Governors Say Carter's Plan 'Bold, Forceful'

By CLAY F. RICHARDS
UPI Political Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — Governors returning from the Camp David energy summit said Saturday President Carter is working on a "bold, forceful plan" to tackle economic and energy problems.

Seven governors who flew from Washington to the National Governors' Association conference said Carter did not give details of his plans. But they said it would include a way of making the oil companies "more accountable" to the government and the public and was aimed at freeing the nation from the "stranglehold" of the international oil cartel.

"The meeting was like a new Declaration of Independence for the United States," said Gov. James Hunt, D-N.C.

Carter flatly ruled out wage and price controls, they said.

Several said they "felt better" about the state of the nation following their overnight session with Carter.

Gov. Julian Carroll, D-Ky., chairman of the NGA, said Carter's program would "hopefully free us from the stranglehold of dependence on foreign oil."

Carroll said Carter was working "to establish an agenda of domestic items" including but not restricted to energy. He said the energy portions would include both executive and legislative action and cover energy production, conservation and economy-strengthening measures.

Carroll said the Carter program might include an "accountability system for the oil companies ... so the public knows what those inventories are and what the oil companies are doing with them."

Gov. George Busbee, D-Ga., said that in the Carter program "the American people are going to be called on to make the sacrifices necessary to make this nation a strong nation."

Busbee said Carter's plan will address "much more than just shortening the lines at the gas pump, it's the security of the nation."

"The president feels a need for re-evaluation of all the things that have caused the energy and inflation problems," Bowen said. "We should afford him the luxury of time to reconsider ...as the lone Republican (governor) there I want to say these problem transcend politics."

Bowen said Carter wanted a "bold, forceful plan" that tied the energy crisis to the nation's overall economic situation.

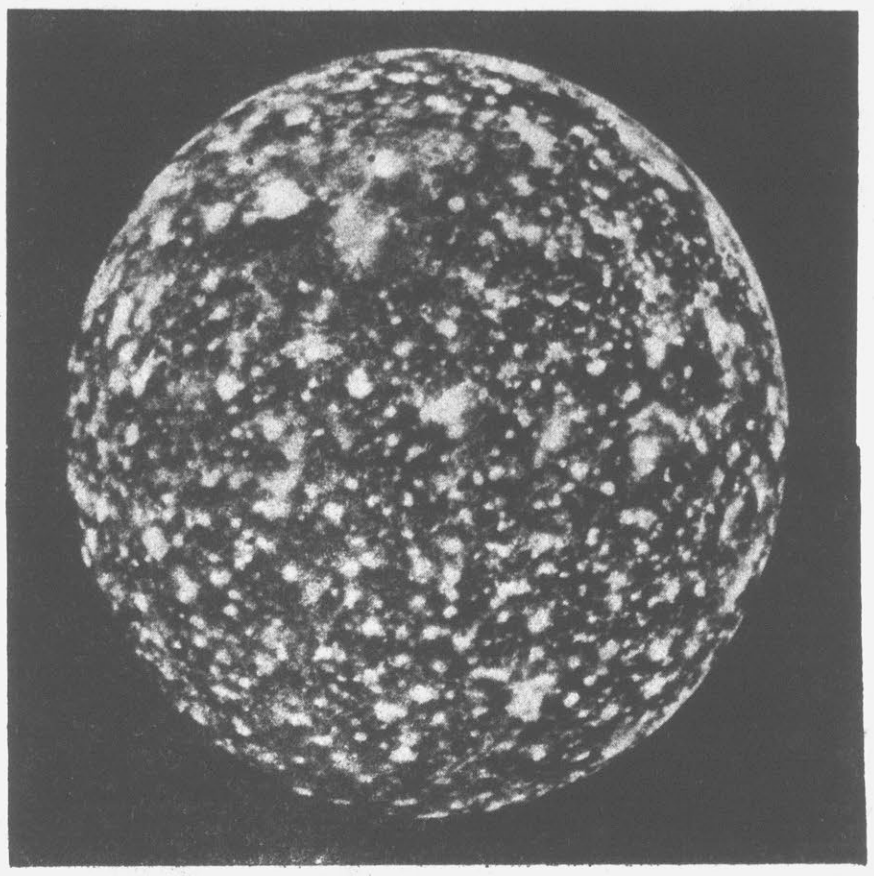
He said after Carter reveals his program "I think it is extremely important that Congress gets the message that they should not come home until they have solved the problem."

The governors said they sat around the president's lodge in the Maryland mountain reteat talking until midnight. Carter, in sports clothes, sat on a pillow on the floor, while he wife Rosalynn took notes on the meeting.

Saturday morning Hunt and Carter went jogging, while Gov. Brendan Byrne rode a bicycle, because as Bryne put it "everyone knows jogging is bad for you."

Energy is expected to dominate the governors conference which opens today. A survey of governors by UPI prior to the meeting showed they overwhelmingly oppose gas rationing as to solve the energy crunch.

The 46 governors responding to the survey said conservation, better allocation of suppliers and increased production are the answers. Several said Congress should approve a standby rationing program that could be imposed in case of extreme emergencies.



ONE OF JUPITER'S MOONS — This photo of Callisto, a Jupiter moon, was taken by Voyager II early Saturday from a range of 675,000 miles. Scientists think it's surface is a mixture of ice and rock dating back to the final stages of planetary accretion, about four billion years ago when the surface was pockmarded by a torrential bombardment of meteorites. The picture has been enhanced to reveal detail in the scene. (AP Laserphoto)

Close Encounter Time

By JAMES J. DOYLE

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI) — Voyager 2, heading into its close encounter phase with Jupiter, sailed through the inner satellite system of the planet at 30,000 miles per hour Saturday while receiving computer commands to guide its course for the next six days.

"This is a very critical event, a very high activity period," Ek Davis, deputy project manager, said at a news conference. "It is the largest computer load ever put into the spacecraft."

Two computer command loads, one repeating the other, were started at 10 a.m. PDT Saturday and were to be finished by 6 p.m.

"It covers the activities from near encounter phase (beginning at 7:34 p.m. Saturday) until July 13," Davis said.

Voyager 2 hears "in a monotone" because one of its radio receivers has been out of commission for several months. Davis said.

"We have to tune ever so precisely to get these commands in. The spacecraft is remaining very quite with no maneuvers and no turning on and off of instruments."

Davis said that as with Voyager 1, the quality of the mission's science was "again exceeding our expectations."

"Navigators are projecting that they put the spacecraft through the bullseye."

The 1,800-pound robot spacecraft was aimed at an elliptically shaped area of space 70 by 80 miles in diameter and 576 million miles from earth for its approach to Jupiter.

"It is only a little high and a little left," he said.

Voyager 2 returned pictures of Jupiter and three of its four satellites most of Saturday except for the eight-

Hunt Says Schlesinger Should Be Replaced

By United Press International

Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. said Saturday that Energy Secretary James Schlesinger should be replaced if he cannot bring stronger leadership to the energy crisis and called for the federal government to cut through "the damned red tape."

In an interview in Louisville, Ky., where he was attending a meeting of the National Governors Association, Hunt said Schlesinger's name was never specifically mentioned during a meeting at Camp David between President Carter, Hunt and other governors to discuss national policy issues.

But Hunt said it was obvious Schlesinger, who did not attend the meeting, was being discussed during talks about energy matters.

"I think we need stronger leadership in that department (energy)," Hunt said. "Whether he (Schlesinger) can do it by some change of operation or what, I don't know, but that department must have stronger leadership."

If Schlesinger cannot "change his style of leadership," Hunt said President Carter should replace him as energy secretary.

He said the nation needs to get accurate information on oil supplies from companies.

"We don't have the facts, we simply don't have the statistics. Nobody in this country can tell you where the oil is," he said. "It's time to cut through the damned red tape."

Hunt was one of eight governors who went to Camp David Friday to meet with the president to discuss major domestic policy issues. The chairman of the Democratic Governor's caucus, Hunt rescheduled his tript to Louisville to attend the Camp David meeting.

In Raleigh, Sen. Robert B. Morgan, D-N.C., criticized Schlesinger Saturday in an interview, but stopped short of calling for resignation.

Schlesinger has served in leadership positions too long and has become insensitive to the people, Morgan said before a strategy meeting to map out his re-election bid next year.

"I think he (Schlesinger) is a brilliant man, but in all honesty he is not a man of the people," Morgan said.

Citing Schlesinger's career as a professor at Harvard, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, CIA director, defense secretary and now energy secretary, Morgan said his "biggest fault is he has never worked with the people."

And Morgan said President Carter's decision to cancel a series of weekend appearances in Louisville and call strategy meetings at Camp David was prompted by public pressure.

"I think the public is demanding that bold new steps be taken in the crisis over energy, as well as other domestic issues," he said, and praised Carter for consulting with governors as part of the process of reassessing administration policies.

United States And China

Signs Trade Treaty

By ROBERT CRABBE

PEKING (UPI) — China and the United States Saturday signed a trade treaty aimed at further stimulating their growing commerce, despite threats by U.S. congressmen to block it unless Peking agrees to limit textile exports to America.

The pact gives China most favored-nation status, allowing the entry of Chinese goods into the United States at minimum tariffs.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman disclosed that even before the agreement was signed, trade between the two countries was running at a $2 billion-a-year rate and growing rapidly.

The pact was signed in Peking's Great Hall of the People in Peking by Ambassador Leonard Woodcock and Foreign Trade Minister Li Qiang.

Woodcock called it "one more major event in this important year in the expansion of the relationship between our two governments and peoples."

The agreement provides that American corporations and banks will be allowed to establish offices in China when facilities and housing for their employes becomes available.

The pact runs for three years, and is automatically renewed for three more unless renounced by one of the governments.

White House press secretary Jody Powell has said it would be presented to Congress soon. Under terms of the 1974 foreign trade act it must be approved by both houses of Congress before it can be ratified and go into effect.

Farm Leaders To Testify Tuesday

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Leaders of the largest U.S. farm organizations are set to testify before Congress Tuesday on a proposal to give farmers more clout in negotiating with middlemen on agricultural products.

The National Agricultural Bargaining Act of 1979 requires handlers of agricultural commodities to bargain in good faith with associations of farmers on prices and other terms involved in the sale of farm products.

The American Farm Bureau Federation said Saturday its representative would testify before a House Agriculture subcommittee along with those from the National Grange, the National Farmers Union and the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives.

The bill, introduced by Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif. with 22 co-sponsors, was developed by the four farm groups, several farmer marketing associations and other organizations in a series of meetings that began in 1977.

It defines "unfair practices" in the purchase and marketing of farm commodities and bars handlers and associations of producers from employing "unfair tactics."

$1.3 Million Grant For Research

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (UPI) — The Cancer Research Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has received a $1.372 million construction grant from the National Cancer Institute.

The funding, announced by Center Director Joseph Pagano and Rep. L.H. Fountain, D-N.C., will help build a major research facility on the school's campus.

Construction is expected to begin in late 1980 and take about two years. The building will house administration offices, 18 to 20 scientists and their laboratories and training facilities for cancer researchers.

Center officials said the building will also have a sophisticated containment facility to ensure the health and safety of researchers working with chemical carcinogens and viral agents. The facility will allow the center to expand its efforts later.

Morgan Met Friends Here Saturday Morning

By STUART MORGAN
Reflector Staff Writer

Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C., met with approximately 65 of his supporters from Pitt County and numerous other surrounding counties during a private meeting Saturday morning at the Holiday Inn in Greenville.

Sen. Morgan said the purpose of yesterday's meeting, which began at 9:15 a.m., was to receive input from as many of his friends as possible concerning his work in the Senate, to receive their advice and also to discuss fund raising for next year's senatorial campaign.

Although the senator said his running for another term as senator could be anticipated, he added that it was much too early now for him to announce his decision.

In an interview prior to the meeting, Sen. Morgan commended Gov. Hunt's actions during the recent strike by independent truck drivers throughout the state.

"I think the government should call out the National Guard or take any other action needed," said Sen. Morgan. "We can't tolerate any violence no matter how good the cause or how noble the cause."

Concerning his recently expressed concern over distributors of religious tracts and other information who solicit at congested high risk areas such as airport terminals, Sen. Morgan said "I am pretty put-out with airport managers who have said that there is nothing they can do." The senator added, "The courts have always said you can regulate them by licenses and regulations.

"I finally got a bill amended in the Senate requiring airport authorities to adopt regulations in 30 days to regulate panhandlers in terminals."

Wednesday Most Likely Date

Skylab Skyfall Estimates

By DAVID NAGY

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Space trackers Saturday reinforced their estimate that Skylab will most likely crash Wednesday but moved the optimum time back slightly to 4:30 p.m. EDT, when it would be crossing South America and heading into the Atlantic.

Officials again stressed, however, that the afternoon of July 11 is merely the midpoint of a 40-hour predicted re-entry period and the 77-ton space craft could fall anytime — and thus anywhere — from Tuesday night to mid-Thursday EDT.

"The latest tracking information from the North American Air Defense Command indicates that Skylab will re-enter the Earth's atmosphere and break up on July 11, with a confidence window from 8:30 p.m. EDT on July 10 to 12:30 p.m. EDT on July 12," said a statement issued by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

A NASA spokesman said the phrase "confidence window" means NORAD "is highly confident that's when it will come down."

He confirmed that for prediction purposes 4:30 p.m. EDT Wednesday is the likeliest reentry time because it is the half-way mark of the re-entry "window."

But he cautioned, "it could be anywhere 20 hours on one side or the other."

Saturday's prediction refined and tightened the one issued Friday that allowed 24 hours' margin around a theoretical time of 3 p.m. EDT July 11.

Generalized maps of Skylab's orbits showed the space ship, at 3 p.m. Wednesday, would have been crossing the northwestern United States on a southeastern diagonal.

If Saturday's tentative prediction bears out, new and more detailed NASA maps indicate Skylab, at about 4:30 p.m. EDT Wednesday, should be crossing over northwestern Peru on a southeasterly course.

In the next 22 minutes it would travel down the center of Peru, over the southwestern corner of Bolivia, across far northeastern Argentina, along the Brazilian-Uruguayan border and into the South Atlantic.

NASA updates its Skylab reentry predictions daily, and has moved the optimum estimate forward by about 48 hours in recent days — further underscoring the hypothetical nature of impact-area predictions at this point.

The space agency estimates two-thirds of the ship will burn up harmlessly on re-entry. But some 500 pieces ranging from a few pounds to 5,000 pounds are expected to land along a track 4000-miles long and 100 miles wide.

NASA says chances are one in 152 that anyone, anywhere, will be injured by falling Skylab debris, and 600 billion to one against any particular person being hit.

The new maps gave slightly more information on which major cities are and are not under Skylab's orbital track during the three-day predicted re-entry period, although margins for error make pinpointing difficult.

The July 11 map, for example, shows the craft is supposed to pass almost directly over Washington, D.C. on one early-afternoon pass. On various other orbits it appears to pass over or very close to such major cities as Paris, Lisbon, Mexico City and Prague.

On the other hand, no orbit that day passes within dangerous vicinity of such major population centers as Peking, Madrid, Cairo or New Delhi.

The northern and southern limits of Skylab's track already excluded from any danger the British Isles and Scandinavia, most of the Soviet Union and northern Canada, among other areas.

Unidentified Victims Buried

By JILL STEWART
Associated Press Writer

SAN PEDRO, Calif. (AP) — Bonded together into "a vast community knitted together by its pain," about 400 family members and friends gathered under sunny skies to bury the 30 unidentified victims of the nation's worst air crash.

The May 25 crash of an American Airlines DC-10 jet in Chicago killed 273 people. Interdenominational rites were observed Friday for those victims whose condition made identification impossible.

"It's bad enough having to bury them, but it's worse burying them and not knowing which grave is theirs," said one family member, who asked that his name not be used. His eyes were red and wet with tears.

"Maybe we'll never know, we don't even know which casket is theirs," said Larry Hochenmeyer of Westlake Village, whose sister and brother-in-law were among the unidentified.

His two nephews, also killed in the crash, were buried in Midlands, Ill., the home of their grandparents. "We had four graves prepared for the services," said Paul Sutton, the boys' grandfather. "We kept praying they'd be able to identify Stephen and Carolyn in time. We waited as long as we could."

There were 25 white coffins and five gold ones. An American flag was draped over one casket. One gold casket had an airline pilot's cap on top of it; another had a stewardess' cap.

Many of those attending the afternoon service at Green Hills Memorial Park traveled from various parts of the country. Twelve of the unidentified victims were out-of-state residents, and four were visiting the United States from The Netherlands.

Funeral rites and transportation for the family members were paid for by American Airlines.

A 21-gun salute was fired by an Air Force contingent. Then a mixed honor guard of Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines presented 14 flags to the families of unidentified victims who had been members of the armed services.

Rabbi Sanford Ragins called the gathering "a vast community knitted together by its pain — a community of suffering." Ragins was one of three clergy representing the Catholic, Jewish and Protestant faiths.

As a gentle wind fanned across the grassy knoll, several men and women sobbed openly as the names of the dead were read one by one. Others stood silently.

"As human beings you have learned from your suffering because we never know and never can know how long we will have one another," Ragins said.

The crash, which occurred moments after the plane lifted off the runway at O'Hare International Airport, led to inspections that eventually resulted in the groundings of all domestic DC-10s.

VICTIMS BURIED — Mourners cry over the coffin of one of the 30 unidentified victims of the nation's worse air disaster Friday in San Pedro, California, at the Green Hills Memorial Park, as another brings a flag. Funerals Held For Charlotte Victims

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — Funerals were held Saturday for two of five people slain Wednesday in a massacre at the Charlotte clubhouse of the Outlaws motorcycle gang.

Meanwhile, Charlotte police said they believe the gang might conduct a mock funeral for the victims, but reported no activity among motorcyclists Saturday.

Bridgette Benfield, 17, who dated an Outlaws member, was buried Saturday afternoon after a funeral in her hometown of Mount Holly. Members of the gang did not attend at her family's request, but five independent motorcyclists who said they did not know the girl were at the funeral.

Earlier Saturday, a private funeral was held for William F. Allen, 22, a probationary member of the gang. Allen's funeral was not announced in advance at the request of his family.

Three other Outlaws members were shot to death in their sleep early Wednesday at the organization's clubhouse in Charlotte.

Charlotte Police Capt. J.O. Benfield, no relation to the slain girl, said police still expect gang members from across the country to come to Charlotte but none had been reported yet.

"We did hear they were going to have a mock burial somewhere, but the location they did not give," Benfield said.

Police spokesmen in both Iredell County, where bikers sometimes frequent an area known as Love Valley, and in Lexington, site of an Outlaws chapter and home of one of the victims, said Saturday there had been no unusual activity and they had heard of no preparations for funerals.

A gang member told UPI Friday the members will have "our own funeral but it won't be in Charlotte." The member, who had a pistol in his hand when he first talked to the reporter and kept flipping a switch-blade knife as he talked, disputed police comments and said bikers would not go to Charlotte.

An official club funeral ends with members firing pistols into the air and throwing the shell casings into the grave.

Administration Shakeup By Carter A Possibility

By HELEN THOMAS
UPI White House Reporter

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter called a civil rights leader, a union official and a citizens' lobbyist to his Camp David domestic summit Saturday to learn how the man on the street is coping with America's economic woes.

A White House official cautioned the public against expecting any dramatic results from Carter's wide-ranging talks with prominent Americans at the remote mountaintop retreat in Maryland.

But the official conceded the president is taking a close look at the performance of administration officials, indicating a shakeup may be in the making.

The aide indicated the president is hoping the talks will lead him to a new way of dealing with the nation's lengthy gas lines, double-digit inflation and threat of recession.

Presidential press secretary Jody Powell said Carter's mood was "very positive and very good." Visitors generally agreed, saying Carter looked "very well" and jogged several miles Saturday.

Carter invited former Common Cause President John Gardner, civil rights leader Jesse Jackson and AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurer Lane Kirkland to Saturday's talks at the isolated retreat.

Joining them were veteran presidential adviser Clark Clifford, long-time diplomat Sol Linowitz and political operative Bob Keefe, who ran Sen. Henry Jackson's presidential campaign in 1976.

A White House official said Carter wanted to question the "generalist" group on the status of American society.

The president wound up discussions with a delegation of governors earlier Saturday. He summoned Cabinet officials, oil industry leaders and academicians to Camp David for Sunday's round of talks.

Officials said the domestic summit, which was to hear the views of congressmen early next week, was expected to last through Wednesday.

Press secretary Powell said Carter wants to consult with a "variety of people" about the nation's domestic troubles "and to take whatever time was necessary."

A White House official said Carter will decide at the end of the talks how he will present the results to Congress and the American public.

Carter met with eight governors Friday night and Saturday morning in what Powell described as "very productive" discussions.

He said the governors did most of the talking and Carter "mostly listened" during the discussions. "They had some interesting thoughts," he added. "Their reaction to the meetings was indeed positive."

Several of the governors who met with Carter said later in Louisville that they "felt better" about the nation's problems after the session with the president.

The governors said Carter was working on a "bold, forceful plan" to tackleeconomic and energy problems.

Powell said the president called off last Thursday's scheduled energy address to the nation because "he felt it was not the time for just an energy speech."

He denied reports that administration differences led to the cancellation and said Carter was "basically" satisfied with the speech but not the timing.

News Briefs

Blunt Warning To Carter

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House's top domestic adviser has bluntly warned President Carter to start plugging the holes in his leaking ship right away or it may be too late to save the administration, it was disclosed Saturday.

"In many respects, this would appear to be the worst of times," Stuart Eizenstat told Carter last week in a no-holds-barred memorandum on what he called Vietnam-style troubles facing the administration.

But despite all the tough talk the memo primarily suggested ways to combat "the political damage we are suffering from all this" rather than substantive measures to solve the nation's actual economic and energy problems.

Eizenstate, the president's assistant for domestic affairs, called on Carter to save himself from the political fallout of inflation, gas lines and possible recession by branding the international oil cartel the "clear enemby" behind America's troubles.

Recommends Truckers End Strike

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Representatives of one of the nation's largest independent truckers, organizations Saturday recommended that truckers end their fast-fading strike.

Members of the Independent Truckers Unity Coalition, among the most militant of the strike groups, voted to return to the roads after hearing status reports on the strike at a meeting in a suburban Hazelwood motel.

Gives Life To Save Others

CHICKSANDS, England (UPI) — An American pilot died Saturday when his A10-A jet fighter crashed during an air show. A witness said he gave his life to save the plane from crashing into a crowd.

The single-seat plane was one of several taking part in a display of low-level aerobatics at an air carnival at the Chicksands Royal Air Force base to commemorate American Independence Day.

Witnesses said one of the fighters took a sudden dive, and one said he saw the pilot wrestle frantically with the controls. He managed to gain some height and missed a fairground and a crowded barracks.

San Fermin Fiesta Returns

PAMPLONA, Spain (UPI) — The Fiesta of San Fermin, called off last year because of Basque political violence, came back into its own Saturday as hundreds of daredevils raced a pack of fighting bulls through narrow cobblestone streets leading to the bullring.

No injuries were reported in the first of nine early morning "encierros" that prepare for each evening's bullfight.

During the first full day of the fiesta, which Ernest Hemingway celebrated in "The Sun Also Rises," it was unclear how seriously last year's trouble would affect the turnout. But there appeared to be far fewer foreigners in the crowds than in previous years.

Oppose Gas Rationing

By CLAY F. RICHARDS
UPI Political Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — The nation's governors overwhelmingly oppose federally imposed gas rationing, saying conservation, better allocation of supplies and increased production are the answers to the current energy crunch.

None of the 46 governors responding to a UPI survey favored mandatory rationing now.

Several said Congress should approve President Carter's proposed standby rationing plan and others said rationing should be imposed only in extreme emergencies.

UPI surveyed the governors on the eve of the opening of their annual summer conference. The national energy crisis was expected to be the main topic at the meeting.

Governors from the Northeast, where the gasoline lines have been the longest this summer, were less opposed to rationing than those from other areas.

Gov. Ella Grasso, D-Conn., said she would favor rationing "only if it is an equitable national plan with no regional deviations."

Republican Gov. Richard Snelling of Vermont said he doesn't favor rationing at this point, although "the country is coming to a point where a rationing plan should be debated and adopted."

Gov. Joseph Brennan, D-Maine, said he would support rationing as the fairest alternative "if present shortages continue over an extended period of time."

But Brennan also said Maine's shortages are not yet severe enough even to warrant an odd-even sales system.

Gov. Hugh Gallen, D-N.H., also said he doesn't want rationing now, but believes a standby plan should be ready.

Gov. Hugh Carey, D-N.Y., called rationing an "absolute last resort" and said he wants to see more equitable allocation combined with conservation.

Gov. Edward King, D-Mass., said he thought rationing should be an available option, but not used now.

Strong opposition came from oil state governors like Republican Bill Clements of Texas, who said, "The only long-range solution is to create and produce more energy."

Democratic Gov. George Nigh of Oklahoma agreed, saying, "The solution is to increase exploration for oil and gas."

Gov. Bill Janklow, R-S.D., denounced rationing as "another example of the stupidity and insanity on which America has embarked."

"Rationing should be a last resort," said Gov. William Milliken, R-Mich. "The solution is a more effective allocation system, conservation, increased refinery production and a consistent federal policy."

All Bodies Found

NAGS HEAD, N.C. (AP) — Coast Guard officials say five bodies found near the Currituck Sound have been identified as passengers on a single-engine plane missing since Wednesday.

A Coast Guard spokesman said Saturday that three of the bodies were found Friday afternoon. A fourth body was found late Friday night and the fifth body was recovered Saturday morning.

The victims were identified as Lenyer M. Little, 32; his brother, George III, 37; Adrian Thornton, 8; Little's wife, Betty, 42; and his daughter, Linyer, 6. All five were from Elizabeth City.

The spokesman said the Coast Guard has suspended a search for the plane.

The plane left First Flight Airport at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday after it was delayed by a storm.

The bodies were discovered near the Wright Memorial Bridge, which spans the Currituck Sound between Powells Point and Nags Head.

By early Sunday morning, Voyager 2 will be 133,524 miles from Gallisto, the large moon which is about the size of the planet Mercury and is described as a giant iceball pocked with craters.

It is the outermost of the four Galilean Satellites of Jupiter, and the darkest of the four but still twice as bright as earth's moon. It is composed mostly of water ice and rock.

Voyager 1 found a depression on Gallisto's surface that is about 1,200 miles in diameter and is the largest known permanent feature in the solar system.

Today, the spacecraft will begin 10 hours of photography of Io, the brightest of the four large moons.

"Clearly we now have direct evidence that volcanic activity on Io changes and in a significant way," Dr. Edward Stone, project scientist, said.

He said a large volcano called P-1 which was shooting debris high into space as Voyager 1 flew by it in March, was now quiet but another large volcano, P-2, was very active.

Voyager 2 was 576 million miles from earth Saturday and 1.7 million miles from its closest approach to Jupiter Monday afternoon. It took 51½ minutes for radio transmissions from Voyager to reach earth.

Nixons Give $100,000

NEW YORK (AP) — The American Cancer Society says it has received a $100,000 check from former President Richard Nixon and his wife in memory of John Wayne, Hubert Humphrey and other cancer victims.

The check from Nixon and his wife, Pat, whose mother died of cancer, was received by Paul Williams of West Palm Beach, Fla., a vice chairman of the society's board.

Recession Concern Isn't New

Once again we hear rumblings from Washington about the possibilities of recession.

This is nothing new, or surprising. There have been several recessions and recoveries for the nation's economy since World War II, and some economist believe the cycles to be normal, and even desirable.

In our little corner of the world there is nothing we can do about the economic cycles, except to ride them out in the manner most advantageous to us.

Fortunately our area has fared rather well in post war recessions. The effects of them don't seem to reach our area until months after they are being felt in the most populous areas of the nation. Indeed, the upturn frequently comes and saves us from severe consequences.

So, if the recession comes as some foresee, how will it affect us?

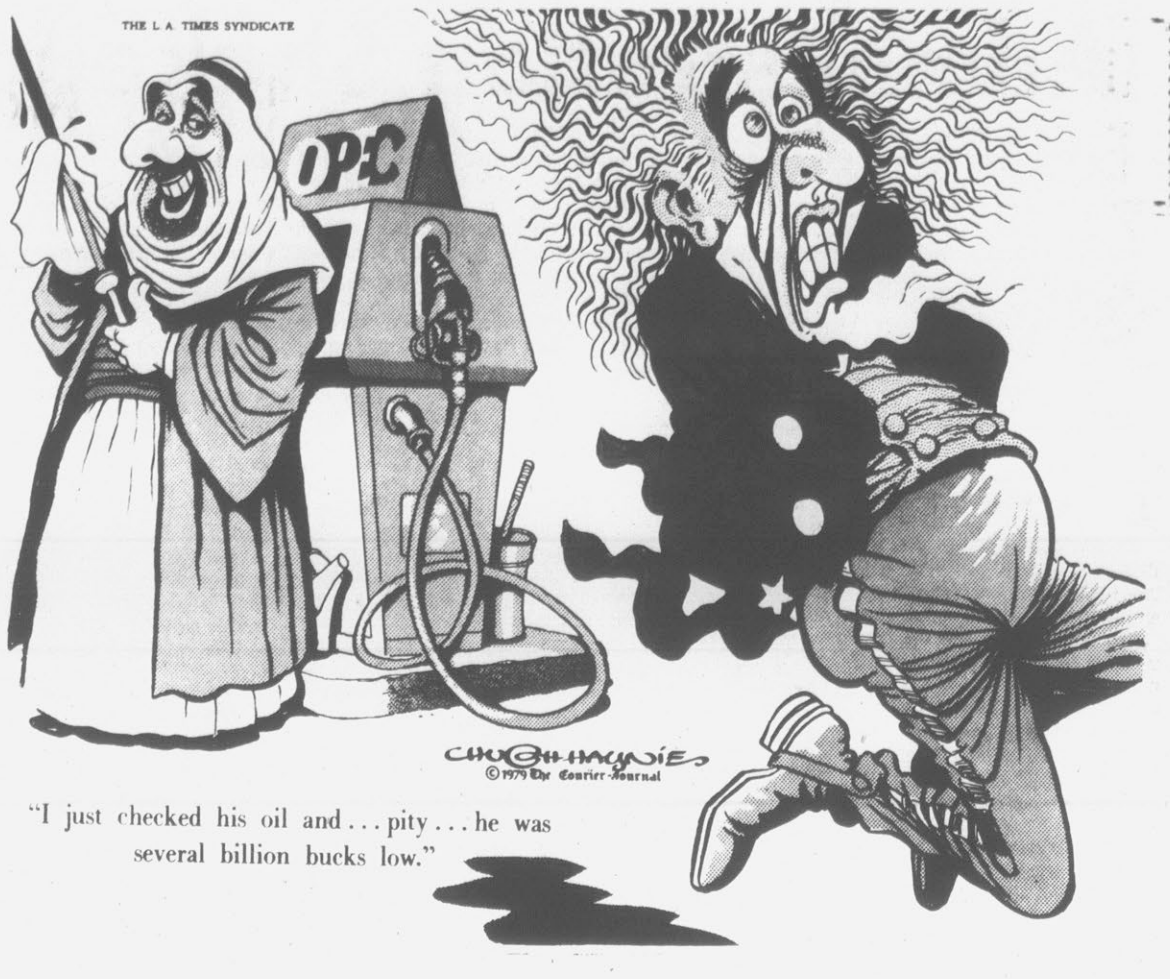
Farming, of course, has a great effect on the economy of Pitt and surrounding counties, and tobacco is the mainstay crop. If you want to see a recession, just wait for a year when there is a crop failure. This year, we have a pretty good crop outlook, even with the excessive rain and cool weather. Most believe that tobacco prices will set records again this year, with a billion dollar crop predicted for North Carolina.

We are, of course, more industrialized than at one time and some industries are rapidly affected by recession. Still many of our industries maufacture products which continue to sell well in tight economic times, and they should help maintain an economic balance.

Finally the expansion of the ECU Medical School — Pitt County Memorial Hospital complex will continue, and much business expansion is underway that won't be halted.

Recession nationally could ruffle our local economy, but we think that area counties will be in as good a position as any to blunt the effects of a business turndown.



"I just checked his oil and . . . pity . . . he was several billion bucks low."

Many Others Probably Are Envious

A lame duck congressman, obviously not worried about re-election, sent a constituent a quarter in refund for the voter's share of the congressman's income.

"This covers both years so keep the change," Rep. Mendel Davis, wrote in response to a strongly worded postcard from the constituent.

Many an elected official is no doubt thinking, if not saying, "Boy I wish I could do that."

Change Due Student Play

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — It sometimes takes a while, but sooner or later the state's machinery can correct what some see as a problem.

Witness the new State Board of Education regulations requiring the number of units required for a high school diploma.

Many local school units already required the total number of 18 units for graduation — all but 13 of the 145 districts did.

But in some local schools there didn't seem enough work to keep some students occupied, according to State Rep. John Gamble, D-Lincoln.

Gamble complained of high school seniors who had already satisfied graduation requirements except for one or two courses. The students would show up at school only for those brief hours daily, the spend the remainder of the day playing around either on campus or off.

"I'm going to see if we can't do something about that", Gamble said some months back.

Last month, the State Board of Education raised the number of units to make them uniform at 18 in all districts, and added a requirement for an additional unit of mathematics.

The unit rule now applies to the four top school years, nine through 12. Some schools used the top three years as the time for building graduation credits, and in those three years some required as few as 12 or 13 units. Other counties have demanded up to 20 units in the last four years. The new rules will bring uniformity to the system, say educators.

Who's In Charge

While on vacation at the beach, he talked with his family about whether to seek a second term in office, Gov. Jim Hunt says. But he won't reveal the outcome.

There is a hint, nonetheless.

Was a straw vote taken, he was asked.

There's no need for a straw vote, Hunt replied. He has the key bloc of votes under personal control. Each family member has one vote, including the governor. But he has an additional vote as head of the household for each family member whom he represents, and thus can

Proof

A recent column in this space discussed the state's tax structure and how it can continue to raise increased money in the face of economic problems elsewhere.

While national figures for April began to show a slowdown, state revenues accelerated: up 11.16 percent from last April to a record high of $200.5 million for the month.

Furthermore, some April collections were delayed until May listings because of the crush of mail, so that actual April receipts were 12.54 percent higher than a year ago.

So far this fiscal year, General Fund collections stand at nearly two billion ... up $218 million over 1978 for a total increase of 12.5 percent.

Gas taxes continue sluggish, however, with 10-month totals this year of $379.2 million, representing an increase of only 5.77 percent over last year.

Critics of the gas tax system from which highway construction and maintenance funds come say the fact that the state tax is only nine cents per gallon despite steadily increased fuel cost, and in light of smaller, more fuel-economic vehicles and less driving by the public.

Sunday Morning Notes

There was a news story out recently about the rampaging theft of library books from university libraries.

The problem is becoming a major, costly one.

Reports from the local campus indicate that a lady became alarmed about it all and wanted to return a thin, little volume without any trouble.

The book had stamped on it: ECTC.

The institution hasn't been East Carolina Teachers College since 1951.

Anyway, maybe it's a good time for all of us to look through our supplies of old books. Perhaps some of them came from libraries years ago, and could be returned for use.

If the libraries are having particular problems with theft now, they could use all the help they can get.

Man bites dog. That's news, right?

If so, it must follow that boat hits house has to be news, too.

We heard that it happened, so we checked . . . it did.

Bill Taylor of ABC Moving and Storage, has a cottage at Kilby Island and the Julian Vainwright cottage is located next door.

On a recent weekend the Taylors had their sail boat sitting in the yard. The boat is about ten feet wide and 18 feet long and weighs about 700 pounds. It has a mast about 30 feet tall, and the sail was not up at this particular time. A fearsome windstorm blew up on that Sunday and the wind picked up the sail boat, moved it 40 to 50 feet until it was stopped by the Vainwright house.

The mast dented the roof of the house and some of the boat siding was cracked.

The boat was returned to its normal storage place, and Taylor says he now keeps it tied down.

The storm, by the way uprooted a few trees, blew some other boats, garbage cans and such around, but did not do major damage.

Major G.W. Gillette, district United States Army engineer, addressing the Greenville Kiwanis Club last night, advised members and guests that dredging operations on the Tar River project would begin from the end and work toward Washington.

Maj. Gillette said a dredge was en route to Hardee's Creek now and actual work would begin immediately. The contractor will begin dredging at the mouth of the creek and after completing the distance to the turning basin site, a distance of about a half mile, the operations will work towards Washington.

Maj. Gillette's general theme was Waterway Development in North Carolina." He approached the subject from three angles: its value for transportation, commercial and pleasure fishing and drainage.

Mrs. Gay Allen, field supervisor of the State Commission of the Blind, will meet with an estimated 50 blind residents of the county in the courthouse Friday.

K.T. Futrell, superintendent of public welfare, said that Mrs. Allen would make a study of the needs of the blind in Pitt County relative to improving their condition.

To the editor:

Oil company executive openly acknowledge that the public doesn't believe them about fuel shortages. Consumers are angered by rising prices. The Carter Adminstration has moved back and forth on the energy issue, alternately attacking Congress, consumers, and the oil industry. Congress has refused to deal with the energy problem in any serious way. And the newly-formed Dept. of Energy completed its first year behind "closed doors."

The DOE leads all federal agencies in the number of freedom of information requests it partially or fully denies, 60 percent of all received, according to a recent Common Cause study. 75 percent of those denials that were appealed were reversed at least to some extent. If a judge's decisions were reversed three-fourths of the time, that judge would be viewed as being ignorant of the law. The Energy Dept. is plainly flouting the freeom of information law. DOE has other bad secret habits. It withholds from the public almost three quarters of the raw data it collects from energy reports.

Some special interests do get inside access to information that is refused the public. In the recent investigation of the Energy Dept., the newly created independent Inspector General (IG) — the DOE office that blows the whistle on department fraud and abuse — found that the Energy Department provided confidential information to an oil industry trade association lobbyist before releasing this information to the public. The IG concluded ' that the Energy Dept. had "maintained a double standard of access to information" that favored the American Petroleum Institute.

Pres. Carter and Congress ought to take the IG report seriously by insisting on adequate staff for the IG so that the large scale fraud and abuse that the IG says is "now undetected, unprevented, and unpunished" stops immediately.

Americans are historically selfless in crisis. But no one is going to sacrifice in ignorance.

The UNSUNG BRANCH

Lifesaving A Tradition

By DICK BROWN
The Fayetteville Observer

In days gone by the most welcome sight to a shipwreck victim off the North Carolina coast must have been the flickering lights of the lonely lifesaving stations that paid such a handsome dividend in human lives on a paltry dollars and cents investment.

The U.S. Lifesaving Service was a 27-year-old bureaucratic stepchild before it took notice of the notorious "Graveyard of the Atlantic," and even then it remained a whipping boy for press and public despite the heroism and self-sacrifice of its unsung crews.

Founded in 1847 as a branch of the Treasury Department, the service confined its activities primarily to the New Jersey and New York coastal areas because of a serious lack of funds and disinterest on the part of government officials and politicians.

Despite the continuing tragedies and wrecks off the Outer Banks, particularly during the winter storm season, the lifesaving service did not move south until 1874.

In that year seven crude stations, each manned by a keeper and a small crew of hardy seamen, were spotted at Jones Hill, Caffey's Inlet, Nags Nead, Oregon Inlet, Little Kinnakeet, Chicamacomico and Kitty Hawk.

Today three of the original seven still stand with one, Chicamcomico, in the process of restoration and already designated a National historic site.

Before gradually giving up to progress and more sophisticated equipment and methods in post World War II days, this unsung branch of government built and operated 29 stations from Oak Island north to the Virginia line.

Annals of the lifesaving service, which combined with the Treasury Department's Revenue Cutter branch in 1915 to form the Coast Guard, are filled with tales of spectacular rescues and deeds of daring.

The British Government decorated Capt. Johnny Midgett and the men of Chicamacomico Station for saving most of the crew of the tanker Mirlo, a German torpedo victim during World War I.

But the waters were not so smooth or rewarding in the early days.

Currituck Beach, known officially as Station No. 4, was not quite four years old when the Metropolis, a former federal gunboat converted to a coastal cargo hauler, ran aground in late January 1878.

The 200-foot, 879-ton screw steamer, carrying over 200 Irish construction workers to a new job in Brazil, broke apart and sank within a hundred yards of shore as rescue workers tried in vain to rescue its passengers and crew.

THE INVISIBLE VERTICAL

Every building is built on the invisible vertical. We may not be able to see the line that runs from the roof to the foundation, but it is there. Every builder knows that he must reckon with that line and accommodate himself to it before he can build securely.

The invisible vertical runs through our lives also. Frequently we are not so wise in the building of our lives as the men who build with brick and stone. But God's plumb line runs from heaven to earth. It goes from the top to the bottom of every person's life. This invisible vertical is the divine purpose. It is God's determination that come what will, people must in the end abide by the divine laws and accommodate themselves to the divine plan.

Sin is an attempt to build in flagrant disregard of this invisible vertical. And just as a building constructed with no regard for this line will in time sag and collapse, so a sinful life will bring unhappiness and lack of fulfillment.

Observations Due Recognition

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Lost amid the cacophony of crisis news, of gasoline shortages that compel attention, for example, are observations worthy of recognition, for their significance if not for their urgency.

Among them are commentaries from the private sector that may be worthy of consideration or even perhaps of reconsideration.

Such as the remarks of Henry Ford II, chairman of Ford Motor Co., at the University of Chicago last April 26, a few days before announcing he would quit as chief executive officer on Oct. 1.

"In recent decades we businessmen have neglected many genuine problems and turned a blind eye to conditions that should have caught our attention. Often we have simply been stupid.

"We have refused to confront some of the crucial issues of our time, and as a result we have played directly into the hands of our critics and helped to make matters worse.

"The whole issue of consumerism is a prime example...

"Maybe we wouldn't have won any prizes if we had answered auto-safety charges more effectively before the consumerists moved into the area, but we would have saved ourselves — and customers — some nightmarish regulations."

Or the comments on big government by Murray Weidenbaum, former assistant secretary of treasury and now one of the foremost advocates of regulatory reform.

"The government cannot be our nanny," he said in a magazine interview. "I think Americans are sensible enough to know that. To my mind there exists a tremendous gap between the view of the formal consumer advocates and the view of the rank and file of consumers.

"Currently, there's a strong movement in the Federal Trade Commission to tell Americans what to eat through regulation of television advertising.

"When a senior FTC official was asked if he thought it was the government's task to tell free Americans what to eat, his response was, "People eat for the wrong eat for the wrong reasons.'

"Talk about Big Brother!"

Walter Hoadley, executive vice president and chief economist of Bank of America, articulated the thoughts of many people in testimony before the Senate Budget Committee.

Almost everyone appearing before the committee had delcared their concern about the possibility of recession and with public demands for a restraint on government spending.

"I submit there is another broader force at work which quietly but relentlessly is sapping our fundamental economic strength," he said.

It is, said Hoadley, the "pervasive negative thinking across our country about the future, national and personal.

"It is crucial that the Congress and the administration try hard to reverse this public attitude through policy changes in the next year or two to cause a sharp increase in private risk-taking investments, innovation, productivity, saving, and national confidence."

Observations From Editorial Columns

We Say; You Pay

Pity the poor county commissioners. They have a tiger by the tail and can't let go.

They are holding on to a social services budget and it is dragging them around like a pup by a boy. The social services people can't help it; the county commissioners can't help it; and the poor old taxpayer, like always, is left holding the bag.

Ben Carpenter, director of the Gaston Social Services Department, appeared before the commissioners this week and said that his department's budget had mushroomed 87 percent this year, much of this due to increased Medicaid costs - $366,000.

He told the commissioners that he had received a 1 letter from the state saying that the county Medicaid costs had risen another $46,000, not previously budgeted. That would push the depeartment's budget up almost 100 percent over last year.

The commissioners can't do a thing but pay it. There was some grumbling and grousing and a suggestion that they send the bill back to the state, but somebody held up a finger and said, "No, no."

You fail to pay the bill and they will prepare a place for you in the hoosegow.

The commissioners, like other bodies like them all over the country, are learning every day the perils of Washington legislation which calls for programs back home and calls for the home budgets to handle the cost.

All that and red tape, too. The Gastonia Gazette

No Plans Yet

Nearly a year ago we read that unknown persons had dumped what later was identified as the chemical PCB with oil, a toxic compound, along the shoulders of our roads in several North Carolina counties.

Later we learned that three New York men had done the act and that 14 counties in our state were involved.

As of this time we have not been informed just exactly how we shall get rid of the PCB on those roads, nor do we know what we shall do if such an act happens again.

We read that as of this time no directives have been sent out on the subject by the state's Department of Transportation, the Crime Control and Public Safety Department nor the N.C. Highway Patrol.

We read with great concern that to date the stae has spent between one million and two million dollars trying to figure out just what to do with the contaminated soil along the 210 miles of roadway involved.

We just must have a bear by the tail and are unable to let him go. We are very sympathetic with the state in this case. because trying to figure out a sure-fire answer for disposal of contaminated soil is no easy task.

Yet, we must have some answers. And we cannot afford to wait on them until another ugly incident happens. We need better answers now, and this is no time for foot-dragging. The Washington Daily News heard all over Ireland as the long postal strike finally came to an end. Some of the answers you got would make the weathered figures on the old Celtic crosses weep and turn a person to drink, if provocation is ever needed in that direction.

"A bill from the Inland Revenue was my first billet-doux," said a fiery lady named Breed, who hadn't been pining away these past four-and-a-half months to hear from that particular correspondent, Ireland's equivalent of the income tax collector.

"A bank statement was the first thing that popped into our box," commiserated her friend, Orla. "Wouldn't you know they'd give priority to envelopes with a window in them?"

As Ireland's 13,000 postal workers returned to their bicycles and sorting tables for the first time since February 18, the nation braced itself for an avalanche of backdate magazines, notices for a checkup from the dentist, wedding invitations for brides already in a family way and St. Patrick's Day cards.

Or, books from book clubs that couldn't be shut off, gas and electric bills, letters (one hoped with money) from relatives in America, spring seed catalogue sweepstakes tickets for horses long back in the barn and junk mail from mail order firms that sank from sight during the protracted strike.

Or requests for donations from missionaries in Nepal, dunning and threatening notes from department stores and TV rental firms and similar routine communiques that have cheered and chided homo erectus since Benjamin Franklin or whoever first sped these swift couriers on their way.

Barring strikes, of course — which do not fit into the "neither rain nor hail nor sleet" engraving over the Grecian pillars of the New York Post Office, where inside the notice: "No mail to Ireland" has hung all winter and spring long.

Although the tourist board gallantly assisted by setting up a Telex messenger service, Irish hotels and guest houses suffered million of dollars worth of lost reservations.

Still, for a tourist-at-large in timeless, mail-less Ireland, it was pleasant to sally forth among the sights unburdened by the guilt of sending home postcards.

Since the telephone operators were out on strike too, the only way of getting a call in or out was by direct dial phones, which completely cut some parts of the country, especially in the rural west

Over 80 lives, plus a thousand tons of cargo, were lost, and public indignation printed in New York and Philadelphia newspapers was fanned by lurid stories which told of death and looting.

Most of the criticism was leveled at keeper John Chappel and his Station Four crew, whose rescue efforts were severely handicapped by a lack of training and equipment.

David Stick, author of "Graveyard of the Atlantic," devoted a chapter to the wreck of the Metropolis and pointed out that nothing was done to place responsibility on the ship's New York owners despite the fact that the chartered vessel, which had seen Civil War action as the federal gunboat Stars and Stripes, had previously been turned down by the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad as unfit to carry cargo from Norfolk to Wilmington.

Tragedies like the sinking of the Metropolis and the Huron, a Navy man-of-war which had gone down with a loss of almost 100 lives in the same vicinity only a few weeks previously, created a reputation for inefficency that took years for the lifesaving service to outgrow.

Still it survived its most severe critics and, thanks mainly to the efforts of its dedicated keepers and crewmen, assumed the role originally intended — an efficient and qualified keeper and protector of the sea that Stick described in these words:

"You can stand on Cape Point at Hatteras on a stormy day and watch two oceans come together in an awesome display of savage fury; for there at the Point the northbound Gulf Stream and the cold currents coming down from the Arctic run head-on into each other, tossing their spumy spray a hundred feet or better into the air and dropping sand and shells and sea life at the point of impact. Thus is formed the dreaded Diamond Shoals.

By Noel Yancey

(Noel Yancy retired last year after 39 years of covering North Carolina news for the Associated Press. In this column, he retells some of the big stories he recalls.)

Ordinarily, a guest minds his language and is careful not to say anything calculated to offend his host. That, however, was not the way of Gov. W. Kerr Scott. The Haw River dairyman was plainspoken and did not hesitate to ruffle feathers.

So, it came as no surprise to those who knew him that when he was invited to help Carolina Power & Light Co. dedicate a new generating plant, Scott used the occasion to lay down the law to private power companies.

It was typical of Scott that when he was invited to address the N.C. Citizens Association, an organization that includes most of the state's leading industrialists, Scott issued a blunt warning to telephone companies to provide service to rural areas or face the loss of their franchises.

