidents are the result of people trying to reach for the impossible.

Make sure that the ladder is sound, and if you are using a stepladder, remember to lock the spreader before you start your climb. If you're using a straight ladder, it should extend at least 36 inches above the point on which the ladder is resting. The base should be one foot away from the wall for every four feet of length. For example, a 16-foot ladder should be four feet away from the wall.

And remember: Use at least one hand as you climb up and down. Save the monkeying around for another time.

Lifestyles

Television. You often don't need a doctor to tackle common medical situations. All you need is to learn enough about your body so that you can work in conjunction with your doctor if something does go wrong. Now, the Public Broadcasting System is airing "Here's to Your Health," a series geared solely to providing self-help information to the consumer. Hosted by a number of Academy and Emmy award-winning stars and featuring physicians who are tops in their field, the series is being broadcast nationwide. Check local listings for the time in your area.

Alternatives. With gasoline hard to get, most Americans will continue to drive to work and will cut down on weekend and vacation travel to reduce their fuel consumption. According to a recent Gallup poll, commissioned by the Highway Users Federation, only 11 percent of those surveyed said they would switch to public transportation and only one in five would use a car pool if gas were short.

Children. According to Marian Wright Edelman, director of the Washington, D.C.,-based Children's Defense Fund, two out of every five children are not fully immunized against major childhood diseases, and 10 million have no known regular source of primary medical care.

Our Story: PRINCE VALIANT AND ALETA HAVE DECIDED TO TAKE KING ARTHUR'S ADVICE AND HAVE GALAN TRAINED AS A PALACE PAGE BOY... THE FIRST STEP ON THE HARD ROAD TO KNIGHTHOOD.

SHE ORDERS HIM TO TAKE OFF HIS TUNIC..... HE STANDS IN HIS SHORTS, EMBARRASSED, WHILE SHE TAKES A TUNIC FROM A CHEST. "YOU WILL WEAR THIS WITH THE KING'S CREST ON IT FROM NOW ON."

GALAN IS MOST INDIGNANT AND COMPLAINS TO HIS MOTHER, "THEY TOOK MY FATHER'S CREST AWAY FROM ME!" ALETA ONLY SMILES, "IT IS A PRIVILEGE TO WEAR ARTHUR'S CREST."

LADY MATILDA IS HOLDING CLASS: "ETIQUETTE MEANS GOOD MANNERS. YOU MUST NOT BELCH WHILE EATING. MEAT IS NOT TO BE DIPPED IN THE SALT DISH. NOW, BOYS, MEET GALAN; HE IS A VIKING PRINCE, SO HELP HIM LEARN OUR WAYS!"