In his talk to the Citizens Association, Scott was not deterred by the fact he was not yet governor since it was three weeks before his inauguration. Those who knew him realized he was only half kidding when he reminded his audience of fat cats that "Your organization and your magazine, 'We The People,' are sometimes called, 'We the people against the people'."

"I see that we have telephone company representatives here today," Scott observed. "If you can't get telephones to the people, I'll join with others, using powers I have as governor, to see that something is done about it."

"If it takes reorganization of the Utilities Commission, I'll try that. Or if it takes recalling your franchises, I'll try that, too. Rural areas need telephones, and I'm going to work to see that they get them," Scott continued.

In those days, electric power and telephone service had not reached into the rural areas as universally as they have today. In those days, the federal government had helped foster REA cooperatives to extend power and telephone lines into the rural area and to prod the power companies and telephone companies to do likewise.

Several months after Scott became governor, CP&L's dedication of a huge steam electric generating plant at Lumberton became the scene of a debate of sorts between the governor and L.V. Sutton, the president of CP&L. Scott had frequently referred to Sutton as "Low Voltage."

Scott told the crowd at the dedication that in the past, power companies had pretty well had their own way in matters before the Utilities Commission, the state regulatory agency. Now, he said, there's a "new day" in the power field and "the old answers won't do any more." He asserted that questions "will be answered in favor of the people because the government is furnishing competition, actual and

Martha Never Wanted To Become A Preacher

SUFFOLK, Va. — "I didn't wanna be no preacher," says Rev. Martha Reid. "That was the last thing I wanted to be. I dressed sharp as a tack, chile, and I loved to dance. I loved to travel ... just traveled from one town to another. Worked in theaters as an usher."

Things changed for Martha Reid in her 28th year. "I got tired of traveling and the worldly life and 'bout decided I wanted to make a change."

She came home to Nansemond County, now Suffolk, where she was "raised poor as a turkey hen, but Momma and Daddy taught us how to treat people. They raised us right." She went back to church, sang in the choir, met a man named Clarence and married him a month later. That was 31 years ago.

In 1955 life took another turn. Martha Reid was "called."

"You know that Voice. You can't help hearing it. It's a whisper, but brother, you don't get no relief 'til you do what it tells you to do." The Voice said to Martha Reid, "I want you to go and preach my word." She resisted. For a year, she tried to ignore it, but one night, all night long, it said, "Will you go? ....will you go?" until she had to get out of bed and sit at the top of the stairs.

When her husband, Clarence, saw her exhaustion and asked her what was wrong she said, "Maybe it was something I ate." The next morning she cried "'til tears 'bout drowned my food." Then she answered, "Yes, Lord, I'll go wherever you send me." She prayed that Clarence would understand her, and he did.

She preached her first sermon 24 years ago. She remembers the day — April 18, 1955 — and she remembers the subject, "Use What You Have."

She studied, earned a license to preach, went to Seminary at Norfolk State College, and became pastor of two churches, one in Seabron, Virginia, and one in Emporia, Virginia. For three years she commuted back and forth between the communities, never missing a sermon or a revival at either church.

Rev. Reid is presently pastor of Galatian Christian Church in Suffolk, where she personally helped panel the walls, "sometimes 'til 11 o'clock at night."

Preaching isn't easy, she says, because "you catch more devil preachin' than you do just runnin' around havin' fun." Since she's been a minister, Rev. Reid has seen some of "the most beautiful things you'd ever want to see," but she's also found that some people have so much trouble that life is one worry after the next.

Rev. Reid ministers in and out of the church, and is often asked to pray for God to heal people. When she gets a request from a person with physical or emotional trouble, "I stop whatever I'm doin', sweepin' the floor, or whatever, and pray for them." Her prayers are always answered, she says. "I stay in prayer, I don't play with it. You'd just as well look for it, if I pray for it, 'cause you got it."

She doesn't want any rewards for her work, but sometimes people just hurt themselves by refusing to admit that they have been helped. "After they get what they want, they're through." One time, Rev. Reid prayed over a white woman who had been crippled by back troubles for 18 years. She applied healing oil and watched the woman slowly begin to regain a normal life; but the woman refused to admit to anyone that she'd even gone to the home of the black minister.

Martha Reid has done lots of other things besides be a pastor. "I'm like a monkey wrench. I can do anything," says the woman who recently quit driving a school bus because of a back ailment. "I really miss it," she says, "I loved being with those children."

Nursing was her first major career. She decided to get into it one year after she "got sunburned so bad I peeled like a sweet potato. I decided to go to nursing school so I wouldn't have to work on a farm anymore."

Rev. Reid is satisfied with her existence, and feels that her path has been guided. "My life has been something", she concludes. "Anything you want to know, ask Martha Reid, 'cause she's experienced it." — RHONDA MILLER, journalist, Virginia Beach, Va.

Nostalgia Reaches Out To The Old 'Bad Kids'

In recent years America has experienced a nostalgia craze. The popularity of "Little House on the Prairie," "The Waltons," and Country-Time Lemonade is, in part, a testimony to our desire to return to the uncomplicated life-style of yesterday.

We long to get back to the good old days: when right and wrong were absolutes; when the streets were safe and the gas crisis was non-existant; and when all people had to worry about were inconsequential matters like the Civil War and the Great Depression.

I find myself getting nostalgic, too, but not for the homespun life depicted on television. I get nostalgic about bad kids.

I've got a mischievous kid, but she'll never have a chance in our urban society to be really and truly bad. Now, I'm not talking about mean, vicious kids. I'm talking about the Tom Sawyers of this world who dress up like robbers and attack the Sunday School picnic. Sure, they grow up to be good citizens, but they have a little fun along the way.

Perhaps it's because, deep down, I really don't trust well-behaved kids, but I often wish today's kids had a life that wasn't so scheduled and tame. I wish my own child could have a chance to break lose and to experience the wild joy that my mother had as a child.

My mother was definitely a bad kid. Mothers who go crazy over play-dough in the carpet should talk to my grandmother, who came home one afternoon to find that my mother and her brother had quarreled over something and had battled it out in the living room. Their ammunition was ripe plums.

I'm not sure whether that was before or after my uncle put a dead mouse down mother's back, and she chased him out to the barn with a butcher knife and made him stay there all afternoon in the pouring rain.

He got her back, though. He bet her that she couldn't walk a log that was balanced across the top of their hog pen. Naturally, she couldn't ignore such a dare. She had walked almost to the middle when the log rolled.

Mother and her brothers managed to keep life lively at their home, but they weren't a patch on their cousins, Jack and James. Jack and James got mad at their daddy once and stuck rotten eggs under all the hens. They took the good eggs. Now, their daddy had this habit of gathering two or three eggs, then breaking one open and eating it raw.

Need I say more?

These are the same cousins who held my mother down while they washed her face in a watermelon, a fruit which she hates to this day. As soon as they let her up, she picked up the first available missile, a tin can, and let one of them have it across the forehead. It made quite a gash.

Now my grandfather, who had four sons just like his daughter, had no aversion whatsoever to corporal punishment, and he resorted to it quite frequently. So, as they rushed her cousin off to a doctor for stitches, my mother hid in the car and waited for the inevitable to happen.

"Get out," he said in his North Georgia Mountain drawl.

She obeyed.

He grinned and gave her a light push toward the house. "Don't you tell your mama I said this, but it served him right."

Direct National Election Is Still A Bad Idea

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — The pending order of business in the Senate this month is Birch Bayh's proposal to provide for the direct national election of future presidents. This was a bad idea when the gentleman from Indiana first trotted it forth in 1963. It remains a bad idea today.

Under Bayh's resolution, Article II of the Constitution would be drastically rewritten. Bayh would abolish the Electoral College altogether. In its place he would provide for a national popular election in which presidential and vice presidential tickets would compete. If no ticket received as much as 40 percent of the vote, a runoff would be held between the top two tickets. Thirty days later the winner would be officially proclaimed.

The existing system of presidential elections admittedly is flawed. We vote state by state for surrogate electors, but these electors can violate their trust with impunity. If no candidate wins a majority of the electoral vote, the election goes to the House of Representatives, where each state casts a single vote. Many observers object to the scheme of "winner take all," by which a state's entire electoral vote goes to the top vote- getter.

Acknowledging these imperfections, skeptics rightfully may inquire if Bayh's popular election plan is any better. In my own view, the senator proposes a cure far worse than the mild disease.

The Bayh amendment, if it ever were ratified, would wipe out the last vestiges of a substantive two-party system. Granted, not much remains of the two-party system now, but the form is there and we have built our legislative and executive structures around it. So long as candidates compete for electoral votes in each separate state, it remains formidably difficult for a third- party ticket to make a significant showing. Only four times in this century have minor party candidates figured noticeably in the records- Roosevelt in 1912, LaFollette in 1924, Thurmond in 1948 and Wallace in 1968. In no instance were their electoral votes sufficient to affect the outcome.

Under direct popular election, all this would change. Bayh's amendment purports to leave it to each individual state to decide which names would appear on its ballot, but the senator cannot truly mean this. A national election, at the very least, must be national; every voter must have an identical opportunity to choose among identical slates of tickets. Election laws would have to be precisely uniform throughout the country.

Once the Bayh plan went into operation, we could expect to see a multiplicity of parties in the European fashion — a black party, a women's liberation party, a resurgent socialist party, a pro-abortion and an anti-abortion party, an anti-busing party, an anti- gun control party, and so on. None of these splinter groups realistically could hope to win a national election outright. Collectively, they quite plausibly could prevent either major party ticket from winning 40 percent of the vote. In a runoff, the minor parties would barter their support to the most promising bidder.

Perhaps the American people want to plunge headlong into political disorder, but I doubt it. My guess is that many of the high-minded outfits that are supporting the Bayh amendment have not thought the thing through. The concept of popular election has a fine, simplistic appeal.

The trouble is that our constitutional system is not simple. It is marvelously complex. It rests fundamentally upon the concept of federalism, the grand design by which political power is distributed among the states respectively. This is the true genius of the American Constitution.

Bayh would wreck the grand design, He would obliterate one of the basic compromises of our federal system, and in the process he would disturb the beautiful balance of the Constitution as a whole. It seems to me unlikely that two-thirds of the Senate — or the House — will support any such radical surgery, and still less likely that 38 states could be persuaded to ratify the amendment. But Bayh has his baby on the floor, and if his troops can break a filibuster, we will soon get to the yeas and nays.

Nicaragua's Somoza Apparently Ready To Resign

By MARTIN HOUSEMAN

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — President Anastasio Somoza met Saturday with his Liberal Party congressmen in an apparent prelude to his resignation.

It was the first time since the present round of civil war fighting broke out in May that he has met with his supporters in the rubber-stamp congress, although he has held congressmen as virtual prisoners for weeks in a hotel next to "The Bunker," his command post in downtown Managua.

The beleaguered strongman has said he would not go into exile unless he received guarantees that the Liberal Party and national guard would survive after his departure.

The Liberal Party has been the instrument through which the Somoza family has retained constitutional power in Nicaragua for decades.

In an interview published in the Washington Post Saturday, Somoza admitted he had little leverage left to guide events, but he still sought guarantees for the institutional survival of the national guard and the Liberal Party.

"I am like a tied donkey fighting with a tiger," Somoza said in the Post interview, referring to the nearly total international arms embargo on his government.

Somoza met behind closed doors with the Liberal Party congressmen in the officer's club of "The Bunker." The congressmen would not disclose the topics they discussed.

The United States has been pressing Somoza to resign and leave the country, probably for exile in his Miami mansion, as first step of a peace plan.

The U.S. diplomatic effort is aimed at expanding the five-member provisional government, the "Junta of National Reconstruction" backed by the Sandinistas, to increase moderate influence in the potential interim government.

The United States also has attempted to line up the support of the Costa Rican and Panamanian governments, open allies of the Sandinistas fighting Somoza.

Confesses To Killing Newsman

By MARC LIFSHER

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — A 17-year-old national guard auxiliary soldier has confessed killing ABC television newsman Bill Stewart, the head of the national guard board of inquiry said Saturday.

Board President Manuel Sandino Mendoza said auxilary soldier Santiago C. Carrasco testified he accidentally killed Stewart, 37, when his M-16 rifle fired because the safety was not on.

potential, in the production of electric energy."

Although he thus raised the spector of public power service, Scott did not completely forget his role as guest. He placated his private power host by saying he believed "the private utilities have nothing to fear if they go abou their business realistically and provide power on a mass production basis that will encourage mass consumption instead of attempting to barricade their operations with high costs, restrictions upon consumption and unrealistic profits."

Scott called the new plant "a magnificent enterprise" and said CP&L could be "justly proud" of the job it had done in making electricity in rural areas.

Although he described the job done by the power companies in meeting the state's power needs "a staggering accomplishment," Scott said "with all that it is not enough." He said a million of the state's inhabitants were still without electric power and that industry had clustered largely in the Piedmont, avoiding higher electric rates and lower power availability that then prevailed in the eastern part of the state.

Scott reserved his sharpest attack for another utility, the Tidewater Power Co. which then provided electric power to 16 southeastern counties. Pointing out that Tidewater's rates were much higher than other power companies, Scott asserted that they were "throttling industrial development and rural electification" of the area around Wilmington. He vowed to see that something was done to break the grip" that Tidewater Power Co. had on southeastern North Carolina.

Sutton, who preceded Scott on the program, must have had an inkling of what Scott would say on public versus private power.

The CP&L executive said the Lumberton plant would be capable of generating 750 million kilowatt hours of electricity a year and asserted this was nearly four times the combined "dependable energy capability" of two publicly owned hydroelectric plants then being built or planned in the state.

Besides, he pointed out that CP&L then paid $5.5 million a year in federal, state and local taxes while the publicly owned plants paid none.

As for Tidewater Power Co., the state's news media two years later carried an announcement that CP&L had bought it. Soon thereafter, power customers in the 16 counties were paying the same rates as other CP&L customers.

As The World Turns, With Skylab Hovering Over

By DAVID NAGY
United Press International

They're flogging protective helmets topped with "early warning" spikes and T-shirts with bulls-eyes on the chest. They talk of throwing a safety net over Cincinnati, amid much laughter.

Then, some Kansans in Salinas are getting up a hilltop lookout party for zero hour. Las Vegas gamblers are offering odds on impact sites. Folks here and there are running re-entry-time raffles.

With gayety and bravado — and not at all like Chicken Little — people from Spokane to Argentina and Canada's North Woods seem to be treating the impending crash of Skylab as a lark, a chance to have a few laughs and maybe make a few bucks.

This will be welcome news to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

NASA has been saying for weeks the chances are 1 in 600 billion that any particular individual will be hit by a hurtling hunk of Skylab, the 77-ton space junk monster due to plunge out of the heavens sometime between Tuesday and Thursday and smear itself over a 4000-mile-long, 100-mile-wide track.

No one knows where that track will be.

But relax, NASA says.

Seldom have people taken U.S. government advice so literally.

One exception was reported from central India, where villagers in Madhya Pradesh state were said to be jamming departing trains. A local scientist predicted Skylab will hit that area.

Elsewhere, zaniness prevailed.

A Kansas City, Mo., novelty firm advertised the "Skylab Protective Helmet," with its "early warning" noggin spike and the cheerful warning that, if Skylab actually hits you, the helmet "will do you absolutely no good at all."

A Bloomington, Ind., company offered its "Skylab Protective Kit" — a hard hat with accompanying instructions that begin, "1) Place on head ... ."

In Spokane, Wash., the Skylab Self Defense Society marketed T-shirts featuring large red bull-eyes. The pitch is that Skylab is sure to miss anyone wearing the shirt, since "the government can't hit the broad side of a barn with its projections."

Vice Mayor David Mann took the same approach at a City Council meeting in Cincinatti, proposing to paint a bulls-eye on City Hall and, hedging his bets, to erect a gigantic net over the town. The proposals were referred to committee.

Radio reports indicated the bulls-eye fad also reached northern Canada, where some Northwest Territories citizens were threatenng to thumb their noses at Skylab by painting a big yellow target on a forest cross-roads.

In Spivey's Corner, N.C., site of a national hog hollerin' contest, local boosters offered the football stadium as a landing site. "We are hoping it will fall in the area fenced off," said Spivey's Corner native Ermon Godwin.

In Buenos Aires, Marta Pinedo, 20, summed up the blase Argentine view this way: "I believe those stories about Skylab about as much as I believe stories about flying saucers."

"The strange part of it," wrote Argentine newspaper commentator Martin Yriart, "is that although we are on the threshhold of the crash, the level of world hysteria, which with Three Mile Island set a new record, has not begun to show signs of life."

"This of course could be due to the anesthetic effect of modern "catastophe movies," which have converted the most unlikely disasters into weekend entertainment."

Signs Peace Treaty...

However, congressmen whose districts include depressed textile factories have threatened to block the treaty unless the Chinese agree to limit their textile exports to the United States.

Negotiations on the textile curbs agreement broke down in late May, despite a visit to Peking by Ambassador Robert Strauss, then President Carter's special envoy for foreign trade.

Chinese Vice Premier Li Qiuli, chairman of the government's economic planning agency, attended the ceremony and told Woodcock that "discussion on textile exports to the United States will be continued."

Greenville Students Scored High

"In every instance, both at sub-test and at the total test levels, students in the Greenville City School have scored above the national average in the annual testing of students," Charles Ross, Director of Education pointed out.

Ross referred to a recently released report covering test results in achievement in reading and mathematics for students in grades one and two; and in reading, mathematics, language and spelling in grades three, six, and nine.

Below is a comparison by grade and subject of Greenville students along with achievement levels statewide.

The first figures given are for achievement level (percentile rank) in the Greenville schools; the second figure given is the similar achievement rank statewide for North Carolina students. (All figures are to be compared to the national figure of 50).

— First grade — Reading, 57 and 59. Mathematics, 72 and 82.

— Second grade — Reading, 65 and 59. Mathematics, 75 and 78.

— Third grade — Reading, 57 and 49. Mathematics, 53 and 53. Language, 59 and 56. Spelling, 60 and 58. Total battery, 55 and 52.

— Sixth grade — Reading, 53 and 48. Mathematics, 52 and 52. Language, 58 and 54. Spelling, 64 and 57. Total battery, 54 and 50.

— Ninth grade — Reading, 53 and 47. Mathematics, 51 and 47. Language, 59 and 50. Spelling, 61 and 55. Total battery, 54 and 47.

Ross also noted that in all subjects tested at all grade levels that students in Greenville schools "scored higher this year than the previous year.

"What is really significant, when compared to state results," Ross added, "is that at the ninth grade level, and in the sixth grade except in math, students in the Greenville schools have scored higher than the average for North Carolina schools after being equal to or lower than state achievement levels in the lower grades."

Contended For FBLA National President

Nancy Berg, a rising senior at D. H. Conley High School, ran for the national presidency of the Future Business Leaders of America this past week.

Miss Berg and her Conley High School FBLA advisor, Mrs. Mary M. Thompson, attended the 28th annual FBLA-Phil Beta Lamda National Leadership Confence in New Orleans, La. Sunday through Wednesday.

Miss Berg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Berg of Cherry Oaks, Greenville, is vice president of the North Carolina FBLA and was historian of the state organization last year. She was the only office seeker among about 100 North Carolina students who attended. Chosen by the officers of the state association, she had as her campaign manager, Martha Sue Harris of South Stanley High School, state president.

About 5,400 FBLA members representing many of the 4000 chapters of the organization attended the New Orleans conference, Mrs. Thompson said. A number of well-known businessmen were in attendance, she said, including Eric Hilton of Hilton Hotels Inc., who presented a $30,000 grant to the FBLA for use in a business advocacy project.

A Colorado FBLAer was elected national president.

Energy Savings In Pitt Schools

Ayden-Grifton High School and Ayden Middle School tied for the largest reduction on their energy use bill for May, according to figures released by George Laws, county energy control officer.

Both schools showed a 19 percent decrease from their bills a year ago.

North Pitt High School was second in its decrease of 16. 7 percent. Schools and their percentage of reduction are as follows: Sam Bundy, 14; Chicod, 12; Ayden Elementary, 10; Belvoir, 9; Stokes, 9; and A. G. Cox, 6 percent.

W. H. Robinson School in Winterville showed an increase of 114 percent over last year's bills due to the addition of a new cafeteria-office section, heated and cooled by electricity. Other schools and their percentage of increment are as follows: H. B. Sugg, 113; G. R. Whitfield, 16; Wellcome Middle, 12; D. H. Conley, 12.9; Bethel, 10; Falkland, 5; Grifton, 4; Farmville Central, 2; and Pactolus, .6 percent.

North Pitt High School, however, led the way in reducing its electrical costs by 57.1 percent. Bethel Elementary School followed closely behind, with a reduction in costs of 43 percent.

Schools and percentage of reduction in energy costs are as follows: Sam Bundy, 30; Chicod, 20; Ayden-Grifton, 8.6; Farmville Central, 7.3; Grifton, 4; and Ayden Elementary, .3 percent.

W. H. Robinson increased its energy costs by 112 percent, due to its new facilities. Other schools and their percentage of increment are as follows: Wellcome Middle, 52; H.B. Suggs, 39; Stokes, 28; A. G. Cox, 20; Pactolus, 18; Falkland, 13; D. H. Conley, 9.4; Belvoir, 9; Whitfield, 6; and Ayden Middle, 1 percent.

No figures were available on Farmville Middle School due to an error in billing.

Kids Dog Show Tuesday

Prizes will be the order of the day at a free Kids Dog Show to be held Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. at Elm Street Park. Registration is from 6:30 until 7 p.m.

Greenville area children between the ages of 4 and 14 who have a dog are invited to enter. Any dog may compete, regardless of breed, pedigree, or professional training, provided it is at least six months old.

The show is sponsored jointly by the National Recreation and Park Association, Ken-L Ration and the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department.

Judging categories are best behaved, funniest, best trick, smallest dog, largest dog, best looking, best costume, and best of show. First, second, and third prize ribbons will be awarded to winners in each category, with a best of show to be selected from the first place winners.

American, French Mercy Planes Evacuate Vietnamese Refugees

By United Press International

American and French mercy planes Saturday flew hundreds of Indochinese refugees from overcrowded camps in Thailand and Malaysia to new homes and lives in the United States and France.

Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo of the Philippines, meanwhile, charged Hanoi was deliberately sending Vietnamese to death on the high seas to ease food shortages in Vietnam.

In Tokyo, the Kyodo News Service reported that a senior Vietnamese official warned Vietnam would not participate in any international conference on refugees "if it is used as a forum to whip up an anti-Vietnam campaign."

A chartered American plane left Bangkok with 199 refugees en route to San Francisco. Some of the refugees have families in the United States, others have sponsors.

They included 89 Laotians — 36 of them hilltribe people — 54 Cambodians, 53 Vietnamese boat people and three Laotian - Vietnamese.

The Cambodians were among 40,000 refugees that the Thai government pushed back into Cambodia last month, but were saved a few days before the expulsion by being selected for resettlement in the United States.

Over 2,700 Indochinese refugees were shipped from Thailand for resettlement in the United States last month and a somewhat higher number are expected to be transported next month, an official said.

The United States announced last week it was doubling its annual admission of Indochinese refugees to 168,000 in hopes of persuading other countries to increase their quotas.

France announced it would admit 5,000 refugees from camps in Malaysia and Thailand in addition to the 40,000 already admitted in recent years.

The first group of 171 arrived in Paris Saturday from Kuala Lumpur aboard a French Air Force DC-8 transport. All were from the Poulo Bidong camp where, they claimed health and sanitary conditions were deplorable.

Ranging in age from four months to 77 years, they were housed in temporary quarters before being sent to various townships throughout France for permanent homes and jobs.

In Manila in an interview taped for television, Romulo compared the Vietnamese refugee problem with Germany's extermination of Jews in World War II. He said the difference was that "while in the holocaust in Germany many Jews were killed in gas chambers, it is now a water method."

Romulo's statement was the strongest condemnation by any Philippine official so far of Hanoi's role in the Vietnamese exodus which has burdened neighboring southeast Asian nations with more than 300,000 refugees.

"It is understood that the food shortage problem in that country is such that the government is anxious to get rid of these inhabitants," he said. "They are in mid-ocean in boats that are like coffins."

Kyodo quoted Nguyen Co Thac, Vietnam's state minister in charge of foreign affairs, as telling journalists during a visit by Japanese communists that:

"It's true that a large number of Vietnamese people are fleeing the country but we have no intention of exporting refugees."

Thac accused China and the United States of "deliberately playing up the refugee problem with facts distorted."

Vietnamese authorities admitted that about 40,000 Vietnamese of Chinese ancestry had left the Cholon district of Ho Chi Minh City, the dispatch said.

A U.N.-sponsored conference on Indochinese refugees is scheduled in Geneva July 20,21. Most countries agree that little ccan be done without Vietnam's participation.

Nigerians Flock To Polls

LAGOS, Nigeria (UPI) — Millions of people flocked to vote Saturday in the first of five elections ushering in a democratically elected civilian government after 14 years of military rule in black Africa's most powerful nation.

The country's 48 million voters were electing candidates to 95 senatorial seats — five for each of Nigeria's 19 federated states. The elections climax a four-year program for a return to civilian rule, based on a new U.S.-style presidential constitution formulated over the past year by a constitutional assembly.

The elections will determine the future policies of the richest state in black Africa, and its principal oil producer. Nigeria, second only to Saudi Arabia as a supplier of oil to the United States, provides America with around 1.2 million barrels daily.

News Briefs

Construction Will Continue

NEW HILL, N.C. (AP) — The project manager for the Shearon Harris nuclear plant said construction on the plant will continue on schedule despite the failure of 185 rod-busters to report to work Friday.

The workers, who walked out Thursday night to protest the firing of two foremen, say they will continue their protest by picketing the plant Monday morning and blockading the front gate with their vehicles.

Only 30 of the 215 rod-busters at the plant reported for work on the second and third shifts Friday. The workers are called rod-busters because they tie the structural steel used to reinforce the concrete in a reactor containment building.

New Miss N C Has Problems

Debbie Shook lost her crown as Miss North Carolina last month, and hardly was it placed on the head of the new queen, Mona Maki, when she became the target of protests over her appearance in a television commercial.

Wilmington Jaycees filed a written protest Wednesday with the North Carolina Jaycees, claiming Miss Maki violated her contract with the state pageant by appearing in a June 30 television commercial promoting Chevrolet cars.

A Lynn Shaw of Elizabethtown, business manager for Bladen County, filed a personal protest.

Jimmy Mallard, the Wilmington Jaycee who filed the protest, said contracts signed by each of the 47 contestants in this year's pageant forbid any endorsement or promotion of commercial products.

Calls Food Rule 'A Farce'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's new rule restricting the sale of so-called junk food in schools doesn't go into effect until the end of the year, but already it is being branded "a total cave into the snack food industry."

Local Couple Attended N.C. Bicycle Meeting

ASHEBORO — Drs. Carroll and Edith Webber of Greenville were among approximately 40 bicycle advocates who attended a conference on bicycling held at Camp Caraway, near Asheboro recently.

The conference, sponsored by the Bicycle Program of the North Carolina Department of Transportation, drew leaders from North Carolina and from other states.

Major topics discussed at the conference included bicycle safety, legal aspects, the economic implications of bicycling, easier ways to use bicycles, enforcement measures, education for bicyclists and the general public, including the improvement of public attitudes, and bikeways.

Among featured speakers were Anita Brewer of Boston, Mass., editor of "Bicycle Coalition" newspaper; David Lawrence, of the N. C. Institute of Government; John Williams, editor of "The Bicycle Forum," Missoula, Montana; and Mary Meletiou, speaker for North Carolina's Bicycle Office.

Lawrence explained the mechanisms of North Carolina city and county governments, pointing out that county roads are controlled by the state. Brewer concentrated on ways in which regional planning involving bicyclists are being strengthened; and Williams shared his extensive experiences on a national scale with causes and prevention of bicycling accidents.

Another speaker, John Dowlin of Philadelphia, described the growth of the Philadelphia Coalition, featuring the famed commuter race among bike-bus-subway-taxi modes of transport, in which the bicycle won hands down. Dowlin advocated the marriage of bicycles and public transport as "what modern urban society needs."

Points discussed in legal matters included factors such as laws dealing with liability for potholes, grates, dogs, and other hazards to bicyclists.

Meletiou emphasized the willingness of the N. C. Bicycle Office to provide information and guidance to all interested persons or parties.

A forthcoming event announced at the conference is the great Winston-Salem Balloon Chase, scheduled for August 18-19. At that event, a 70-foot balloon and cyclists will leave a site at the same time, and the first cyclist to reach the place where the wind takes the balloon in an hour's time is winner.

Educators Say Fears Realized Due To Private Schools Law

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State education officials are saying their fears have been realized since the General Assembly passed a new law exempting private schools from most state regulations.

School officials say the law has prompted several inquiries from parents who want to teach their children at home.

"It's definitely a problem," said W.W. Peek, assistant to Superintendent of Public Instruction Craig Phillips. "And we haven't found the answer to it."

The 1979 General Assembly enacted legislation removing private schools from state regulations except those on health and safety.

Peek said the Department of Education has received many telephone calls from parents asking whether it would be legal for them to keep their children at home instead of sending them to school next year. Several have written letters "directly saying they're going to keep their children at home and not send them to school. And there's going to be an increasing number of those. We just don't know how to respond yet," Peek said.

Before the new law was passed, private schools were required to teach certain basic subjects for a minimum period of time each year and were required to send reports to the state. Teachers had to be certified.

The current law requires only that local school boards enforce the compulsory attendance law for children up to 16 years old. But Peek said that will be difficult to do.

Frank Yeager, president of the North Carolina Association of School Administrators, said under the new law, "there's nothing in the world to stop a parent from creating his own school, taking his child out of public school and keeping him home all day. There won't be a thing the state or anybody else can do about it."

However, Dan Carr, president of the N.C. Organization of Christian Schools, said education officials are overreacting.

"They are pretending this is something new," he said. "All they have to do with parents who refuse to send their children to school is to turn it over to the governor's office to be handled. I think they are mostly concerned about the money public schools will be losing if parents send their children to private schools."

UNC's Response Claims HEW Has Been Intrusive

WASHINGTON (AP) — The University of North Carolina Friday issued a formal response to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare's attempt to cut off federal funds to the school and asked an administrative law judge to look at what it called HEW's "arbitrary and capricious" intrusion into its academic affairs.

The university's action, if successful, will shift the focus of hearings being held in Washington from desegregation to the means by which HEW has sought to enforce desegregation during its nine-year battle with North Carolina.

In response, UNC asked Louis F. Parker, the administrative law judge presiding over the case, to schedule a preliminary hearing on HEW's "unwarranted intrusion" into the administration of the UNC system.

The university said that HEW has not only violated academic freedoms protected by the First Amendment but has illegally gone beyond provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Parker is expected to schedule a hearing for oral arguements in the case.

Last month, U.S. District Judge Franklin T. Dupree Jr. of Raleigh said that the administrative law judge must rule on the case before UNC can sue in federal court to block the proposed cutoff of funds.

UNC stands to lose about $89 million in federal funds.

If Parker agrees with the university, Joseph J. Levin, a Washington attorney who filed the motion, said the university will ask him to dismiss the case and save the state from needless litigation.

Sanford Named To Commission

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Former Gov. Terry Sanford was one of seven persons named Friday by Gov. Jim Hunt to the newly created Community College and Technical Institute Planning Commission.

The Commission was created by the 1979 General Assembly to study and recommend a plan for transferring control of the Department of Community Colleges to the state Board of Community Colleges and Technical Institutes.

It is comprised of 13 members, seven appointed by the governor, three by the speaker of the House and three by the lieutenant governor. It will hold its first meeting July 15.

Hurricane Plan Signed

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A plan intended to notifiy the public more quickly of a hurricane or other emergency will be forwarded to the Federal Communications Commission for approval after it was signed by Gov. Jim Hunt Friday.

The North Carolina Emergency Broadcast System plan was worked out by Carl Venters, president of the Durham Life Broadcasting Co. in Raleigh, along with the U.S. Weather Service and the state Division of Civil Preparedness.

Venters said at the signing ceremony that the plan was devised so any part of the state or the entire state could be placed on the alert in an emergency.

Mike Cross, A Successful Working Road Musician

By REBECCA BUFFALOE
Reflector Staff Writer

"Hello, this the Attic. Yes m'am, Mike Cross will do two shows tonight, beginning at 9 o'clock. However, the gate won't be turned, so come on down and spend the night with Mike," said the young man, as he answered the telephone with a mischievous grin.

Unbeknown to the many callers who wanted more information on the Tuesday night performance of Mike Cross at the Attic, the singer-performer did double duty before his 9 p.m. show by answering the telephone during a press interview.

Mike Cross, whose third album, "The Bounty Hunter," is enjoying frequent airplay across the nation, came to the Attic for the first time Tuesday night to perform two shows, preceded by singer/guitarist Ron Anderson. However, just a few weeks before, Cross had played before an enthusiastic crowd on the campus of East Carolina University.

Things seem to be clicking for Mike, whose easy rapport with his audience and facility for many different types of music have won him growing respect in the music industry and more devotees to his already-strong band of followers.

"ADULT GIFT TO MYSELF"

Mike, who was born in Maryville, Tenn. and spent his early years in the western North Carolina town of Lenoir, had no dreams of being a musical star, or any kind of star for that matter. He wanted to become a professional golfer.

"I never was much into music," said Mike. "I went to dances and enjoyed beach music. I never truly enjoyed music until I went to college."

Majoring in English and philosophy at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Mike started playing guitar at age 21, calling the experience "an adult gift to myself." He built up a small but devoted following and played many of the small night clubs around North Carolina.

During this period, Mike recorded his first album, "Child Prodigy," for TGS Records of Chapel Hill, an independent record company.

" 'Child Prodigy' was a living room product, like a memento to those who liked me before I went to Atlanta," Mike explained.

Mike had chosen to end his musical career and go on to law school in Atlanta, Ga.. However, after two years, he returned to Chapel Hill to record his second record, "Born In The Country," again, for TGS Records.

"My love for music came late in life and now it's become a passion," the singer said.

"Born In The Country" established Mike, as he says, "as a hippie folk singer for real." However, it's taken his new album, "The Bounty Hunter," to push Mike's music across to new areas of the country. The new album was recorded in Charlotte under the auspices of Moonlight Records, with bits and pieces recorded on tracks as time between performances permitted.

"The basic parts of 'The Bounty Hunter' were recorded a year ago, but I've been on the road so much, I couldn't get in the studio," Mike explained. " I just added a little at a time, and my friends came in to help me."

The album, which has gotten an increasing amount of airplay on more standard traditional AM-radio markets, is getting Mike more dates in concert halls and nightclubs across the nation.

"I'm going from playing rooms with a hundred people, to places with 1,500 seats with promotion and a guaranteed portion of profits," Mike noted. "I've got more visibility, but I'm no different as a performer."

"I'm doing exactly what I want to do and it's economically and notoriously great," he continued. "I'm just a working road musician, m'am."

"LEARNING AS I ENJOY"

Being a "working road musician" is taking Mike to more and more places, such as Steamboat Springs, Colo., Philadelphia, and Chicago. He travels and performs alone, something he prefers to do.

"I'm very accustomed to being by myself," he noted. "I drive around by myself and there's a thousand places where Mike Cross can play where a group just couldn't fit."

Although the road has kept Mike busy, he still spends as much time as possible with his wife, Laurie, and their 14 month-old son, William Michael Prometheus Cross in their home in the woods near Chapel Hill.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Cross of Lenoir, are "delighted" with Mike's growing career.

"They thought I'd lost my mind when I dropped out of law school," he said, with a chuckle. "They didn't see me perform until about two years ago, and now they're delighted."

Mike has little time to enjoy other types of music, ecept when he listens to tapes in his car. However, his current love is traditional Celtic music.

"I love that music and when I played some Celtic fiddle tunes in Philadelphia, those Irish folks went wild," he said. "I love all music from the past. I'm learning music as I enjoy it."

Though Mike wrote one of his current tunes, "Liquor in the Well," on the banjo, he is still infatuated by the fiddle.

"My nature is very linear, I just hone in on one thing," Mike said. "I've been playing the fiddle five years, I am so possessed by the way it can be played.

How's Mike feel about his current status, whereby more and more calls keeping pouring in for larger bookings?

"Most places I go, I'm building, just making Mike Cross known," he explained. "I haven't had a chance to sit down and see what's happening. It's not really an overnight thing."

Jubilo Stars In Park Concert Today

THE JUBILO STRINGBAND . . . performers of old-time music and mountain ballads, are the featured attraction in today's Sunday in the Park series of concert. The concert gets underway at 7 p.m. and is free, with the public invited.)

In 1872 Henry Work wrote "Year of the Jubilo," a spirited song celebrating the end of slavery. In 1979 the Jubilo Stringband celebrates old-time music and traditional songs in a the Sunday in the Park concert at 7 p.m. today.

The concert is free and is being held at the Sunday in the Park site, the grassy slope east of Reade Street between East Third and East Fourth Streets.

Stuart Aronson, coordinator of the concert series, said it was also hoped to have a group from the Green Grass Cloggers and a debut performance by the Tar River Twirlers, led by caller Jerry Powell, both on hand to supplement the Jubilo Stringband in today's event.

For the past several years, members of the Jubilo band have played from Europe to San Francisco, and have been winners at major fiddler's conventions including Union Grove and Galax.

They have also performed at the Kennedy Center and the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D. C., on television, including an appearance on the Today Show, at the Philadelphia Folk Festival and at other nationally known festivals.

In addition to dance tunes, Jubilo performers sing songs and ballads of the mountains and have developed a blend of old music and ragtime.

The group consists of Bill Hornung and George Woodring on fiddles, Mike Gallagher on five string and tenor banjo, June Drucker on stand-up bass, and Steve Gendron, formerly of the Plank Road Stringband, on guitar.

Sunday in the Park is under the auspices of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, and is funded by the City of Greenville as a public service.

Patrons attending are reminded to bring along blankets, pillows, folding chairs or other accessories for listening comfort.

High School Musicians Performing Today

GETTING TOGETHER — Young musicians from high schools in North and South Carolina and Virginia harmonize under the direction of conductor Harold Jones. More than 300 students are attending the first session of the ECU Summer Music Camp. They will perform in an outdoor concert on the mall in front of the A.J. Fletcher Music Building beginning at 6:30 p.m. today. Four bands will play — conducted by Jones; Ray Haney of Elizabethtown; Bert Owen of Laurinburg, and Roger Pinson of Monroe. The students will play a wide variety of music in the succession of performances which will last about one and one-half hours. The public is invited to attend and there is no charge. Dance Talks

DURHAM — Philosopners, critics, dancers and choreographers will continue evening discussions on the art of dance in Dance Town Hall series for four additional dates in July — July 8-9 and 15-16 at 7 p.m.

These discussions, which are free and open to the public, will be in Baldwin Auditorium on the East Campus of Duke University. Dr. Gerald Myers, of the Graduate Center of City University, New York, is coordinator. The public is invited to attend.

Skylaughs Too, Are Coming Down

By JIM CARRIER
Associated Press Writer

Even something like the fall of Skylab can't squelch Americans' humor. Some, with an "it-can't-happen-here" attitude, are daring Skylab to hit them; others are laughing all the way to the bank.

One neighborhood near Offutt Air Force Base in Bellevue, Neb., painted a huge target in the middle of its cul-de-sac street. "Maybe Skylab will fall here. We thought we'd give it something to aim for," said resident Patty Stahl.

Ken Peterson of Minneapolis threw a Skylab party where guests wore helmets, carried butterfly nets and ate a cake complete with space capsule crashing into the icing.

A Minneapolis Tribune cartoonist, noting that Skylab carried a supply of mashed potatoes and pudding, recommended a Skylab splatdown picnic: "Supply your guests with spoons and bowls and wait for the fun to begin."

Skylab, scheduled to break up in the atmosphere between July 10 and July 13, also has brought out the entrepreneurs.

Stores in Montgomery, Ala., were selling 8-ounce bottles of "Skylab Repellent" with a money-back guarantee. For those actually struck by a piece of the 77-ton vehicle, the stores had "Skylab Impact Balm."

And in Atlanta a local radio station gave away T-shirts labeled "Official Skylab Targets" with imprinted bull's eyes. Its promotion said: "Think of the fame, think of the glory — think of the mess."

A firm in Kansas City is thinking of the money. Seat-of-the-Pants Management has sold 12,000 paper Skylab Helmets at $2 apiece. The company stresses that the headwear doesn't protect you from falling Skylab parts, but you'll be "appropriately dressed for this once-in-a-lifetime event."

Another helmet distributor, Brad Rudolph of Denver, says he plans to stand in the open when the pieces start falling. "Can you imagine how much money you'd make if that thing hit you?" His poster-board helmets contain an "early warning spike" protruding from the top to give ".00193 nanoseconds of warning" before Skylab hits.

And yet another entrepreneur, Steve Danzig of Bloomington, Ind., is selling an "Official Skylab Survival Kit." It includes a helmet that Danzig describes as "Skylab citizen protection helmets as printed in the Federal Register." The federal document covers a wide range of topics, but Skylab helmets isn't one of them.

Songwriter Mike Nobil of Gorham, Maine, has penned a ditty that advises: "Learn to do the Skylab hop, and you'll be safer when she drops ... The reason for this dance is this, a movin' target's harder to hit."

Skylab, despite warnings to the contrary, should be treated as a joke, says University of Minnesota physics professor Cecil Waddington, who scoffs at fears of danger to humans.

"Isn't this the season when man bites dog is a headline?" he asks. "The funniest story will be when the whole thing disappears and nothing happens."

Held Groundbreaking For Higgs Playground

Ground was broken in a ceremony held Wednesday morning, July 4, for a Higgs Neighborhood Playground.

The playground, to be located between the Agnes Fullilove School and the old West End Fire Station which now serves as the Jaycee-Higgs Neighborhood community building, is a grass roots project. It is being funded by the City of Greenville through Community Development funds and will be part of the city parks system, but the idea and the planning has come from the neighborhood itself, a spokesman for the neighborhood group said.

Present for the groundbreaking were Frank Morgan, chairman of the playground committee who is a Higgs Neighborhood resident; Mike Cable, a former resident who is the designer of the playground equipment; Rufus Huggins, a resident who is vice-chairman of the Greenville Recreation Commission; and Millie McGrath, a Greenville City Council member.

Canoe Race Winners

Pete and Don Spikes took top honors in the recent 4th of July Canoe Race sponsored by the Greenville Recreation and Parks Dept. A total of 13 teams and canoes took part in the race from Falkland to the Greenville Town Commons.

The second place team composed of John Flournoy and Mike Underwood were only seconds behind the first place team. Third place went to the team of Robert Barnes and Larry Bolen. Trophies were awarded to the top three teams.

A Review

Lively Poetry By Pitt County Children

The Raider Review. Spring, Volume 1, Number 4 Paper, 36 pages, mimeographed. Pitt County Schools.

Sixty-one school children in Pitt County are the contributors to this entertaining collection of poetry.

The publication is the outcome of poetry workshops conducted by Sarah Lucy in the library of A. G. Cox School. Ms. Lucy describes the sessions as "short but intensive and highly rewarding for both me and the students who participated."

And whoever has the opportunity to read these poems will surely find much that is rewarding — and refreshing.

Half a dozen discernable themes occupy these young thinkers. Uppermost of these is the idea of a haven, a refuge, the instinctive desire for some place to be alone. In a number of poems, this hideaway concept is expressed as a dream place in the woods, by a stream, crouched on a tree limb, alone in the presence of old cracked boards — and frequently, the secret place is an imaginary one in the mind.

Another idea appearing in several poems deals with a child's spectrum of regrets — about shooting a bird, breaking a vase, killing a frog because his legs are so delicious, and even picking a fat bean because the poet was hungry.

These ideas, coming from minds not yet trained to subtle ways of expressions, are forthright, honest emotions couched in the sparsest terms. Typical is the concluding lines from Gene Jones' "Sorry, Bird," — "but I wanted/ a moving-target/ instead of the same/ old tin can."

Being sorry doesn't always take a serious tone. One young lady, Loretta Grantham, justifies breaking a $22.50 Oriental vase by explaining "I'm sorry for jogging through your/ living room but I look sharp in gym shorts/ and I ran like Bruce Jenner. . ."

Imagination registers strongly in several poems' particularly those falling in the "If I Were" theme. Robbie Smith writes about things she'd do for someone dear "If I were a bird . . ." then comes back to reality at the end . . . "But I'm not a bird/ and neither are you/ so my fantasy will/ never come true."

Occasionally one of the children pens lines that precisely convey a stunningly beautiful image, such as ". . .and flowers flow/ as the day is played/ away . . ." from Lorie Conger's poem, "Sunshine Hill."

This collection shows that young children are keen observers of the world about them, seeing nature, people, and the social issues of today in minds untarnished by half-truths or the ambiguity of rationalizations.

In addition to the poems which constitute the principal content of this volume, there's a small number of brief prose sketches that are well written.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Jane Parker

Sheppard Memorial Library has recently received several new books which deal with the problems of child-bearing and rearing in today's world. The first book, WOMEN CAN WAIT: THE PLEASURES OF MOTHERHOOD AFTER THIRTY by Terri Schultz, examines many of the problems associated with having children at a later age. The book is based upon interviews with dozens of women who did wait to have their first child. Many sections of the book are verbatim accounts of conversations with mothers — why they waited, how a baby affects their career, how it affects their marriage, how they manage their time, and how they integrate personal plans and dreams with the needs of a growing child. Medical issues are illuminated with recent up-to-date facts and studies. This book will inform and reassure women who are now trying to make this decision.

HELP: A HANDBOOK FOR WORKING MOTHERS by Barbara Kaye Greenleaf and Lewis A. Schaffer, M.D. tackles as one by one the special problems working mothers face. The techniques that the authors have developed to cope with various situations are drawn from their own experiences as well as from information gained from dieticians, psychologists, and pediatricians. The writers give suggestions on such issues as getting one's family to pitch in to help with the work, where to look for good child care, when to leave a sick child at home, how to be better orgainzed, and how to create time for communication. A section dealing with first aid for children; a bibliography for further reading in all the problem areas, and a list of organization and agencies and their addresses which give help with children and child care are included at the end of the book.

GROWING WITH YOUR CHILDREN by Herbert Kahl, educator and author of a dozen books, is a departure from the usual approach found in child-rearing books.

This book concentrates upon how to instill certain values into children. The chapters are arranged around the broad themes of discipline and self-discipline, strength and violence, respect and the problem of self-image, being fair and believing in justice, and the capacity for joy. Writing in simple language, Kahl uses many practical examples from his experiences as a parent and educator to help his readers realize that good parents usually have a clear sense of who they are, where they have come from, and what they value.

The last book, TROUBLED CHILDREN/TROUBLED PARENTS: The WAY OUT by Dr. Stanley Goldstein who is a clinical psychologist, describes the differences between period periods of stress that are a natural result of the development of the child and those problems that are chronic, deep-rooted, and required professional help. Goldstein also examines the kind of help that a parent should expect from professional people and how parents themselves can can put aside their own fears in order to be more effective in trying to help troubled children whether the problem is temporary or critical. Using case histories as the basis of his discussions, Goldstein offers should advice for dealing with trouble children.

Martin County History

WINSTON-SALEM — The Hunter Publishing Company of Winston-Salem, in conjunction with the Martin County Historical Society, has announced that work has begun on a book to preserve the county history and family heritage of Martin County.

This work is planned to contain the family histories of over 500 county pioneer families. Civic, church and industry leaders in the county will be assisting in collecting material for the book.

Plans are for the book to contain at least 500 pages, with old photographs and a complete index that will provide reference and genealogical research data.

All present and past residents of Martin County are invited to submit information and written histories of families. All notes and photographs will be treated with care and returned at the completion of this project.

Those submitting material will in no way be required to purchase a copy of the book. Any profits realized will be used by the Martin County society to continue the preservation programs.

More information can be obtained by writing to the Martin County Historical Society, P. O. Drawer 1048, Williamston, N.C., 27892 or by calling 792-3359 or 2614.

Many Stamps Honor Year Of The Child

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

The International Year of the Child has resulted in an outpouring of stamps by countries all over the world.

Here are some new stamp sets for your special collection.

Malta's Postal Administration released a set of three multicolored adhesives to mark the Year of the Child. The designs were selected from entries submitted by children attending Malta's primary schools. The 2-cent shows a sketch of children standing atop a world globe. The 7-cent depicts a silhouette of children flying kites. The 11-cent has a sketch of children representing many nations holding hands in a circle.

Antigua's set of four on behalf of Children's Year depicts poster-art illustrations created by American designer Mark Rubin. The 25-cent shows a child's hand pushing a boat, the 50-cent has a child's hand holding a rocket ship, and the 90-cent has a child's hand on a toy auto. The highest value is $2 and pictures a railroad train. A souvenir sheet also was issued for the occasion.

The East African Republic of Togo paid tribute to the year with a set of six special stamps whose theme is "The Children's Village in Togo." The designs feature a young girl holding a sign and a boy with a flag, a mother holding an infant, the children's symbol superimposed on the map of Africa, a woman guiding a group of children, children sitting around an African fan-palm plant, and a map showing the location of children's villages in that country.

Dominica's set of four stamps bears the following designs: Dominican child and dugout boat, children carrying bananas, children playing cricket, and a child feeding rabbits. Each stamps has the IYC symbol.

The International Year of the Child is the creation of the U.N. General Assembly. The main objective of the IYC is to place the child in the center of world attention and to invite the world community to renew and affirm its concern for the present and future conditions of its children.

Norway's newest stamps are dedicated to its beautiful scenery. The 100-ore stamp depicts a horsedrawn vehicle on the road to the Briksdal glacier. The 125-ore shows a landscape from Skjernoysund near Mandal.

Soon to be issued are two new stamps for the International Year of the Child. They will feature portraits of children in Norwegian pictorial art.

Egypt has issued a new stamp commemorating the peace treaty with Israel. The written treaty forms the background of the stamp while in the center is the signature of President Anwar Sadat surrounded by doves of peace within a halo.

Also issued by Egypt is a stamp honoring the Cairo International Fair held at the Guezirka Fair Grounds. The basic design depicts a world globe surrounded by an ear of wheat and a cog — the emblem of the fair.

Topical Time, official journal of the American Topical Association, features a special article by Sonja Weiss, TOPEX '78 Grand Award winner, in tribute to "Ludwig van Beethoven — His Creative and Spiritual World." Beethoven has been honored and commemorated on the stamps of many countries. Other Topical Time articles include such subjects as meteorology, philately on stamps, mathematics, railways, Michelangelo's works, and Mozart.

Writers To Meet Tuesday

The first meeting for July of the Greenville Writers Club will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Raynor, 2106 Pendleton Street, at 8 p.m. Tuesday, July 10.

All persons interested in creative writing are invited to attend.

Random Notes Worldwide

Tiger Gardens

SINGAPORE (UPI) — The Tiger Balm gardens, better known as Haw Par Villa, will soon get a new lease on life from the Singapore government.

The owner, Haw Par Brothers (Ptd) Ltd., is considering giving the gardens to the government which in turn will hand it over to the Singapore Tourist Promotion Board to manage.

For 42 years, the gardens have attracted millions of visitors. The move by the STPB to rescue this miniature fairyland of Chinese mythology is prompted by the fate of the Tiger Balm gardens in Hong Kong which were sold to a private company only to be demolished to make way for new buildings.

The gardens built by the two millionaire brothers will be preserved "at any cost" so that it will continue to be a tourist attraction, the STPB said.

Marias Events

PARIS (UPI) — A variety of theatre and musical shows, cafe-house performances and bustle in the street will be the major events of the 16th annual festival in the historic Marais city quarter.

Created to bring fresh life to the ancient city area, the July 11-13 Festival events will be held in the neighborhood of the numerous Marais landmarks.

French musical works created and played between 1789 and 1914 will be played at 19 concerts. The Pompidou Center quartet will chip in with 4 jazz concerts.

Chapel Ruins

VIENNA, Austria (UPI) — Visitors traveling on the newly opened subway in Vienna this summer will get a glimpse of history while under ground.

While waiting for a train in the station in front of St. Stephan's cathedral they can see the ruins of a 12th-century chapel displayed behind a glass window.

No Passports

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (UPI) — Haiti has killed an unpopular passport law that had been scheduled to go into effect this summer.

Without consulting tourism interests, the Haitian government "for security reasons" announced it would require valid passports for all Canadians and Americans visiting Haiti.

After an outcry that such a move would cripple Haiti's tourist industry, one of the few dollar-earners in the country, the government backtracked, announced the law was annulled and that Americans and Canadians could enter for short visits as usual — upon presentation of proof of nationality and identity.

The Duke of Windsor and Wallace Warfield Simpson were married at Monts, France, in 1937, some six months after the duke had abdicated as the uncrowned Edward VIII of England.

Rivera Drawings Discovered

DETROIT (UPI) — Thirteen sets of drawings by Diego Rivera, the internationally famous Mexican muralist, were recently discovered in the basement of the Detroit Museum where they had been stored and forgotten for half a century.

The drawings, carefully rolled and wrapped in plain brown paper 46 years, were discovered by archivist Marilyn Ghausi after recently discovered correspondence in museum files disclosed their exitence. The drawings in charcoal and pastel chalks were composed by Rivera in 1932 as a guide for his "Detroit Industry" frescoes in the Detroit Institute of Arts.

Art Institute director Frederick J. Cummings called the find a major event in museum history, pointing out that actual scale drawings by the great muralists are virtually unknown and can stand as separate works of art in themselves.

New Book Shop

LONDON (UPI) — There's a new London shop which stocks every first or second novel by a British author — those notoriously hard-to-sell and hard-to-find works by new novelists — plus a huge range of art exhibition catalogues.

It's run by the Arts Council, the British government body for subsidizing the arts. The shop in the Covent Garden area (8 Long Acre street) will secure art show catalogues from all over the world, as well as selling a wide range of posters, prints and museum replicas.

Ancient Castle

TOKYO (UPI) — Located on a small plain, the city of Mihara near Hiroshima features a 397-year-old castle with stone walls and moat still intact.

Mihara Castle is not Mihara's only attraction. One of the leading industrial centers in the region, the city, facing the inland sea, produces rayon, ramie, rolling stock and cement.

In addition, Mihara bragged that its sake (rice wine) is the country's best since ancient times.

U.S. Continues To Dominate Pan Am Games

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Natalie Dunn skated to a gold medal on a fractured left leg Saturday, a courageous act that led the United States' continuing domination of the VII Pan American Games.

At the same time, the United States won a track and field protest that put high school long jump star Carl Lewis back in the Games, and tiny 13-year-old Jackie Cassello, Silver Springs, Md., won an upset gold in gymnastics.

The track and field controversy boiled long before the first final was scheduled on a heavy night program for these hemispheric Olympics.

Lewis, the national prep school record-holder from Willingsboro, N.J., missed his morning trials and, at that time, was eliminated from the competition.

Bob Kane, U.S. Olympic Committee president, protested. An American team spokesman said the United States had been advised that all 15 long jumpers entered would be in the finals. Only by accident did they discover there were to be trials early in the day.

The protest was upheld and Lewis was put in the final field.

While track and field officials attempted to sort out their problems, the 22-year-old Dunn ignored the pain of a stress fracture in her left leg and skated to the roller skate dance gold medal. The Bakersfield, Calif. girl, a three-time world champion, immediately said she would retire from competition and go into teaching.

She has had trouble with her left leg since undergoing surgery for the removal of a tumor last year. Her father and team officials said she suffered a stress fracture of the left tibia while practicing her routine after her arrival in Puerto Rico.

Skating with a brace, she managed to beat Joan Young, a two-time world dance champion, for the gold medal that closed out her international career.

What may be the biggest upset of the Games was pulled by one of the smallest competitors, the tiny Cassello in the gymnastics vault.

The United States' leading gymnasts, in all events, skipped the Games for one reason or another and American team officials openly predicted a medals shutout in that sport.

The surprise acquisition of a first place in gymnastics was one of nine golds the United States added to its collection.

Going into an extremely heavy night schedule, with the dominating American swimmers still in action and the start of track and field competition, the United States held 50 gold medals and 111 overall.

Canada had a 12-65 gold-total count,Cuba was 28-53, Argentina 9-22, Brazil 4-18 and Mexico 0-13.

Adding to the American total were four golds from the archery competition, which concluded Friday night but weren't included in the medals count until Saturday.

Robert Green, Clinton, Utah, led an American gold-silver sweep of individual skeet shooting medals with 191 out of 200. Charvin Dixon, Seattle, was second with 189.

Argentine Oscar Yuston upset the Americans in the rapid fire pistol, however. Jerry Wilder, Remington, Ind., was second and Sam Baicco, Poway, Calif., was third. The United States took the team title.

And a pair of Argentine girls withstood an American protest to claim the women's 5,000 meter roller skating relay gold medal.

The Americans claimed there was an illegal baton pass on the final lap, but the protest was disallowed.

Linsue Peterson, Tacoma, Wash., and Sue Dooley, Livonia, Mich., won the silver medal and Elaine Coley, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and Linda Dorso, Cincinnati, took the bronze.

Borg Slips Past Tanner For Crown

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Bjorn Borg clung to his Wimbledon title to make modern tennis history Saturday, while Billie Jean King set another record, one tinged with sadness.

Borg edged Roscoe Tanner 67, 6-1, 3-6, 6-2, 6-4 in one of Wimbledon's closest and most exciting finals. He won the crown for the fourth straight year — a feat achieved by no other man since 1913.

Tanner played one of the matches of his life, served 16 aces and was a hero in defeat.

King teamed with Martina Navratilova to win the women's doubles and reached an all-time record total of 20 Wimbledon titles.

But missing from the 17,000 who watched the veteran bespectacled star was Elizabeth Ryan, who held the old record of 19 titles. Ryan, 88, had been on the grounds of the All-England Club Friday, but collapsed and died shortly after Navratilova beat Chris Evert Lloyd 6-4, 6-4 to retain the women's singles crown.

Ryan, who walked on crutches,was at the tournament every day until the end. She won her titles, all in doubles, between 1914 and 1934.

Saturday King and Navratilova defeated Wendy Turnbull of Australia and Betty Stove of the Netherlands 5-7, 63, 6-2.

Tanner, the big-serving lefthander from Lookout Mountain, Tenn., had a mountain to climb on the center court, and got to within sight of the peak.

He led by two sets to one. In the final set, down one service break, he led 40-15 on Borg's service in the eighth game and came desperately close to unseating the champion.

Tanner attacked all the way. He went to the net on Borg's service and took risks that often paid off. But in the end, his big serve and newly rounded game were not enough.

In the fourth and fifth sets Borg won the big points, and they made the difference.

"That is how it has been the whole tournament," said the 23year-old Swedish star, who had not had an easy path to the final. He dropped two sets to Vijay Amritraj and one each to Tom Gorman and Brian Teacher.

Tanner's chances rose and fell with his service. When his first service was on target, Borg little recourse. But in the latter stages, Tanner's first serve wavered. In the whole 2 hours and 50 minutes, Tanner's first service scored 96 hits and 79 misses.

"I know I missed a lot of first serves, but Borg had something to do with that," Tanner said. "I was trying to serve as close to the lines as possible. I wanted to prevent him getting into any sort of rhythm against my service."

While Tanner pressed forward to the net, Borg spent much of the match on his baseline and fired passing shots down the lines.

Tanner missed a big chance in the opening game of the final set, and it proved costly. Serving at 30-40, he moved forward and failed to put away a smash. He sent it straight at Borg, who got behind the ball and, from behind the baseline, sent a backhand flashing past his opponent.

That gave Borg a service break, and he held on to his lead despite several critical situations. Tanner had three break points in the second game but Borg held him off.

Leading 40-15 against service in the eighth game, Tanner hit a forehand into the alley. Next Borg dropped a short one and Tanner failed with a halfvolley.

The danger was over for Borg and he was never in the same danger again. But he needed four match poimts before clinching the first prize of $40,000. Tanner saved the first two with fine backhands, and the third with a cleverly angled volley.

In the last few games the crowd was roaring after every point,and the umpire repeatedly called for silence.

The last man to win four straight wimbledon titles was Anthony Wilding of New Zealand, who did it between 1910 and 1913. Two of the oldtimers did even better in the early days. Willie Renshaw and Lawrie Docherty each won it five times in a row. But in those days, the defending champion only had to play the final, or challenge round, taking a bye through all the preliminaries.

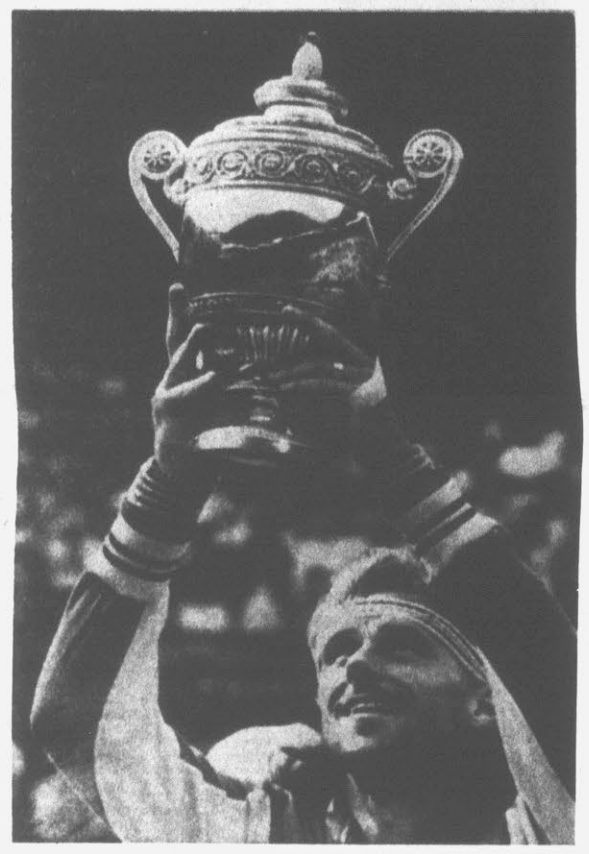
Borg said he will be after another Wimbledon record next year. In winning his fourth title he has won 28 Wimbledon matches in a row. Rod Laver won 31 in a row, over a span of 10 years.

Between 1962 and 1968, Laver was banned from Wimbledon because he had turned professional while the world's most prestigious tournament was still an amateur event.

King had been stuck at 19 Wimbledon titles since 1975, when she won her sixth singles crown. Each year since then she has come near to a doubles triumph, but failed each time.

The record appeared to be eluding her again when she and Navratilova lost the first set against Turnbull and Stove. But in the end they were good winners.

"The sad news of Elizabeth Ryan takes some of the joy away from this occasion," King said. "I had looked forward to talking to her today.



Defending champion Bjorn Borg of Sweden slams down a serve during the men's finals at Wimbledon against Roscoe Tanner yesterday and then holds his trophy to the crowd after defeating Tanner in five sets, 6-7, 6-1, 3-6, 6-2, 6-4. The victory, in one of the tournament's closest and most exciting Wimbledon finals, gave Borg his fourth consecutive men's singles title, a feat not achieved since 1913. Tanner, a decided underdog in the match, was given a standing ovation by the center court crowd at its conclusion. (AP Laserphoto)

Nelson Leads Western

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) Larry Nelson birdied the last hole with a 35 foot putt to shoot a 70 Saturday for a 6-under-par 210 and a one-stroke lead over charging Tom Watson after three rounds in the Western Open.

Watson, the leading money winner who would boost his season earnings by $54,000 to $431,674 with victory Sunday, had another adventurous round over the demanding Butler National course in perfect golf weather.

He opened with three straight birdies but settled for 35 on the front side before blazing back with a 33 for a 68, the lowest round of the tourney and the only score below 70 Saturday.

Watson's 54-hole tally of 211 includes only 23 pars. The rest is made up of 18 birdies and 13 bogeys.

"I used to play like that four our five years ago — a lot of bogeyes and a lot of birdies," said Watson, who is pursuing his fifth tourney triumph of the year and his third Western Open.

"If I don't make any major mistakes tomorrow I might pull it out. But there's always a chance of making a big number on this course," said Watson.

Watson's back nine included a 25-foot birdie putt on the 11th after he had three-putted the previous two holes for bogeys. He dropped an 8-footer for birdie on 12, a 30-footer for another on 15 and holed a 60-foot chip for one on the 18th after a trap cost him a bogey on 17.

Nelson, No.5 on the money list, and Bruce Devlin were coleaders after 36 holes.The 41-year-old Devlinsagged to 76 for even par 216 while the little Georgian hung in there like a tiger. Nelson, whose first victory was the Inverrary last March, made one major mistake in an otherwise steady 34-36 round. He opened with two birdies, strung out nine pars before getting another birdie and then after a regulation 3 on the 13th he made his first double bogey of the tournament.

Nelson drove a fairway bunker and hit his his second shot into the lake. He was off the green in four, chipped six feet from the cup and made the putt to salvage a 6.

After three pars, the unshakeable Nelson stroked in his 35 foot birdie putt on the 18th to put the frosting on his round.

"For the most part I played pretty well the last two days," said Nelson. "I never really came close to making a bogey today except on 14. I think a 5under will probably win tomorrow. But I hope it's 6under."

Four strokes out of the lead at 214 was young Dan Pohl who has missed the cut in six tournaments and failed to qualify in seven others this year. He fashioned a 71 that included birdies on the third and fourth holes and a 200-yard ace with a four-iron on the fifth.

Ben Crenshaw with a 71 was at 215 and Bobby Wadkins with a 70, Jim Simons, John Fought and Mick Soli were grouped at 217.

Britz Up By Two

NOBLESVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Jerilyn Britz, seeking her first pro victory since she joined the tour in 1974, carded a 4-underpar 68 Saturday to total 138 and take a 2-stroke lead into the final round of a $100,000 Ladies Professional Gold Association tournament here.

Britz, 26, from Luverne, Minn., had four birdies on the back nine of the 6,044-yard, par-72 Harbour Trees Golf Club.

Judy Rankin, who won here in 1977, shot herself into contention with a tournament record 66, placing her second, two strokes behind.

Rankin had six birdies on the back nine, including four in a row from the 10th to the 13th holes.

Shelley Hamlin, Sandra Post, Hollis Stacy and defending champion Jane Blalock were tied for third at 141.

Stacy, tuning up to defend her U.S. Women's Open championship next week, had a 33-34 to move from 2-over into contention.

"I'm concentrating more and zooming in on the Open. Everything seems to be falling into place," she said.

Little Joy For King

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Billie Jean King finally won her coveted 20th Saturday, a record for tennis titles at Wimbledon, but she was in no mood for rejoicing.

"All I could do was think of Elizabeth — it took all the joy out of winning," the 35-year-old matron queen of the game said after teaming with Martina Navratilova for the women's doubles championship.

Only Friday, the 88-year-old co-holder of the honor, Elizabeth Ryan, California-born but in recent years a London resident, was sitting in her regular center court seat for the women's singles final.

Shortly after Navratilova beat Chris Evert Lloyd to retain the title, Ryan apparently suffered a stroke. She was treated on the grounds, then rushed to the hospital. She died en route.

"It was really bizarre," Billie Jean recalled after catching her breath following the historic triumph over Wendy Turnbull of Australia and Betty Stove of the Netherlands 5-7, 63, 6-2.

"We were both from the same area of California. When I was a teen-ager, just beginning, I would see her around the Los Angeles tennis club. Everybody knew her and knew her record.

"I thought of her during the match. I found myself waking up thinking of her."

Ryan was one of the leading women players in the era preceding and following World War I. Her mother was from one of the country's richest and most influential families, tracing her roots back to the Mayflower. Her father was an Irishman who crossed the country as a pioneer and made good.

Ryan, who never married, made her reputation in doubles because she was the first woman to perfect the serveand-volley game. Of her 19 Wimbledon titles, 12 were in ladies' doubles and seven in mixed doubles between 1914 and 1934. She played with the great Helen Wills.

"I talked some with her last year," King said. "She told me that she would like to keep the record but, if it had to be broken, she would be happy if I did it."

Ted Tinling, prominent English dress designer now living in Philadelphia, lunched with Ryan on Thursday and saw her briefly on Friday.

"She was very proud of her record," Tinling said, "but she was fond of Billie Jean because of Billie's competitive spirit. She was impressed with Martina but she told me, 'i don't think Martina has a tactical brain in her head.'"

A newsman asked Ryan this week if she hoped Billie Jean would break her record.

"I hope she breaks her leg," the octogenarian replied, then laughed uproariously.

Billie Jean's 20 Wimbledon championships have been distributed among singles (6), doubles (10) and mixed doubles (4). In her 18 years at Wimbledon, beginning in 1961, King has racked up a record of 203 match victories while losing only 33.

She insists she has no intention of relaxing her pursuit despite three operations on her knees and a serious operation on her left foot involving three incisions last December.

Thinking she would be sidelined, she failed to enter Wimbledon this year. She managed to get into the field after a competitor withdrew.

"Me quit?" King bellowed when the question was put to her. "I am just getting revved up. Now I've lost to Tracy (Tracy Austin in the quarterfinals). I'm going back home and prepare for some more singles tournaments."

Both King and Navratilova started nervously in their doubles match Saturday, which kept the packed gallery in their seats. But they rallied as the games of Stove and Turnbull deteriorated.

"Martina was so excited she could hardly talk," King said. "In the third — or was it the third? — we were down 0-30 on Betty's serve and Betty served what we thought was a double fault.

"The umpire gave her two more serves. We couldn't believe it when neither Betty or Wendy objected. We really busted our gut we got so angry. That made all the difference."

LeFlore Leads Tigers

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Ron LeFlore tripled and scored the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning and Steve Kemp knocked in three runs with a homer and two singles, leading the Detroit Tigers to a nationally televised 6-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Saturday.

Pat Underwood, 3-0, survived a three-run Milwaukee second inning and retired 13 successive batters over one stretch until he needed help in the seventh. Aurelio Lopez pitched out of the jam and earned his fourth save.

LeFlore, who also stole two bases to boost his major league leading total to 43, tripled off the right center field wall leading off the seventh and scored on a sacrifice fly by Lou Whitaker as the Tigers broke a 3-3 tie. Kemp followed with his homer, chasing loser Paul Mitchell, 1-6. Kemp also singled in an insurance run in the eighth.

The Tigers took a 1-0 first inning lead as LeFlore reached on an error by second baseman Don Money, stole second and scored on a single by Kemp.

The Brewers came back with their three-run second. The runs scored on a double by Gorman Thomas, an RBI-single by Dick Davis, a double by Charlie Moore and a two-run double by Jim Wohlford.

The Tigers scored in the fourth when Lance Parrish singled, stole second and raced home on a bloop double by Alan Trammell. They tied it an inning later as Whitaker walked, moved to third on a walk and a fly out then beat the throw home on Champ Summers' grounder to Cecil Cooper at first.

Kemp stole second after his RBI single in the first inning and continued to third on the play when the throw from Moore, the catcher, skipped into center field. Mitchell recovered to strike out Jason Thompson and retired Summers on a fly to end the inning.

Rusty Staub singled leading off the second, but the Tigers' slow-footed designated hitter was forced out as Lezcano picked up a Aurelio Rodriguez' liner on two hops in right field and threw to second. Mitchell then threw out Trammell to retire the side.

LeFlore beat out an infield hit leading off the Tigers' first, and stole second base again. Kemp walked with one out but Thompson struck out again and Summers fouled out.

Indians 9, Twins 3

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians pounded out 14 hits including a two-run single by Cliff Johnson and a pair of RBI-singles by Bobby Bonds in a 9-3 victory over the Minnesota Twins Saturday.

Mike Paxton, 5-4, yielded the Twins three runs in the first inning, but settled down to scatter 10 hits.

Cleveland picked on Minnesota starter Darrell Jackson, 1-1, for five runs over the first four innings, including a solo homer by Gary Alexander in the second and Johnson's game-tying two-run hit in the third.

Yankees 8, A's 3

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Reggie Jackson, who used to play for Oakland, knocked in five runs, one on his 14th homer of the season, and led the New York Yankees to an 8-3 victory beat the A's Saturday.

Jackson has four homers and 11 runs batted in since coming off the disabled list June 9.

Jackson began his day by reaching first on an error in the second. He drove in a run with a single in a two-run third. With the score tied 2-2, Jackson tripled in two runs in the fifth. He chased starting pitcher Mike Morgan, 0-3, by crashing a solo homer in the seventh.

Love Of Baseball Helped Men Endure Negro League Hardships

GREENUP, Ky. (AP) — Ted Page has little sympathy for complaints by modern day major league baseball players.

"You hear Doc Ellis talk about the bed was too short, he was uncomfortable with it," Page said. "I would have welcomed many a night to have any kind of bed."

Page was an outfielder in the 1930s with several teams in the old Negro baseball leagues. Like his black contemporaries, Page was denied access to white organized baseball because of a rigid color line.

There was little recognition outside the black community for a star black baseball player during the first half of this century. The pay was haphazard, the playing conditions were uncertain, the travel was gruelling and the accomodations were often non-existent.

And the players had to suffer the added indignities to the soul of segregation that extended beyond baseball, often denying them hot meals after an all-night bus ride.

But the black teams would pile out of a rickety bus or an overcrowded car and often beat a white semi-pro team or a team of white major league players.

"I look at it now, how'd we do it?" Page said.

While bitterness was there, while there is regret at the lack of recognition, the black ball players have their memories, often pleasant or humorous, sometimes sad. And a recent gathering of some of the best of the old black players produced little self pity.

"Bitter? Maybe earlier, but not now," said Judy Johnson, one of the few black stars of that era enshrined in baseball's Hall of Fame by a special committee.

"We loved the game and wanted to play it," said Walter "Buck" Leonard, another member of the Hall of Fame. "We would have played anywhere."

Leonard remembers traveling 30,000 miles one year on a bus with the Homestead Grays and once playing five games in two days.

"One Sunday morning we put on our uniforms at half past seven in Philadelphia and went to Meadowbrook, N.J. and played a doubleheader with a white semi-pro team.

"We went out to Bellmont, N.J. and played Sunday night and when we got back in Philadelphia it was half past four Monday morning and we still had on our uniforms," Leonard said.

"We played Monday evening in the north part of Philadelphia, a twi-night game they call it, and played the Philadephia Stars Monday night," he said. "That's five games in two days and of course we just about dropped dead after that."

"One of the experiences I can remember, looking back today it was tragic, was getting in a car in Pittsburgh after playing a game, oh it was about nine o'clock, the game had been called because of darkness," Page said.

"We had to play the next day in St. Louis at two in the afternoon. We rode all night, two cars, eight of us in a car, 600 miles," Page said. "I can tell you almost exactly how far it is from Pittsburgh to St. Louis — 600 miles."

But Page says wait, don't get out the crying towel. "To us it was better than the kind of job we could get. It was much better than washing windows. This is all we had waiting for us if we wanted jobs, and they weren't too plentiful.

"I feel sorry for you that you didn't get a chance to see this group perform," Page told a largely white audience at a banquet July 3 in conjunction with the first reunion of the black stars.

"I feel just as sorry for you that you didn't get a chance to see them play as perhaps some of you feel for us that we weren't permitted to play in the major leagues," Page said.

"Some of these old guys sitting here now, they were not clowns by any stretch of the imagination," Page said. "They were not clowns, they were baseball players and they were good ones. They could do everything they did in the big leagues."

Borg Nervous

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Bjorn Borg said he was so nervous as he neared his fourth straight Wimbledon title Saturday that he almost dropped his racket.

"Near the end of the match I had never been so nervous in my life. I almost couldn't hold my racket, I was so nervous," Borg said after beating American Roscoe Tanner 6-7, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 to make history. He is the first man to win four Wimbledons in a row since 1913, when the defending champions were only required to play the final round.

Borg said this was his most difficult Wimbledon final — more difficult than the one in 1977 when he defeated Jimmy Connors in five sets (and certainly far more difficult than his three-set cakewalk against Connors here last year).

Borg said his ambition is to go down in the record books as the greatest player of all time.

Chicago Sweeps Doubleheader

CHICAGO (AP) — Mike Vail drove in four runs with a homer and a pair of singles Saturday to lead the Chicago Cubs to an 8-3 victory over the first-place Houston Astros and a doubleheader sweep.

Scot Thompson, who sat out the second game in favor of Vail, drilled five successive singles and drove in two runs to back the three-hit pitching of Ken Holtzman for a 6-0 triumph in the opener.

Vail had a single in a four-run second inning featuring Tim Blackwell's two-run double, hit a two-run homer in the third and singled across two more runs in the fourth.

Holtzman, 6-6, posted his second shutout of the season, both over Houston, while Dennis Lamp, 6-4, had a two-hit shutout working until the seventh inning when the Astros finally scored on a single by Terry Puhl, an infield out and a single by Denny Walling. He finished with a seven-hitter.

Holtzman gave up a single to Art Howe in the second inning and another to Julio Gonzalez in the third. Both Howe and Gonzalez were erased in double plays.

Houston's only other baserunner in the opener was Reggie Baldwin, who singled with two outs in the sixth as Holtzman retired 10 in a row on each side of Baldwin's single.

The Cubs scored a run in the first on singles by Ivan DeJesus, Thompson and Bill Buckner and a sacrifice fly by Kingman. Thompson singled in a run in the second and Ted Sizemore singled in another in the fifth before the Cubs put it away with three runs in the seventh on a run-scoring double by Holtzman and run-scoring singles by DeJesus and Thompson.

The Cubs struck for four runs in the second inning of the nightcap, two scoring on Blackwell's double, one on an error and another on a bunt single by Buckner.

Jerry Martin doubled to open the third and scored ahead of Vail's fourth homer. Two walks and a single by Kingman loaded the bases in the fourth before Vail delivered a two-run single.

Padres 11, Mets 3

NEW YORK (AP) — Jerry Turner's bases-loaded triple sparked a four-run first inning that moved the San Diego Padres to a 11-3 victory over the New York Mets Saturday.

Turner's hit drove in Ozzie Smith and Paul Dade, who had both singled, and Dave Winfield, who had been walked by New York starter and loser Dock Ellis, 0-2.

John D'Acquisto, 5-5, who was relieved by Eric Rasmussen in the sixth, got the victory, and Rasmussen notched his first save.

Turner scored the fourth run in the first on Jay Johnstone's infield out. The Padres increased their lead to 5-0 in the fourth on Gene Richards' RBI-single.

San Diego scored three times in the seventh off Dale Murray, third of four New York pitchers, as both Dade and Winfield singled home runs and another scored when Met catcher John Stearns allowed a throw to the plate to get away.

GH Wins Tourney

Greenville Hardware's Billy Godley pitched a two-hitter yesterday as his team defeated Jeannette Cox 9-2 to win the Prep League tournament championship.

Greenville Hardware scored three runs in the first inning, while both Cox runs came in the second. GH then added three in the third, two in the fourth and one in the fifth.

Ronnie Moore led off the first with a walk for Greenville Hardware and Toby Fischer sacrificed him to third after a steal. Godley singled him in and Tim Norris got a single. Base hits by Hunter Bost and Curt Hendrix scored Godley and Norris.

Norris was 2-3 at the plate and scored three runs in the game. Bost was also 2-3, while Hendrix scored twice. The losing pitcher was Mike Iaboni.

Backhand Return

Roscoe Tanner stretches to make a backhand return to Bjorn Borg during their men's singles championship match at Wimbledon yesterday. Tanner lost in five sets to Borg, making the match closer than was expected. (AP Laserphoto)

Tanner: Borg Not Invincible

WIMBLEDON, Emgland (AP) — "I still don't believe he is invincible," Roscoe Tanner said of Bjorn Borg after bowing to the Swede in the final at Wimbledon Saturday.

"He just played better than I did today," said Tanner.

Borg beat the American 6-7, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 for his fourth straight championship.

The 27-year-old left-hander from Lookout Mountain, Tenn., was obviously proud of his fighting performance against the 23-year-old Swede, who won his fourth consecutive Wimbledon singles title.

"I played a very good match against a heck of a good player,"Tanner said afterwards. "You have to take chances against Borg. If you play carefully he is better than anyone at that. I tried to keep him out of rhythm.

"I feel I made a few errors I shouldn't have and missed a few first serves. But against Borg you have to go for shots and take chances.

"I know that I bothered him, and that my strategy presented him a few problems. You have to adapt something against Bjorn that is a little out of the ordinary."

Tanner's decision not to play safe gave Borg plenty of problems. Tanner led two sets to one and had a chance well into the final set.

"If I'd won at 15-40 to come back to 4-4 it could have been different," said Roscoe. "That point comes down to the match."

Tanner also felt himself getting stronger towards the end of the match.

"I felt his serve getting a little softer," he said. "At the end I felt good, I didn't feel tired. When I got back from 0-40 to deuce in the final game I thought I had a chance. If I'd got the deuce point I would certainly have been a lot better off.

"I kept working at it, because I felt being a break down was not an impossible situation."

Between sets, Tanner looked at a little notebook at his courtside chair.

"My coach Dennis Ralston had written down some strategy," he said. "After I lost the second set I looked at it and it must have done me good — I won three games in a row."

Tanner, who was in the Wimbledon final for the first time, was not awed by his opponent.

"I didn't feel nervous, tight or tense at all," he said. "I had no reason to feel nervous. There was no pressure on me.

"I was keyed up for the final, but being in a final isn't all that bad," he joked.

"I am sure I will feel worse tomorrow. I will start thinking and remembering my chances. You learn things in a five-setter."

Martina Too Much For Lloyd

An AP Sports Analysis
By CHRISTY BARBEE
AP Sports Writer

Martina Navratilova is the Wimbledon champion again. And in just about everybody's book that has to put her emphatically at the top.

Congratulations, Martina. But understand, please, that it's hard not to be a little wistful about the woman you've displaced. Chris Evert Lloyd, for all the guff she's taken about being icy and mechanical, is one of the most gracious figures in the game.

Her game has suffered badly in the last year and a half. But following her marriage in April, some of the grit and consistency seemed to return. She lost only one match during the spring season on European grass and clay. She beat Navratilova in a tough one two weeks before the Wimbledon final. There was reason to believe she could take back the title that was hers in 1974 and 1976.

But there seems to be something about Navratilova on Wimbledon's center court that works like a drug on Lloyd.

She has behaved listlessly each of the last three years at Wimbledon, losing to 1977 champion Virginia Wade in he semifinals that year and to Navratilova in the final last year. This time she played like her old steady, unrelenting self — until the final.

She may have looked unconcerned, as though the drive to win had simply left her. But you can bet that this time it hurt.

"I am more disappointed than I have ever been," she said.

For in the last week, Lloyd has been talking like a winner. In her own mind, she said, she had never lost the top spot. She and Navratilova had agreed that they would wait until the championships at the beginning of next year before deciding who was the best and who was next-best.

But despite the scores Friday — 6-4, 6-4 — Lloyd was mastered. Navratilova is simply too strong, too hungry.

Loss of appetite has been Lloyd's own diagnosis of her problems in the last year. In a rare display of heart break in March, she tearfully and angrily excused her failing in the winter-tour championship by saying that people — the press in particular — were unfeeling about her personal situation.

Her personal situation at the time was a happy one — she was about to marry John Lloyd, whom she had met at Wimbledon last year and who has accompanied her nearly everywhere since. What Chris was saying was: Please let up on me I want to be the best. But I want to be a wife, too. Maybe I can do both. Please give me time.

Time just refuses to stand still for her, though. Tennis has gotten tough — and she is in large part responsible for that. For a long time, she utterly dominated the women's game. Most people couldn't name more than about four female players. Only in the last year or two have they come to know Navratilova.

Lloyd became a model for young women. Now there are Tracy Austins and Pam Shrivers pooping up everywhere. Evonne Goolagong Cawley is back. Billie Jean King is having another good run. And there is more variety in playing styles.

And Lloyd did wonders for women's tennis when she took a long vacation last year. While she was away, others — especially Navratilova — got used to winning. All this comes back to haunt her now. She doesn't get so many straight-set victories, nor anywhere near so many 6-0 sets.

She lost her 125-match clay-court streak during the spring. That had been her proudest accomplishment.

She has one more sacred streak: her four consecutive U.S. Open titles. Navratilova never has made it to the final in the American championship.

But there is certainly no reason why she can't. There is no one stronger, better trained or with a better repertoire.

Thunderboats

30-Foot Hydroplanes With Airplane Engines

MADISON, Ind. (AP) — They call them thunderboats. The 6,000-pound, 30-foot monsters, powered for the most part by V-12 engines from vintage World War II fighter planes, comprise a fleet of some dozen craft that race on the American Power Boat Association's unlimited hydroplane circuit.

Sunday's APBA Gold Cup race on the Ohio River, in which defending champion Bill Muncey is the heavy favorite to win for an unprecedented eighth time, will be the fourth of 10 races this season.

Perhaps the most spectacular feature in thunderboat racing, and the one that likely will be the most recognizable to the national television audience (ABC's Wide World of Sports) and an expected crowd of some 100,000 along both the Indiana and Kentucky banks of the Ohio, is the giant roostertail — a 100-foot wall of white water flung 75 feet into the air by the boat's propeller.

The power plants, mostly Rolls Royce and Allison engines, push the boats up to 200 mph, making them both water and air craft as only the trailing edge of the two pontoon-like sponsons at either side of the boat and the bottom blade of the propeller come in contact with the water once the hydro gets up to speed.

"A roostertail looks spectacular but it can be very dangerous for the drivers," Mickey Remund, who retired after driving Miss Budweiser to the APBA national championship in 1977, said last year.

"It can tear a windshield off, split a helmet or swamp a boat. Running into one is like driving into a water wall at 160 mph. The most eerie feeling I know is driving in the slot between two boats with roostertails on either side of you. It can make you pucker up real fast."

Muncey, who has won an incredible 53 races in his career that spans nearly 30 years, has captured the Gold Cup the past two years. He also won the annual Madison Regatta last year en route to his sixth APBA national crown and has won the first three races this season at Miami, Evansville and Detroit.

"It's not really a boat, it's more a water-bound airplane," Muncey once said of the giant hydroplanes. "The hull is even designed like an airplane wing, curved on the top and flat on the bottom."

Originally developed to put out about 2,200 horsepower, the engines deliver 1,000 to 1,500 more horsepower than that at top speed. Many engines last less than one 15-mile race because of the terrific strain.

"Can you imagine that?" Muncey said. "We're all using engines 30 to 40 years old, but no one's discovered anything better."

A field of up to 10 boats will compete for shares of a $57,650 purse plus $2,500 in contingency awards. Six preliminary heats are scheduled beginning at noon (EST) Sunday. The five-boat finale is scheduled for 5:10 p.m.

Ford Invitational

VAIL, Colo. (AP) — U.S. Open champions Hale Irwin, Hubert Green, Jerry Pate and Billy Casper will join the legendary Gene Sarazen and a host of celebrities and amateurs Monday in the third annual Jerry Ford Invitational Golf Tournament.

The 55 professionals will be battling for the first-place check of $10,000 on the par 71, 7,004-yard Vail Golf Club course. Jack Nicklaus won the inaugural tournament in 1977, and Ed Sneed and Dale Douglass shared top honors last year.

There also will be best-ball competition among the foursomes, most of which are composed of one pro, a celebrity and two amateurs.

Proceeds from the two-day tournament will go to several Vail charities. Last year, more than $33,000 was raised.

Former President Gerald R. Ford, the tournament host, will be paired with the 77-year-old Sarazen, actor George C. Scott and former Miami Dolphin safety Dick Anderson.

Among other pros scheduled to play are Dave Stockton, Al Geiberger, Gil Morgan, Miller Barber, Doug Sanders, John Mahaffey, Lee Elder, Tom Kite and J.C. Snead.

Pitt County Evens Series With Snow Hill

SNOW HILL — A pair of Snow Hill errors sent Curtis Spencer racing home with the winning run as Pitt County evened its best-of-three Area I American Legion baseball semifinal series with a 5-4 victory Friday night.

The two teams met last night at Harrington Field to decide who will face Rocky Mount in the area championship series set to begin this week.

Ben Wilson went the distance on the mound for Pitt County and picked up his fifth win against no losses. He held Snow Hill to just four hits and got the win despite seven Pitt County errors.

Ken Johnson was the starter for Snow Hill. He gave up four runs before being replaced in the eighth by Kevin Korpi, the loser, who has been Snow Hill's fireman in the playoffs.

Both teams started scoring early in the game. Pitt County got a run in the top of the first and Snow Hill scored two in the bottom of the frame. Mark Shank walked for Pitt in the first and Will Barrett hit a fielder's choice that got Shank at second. Barrett moved to second on an error and to third on a passed ball. He scored on a sacrifice fly by Wilson.

In the bottom of the frame, Billy McLawhorn walked for Snow Hill and Jimbo Fulghum was hit by a pitch. McLawhorn moved to third on Al Murray's infield out and both runners scored when Philip Gordon doubled.

Each team got one run in the fourth. Curtis Spencer led off the top of the frame with a double for Pitt County and moved to third on a sacrifice by Mark Douglas. Mike Williams and Mike Campbell walked and Shank waited out a base on balls to push Spencer in.

In the bottom of the inning, Jeff Scott doubled and went to third on a wild pitch. He scored on Robin Bowen's base hit.

Snow Hill also scored in the fifth. Gordon reached on a two-base error and was sacrificed to third by Walt Tyndall. He scored on another Pitt County error to make it 4-2.

Pitt County pulled to within one in the sixth. With two out, Williams and Campbell walked. Shank doubled in Williams.

The winners tied things up in the eighth. Mark Douglas led off with a walk and Will Sanderson sacrificed. Douglas moved to third on a passed ball and scored on a single by Campbell.

With one out in the tenth, Spencer singled for Pitt County and moved to third on an error. He scored the winning run on another Snow Hill misplay.

Snow Hill got the tying run in scoring position in the bottom of the frame, but was unable to push it across.

Homers Abound In NL

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Sports Writer

Three Cardinals hit their first homers of the season, and the seven St. Louis batters who homered at Atlanta Stadium Friday night had totaled just 13 homers entering the doubleheader.

Mike Phillips, Bernie Carbo and Jerry Mumphrey all hit their first homers of the season and Lou Brock hit his fifth as the Cards won the first game 95, ending the Braves' winning streak at six games.

In the second game, Garry Templeton, belted a solo homer in the 10th inning, his second of the game, to give St. Louis a 54 victory.

Templeton's homer came off Atlanta's fourth pitcher, Craig Skok, 1-3. George Frazier, 1-1, took the win as the Cards' third pitcher.

Joe Nolan's fourth homer and starter Mickey Mahler's force out gave the Braves a 2-0 lead in the second inning of the nightcap. The Cards cut the lead in the third, and Ken Reitz, Mike Tyson and Templeton all hit solo homers in the fourth to put the Cards ahead 43.

Also in the National League, Houston beat Chicago 4-2, Montreal defeated Los Angeles 6-4, Philadelphia downed San Francisco 6-1, San Diego beat New York 6-5 in 12 innings and Pittsburgh edged Cincinnati 2-1.

Astros 4, Cubs 2

Joe Niekro became the major league's first 13-game winner and the first-place Houston Astros maintained their nine-game lead in the NL West with a victory over the Cubs.

Niekro was touched for a solo home run by Dave Kingman, No.29, before giving way to Joe Sambito who finished and earned his 10th save. Sambito has not allowed an earned run in 22 straight games.

Reds 2, Pirates 1

George Foster, nursing a pulled muscle, came off the bench to deliver a two-out single in the ninth that scored Dan Driessen and gave Cincinnati the victory over Pittsburgh.

With runners on first and second, Cincinnati Manager John McNamara called on Foster, who is tied for the National League lead in runs batted in. He drove a long single off Kent Tekulve to the left field wall.

Phillies 6, Giants 1

Mike Schmidt homered and knocked in three runs to back Nino Espinosa, who pitched his first career victory over San Francisco in six decisions, scattering 11 hits.

Schmidt homered in the seventh, his 24th, and two outs later, Bob Boone connected for his sixth. The Giants have lost four in a row.

Expos 6, Dodgers 4

Dan Schatzeder, who needed last-out relief help from Elias Sosa, stroked a two-run single in the seventh that was the difference in Montreal's victory over Los Angeles.

Schatzeder, 4-1, got his gamewinner off reliever Dennis Lewallyn. The hit proved the margin of victory when Davey Lopes slashed a two-run single off Sosa in the ninth.

Padres 6, Mets 5

A pop-up and a double play saved San Diego when the Mets had runners at first and third and none out in the 11th inning. Dave Winfield opened the 12th with a line drive homer, his 19th this season, that lifted the Padres over the Mets.

Fleming: McEnroe Not 'Bad Boy'

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — John McEnroe, the bad boy of tennis?

"Don't believe it," said big Peter Fleming after he and McEnroe won the Wimbledon men's doubles title.

"In singles, he seems to be getting mad with the umpires and with himself, but he isn't really. And I can honestly say that in all the doubles matches we have played together, he has never got mad with me. He's had cause, sometimes."

McEnroe was defeated in the fourth round of the singles by Tim Gullikson in the biggest upset of the tournament, but he salvaged something in the doubles final Friday. He and Fleming downed Brian Gottfried and Raul Ramirez, the 1976 champions, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2, 6-2.

Fleming said he started badly and never really got going until well into the second set.

"I kept saying, 'I'm letting you down,'" recalled Fleming. "When I said it for about the fifth time, John said to me, 'Now just shut up. We win as a team and we lose as a team.'"

McEnroe went into Wimbledon after criticism by the British press. He was involved in scenes with umpires and spectators in a warm-up tournament at London's Queens Club.

At Wimbledon, the crowd sometimes showed its hostility, cheering for Gullikson all the way in the fourth-round upset.

"But they were quiet different out there on the center court for the doubles final," said McEnroe. "Perhaps they will think of me differently next year. Who wants the kind of crowd I had this year?"

McEnroe and Fleming have been doubles partners for almost two years, but this was their first major title.

"Doubles is fun," McEnroe said. "Sometimes it's more entertaining than singles. But who wants to work hard in doubles when they can earn so much more money in singles?"

McEnroe had planned on playing Bjorn Borg, the defending champion, in Saturday's men's singles final. Instead, Borg's opponent was Roscoe Tanner.

McEnroe planned to fly home to New York before the match began.

"Tanner has a chance because he serves so well," said McEnroe. "Borg doesn't like having to return really well off the serve. He likes playing Jimmy Connors because Connors stays back."

Decision Next Week For Jazz

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A state judge says he'll decide next week whether to forbid the National Basketball Association Jazz to move to Salt Lake City, despite auguments that such an order would cost the league $22 million.

Such a ruling by a Louisiana judge might have little effect on persons and businesses in other states, but at least two players and several minority owners live in New Orleans, attorneys involved in the legal aciton said.

Ignoring an injunction could lead to citations for contempt of court and jail sentences. However, any citations would almost certainly be appealed through state and federal courts, the lawyers said.

The Jazz have already moved to Salt Lake City, hired a general manager and coach and started a season ticket drive. Training camp is scheduled to start, and seats are being assigned to season ticket holders.

However, $78 million worth of suits were filed this week aimed at making the Jazz return to New Orleans.

The state, which owns the Superdome, and Hyatt Management Corp., which runs the $163 million Superdome, asked for $60 million in an anti-trust suit. The city asks for $18 million, with $10 million of that as payment for damage to the city's reputation and $8 million for lost revenues.

The city also said the Jazz owes $38,000 in back taxes.

An order forbidding the team to move was issued Friday, but it was almost immediately withdrawn.

U.S. Jumper Disqualified, Then Reinstated In Pan Am

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — In an unexpected development, American teenager Carl Lewis, who had arrived three minutes late for Saturday's long jump trials of the Pan American Games and was informed he would be unable to compete in the evening final, was given a reprieve.

The Jury of Appeals for track and field, after a long meeting, decided to reinstate the 17-year-old Lewis and said it would invite three other long jumpers, who had not even shown up for the trials, to participate in the final.

Lewis' case was taken to the Jury of Appeals by Bob Kane, U.S. Olympic Committee president.

"I don't see how they couldn't okay it," said Jim Bush, the delighted head coach of the American men's team. "They sent the wrong information to us. They sent us a list of entries that said the long jump would start at 7 p.m. So we had to assume that everyone was in the final."

The reinstatement of Lewis was an important boost to the American team, which had been favored to dominate track and field but was rapidly fading.

The development was in direct opposition to a similar incident at the 1972 Olympics, when two American sprinters arrived late for their second-round heats and were disqualified.

Prior to the long jump trials, it was disclosed that the American's other entrant in the event, Larry Myricks of Jackson, Miss., the 1979 NCAA Division I and II champion and the National AAU titleholder, had been withdrawn because of a foot injury suffered June 29.

Friday, the Pan Am technical committee rejected a request by the American team to replace discus thrower Ken Stadel of Cupertino, Calif., and 400-meter intermediate hurdler Quentin Wheeler of Long Branch,N.J., both of whom are injured and did not make the trip to San Juan.

In addition, seven AAU champions, who automatically had qualified for the Pan Am team, decided to skip the Games for various reasons. They were James Sanford (100), Steve Scott (1,500), Craig Virgin (10,000), Edwin Moses (400 hurdles), Mike Tully (pole vault), Francie Larrieu (women's 1,500) and Kate Schmidt (women' javelin).

Saturday's long jump trials were scheduled for 10 a.m. Lewis, the national prep school record holder from Willingboro, N.J., who had not been properly advised by the American team coaches that the trials were being held, arrived at 10:03. Three other jumpers — Ron Chambers of Jamaica, Adolfo Marin of Paraguay and Dennis Trott of Bermuda — failed to show up at all.

"The technical committee for track and field had a meeting two days ago (Thursday) and passed out sheets saying there would be a long jump final at 7 p.m. (Saturday) with all 15 of the entered jumpers," explained Bob Paul, spokesman for the American Pan Am team. "We never got word that there would be trials.

"I picked up a start sheet last night (Friday) and they had the trials on there," added Paul. "Ted Haydon, our (track and field) manager, was told at 9:15 a.m. (Saturday) by the Canadian team, which lives next door to us (at the Pan Am Village) there would be classifications (in the long jump).

"He then put Lewis in a car with Mel Rosen, an assistant coach, and rushed him over to the stadium. They got there just three minutes late. But by 10 o'clock, they (the officials) had counted heads, and when there were only 10 long jumpers, there was no need for the classifications since 12 usually go into the final, and the trials were canceled. With Lewis, they would still have had only 11."

In the 1972 Olympics at Munich, American sprinters Eddie Hart and Rey Robinson were given an incorrect starting time and failed to show up for the start of their second-round heats and both were disqualified.

Little League

Lions 17, First Federal 12

The North State champion Lions captured the Greenville Little League championship Friday by defeating First Federal 17-12 in the second game of a best-of-three series.

The Lions trailed only once, early in the game, and salted the win away with five runs in the fifth inning. Steven Garrett started things off in the fifth with a walk and Lindsey Grimes singled. Tom Moye got a base hit and Mike Taylor singled. Patrick rand walked and scored the final run.

Tony Taylor was the winning pitcher and Ricky Outlaw was the loser. Tony Taylor had two home runs for the Lions.

Greenville Stars Win

BAYBORO — Greenville's Babe Ruth All-Stars moved into the championship game of the area tournament Friday by defeating Pitt County 2-1.

Greenville will play the winner of Saturday's Pitt County-Washington game for the championship of the double elimination event today. Two games will be played if Greenville loses the first game.

Roger Williams hurled the victory Friday night and scored the winning run in the third inning. Gordon Douglas scored for Greenville in the second. Pitt County's lone run came in the sixth. Williams struck out 16 batters in the seven-inning game.

Douglas was the leading hitter, going 2-4.

Recreation Tennis

The Greenville Recreation Department's Junior Novice Tennis League began play Friday with Aldridge and Southerland defeating Grant Buick 36-35 and Book Barn topping Greenville Tennis Club 42-29.

Horton Hit By Pitch, Pushes In Winning Run

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

Dick Drago and the Boston Red Sox picked on the wrong guys — Willie Horton and the Seattle Mariners.

With the bases loaded in the bottom of the sixth inning and the scored tied 3-3 with two out, Horton, Seattle's designated hitter, was hit on the hand by a pitch from Red Sox reliever Dick Drago.

It forced in the tie-breaking run, but sent Horton to the mound.

After being hit, Horton raced to the mound where he tackled Drago. The Boston and Seattle benches emptied and about 60 players and coaches clustered around the two players. Horton was ejected and taken to a hospital for precautionary X-rays.

"With the count 0-2 and the bases loaded, I certainly didn't want to hit him." Drago said. "That turned out to be the winning run."

Seattle went on to score another run and beat Boston 5-3.

Yankees 4-3, A's 3-0

Tigers 7-5, Brewers 4-4

Jason Thompson belted a two-run homer in the nightcap in powering Detroit over Milwaukee as the Tigers swept a double-header from the Brewers. The Tigers won the first game on a two-run single by Lance Parrish that sparked a four-run eighth inning.

Thompson drove in four runs with four hits and scored three times in the double-header.

Indians 6, Twins 5

Mike Hargrove drove home two runs, including the eventual game-winner, and Sid Monge hurled 21-3 innings of scoreless relief to give Cleveland its victory over Minnesota.

White Sox 4, Royals 1

Wayne Nordhagen slammed a solo home run and Alan Bannister singled twice to pace Chicago over Kansas City. It was the staggering Royals' seventh straight loss, the longest losing streak since 1974 for the threetime defending AL West champions.

Angels 7, Orioles 3

Don Baylor slammed two home runs and Bobby Grich added a two-run shot to lead California over the Baltimore Orioles and into a one-half game lead in the AL West.

Grich smacked his 18th home run of the season in the seventh off Steve Stone, 6-7. Baylor added his 21st home run of the season.

Blue Jays 5, Rangers 1

A three-run homer by Rick Cerone powered Toronto past Texas. Cerone's homer followed Roy Howell's double and John Mayberry's walk in the fourth.

Cowboys Win

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — This Caribbean island might seem like a strange setting for a cowboy gold rush, but swimmers Cheyenne Vassallo and Rowdy Gaines have managed the trick.

Vassallo, whose mother nicknamed him for the Cheyenne TV character played by Clint Walker, won his second event and set a world record Friday night as the United States increased its swimming superiority and sent its gold medal splash count to 20 in 21 races at the Pan American Games.

Gaines, whose parents nicknamed him for the Rowdy Yates character once played by Clint Eastwood, captured his third gold by swimming the anchor leg of the Americans' winning 800-meter freestyle relay.

Vassallo, whose family now lives in Mission Viejo, Calif. is a Puerto Rican native who has become the local hero of the Games.

SEVERAL ANIMAL PROTECTION organizations are threatening to sue the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service to bring an end to September dove hunting. The organizations want the opening of dove season moved back to Oct. 15.

Presently, 32 states have open seasons on mourning doves, which are the nation's number one game bird. All but one of those states, including North Carolina, have opening day in September. In the other 18 states, doves are considered songbirds and cannot be hunted.

The basis for the threatened legal action is the amount of dove nesting activity in September and early October. The animal protection groups claim a significant portion of nesting occurs during this period and hunting should therefore not be permitted at that time.

However, Carl Betsill, a bioligist for the N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission, said that only about 10 per cent of North Carolina's doves are reared between Sept. 1 and Oct. 15. Betsill is the state's primary investigator in a cooperative mourning dove nesting study initiated by the Fish and Wildlife Service with 23 participating states.

"September dove hunting has been legal under International treaties since 1918; and while previous studies have been limited in number, there is no indication that dove populations have been hurt," he said.

"However, the groups considering the legal action are not citing overall population decline as the problem, but the practice of allowing hunting during a period of active nesting. Their ultimate goal is to stop hunting completely, but they are taking a step-by-step approach, and this is the first step," Betsill added.

If it is found that September hunting is causing a decline in total dove populations, Betsill said his agency will be the first to advocate a change in the regulations. The study now underway will attempt to find how much nesting and rearing of young actually occurs during September. Some states are comparing hunted and non-hunted dove populations to try to determine if there is a difference in their nesting seasons and success.

"If the results of the study are not convincing to the Federal judge in Washington, D.C. and suit is brought to end September dove hunting, it would be a tremendous loss to the Wildlife Resources Commission and to the state's sportsmen," according to Betsill.

"We know from banding studies that 77 per cent of those doves which are killed in North Carolina are taken during these first six weeks of the season. This is the period when the largest concentrations of the birds are in the state. And we know that many sportsmen buy their hunting licenses just to hunt doves. It is by far the most popular game bird in North Carolina and in the country."

Curring U.S. mourning dove populations are estimated to be 500 million, with approximately 49 million birds harvested annually.

Cubans Come To Life

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — The Cubans, not sleeping but rather waiting their turn, came to life Friday in the VIII Pan American Games, vaulting into second place in the gold medal standings, and turning a rout into something faintly resembling a race.

Until Friday the Cubans had accumulated only 11 gold medals. By Friday night they had more than doubled that total and put Canada well behind in third. With 15 golds, the best single day for any country through the first five days of these Games, the Cubans ran their total golds to 26, with 47 medals overall.

The United States had what could have been termed an "off day" since U.S. swimmers lost their first event in 21 so far and won only one gold medal outside of the El Escambron pool. They had a total of 41 golds and 93 total medals.

Four probable U.S. golds in archery, which completed action Friday, were held up at least temporarily until protests could be resolved.

U.S. weaknesses in gymnastics showed as only Dave Muenz, with a silver in horizontal bars, collected any medal at all while the Cubans garnered six golds and 11 medals overall from the competition.

The Cubans also swept all six golds in weightlifting, and both golds in shooting, which until now has been totally a U.S. province.

The swimming event the Americans lost was the women's 200-meter breaststroke, where Canadians Anne Gagnon and Joanne Bedard finished 1-2. The best U.S. swimmers in the event, Tracy Caulkins and Tami Paumier, sat the race out in favor of a couple of lesser known teammates, Patty Spees of Oakland, Calif., who won the bronze, and Renee Laravie of Dayton, Ohio who was fourth.

Unquestionably the premiere performance of the night was turned in by Puerto Rican native Jesse Vassallo of Mission Viejo, Calif. who posted a world record of 2 minutes, 3.29 seconds and beat Canadian Graham Smith, the former world record holder by three seconds in the 200-meter medley.

Cynthia Woodhead of Riverside, Calif. kept alive her hopes for becoming the first and possibly only U.S. athlete to take home five gold medals with her runaway victory over Caulkins of Nashville, Tenn. in the 400-meter freestyle.

Rowdy Gaines of Winter Park, Fla. captured his third gold Friday with the anchor leg of the 800-meter freestyle relay team. Another third-time gold winner was Linda Jezek of Los Altos, Calif. in the 200-meter backstroke.

A third gold also went to Tom Peterson of Tacoma, Wash. who won a disputed 20,000-meter roller skating marathon through town.

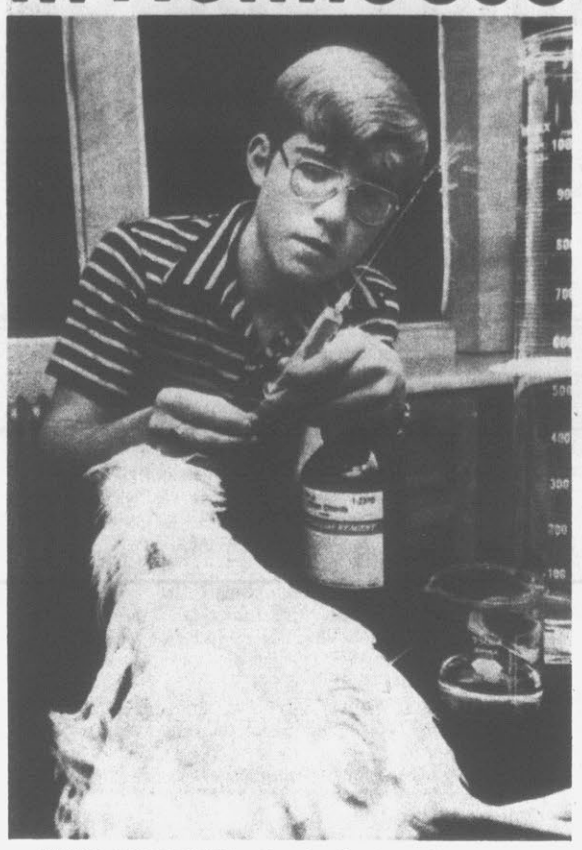
No Raccoons In Henhouse



TODD HOFFMAN, 14, checks hypodermic syringe before injecting chemical into body of a dead chicken. The young scientist has come up with a way to use taste aversion to keep raccoons from eating chickens. (UPI Photo)

By B.J. McFARLAND

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Chicken farmers rejoice.

A 14-year-old boy has found a way to keep raccoons from killing chickens, and he is going to reap an international reward this summer for his research.

The youngster is Todd E. Hoffman, a freshman at Butte Falls High School, which has but 30 students, in southern Oregon, about 30 miles northeast of Medford.

For as long as humans have grown chickens, the only ways they found to cope with chicken-killing raccoons is either with guns, poison, or traps.

But young Hoffman is of a scientific bent. He's come up with a way to use taste aversion to keep raccoons from eating chickens.

Hoffman injected a chemical that irritates stomach lining into the bodies of dead chickens that were then left for raccoons to eat along their wooded trails. After four days of taste aversion observations, he staked out live chickens in the same places. The raccoons carefully avoided those chickens.

"Before the taste aversion test experience, the raccoons sought out chickens to eat. But the taste aversion was so strong afterwards that the raccoons erased them from their shopping list," young Hoffman said in his research paper.

"Taste aversion condition — as a substitute for killing in predator control — had never been done with raccoons before," said Lowell Nicolaus, Hoffman's high school science teacher.

"Todd was able to witness the behavior of the same animals before, during and after the taste aversion process. Aversion of raccoons was so complete that it appears their movements may be conditioned, or manipulated. This certainly is better than killing the predators and removing them from the total ecological system."

The young scientist staked out live chickens again this spring as a follow-up. He found the taste aversion remained, and he will make more studies next fall.

"Todd's scientific studies are the first of their kind," Nicolaus said.

"Other studies have been done under controlled laboratory conditions, which are much different than those done in the out-of-doors. Todd spent many cold and sleepless nights making observations and documenting his field discoveries on film."

Hoffman's research project won top honors in the biological science division in the national Junior Science and Humanities Symposium at West Point, and this summer he will become the first American high school freshman to participate in the London International Youth Science Fortnight.

U.S. Population Growing Older

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the United States, the number of people 100 years or older jumped 43 percent between 1974 and 1978, according to the American Council of Life Insurance.

There were 8,317 centenarians in 1974, according to Social Security Administration statistics, but this group increased to 11,922 by 1978.

The council says 54 persons in every 10,000 will live to 100 while 279 in 10,000 will survive to age 95. Women, it adds, seem to have a better chance of living to 100, as 7 out of 10 centenarians today are women.

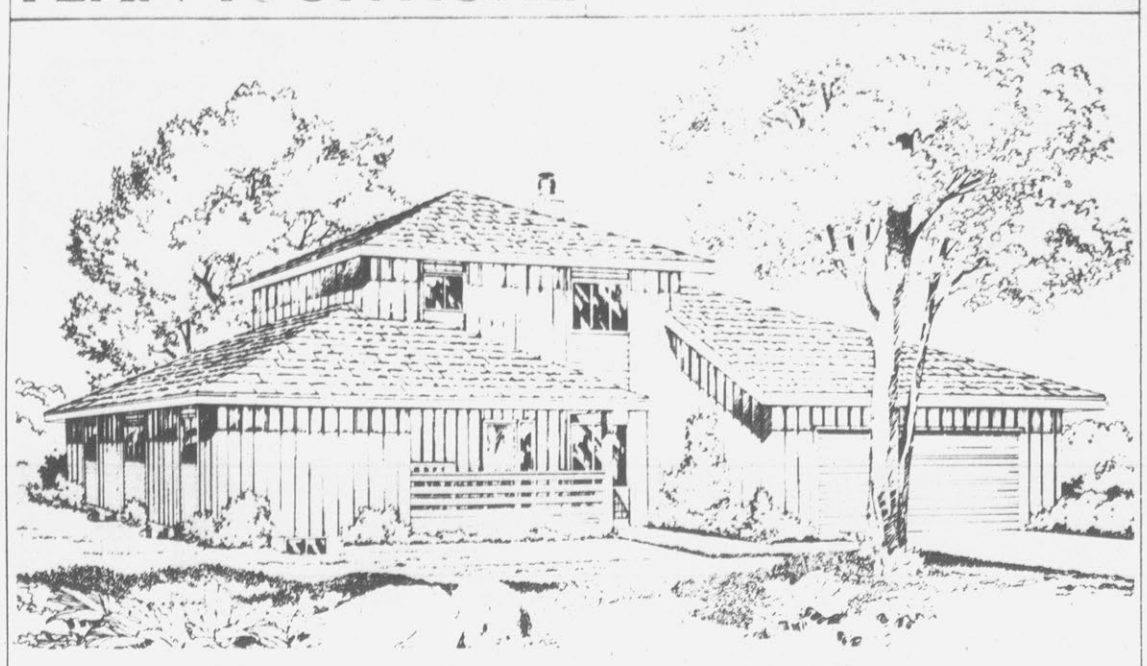
The Orin



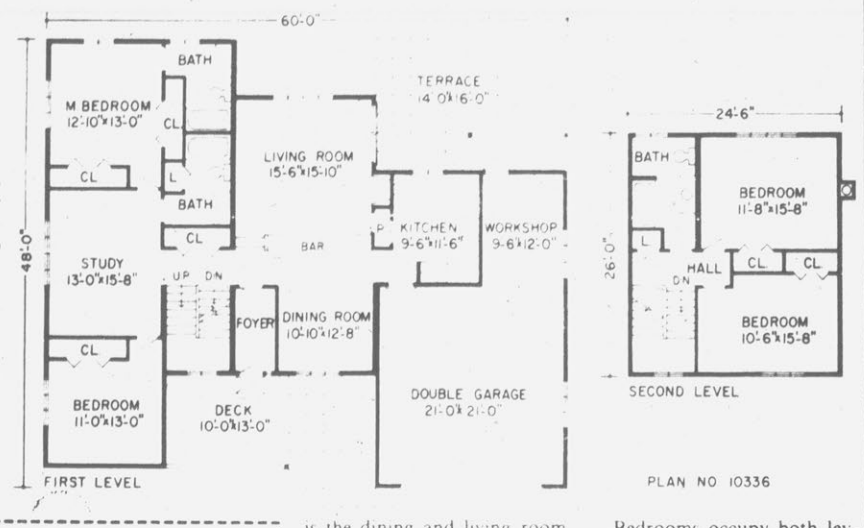
Roomy Plan Suits Large Family

By Jerry Bishop

Four expansive bedrooms, a study, and three full baths are among the features that suit the Orin, a contemporary plan, to the needs of a large family.

In addition, large and efficient living areas are geared for entertaining, and, for craftsman or hobbyist, a workshop occupies more than 100 sq. ft. at rear of the garage.

Exterior lines show a two story center section winged by bedrooms on one side, garage on the other. To enter, visitors traverse the front deck into an elegant foyer. The foyer can be closed off from living areas, thereby reducing drafts and conserving energy.



PLAN NO 10336

Directly ahead of the foyer is the dining and living room area, an expansive area divided by a long bar. A natural for entertaining, the area also supplies family activity space. A family or recreation room is a possibility for the basement level.

Particularly well-planned is the U-shaped kitchen. It overlooks the terrace, features a pantry, and opens directly to the garage, a boon when unloading groceries from the car. Besides offering woodworking or hobby space, the workshop opens to the rear terrace, site of summer living.

Bedrooms occupy both levels. On the first floor, master bedroom with private bath, adjoining study, and another bedroom are buffered from living area noises by closets and hallways. Upstairs, two large bedrooms, a bath, and linen closet are shown. If desired, the upper level may be left unfinished until needed.

Oriental Style Decor Is Again Becoming Popular

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Like short skirts, small cars and the seven-year itch, Oriental-style decor tends to come back into fashion at regular intervals.

It's not surprising that with China the hot tourist spot and Oriental cooking at the top of public interest, that Oriental decor should once again be in demand.

At present, there are numerous examples of Oriental design to be seen in the marketplace. Oriental merchandise is available in most categories of home furnishings products, including upholstery fabrics, furniture, lamps, dinnerware, wallpaper, sheets and floor coverings, to name several.

"Americans are responding to the serenity and peacefulness that have always characterized Oriental homes," according to Margaret Clayton, a designer for Drexel Heritage Furnishings, Inc.

"In Oriental cultures, there is a rule governing almost everything from the structure of the family to the way tea is poured. And the two primary rules in home decorating are simplicity and balance."

The new Oriental furniture uses many design motifs that have been classic for centuries, according to Ms. Clayton. These include, for example, carved details derived from nature, bamboo-like turnings on tables and chairs, and lacquered, pictoral decorations on furniture, known as chinoiserie.

To decorate a room in the Oriental manner, everything does not have to be from the East. Instead, using a few or even one piece of furniture plus appropriate accessories such as porcelain vases or Oriental wall coverings, upholstery fabric or drapery, one can convey a sense of the period.

Another method is to employ the Eastern principle of balance and symmetry in the arrangement of furniture.

Techniques for doing this include pairing objects in a formal, balanced fashion which is the traditional Oriental manner.

"Open shelf units can stand side by side or they can flank another piece of furniture or a doorway. An occasional table with a lamp and floral arrangement can be matched by another across the room. Prominent pieces of furniture can be placed at right angles to one another, parallel to the walls," she said.

In traditional Chinese homes in the past, a very formal and vastly different set of rules was used to govern furniture arrangement, according to Margaret Medley, an English authority.

"On formal occasions, the place of honor in any room was the one furthest from the door and to the left of the host," she explains in an article on the subject in the book, "World Furniture."

Furniture was set against the walls or at strict right angles to the walls. It was never slanted out or carelessly grouped in the center of the room.

The Chinese home had no formal dining room. Instead, at mealtimes, a round or square table seating no more than eight or 10 was brought into whatever room it was decided to eat in. It was a point of etiquette that everyone at the table should be able to reach with chopsticks the main dishes placed in the center of the table.

The low k'ang table, recognized as the forerunner to today's cocktail table, was used as a writing platform for a person seated or perhaps even reclining on the floor.

The traditional ways of the Orient are not always practical in an American home of the 20th century. But the use of Oriental objects and design techniques to bring a sense of order and serenity is very much a part of current decorating methods.

GARDEN CLINIC

N.C. State University Answers Timely Gardening Questions

Q. Why do the buds on my African violets turn brown and fall off? The new leaves are also becoming stunted. (Mrs. H.Y., Elkin)

A. Your African violets are infested with cyclamen mites. Cyclamen mites are so small that they are able to penetrate into the developing buds and feed there. Cyclamen mites have toxic substances in their saliva which cause distorted plant growth. Bud death causes heavily, infested plants to turn into vegetables! Kelthane, a miticide available at most plant stores, can be used for control. Treat at least twice, seven days apart. Also effective is a hot water dip. Keep water at 110 degrees, emerge pot and all for 15 minutes. (James R. Baker, extension entomologist)

Q. English ivy is growing 40 feet up an oak tree in my yard. How is the best way to get rid of it? (J.W., Tarboro)

A. Cut the main stem os the ivy at groud level. Let it die and then remove from the tree. Ivy, by the way, will not kill the oak. (Kim Powell, extension landscape horticulturist)

Q. How do I get rid of multiflora rose? (C.G., Hickory)

A. If the multiflora rose is growing in non-cropland areas, you can spray it between Aug. 1 and Sept. 15 with Krenite. Roundup, another herbicide, can also be used in non-cropland areas, but it should have been used before July 1. Two chemicals are also available for controlling multiflora rose in pastures, but they both should have been used prior to July 1, also. These chemicals are Banvel, a spray and Tordon 10K, which comes in pellets. Tordon 10K can be thrown into a multiflora rose clump, where it is absorbed by the roots. Read and follow label directions carefully in using these chemicals. (W.M. Lewis, extension weeds specialist)

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

If Sherlock Holmes saw a series of gouges along the wooden sides of a window sash and the adjoining moulding, he would have deduced correctly that someone had used a screwdriver blade to loosen a stuck window.

You can avoid such ugly and conspicuous marks on your windows by not using a screwdriver for the purpose of springing them loose. A hammer — yes, if used properly. A thin-edged chisel, yes — if you handle it very carefully. A putty knife — yes, and the most likely tool for the unsticking procedure, especially because it is so readily available.

Why not a screwdriver? Because the blade is a bit too thick to get between the sash and the moulding without being forced into place, an act that almost certainly will mar the wood.

Sometimes a stuck window can be loosened by placing a block of wood in the groove above the lower sash of a double hung window and tapping it with a hammer. The block of wood must fit snugly into the channel so that, when it is tapped, it tends to expand the frame and free the window.

If that doesn't work, use the same block of wood to place against the vertical parts of the sash and tap it with a hammer as you move it up and down. In any action of this kind — where tapping with a hammer is a part of the method — work with deliberate caution so that you don't crack the pane.

If it appears likely that hardened paint in the channels is causing the trouble, then the use of the putty knife as the first step is recommended. Insert the blade of this tool between the sash and the edge of the moulding. Gently move the knife up and down, the purpose being to break the paint seal. Work slowly and carefully, trying the window now and then to see whether it has worked loose. Never use excessive force.

After you have placed the putty knife in two or three locations and broken the seals at those points, you will be able to tell exactly where the remaining trouble spots are and you can go to work on them with the knife.

Occasionally, it may be necessary to work on the window from the outside. In that event, the putty knife or any tool with a flat, sturdy blade should be inserted between the bottom of the sash and the top of the sill and rocked gently. Here again, it will be evident after a few efforts where the remaining stuck places are.

What do you do if all these attempts fail? Then you will have to remove the sash from the window frame. Take off the stop mouldings on the inside. Use a chisel or putty knife, prying off te mouldings carefully so that they can be renailed later. Remove the sash from the channels, get rid of all dirt and stuck paint and, if required, sand the inner face of the sash frame lightly.

When the window is in working order again, lubricate the channels or grooves and repeat the process at least once a year.

Homesteads® - Helping Build America

A Flourishing Money Market In Marxism

By BARRY SHLACHTER
Associated Press Writer

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Down the street from Kabul's largest mosque and through an orange-painted entranceway to a courtyard with three stories of shops, lies a market that specializes in money.

"You name it — dollars, deutschemarks, Swiss francs or yen — we have it," said the man who owns the premises, 84-year-old Shah Zadah Abdullah Ariz.

"It doesn't matter what kind of money you want, or how much," he went on, "you can get it in a half hour."

What makes the Saray Shah Zadah Bazaar unusual, aside from the quick service, is that it's functioning at all.

The money bazaar stands as a citadel of blatant capitalism in Afghanistan, where Marxist rulers are keen to transform the backward, landlocked country into a showcase "dictatorship of workers, peasants and other toilers."

Regular commercial banks were state-run even before last year's coup brought President Nur Mohammad Taraki to power. Some enterprises have since been nationalized and foreign interests — including five U.S.-owned trading companies — expelled.

Asian and Western diplomats, many of whom frequent the bazaar as do their Soviet-bloc counterparts, say Taraki's otherwise doctrinaire regime can't yet afford to close it.

The economy would stagnate further and the Afghani, the national currency, could collapse if the bazaar were shuttered, they predicted.

The weather-beaten bazaar, which appears centuries older than its 30 years, plays a role in the Afghan economy. It provides a no-questions-asked money exchange for buyers and sellers who might be unable to do business if they were hamstrung by the government regulations prevailing in this part of the world.

Million-dollar deals are not uncommon, according to sources who should know.

"We have no intention of interfering," the Afghan leader told a news conference. "The capitalists here are all 'national capitalists.'

"The free exchange of money is normal, natural and necessary for the commercial life of the country."

Several dealers said they had a choice of buying portraits or closing up.

The exchange serves not only Kabul but much of the region. On a given day, it is not unusual to see an Arab ambassador or agents of Indian and Pakistani businessmen, who face currency restrictions at home, dealing in the bazaar.

The exchange also provides the cash flow for of one of Afghanistan's top growth industries, re-export — less politely known as smuggling.

Major items in demand for "re-export" to neighboring countries are rayon yarn, razor blades, television sets and tires, and the volume is quite large.

Early Pregnancy Class Slated

Pitt Community College will offer a course entitled, "Early Pregnancy Classes," which will cover such areas as the physical and emotional changes of pregnancy, understanding prenatal care, and the awareness of nutrition and drug use during pregnancy, as well as an introduction to community resources.

There will be two sessions, with the first one to begin Tuesday, July 10, at the Pitt County Health Department from 7-10 p.m. Registration fee will be $5.

Please call the Continuing Education Division to preregister, 756-3130, extension 238.

Energy Labels On The Horizon

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — By summer, many home appliances will have energy labels that estimate a year's operating cost.

This and other helpful energy usage information on the labels should convince consumers a slightly more expensive model can sometimes be a more economical purchase, says Janet Wilson, an extension consumer education specialist at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

By the middle of next year, such labeling will be required on room and central air conditioners, dishwashers, refrigerators and refrigerator-freezers, freezers, clothes washers and dryers, television sets, water heaters, humidifiers and dehumidifiers, ranges, furnaces and other home heating equipment.

ZENIAN SHOW

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — An exhibition of some 50 paintings and drawings by artist Paul Zenian will be on display through July 25 at the Rackham Galleries on the University of Michigan campus.

No Place In Home For Exotic Pets

By FRED FERGUSON

NEW YORK (UPI) — Want an exotic pet? Like a monkey, say, or a snake or a gorilla?

Forget it, says Mary Bloom. She keeps her own exotic pet — a skunk, but devotes much of her life to campaigning against the whole exotic pet business.

"Exotic pets have no business in the home," she says.

Mary is exotic animal consultant for the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty of Animals. For about 12 years now, she has been "helping to educate people about exotic pets" such as mice, ferrets, pigs, roosters, baby robins, rabbits, bobcats, seagulls, wolves, lions — you name it.

"Actually, all of my efforts are centered on asking people not to have them," she says.

"When I call other animal organizations in other cities to place animals, very often they say, 'No, I can't help you. We have one of ours to find a home for.'

Skunks

Skunks may be one of the best examples of exotic pets that should not be kept as pets.

"I get about 6 calls a month from people trying to get rid of them in winter and 13 a month in summer," she says.

"There are newspaper advertisements by skunk farms who breed them in the midwest. The ads say they're just like cats. There are books on how to raise and train them. They declare they're just like pets.

"It's not true. Skunks are natural diggers in the wild. Domesticated, they dig up carpets. You can't return them to the wild because you've taken away their natural defense — removed their glands, the odor that defends them."

So, she says, people turn them out. "They can't tolerate them."

That's how she got involved with skunks. She was working in the computer industry but had a great love of animals. She and a woman friend formed a skunk club to take in and care for the castaways. Then a city ordinance outlawed owning skunks. The club went underground, held secret meetings — partly to advise prospective owners against having them. But finally, she says, "We disbanded."

She has kept her skunk though; has had it for seven years. So she speaks from personal experience.

"At most, it is awake one hour a day. And it hibernates in winter. It is not a social animal. People want pets for company. Skunks are no company."

Although the scent glands are removed, she says skunks "always do have an odor."

One trouble with such pets: What do you do with them when you go away? That's when they come to the venerable ASPCA. Founded in 1866, it has five animal shelters here and has inspired more than 600 similar SPCAs coast to coast.

Pythons and garter snakes

"Yesterday, on my answering machine, there was a man wanting to board a python for a month.

"Another man called. He had brought a garter snake in from the country where his child found it. He put it in the bathtub. It was out in five minutes and somewhere loose in the house in Brooklyn. The animal is harmless; but his wife is deathly afraid of snakes. He was almost frantic.

"That animal is going to die. It is just going to go into a wall and die." They are the words of an animal lover who feels that the death of the creature is a crueler thing that the fear of the wife.

Mary is plainly less humanitarian (that may not be the right word) in her feelings toward pet shop owners and other purveyors of exotic pets. She notes some deal underhandedly in endangered species and many skirt the laws, morally if not legally in selling animals that are banned in some areas.

Monkeys

"There was this older woman in the Bronx with a stump-tailed Macaque. Her children bought the monkey for her for companionship. She raised it like a son. When it started to mature the family couldn't tolerate its behavior. It got loose from its chain. The police were called and had it sedated because it got excited. The family ordered it killed and then wanted it stuffed by a taxidermist.

"Fortunately, the board of health found it had never been tested for tuberculosis — they can be a TB carrier, one of the problems with primates — and refused permission for it to be stuffed."

She said that particular species is on the threatened list and that the male, if left in the wild, might have helped propagate the species. It was the second Macaque she was called about within a month.

Wolves

People who keep wolves for pets are a growing problem. She believes owners keep them for a a macho image.

"They're getting wolves and hybrids through farms in Pennsylvania, Washington and the Midwest. They're being advertised as ideal pets, excellent and loyal guards. They sell for $250 to $500."

Although outlawed in some areas such as New York, wolves are represented as "puppies" when shipped. Air lines and shipping agents don't know the difference.

Contrary to their image, she says wolves are normally gentle.

Trouble is, she says, "They are potentially very dangerous. If you stress any wild animal, it is going to react to try to protect itself.

Ferrets and other animals

Ferrets resemble a weasel or a mink. They are domesticated for research in this country and have been nicknamed land otters.

"Many people are buying them as pets but keeping them is not as easy as it is presented," she says.

She has been called about a goose astray on Staten Island, a pig tied to a parking meter in Queens, a rooster strolling the sidewalks of Manhattan, birds suffering from oil spills, baby robins in spring. After Easter, there are rabbits no one wants anymore. In many cases, she manages to find new owners for them, often in the country. The rooster went to Pound Ridge, N.Y.

One of her pet peeves is school teachers who keep animals for classroom instruction during the school year, then dump them on the ASPCA instead of making arrangements to care for them. They could instead borrow unwanted pets from the animal shelter and receive assistance in their proper care.

Business Notes

ATTENDED SEMINAR

Ginger Hackett, Realtor, of Ginger Hackett Realtors here, recently returned from Arlington, Va. where she attended a four-day course on marketing management, sponsored by the Realtors National Marketing Institute.

The purpose of the course was to provide skills in effective management programs, market analysis, advertising, public relations, and sales promotions. The session was attended by 75 Realtors from throughout the nation.

EARLY RETIREMENT

Marjorie W. Avery has elected to take early retirement from Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. in Greenville, the bank announced.

Wachovia reported that Mrs. Avery joined Guaranty Bank and Trust Co. in 1958 as a switchboard operator and for 21 years has been the voice of Wachovia on the bank's main office telephone system.

A native of Greenville, she is married to Mitchell S. Avery and they have two children.

Mrs. Avery was guest of honor at a reception in the bank's board room.

EARNED CERTIFICATE

The Procter & Gamble Co. plant of Greenville was one five North Carolina firms receiving certificates of honor from the Chemical Manufacturers Association for the safe completion of 1978 operations.

The certificates of honor were awarded for completing the year without a death or injury involving days away from work or days of restricted activity.

The Kinston Du Pont plant was one of 13 firms awarded certificates of achievement for having completed the calendar year without a death or injury involving days away from work.

NEW FIRM OPENS

Franklin M. Brown announced the opening of Brown Plumbing Co., specializing in commercial and residential plumbing installation and repairs.

Brown, a Greenville native with 32 years of plumbing experience, will manage the firm, it was noted.

Brown Plumbing Co., located on Highway 264 East, is a division of J. H. Hudson Inc.

PURCHASE COMPLETED

Eaton Corp. and LRC Inc. of Riverton, Wy. announced that Eaton has completed its acquisition of LRC for approximately $8.4 million. In the cash transaction, Eaton will pay $4.50 for each of LRC's 1,642,400 shares outstanding and $3 for each of LRC's 333,582 warrants.

Eaton said that LRC, which designs and manufactures matrix-impact printers and printer related subsystems, would continue to operate in its present 40,000 square foot plant in Riverton, utilizing its existing staff of some 130 employees. In fiscal 1979, LRC had sales of some $5.8 million.

Eaton is a manufacturer of advanced technology products serving worldwide transportation and industrial markets. The company has a plant in Greenville.

VISITED HOME OFFICES

Phil Flowers, president of East Coast Roofing & Metals Inc. of Greenville, returned recently from a trip to Cologne, West Germany where he visited the home offices of Dynamit Nobel Inc., an international manufacturing firm.

Flowers was one of eight U.S. contractors invited by the firm to tour the manufacturing facilities at Troisdorf and inspect some of the older installations of a roofing product developed by the company.

The week-long trip included a visit to several contracting firms in the Cologne-Bonn area and a meeting with the German Association of Roofing Contractors.

VOLUME OVER $1.6 BILLION

A survey conducted by the National Commercial Finance Conference indicated that North Carolina companies are factoring $1.6 billion of their accounts receivable annually with factoring organizations.

North Carolina, according to NCFC, ranked second only to the $4.34 billion posted by New York State.

The survey also revealed that North Carolina companies had in excess of $123 million in loans outstanding with commercial finance lenders.

BANK PROMOTION

The board of directors of Branch Banking and Trust Co. promoted H. Wright Uzzell Jr. to assistant cashier of the Charlotte office, the bank announced.

Uzzell joined the bank's management development program in Wilson in 1977 and was assigned to the Greenville office as a business loan officer the following year.

A graduate of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, he is married to the former Barbara Atkinson of Charlotte.

NEW ASSOCIATE

Ginger Hackett announced that Greg Kennedy has joined Ginger Hackett Realtors here as an associate.

Kennedy has been a resident of the Greenville area for three years and is a member of the faculty at North Pitt High School. He resides with his wife in Ragland Acres.

ATTENDED CONVENTION

Lewis Forrest, co-owner of The Gathering Place Restaurant, and his wife, Linda, recently attended the National Restaurant Association Show and Convention in Chicago.

They were guests at the annual Diplomates Brunch, sponsored by the National Institute for the Foodservice Industry, and attended the opening session of the convention addressed by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

The restaurant show, the largest foodservice exposition in the world, was attended by more than 83,000 restaurateurs.

ASSISTANT VICE PRESIDENTS

William D. Mitchum Jr., vice president and city executive of Branch Banking and Trust Co. here, announced that the board of directors promoted Ollie Nicholson Bowen and Carl E. Brown Jr. to assistant vice president of the Greenville office.

Mrs. Bowen graduated from Williamston High School and joined the Williamston office in 1965. She performed a variety of teller and clerical duties before being assigned to Greenville's Business Loan Department in 1974. She was named operations officer two years later.

Brown joined the Air Force following graduation from Durham High School. After receiving his discharge, he attended East Carolina University and earned a degree in business administration. Brown joined the bank's management development program in Wilson in 1976 and was assigned to Greenville as a business loan officer last September.

NEW DIRECTOR

Roy Taylor of Greenville was named to the board of directors of the N.C. Merchants Association recently. The association involves some 6,000 retail outlets in the state.

NAMED MANAGER

Gene Taylor, vice president and city executive here for North Carolina National Bank, announced that Peggy Christopher, assistant cashier, has been named manager of NCNB's East End office.

A Greenville native, the new manager joined NCNB in 1968 and formerly managed the bank's West End office.

Replacing Mrs. Christopher as manager of the West End office will be Dennis A. Nichols, Taylor reported. Nichols, also a Greenville native, is a graduate of East Carolina University and has been associated with NCNB since 1976.

No Significant Inflation Letup Seen

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite the prospect of a slowdown in economic activity, most Wall Street analysts see little chance of a significant letup in inflation any time soon.

For one thing, they point out, the steep increases posted recently in world oil prices will contribute heavily to inflationary pressures in the months ahead, no matter what else is going on in the economy.

"The gasoline lines may become a thing of the past, but the full impact of the oil price increases is yet to be felt," said Bernard Schoenfeld in a commentary for New York's Irving Trust Co.

"Oil imports are likely to rise from $40 billion last year to an annual rate of $60 billion (or more) by yearend," he said.

Henry Kaufman of Salomon Brothers said in a bulletin to portfolio managers this past week: "We may well be heading into a sort of economic and financial 'no man's land' in which stagflation dominates for a while.

"An economic contraction dominated by energy constraint will unfortunately contribute to rather than ease our inflationary problem unless it brings about a very large contraction in real growth of both energy and non-energy related activities (a development that is not yet discernible)."

Faced with such concerns, the stock market turned in an erratic performance in the four-day trading week that surrounded the July 4 holiday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 4.27 to 846.16 after taking a 7.12-point loss the week before.

Big Board volume averaged 33.15 million shares a day, down from 35.18 million the week before.

Jacques de Larosiere, managing director of the International Monetary Fund, said in a speech Friday that the increase in oil prices will probably mean inflation rates generally above 10 percent in the industrial nations this year.

The Value Line Investment Survey, which forecasts a "mild" 1979-80 recession, observed, "Inflation will remain a serious burden throughout the recession.

"Some seasonal deceleration in the pace of inflation is quite likely in the last half of 1979. This, we think, will be attributable primarily to weakness in the food sector.

The investment advisory service projects a rise of 9 to 9.5 percent this year for the Gross National Product "deflator," the measure of inflation used in adjusting statistics on the output of goods and services in the United States. The consumer price index, it says, will show an increase of at least 10 percent, and maybe 11.

"Inflation will not disappear in 1980 despite the lingering effects of recession. That's because inflationary psychology pervades the entire economic structure," Value Line said.

"The pace of price hikes may decelerate to 7.5 percent (as measured by the GNP deflator) in 1981. But thereafter we expect price increases to accelerate again.

"The battle against inflation will be a long one, enduring perhaps for a decade. The current round of inflation — which accelerated after 1965 — has its roots in the post-World War II period.

"Any social phenomenon that has taken 30 years to weave itself into the very fabric of the economy is going to be around a while — barring, of course, the unacceptable quick-fix solution: Depression."

STOCK DIVIDEND

Heilig-Meyers Co., Richmond based home furnishings chain, announced the declaration of a ten percent stock dividend to be distributed on July 27 to stockholders of record on July 16.

Hyman Meyers, president, reported at the company's annual stockholders meeting that the dividend is the third declared by Heilig-Meyers in three years.

Meyers said that the company, which has a store in Greenville, will open its 71st store on June 29 with grand opening activities in Troy.

NCACPA POST

Farmville native Burney R. Rivenbark, CPA, has been elected secretary-treasurer of the North Carolina Association of Certified Public Accountants for 1979-80.

APPLICATION FILED

Family Dollar Stores Inc. announced that it has filed an application to list its shares of common stock on the New York Stock Exchange.

Leon Levine, board chairman, said that the company expects favorable action on the application, and trading of its shares on the Exchange should begin within the next six weeks. The shares of common stock are currently traded on the American Stock Exchange.

The company, with 364 retail discount variety stores, has a store in Greenville.

7 Million Jobs

TOKYO (AP) — Chinese labor officials plan to create more than seven million urban jobs for young people this year, the official Chinese news agency Xinhua (Hsinhua) said today.

14th Dry Hole

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Exxon says its third exploratory well in the Baltimore Canyon Trough has come up dry — the 14th dry hole reported in more than 15 months of drilling off the East Coast.

Exxon officials said Friday their leased semi-submersible rig Semi I, which started the third hole in December about 101 miles east of here, would be moved about 28 miles to the northwest in about a week for another try. The new hole, to be sunk in 203 feet of water, will be on a geological formation known as the Great Salt Dome.

In the entire Baltimore Canyon Trough, there have been three major strikes of natural gas and oil reported to date.

A&P Stores Successful In The Two Carolinas

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The chairman of A&P said at the annual stockholders meeting Friday that despite the supermarket chain's financial difficulties in recent years, its stores in the Carolinas are a success story.

The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co.'s chairman, Jonathan Scott, said an extensive restructuring of the company is underway. Scott said none of the 134 stores in the Carolinas will be affected by the nationwide restructuring announced March 23 in which 174 more A&P stores will be closed.

A&P executives said the company is slowly overcoming its problems and moving into the marketing of foods in low-budget stores.

"We have lost some battles, but we know we will win the war," Scott said.

Scott said A&P will spend $80 million on new and remodeled facilities this year and will open at least 50 limited-assortment stores to serve "bargain-conscious shoppers."

The decision to move into limited-assortment stores has been influenced by the Tengelmann Group of West Germany. A subsidiary of that company bought nearly 30 percent of A&P's outstanding shares in February and acquired options to buy an additional 13 percent of A&P stock. The firm placed six members on A&P's 13-member board Friday.

Tengelmann operates about 2,000 supermarkets in Europe, including about 800 stores offering a limited line of products at reduced prices.

Erivan Haub of West Gremany, who controls Tengelmann, said in urging A&P to invest in the limited-assortment stores, "We have to cater to younger people, you know."

Scott and Morrow said the investment in A&P by Tengelmann was the most important move toward rebuilding its financial strength during the past year.

After the regular meeting, Scott indicated the 50 limited-assortment stores will be opened in areas between New York and Philadelphia by a subsidiary named Plus Discount Foods Inc. There are no immediate plans for any of the stores to open in the Carolinas.

"While the conventional supermarket will continue to produce the bulk of our sales for years to come, we plan to spend sizeable portions of our capital dollars on other store formats," he said.

Scott said the limited-type store will offer consumers between 450 and 1,000 items at prices kept low by dropping such services as grocery bagging and check cashing. The stores will also save money by cutting inventories, reducing advertising and trimming perishable foods departments.

A&P has pulled out the Cleveland, Milwaukee and Pittsburg areas as part of the restructing program, Scott said. He said the move was made because those were areas "where we have been deeply in the red for more than 15 years."

Consumers Cautious

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Inflation and mounting gasoline worries are beginning to have an increasingly large effect on retail sales as consumers turn more cautious.

Major retail chains, already worried about a slowing economy, this past week blamed gas problems for much of their June sales sag.

"When the gas lines occurred, people became extremely cautious and our sales decreased about 8 percent," said Edward McDonnell, chairman and chief executive of Montgomery Ward & Co. The retail chain, a subsidiary of Mobil Corp., said overall sales in June rose 2.3 percent, less than half its average gain for the year so far.

Sears, Roebuck — the nation's largest retailer — reported a 9.2 percent decline in sales, and No. 3 J.C. Penney's sales showed no change from last year's level.

Those figures are prompting some analysts to predict consumers will tighten spending after a splurge that helped sustain the economy after the 1973-74 recession.

Auto sales also showed continued declines for the fourth consecutive month. Sales by the four U.S. automakers and U.S. built Volkswagens fell 26 percent in June to about 701,000 units from sales a year.

Even if gasoline lines disappear, economists say it appears consumers may be turning more cautious in their buying habits.

Since last December, notes a recent economic report by Citibank, inflation has outstripped gains in personal income.

While the report says inflation is likely to slow in the coming months from its 14 percent pace, both the income squeeze and consumer worries about the economy in general may have lingering effects.

"The combination of less mobility (because of gasoline problems) and less real income could result in a sizeable erosion in retail sales in the coming months," said Fabian Linden, director of consumer economics at the Conference Board.

The Conference Board, a business-funded research organization, found considerable skeptism about the health of the economy in its most recent survey of 5,000 families conducted in June.

Those surveyed didn't assess current economic conditions, including employment and income prospects, much differently than they did in May. But the number who expected conditions to worsen in the next six months jumped from about 19 percent to almost 25 percent in June.

In other business developments this past week:

—The nation's unemployment rate fell to 5.6 percent in June, down from 5.8 percent in May. The Labor Department said the improvement was almost entirely due to a drop in the jobless rate for teen-agers.

—Worries over inflation and the oil squeeze helped push gold prices to record highs. In Zurich, gold was trading at $290.375 an ounce at week's end, a gain of more than $97 an ounce since the end of November. In London, gold closed at $289.25.

—Wholesale prices continue to rise, but not as steeply as several months ago. The government said producer prices rose 0.5 percent last month. Food prices actually declined 1.2 percent, thanks to sharp drops in the prices of beef, pork and poultry. But petroleum price increases helped push overall costs of non-food items up 1.1 percent.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A six-seat automobile designed by 15 students and two professors at the University of Pennsylvania may be odd-looking, but it gets 35 to 40 miles to the gallon.

The two-door car looks like an undersized limousine. It has a Honda body stretched by 30 inches and is powered by a turbo-charged Volkswagen diesel engine.

The hybrid auto will compete next month with other cars designed by students at 37 colleges and universities as part of a contest sponsored by Student Competition on Relevant Engineering.

The non-profit organization was established eight years ago to encourage engineering education.

All the entries will undergo a series of driving tests in August at the General Motors Proving Grounds in Detroit. The cars will be rated for fuel efficiency, level of emissions, innovation in design and space utilitization.

Penn's car probably will be the only six-passenger vehicle among the entries, predicted Dr. Alan Soler, professor of mechanical engineering and principal faculty advisor to the student team.

"We wanted to demonstrate that it's possible to build a reasonable six-person vehicle that gets in the 30 miles per gallon range and above," Soler said.

AVCO Decided That Soul City Was Not Viable

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A consultant's report saying Soul City could not succeed persuaded federal officials to cut off funds instead of investing another $48.7 million in the project, according to federal documents.

Officials in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare had known for months that Soul City was in trouble. On Feb. 5, 1978, HUD Secretary Patricia Harris appointed a task force to find a way to save the project.

Soul City's basic problem, the task force concluded, was that it had "urgent cash shortages and a continuing deficit created by insufficient land sales."

At a meeting April 27, the task force reached an informal consensus against foreclosure, according to its report. It had developed a plan to take over Soul City under the New Community Development Corp., a HUD agency, and allow Floyd B. McKissick's development company to continue developing the project under a contract with the corporation.

It was this plan that would have required an additional government investment of $48.7 million, mostly in grants.

The task force decided on May 29 to ask AVCO Community Developers, Inc., a California consulant firm, to evaluate both Soul City and the approach favored by the task force.

"The fact is that the answer to the economic viability of Soul City is very clear and very easy to determine without a complete financial analysis," AVCO shot back in only three weeks.

AVCO concluded that for all practical purposes, Soul City could not put aside the money to pay off any amount of debt.

Soul City had several problems that made it impossible for it to sell industrial, commercial and residential lots, AVCO said.

No market for residential housing exists without commercial and industrial development, AVCO said. Commercial growth must follow industrial growth and there is little potential for industrial growth in the heart of rural Warren County.

There is no large labor force to be tapped, AVCO concluded. The project has inadequate shopping facilities and no restaurants or theaters. In addition, Soul City has a negative connotation in parts of the local business community that is difficult to overcome.

"In our opinion, Soul City had little chance of success from the outset," the AVCO report said.

Bright Spots In The Economy

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The latest government wholesale price and employment figures are bright spots in an economy grown increasingly gloomy over petroleum problems and the threat of a recession.

As President Carter held private talks on energy and economic problems and their political consequences at his retreat in Camp David, Md., the Labor Department Friday issued two reports indicating economic improvements in June:

—Wholesale prices rose a modest 0.5 percent, not much more than the 0.4 percent increase in May. Food prices, at wholesale, declined in June for the third consecutive month, signaling that the pace of recent food price hikes may moderate somewhat in coming months.

—The nation's unemployment rate fell to 5.6 percent, its lowest level in nearly five years. Most of the decline from May's 5.8 percent jobless rate was attributed to a sizable rise in teen-age employment, which Labor Department analysts said may be a summertime phenomenon.

Commerce Department economist William Cox said the economy was "softening," but added, "it seems to me that the bottom line is that it's certainly not time to give up on our anti-inflation efforts."

At the White House, deputy press secretary Rex Granum called the wholesale price figures "an indication that the patience asked of the American people is beginning to pay off."

Inflation so far this year, running more than 13 percent on an annual basis, is expected to abate somewhat for the rest of the year.

But the decline won't be as great as earlier forecasts because of crude oil price increases announced late last month by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The OPEC increase is likely to add a full percentage point to the inflation rate both this year and next, the president and his aides have said.

The increased crude oil prices, which will be felt for months on the wholesale and retail levels, also have led economists to heighten their predictions of a recession.

JAARS, Where Missionaries Learn Jungle Flying

BY MONTE PLOTT
Associated Press Writer

WAXHAW, N.C. (AP) — At an airstrip outside the drowsy village of Waxhaw near Charlotte, experienced pilots practice takeoffs and landings in the smallest distances possible, and they learn to fly specially designed planes as slow as 35 mph without stalling.

The practice will serve them well when they attempt a landing on a tiny airstrip that crawls up a mountain in New Guinea, or a takeoff from a runway hacked out of the South American jungle.

At the same practice strip, radio operators talk with missionaries at bases around the world, relaying messages between the missionaries and relatives back in the states.

The operation is called JAARS, an acronym for Jungle Aviation and Radio Service Inc. JAARS is the communication and supply arm of Wycliffe Bible Translators, an organization based on the unique mission of translating and printing the Gospel in native dialects that have no written language.

Wycliffe workers, including the nearly 200 at JAARS, are all volunteers who have no guaranteed salary. They are supported individually by various churches, organizations and individuals across the country.

Wycliffe, which was founded in 1917 by Cameron Townsend, who lives on the JAARS facility, recently marked the completion of the 100th translation of the New Testament.

Work should be completed in the next two years on nearly 70 other translations in about 25 countries around the world, officials say. Missionaries are going about the arduous task of devising a written language for little-known dialects such as Tacana in Bolivia, Ikwo in Africa and Antipolo Ifuagao in the Philippines.

The process can take as long as 25 years from beginning to end and seldom takes less than five years under the best of cirumstances. It necessitates putting linguistic missionaries in the jungle and other remote regions for years at a time, and that is where the JAARS operation comes in.

Small, maneuverable planes are used to ferry missionaires in and out of remote areas and to drop supplies to the missionaires.

Townsed started the JAARS operation in 1948, after a pregnant missionary and her husband suffered through a 21-day trek through the Peruvian jungle so she could get medical treatment.

JAARS settled on 256 acres of rolling-pine woodlands near Waxhaw after Henderson Belk, a wealthy Charlotte businessman, donated the land in 1960.

The operation now has about 40 planes, with most of them based in isolated areas of the world. There are a few helicopters to get into areas where the planes cannot land.

At JAARS, hundreds of miles from the nearest jungle, pilots who are accepted into the Wycliffe program spend three months training. Flying from a dirt airstrip, they are trained to use a plane called a Helio Courier. It has a special wing design that allows it to fly as slowly as 35 mph.

Bob Griffin, a JAARS official who has logged nearly 5,000 hours as a missionary pilot, can have the Helio Courier off the ground before the plane has covered five plane lengths of runway, and he can land it with a few additonal feet of space.

Using top-of-the-line equipment, mechanics rebuild and test airplanes and helicopters, preparing them to withstand years in the jungle without serious problems.

In thousands of miles of flying over some of the most rugged terrain in the world, JAARS planes have sustained only one fatal accident — a crash in New Guinea in 1973 that killed five persons.

Amid artifacts and paraphernalia from various countries, JAARS personnel work with a singular devotion to the Wycliffe mission. The philosophy of the organization is that a person has to believe in the mission in order to succeed and benefit the mission.

"We do not go into villages as preaching evangelists," says Bill Lambright, a radio specialist who spent several years in Panama.

"We simply go in as individual Christians, seeing the importance of allowing every man to read in his own language the most important book ever printed."

JAARS officials say they do not have to go searching for pilots who are interested in flying into difficult areas and, at the same time, embrace the Wycliffe philosophy. The flow of volunteers fills the few vacancies in the squad of nearly 100 pilots.

Standards are high: a pilot coming to JAARS must already have a commercial pilot's license with an instrument rating and he must have completed more than 500 hours of flying time.

And he must believe in the mission. Without exception, JAARS personnel believe in what their organizaton is doing, officials of the group say. In fact, they consider themselves lucky to have found such an opportunity.

"I knew I wanted to be a missionary when I was young, and I knew I wanted to fly," says Griffin.

"When I found out I could come here and do both, my ears perked up."

Synanon Tax Status

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Associated Press reported erroneously on May 19 that the Synanon Foundation had been denied tax-exempt status by the Internal Revenue Service.

Synanon remains tax-exempt as a non-profit charitable and educational organization.

It was revealed in May that Synanon had been denied status as a religion. But that did not affect the existing exempt status as a charitable and educational organization, a spokesman for the IRS confirmed in San Francisco.

Published reports state that Synanon had sought reclassification from the IRS as a church. Dan Garrett, Synanon's vice president and chief legal adviser, said the request was turned down primarily because Synanon has no formal ordination of its ministers and members are not required to give up any faith before accepting Synanon beliefs.

As reported by The Associated Press on May 19, Synanon said that denial of the religious exemption would not mean that the drug and alcohol rehabilitation organization would have to pay millions in back taxes.

'Shampoo' Civil Suit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Associated Press reported on June 16 that a jury had awarded a Los Angeles woman $185,000 in her civil suit against actor-writer Warren Beatty and writer Robert Towne because they had "plagiarized" her work when they wrote the script for the movie "Shampoo."

The judge's instruction to the jury didn't use the word "plagiarism."

The judge told the jurors that in order to return a verdict against Beatty and Towne, they had to find that the defendants "based the motion picture 'Shampoo' substantially upon" the ideas of the plaintiff, Bernice Mann, a former manicurist.

A charge of plagiarism was dropped from the proceedings leading up to the finding in favor of Mrs. Mann.

Psychologist Field Wide Open

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — All you need to become a psychologist in Florida these days is few dollars for a state license, and officials are worried the way is now open for phonies to become Freuds.

A state law regulating the practice of psychology expired last Sunday, allowing anyone to go into the business as long as they anted up the price of a license — as little as $5.50 in some areas.

Since then, some 200 people have bought licenses — double the number in all of 1978. There were about 700 licensed psychologists practicing in the state at the end of last year.

Recovered From Surgery, Hoots Flies Free

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Hoots, the barred owl, now flies free in or near Goose Creek State Park near Washington, N. C.

Chances are he's the only one of his kind in the area who has a pinned wing and memories of days spent as the pampered pet of Mr. and Mrs. Al Fiore.

Hoots, as they called him, spent a couple of months recuperating from wing surgery in the care of Al and Jeanette Fiore. "We always knew we'd let him go as soon as he was able," Mrs. Fiore said, "but, in the meantime, we enjoyed his company. He was such a lovable old bird — He had a mind of his own, yet grooved on being stroked and talked to. He'd croon way down in his throat and cross his eyes and you knew he was in owl's heaven."

Mrs. Fiore, a member of the Pitt County Humane Society, had Hoots brought to her by Skip Potter, a Carolina Telephone repairman who found him with a wing injured too badly to fly on the median of Highway 11-13 near the Burroughs Wellcome plant north of Greenville. It's believed he was struck by a car, though no one knows for sure how he was hurt, of course.

"Potter deserves a lot of credit," Mrs. Fiore said. "He could have figured ' 'It's not my problem,' or feared that the big bird would hurt him, injured and frightened as Hoots was at the time, but he didn't. He picked him up and spent several hours asking around about where to take him for help. Someone finally sent him to me."

The Pitt County Humane Society footed the bill for the repair of Hoots' wing.

"Hoots had a compound fracture to his right wing," Dr. A. G. Thompson, Greenville veterinarian, said. "Compound means, of course, that the bone was severed and was protruding through the flesh. I pieced it back together and fixed the wing to his body, so it would be out of use till it could heal.

"There's nothing very unusual about the operation, except that we veterinarians don't get in a lot of practice working on birds. Admistering the anesthetic is probably the trickiest part, because a bird has very high metabolism and if you give a fraction too much, you've lost him."

Birds tend to be poor patients, too, Dr. Thompson said, in that many give up and quit eating and die when they're injured. "Birds of prey like Hoots are usually the best, though," he said, "because they're naturally agressive. Garbage birds like seagulls are probably the next best. It's an almost impossible task to save a seed-eating bird like a robin or cardinal."

"We kept Hoots here at the clinic for about four days and enjoyed having him. It was obvious from the first that he was no quitter. I've never seen a bird bounce back so fast."

"Hoots certainly didn't quit eating," Mrs. Fiore said. .

He relished the diet of mice and bait fish the Fiores secured for him. They let him catch his own mice from a cage and dive for the fish in a pan of water.

"I got to the place that I didn't give him too many mice," Mrs. Fiore said. "I hated to hear the mice scream when he'd catch them. Besides, he 'pigged out' one time and exhausted our supply."

Resourceful fellow that he is, she explained, Hoots figured out how to release the latch on the mice's cage and ate every one in it while the Fiores were away once.

Dr. Thompson said much of Hoots' remarkable recovery and readaptation to the wild can be credited to the Fiores. "They kept him in a small space so he couldn't overuse his wing at first," he said, "yet they didn't prevent him from using it some."

Most of his time was spent in a darkened spare room "owl-proofed" as much as possible by draped furniture and floor. It was the room where Mrs. Fiore, a talented clothes designer and seamstress, keeps her sewing machine. More than once, the mischievous Hoots found a spool of thread, picked up the end and strung and restrung the entire room with strands of it. "It was funny the first and second time," Mrs. Fiore said, "but the third time, I cleaned out every spool so it couldn't happen again."

Dr. Thompson said barred owls are common in Eastern North Carolina, often heard but seldom seen by humans. "They're reclusive in the daytime," he said, "yet seem to like to live near populated areas where food is plentiful."

He estimated Hoots to be about three years old. Barred owls usually live to be 13 or 14, he said, though, with the right conditions, they have been known to live as long as 25 years.

HOOTS. . .perches on a homemade stand in the Fiore's spare room, a remnant of his bandage still left on his once-broken wing. This picture was taken about a month ago. He has now been released to the wild.

Kenneth Glaze lies helpless in a hospital bed, recognizing no one, slowly deteriorating. Mrs. Glaze has learned to drive and handle family finances. Now, she's trying to help other families like hers.

Mrs. Glaze started REACH, short for Reassurance to Each, two years ago. There are now 14 Minnesota chapters and the movement is spreading, helping families cope and secure better care.

REACH is a product of pain and frustration, of Mrs. Glaze's determination that no one should have to go suffer what she did.

Ten years ago, the Glazes lived in Watertown, S.D., where Kenneth was vice president of an insurance company. Bobbie met him in high school when she was a cheerleader and he was a baseball player.

But Kenneth Glaze was changing. He was losing interest in his friends, his job, in everything.

"When we were alone, it was like I was talking to the wall," Bobbie says. "I walked around the block late at night wondering what to do."

She decided to move to Minneapolis, near her older daughter, to find more doctors and a different environment. Two doctors diagnosed the illness: Alzheimer's disease, in which the brain cells die slowly. Neither offered guidance.

Mrs. Glaze tried to care for her husband at home, but he started to throw things, push people and wander away. She decided a nursing home was the answer, but they said they didn't have the staff for him. Her husband's insurance ran out. Finally, someone suggested the Veterans Hospital in St. Cloud, Minn. Glaze has been there for five years now.

While Mrs. Glaze was regaining her emotional and financial strength — she sold her home and got a parttime job — she vowed someday to help others in her situation.

When she volunteered with mental health agencies, she was given envelopes to stuff. Then she met Karen Peterson, human resources director for the Mental Health Association of Minnesota. They started telephoning people to see if a group like REACH existed.

"Everybody said, 'Are you sure it doesn't? It should,'" Mrs. Glaze said.

REACH is funded through mental health associations and volunteer work. Members meet once or twice a month to share problems and possible solutions.

Meanwhile, word of REACH has spread. REACH in Providence, R.I., only a year old, has grown from to 100 members. Richard Weir, director of the state mental health association, says it was instrumental in blocking an insurance company move to cut benefits.

Last year, Bobbie Glaze received an award from national Mental Health Association. It brought mixed feelings.

"I'm reminded of why I'm doing it and it's very sad," she says. "It's nice to be recognized, but I didn't ask for this. I didn't expect it. I did it because the need is there and I'll continue to do it as long as I can."

Adding Meaning To Non-Verbal Communication

By Bob Cavin
UNC-G News Bureau

GREENSBORO — Research has shown that many people speak up to 18,000 words each day, but only about one-third of the meaning behind such conversation is transmitted vocally, says an assistant professor of communications at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

The other two-thirds, or 68 percent, of people's understanding of what is said to them depends on "non-verbal communication," explained Dr. Elliott Pood of UNC-G.

"Non-verbal communication is a valid form of communicating with others through our behavior, appearance and personal environment," Pood explained. "It is used by everyone, but most of us have never begun to analyze it in a systematic manner.

"Non-verbal communication has been studied by anthropologists for many years, but only within the past 15 to 20 years have communication scholars really been studying non-verbal communication from the standpoint of a behavioral science," he added.

The behavioral aspect of non-verbal communication received a lot of attention in the early 70s when Julius Faust's book, "Body Language," attempted to describe the sexual connotations suggested by certain body postures or movements.

However, from the perspective of the behavioral scientist, the scope of non-verbal communication is much broader than Faust described in his book, according to Pood.

"We certainly say a lot about ourselves by the way we sit, stand or walk," he said. "But we also communicate with our personal appearance, environment and behavior."

Pood, who is teaching a new course on non-verbal communication this semester, added that this means of relating to others plays an important part in defining social status, mood and attitude. Moreover, non-verbal communication even influences one's personal relationships with others, he noted.

Pood has developed four projects for his 170 students in the "Non-Verbal and Interpersonal Communication" class to help them understand just how much they depend on non-verbal signals.

"Non-verbal communication is not a language in itself, and the study of it as a science is still in its infancy," Pood pointed out. "So it is difficult to describe it precisely with language.

"The four projects we will be doing this semester are designed to make the students aware of how much they use non-verbal communication in their everyday lives," he said.

The four projects include a "silence day," a "blind day," a "dress-opposite-yourself-day," and a "sex role reversal disco dance."

Pood pointed out that during "silence day" the students found out just how much they depend on communicating verbally, and, in contrast, they discovered how much they rely on non-verbal signals during "blind day" when the students wore sleep shades for a 24-hour period.

"I conducted similar experiments in a non-verbal communication course at Florida State University," Pood noted. "Both experiences are very frustrating, but the bottom line is that communication is easier without the use of speech than it is without the use of sight.

"If you are talking with someone whom you can see but cannot hear, you can tell if that person is serious or joking, happy or sad, or even telling you truth or a lie just by the way they appear," Pood pointed out.

"However, if you can hear the person but cannot see them, you just have to believe what you hear without the non-verbal signals to help you.

"Of course, you may be able to hear anger or joy in a voice even if you can't see the person, but those tonal inflections, variations in pitch and other vocal clues are forms of non-verbal, rather than verbal communication," he explained.

Pood pointed out that the rules of non-verbal communication vary between men and women, races and even cultures.

"For instance, here in America we consider skinny women to be attractive," he said. "But in Arabia, skinniness is considered to be a flaw and plumpness is attractive.

"Among men and women in our culture, it is perfectly acceptable for two women to embrace when they meet, but men shake hands," Pood noted.

Becoming aware of the differences of non-verbal signals is the object of the sex-role-reversal disco dance which will be held prior to the final exam in the class.

"The idea is for the men to the things that women normally do in preparation for the dance and the women will do the things the men normally do," Pood explained.

"For instance, the women will ask for dances and they will lead while dancing and the men will tend to the punch bowl and refreshments," he said.

"It's simply a matter of the males thinking about and interpreting the non-verbal signals used by females and vice versa."

The dress-opposite-yourself day is intended to have the same impact on the growing awareness of what non-verbal communication is.

"Dress and personal appearance is an important form of non-verbal communication," Pood pointed out. "The clothes we wear, our hair style and whether our shoes are shined or not, all tell people something about us before we even open our mouth."

CAN YOU GUESS WHAT SHE IS SAYING?. . .More than half of people's understanding of conversations is transmitted by "non-verbal communication," according to Dr. Elliott Podd, an assistant professor of communication at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Here one of his students, Rosemarie Gooch of Wake County, displays four examples of "non-verbal communication." She is showing, left to right, happiness, a rising temper, fear and rage.

Anniversary Couple Recalls Black Days

The other 20 years were hell.

The couple, who celebrated their golden wedding anniversary this spring at the Lithuanian Village on the east side of Cleveland, were separated by the Russians at the start of World War II. They had lived in the United States six years before being trapped by political and military circumstances in 1935 while visiting in Lithuania.

When a United States ship was allowed to take American citizens from a Lithuanian harbor in 1940, the Russians permitted Armonas and his daughter, Donna, to leave but detained Mrs. Armonas and their 8-month-old son, John Jr. She recalls they became "instant" Soviet citizens for what was to have been 30 days.

It stretched into nearly 20 years of prison labor camps and deprivation.

After years in detention, the woman and her son were sent to Siberia in 1948, where she was assigned such manual labor as cutting wood, carrying bricks and cement sacks and delivering messages at night through a wolf-infested forest.

"In Russia, we had no bread, no meat, no milk, no shortening, just potatoes and beans," she recalls. "In Siberia, we had only bread to eat." In 1951, she was arrested and accused of resisting the Communist regime.

Armonas and his daughter had returned to their home in Willoughby Hills, Ohio, where he worked as an industrial machinist while continuing efforts to gain freedom for his wife and son.

It was the daughter's writing efforts and her refusal to be discouraged by years of diplomatic rebuffs that united the family.

The first real encouragement came in 1959 when Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev visited Pittsburgh, and then Gov. David Lawrence appealed to him on behalf of the separated family.

At Khrushchev's request, Lawrence arranged a meeting with Miss Armonas and the Russian ruler is said to have told her: "Little girl, expect your mother very soon..."

Their reunion on March 8, 1960, was reported internationally because of the dramatic way it came about.

"I never lost faith that she would return to me," Armonas said at the time. When the couple visited Russia two years later he put a bouquet of flowers on Khrushchev's tomb.

The couple's son, John Jr., is now married and works as a chemist in Bethlehem, Pa. Donna, widowed after eight years of marriage, sells real estate and lives with her son Tim, 13, in Willoughby Hills.

Expansion of Cuyahoga County Airport forced the elder Armonas to move from their home late last year. Armonas, 74, retired from his machinist job nine years ago and has recently been in poor health.

Mrs. Armonas, 70, has written a book, "Leave Your Tears in Moscow," and is working on a small garden at their village apartment.

Anything Goes In Cambridge She Says

By JOHN J. MULLINS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Eccentrics are hard to spot in Cambridge now, says Marian Cannon Schlesinger, who finds her upbringing there, unusual for its time, far more commonplace today.

"Anything goes at this point," said Mrs. Schlesinger, who has written a book about her family's life in the famous college city from about 1920 to 1940. "I don't know who would be considered eccentric in Cambridge today.

"Eccentricity has become a national pastime," she declared in a recent interview.

Mrs. Schlesinger lives in Cambridge, as she has most of her life. She was born in Franklin, N.H., where her parents bought a farm for summer living after coming to Cambridge from the Midwest in 1910.

Her father was a professor of physiology at Harvard Medical School, and she was one of five children, four of them girls. Her book, "Snatched from Oblivion," is illustrated with her own drawings.

The Cambridge and Harvard she knew as a child and adolescent have changed in ways that are true "pretty much throughout the country," she said.

"I think the divisions, the social divisions ... were much sharper then. A kind of homogenization has gone on. Academia was much more isolated ... It was much more towngown."

Harvard has grown a great deal, and the student body is much more diversified, she says, noting also that faculty members now live throughout the city in places they wouldn't have thought of living in before, such as the suburbs.

"The whole social change of the country caused it (the change), really," she said.

When they were young, her mother persuaded her father to accept a visiting professorship at the University of Paris. Mother, four daughters and an aunt then toured Italy by car.

In 1929, in Italy, it was practically unheard of for women to tour alone by auto.

And, her mother sent Mrs. Schlesinger's sister, then 17, off to Turkey for a year of study after running into a college classmate who was head of the Women's College in Constantinople.

After she graduated from Radcliffe in 1934, Mrs. Schlesinger went alone to China to visit another sister, who had married the present expert on China, John K. Fairbank, then studying in Peking. Her parents joined them later.

"I think my mother was considered eccentric by her friends," Mrs. Schlesinger said. "Her more conservative (acquaintances) thought she was sending us to some sort of custodial institution when she sent us to public schools" when they were children.

"There was a division between parochial schools and public schools and the private schools," she said. "Everybody sort of despised everybody else."

She remembers having schoolmates of varied ethnic backgrounds, and said, "I felt it was one of the greatest educations of my life.

"We were much less self-conscious about ethnicity then. It was fun."

Mrs. Schlesinger's mother wrote articles and books, including a best-selling novel, and Mrs. Schlesinger said that within a few blocks of where she now lived in Cambridge there were 10 women writers, each of whom had written at least one book.

Culinary Classes Are For Male Cooks Only

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Ada County is doing its bit to help break down traditional sex barriers. The county extension service is offering a series of cooking classes — for men only.

And it's not fancy stuff, just trying to get the most out of the food dollar.

"Lifestyles are changing. There seem to be more men rearing children on their own and more men without wives or families who must fend for themselves in the kitchen," says Peggy Pletcher, home economist.

Along with John Miller, meat specialist and barbecuer par excellence, she's running a series of three classes to make men more at home in the kitchen. If they're successful the classes will be made a regular feature of extension services.

The first session presented an overview of food preparation and buying. Cooks and would-be master chefs were given ideas on how to stretch food dollars, put the budget and menu together and provide good nutrition.

The next meeting focuses on barbecuing, with Miller putting on a demonstration of his specialty. The last session is concerned with food processors, microwave ovens and ways of preparing meals on the run.

Both Miller and the home economist say the classes aren't courses in gourmet cooking. "We're not getting into elaborate saucery or exotic foods that are hard to find.

"What we are involved in is telling men about the everyday aspects of food shopping and cooking as it applies to family-type food, whether it's for five or six people or more or just one person," said Ms. Pletcher.

The course is entitled "Fearless Cooking for Men," and is described in promotional literature as a "fun, worthwhile course for mastering the art of cooking for yourself, your family or your friends."

Ms. Pletcher said traditional education had denied men the opportunity to become sharp food buyers.

"For instance, we have a filmstrip on shopping that tells women not to take their husbands with them. It's a real putdown. I think both husband and wife can work together to spend wisely on food," she said.

Squash To Freeze

Summer squash is easy to freeze at home.

Select young squash with small seeds and a tender rind, advises Jane Aitchison, NCSU foods and nutrition extension specialist.

Wash the squash and cut into ½ inch slices. Blanch the slices in boiling water for three minutes, then cool the squash promptly in cold water and drain.

Miss Vines, Mr. Daniels Were Married Saturday

MRS. WILLIAM SAMUEL DANIELS

Laura Ruth Vines and William Samuel Daniels were married Saturday at 4:30 p.m. in Greenfield Terrace here.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Kenneth Hammond of Greenville.

The bride's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vines of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Daniels of Greenville.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, George Calvin Vines, of Greenville. Her sister, Deloris Yvonne Vines of Greenville, was honor attendant. Bridesmaids included Connie D. Bell of Greenville, sister of the bridegroom, Nina Sue Pitt, Eliza Brown and Linda Jackson, all of Greenville.

The bridegroom's father served as best man. Ushers included Andrew Daniels of Durham, brother of the bridegroom, Bernard Gollette, Bobby Tatum-and Issac Tyson, all of Greenville.

The bride wore a gown of ivory sheerganza and Venise lace. The dress was designed with a V-neckline, empire waistline, and flowing A-line skirt. A caplet effect outlining the neckline and extending down the back of the bodice was edged in lace. She wore a cathedral length veil of ivory encircled in a floral band of lace and attached to a laced Camelot band. She carried a cascade of orchids, miniature carnations, miniature roses and ivy.

The attendants wore formal gowns of light blue and pink polyester with a scoop neckline. The waistline was encircled with a band of lace and a rolled tie sash from which fell the flared skirt. They all carried long-stemmed carnations with streamers.

Mary Worthington of Greenville directed the wedding.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bridegroom's parents given by Connie Bell and Mary B. Worthington. Brenda Battle of Greenville served cake and Jan Williams of Greenville poured punch. Carrie Moore presided at the guest register.

After a wedding trip, the couple plans to live in Greenville. The bridegroom, a graduate of Rose High School, is employed by Helig-Meyers. The bride, who attended C.M. Eppes High School, is employed by the University Nursing Center.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I've been doing a lot of thinking lately about the Kiss-'N'-Tell books.

The ones where the trusted family retainers run after former First Ladies all day and polish up their manuscripts on their day off. Where the children of superstars find a whistle and blow it, and disenchanted wives of prime ministers feel obliged to share their sex life with readers.

My personal feeling is it's unethical, an abuse of trust and is unconscionable. But what the heck, it's a living.

As I said to my cleaning woman the other day, "Who was that man who dropped you off today?"

"My husband," she said cautiously. "What's his name?"

"Lionel."

"Is that one L or two?" I said, making a note in my notebook.

"I'm not sure. Why?"

"Nothing. I'm just trying to get to know you better."

"Is that why you taped interviews with my children?"

"They've ruined my surprise. When did they tell you?"

"They didn't. My mother told me right after you picked up some correspondence and pictures from her. Did you read that awful book about my friend, Dora, written by her Friday employer? I think it's called 'Lust and Dust.'"

"Clever title," I said, jotting it down.

"It's perfectly disgusting. Why, after awhile, domestics and secretaries are going to have employers sign a statement saying they're not going to divulge any secrets they learn while we're working for them."

The phone rang.

"I'd sure hate to see that happen," I said as I raced to answer the phone. "Who's calling, please? Could you spell that? If I could just tell her the nature of the call? I see."

I turned to my cleaning woman. "It's for you. She says it's personal."

I was breathing heavily by the time I got to the extension phone in the bedroom but made it in time to hear that her Wednesday employer had written a book on her called, "Nanny, Dearest," and had just sold it to the Book-of-the-Month club.

As I was shredding my notes, I looked up and said, "You're fired."

CRANBERRY MUSEUM A TASTY PLACE

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — "Cranberry World," a museum located near historic Plymouth Rock, is a two-level, glass-enclosed waterfront structure dedicated exclusvely and exhaustively to celebrating the tangy little red berry.

Now the No. 1 agricultural crop of Massachusetts, the cranberry is one of only three fruits known to be native to the North American continent. The others are the Concord grape and the blueberry. Long before the Pilgrims dropped anchor here in 1620, local Indian tribes, depicted in the museum, valued the berries to make dyes and medicines and as a culinary treat.

On The Local Scene

by Rosalie Trotman

Mrs. Maxine Harker of Grifton was presented the first place award in the journals division at the 19th annual Creative Writing and Inspirational Workshop of the Dixie Council of Authors and Journalists, Inc., held recently in St. Simons Island, Ga.

The award, which was given by the Georgia Federal Savings and Loan Association, was for "a source book of writing ideas," which was to be kept for seven days with ideas, leads, titles and inspirations as they came to the writer, "as a bank of ideas to draw on later."

Mrs. Harker was honored earlier this year by the North Carolina Press Women for three feature articles in her "Sketchbook Column" which appears weekly in "The Grifton Times." She was presented a second place award "for a personal column appearing in a weekly newspaper with under 4,000 circulation." She was also selected to be the 1979 recipient of the Grifton Chamber of Commerce Outstanding Citizen Award, in recognition of her work with cultural arts in the Grifton area.

The Creative Writing Workshop, an eight-day affair, featured classes taught by well-known authors, editors, and professors from across the nation.

Other Pitt County writers who attended the workshop were Jane Lambert of Grifton and Mary Lou Hooks of Winterville.

The search for the 1980 Maid of Cotton has officially begun, the National Cotton Council announced recently.

Winner of the 1980 selection, to be held here Dec. 26-28, will start Jan. 1 as ambassador for the American cotton industry.

The selection is open to young women between 19 and 23 who were born in a cotton-producing state or who have maintained legal residence in the Cotton Belt since age seven or earlier. Applicants must also be at least five feet five inches tall, and never have been married.

Following the completion of a seven month tour for promotion of cotton, the 1980 Maid will receive a $2,000 educational grant from the Council.

Application forms for entering the selection may be obtained from the Council, P. O. Box 12285, Memphis, Tenn. Deadline for submitting completed applications and required photographs is Nov. 11.

BELK TYLER HAPPENINGS...

Belk Tyler Happenings. . .

Patiently, for over a year now, you have watched our new store at Carolina East Mall taking shape. Therefore, we at Belk Tyler would like to take this opportunity to bring you up to date on some of the things that have evolved up to this point and keep you further informed of any new developments that might happen. Watch for this column each week until the grand opening for Belk Tyler Happenings. For week to week, after the grand opening, this column will also feature information on in-store events that we would like to share with you and feel that you would be interested in hearing about.

Interior Activities. . .

Since April our fixture company and interior decorators have labored long and hard installing fixtures, planters and special wall and ceiling treatments to make this store one of the most exciting, impressive and elegant stores in Eastern North Carolina. All main walkway aisles have been laid with exquisitely beautiful parquet floors. Over 22,500 square feet of carpet in thirteen glorious colors have been installed throughout all the departments in the store. Flourescent lighting, along with many indirect and accent lighting fixtures, have been installed giving special effects to all areas throughout the store.

Landscaping. . .

If you rode by the new store last week you would have seen that extensive landscaping surrounding the new Belk Tyler store is now well underway. Much painstaking attention is being placed on the planting of trees and shrubbery. Interesting walkways and sitting areas are to be included in this landscaping plan.

Store Security. . .

Specialized store security technicians have just completed the installation of a comprehensive burglar alarm system that will control security in the new store twenty-four hours a day. The system is designed to automatically notify the police department of any forced entry, breakage of glass anywhere in the store and to also detect movement of any form after the store has been closed for the night. This is one of the most up-to-date alarm systems found in this area.

Training To Begin. . .

During the next three weeks, the training department, under the direction of Mr. J. D. Wordsworth and Mrs. Ramona Hutton, will give extensive training to new and present employees. This include training in security, use of new cash terminals and sale-security, use of new cash terminals and salesmanship. This training will be done through the use of classroom lectures and participation, as well as the viewing of video-tapes.

Futures Of Midlife Women Can Be Precarious And Uncertain

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Health Editor

Drug company ads in medical journals show weary females with gray hair sitting or standing alone in an "empty nest" — a nice, comfortable upper middle-class home with all the fixin's.

The grandfather clock ticks for their ears alone, making the females in midlife lonelier than a human should be.

Reading the looks on faces in the ads you'd be dumb if you missed the message: severe depression.

The ads mean to catch a doctor's attention, aiming to get him to write a prescription for a drug or drugs that will restore some of the bloom if not the blush to the sagging flesh on the cheeks.

The ads perpetuate myths about American women in midlife: that they tend to be sickly, burdensome, burnt-out and worn-out has-beens — whether they are waiting for welfare or alimony check, clipping coupons or making weekly trips to the bank to pat their diamonds.

The message the ads tell is that midlife blahs of all kinds strike the affluent as well as the poor. And, medical authorities claim, not just women either.

But Eleanor Cutri Smeal of Mt. Lebanon, Pa., president of the National Organization for Women, went to Washington the other day to tell a Congressional Subcommittee the truth about women in midlife and she says, "Woman in midlife...as portrayed is a myth."

She told the subcommittee of the House Select Committee on Aging that midlife is 40 to 60, "and I will be 40 on my next birthday so I am almost there."

The myths about midlife women aren't found just in medical ads.

And some of them, according to Smeal, are displayed in other ads and television and the movies that are almost opposite from the medical ads.

Instead of being beset by problems and woes, these mythical women are problem free: they have husbands who adore them, live in a homes surrounded by a white picket fences. Children are loyal and true and the friendly family pooch never bit anyone.

The midlife woman, Smeal told the Subcommittee on Retirement Income and Employment, is rarely depicted as widowed or divorced. But if she is, she is surrounded by loving and supportive friends and maybe children who are nearly perfect.

"The harsh reality is that women in midlife, whether married, divorced, widowed or single, find that their opportunities for employment and economic security are severely limited, and their futures' precarious and uncertain.

"They face an economy that treats women as a marginal, surplus labor supply. As middle-aged women, they must compete with younger workers for low-paying, dead-end jobs.

"Women working in the labor force earn only 58 percent of what men earn, and account for more than 80 percent of workers in eight of the lowest-paying occupations."

The homemaker types are not well off, either, as a group — especially the widowed or divorced, according to Smeal. In 1976 there were 10 million widows and 4.4 milion divorced women who had not remarried. One in three marriages ends in divorce.

"For many of these women, society's promise that women will be taken care of in marriage is a cruel joke," Smeal, mother of two, said.

"They...find themselves in midlife with no rewards, no recognition, and no financial security."

Smeal, with political science degrees from Duke University in Durham, N.C., and the University of Florida, said midlife homemakers discover the low value society places on homemaking and motherhood.

She said employers refuse to consider years in the home as work experience, and Social Security records show "zero" for each year they've invested in nurturing and serving the family.

"They also discover they can be fired from their job (or marriage) at a moment's notice, with no unemployment compensation, no retirement benefits, no profit-sharing," Smeal said.

"They find they are not legally entitled to an equal share in the working spouse's income and assets, that they will not receive benefits from their husband's pension after his death unless he elects to receive lower benefits during his life.

"They find if they divorce before 10 years of marriage they are entitled to none of his Social Security benefits; if they divorce after any length of marriage, they will not receive any of his pension or veteran benefits.

Five million women are alcoholics, 32 million have had prescriptions for tranquilizers prescribed by doctors, compared to 19 million men; 7 percent of Darvon-related emergency room visits are made by women.

"Women have been, in essence, society's built-in, unpaid houseworkers, caring for the very young, the sick, the elderly, the disabled — those for whom society is unwilling to provide," Smeal said.

"But these services are not being rendered for free. Women are paying...with their lives."

Smeal told the subcommitteee the the National Organization for Women wants Congress to hold a hearing during the 96th session on legislation establishing a Homemaker's Bill of Rights.

Economic rights:

1. A tax policy which enables homemakers to deduct all their educational expenses.
2. Revision of Aid to Families with Dependent Children regulations to cover all educational expenses for homemakers resuming schooling.
3. Loans at modest rates of interest to homemakers who wish to go back to school.
4. Incentives to businesses to train and hire homemakers.

Economic rights for married women:

1. Revision of federal income tax forms to indicate that all income listed on a joint tax return is co-owned.
2. Elimination of gift taxes on interspousal transfers.
3. Inclusion in the GNP of the value of goods and services provided by homemakers.
4. Provision of independent Social Security coverage, including disability in the homemaker's own name, portable in and out of marriage, and continuing as the homemaker leaves and re-enters the paid workforce.

Economic rights for homemakers in transition:

1. Equitable division of property and assets, including pensions and annuities in recognition of the unpaid

He's Spokesman For Men's Glib

By Abigail Van Buren

1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 32-year-old woman, living alone, supporting myself, and respectable in every sense of the word. I'm nothing special to look at (a little on the heavy side) but I never was so hungry for a man I'd date just anybody.

Well, a salesman came into our office two weeks ago and came on to me immediately. He's 36, divorced (no children). We were really attracted to each other. I honestly thought I'd found the man I had been waiting for.

Then he asked me how much money I had in the bank. I told him, and he asked me if I could let him have $2,500 for 90 days. I was shocked since he had told me how "fabulously" he had been doing. It didn't add up.

I said I'd give him the money if he'd sign a note. He got very angry and said if he had wanted to sign a note he'd have gone to a bank.

Now I don't know what to do. Half of me tells me not to give him the money without the note, and the other half tells me to give it to him. I need some advice.

HALF AND HALF

DEAR HALF: Listen to the half with the brains and give him no money without a note.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the widow who wanted to know if she could continue using the name "Mrs. John Doe".

I find it strange that any woman (wife or widow) would want to be called "Mrs. John Doe." It is indeed a peculiar custom and seems as ludicrous as a husband calling himself "Mr. Jane Doe!"

Incidentally, I am not a young radical; I am nearing 50 and have been happily married for 27 years, but I don't call myself "Mrs. Charles LaFollett." Neither does my husband call himself "Mr. Marlene LaFollett."

If you print this you will probably hear from a lot of women who have obtained their identity through their husbands. Their rationale will probably be, "I'm proud to use my husband's name."

To that I would say, "Why doesn't he use your name? Isn't he proud of you?"

Think of it!

MARLENE LAFOLLETT IN COLORADO

DEAR MARLENE: I've thought about it, and it provides another valid reason for the use of "Ms." Read on:

DEAR ABBY: When Jane Roe marries John Doe, she becomes, as you say, "Mrs. John Doe" for the rest of her days should she choose to remain so.

She is a "Mrs." by the fact of her marriage to John, and therefore can only correctly be called "Mrs. Jane Doe" in the event that her husband's first name was Jane! Highly unlikely!

ALEXIS PENCOVIC IN S.F.

DEAR ABBY: Last year you printed the name of a travel club that arranged tours and trips all over the world for non-smokers. I happened to be allergic to tobacco smoke and I can't imagine anything more wonderful than traveling with a group of non-smokers.

I clipped that column, although I wasn't able to travel at the time, but I am very much interested in going this year. Will you please print the name and address of the club again? I'm sure other non-smokers will be interested.

ALLERGIC IN CANTON, ILL.

DEAR ALLERGIC: Write to: Non-Smokers Travel Club of Gasp, 8928 Broadmoor Drive, Bethesda, Md., 20034.

Credit Conway Diet Institute

This mother, grandmother and great grandmother, although unrelated, have each lost 100 pounds or more while following the Ideal 1000 Calorie Diet and attending the weekly Insight Seminars conducted by the Conway Diet Institute.

Mrs. Anna Crum, on the left, is the great-grandmother. She lost 107 pounds. Mrs. Bonnie Greenamyer, the young mother in the center, lost 100½ pounds. Mrs. Marge Fetters, on the right is the grandmother. She's lost 103 pounds.

All three of the ladies are thrilled with their achievements and are delighted to recommend the Conway program to you.

The Conway weight reduction program consists of three main elements:

- The Ideal 1000 calorie diet that includes all food groups and exceeds the established nutritional requirement for adults.
- Weekly educational seminars that deal with the physical, nutritional and emotional causes of overweight.
- The Forever Slim plan for permanently maintaining slimness.

Cabbage Can Be Frozen

Cabbage can be frozen at home for later eating, but it will only be suitable for use as a cooked vegetable.

If cooked cabbage is a favorite with your family, follow these freezing tips from Dr. Nadine Tope, foods and nutrition specialist with the North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service.

Select freshly picked, solid heads and trim the coarse outer leaves.

Then cut the cabbage into medium to coarse shreds or thin wedges, or separate the head into leaves. Heat in boiling water for one and one half minutes. Cool promptly in cold water and drain.

Pack the cabbage into containers, leaving a one half inch headspace. Then seal the cartons and freeze.

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY, JULY 8, 1979

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A day to make sure that you organize the affairs of your every-day existence so you will be able to gain greater progress and with less effort. Engage in activities you really enjoy.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) You have to be more practical if you are to handle daily tasks more efficiently. Express happiness with family members.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Figure out how to put those clever ideas to work which could give you added income in the future. Get the rest you need today.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Analyze our responsibilities well so that you can later handle them with precision. Try to please the one you love.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Plan how to get along better with friends, neighbors and relatives. Show that you are a delightful social companion.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Delve right into all those tasks you have to perform early in the day so you'll have time for social activities later.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You can handle a personal matter well if you approach it from a different angle now. Express happiness with the one you love.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Take steps to clear up the situation at home so there's more harmony there. Plan how to stretch your finances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Attend to important duties you have neglected lately. Try to come to a better understanding with friends and neighbors.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Listen to advice given you by one who is most successful and be sure to follow it for your own advancement.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You have personal desires that can be easily attained at this time. Make this a most worthwhile day and be happy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You can get ahead faster if you put aside all that frivolity you like to indulge in. Show that you are a sensible person.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Good day to go after the data you need and get it quickly from different sources. Show more consideration for the one you love.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will have much ability at organizing, so be sure to equip with as much academic education as you can for greater success during lifetime. Teach to get along harmoniously with others. There is much promise in this chart.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY, JULY 9, 1979

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The benefits that can be yours today come from unexpected sources. Don't force anything, but be patient and wait for the various goodies to drop into your lap.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Look to one who is prominent in civic circles for a favor you need and which is within his jurisdiction to extend. A loved one views you more favorably now.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) If you adopt a new attitude, you can advance more quickly at whatever your ambitions. Meet persons whose ideas are different from your own and you can learn a good deal from them.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Find the best way for carrying through with your responsibilities and then full speed ahead. Your mate could surprise you with added attention and bring more happiness.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) By doing some special favor for friends you like, you ingratiate yourself further into their good graces. A public occurrence can be very pleasing to you personally.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Show that you are an excellent worker. Use a more up-to-date system that will prove more efficient. Some good ideas can come from a fellow worker who is unusually quiet.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Chances are good for receiving an invitation that could make you happy so be sure to accept. Get into creative work which you can handle very well.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) A situation at home will take a new turn, but go along with it for best results. Do some entertaining at home. New personalities can prove inspiring.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Wait a day or two before going off on a trip, running errands, and you accomplish more then. A good time for corresponding and getting good results.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) The latter part of the day is best for handling money and real estate matters. Get good ideas and advice from one who has been most successful.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Let your finest ideas come to the surface and know what best to do both in business and personal relationships, affairs.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Meet with a good advisor and get the information you need to make your life more satisfying. Doing something thoughtful for a loved one is wise. Come to a fine understanding.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Get away from stodgy friends you have outgrown and make new ones who are more progressive. Set different goals for yourself and use right methods for gaining them.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will be able to build a basically sound life for self because of the practical thinking here and a strong mind and body. Teach early to smile more and be charming with others in order to get good results, and to avoid arguments wherever possible.

Summer School Registration

Registration for second session of summer school at Pitt Community College will be held July 9 through July 16, with a variety of day and evening classes available in many areas.

These courses provide an opportunity for interested adults to take selected short courses or get an early start on a degree program. For more information, call 756-3130, or visit Pitt Community College and ask for a counselor.

Avers SALT II A Step Forward

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The president of the 1.8 million-member United Church of Christ told its governing synod that the Salt II treaty is "a small step forward — but a crucial one — toward sane judgments about nuclear arms.'

The Rev. Avery D. Post told about 700 delegates that it can be "the basis for more far-reaching bilateral negotiations in the future" to reduce armaments.

contributions of the homemaker in acquiring and maintaining the family's assets.

2. Vigorous enforcement of maintenance (alimony) orders to assure compensation for the loss of educational opportunities, seniority, advancement, benefits and accrued protection the homemaker would have had if she-he had been in the paid workforce during the years of homemaking.

3. Funding of programs to provide displaced homemakers with job-entry education, training, counseing and placement, and supportive services.

4. Eligibility of homemakers for unemployment compensation.

5. Revision of pension and Social Security laws so divorced homemakers are entitled to retirement and disability benefits for their years of service, and so widowed homemakers are provided with special transition payments if they are not eligible for parent's or retirement benefits.

6. Assurance of widows' right to continued access to the family savings accounts, checking accounts, securities and safety deposit boxes, and continuation of pensions, family insurance coverge, and other employment-related benefits.

"Congress must take immediate action to provide short-term relief for women currently in midlife — and at the same time develop the long-term legislation," Smeal told the subcommittee."

Concerning the Equal Rights Amendment, she claimed, "It's a difficult struggle but we are inching forward slowly."

The new deadline is June 30, 1982. Thirty-five states have ratified but three more must if it is to become part of the constitution.

"You should know," Smeal said, "we went to Washington to testify before the Subcommittee about the needs of women in midlife the anti-ERAs weren't there. We care about the problems of women and we offered solutions."

Smeal is in her second year as president of NOW. An election for the post will take place at NOW's annual meeting in October.

Will Smeal run again?

Showing she learned a lot in those political science courses, Smeal wouldn't say — not just yet and, certainly, not for the record.

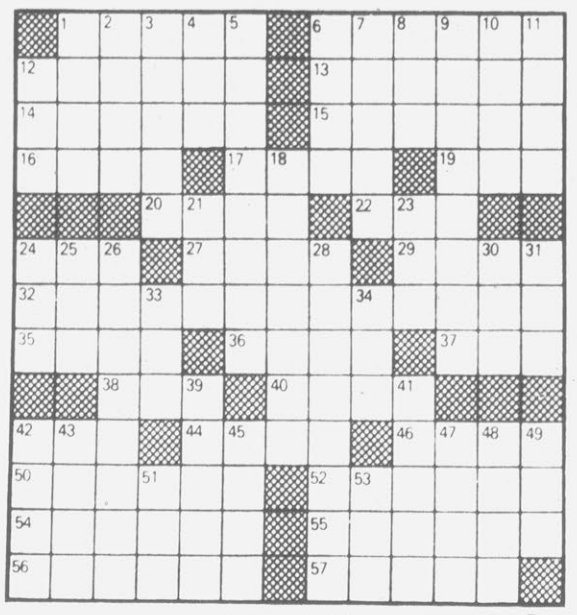
Answer to yesterday's puzzle.



CRYPTOQUIP 7-7

M K B N X M K N K G - W N O C X F B X O S K G K Q S V C S F I V W N F M I Q K G G V X ?

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — OLD MISER MISERABLE: CAN'T CONTROL BUDGET BULGE.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: O equals I

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Psychologist Deplores Concern With Dieting

By GEORGENE KALEINA
Associated Press Writer

BALTIMORE (AP) — America's diet-oriented culture is traumatic for both fat and thin persons who feel they must bow to "the fashion goddess," says a Johns Hopkins Hospital clinical psychologist.

"It is so fashionable to be in with thin that a person strives for that conformity for cosmetic reasons instead of health reasons, which should be the first reason," said Dr. Marie Simonson, who has headed the hospital's health and weight program for 10 years. "Thin is so worshipped by the false goddess of fashion."

While the often-used phrase, "Fat is out, thin is in," exerts pressure on thin persons to keep that sleek look, Dr. Simonson says persons who are moderately overweight or obese feel the grip even more so.

"The thin cult is stress producing," she added.

Dr. Simonson helps obese persons deal with that stress as well as with other problems they encounter in their personal and professional lives.

While obesity — which means to "eat oneself fat" — is a major health problem, Dr. Simonson says she doesn't believe it is a disease.

"I feel it's a symptom of some underlying cause," she said. "We certainly can't say that all emotional problems are caused by obesity, nor can we say that all obesity is caused by emotional problems."

Dr. Simonson describes obese as being 20 pounds over the accepted weight for a person's height, age and body build. For example, a 25-year-old woman who is 5-foot-9 should weigh between 137 pounds and 146 pounds, depending on her body build.

"To use the phrase of Dr. Hilda Bruch (a noted specialist in the treatment of obesity) ... the optimal weight for any person is the weight they feel the best and their health is maintained in the very best manner," she said. "I just don't think we should be a nation of Twiggies."

The psychologist also claims that fat persons are discriminated against in almost every facet of their lives.

Maryland recently passed a joint legislative resolution which calls for an end to discrimination against fat persons. It also asks the state Commission of Human Relations to study ways of ending such discrimination.

Although the resolution was signed by Gov. Harry R. Hughes, it carries no weight of law behind it.

Dr. Simonson says statistics from the U.S. Public Health Service show that some 79 million Americans risk becoming obese. But only some 9.5 million are on a dietary regimen of some kind.

Orienteering Exercise For Both Body And Mind

By G.S. KHALSA

SEATTLE (UPI) — Two young women stood, puzzled, in a wooded area.

"It must be over that way," said one, checking her compass. "What's the clue?"

"It's supposed to be near a twisted tree," replied the other, "and on the map it looks like it's on the top of a hill."

Just then a swift-footed man sped by them in the direction they had indicated. The two women looked at each other and said, "Come on, let's go!"

Nobody was lost, nor was anybody hunting for hidden treasure. What they were doing was participating in a sport fast becoming popular in the Pacific Northwest — orienteering.

Often called the "thinking sport," orienteering involves cross-country navigation over unfamiliar terrain. Competitors set out at five-minute intervals to locate a sequence of control markers using a corresponding set of clues, a compass, their own measured stride and a topographical map.

The time element requires the competitor to make quick decisions and use logical problem solving, technical know-how, physical exertion and sometimes outright intuition in order to "punch-out" at all the control points and return to the starting desk.

While a well-conditioned runner has the advantage of speed, accuracy and mental decisiveness are equally important because often the shortest distance between two points is not a straight line.

"Outstanding physical ability is not always the determining factor," says Mike Sherman, who helps run the Cascade Orienteering Club. "In mixed events, it has sometimes been the woman who selected the best route and has won over the other competitors."

The club was formed last November and sponsors events on a regular basis. The meets usually take place at Fort Lewis or in Seattle's Seward Park. At one recent gathering, Sherman said many orienteering enthusiasts have had similar training and experience in the armed forces and the ROTC — with one difference.

"We try to keep it fun," he said. "Orienteering is not just competition. It is a complete sport, that is to say the body is exercised and the mind absorbed — the criterion for success is your own personal enjoyment."

Stewart, who has competed in meets from North Carolina to South Korea, says orienteering is "like an infection."

"After finding that first point, you become enthralled. You look at the map and then imagine what you're going to be seeing. Then off you go, and it really takes the mind off jogging. Sometimes I've run five miles without knowing it."

Jean and Bob Hendrickson of Seattle, both in their 50s, are regulars at the orienteering races, but their interest, like that of other families who show up, is clearly not in winning.

"We come out here because we like the outdoors and the sport adds some adventure to our daily walk," Bob said.

There are usually separate courses for beginner and advanced orienteers. But young women, middle-aged couples, Cub Scouts and ex-Marines often compete in the same race.

Competitive orienteering began in Scandinavia during the latter part of the 19th century. The competition stems from military exercises based on the idea of getting messages through unknown areas.

Internationally, orienteering has reached 23 countries. In the United States, the U.S. Orienteering Federation has grown to over 2,000 members in over 50 clubs across the country.

Tennis Class Is Underway

GRIFTON — Tennis instruction began last week in Grifton in connection with the Grifton Summer Recreation Program, with more lessons to begin for the general public as soon as the new surface is ready to play at the Town Park tennis courts.

Those who are interested in taking lessons should call Mrs. Cora Darrah, 524-4475, She will notify those interested as soon as possible when she knows she can start lessons.

Mrs. Darrah, who recently moved to Grifton from Durham, has an extensive background in tennis, and has volunteered to teach Grifton's elementary tennis lessons.

While the court renovation process is going on, Mrs. Darrah is teaching interested children in the mornings on the old concrete pad in front of the new park building.

The Grifton Recreation Commission is asking citizens to make sure that no hard objects be used to gouge holes in the new surface. Only tennis shoes should be worn on the courts, and bicycles, skateboards, and other objects should not be used inside the fenced area. Drink bottles and cans should be kept outside the fence.

FIRST RAIL PENSION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first jointly-sponsored pension plan in the United States was established in 1880 by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and its employees' union, according to the American Council of Life Insurance.

Prof Says Three Mile Island Mishap A 'Blessing'

By RON WORD
Associated Press Writer

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — "Three Mile Island was the most fortunate thing to ever happen to the nuclear industry," an Oklahoma University nuclear engineering professor says.

Dr. Charles W. Terrell said the Three Mile Island accident in Pennsylvania will cause an examination of the nuclear industry, the civil defense procedures and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Terrell feels that nuclear accidents shouldn't be tolerated.

"We can't have Three Mile Islands. We can't expect the public to accept it," Terrell said. "Three Mile Island was very serious and totally unacceptable."

He said despite the seriousness of the accident, "the best thing is that nobody got hurt." Maximum exposure outside the plant, he said, was the equivalent of two chest X-rays.

He said other nuclear accidents have been controlled without death or injury. There was a core meltdown in a plant near Detroit in 1969, but there was "not a single overexposure," Terrell said.

"A few weeks ago 276 people died in a DC-10 crash. The DC-10 will be be a safer airplane, but look what it cost. Reactors will be safer because of Three Mile Island and it didn't cost one damn thing," Terrell said.

Terrell, who teaches nuclear engineering at OU, is strongly in favor of nuclear power generation and believes the country should press forward with the development of a fast breeder reactor.

A fast breeder reactor, similiar to those which supply 40 percent of the power in France and 20 percent of Germany's electric needs, produces more plutonium than it uses, he said.

President Carter stopped development of the fast breeder reactor because of fears the plutonium could be stolen and used in weapons, Terrell said.

"It is the worst type of plutonium for a weapon," he said, adding that plutonium from a breeder reactors is unsuitable for weapons.

All the nuclear power reactors now in use in the United States are light water thermal reactors.

In addition to nuclear energy, Terrell said the federal government should have been working for 20 years to develop alternate sources of energy.

"I see no indication on the federal level that any way indicates there is an energy crisis," he said. "If the energy situation is as Carter indicates, the equivalent of war, he does not act like he is fighting a war," Terrill said.

Terrill, who was president of the Indiana Institute of Technology for five years before coming to OU, said he would have no fears about living next to a nuclear plant and feels the Black Fox Nuclear Power Plant near Inola should be built.

"Black Fox would give the state of Oklahoma, very clean, safe power," he said. He added that nothing is completely safe, but said the chances of a major nuclear accident contaminating great numbers of people is very unlikely.

"Black Fox would be safer than a coal plant," he said.

Some of the research being done by Terrell is studying the amount of radioactivity released by coal. He said coal is rich in uranium and its burning releases more radioactivity into the air than does a nuclear power plant.

Terrell said the amount of waste generated by a nuclear power plant is insignificant compared with the waste from a coal power plant.

"Coal plants basically are filthy," Terrell said.

A thousand megawatt coal plant used 27 million pounds of coal a day and produces about 27 million pounds of waste, he said.

But a similiar size nuclear plant, such as the Black Fox plant, produces one cubic yard of highly concentrated waste a year.

He said nuclear wastes can be placed in salt domes in New Mexico for a few hundred years. But he feels they should be stored in such a form that they could be moved if need be. He said the byproducts in them may be worth a fortune in a few years.

Terrell, who has been a nuclear engineer for 25 years, said without nuclear power the country would be crippled.

Chicago receives 50 percent of its power from nuclear plants. "It would be economic disaster," Terrell said if nuclear power were shut off in Chicago.

"Jerry Brown is for closing every nuclear plant down. Where would he make up the 13 percent loss? Los Angeles would go black," Terrell said. "Once this country was blacked out, there would be screams for nuclear power."

"You'll find the scientists who are opponents of nuclear power are not credible in the nuclear field. Dr. Spock may be a good baby doctor, but he doesn't know about nuclear energy," Terrell said.

"It's too bad nuclear power started with a bomb," he said.

Terrell discounts the belief that windmills and solar energy can be used to solve the country's energy problems.

"Electric power needs to be mass produced to get it economically," he said. He said a thousand megawatt plant can produce electricity for 3.5 cents per kilowatt hour. He said solar power and wind power can't compete on a large scale.

The small swimming pool reactor, containing only 800 grams of uranium 235, is used for teaching and research.

In its 20 years of operation, there have been no problems with it, Terrell said. He said there has never even been an overexposure.

There are currently about 100 students enrolled in nuclear engineering at OU. The college has bachelor's, masters and doctorate programs in nuclear engineering.

Friends' Help Shaves The Construction Cost

SHEBOYGAN, Wis. (AP) — The three-story home built by Gerald Ruppel and his buddies represents what he says is a savings of $20,000 in construction costs and what Mrs. Ruppel calls an extra feeling of security.

Having once remodeled a stable as a home for his family, and having worked with display designers for his company, which manufactures bathroom equipment, Ruppel figured he had enough do-it-yourself knowledge to build the home of his dreams on a wooded acre lot near Lake Michigan.

What he had not expected, he said, was that he had so many friends willing to assist that he could be living in the nearly finished house within 15 months — including two winter months when their work was suspended.

"They showed up every night almost," said Helen Ruppel, who provided the volunteers with picnic meals. "He never asked them. They just came and asked if they could help."

Ruppel, 39, said former high-school chum "Eddie Huberty works nights in Milwaukee, but he'd show up first thing in the morning ready to go. You'd have thought he'd want to sleep."

Al Fischer, another high-school friend, did the electrical wiring, and it passed inspection of a professional as required in building codes.

Mrs. Ruppel said John Bauer, who works at the Kohler Co. with Ruppel, had volunteered "two or three weeks of his vacation."

Bauer also contributed the only moment of worry.

She said he had been working at the peak of the roof that slopes downward the length of the modern-style home, lost his grip and slid the length of it. However, his 8-foot plunge off the lower edge of the roof ended safely in a snowbank which Ruppel had just shoveled, she related.

"We really had no catastrophes," she said, "nor any really big mistakes. Jerry had everything planned out."

Ruppel, who had plumbing and some masonry done by professionals, said he couldn't make an estimate on the cost of the project, except to say that the labor of a half dozen friends must have saved him $20,000.

Mrs. Ruppel, a Sheboygan Falls school teacher, says the house is solidly built compared with some of those she has heard described by persons who have had their dwellings erected by professional contractors.

Ruppel developed his plans for the basementless house, which has 1,942 square feet of living space, from a plan he found in a home-fashion magazine.

It is built predominantly of redwood, has a large masonry fireplace, two overhanging decks on separate floors, walls and ceilings finished in exposed wood planks, and is set among pines against a slight slope.

The only hitch in meeting zoning and building codes was having to get neighbors to agree to a variance governing the level of an unattached garage.

From Fischer's wiring to Bauer's roof work, "we feel so secure with this house," said Mrs. Ruppel, whose family includes daughters aged 10 and 7.

The Ruppels said none of the workers expected reciprocal assistance should they attempt similar projects of their own.

But Ruppel has been known for years as someone who shares his expertise in interior designing with friends, his wife said.

"It comes easy to him," she said. "As friends remodel a house or add a room, they call Jerry with questions, and he picks up samples or drafts some plans and goes to help them."

Restoring Peregrine Falcon Is No Small Triumph For Man

By KAY BARTLETT
AP Newsfeatures Writer

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Black fish crows circled overhead, hungrily eying a pair of eggs in a man-made aerie on the seacoast of New Jersey, waiting for the adult birds to fly off.

Man, too, was watching. Those were special eggs. If all went well, two tiny white balls of fluff would emerge — the first peregrine falcons born in the wild on the eastern seacoast in 20 years.

Mankind — particularly, mankind's DDT — had nearly wiped him out. Now he's back, tenuously and in small numbers.

It is no small triumph, specifically for Dr. Thomas Cade of Cornell University, an ornithologist who nine years ago began a program to restore the peregrine to the eastern United States.

Today, a lucky bird watcher might see this deadly hunter with slate-colored body and eyes eight to 10 times sharper than man's.

A truly fortunate birder might even espy the majesty of his swoop, his bullet-like pounce from the heavens to snare his prey. The falcon falls on his victim at speeds up to 200 mph. The precision of his rapier-like talons usually kills instantly.

Since 1974, Cade has released 154 captively-bred peregrine falcons along the eastern seaboard, from New Hampshire to Virginia. Another 50 were to be released this summer.

But the ultimate goal of this project — propagation in the wild — must wait at least another year. The special eggs didn't hatch.

"One egg was found on the ground below the tower," says Cade. "The female had stopped incubating. The other two simply disappeared. Fish crows may have gotten them. We saw attempted fish crow predation before, but there wasn't much we could do about it."

Cade, 51, figures there may be 42 potential breeders in the wild, counting the estimated and known survivors from the 1978 release.

He calls his program a partial success. "We have succeeded in raising large numbers of peregrine falcons in captivity. We have not succeeded in establishing breeding pairs in the wild."

The bird had been bred in captivity before, but it was difficult. Like many birds that mate for life, the peregrine falcon is picky about a companion. The stronger and heavier female might kill the mate if something goes wrong with the bird chemistry.

And even when man second-guessed nature as a matchmaker, the problem of aerial courtship arose. The tiercel, the male, likes miles of air space to perform his barrel rolls, loop-the-loops and imaginary dogfights. A cage seriously cramps his style.

About one-third of the males modified their courtship rite, flying in a cage 10 by 15 by 18 feet. But there could be a catch. "Perhaps the birds we would want as breeders are the ones who would not adapt," says Cade.

Twenty-two eggs were hatched in 1973, all from three sets of parents. The first two fledglings were released in 1974.

Six or seven have been shot over the years, three fatally. Raccoons and foxes have taken a few, some have become disoriented and flown into the sea. Others are just missing, despite banding and transistors on the birds.

The celebrity among them is Scarlett. In 1978 she picked Baltimore's highest building, the 35-story U.S. Fidelity and Guarantee Insurance Co., as her home.

Scarlett laid two eggs — both infertile. Cade found her a friend, Blue Meanie, a Texas peregrine. When the scientists decided the two would be compatible, Blue Meanie was released. He and Scarlett soared off to the wild blue yonder, but he just kept soaring. Another male was similarly disappointing.

Since Scarlett seemed so unlucky in love, Cade decided to help in a different way. One day while she was out hunting, he replaced her eggs with two chicks, later adding two more.

"At first she seemed to be, well, shocked. That's not a very scientific thing to say, but that bird looked shocked," says Tom Maechtle, who works with the peregrine project.

But soon she started flying out for pigeons, grabbing two or three a day and ripping them apart for the youngsters' meals.

Scarlett flies higher than the eye can see, cruises the Baltimore harbor and sometimes an executive gazing out over Baltimore will get a window's eye view of the magnificent stoop. He doesn't see much — just a blur rocketing downward. It's Scarlett.

Preparing Girl Scout Troops

GRIFTON — Girls who wish to participate in Brownie or Junior Girl Scouts in Grifton in the fall should indicate their interest by contacting Mrs. Janet Haseley, 524-4356, so a determination can be made of how many troops will be needed for the coming year.

Brownies are girls ages 6-8 or in grades 1-3. Juniors are ages 9-11 or in grades 4-6.

Troops have met in the past in the afternoons after school, or in the early evenings. Persons, male or female, should contact Mrs. Haseley if interested in aiding the Scouting effort in Grifton, either as troop leaders or program consultants.

Plan Auditions For Telethon

NEW BERN — Talent auditions for the Second Annual Cystic Fibrosis Telethon will be held Monday, July 9, 7 p.m., and Saturday, July 14, 10 a.m., in the New Bern Centenary Methodist Church. Co-sponsored by the New Bern Jaycees and Jaycettes and WCTI-TV, the Telethon will be shown for 19 hours beginning August 10 through 6 p.m. on August 11.

All persons interested in performing should call, 633-5092, for more information.

Boating Course Begins July 11

Greenville Flotilla 16-05 of the Coast Guard Auxiliary will offer a three-lesson Boating Course during July.

The classes will be held from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., July 11, 18, and 25, in one of the activity rooms of the Greenville Recreation Department, 2000 Cedar Lane.

It is a comprehensive course of instruction, and a combination text and workbook will be used to train new boaters in boat operation and marine safety.

Enrollment costs $3 per family. The fee will cover cost of the textbook and other materials.

First American To Head Order

ASSISI, Italy (AP) — A Californian, the Rev. John Vaughn, has been elected minister general of the Franciscans, the 116th succssor to St. Francis of Assisi and the first U.S. citizen to be elected to head the worldwide order.

Known officially as the Order of Friars Minor, it has 23,000 members worldwide, second in size among Roman Catholic orders only to the 27,000-member Jesuits.

Vaughn, 51, of Oakland, Calif., who has been head of the order's Santa Barbara province since 1976, succeeds the Rev. Constantine Koser, a Brazilian. The top office has usually been held by Germans or Italians in this century.

Although another U.S. citizen, the late Valentine Schaaf of Cincinnati, served about a year as Franciscan minister general by appointment of the late Pope Pius XII in 1945, Vaughn is the first U.S. citizen to be elected by the order's governing general chapter for a full six-year term.

Special Interest In Those Growing Old In Prison

By LORI COOKE
Associated Press Writer

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Ernest Austin is facing many of the problems of growing old.

At 64, he has arthritis and is hard of hearing. He's not able to move quickly, and he just had his last three teeth pulled.

But for Austin, the problems are compounded because he is in prison — a place where traditionally there's been little or no provision for the elderly.

The state Corrections Department is trying to help elderly and disabled inmates with a program designed to deal with their health problems and give them something meaningful to do.

Authorities say Austin's problems are similar to those of many others who are growing old behind bars.

"I asked one of them what he liked to do and he said, 'Sit in a corner and stay out of trouble,'" said Susan Summerlin, the nurse-supervisor of the prison program for the old and disabled.

The program is getting under way at the Durham Correctional Center. So far, 23 elderly and infirm prisoners have moved into the the special unit, and supervisors are setting up individual medical and special-activity programs for them.

To draw the older inmates — the ones who just want to sit in a corner — into activities with other people, the staffers play shuffleboard, horseshoes, volleyball and basketball with them. Unit Superintendent Gary Newkirk is working with Durham County's Coordinating Council of Senior Citizens to encourage senior citizens in the community to visit the unit to bring in certain activities and "limited social contact."

Some prisoners will visit the council twice a week for the same kind of activities found in senior-citizen centers anywhere. They range from exercise classes and yoga to gardening and flower arranging to the old standbys of chess and checkers.

"We're holding classes here in health care," said Ms. Summerlin. "We have a lot of diabetics, so we're going to hold small classes in how to deal with the disease. Some of them have health problems relating to alcohol, so we have a chapter of Alcoholics Anonymous here. Some need dental care," — like Austin, whose mouth has to be washed out regularly until he's fitted for dentures.

The nurses also deal with more basic hygiene problems. A handmade and illustrated sign posted in their office inquires of inmates, "Have you combed your hair this morning? Have you brushed your teeth? Have you shaved?"

"They just forget," Ms. Summerlin said. "There's nobody to impress."

"They just forget," Ms. Summerlin said. "There's nobody to impress."

Austin was first sentenced to 40 years in prison in 1961, when he was 46 years old. He had killed a man who had assaulted him two years earlier. When he was paroled, he got a job hanging chickens to be plucked in a poultry plant. But excessive drinking led to a parole violation and now he is at the geriatric unit.

He is strong enough to hold his own with prison personnel in a game of shuffleboard, and Ms. Summerlin says he has no special health problems. But age and 18 years in and out of prison have taken their toll. He's slow-moving, arthritic and hard-of-hearing. Austin works as a janitor around the center office.

"I can't complain about it here," he said. "I never knock any place."

Elijah Burgess, 59, has medical problems that need special attention. Burgess, who is serving two years for breaking and entering, is an epileptic, Ms. Summerlin said.

He has sight and hearing difficulties and can't do any heavy work or work that involves standing for long or using machinery. Burgess has been at the geriatric unit for two months.

"I'm getting better treatment here," he said. "It's better for me, I'm sure." Before coming to Durham, Burgess was in the large Triangle Correctional Center near Raleigh.

At 46, Floyd Thomas is four years younger than the minimum age for the state program. But he is an epileptic who was already at the Durham Correctional Center, and since state programs at a center must be made available to all inmates, this one was made available to him, too.

Thomas can remember the first day he went to prison — June 12, 1965. He has been in and out six times since then and is now serving a 10-month sentence for assault. He's working in the kitchen of the prison unit.

"I'd rather be here where there's something to do," he said of the new unit.

Besides being 50 or older, the inmates must have a long-term, non-acute health problem, that precludes them from taking part in regular prison work assignments, to be eligible for the program.

To keep the pisoners active and involved, administrators are setting up an advisory committee of prisoners to let officials know what kind of programs they want.

"So many old people lose all say in what they'll do," Newkirk said. "Young people can take care of themselves and make their own way. These people cannot."

"Motivation is one big thing," Ms. Summerlin added. "We try to let them know there's still something to live for."

Newkirk said while some of the inmates at the geriatric unit willl spend the rest of their lives there, many will not. Most will be eligible for release or parole eventually.

Burgess is one who will be eligible for parole in a short time. Newkirk said Burgess would probably be placed in a rest home after he is released, possibly a rest home where he will be able to go out and do some light work.

As the program expands and more infirm prisoners come in, Newkirk plans to convert a mobile housing unit into a three-bedroom dormitory to house three to six prisoners. The dormitory will be for prisoners who can't tolerate having too many people or too much noise around them.

It will also be easier to construct handrails and ramps for wheelchair-bound prisoners into the mobile units, Newkirk said. Eventually, he plans to divide the Durham Correctional Center, which will still house younger prisoners, into two areas.

The regular indoor dormitory will have elderly and infirm prisoners on one side and minimum-security inmates on the other. Each group will also have a mobile dormitory, the one for the elderly to be equipped with rails and ramps. Finally, there'll be the dormitory for the prisoners who don't want too much noise or people around — usually the very old.

"This program is designed for the lonely old person," said Richard Kiel, diector of Health Services for the Department of Corrections.

"Their health precludes any kind of work assignment, and they need activities to fill their time."

The state received a $95,900 grant from the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration to fund most of the program. The state makes up the rest of the $119,920 cost of the program.

'Glossolalia' Is Held Legitimate

PASADENA (AP) — Christians who participate in glossolalia — speaking in "unknown tongues" — are taking part in a legitimate religious experience, says the report of a study by psychologists at Fuller Theological Seminary.

Tests used were designed by the seminary's clinical psychology department to determine whether tongues-speakers were stable people or were exhibiting signs of instability.

Psychologist H. Newton Maloney says findings were that glosslalia did not indicate instability and had no more effect on personality integration than particiaption in any mutually supportive group.

"Glosslalia," he says, "must be viewed as a valid form of religious expression and not as a psychopathological symptom."

Some First Offenders Given A Second Chance

By KAREN MacPHERSON
United Press International

Jerry C. stole a car because it gave him "something to do."

Bill W. drank and drove because "it was fun."

Mary, Jerry and Bill could have been sentenced to jail. Instead, all three first-offenders were sentenced to community service work — Mary in a nursing home, Jerry and Bill in a hospital — to pay restitution for their crimes.

"It's the first time someone really needed me," said Mary, from Richmond, Va. "I thought I was going straight to jail. But I got a chance to take a second look at my life and what I want to do with it with this volunteering."

Jail alternatives, giving first-time offenders a second chance through community service work or academic training, are beginning to loosen the strictures of the American criminal justice system. Until 10 years ago, few states had any such programs, which many corrections officials viewed as "soft sentencing."

But alternatives have become increasingly popular as a way to cut overcrowding and jailing costs, now estimated at $15,000 per prisoner per year and up.

Many judges, prosecutors and police officers are still opposed to these alternatives. They say they provide no deterrent.

Since 1973, Minnesota has had a Community Corrections Act, under which a person convicted of a nonviolent crime is sentenced to one of a variety of alternatives, ranging from halfway houses to academic training.

California has also been in the forefront of the alternative movement. It has Community Day Center schools where juvenile offenders are given individualized attention. The state most recently instituted a program of house arrest, in which an offender is ordered to remain at home except when working.

Other states, including New York and Pennsylvania, have started to use alternatives such as pre-trial diversion, where an offender is placed on probation and ordered to undergo counseling and attend vocational classes.

Many of the state programs now under consideration are modeled on projects created by private groups, such as Offender Aid and Restoration, based in Charlottesville, Va., and the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

The Edna McConnell Clark Foundation of New York finances the search for jail alternatives by such private organizations.

"There have to be better ways to deal with nonviolent offenders than mindlessly tossing them into jails and prisons," said John R. Coleman, president of the Clark Foundation. "Most of our institutions turn out even more failures than they take in."

Judge Albert Kramer of East Norfolk District Court in Quincy, Mass., set up an innovative program in which defendants "work off" their offenses through jobs provided by private employers.

"We're not snake charmers...and the people we work with are not honor students," said Kramer. "But my own view is that in cases where drugs or alcohol are not involved, alternatives can be far more effective than incarceration."

Kramer developed his program, called "Earn It," after he became frustrated with the "revolving door system of American justice.

"My program is based on the philosophy that an offender should not be given a second or third chance...he should have to earn it," Kramer said. "We ask private employers to provide hours of work to a defendant who...uses one-third of his salary for expenses and gives two-thirds of it to his victim."

In the last five years, about 3,500 defendants have participated in the program — the largest restitution effort in the country — and this year, 1,200 defendants are expected to return about $140,000 to their victims, Kramer said.

A case cited by Kramer in his brochure for prospective participants in the "Earn It" program:

Jim, a 19-year-old Randolph (Mass.) youth, owed $126 in restitution for damage he caused. Placed with a Randolph employer, he earned the money and paid his victim. He also proved to be a valuable employee and was hired full-time when a position became available.

Because 90 percent of the offenses for which people are imprisoned are offenses against property, Kramer believes his program provides a way to satisfy the victim, teach the defendant and keep corrections costs down.

As an bonus, about 30 percent of the offenders keep their jobs after the court-ordered period of employment.

"The others get a letter of reference and the feeling that they've paid back their victim," Kramer said.

Restitution to victims is also a part of Offender Aid and Restoration's mediation-dispute projects in Elmira, N.Y., and Wilmington, N.C., which give victims and offenders an opportunity to resolve disputes with a trained mediator.

"Many feel it's about time victims have more input into the system," said Cheryl Dellinger, a volunteer coordinator at OAR's Wilmington office.

To increase the effectiveness of the jail alternatives movement, OAR has joined 28 other organizations to form the National Coalition for Jail Reform.

"The coalition really all came together around the idea that jails are the most abysmal part of the criminal justice system," said Kay Harris, director of the Washington office of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

"We're focusing on creating alternatives to end inappropriate confinement among three groups — children under 18 years of age, mentally ill and mentally retarded persons, and public inebriates."

One of the most successful alternatives is community service work, in which a defendant is sentenced to work a specified number of hours at a non-profit agency, such as a nursing home or hospital.

"Many offenders who have started out as volunteers at a hospital or nursing home elect to work there permanently," said Judge Kramer, who includes community service work in his "Earn It" program. "Some of these offenders had turned to shoplifting, for example, because they needed something more in their life...something they may find in volunteer work."

"Besides being cost-effective, community service work benefits everybody involved," said Robert Mordhorst, director of OAR's Richmond branch. "Agencies where offenders are assigned can certainly use the help and offenders get a chance to make amends and feel good about it, instead of walking around with a cloud over their heads."

Offenders agree.

"I wasn't a real criminal, I just didn't have anything to do," said Jerry C., 16, who was convicted of auto theft. "The judge sentenced me to work at a hospital. I still go there a lot because I know they can use the help and because it keeps me out of trouble."

"It was good for me," said Bill W., convicted of drunk driving, and also sentenced to hospital work. "It made me realize there was someone around other than myself."

Philadelphia has been particularly active in community service work, using its Accelerated Rehabilitation Disposition program to lower its jail population.

Under the ARD program, an offender is sentenced to probation and can be required to undergo psychiatric or drug counseling, attend classes or make financial restitution.

If the defendant complies with the terms of probation, his arrest record is expunged. If he violates the probation, he can be rearrested and tried.

Of the 250 persons admitted into the ARD program each week, only five are rearrested each month for violating the terms of probation, said Thomas E. Butler, chief of the screening and diversion unit of the Philadelphia District Attorney's office.

"The whole point of this program is, number one, to separate the people who are not real crooks and to rate their cases differently in the expectation...that they won't repeat crimes and, number two, give them something that will rehabilitate them," said Butler.

The most recent innovation in jail alternatives — house arrest — carries pre-trial probation a step farther, cutting jail costs even more. Under the program, used mainly in California, an offender is sentenced to stay home except when he is at his job or shopping, and must report daily to a probation officer.

Stanley Golde, an Oakland, Calif., Superior Court judge who has sentenced several defendants to house arrest, said it differs from probation because he can throw the defendant in jail for a violation of the conditions. "Under the conditions of probation," he said, the offender "would be entitled to a hearing and a lawyer before that happened."

Lorraine Hawkes, 42, of Redwood, Calif., was sentenced to one year of house arrest after pleading no contest to a charge of attempting to murder her ex-boyfriend.

"I know something was called for, but I'm glad it's this," she said. "I'm making the assumption that I'm my own jailer. I'm taking on this responsibility."

Although offenders praise jail alternatives, some judges, prosecutors and police have charged some alternatives actually increase the crime rate by failing to provide a deterrent.

"There's nothing new about soft sentencing at all," said Bill Hoffman, chief assistant district attorney for Santa Clara County, Calif. "But if you're going to give them nothing, give them nothing and be up front about it."

"I think the need for alternatives to jail sentencing is a real one, but that it should be balanced with the need for making punishment meaningful for someone who has broken the law," said Joseph Jordan, a Norfolk, Va., District Court judge often tagged the "law and order judge."

"We can't talk about alternatives until we have seriously considered whether or not we're imposing punishment properly — which I believe we are not," he said.

"We're a nation under siege by the criminal element. Why should we make it any easier for them?"

The proponents of alternatives response, as it is put by Robert Mordhorst, the Richmond OAR director:

"The deeper an offender moves into the jail system, the worse off he gets. Jail alternatives are not only better for the offender, they are also best for society.

"Our biggest challenge is convincing judges to take a more active stand in using alternatives. We need to show them that sending nonviolent offenders to jail is like 'sowing to the wind and reaping to the whirlwind.'"

One group involved in educating judges about jail alternatives is the National Center for State Courts, based in Williamsburg, Va.

"If judges don't back alternatives programs, they'll fail," said Margretta Johnson, an NCSC staff associate. "We are attempting to gather data showing how alternatives impact on the correctional system."

Ms. Johnson said the NCSC also hopes to nominate an advisory panel of judges to assist the organization in spreading the good word about alternatives.

"We'll be asking these judges to serve as our missionaries," she said. "We want them to carry information about alternatives to other members of the judiciary."

Propane Gas Is Kept In Cavern

By excavating 17,000 tons of zoisite, a non-porous rock that can hold gas so it can't escape, Solar Gas created an underground cavern with a 14-million gallon capacity for storing propane.

Every year since 1962, the company has filled the cavern with propane gas during the spring and summer when supplies are plentiful. By fall, a ready supply is on hand for when it is needed.

$59,900—LAKE ELLSWORTH. In excellent condition, this 2 story, 3 bedroom home has much in the way of enjoyable living to offer your family. The floorplan speaks "comfort" with its formal entry hall, living room, tastefully decorated dining room, "U"-shaped kitchen with dinette area, utility space, family room with fireplace, 2½ baths, covered walk to the 2 car garage. Ready just for you and your family.

$59,900—GREENBRIAR. This well-taken-care-of older home will provide pleasant living for your family, for not only does it offer 4 bedrooms, 2 baths, entry hall, dining and living rooms, kitchen/breakfast room, den and garage, it also has a swimming pool. If you think it sounds good from this ad, then let us show it to you...you'll really like it.

$59,900—CHERRY OAKS. 3 bedrooms, 2 baths, 2 car garage, formal areas, kitchen with dinette nook, den with fireplace.

$62,000—TUCKER ESTATES. A handsome Williamsburg home, with traditional ... displayed in the entry hall, dining and liv... room, den with fireplace, and 3 bedrooms. 2 ... baths, ample closet space, attic areas. Truly lovely. SOLD

$67,500—FRENCH PROVENCIAL IN TUCKER ESTATES. If you're "for" easy living, "for" a truly well-planned interior, "for" pretty pastel green and neutral colors, "for" over 1,850 square feet of floor space, then don't hold it "against" us if this house is SOLD before you see it. See it now - tomorrow may be too late.

$69,500—Truly one of the homiest homes we've had on the market in quite a while with its country-style patchwork wallpaper in the kitchen, formal dining room, great room with cathedral ceiling and fireplace to add to its coziness, 3 bedrooms, 2 baths, utility room, and screened-in back porch, set off and nicely accented by a nicely landscaped yard with split-rail fence.

$69,900—WESTHAVEN III. If you like natural settings, natural siding, and peace and quiet, then you'll love this listing! Offering 2½ baths, 3 large bedrooms, entry hall, dining and living room, combination breakfast/kitchen with lots of cabinets, and den with fireplace. Wood deck on the back of this house is shaded for pleasant evenings. By appointment only.

$71,500—TUCKER ESTATES. A handsome ranch-style house that will fool you for this one looks small, yet is LARGE. Slate flooring in the entry foyer, formal dining and living rooms, 7½ x 12 breakfast room off kitchen, 20 x 14 family room with fireplace, and 3 bedrooms nearly complete this home. There's a carport behind this house and the only thing missing is YOU, as its new owner.

$76,900—GRIFTON. A real "Queen Mary" of a house, your family will sail into a whole new life-style in this 6 bedroom, 3½ bath, house. Over 4,000 square feet of "deck" to enjoy; a galley that would make Onassis yearn, and a den large enough to put your dinghy in (that is, if you have one). Don't let prices scuttle your desire to own this beauty, we'll be glad to pipe you aboard this lovely home.

Pan Am Games on CBS

CBS Sports is presenting exclusive coverage of the eighth quadrennial Pan American Games, from San Juan, Puerto Rico. This coverage of the most important amateur competition in the Western Hemisphere will be seen Sunday, July 8 (1:30 to 4 p.m.), Saturday, July 14 (2:30 to 5:30 p.m.), Sunday, July 15 (4 to 6 p.m.).

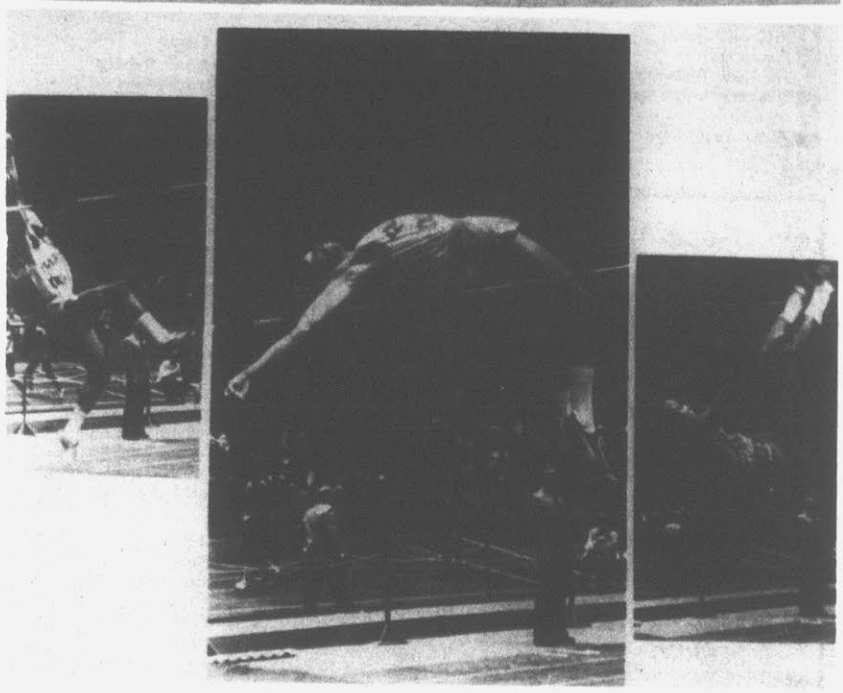
The United States alone has sent more than 700 athletes, coaches and officials and is hoping to dominate the Games again. In 1975, at the seventh Pan American Games, the U.S. won 246 medals (nearly half of them gold), while Cuba, its closest competitor, won 118 medals (56 of them gold). Canada was third with 91 medals (19 gold).

In track and field, the American team is headed by high jumper Franklin Jacobs; Renaldo Nehemiah, the 110-meter hurdles world record holder; distance runner Frank Shorter; sprinter Harvey Glance, and discus Olympic champion Mac Wilkins.

The U.S. women's track and field team is led by hurdles champion Deby LaPlante; 1,500 meters specialist Jan Merrill; sprinter Brenda Morehead and shotput star Maren Seidler.

The United States Gymnastics Federation selects the four men and four women who are taking part in the Games, and the selection has produced gymnasts who, while not necessarily America's best, will use the Games as a springboard toward the Olympics. The U.S. women's team, which has never lost the team title in the Pan Am Games, is strong once again this year and heading that team will be 16-year-old Heidi Anderson from Reading, Pa., who recently took gold medals in the floor exercise and balance beam in the U.S. national championships. Also on the team is 17-year-old Linda Kardos from Washington, Pa., who is coached by former Olympian and Olympic coach Muriel Grossfield.

America should be very strong in both men's and women's basketball. Heading the men's team are Kyle Macy of Kentucky, Michael Brooks of LaSalle, Mike O'Koren of North Carolina, and 7-foot 3-inch high school sensation Ralph Sampson. The team is coached by Indiana's Bobby Knight.



HIGH JUMPER Franklin Jacobs is a member of the United States track field team now in San Juan, Puerto Rico, for the Pan American Games. CBS-TV is presenting exclusive coverage of the event Sunday, July 8 (1:30 to 4 p.m.), Saturday, July 14 (2:30 to 5:30 p.m.), and Sunday, July 15 (4 to 6 p.m.).

Jones Stars In 'Paris'

It doesn't happen often — a kid who stammers so badly that he can't communicate with the teachers and classmates growing up to become an outstanding actor. But it does happen, and James Earl Jones, a Tony Award winner for his outstanding performance in "The Great White Hope," did it.

Jones, whose strong characteristic is his manner of speaking in deep, measured tones, says he still is occasionally plagued with the stammer, but he combats it by choosing words that "don't trip me."

Now Jones is pulling a 'crossover' by leaving the stage to star as a cop in one of CBS-TV's fall entries — "Paris."

"I've always been looking for a series. When monthly shows like 'Columbo' were popular, I was looking for one . . . a series I could be comfortable in for several years."

"'Paris,' says the man who will be playing him, was more or less created for Jones. The hour-long show, scheduled to air Saturdays at 10 p.m., has Jones starring as Woody Paris, a detective who teaches criminology at night.

"Paris gets the special cases, the ticklish situations for the police department. He's brought in as the goat, the sucker. He doesn't play the dummy," explains Jones, "but he is unassuming."

Jones is modeling his character after Jesse Brewer, a commander on the Los Angeles police force. "He actually formed the SWAT outfit, but he never killed anyone — he shot at them, but he's glad he never killed anyone."

Jones, who had the choice role of Alex Haley in "Roots: The Next Generations," calls himself a "novice" in television, but he still has some definite opinions about the medium. "I've felt the futility of doing social drama. What you get out of that is whitie against blackie — and television's mass audience doesn't go for that.

A Different Kind Of Story

Here's a television show that sounds really different from the fare that's been coming into your homes over the past several seasons; it's CBS-TV's "Big Shamus, Little Shamus," described by the network as a "character-detective drama."

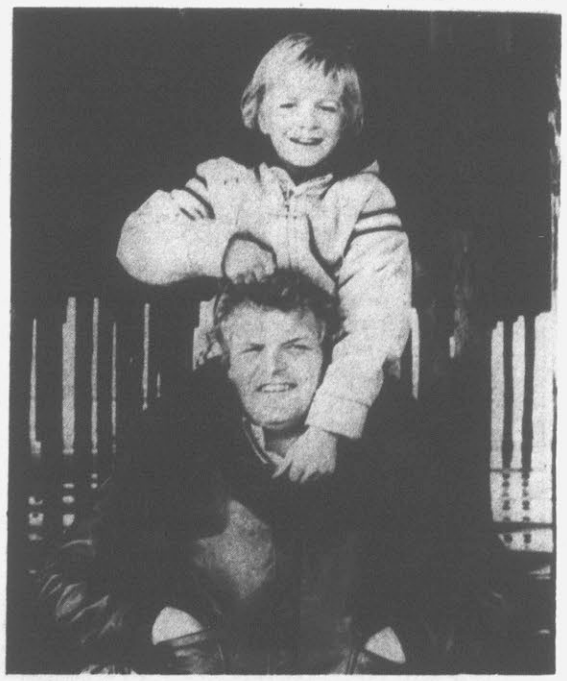
"Shamus," slated to air on Saturdays, beginning in September, is about an old-fashioned hotel detective and his young son who are confronted with a new world of high rollers, con artists and corporate security when Atlantic City is transformed from a fading seaside resort into a glittering gambling mecca.

Brian Dennehy stars as the detective, Arnie Sutter, and Doug McKeon portrays his 13-year-old son Max. Both live in the aging Ansonia Hotel on Atlantic City's Boardwalk. The advent of legalized gambling brings the Ansonia new owners and new prosperity, but it also attracts a new, and tougher, criminal element.

This is Dennehy's first series, and he brings to it an impressive list of credits, both on the stage, in films and in TV specials.

The Columbia University graduate, who spent five years in the Marine Corps, went to New York immediately after his military discharge in pursuit of a dramatic career. He appeared in several Off Broadway productions before finally moving to Broadway for David Rabe's "Streamers," directed by Mike Nichols. He was most recently on the stage in the Off Broadway production of "Sez I, Sez He."

He has appeared in several recent films — "Semi-Tough," "Foul Play" and "F.I.S.T." — as well as the upcoming "Butch and Sundance: The Early Years," "Ten" and "Little Miss Marker."



DOUG MC KEON gets a ride from Brian Dennehy, who plays his father, a hotel detective in Atlantic City, in "Big Shamus, Little Shamus," new series debuting this fall on CBS-TV.

FEMALE POWERLIFTERS Jandrena Irwin (top) and Michelle Klimesh demonstrate their personal intensity and drive at the AAU Women's National Powerlifting championships to be colorcast on NBC's "SportsWorld," Sunday, July 8 (4-5:30 p.m.).

Powerlifting!

Many of the finest women powerlifters in the United States will be featured in competition at the 1979 AAU Women's National Powerlifting Championships, taped coverage of which will be presented on NBC's "SportsWorld," Sunday, July 8 (4 to 5:30 p.m.). Also on the schedule of taped attractions that day will be coverage of the 13-nation USA International Diving Meet from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

Powerlifting is comprised of three events — the squat, bench press and dead lift — and although one's imagination might conjure up visions of women powerlifters as being freak-like female behemoths, the competitors in the AAU Women's National Powerlifting Championships prove otherwise. Included among the women powerlifters competing in weight divisions ranging from 97 pounds to unlimited, are a former beauty contest winner, a machine operator, a former gymnast, and the No. 2 ranked female shot putter in the United States.

Of prime interest during the two-day competition at the Nashua (N.H.) YMCA will be the unlimited division featuring 26-year-old Jan Todd, who holds most of the major records in women's powerlifting.

An Unhappy Cougar!

The concluding segment of "Charlie, the Lonesome Cougar" airs Sunday, July 8 (7 to 8 p.m.), on NBC-TV's "The Wonderful World of Disney." Western star Rex Allen narrates the motion picture that was filmed entirely on location in the Cascade Mountain Range in the Pacific Northwest.

Lumberman Jes Bradley (Ron Brown), who has raised a cougar kitten named Charlie, is forced to cage the new full-grown cat because the mill boss (Clifford Peterson) fears that he could become dangerous.

One night Charlie hears the call of a female cougar on the prowl, breaks out of his confinement and catches up with her. They play together and go for a short stroll of about 30 miles.

The following morning Charlie realizes it's time to eat but when the female makes a kill, she refuses to share. Hungry and unable to hunt for himself, Charlie heads for the nearest farm because he has learned that where there are people, there is food. However, instead of a meal, he gets only an angry load of buckshot.

Throughout the winter and deep into spring the way of the wilderness increasingly becomes Charlie's way. Then one day the hunter becomes the hunted when a pack of hounds get on his trail. Charlie eludes them by taking a three-mile log ride down a lumber flume to the river, and eventually to the mill.

Film Has Romance, Intrigue

A Russian spy's flirtation with a beautiful English official turns into a desperate game of love and lies that ruffles both sides of the Iron Curtain in "The Tamarind Seed," a tale of international espionage and personal intrigue starring Omar Sharif and Julie Andrews. The movie will have its television premiere as "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," July 8 (9 to 11:30 p.m.).

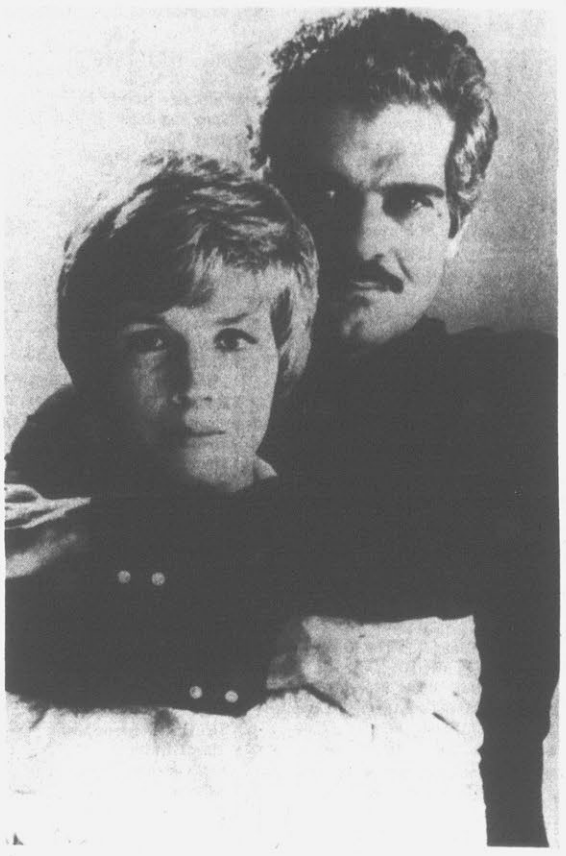
Feodor Sverdlov (Omar Sarif) is a Russian military attache and a trusted espionage agent to his superiors, but his interest in Judith Farrow (Andrews), a British government functionary, soon becomes more passionate than political. Judith, who has gone to the Caribbean island to recover from an unhappy love affair with a British air attache, is keeping their relationship on a "just friends" basis. But British Intelligence is convinced that she is about to be used for darker purposes than either love or friendship.

The relationship between Feodor and Judith warms up in spite of the Cold War efforts to cool it by both sides, and Feodor is soon prepared to use a few of the secrets his spying has uncovered to blackmail his way out of the Soviet Union. Unfortunately, coming in and out of the cold threatens to become a chilling proposition.

Blake Edwards adapted the screenplay from Evelyn Anthony's novel and, through his excellent direction, managed to find a good balance between the storyline's suspense and personal relationship between the two main characters.

Excellent supporting performers include Sylvia Sims as Margaret Stephenson and Anthony Quayle as Sverdlov's dapper assistant.

Quayle is particularly good and provides one of the film's most intriguing characters. As the vaguely lower-class bureaucrat made perpetually uncomfortable by his aristocratic surroundings, he initially seems earmarked as a potential double-dealer, but thoroughly acquits himself by the end of the film.



OMAR SHARIF is a Russian spy who grows very attached to English official Julie Andrews in "The Tamarind Seed" — but is he after her love or her government secrets? The movie will premiere on ABC, Sunday, July 8 (9-11:30 p.m.).

Drama Based On Fact

Tom Bosley, Charlotte Rae and Tovah Feldshuh star in "The Triangle Factory Fire Scandal," a stirring World Premiere drama about a group of young immigrant workers trapped in a blazing factory encoring on NBC's "The Big Event" Sunday, July 8 (8 to 10 p.m.).

Stephanie Zimbalist, Ted Wass, Janet Margolin, David Dukes, Lauren Frost, Stacey Neilkin and Erica Yohn also star.

The story, based on an actual event, tells of one of the worst conflagarations in American history. The drama tells of the cause of the sweatshop fire and the effect of the tragedy on the lives of Florence (Feldshuh), a pretty, young machine operator who dreams of marrying a millionaire; and other young immigrants working in unsafe, inhumane conditions under the supervision of the insensitive foreman, Morris Feldman (Bosley).

IN 1952, ORIGINAL CAST MEMBER CHARITA BAUER (as Bert Bauer) launched the television version of "Guiding Light" with the late Theo Goetz, who played her father-in-law, Papa Bauer.

Not 'Just' A Soap Opera

"The Guiding Light" isn't just a soap opera, it's American history. Three generations of Bauers have descended from Papa Bauer, an immigrant carpenter. His grandsons, Ed and Michael, both fulfilled the American dream by becoming successful professionals.

The daytime drama is the only one originating on radio that is still going strong on television. It began back in 1937 as one of Irna Phillip's early creations, and soon shared the airwaves with 73 other serials. It made the transition to television in 1952, and the radio and TV versions ran simultaneously for four years. Most of the cast members played the same parts on both, rehearsing and performing the day's episode for live TV in the mornings, then rushing across town to read the radio version in the afternoon.

The 'guiding light' was meant to help people through a period of American history when war and poverty had almost anihiliated the nation's spirit. Stories were centered around the lives in Rev. Rutledge's parish and problems would severely test the parishoners' faith. But the good Reverend's guidance always seemed to get them through.

The original story was revamped when the series moved from Chicago, Ill., to CBS-TV studios in New York. The Bauer family came into the picture in the 1940s, and Reverend Rutledge disapeared.

The Bauer clan got its start in American when Mama and Papa arrived from Europe to settle in California. They had three children — Bill, Meta and Trudy. Shortly after Bill married Bert, Mama Bauer passed away and the family regrouped around Bill and Bert.

Actress Charita Bauer, the only remaining original cast member of "The Guiding Light," joined the radio version in the role of Bert Bauer in 1950. When she began the role, it was pure coincidence that performer Bauer's name was the same as her character's name. But it is no coincidence that her real-life son and television son are both named Michael. Charita did this to avoid unnecessary confusion in keeping her on-screen and off-screen sons' names straight.

Show Films In South

"Search For Tomorrow," the popular daytime series seen on CBS-TV, headed south recently for a romantic locale along Florida's Gulf of Mexico to tape several sequences.

These sequences will be broadcast during regular episodes from July 13 through August 14.

Five leading cast members of "Search" traveled to Longboat Key in Sarasota, Fla., for taping at the Colony Beach and Tennis Resort. They were: Rod Arrants, who plays young, wealthy entrepreneur Travis Tourneur Sentell; Sherry Mathis, widowed a year ago and Sentell's love interest; and Jerry Lanning, who portrays Nick D'Antoni, devious character out to get rid of Sentell for financial gain. Lanning is a native of Miami. Sequences involving these major characters will begin airing this Friday.

In sequences with characters from one of the other current stories in the drama, to air beginning Monday (July 16), actor Lewis Arlt, as lawyer David Sutton, will tape scenes with Megan Bagot, who plays architect Laine Adamson.

'Junior Pyramid'

"The Junior Pyramid," a special version of ABC-TV's Emmy Award-winning "$20,000 Pyramid," will air during the week of July 9-13 (12-noon to 12:30 p.m.). Featured celebrities will be Jimmy Baio of "Soap" and Susan Richardson of "Eight Is Enough," playing with young contestants between the ages of 11 and 13.

Dick Clark will host "Junior Pyramid," which is a salute to the United Nations' International Year of the Child. The winning contestants can win up to $5,000 in scholarship funds and special bonus prizes.

The rules of the game will remain the same as in regular "Pyramid" competition.

Teen Scene

CBS had decided that JIMMY McNICHOL'S new Fall series would perhaps be a bit more inviting to would-be viewers if it was called "CALIFORNIA FEVER" instead of "WE'RE CRUISIN'," and thus that's what it will be called come September.

MCA Records has released the latest album from THE WHO, entitled "THE KIDS ARE ALRIGHT," which is the soundtrack for the upcoming motion picture of the same name.

Scuttlebutt has it that ELTON JOHN will do a one-man show in a nationwide tour beginning this Fall.

SCOTT BAIO has reportedly tied his allegiance to TIGER BEAT magazine, something, if true, that has gotten the other teen magazines in a growing uproar.

JIMMY BAIO, meanwhile, will find himself busier than ever in the new season of "SOAP" with the news that his role on the one-time controversial comedy is being enlarged for the upcoming Fall segments.

ANSON WILLIAMS, of "HAPPY DAYS," is turning producer with the announcement that his production company, Anson Productions, has signed a contract with NBC to develop a one-hour TV pilot tentatively titled, "MEDICINE MAN." Of course, Anson won't appear in the project should it become a series unless 'Days' fails in the ratings.

There's been a delay in the projected TV movie for LEIF GARRETT due to script preparation, and unless the problem is eleviated by month's end, the film won't go into production until after Leif's upcoming Fall concert tour.

Poldark And So Handsome!

Strong, true, hot-blooded. A man to challenge, to be held by, to surrender to.

That's how smitten ladies of the British press describe Ross Poldark, the darkly handsome hero of the romantic adventure series, "Poldark," encoring nationally on PBS (Fridays, 9 to 10 p.m.).

But such adulation, accompanied by sacksful of fan mail and the rapt attention of some 12 million British viewers has not turned the head of Robin Ellis, who plays the 18th century squire in the series.

"It's very nice," says the slim six-footer in a voice that one interviewer said knocks the stuffing right out of your kneecaps. "It's great to think so many people enjoy the program so much. And I have to admit I love being recognized in the street."

MAESTRO ARTHUR FIEDLER — "Mr. Pops" to music lovers throughout the world, celebrates another landmark in his distinguished career when he conducts the premiere of the tenth season of "Evening at Pops" on PBS, Sunday, July 8 at 8 p.m.

'Pops' New Season

The beloved music of the Boston Pops returns when "Evening at Pops" opens its tenth gala season on PBS. The famed orchestra celebrates a double anniversary in 1979, which marks the fiftieth season that Maestro Arthur Fiedler has presided over the Boston Pops Orchestra. The series airs Sundays (8 p.m.), beginning July 8.

Maestro Fiedler conducts the premiere program, which features as guest artist James Galway, the brilliant flutist who is equally at ease with both classical and popular music. A former member of the Berlin Philharmonic, Galway has appeared as soloist with the four major orchestras in London and is now a regular guest artist with all of them. He has also appeared with many major European orchestras.

The 'Pops' July schedule continues with Lionel Hampton, who pioneered the use of vibes as a jazz instrument, actor-singer-dancer Joel Grey and classical guitarist Angel Romero.

Glen Campbell, country guitarist and singer, joins the Pops in September, as do jazz violinist Stephane Grappelli and award-winning pianist Steven De Groote. The final program, featuring pianist Earl Wild, will be a special one-hour version of Fiedler's gala fiftieth anniversary celebration originally broadcast live on May 1 of this year.

Picking up the baton for several of this season's programs will be the distinguished Harry Ellis Dickson, Assistant Conductor of the Boston Pops and Esplanade Orchestras. Dickson is also founder, Artistic Director and Conductor of the Boston Symphony Youth Concerts, and a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first violin section. Dickson is the recipient of many awards. He joined the Pops in 1938 and became Assistant Conductor in 1958. He has been described as "that rare soul, an adult who remembers what it was like to be young, who loves young people and understands them, and who wishes to share with them that magic kingdom of the mind where music is the key.

PBS Buys Rights

Americans will finally have an opportunity to view Ariane Mnouchkine's 1978 film about the life and times of the great 17th century French comic playwright, "Moliere," on televison.

PBS has acquired the United States television rights to the film, which was one of the pictures representing France at the 1978 Cannes Film Festival.

Michele Will Tell

TOO ALL THE "WHITE SHADOW" FANS WHO'VE ASKED ABOUT TIMOTHY VAN PATTEN ('SALMI'): Tim is the brother of actors Dick and Joyce Van Patten. Prior to joining the 'White Shadow' cast, he appeared in two "After School Specials" and also appeared as a tough New York street kid in a segment of his brother's series, "Eight Is Enough." Tim is single, lives in Hollywood, and keeps in shape by running six miles a day at a fast six-minute-per-mile pace. Write to him c/o CBS-TV, 7800 Beverly Blvd., Hollywood, Calif. 90028.

How did Robin Williams start his career as a comedian? A. POWELL, WILMINGTON, N.C.

A: Like many comedians, Robin's beginnings as a comic stemmed from a lonely childhood. His parents were frequently away, and as a result, Robin created his own world. "My imagination was my friend, my companion," he says. To get his parents' attention, he created characters and comic routines.

Q: What happened to the series called "The Rat Patrol"? T. DALY, GOLDSBORO, N.C.

Q: Is the actor who played Fred Mertz on "I Love Lucy" still living? W. STEADMAN, SPARTANBURG, S.C.

A: William Frawley died in 1966, and at the time of his death, he was co-starring as "Bub" O'Casey in another hit comedy, "My Three Sons." Before making a career of being Fred Mertz on "I Love Lucy," this chuckling baldie had been among Hollywood's busiest, best-loved character actors.

Q: What is the name of the actor who plays Luke Duke on "Dukes of Hazzard"? C. DUFFREY, LAMAR, S.C.

A: Handsome Tom Wopat plays Luke. Tom is a relative newcomer to television — his only other stint before the cameras was a guest role on the daytime drama, "One Life to Live."

Herrmann Reluctant At First

TOUCHING DRAMA — Ed Herrmann stars as Yankee baseball great Lou Gehrig, whose career and life are recalled by his wife, Eleanor (Blythe Danner), in "A Love Affair: The Eleanor and Lou Gehrig Story" on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies," July 9 (9-11 p.m.).

"I've been a baseball fan all my life," Edward Herrmann was saying, "so the last thing I wanted to do was portray a baseball player who looked like he didn't know the way to first base.

"As a kid I had seen the credibility of more than one movie destroyed by actors totally miscast as athletes."

And Herrmann wasn't playing just any athlete; he was portraying the immortal Lou Gehrig in "A Love Affair: The Eleanor and Lou Gehrig Story," an NBC World Premiere movie to be rebroadcast on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies" July 9 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Gehrig's baseball career with the New York Yankees was cut short while he was still in his 30s. He died in 1941 of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, a rare affliction now known as "Lou Gehrig's disease."

Herrmann, a right hander, had to learn to throw and bat left handed for the role.

"I had a friend who knew the baseball coach at Yale and he let me work out with the team," Herrmann said. "I also threw thousands of tennis balls against a wall until I got the motion right. Of course, I'm not going to make the world forget Lou Gehrig with my swing but I think I've gotten it so it's believable."

As suggested by the title, the movie is more of a love story than a sports story.

"He was a shy, bumbling kind of guy and his wife brought him out of his shell . . . not to the point where he would wear lamp shades on his head at parties, but she made him a lot more outgoing."

Herrmann talked with former baseball great Hank Greenberg about Gehrig.

"Hank told me that Gehrig was incredibly strong. Balls would explode off his bat. And he had a serenity at the plate. He would never move when balls whizzed by. He would just lift his chin.

"Now for a scene like that, I might need a double."

To Honor Soo

A campaign is underway to persuade the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., to award permanent recognition to Jack Soo, the "Barney Miller" cast member who died earlier this year.

Props associated with Soo's role as Nick Temana in the series — a coffee pot, cups and chopsticks — is what the campaign is seeking to have donated to the Smithsonian.

Erin Likes Both Lives

Erin Moran and Joanie Cunningham are now dating. Erin portrays Joanie in the ABC series, "Happy Days" (Tuesdays, 8 to 8:30 p.m.), and she has turned from a tomboyish 13-year-old to a pretty young lady as the nation watched.

Erin has literally grown up with two completely different families. Rather than feeling that it is a weird situation spending five days a week with the "Happy Days" family and then going home to the Moran family in the evenings, she says: "Having two families is just natural to me. I guess when you are growing up, whatever is happening around you is the natural thing. For six years I have had a mom and pop (Marion Ross and Tom Bosley) and a brother (Ron Howard) at the studio who give me advice and help me just as my own parents and brothers and sisters do at home. It's been great. I feel so lucky — especially doing what I love so much — acting."

When asked how it feels seeing herself as a sprig on the "Happy Days" daytime reruns she groans: "I was terrible. I hate watching myself but its fun to watch the rest of the cast. It was only a few years ago, but what changes have taken place. I watch myself and mentally cry out to Jerry (director Jerry Paris): 'Please stop! Let me do that over. It stunk!' But to no avail. That's one thing about this business, you had better give it your best, because you're stuck with that performance on film the rest of your life."

Erin thought a moment, then said, "I hope the show goes on forever. But if it doesn't, I'll always be grateful for those very happy years. It will be just like any family, you grow up and get married and move away, but you are still a family. That's the way it will be with all of us on 'Happy Days.'"

Erin, one of six children, began her professional career in television commercials as a six-year-old and has appeared in more than 20 of them.

Her first television role was in "Stanley vs. the System," a pilot. After appearing in her first feature film, "How Sweet It Is," with Debbie Reynolds, she was signed for her first major TV role to co-star as Jenny in the "Daktari" series. She has since guest-starred in numerous series in addition to her regular role on "Happy Days."

Erin's special interest, in addition to horseback riding, include swimming, ice skating and record collecting.

Her diamond pendant, set in 14K gold, is available in a choice of sizes starting as low as $215.

KEN HOWARD AND LIZA MINNELLI star as young people who meet as hospital patients, and later, while trying to deal with the problems of living in the outside world, become romantically involved, in "Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon," to be broadcast on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," July 10 (9 to 11 p.m.)

Learning How To Cope

Three young patients meet in a hospital and decide to make a go at living together in the outside world in "Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon," starring Liza Minnelli, Ken Howard, Robert Moore, James Coco, Kay Thompson and Fred Williams, to be broadcast for the first time on television on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," July 10 (9 to 11 p.m.). The film was released theatrically in 1970 by Paramount Pictures.

Otto Preminger produced and directed the critically acclaimed movie from a script by Marjorie Kellogg based on her novel.

Junie Moon (Minnelli), Arthur (Howard) and Warren (Moore) have little in common other than their afflictions when they decide to take over an abandoned house. Junie Moon is loathe to talk about the incident that left her with disfiguring scars. Arthur has a progressive neurological disorder and a history of parental neglect, and Warren is confined to a wheelchair because a friend shot him in a hunting "accident."

A Chance To Guess

So you think there's a bit of Sherlock Holmes in you, or maybe you have some of the Eddie Capra in you.

In "Nightmare at Pendragon Castle," airing Friday, July 13 (9 to 11 p.m.), Capra has to unravel the jigsaw puzzle in the murder of a hated mogul by a sword considered permanently cemented in a stone. So how could it possibly have been done?

1. — Why was the front gate opened in the middle of the night?
2. — Why was Pendragon discovered stripped of his pajamas?
3. — What was the sharp noise that awakened Daniella Steffens — the accused — on the night of the slaying?

Rosario's Difficult Journey

For Bert Rosario, the road from Puerto Rico to Hollywood was a tortuous one — but he might never have started if it weren't for a schoolteacher named Zelman.

Rosario — who co-stars in two "Sword of Justice" features airing this week on on NBC-TV — moved from Puerto Rico to New York City wih his family when he was 2 years old, causing the usual cultural problems for non-English speaking immigrants.

"It's difficult for a Puerto Rican who comes to the United States," said Rosario. "We were citizens at birth, yet we didn't speak the language, so we were caught in the middle."

Hence, Rosario grew up as a shy, introverted student — until he met the aforementioned Mr. Zelman.

"Mr. Zelman was my sixth grade teacher," he said. "He chose me to deliver the valedictory speech in class, then pushed me into memorizing it. I loved delivering it, and experienced a sense of power. I mean, all those people applauding you!"

Thus inspired, Rosario later joined the theatre and glee clubs, but encountered resistance from his conservative parents, who pressured him to be an engineer. He obliged them for a while, but could not tolerate the technical grind. His solution was to drop out and join the Army.

"A real smart thing to do, right?" he said, smiling. "I wanted to be somebody."

What he became was a chaplain's assistant in Vietnam at the height of the war.

"I was mostly a field altar boy," he said. "But I grew up in Vietnam, got a sense of myself and discovered a brand new world outside of New York. The war was the turning point in my life."

Rosario moved to Los Angeles in 1968 to pursue an acting career. There he married, graduated from college, toiled in a fast-food restaurant and, most important, was granted a Fellowship to study acting at the University of Minnesota.

A second trip to Los Angeles three years ago finally put Bert Rosario on television — as a junkie on "Baretta."

Rosario sees his character on "Sword of Justice" — Rosario — as a happy-go-lucky individual. "He thinks on his own," he explained. "I had to re-learn the Puerto Rican accent for him because I lost a lot of it being assimilated in New York."

Lou Gehrig Love Story

One of the most moving stories in the annals of sports, the love affair of baseball immortal Lou Gerhig and his wife — from the days of glory with Babe Ruth to his losing battle with an incurable disease — has been dramatized in "A Love Affair: The Eleanor and Lou Gehrig Story."

The World Premiere movie starring Edward Herrmann and Blythe Danner in the title roles with a cast including Patricia Neal and Jane Wyatt, is a fact-based drama and will encore on "NBC Monday Night Movies" July 9 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Already an established star with the New York Yankees, the shy Gehrig is introduced to the outgoing Eleanor at a party. Though Lou travels with the team, their romance blossoms as they write to each other constantly.

However, Gehrig's possessive mother (Neal) proves to be a formidable obstacle, first to their marriage and later to their happiness. Nevertheless, they succeed in having a happy marriage. Then, on his 36th birthday, Lou learns that he is suffering from a serious illness.

The screenplay by Blanche Hanalis was based on the book "My Luke and I" by Eleanor Gehrig and Joseph Durso. The movie was filmed aboard the Queen Mary in Long Beach, Calif. and at Los Angeles area locations.

Hit Movie Encores

Liza Minnelli stars as the desperately loving Pookie Adams in "The Sterile Cuckoo," the film that brought her an Academy Award nomination, slated to encore as the "CBS Late Movie" July 9 (12:45 a.m.).

Film critic Charles Champlin, writing in the Los Angeles Times, called Minnelli's performance "one of the year's most memorable and affecting star turns," adding that "as the sad-kooky, serious-funny, warm, lonely, touching and beguiling central figure of Alan J. Pakula's remarkable movie, Miss Minnelli emerges full-blown as a major acting talent . . . Alvin Sargent wrote the excellent script (based on the novel by John Nichols) and Alan Pakula, directing his first movie, evoked this sensitive and indelible performance."

The story of first love and first loss matches Pookie, a wild and eccentric college girl with an irrepressible wit and uncontrollable hunger for life, and a sensitive, quiet college boy (Wendell Burton) who finds the emotional price of loving Pookie too great a cost.

"The Sterile Cuckoo" is an Alan J. Pakula-Boardwalk Production for Paramount Pictures. David Lange was executive producer and Pakula produced and directed.

BOBBIE MITCHELL plays the hostess of a resort hotel and Jeff J. Redford appears as the manager's somewhat scatterbrained nephew, in "Rendezvous Hotel," comedy to be broadcast on "The CBS Wednesday Night Movies," July 11 (9-11 p.m.).

That Is Some Kind of Hotel!

"Rendezvous Hotel," a rollicking two-hour comedy tale of life in a breezy California resort hotel, will be broadcast on "The CBS Wednesday Night Movies," July 11 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Bill Daily, who co-starred with Bob Newhart for several years on the latter's comedy series, appears as hotel owner and manager Walter Grainger. Grainger's Rendezvous Hotel is located in Santa Barbara, Calif., where the film was shot entirely on location at the famed Miramar Hotel.

Grainger is aided in running his intimate family operation by his nephew, somewhat scatterbrained Jerry Greenwood, portrayed by Jeff J. Redford; lovely Bobbie Mitchell as Barbara Claiborne, his official hotel hostess; Talya Ferro as Concetta Jennings, the volatile head housekeeper; and Teddy Wilson as Cleveland Jennings, his tempestuous head chef. Grainger is also both blessed and cursed by the sudden appearance of his impulsive sister, Jerry's mother (Carole Cook), who put up the money to buy the hotel.

Grainger and his sometimes madcap crew deal delightfully with a whole host of problems and situations that are as varied and unpredictable as there are different people availing themselves of the resort bliss of the Rendezvous Hotel.

First, there is the manager's preoccupation with making a good impression on an important travel guide columnist, Mr. Church (Severn Darden) in order to gain a top rating for his hotel. When Grainger learns that Church is due to show up at his hotel under an assumed identity, he mistakingly zeroes in on an important looking guest whom he takes to be the coveted columnist. He lavishes attention and service upon the man while inadvertently and comically alienating the real Mr. Church.

Barbara Claiborne's main probelm is handsome airline pilot Jim Becker, portrayed by guest star Edward Winter. He wants to maintain their warm, romantic relationship while he's a guest at the hotel, while she wants him to consider marriage as a serious alternative.

Jerry is taken by a young actress, Anne Jones (Kathryn Witt), who checks into the hotel for the express purpose of doing away with herself because she's failed to succeed in Hollywood.

A bikini top that floats loose in the nearby ocean, a female M.D. who looks more like a beauty queen in her scanty beachwear, and an elaborate wedding reception with a unique ending all add to the spice of the fun and trauma that goes with life in a major resort hotel.

Kennedy In Comedy

Academy Award-winner George Kennedy stars as a middle-aged businessman who falls in love with a young woman doctor, in "Never Say Never," a special half-hour comedy also starring Anne Schedeen, Irene Tedrow, Bruce Kimmel and Rick Podell, to be presented Wednesday, July 11 (8 to 8:30 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Kennedy portrays Harry Walter, a widower who thrives on the desk-pounding atmosphere of his plumbing supply company. He soon finds himself in the gentler world of romance and courtship when he meets and falls in love with Dr. Sarah Keaton (Schedeen), a poised and beautiful pediatrician.

Harry and Sarah's relationship has one or two pitfalls. Both are apprehensive about the autumn-spring romance; and when Harry hears wedding bells, Sarah prefers to try the more modern approach of living together.

Nominated again in the same category for his scene-stealing cigar-chomping mechanic in the film "Airport," Kennedy is now firmly entreached among Hollywood's top-paid leading men.

Though Kennedy says, "I'm an older man to whom success was a long time in coming," he was practically born into a show business career. His father, George Sr., was a pianist and composer-conductor at New York's Proctor Theatre, and his mother danced with vaudeville's famed Le Ballet Classique.

George made his theatrical debut at the age of two when he joined his parents in the touring company of "Bringing Up Father."

He enlisted in the Army at 17 in 1943,and saw action as an infantryman in Europe, winning two Bronze Stars and accumulating four rows of combat and service ribbons. When the war was over George decided to make a career of the military and served throughout the world for the next 14 years.

Discharged because of a spinal injury, Kennedy took his 30 percent disability pay and decided to try his luck in Hollywood.

He quickly landed a couple of bit parts and then proceeded to chalk up an impressive list of film credits. His recent credits include "Death on the Nile," "Steel" and "Airport 79 — Concorde." He also starred in two TV series, "The Blue Knight" and "A Sale

A Dangerous Flirtation

Jack Cole and Hecter Ramierz flirt with Lady Luck — and danger — when Jack devises a sophisticated electronic gambling system to cheat a crooked Las Vegas casino owner out of $10 million in embezzled union funds in "Sword of Justice: Blackjack," the "NBC Movie of the Week" airing Wednesday, July 11 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Dack Rambo stars as Jack Cole, Bert Rosario as Hecter, and George Hamilton stars as the casino owner Lara Parker appears as the girl he gets to provide a diversion when Jack's winnings begin to mount alarmingly.

When two union officers are killed and another is kidnapped to prevent them from testifying to a federal task force headed by Arthur Woods (Alex Courtney) about the union pension misappropriations, the investigators call for an audit of the fund's books.

'Ready For Drama'

Jack Klugman went to NBC-TV's "Quincy" after five years with Tony Randall in "The Odd Couple." During that time, he won two Emmy awards as sloppy sports writer Oscar Madison, who railed against the neatness of Randall's Felix Unger.

"I was ready for drama after that," Klugman says. "It's like food — you want a little Chinese, then some Italian."

Klugman was no sooner into "Quincy" than he got another 'yen' — this time to change the scripts.

"I began rewriting the scripts, because the ones I was getting had no relevance, no importance. The writers weren't researching."

Klugman says he was "brought up on Upton Sinclair and the way he cleaned up the slaughter houses. If you can do something that helps people, that's wonderful. I don't mind being called a crusader. And if you can entertain people at the same time — that's the important thing. You've got to entertain."

Another reason for Klugman's interest in the scripts came from his not wanting the show to become another detective show. He wanted to keep the emphasis on medicine. "What I've liked most about 'Quincy' is that you don't see forensic medicine anywhere else on television. I'm not just another cop."

In the episode of the series airing this week, titled "Images," Quincy is fired when he persists in proving his bizarre theory that a TV network newswoman is dead and that her murderer has assumed her identity. Jessica Walters guest-stars.

Quincy painstakingly determines that newswoman Jessica Ross died in a motel fire under mysterious circumstances. However, at a prearranged press conference to announce his findings, Quincy and the world are shocked when Jessica arrives in person to challenge his verdict. Believing in his theory, Quincy takes on the network and the newswoman to prove that the "live" TV personality is a phony and the corpse in the morgue is the real Jessica. As a result, the medical examiner becomes the on-air target of the newswoman.

Middle-Aged But Modern

As they approach middle age, Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck have become a bit more urbane and a little less "nutty" than when they were "born" in the 1930s. But basic elements of their cartoon characters are unchanged. To wit: Bugs is a winner. Daffy a loser.

That assessment was made by producer-director-writer Chuck Jones, one of the originators of the two cartoon comedians, when he was reunited with his offspring for "Carnival of the Animals." The animated and live-action special based on the Saint-Saens musical suite, in which the two characters play piano and spout Ogden Nash verses, will be rebroadcast Thursday, July 12 (8 to 8:30 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

"Daffy Duck was created in 1936 and Bugs Bunny in 1939," recalled Jones. "Those cartoons made 40 years ago are still contemporary. The creatures are living things, not drawings or designs. Like living things, they have evolved over the years, changed in character and looks."

They were developed by different people. Jones pointed out, different directors and artists, working with the basic characters, who "saw what worked" and changed things to match.

Consequently, over the years, Daffy Duck developed into a kind of Jack Benny-type comedian, a master of comic helpless anger. Bugs Bunny opted for the sly, eyebrow-twitching wit of a Groucho Marx.

"It's not the way a character is drawn, it's how it moves that establishes the personality and makes a cartoon," said Jones, an Academy Award-winning animator. "You know that Bugs is going to come out a winner, no matter what. He stands like a winner — straight, fearless, challenging. By the same token, Daffy always looks like he's ready to run. You just know that he can be easily intimidated."

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS conducts Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck in the animation-plus-live-action version of "Carnival of the Animals." The special will air Thursday, July 12 (8-8:30 p.m.) on CBS.

SPOTLIGHT

Out To Beat The System!

Tom Wopat stars as Luke Duke in "The Dukes of Hazzard," an hour-long, comedy adventure series currently airing Fridays on CBS-TV. The series is set in the fictional county of Hazzard, rural U.S.A. — somewhere east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio. The Three Duke cousins, Luke, Bo and Daisy, are all-out to beat the system, as administered by Sheriff Roscoe Coltrane, the corrupt pawn of Boss Hogg.

Tom grew up on a dairy farm in Lodi, Wisconsin. The fifth boy of six sons and one daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A.C. Wopat, Tom says he was "up early to milk the cows" before attending school.

A graduate of Lodi High School, he was active in the band and chorus, played football and was on the track team. Wopat enrolled in the University of Wisconsin at Madison, where he studied music and was also in community theater. Within a short time, he withdrew from the University and traveled for two years with a rock group as lead singer/guitarist.

Tom left the group and spent the next two summers at the Barn Theater in Michigan, where he appeared in such plays as "Pajama Game," "Annie Get Your Gun," "Equus" and "Something's Afoot."

In December, 1977, Wopat moved to New York. Through a friend he met an agent who immediately signed him as a client. Within two weeks he was appearing in the Off Broadway production of "A Bistro Car on the CNR."

He next appeared at Ford's Theater, Washington, D.C., in the lead role of "Robber Bridegroom." After a successful run, Wopat returned to Broadway to star in the hit play, "I Love My Wife." His other credits include the lead role in "Oklahoma!" and as a guest star in the daytime drama "One Life To Live."

Tom, who is 6 foot tall, is single and lives in New York except during the time "The Dukes of Hazzard" is filming.

Eddie Capra's Case

Blackmail, bitterness and undying loyalty are three of the elements in the puzzle that Eddie Capra works to unravel in "Nightmare at Pendragon's Castle," a special two-hour presentation of NBC-TV's whodunit series, "The Eddie Capra Mysteries" airing Friday, July 13 (9 p.m.). Vincent Baggetta stars in the title role.

Charles Pendragon, a powerful publishing magnate who enjoys inflicting pain on his employess when their loyalty shows signs of wavering, is slain. Daniella Steffens (Margolin), an aspiring actress, who — under duress — spent the night with Pendragon, is accused of the crime.

MCLEAN STEVENSON, as Larry Alder, has a confrontation with a woman (guest star Ruth Brown) who, in his absence, has given assistance to his two daughters, in the "Hello, Larry" episode, "Leona," Friday, July 13 (8:30-9 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

A Supermarket 'Beef'

As Larry Alder, host of a radio talk show in Portland, Ore., on NBC-TV's "Hello Larry," McLean Stevenson takes phone calls from listeners about their problems and the things that bug them.

On the other side of the coin, McLean also has little things that bug him, and he recently revealed some of them in a candid conversation.

"There are three little things at the supermarket which really get me. The first one is, why is there always a little piece of dried-up lettuce in the shopping cart? Just once, I'd like to walk into a supermarket and pull out a clean cart.

"Second, why do I always get the cart that has wobbly wheels? Everyone else is gliding his cart down the aisles smoothly, andI'm making this very strange noise and everyone is looking at me.

"Finally, and most important, why do people with 11 items try to sneak in the express line? I think you should play the game fair — if you have ten items or less great. Otherwise, move over Charlie."

Pennant Struggle

Yes, they both have a universe full of talent, expensive and experienced. But they both are struggling, while younger, perhaps hungrier squads hold the division leads.

The Los Angeles Dodgers and the Philadelphia Phillies, winners of their respective divisions in the National League the past two seasons, are both wallowing in the second division while the Houston Astros lead the West, and the Montreal Expos head the East.

But the Dodgers and the Phillies stage a rematch of their bitter National League pennant struggle when they meet Saturday, July 14, on the "NBC Game of the Week" (starting at 2:15 p.m.).

One of the glaring examples of the early-season ineptness of the Dodgers has been the play of their muscular left fielder, Dusty Baker. Baker, since he was acquired from the Atlanta Braves a couple of seasons ago, has become one of the most feared long-ball hitters in the league.

But Baker's batting average lingered in the .200s the first two months, yet has been steadily climbing. In three separate games over a two-week period, he slammed game-winning homers.

The Dodgers' shortcomings, however, don't hinge on one outfielder. Rather, it is centered on two problems that won't go away — pitching and defense.

Two Worlds

"Geronimo Jones," an award-winning film about a young Indian boy translating his cultural heritage to today's society, will be rebroadcast Saturday, July 14 (1:30 to 2 p.m.), on "The CBS Saturday Film Festival."

Martin Soto portrays the youngster caught between two worlds, that of his grandfather, who gives him a deep sense of pride in his Indian heritage, and that of his cousin, an astronomer at a modern scientific observatory, who looks to the future.

When young Geronimo trades a treasured Apache medallion, given him by his grandfather, for a second-hand television set that he hopes will bring the old man pleasure, he heads for a painful scene, as man and boy watch an old western film depicting the Indians as enemies of civilization. Shaken and confused, young Geronimo wanders outside to search the stars, aware that he must somehow find his own identity in today's world.

The film, written and directed by Bert Salzman for Learning Corporation of America, was filmed at the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona. It won Best Category, Films for Documentation, at the 1970 San Francisco Film Festival.

'Postman Rings'

Lorimar Productions will film a version of James M. Cain's "The Postman Always Rings Twice," with principal photography scheduled to begin in October.

LEFT-FIELDER Dusty Baker is one of the key players the Los Angeles Dodgers are counting on to pull them out of the doldrums in the National League West. The Dodgers take on the Philadelphia Phillies in a rematch of the last two National League playoffs Saturday, July 14 on the NBC Game of the Week beginning at 2:15 p.m.

HOLLYWOOD — GREG EVIGAN of "B.J. & THE BEAR" surprised a lot of his closest friends when he and girlfriend PAM SERPE were quietly wed in Los Angeles this month. After they exchanged vows, they flew to Hawaii for a week-long honeymoon and are now back home in Studio City, Calif., a section of Los Angeles. Of course, Greg's career isn't exactly new for Pam. She's his personal manager.

In contrast, JAMES GARNER has reportedly moved out of his home and into the posh Beverly Hills Hotel, adding fuel to the growing gossip that he and wife, LOIS, are having marital problems.

And the same is being said of SUSAN ANTON and hubby JACK STEIN!

PRISCILLA PRESLEY is said to be 'this' close to saying 'yes' to Producer IRWIN ALLEN'S invitation to make her dramatic acting debut opposite JAMES MacARTHUR ("HAWAII FIVE-O") in NBC'S four-hour disaster film, THE NIGHT THE BRIDGE FELL DOWN," which hopefully, is just a working title.

Those who have seen the unedited version of "MORE AMERICAN GRAFFITTI" insist that CANDY CLARK is even better in the sequel than she was in the original, which is saying a lot considering that Candy captured an Oscar nomination for her earlier portrayal.

Proving that SHELLEY HACK may indeed be the smartest 'Angel' yet, as the show enters its second month of new production the newest addition has tactfully not thrown her allegiance of friendship to either JACLYN SMITH or CHERYL LADD. Rather, she's shared time with both!

The Board of Survisors of Orange County, Calif., have voted to rename that county's municipal airport to JOHN WAYNE AIRPORT. The late actor spent the last dozen years of his life living in Newport Beach, which is a community within the county just south of Los Angeles. The airport will be called DUKE for short.

Take It And Run!

When Amos Otis is on the road, the Kansas City Royals' outfielder has his own unique way of combating a potential thief. Before Otis goes to bed, he removes money and credit cards from his wallet and lines them up just inside the door of his room. His theory is that if anyone breaks in, they won't have to go any further.

RALPH SAMPSON, the nation's No. 1 scholastic basketball player, is the only high school player on this year's United States Basketball Team for the Pan American Games.

Caulkins Has That Winning Look

In the last Pan American Games, held in 1975, the United States totally dominated the swimming competition. Led by Kathy Heddy and Kim Peyton, they won 27 of 29 gold medals and set 24 Pan Am records.

This year's team appears to be just as strong and will be represented by young world champions like Tracy Caulkins.

CBS-TV continues its coverage of this year's Pan American Games Sunday, July 8 (1:30 to 4 p.m.), Saturday, July 14 (2:30 to 5:30 p.m.), and Sunday, July 15 (4 to 6 p.m.).

Out of the water, 16-year-old Tracy Caulkins has all the characteristics of an adolescent, from her braces to her tendency to bump into things. But when she takes to the starting block, wearing her racing goggles, her skin-tight racing suit and her rubber cap, she has the cool and confident look of a world-beater.

Quiet, except when she's around girls her own age, Tracy once asked a teacher not to put her press clippings on the bulletin board in her classroom. "Tracy really doesn't believe that she's done anything yet that's worth getting excited about," say her father Tom, a school administrator in Nashville, Tenn. "She never says much about swimming."

"She's subtle," says Tracy's swimming coach, Paul Bergen. "I've been with her four years, and I'm just learning to tell when she's up and when she's down."

Tracy began swimming at eight. By the age of 11, she was setting age-group records, and at the '77 AAU Indoor Nationals, she began winning big in open competition. "When I first got to the Nationals, I wondered what I was doing with all these big-time swimmers I'd heard about," she says. "Then, I don't know, I just sort of decided I'd like to win." So she then went out and did just that, breaking three American records.

Tracy does all the usual hard work in an extremely demanding sport. She is up at 5 a.m. six days a week to swim eight to 10 miles. Like most of her swimming friends, she is following the East German example by lifting weights three times a week. She also does reasonably well in school, preferring English to math and science.

TRACY CAULKINS is one of the outstanding young swimmers who is representing the United States in this year's Pan American Games. CBS-TV is presenting coverage of the event Sunday, July 8 (1:30 to 4 p.m.), Saturday, July 14 (2:30 to 5:30 p.m.), and Sunday, July 15 (4 to 6 p.m.).

Move over, Moses Malone!

Move over, Moses Malone, and give another Virginian a little room on the road to basketball greatness. He is Harrisonburg's Ralph Sampson, whose achievements on the floor would create nightmares for the most capable opponent.

Sampson has dominated the scholastic game as few have ever done before. As a senior at Harrisonburg High School he racked up an amazing 48 points and 33 rebounds in two district tournament games, 61 points and 46 rebounds in two regional tournament games and 53 points and 44 rebounds in two state tournament games.

He also attracted the largest crowds in the tournament history of the Virginia High School League; has been featured by all three of the major television networks and his picture has appeared in practically every national sports publication.

News of Sampson's ability spread far and wide, and he was invited to the tryouts for this year's 12-man United States Basketball team for the Pan American Games. In the three-day trials, he blocked more shots than the rest of the selected field combined.

"TEXAS TOPPER COUNTRY"

2201 Dickinson Ave. Greenville, N.C. Phone 756-4267

STEVE RIDDICK will be competing in the 1980 version of the Olympics — the Pan American Games — televised by CBS Sports.

Hollis Is Determined To Win

Nancy Lopez is hoping to dethrone two-time U.S. Women's Open golf tournament winner Hollis Stacy at this year's event, being played at Brooklawn Country Club in Fairfield, Conn. ABC Sports will cover the action Saturday, July 14 (4 to 5 p.m.), and Sunday, July 15 (4:30 to 6 p.m.).

But Stacy is determined to achieve her goal of three Open triumphs.

"I know that most of the girls on the tour would give up 40 event victories to win just one U.S. Open," Stacy claims. "I aim for the big titles like the Open because they seem to be the only ones I'm able to get psyched up for. I can feel the pressure from the moments I tee up a ball at the Open. Every shot feels like the most important shot in the world. I've won the Open twice but my goal is always to win it again and again. A third or fourth place showing would be a disappointment."

During a break in her busy golf schedule, Hollis acted as a roving reporter for ABC Sports on the Inverness course in Toldeo, Ohio, during the U.S. Men's Open. But, as Hollis admits, her primary goal is to keep on winning golf tournaments. "I'd like to get more into commentating, but my first love is golf. I hope that I'll be able to keep the commenting alive while I am pursuing my golf career."

When Hollis tries to make it three in a row at Brooklawn, she will be playing on a course she has seen but never played before. "I'm superstitious about playing a course if a big event is going to be held there. I did notice when I visited Brooklawn that it is an old course with small greens and 58 bunkers. It is a short course — around 6,000 yards — but the high concentration of bunkers and the small greens will make the course very difficult."

ABC Sports will provide live coverage of the final two rounds from Fairfield, Connecticut, on Saturday, July 14 (4-5 p.m.) and Sunday, July 15 (4:30 to 6 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

'Gold' Is Beautiful For Riddick

Steve Riddick has accomplished about everything he can in the world of speed running, but he still wants to capture the ultimate medal on his own — the gold medal at the Olympics.

Yes, he remembers capturing a gold medal in the 1976 Olympics in Montreal, but he shared that award with the other three members of the 4x100 relay.

He has a chance to tune up for the 1980 version of the Olympic games when he competes in the Pan American Games.

CBS Sports is providing extensive coverage of the event which most feel is the premiere non-Olympic competition in the Western Hemisphere, with a broadcast scheduled Sunday, July 8, and taped highlights Monday through Friday, July 9-13 (11:30 to 11:45 p.m.).

Riddick, who holds a B.S. in psychology from Norfolk State, has already been dubbed the 'Fastest Sprinter in the World' in 1975, and the 'World's Fastest Human' in 1977 after victories in world competition.

The North Philadelphia native is almost unparalleled in distances from 50 yards to 60 meters. During the winter indoor season of 1976, he won 15 of 16 sprints.

The lone loss came after an exhausting weekend in which he ran in three team events, and he fell to fourth. What really bothers Riddick is that he came in fourth in the most important run of his life — the 1976 Olympics.

He lost out to Don Quarrie, Ed Preston and Johnny Williams, three runners he had beaten often in the past. To make matters worse, he lost out in a heat in semi-final 100-meter qualifier, dropping down to fifth.

But ten days later, he took a unique double victory. In Milan, Italy, he won the 60-meter dash, setting an Italian record of 6.66. Within two nights, he took the 60-yard dash race in the AAU national championships at Madison Square Garden.

He moved from last to first in five graceful strides in that victory, throwing up his fist in exultation after crossing the finish line.

The raised fist has become a Riddick trademark, and he hopes to raise it again at Moscow in 1980, alone this time.

Wild kelp: How green is my gas tank?

FOR DAVID P. CHYNOWETH, assistant director, bioconversion research, Institute of Gas Technology

Will the day ever come when consumers can grow their own seaweed and convert it into heat? —B.R., Beachwood, N.J.

● Studies on growth and conversion of kelp to SNG (Substitute Natural Gas) have been going on for about six years at a cost of about $7 million through 1978. "Seaweed heat" is possible now. However, it will require another three or four years of research to determine whether the concept is economically attractive enough to continue the research into the next stage of development. If successful, it will probably be the late 1990's before a substantial quantity of methane is available from this resource. The unavailability of large quantities of wild kelp and high costs of small-scale artificial kelp farms and conversion systems would make this biomass form a poor choice for individual exploitation.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Is it true that Jane Fonda begins preparing for her role a full year before shooting starts? —L.M., Tupelo, Miss.

● As soon as Jane signs up for a role, she starts doing her homework. Twelve months before The China Syndrome went into production, Jane, who plays a TV reporter, sought out newswomen. She paid attention to all their mannerisms, as well as their reporting duties. (Jane claims this is what helps her make her performances so convincing.) She admits that performers aren't the only ones who work long, grueling hours. "News people have an incredibly demanding schedule. They're out there in all hours, conditions and weather." Incidentally, when Columbia Pictures surveyed newswomen, they discovered that the majority of them were blonde. Jane refused to turn that color, so she became a redhead, because "my husband always wanted to make love to a redhead."

Jane Fonda: Better red than blonde.

FOR TONI TENNILLE, recording star

Whatever did you mean when you said it was "fatal" for you and your husband, Darryl, to drive in the same car? —G.R., La Crosse, Wis.

● I can't stand the way he drives, with too many stops and starts. He's constantly changing lanes. When I drive, it's as though I'm taking the first lesson. He tells me when to stop, what turns to make. It seems the minute we both step in the car, hostility descends on us. I suppose the answer is to travel in different cars, were it not for the gas shortage.

FOR SENATOR BARRY GOLDWATER (R-Ariz.)

How do you feel about those Presidential hopefuls who have reached 70, or are close to it? —E.P., Little Rock, Ark.

● I don't happen to feel that 70 or any age is necessarily the fence beyond which senility is caged. I have seen senility at 30 years of age, and I've seen a lack of it at 90. I do feel, though, that 70 is sort of a magic age at which people should think of doing something else; but that is up to the person, and I'll stand behind their judgment.

FOR DICK BUTTON, skater

What hopes do you have for the Olympic skating team? —M. Williams, Port Arthur, Texas

● I think the American skaters will do extremely well at the 1980 Winter Olympics. Defending champion Linda Fratianne is a superb athlete. In the pairs competition, the 1979 World Champions, Tai Babilonia and Randy Gardner, will have to face competition since Irina Rodnina and Aleksandr Zaitsev of the Soviet Union have been pair champions for the previous 10 years. It should be an interesting battle.

FOR ERICA JONG, author

Do you pay any attention to advice and criticism from readers? —E.P., Salina, Kansas

● I'm immensely grateful for the tremendous outpouring of mail from readers. I read it all, and try to answer at least with a postcard. But writing is one of the few professions where one is totally responsible for one's own words. Writers are valuable precisely because they are independent souls. So I try to hear my readers, yet at the same time maintain my individuality. It's a delicate balance.

FOR STELLA B. HACKEL, director of The Mint

● At present, 53 million coins are minted daily, for a total of approximately 12 billion coins annually. Approximately 2,500 people are employed throughout the Mint, but not all are engaged in the actual striking of coins. Many different workers contribute their skills to the final product, including tool and die makers, melters and refiners, mill operators, press operators and administrative support personnel.

FOR KEVIN CONWAY, star of Broadway's Elephant Man

I've heard that you and Sylvester Stallone have been uppity to a few waitresses. True? —T.M., Danbury, Conn.

● It's the other way around. One night, when Sly and I were making Fist on the West Coast, we ate out. To save time, we kept our makeup on. (We were old men, with gray hair, jowls and body pads to make us look fat.) The waitress thought we were a pair of old fogies. She snarled at us. I wonder what would have happened had we told her she was being rude to "Rocky."

PRO AND CON

PRO Rep. William V. Roth, Jr. (R.-Delaware)

We once were the most productive nation on earth. Today we rank last among developed nations in productivity growth. Even Great Britain and Italy rank higher. Our productivity growth is not lagging because U.S. workers are lazy; it is falling because our factories, equipment and tools are becoming obsolete and wearing out! Business tax incentives will encourage the hard-to-come-by capital investments needed to modernize our factories, improve working conditions and expand job opportunities. Business tax incentives will help revitalize America and produce the productivity growth needed to increase wages, slow inflation and raise our standard of living. Let's help the engine of our economy, not kill it!

CON Arnold Cantor, assistant director, dept. of research, AFL-CIO

Steve Yarmola

No! Education, on-the-job training, new skills, health and safety are far more important in raising productivity. Business tax incentives are blunt and haphazard devices. They are subsidies, but unlike direct programs, they go through the "back door" and avoid tests of accountability, efficiency and national-interest promotion. They tend to become permanently entrenched in the tax law. Tax giveaways to business waste urgently needed dollars by rewarding big corporations for doing what they normally do anyway. Each tax dollar to subsidize business investment is one dollar less for public investments in the education, job skills and health of the American people and technology-raising research.

FRANK LANGELLA'S CHILLING, THRILLING DRACULA

By Betsy Carter

"Permit me to introduce myself. My name is Count Dracula!" That swirling cape and sinister kisser could be counted on to scare your jujubes out of their box. Way back in 1927 when Bela Lugosi vamped it up in the original version of Dracula, Red Cross vans were parked outside the theater waiting to revive the horrified. That was a bloody long time ago, but now, in his current incarnation, the count, as played by Frank Langella, has been given a healthy transfusion of sex appeal, which underscores the story's eroticism.

For a year on Broadway, audiences swooned over Langella's sensuous Dracula. And, fittingly enough, on Friday the 13th of July, the elegant actor will bring his engaging ghoul to the screen in the film version of the play. "Dracula is a man with dignity and vulnerability who needs blood to survive and will do anything to get it," says Langella. "It fascinates me that people see only the frightening aspect of him." Langella even tickles lines that once drew gasps: When he is offered a glass of sherry, for example, he rolls his chestnut eyes and lingers lovingly over the line, "No thank you. I never drink (pause) wine."

His seduction of the virgin Lucy may be one of the hottest love scenes ever to hit Broadway. Yet it is as chaste and pristine as a pageant play and it works by suggestion alone. To Langella, it represents the ultimate fantasy. "Despite liberation, every woman would like to be swept off her feet. Here's a man whose only need is to drink the blood from Lucy's neck. He takes her by force but at the same time, gently. To me, this is more of a love story than a horror story."

Offstage, Langella would never be mistaken for a loiterer around the Transylvania Station. He is a soft-spoken son of a wealthy businessman from Bayonne, N.J., with large eyes that dominate his lean face. He has a smirk that is at once sinister and amused, and black wavy hair with graying sideburns. His lanky six-feet-four frame is sturdy enough to transport the agreeably healthy ego that resides within; to his credit, however, Langella handles both body and bravado with grace. His is the arrogance of a job well done in a profession he loves.

Langella began his acting career by nabbing the part of a 95-year-old man in an Abraham Lincoln pageant when he was six years old. "When I was 11," he says, "I told my family I wanted to be an actor, but they thought it was just a phase." By college it still hadn't passed. Langella attended Syracuse University, where he cut his teeth on the classics.

In the early 1960's, a girlfriend submitted his picture to the newly formed Lincoln Center Workshop in New York City. He was accepted in the same class as Faye Dunaway, Barry Primus and Martin Sheen. Langella was spotted by an agent who wanted him for the lead in André Gide's The Immoralist. Langella was off to a promising start.

Although angst and agony are as inherent to the acting profession as auditions and rehearsals, Langella seems to have survived the past 39 years with his psyche remarkably well intact. "I was always doing what I loved," he says.

That is not to say that Langella didn't spend a lot of years banging on doors and receiving a fair share of those dreaded rejections. But like a resilient vacuum cleaner salesman, he blithely packed up his portfolio and moved onto the next opportunity: "I always assumed that if I was rejected, they were wrong. I was very secure about what I had to offer."

Universal-International Pictures

Springer/Bettmann Film Archive

As a self-centered therapist in Diary of a Mad Housewife, he prescribed himself for Carrie Snodgrass.

Langella spent the 60's performing in summer stock and repertory theaters. On one occasion, he played a nine-year-old boy in a Stockbridge production of Skin of Our Teeth, along with Anne Bancroft. The two became friends, and her husband, producer Mel Brooks, subsequently cast Langella as the devil-may-care rogue in Twelve Chairs.

But it was not until he played George Praeger, the narcissistic lover in Diary of a Mad Housewife, that Langella earned the double-edged reputation as the most attractive cad on the screen. "I saw George Praeger as a kind of New York male who's terrified by commitment and unable to feel or to love. That character is a cliché today. But in 1971, none of that was fashionable, and the part created a mini-sensation," he says.

Indeed it did, and for the next several years he was offered one sadistic heel part after another.

Langella's Dracula, alas, will suffer the same fate as George Praeger. When he finished filming the $8-million movie in London last February, the actor packed away his chalk-white makeup and blood-red cape forever, and began reading dozens of new scripts a week in search of a new project.

While the verdict of his latest acting efforts is now in the hands of audiences, Langella is happily tending to his own life. "Work isn't the only thing in my life. My feeling is that if the movie doesn't succeed, it really hasn't much to do with the essentials of my life. Not that I'm pretending that it wouldn't be pleasurable if it did; but there are many levels of success. I've always been a success in my own mind. Now I'm just famous."

The other things in Langella's life are horseback riding in the Connecticut countryside, giving small dinner parties for friends in his Manhattan apartment, and spending time alone with his wife.

Like a growing number of actors, Langella finds New York more comfortable than Hollywood. California is overrun with boulder-sized egos which bruise easily if they're not invited to the right parties, he argues. Besides, he once told a reporter, "I'm a hard actor to cast. I've had a sporadically successful career, and any success I have will always be sporadic. That's not the stuff of which Hollywood stars are made."

To Langella, living has been an especially happy experience since that Sunday in 1977 when he and artist Ruth Weil (formerly editorial director of House Beautiful) tied the knot after a Dracula matinee. For an articulate man, Langella becomes uncharacteristically reticent when he speaks of their marriage.

"If I tell you that I love my wife more than any other woman on the earth, your readers will think, 'Ah, he's pushing it,'" he says wisely. "If I say I like my wife very much, they'll say, 'Uh oh, he's in trouble.' I'd rather not say anything."

But later on the telephone he is talking about his motivation for getting out of bed each morning. A sudden sweet snap of a kiss stops him mid-sentence. "That was my wife," laughs Langella. "And that was your answer."

Another thing that gets Langella out of bed these days is his next role as Harry Crystal in a romantic comedy called Those Lips, Those Eyes. It is a movie about an actor in his 30's trying to make it to Broadway in the 1950's, and Langella will sing and dance in his leading role.

Meanwhile, back in Transylvania, Langella's black velvet cape is about to unfurl on movie screens around the country. And if his sensually sinister performance doesn't make your jujubes jump, it might just melt the butter on your popcorn. FW

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY

MAYBE IT'S OUR FEET

They say our son looks much like me,
And when they say so, I agree.
Of course he's younger, still has hair,
A thing I envy, think unfair.

And he is taller, that a cinch is,
By two — well, call it three — full inches,
Has broader shoulders and a stomach
That doesn't hang out like a hummock.

His nose is straighter, chin more prominent,
His manliness is much more dominant,
And yet he looks like me, they say,
But can't explain in just what way.

—Richard Armour

Balancing the family budget these days is like trying to stand on your head in a hammock. —Martin Ragaway

Once upon a time, when people could afford to drive automobiles, a woman's car stalled at a traffic light. She tried desperately to start the engine while behind her an impatient man rudely honked his horn — and honked. Finally, the lady got out of her car and walked back to the honker.

"I'm sorry," she said, smiling all the while, "but I can't start my car. If you'll start it for me, I'll stay here and honk your horn for you."

THROUGH A CHILD'S EYES

As I was getting ready to go to the funeral home one evening, my five-year-old son asked me where I was going. I told him I was going to say farewell to a man who had died. My son — poor TV victim — asked, "What happened? Did he get shot?" I shook my head, and my son pondered the whole thing for a moment and said, "He must have gone outside barefooted."

Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous to Your Health.

BOX: 19 mg. "tar", 1.3 mg. nicotine, KING: 20 mg. "tar", 1.3 mg. nicotine, av. per cigarette, FTC Report MAY '78.

DOES SELF-IMAGE AFFECT YOUR HEALTH?

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. How physically fit you feel depends to a large extent on your self-esteem — whether you think of yourself positively or negatively.

2. The farther and more quickly you progress up and down the social ladder — psychologists term this social mobility — the more it is likely to affect your health and general well-being.

3. Men don't live as long as women — and there's really nothing men can do to better their position in the longevity sweepstakes.

4. You'll live longer and be healthier and less subject to heart attack if you make a habit of working harder.

5. The less active you are the more likely you are to become a vital statistic unexpectedly and rapidly.

6. Overwork is something else again.

ANSWERS

1. True. At Bowling Green State University (Ohio) a group of men and women students were pretested on a self-rating scale of perceived physical fitness. Then their self-concepts were assessed by a 44-item psychological test. It was found that how physically fit the subjects felt "correlated positively with their self concept" — whether it was good, bad or indifferent. A further finding: how physically fit a person felt usually — although not always — coincided with how fit physical tests showed him to be.

2. True. Investigators from two universities (Temple University and the University of Oslo, Norway) evaluated the findings of leading studies, which show that general well-being in terms of mental and physical health tends to be adversely affected for persons who are preoccupied with social status, status striving and social mobility. Social mobility, it is pointed out, means the loosening and straining of one's ties to significant social groups that ordinarily provide support, meaning and belongingness. Findings also indicate that "the downwardly mobile population shows higher rates (of health problems) than the upwardly mobile; however, the upwardly mobile at the high-status levels and the downwardly mobile at the low-status levels are the particularly high-risk groups." For it was found that as the distance moved in the upward and downward direction, the rates of illness (triggered by mental and emotional stresses) showed an increase in both directions.

3. True — in part. They don't live as long, but there is something they can do about it. University of Pennsylvania studies cite statistics showing that "In the contemporary United States, mortality is 60 percent higher for males than females." And it is noted that one chief reason for this is because men more often develop the competitive, aggressive, coronary-prone behavior pattern, where worry, anxiety and residual tensions not only affect their (work) performance but take their physical toll. And the findings suggest that men who do not have this mental attitude toward their work, "who do not develop this behavior pattern, may have as low a risk of coronary heart disease as comparable women." Other factors reported in the sex differential in mortality include men's higher rates of suicide, motor vehicle or other accidents and cirrhosis of the liver. And it is noted that each of these causes of death is linked to behavior which is encouraged or accepted more in males than in females: using guns, drinking alcohol, working at hazardous jobs and seeming to be relatively fearless.

4. True. In research at the University of California, sponsored by the U.S. Public Health Service, a study probed the lives and work patterns of 3,600 workers. Results are reported as follows: A regular pattern of hard work was accompanied by as much as a 50-percent reduction in risk of a fatal heart attack for the entire group studied. Workers between the ages of 35 and 54 who worked at the most strenuous jobs were found to have had the lowest risk of heart attack.

5. True. According to the same study, a careful review of fatal heart attacks revealed that the less-active workers "were three times more likely than the strenuous workers to die unexpectedly and rapidly (that is, within an hour after the attack)." The results, the investigators conclude, offer the most striking confirmation yet that strenuous work and exercise can pay high health dividends and build a strong case for routine, vigorous physical activity for everyone.

6. True. Findings of a study of the causes and effects of overwork, conducted at Duke University Medical Center, are summed up succinctly: Most persons in executive positions or who are self-employed are able to pace themselves by balancing their drive, energy and recuperative capacity against the realistic demands of the job and the goals they require of themselves. While they occasionally overextend themselves, they learn to compensate to maintain the necessary expenditure-recuperation equilibrium.

It is further observed, however, that some persons appear to lack an inner "governor" for regulating their work-rest-recreation balance, and for some reason ignore the commonplace signs that they need to take a break. Cursed with a compulsive need to work, they deny the existence of fatigue, and push themselves beyond reason.

Prescribed treatment in such cases involves enforced rest and the reeducation of the person to become aware of and make provision for his physical and emotional needs, so that he refrains from driving himself to work beyond his endurance and recuperative capacity. FW

COOKBOOK

PICNIC

Renew your inner spirit this summer with a bountiful spread in a favorite outdoor spot. A few treasured friends, delicious food and a bottle of wine will make the hours memorable.

By Marilyn Hansen

A MOVEABLE FEAST OF LUSCIOUS PICNIC FOODS

GARLIC HERB CHEESE BALL

- 11 ounces: 1pkg. (8 ozs.) and 1 pkg. (3 ozs.) cream cheese, softened
- ¼ cup butter, softened (do not use margarine)
- 1 clove garlic, crushed or minced, then pressed with flat side of knife
- 1 teaspoon dried parsley
- 1 teaspoon red wine vinegar
- ⅛ teaspoon each of marjoram, thyme, summer savory and basil
- ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- About ¼ cup fresh, minced or dried parsley
- Unsalted crackers or melba toast

1. In small bowl with mixer at medium speed, beat cream cheese, butter, garlic, parsley, vinegar, herbs and Worcestershire sauce until fluffy and well mixed.

2. Line a small bowl with plastic wrap; pack mixture into bowl. Cover and refrigerate overnight until cheese is firm.

3. Place ¼ cup parsley on waxed paper; unwrap cheese and coat with parsley. Place on serving plate; serve with crackers or rewrap in more plastic wrap and refrigerate to serve later.

Makes about 1⅓ cups

LOW-CAL HERB CHEESE SPREAD: Prepare as above but omit butter and the small package of cream cheese; substitute ⅔ cup low-fat small curd cottage cheese. Pack mixture in a crock; omit rolling parsley. Refrigerate several hours just to blend flavors.

OVEN-BAKED LEMONY SESAME CHICKEN

- ⅔ cup lemon juice
- ⅓ cup liquid brown sugar
- 3 tablespoons vegetable oil
- 1½ teaspoons salt
- 1 teaspoon ground ginger or 2 teaspoons slivered fresh ginger
- ¼ teaspoon dry mustard
- 2 broiler-fryer chickens, about 2½ lbs. each, cut up
- 1⅓ cups packaged bread crumbs
- ⅓ cup sesame seeds
- 1 teaspoon paprika

1. In large bowl, combine lemon juice, liquid brown sugar, oil, salt, ginger and mustard.

2. Add chickens; toss until coated; cover and refrigerate several hours to marinate, turning pieces occasionally.

3. In medium plastic bag, combine bread crumbs, sesame seeds and paprika.

4. Line two jelly-roll pans or roasting pans with foil; cover each with wire racks.

5. Preheat oven to 400°F. Shake chicken pieces, a few at a time, in crumb mixture; place skin side up on wire rack in pan.

6. Bake chicken 30 minutes. Remove pans from oven; spoon leftover marinade over chicken pieces to moisten. Return pans to oven; bake 25 more minutes or until chicken is fork-tender.

7. Serve hot or refrigerate to serve cold later. Pack cold chicken in cooler to take to picnic.

Makes 8 servings

GREEN AND RED COLESLAW

- 1 medium head green cabbage (abut 2½ lbs.)
- 1 small head red cabbage (about 1 lb.)
- ½ lb. seedless green grapes
- 1 cup mayonnaise
- 1 container (8 ozs.) sour cream (1 cup)
- ¼ cup liquid brown sugar
- 2 tablespoons cider vinegar
- 2 teaspoons salt
- ½ teaspoon ground black pepper

1. Cut cabbages in half through core; remove core and thinly slice cabbage into shreds. Remove grapes from stems.

2. In large bowl or plastic container, combine cabbages and grapes.

3. In small bowl or jar, combine remaining ingredients for the dressing. Refrigerate until serving time. Just before serving, toss dressing with cabbage-grape mixture.

4. Pack into container and place in cooler to take to picnic.

Makes about 16 servings

WALNUT YOGURT CAKE

- 1 cup butter or margarine, softened
- 4 large eggs, separated and at room temperature
- 1½ cups liquid brown sugar
- 1 container (8 ozs.) plain yogurt
- 3¼ cups unsifted all-purpose flour
- 2 teaspoons baking soda
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 2 teaspoons vanilla extract
- 1 cup chopped walnuts
- Brown Sugar Glaze (below)
- Whole walnut halves for garnish

1. Grease and flour a 10-inch Bundt or tube cake pan or two 9 × 5-inch loaf pans. Preheat oven to 325°F.

2. In large bowl with mixer at medium speed, beat butter until fluffy. Beat in egg yolks, one at a time.

3. At low speed, gradually beat in liquid brown sugar, yogurt, 1 cup of the flour, baking soda, salt and vanilla.

4. Add remaining flour gradually and beat until fluffy and well mixed, constantly scraping bowl with rubber spatula. Wash beaters.

5. In medium bowl, with clean beaters, beat egg whites at high speed until stiff peaks form. Stir nuts into batter, then fold in beaten egg whites.

6. Pour into prepared pan. Bake in Bundt pan 65 to 75 minutes or in loaf pans 45 to 50 minutes, until cake tester inserted in center comes out clean.

7. Cool in pan on wire rack 10 minutes. Unmold onto rack and cool completely. When cold, drizzle with glaze and garnish with walnut halves.

Makes: 1 large cake or 2 loaf cakes

BROWN SUGAR GLAZE: In small bowl, combine ½ cup sifted confectioners' sugar, 1 tablespoon liquid brown sugar and ¼ teaspoon vanilla extract until smooth. Add more liquid brown sugar until of a stiff but spoonable consistency.

BARBECUED MEATBALL PITA SANDWICHES

- 1½ lbs. ground lamb, chuck or turkey
- ¾ cup seasoned bread crumbs
- ¾ cup cold water
- 1½ teaspoons salt
- 1 can (8 ozs.) tomato sauce
- ¼ cup liquid brown sugar
- 2 tablespoons vinegar
- 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- 1 teaspoon oregano leaves
- 6 pita or pocket breads
- ½ head iceberg lettuce, shredded
- 1 medium onion, thinly sliced

1. Mix lamb, bread crumbs, water and 1 teaspoon salt.

2. Shape into 1-inch meatballs. Place in 13 × 9-inch baking pan.

3. Preheat oven to 400°F. Bake meatballs 10 minutes.

4. Combine tomato sauce, liquid brown sugar, vinegar, Worcestershire sauce, garlic, oregano and ½ teaspoon salt.

5. Remove meatballs from oven; spoon off all fat and discard. Pour barbecue sauce over meatballs.

6. Bake 20 more minutes. Serve meatballs warm with sauce in pita bread pockets with lettuce and onion slices. If taking to picnic, refrigerate meatballs and sauce to bring to picnic in cooler later.

Makes 6 servings

WALNUT SUMMER SUPPER SALAD

- 2 cups each cooked carrots and zucchini
- Marinade, recipe follows
- 1 cup small elbow macaroni, uncooked
- 1 cup slivered Cheddar cheese
- ½ cup thinly sliced celery
- ¼ cup chopped green pepper
- ¼ cup sliced green onion
- 2 tablespoons chopped pimiento
- 1 cup coarsely chopped walnuts
- 2 teaspoons butter or margarine
- ¼ teaspoon dill weed
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ⅔ cup mayonnaise
- 1 tablespoon marinade from vegetables
- 1 tablespoon tarragon-flavor red wine vinegar
- 1 teaspon prepared mustard
- Lettuce

1. Drain carrots and zucchini; drizzle with marinade and chill.

2. Cook macaroni in boiling salted water as package directs. Drain, rinse with cold water and cool.

3. Combine macaroni with cheese, celery, green pepper, onion and pimiento. Chill.

4. Toast walnuts in skillet with butter over low heat, for 5 minutes. Add dill weed and salt.

5. Drain marinated vegetables, saving marinade. Mix mayonnaise, 1 tablespoon marinade from vegetables, vinegar and mustard. Add to macaroni mixture and toss. Refrigerate.

6. Place lettuce leaves in a plastic bag. Refrigerate. Wrap walnuts.

7. Just before going to picnic, place macaroni salad in cooler, along with chilled marinated vegetables, lettuce leaves and walnuts.

8. Assemble salad at site on large unbreakable platter. Stir walnuts into macaroni salad just before spooning onto lettuce leaves.

Makes 4 servings

MARINADE FOR WALNUT SUPPER SALAD

- 4 tablespoons vegetable oil
- 2 tablespoons tarragon-flavor red wine vinegar
- ¼ teaspoon dill weed
- 1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil leaves or 1 teaspoon dry basil leaves

1. Combine marinade ingredients in a small bowl.

YOGURT: A GOOD FOOD FRIEND

Yogurt. More and more Americans are buying this versatile dairy product. Yogurt also is appearing with greater variety, from plain, flavored, with fruit, whole milk, partially skimmed milk, yogurt shakes, frozen yogurt and yogurt on a stick.

Yogurt is milk that has been fermented to a creamy, light, custard-like consistency by the addition of lactic-acid-producing bacterial cultures such as lactobacillus bulgaricus, lactobacillus yogurt and streptococcus thermophilus.

When one or more of these cultures is mixed with warm milk and then allowed to remain warm and undisturbed for a period of five hours or more, the result is yogurt.

Read the label to see just what kind of yogurt you are buying and what other ingredients, if any, have been added.

One of the ways to eat yogurt as a light snack or at breakfast is by simply stirring a little honey and wheat germ into it. Imaginative cooks will find that it's easy and fun to cook with yogurt, as our recipes prove.

CHILLED AVOCADO AND TOMATO BOWL

3 medium-sized, ripe avocados
1 large cucumber
3 to 4 tablespoons lemon juice
2½ cups chicken broth
1 cup plain yogurt
1¼ teaspoons salt
Few drops Tabasco sauce
3 ripe or green tomatoes, peeled, seeded and diced

1. Peel, pit and dice avocados. Peel, seed and dice cucumber.

2. Combine avocado, cucumber and lemon juice in electric blender container. Add half of the chicken broth. Cover, blend until smooth.

3. Add remaining chicken broth, yogurt, salt and Tabasco. Cover, blend at low speed just until smooth. If your blender container cannot handle all that volume at once, blend in two separate steps.

4. Refrigerate soup until well chilled. Just before serving, beat soup with wire whisk. Taste, adding additional seasoning, if desired. Stir in diced tomato, saving a little to spoon on top of each serving.

Makes 6 servings

YOGURT LEMON-NUT CAKE

1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
2 tablespoons sugar
½ cup finely chopped walnuts or almonds
½ lb. (2 sticks) butter or margarine
1 cup sugar
4 eggs, room temperature
2 teaspoons grated lemon rind
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2½ cups unsifted all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 cup plain yogurt
½ cup lemon juice
½ cup sugar

1. Preheat oven to 350°F. Grease a 10-inch tube pan well.

2. Combine lemon rind, 2 tablespoons sugar and walnuts. Sprinkle evenly in the bottom of the tube pan.

3. In large bowl with electric mixer, beat butter until softened; gradually add 1 cup sugar, beating until fluffy.

4. Add eggs one at a time, beating well after each addition. Add 2 teaspoons lemon rind and vanilla; blend in.

5. Sift the flour, salt, baking soda and baking powder together.

7. Pour batter into prepared pan over sugar-nut mixture.

8. Bake for about 1 hour or until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean. Allow to cool 10 minutes in pan, then invert and cool completely, sugar-nut side up.

9. Combine lemon juice and ½ cup sugar in saucepan, heat to boiling, stirring until sugar dissolves.

10. Pour hot syrup slowly over sugar-nut topping, allowing syrup to soak into cake.

A word to smokers

It's no secret that there are some folks these days who are trying to build walls between smokers and nonsmokers.

The theory behind all this is that some smokers annoy nonsmokers and, of course, that can happen.

But if you want to get an idea of the ridiculous lengths that some of the wall-builders would like to go to, you have only to consider this:

In one state alone, it was estimated that the first year's cost of administering and enforcing a proposed anti-smoking law and building the physical walls required was nearly $250,000,000.

The proposal was, of course, defeated—for the plain fact is the one you have observed in your own daily life, that the overwhelming majority of smokers and nonsmokers get along very well and don't need or want to be separated.

This infuriates the wall-builders. Since they cannot have their own way in a world of free choice, they would like to eliminate that world by government fiat, by rules and regulations that would tell you where, and with whom, you may work, eat, play and shop. And the enormous burden that would place on all of us, in higher taxes and costs, does not bother them.

Certainly no one, including smokers, can properly object to the common sense rules of, for instance, banning smoking in crowded elevators, poorly ventilated spaces or, indeed, in any place where it is clearly inappropriate. And individual managers in their own interest should see to the mutual comfort of their smoking and nonsmoking patrons. It is only when the long arm, and notoriously insensitive hands, of government regulators start making these private arrangements for us that we all, smoker and nonsmoker alike, begin to lose our freedom of choice.

In the long run, the wall-builders must fail, and the walls will come tumbling down—if not to the sound of a trumpet, then at least to the slower but surer music of common decency and courtesy practiced on both sides of them.

A word to nonsmokers

(about people who build walls)

The chances are that you made up your mind about smoking a long time ago — and decided it's not for you.

The chances are equally good that you know a lot of smokers — there are, after all about 60 million of them — and that you may be related to some of them, work with them, play with them, and get along with them very well.

And finally it's a pretty safe bet that you're open-minded and interested in all the various issues about smokers and nonsmokers — or you wouldn't be reading this.

And those three things make you incredibly important today.

Because they mean that yours is the voice — not the smoker's and not the anti-smoker's — that will determine how much of society's efforts should go into building walls that separate us and how much into the search for solutions that bring us together.

For one tragic result of the emphasis on building walls is the diversion of millions of dollars from scientific research on the causes and cures of diseases which, when all is said and done, still strike the nonsmoker as well as the smoker. One prominent health organization, to cite but a single instance, now spends 28¢ of every publicly-contributed dollar on "education" (much of it in anti-smoking propaganda) and only 2¢ on research.

There will always be some who want to build walls, who want to separate people from people, and up to a point, even these may serve society. The anti-smoking wall-builders have, to give them their due, helped to make us all more keenly aware of the value of courtesy and of individual freedom of choice.

But our guess, and certainly our hope, is that you are among the far greater number who know that walls are only temporary at best, and that over the long run, we can serve society's interests better by working together in mutual accommodation.

Whatever virtue walls may have, they can never move our society toward fundamental solutions. People who work together on common problems, common solutions, can.

HERE THEY ARE: THE WINNERS IN THE NEIGHBORS' RECIPE EXCHANGE CONTEST

Food editor Hansen and judges Schmidt, Pépin, Lang

It was due to the overwhelming popularity of our Neighbors' Recipe Exchange column that we decided to run a contest. But we had no idea we'd be so swamped by the response, with mail from all over the country pouring into our special mailbox number. In fact, over 50,000 entries from 47 states were received from young readers, newly married couples, housewives, working men and women and senior citizens.

To judge the finalists, we asked three distinguished cooks to participate:

George Lang, cookbook author, columnist and owner of the Café des Artistes, Hungaria and La Folie restaurants in New York City; Jacques Pépin, versatile French chef and a food consultant to the World Trade Center in New York City; and Arno Schmidt, executive chef at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City. On the afternoon of May 8, they judged the 15 finalist recipes.

Honorable Mention: Each will receive $10.00 plus Family Weekly's Cookbook, "Cooking by the Calendar." Whiskey Cake: Marilyn Griffith, Mt. Bethel, Pa. (Easton-Wilson Express.) Spaghetti Pie: Lynn A. Sites, Cheyenne, Wyo. (Wyoming Tribune-Eagle.) Cranberry Meatballs: Marilyn Faas, Lake Charles, La. (American Press.) Barbecued Ribs-Celery Stuffing: Susan Dray, Fort Defiance, Ariz. (Flagstaff Sun.) Spinach Quiche: David McGee, Grant's Pass, Ore. (Mail Tribune) Michigan Blueberry Pie: Laura Tanner, Houghton Lake, Mich. (State Journal.) Orange Glazed Game Hens: Eugene C. U.S. PATENT #3,809,035

Think of it! Thanks to an amazing automobile discovery, every single car owner, every fleet operator, every truck or camper owner . . . everyone who operates a gas-powered internal combustion engine, can now save up to 20% and more on their gasoline bills!

Yes, you can actually get up to 70. . . 80. . . 90 . . . even 100 extra miles from every single tankful! No matter how old or run-down your car may be . . . no matter how many gallons of gas it now devours each week . . . FROM THE VERY INSTANT YOU INSTALL THE BALL-MATIC GAS SAVER VALVE IN YOUR CAR, YOU MUST EXPERIENCE A DRAMATIC DECREASE IN GAS CONSUMPTION!

Here's why:

With all the advances made in automotive technology, the carburetor is literally 50 years behind the times! It is possibly the most inefficient component in the entire engine and is responsible for an incredible waste of gasoline! You see, the carburetor is pre-set at the factory for idle conditions. This means that it is most efficient in regulating the gas-to-air mixture when the car is standing still and up to speeds of 35 mph. When you drive over that speed . . . or start up from a dead stop . . . or negotiate grades and steep hills . . . or pull a trailer or camper . . . or carry a full load of passengers the whole system breaks down! Too much gas feeds into the carburetor and you get incomplete combustion. Every time that happens, it's just like pouring your money right down the drain.

The Most Significant Automotive Breakthrough Of The Past Ten Years!

Adding the BALL-MATIC GAS SAVER VALVE to your engine is like having a "mini computer brain" which actually monitors the air-to-fuel balance on a constant basis. As soon as it senses an over-rich condition, it opens to permit a precise measure of additional air to enter the system. The result: more efficient combustion and a fuel savings of up to 20% or more!

Controlled Tests Confirm Big Dollar Savings

In the Spring of 1978, we arranged for a local Shell Service Station to conduct a controlled, supervised, test using seven different cars owned and driven by non-professional drivers. Each car was fitted with a locked gas cap and the keys were kept in the possession of the testers.

After establishing base mileage consumption data for the various cars, the BALL-MATIC was installed and miles-per-gallon figures were rechecked. Every single car in the test showed dramatic improvement.

Year/Make Of Car	MPG Improvement
1970 Cadillac Eldorado	21%
1970 Chrysler Imperial	28%
1969 Cutlass	11%
1974 Vega	11%
1972 Gran Torino	19%
1967 Camaro	16%
1973 Cadillac Eldorado	40%
OVER-ALL AVERAGE	18%

Start Saving Immediately

As of now, tens of thousands of motorists all over the country have put the BALL-MATIC GAS SAVER VALVES in their cars. It takes only 60 seconds to install and no special tools are required (easy-to-follow instructions are provided) — it's so easy, anyone can do it! But best of all, the BALL-MATIC works immediately. There's no "breaking-in period" — you experience a significant savings with the very first tankful.

The BALL-MATIC fits all American made cars (except diesel or fuel injection) and all foreign cars except Volkswagen.

READ THE RESULTS FOR YOURSELF!

The BALL-MATIC (gas saver) that I purchased has proven itself. I drive a 1970 Oldsmobile, now I get four miles more per gallon.
C. T.
Orange, California

Just a short note to inform you of the performance of your BALL-MATIC unit that I have installed in my 1972 Ford stationwagon. Prior to using your device, I averaged 12 to 13 MPG, now that I have installed your unit my milage has gone up to 16 MPG around town.
A. C. — Sherriff
Orange County, California

Before it was installed on my 1973 Ford L.T.D. I was getting 9 miles to the gallon, since installation of the BALL-MATIC I am getting almost 15 miles to the gallon.
R. B.
Hickman, Nebraska

After installing the BALL-MATIC on my 1972 Oldsmobile Toronado I increased from 7.5 to 10.5 miles to the gallon.

Seeing this I took my station on as a BALL-MATIC dealer and within the first week sold over 100 valves.

This is the kind of extra income producer that other service stations should consider during this energy crisis to service their customers.
L. M.
Mobile Service
New Britian, Connecticut

I want to express my thanks for the BALL-MATIC. Since it has been installed in my car, my gas mileage has not been under 18 miles per gallon. This is an increase of 5.5 miles per gallon.

LOOK HOW EASY IT IS TO INSTALL THE BALL-MATIC YOURSELF

All you do is simply slip the BALL-MATIC onto the line leading from the PCV valve and twist into place. (It's as easy as screwing in a light bulb). In fact even if you never lifted the hood of your car before . . . you can install the BALL-MATIC in just a few moments (no special tools required). Easy to follow instructions are included.

GUARANTEED SAVINGS

We firmly believe the BALL-MATIC GAS SAVER VALVE to be one of the best investments you can make to save money this year. It must deliver up to 2 . . . 3 . . . even 4 extra miles per gallon — up to 100 extra miles between fill-ups. Of course, gas savings will depend on the type of car you own and the amount of miles you drive; however, we guarantee that you must save at least FIVE TIMES the amount you paid for your BALL-MATIC in the very first year or WE WILL GIVE YOU DOUBLE YOUR MONEY BACK! (Double refunds limited to one unit per household or business.)

FAMILY WEEKLY COOKBOOK

2 eggs, lightly beaten
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ cup buttermilk
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 stick (½ cup) margarine
3 tablespoons unsweetened cocoa
6 tablespoons milk
1 lb. box confectioners' sugar
1 cup chopped pecans

1. Grease and lightly flour a 10 × 15 × 1-inch jelly-roll pan. Preheat oven to 400°F.

2. In large mixing bowl, combine flour and sugar.

3. Measure into large, heavy saucepan 2 sticks margarine, 5 tablespoons cocoa and water.

4. Heat saucepan mixture to boiling, stirring well. Add to flour-sugar combination, blending well.

5. In medium bowl, beat eggs, stir soda into buttermilk; add to eggs along with vanilla.

6. Add this buttermilk mixture to the flour-cocoa combination. Mix well.

7. Pour batter into prepared pan. Bake about 25 minutes or until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean.

8. During the last 5 minutes of baking time, measure into heavy saucepan 1 stick margarine, 3 tablespoons cocoa and milk. Heat to boiling, stirring well.

9. Add confectioners' sugar, vanilla and chopped pecans. Mix well. Pour hot frosting over hot cake; spread evenly. Cool. Cut into 24 squares.

Makes 24 servings

Editor's Note: George Lang would like to add 2 additional tablespoons cocoa to the batter and 1 tablespoon additional cocoa to the frosting, making the cake "fudgier."

Tom Cavanagh

TAMALE CASSEROLE

1 lb. lean ground beef
1 medium onion, finely chopped
1 small green pepper, finely chopped
1 teaspoon chili powder
1 teaspoon taco seasoning
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sugar
¼ teaspoon ground black pepper
1 small garlic clove, crushed
2 cans (8-oz. size) tomato sauce
Cornbread batter
½ cup grated Cheddar cheese
¼ cup sliced pitted black olives

1. Preheat oven to 400°F and oil a 1½-2-qt. casserole.

3. Add chili powder, taco seasoning, salt, sugar, pepper, garlic and tomato sauce to meat mixture. Heat to boiling, stirring. Reduce heat and simmer 10 minutes, uncovered.

4. Pour mixture into casserole dish.

5. Make up cornbread from scratch or use a package of cornbread mix. Pour over top of meat mixture.

6. Bake casserole for about 25 to 30 minutes, or until cornbread topping is beginning to brown.

7. Garnish top with grated cheese and sliced, pitted ripe olives.

Makes 6 servings

Editor's Note: Jacques Pepin thought that the Tamale Casserole was "original and had a good flavor."

George Lang says this about the Tamale Casserole: "It is an excellent idea with the cakelike cornbread topping and the tamale filling underneath. Slice olives thinly on top."

GOLDEN CHEESE CORNBREAD

½ cup enriched yellow corn meal
½ cup unsifted all-purpose flour
1 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup milk
1 egg
2 tablespoons solid all-vegetable shortening
½ cup grated sharp chedder cheese, optional

1. In medium bowl, combine corn meal, flour, sugar, baking powder and salt.

2. Stir in milk, egg and shortening. Beat until fairly smooth, about 1 minute.

3. Add grated cheese at this point. Pour batter over Tamale Casserole beef-chile mixture and bake as directed in Casserole recipe. Or pour batter into greased 8 × 8 × 2-inch square pan and bake for 15 to 18 minutes in preheated 400°F. oven.

GERMAN APPLE CAKE

5 baking or cooking apples
5 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon
3 cups unsifted all-purpose flour
2½ cups sugar
½ teaspoon salt
4 eggs
1 cup vegetable oil
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
⅓ cup orange juice
1½ teaspoons baking soda
1½ teaspoons baking powder
1½ cups confectioners' sugar
2 tablespoons soft butter or margarine
1½ teaspoons vanilla extract
1 to 2 tablespoons water

1. Grease and flour a 10-inch tube or Bundt pan. Preheat oven to 350°F.

2. Peel apples, core and thinly slice. In bowl, toss apple slices with 5 tablespoons sugar and 2 teaspoons ground cinnamon; set aside.

3. In large bowl, mix together flour, sugar, salt, eggs, oil, vanilla, orange juice, baking soda and baking powder.

4. With electric mixer, blend together on low speed for 1 minute.

5. Clean down side of bowl with rubber scraper. Increase speed to medium and blend for 3 minutes. You will have a very thick dough!

6. Fill prepared pan with alternating layers of batter and apples. Making a total of 3 batter layers and 2 apple layers. Start and finish with batter.

7. Bake for 1½ to 1¾ hours or until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean.

8. Cook on rack 10 minutes, then invert cake, remove pan. Allow cake to cool completely on rack.

9. Make Glaze: Mix confectioners' sugar, butter, vanilla and water until smooth. Drizzle on cooled German Apple Cake.

Makes 1 large cake

Editor's note: Arno Schmidt said that "This cake is of the type that is made in Austria and Hungary and is a widely known favorite."

ORANGE GLAZED GAME HENS

- ¾ lb. sliced bacon, cut in ½" pieces
- 1 cup chopped celery
- 3 cups cooked white rice
- 1 can (8 ozs.) crushed pineapple, drained
- Salt
- Freshly ground black pepper
- 4 (1-lb. size) Cornish game hens, washed and dried
- 1 can (6 ozs.) frozen orange juice, thawed
- ½ cup teriyaki sauce
- Garnish: fresh parsley sprigs, orange and apple slices

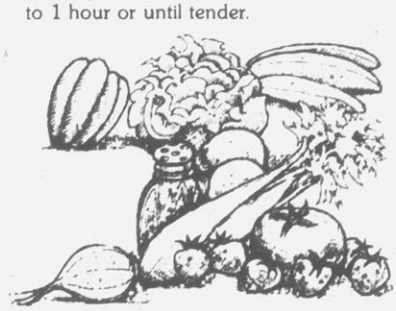
2. Add celery and cook, stirring until celery is tender, about 5 minutes.
3. Add rice, cook over low heat, turning with a pancake turner until well mixed. Add crushed pineapple, 2 tablespoons at a time, until all is added. Turn mixture often after the first addition of pineapple. If too much pineapple is added at a time, rice will become mushy. Cool.
4. Taste stuffing; add a little salt and a few twists freshly ground black pepper, if you wish.
5. Stuff game hens with stuffing mixture; skewer securely to close. Place the 4 game hens on a barbecue spit, head to tail tight so all with turn together. Cook over medium hot coals.
6. When game hens start to turn golden brown, baste with a barbecue sauce made by mixing the undiluted orange juice with the teriyaki sauce. Cook hens 45 minutes to 1 hour or until tender.



7. Or bake hens in a shallow roasting pan in a preheated 325°F. oven for 45 minutes to 1 hour, basting frequently with sauce after they turn golden brown.
8. To serve, remove from spit or baking pan, place on a large serving platter. Garnish with parsley, orange and apple slices. Makes 4 servings

CRANBERRY MEATBALLS

- 2 lbs. lean ground beef
- 2 tablespoons soy sauce
- 2 tablespoons minced onion
- 2 eggs
- ⅓ cup dried parsley flakes
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed, or 2 teaspoons garlic powder
- 1 cup cornflake crumbs
- 2 teaspoons salt
- ¼ teaspoon ground black pepper
- 1 can (1 lb.) cranberry sauce, jellied or whole berry
- ⅓ cup ketchup
- 2 tablespoons brown sugar
- 1 bottle (12 ozs.) chili sauce
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice

1. In large bowl, combine ground beef, soy sauce, onion, eggs, parsley, garlic, crumbs, salt and pepper. Mix well.
2. Shape meat mixture into meat balls the size of a large olive. Place meatballs into baking pans. (They can be frozen in this manner to be used later on.)
3. Combine sauce ingredients: cranberry sauce, ketchup, brown sugar, chili sauce and lemon juice. Heat, stirring until cranberry sauce melts.
4. Pour sauce over meatballs and bake at 350°F. for 45 minutes.

Makes about 60 meatballs

MICHIGAN BLUEBERRY PIE

- 4 cups fresh blueberries, divided
- ½ cup dark brown sugar, packed
- ½ cup sugar
- 3½ tablespoons flour
- 1 tablespoon butter or margarine
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- ½ teaspoon ground nutmeg
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 1 pie shell (8- or 9-inch size), baked
- 1 cup heavy cream, whipped or whipped topping
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- ½ teaspoon vanilla extract

1. In medium saucepan, combine 2 cups of the blueberries with sugars, flour, butter, lemon juice, nutmeg and salt.
2. Over low heat, cook mixture, stirring, until it comes to boiling and is thickened. Cool and stir in remaining berries.
3. Turn filling into prepared pie crust and top with whipped cream flavored with 1 tablespoon sugar and vanilla. Chill until ready to serve. Makes 6 servings

How to Keep a Marriage Fresh

"The trouble with marriage," someone once observed, "is that it is so daily!" Even for the most loving couples the problems and routines of sharing a home, earning a living and raising children are enough to make a marriage seem stale and to dull the glow of romance. But there are ways to keep it fresh and sparkling. Here are several suggestions gathered from a number of marital counselors:

• Concentrate on the "positives" in your marriage. Most of us focus our attention on what's wrong rather than what's right. That's why it is important to recall — or to discover — the strong points that a couple share. Talk about the qualities you love and value in each other. Take a "marital inventory" of mutual interests and tastes. One couple who did this predicted they would not be able to list five items. But they found fourteen major bonds.

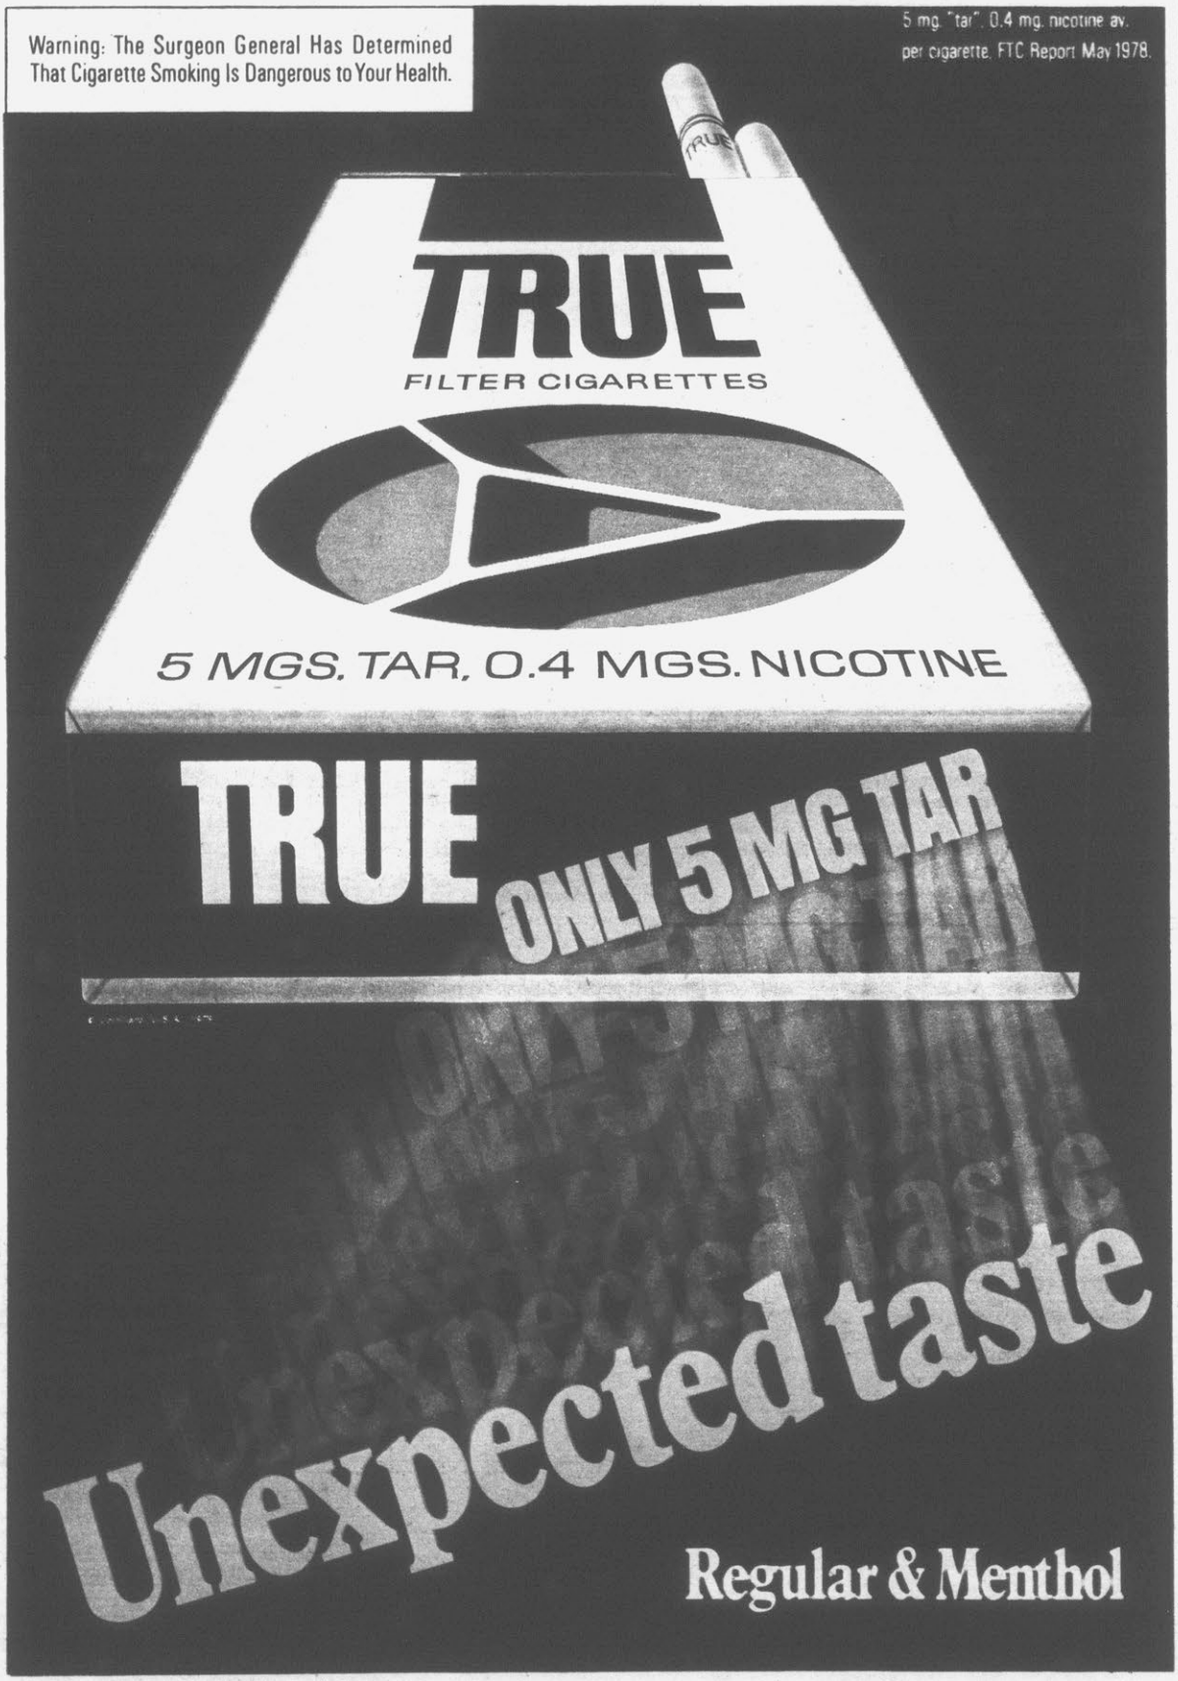
• Try doing together some of the things you enjoyed in your courting days. One couple who met in a tennis tournament gave up the game soon after their first child was born. Household chores seemed to leave no time for fun, and their marriage grew stale. But when they found public tennis courts in a nearby town they agreed to take two hours off every Sunday to play. Said the wife: "It's as if we're newlyweds again."

• Expand your intellectual horizons — subscribe to news magazines, take courses, read books — so that you will have new and different things to say.

• Begin a diary. Years from now the entries will spark loving memories. An elderly California couple started a notebook some years ago in which they wrote down reminiscences of special times in their marriage. It gives them pleasure to browse through it and will be a record for their grandchildren.

• A couple who met on a mountain hike preserved a dried flower they had picked on that trip. "Now, whenever we want to preserve the memory of a special time in our marriage," the woman said, "we pick and press a flower and keep it in a scrapbook."

• Some couples have their wedding vows recorded and play the cassette tape on their anniversaries. But Dick and Carmen Szladowski, of Garden Grove, Cal., go that one better by actually getting married again each year on the date of their first wedding. Each year they travel to a different state for the ceremony, so that by their golden wedding they will have been married in each of the 50 states. "It keeps our interest in each other alive, and besides, we are sentimental people," Richard said.



Blanket Security

When a child clings to a favorite toy, a familiar blanket or a well-worn stuffed animal, is it a sign of security or insecurity? Some parents believe a youngster should be forced to relinquish such attachments as soon as possible. But a Connecticut psychiatrist, Dr. Paul Horton, of the Western New England Institute for Psychoanalysis, suggests that such "security objects" are important aids in helping a child make a healthy adjustment to adult life.

Teddy bears, well-loved dolls and similar familiar possessions serve the important function of giving a child a sense of control over his or her environment. "Children feel they are small, helpless creatures in an often-hostile world," says Horton. "But when they have a feeling of mastery over the small, helpless Teddy bear, children develop the confidence to reach out to the larger world."

Since these "security" playthings help youngsters move from the small world of childhood to adult society, they are called "transitional objects." Most of us, Horton says, remember these objects very clearly, no matter how old we are. Indeed, some men and women still cling to them, psychologically speaking, when they are grown up. These are the people who feel insecure about life and may try to find their "security" in such adult playthings as alcohol. FW

STOCKARD CHANNING: TV'S NEWEST FUNNY LADY

Paramount Pictures

By Isobel Silden

She's very small and at first glance, not very attractive. Her face looks soft, almost malleable — like pie dough. But when she speaks, a metamorphosis takes place. Stockard Channing is one of the most exquisite women in Hollywood.

Like her chameleon looks, Stockard's professional track record has been changeable, too. Her movies include The Fortune with Warren Beatty and Jack Nicholson, a film she believed in: "It's shocking it didn't work out well. And All-American Girl was not really released.

"There are repercussions when you have a few flops in a row," she admits. "There is a tendency to avoid someone like that. I had a rough period for a year. I couldn't get arrested. It gave me a grounding I remember."

These days, the lady with the two last names (Stockard is her family's surname) is a hot property in Hollywood. Her luck picked up when she got good reviews for Grease and The Cheap Detective. CBS then offered her and her husband, producer-writer David Debin, financing for a TV movie and a series.

Her TV movie, based on the life and derring-do of deaf stuntwoman Kitty O'Neill, got great reviews and ratings to match. It aired last spring on CBS.

And in a dreary season producing little memorable TV, her series, Just Friends, is one of the too-few intelligent hits. It is loosely based on Stockard's earlier life. Prior to her current marriage, there was another husband, 10 years ago. That marriage lasted five years, and Stockard left him.

CBS describes the show's format as "adventurous Susan Hughes on the rebound from a rocky marriage. She decides that the best remedy for her troubles may be a new life in Los Angeles, away from her Boston home."

"Mine was different from the marriage Susan Hughes has," says the Radcliffe honors graduate. "She has more naivete than I. I think she's around 30. (Stockard is a few years older, but doesn't show it.) When you ask if she is like me, or if I am like her, I believe any character has to be an extension of yourself. There is an exchange of energies."

Stockard has always sought a distance between herself and her TV character: "I didn't want the show named for me for personal reasons," she says. "The show is one entity. I am another."

The character developed by Stockard and her partner-husband is far better defined than most on TV. So why not put her name on the show?

"Because I don't feel I am 'getting into TV,'" she answers. "I don't make guest appearances or go on game shows. I am an actress who is also interested in movies and stage work. Now I'm working both sides of the fence."

Fortunately, she likes to work. "When I lounge around, I get more tired. When I'm working, I'm energized," she declares. "I was born with a lot of energy, and it's nice to use it. I sort of believe the mind is a huge well, and whatever you need rises to the top when you need it."

With roots in the theater — she studied for nine years in a prestigious Boston theater company — she's not easily swayed by her new fame. "Actually, I get rather bored reading about me. Some people can get obsessive about their press," she says. "But one can't fret. I think that's dangerous thinking. Warren Beatty said, 'A public image is made up of all the misconceptions written about one.' I read things about me, and know I never said some of them. But I won't worry about it. I live in many worlds at once. I have personal friends from school, movie friends, New York friends, writers, actors. My life is not confined to one group.

"But it is funny," she muses, "people think because you're in Hollywood, you know everyone. I got a letter from someone saying, 'Say hello to Lee Majors for me.' I don't know Lee Majors! And people think that just because my show follows Alice, I know Linda Lavin very well. I know her, but I don't hang out with her." She laughs.

What is Stockard Channing really like? "I do have a temper. I fret over things," she confesses. "I try to make things better. I rarely get really angry. I get to a big peak, and it blows over. What causes it? Irresponsibility to myself, or in others. Anything that gets fouled up — if I don't deliver to myself, or if people fail me by being unreliable. But I am not Joan Crawford," she announces. "That's who I think of as a perfectionist. You can drive yourself mad that way. I love what I appreciate in others. I regard Kitty O'Neill as a perfectionist in the right fashion by what she overcame."

She'll stay with Just Friends "as long as Susan is interesting, real, and has momentum. I won't project ahead eight to 10 years. Life deals us a new hand every week, and I want to keep up the standards."

As she leaves, her handshake is as forthright and direct as her statements. FW

SALLY STRUTHERS' LOVE LETTER.

"Four years ago, I would not have been able to write this letter.

"Because Marites was an eight-year-old girl with little hope. Working to help support her poverty-stricken family, she had no dream of a better tomorrow.

"But today Marites has hope. She has nourishing meals and warm clothing.

"And she's going to school.

Dearest Marites ....

Its really nice to come home after a long day at work and find one of your letters waiting for me. Thank you. I enjoy hearing about your school and I'm glad you like it and are doing well. I agree ... some subjects are harder than others. You know what? I hated math, too. But if you keep up with your studying, it will seem a little easier.

Ive been well and very busy. But not too busy to think about you every day. I hope your mother is feeling better. Having you home must be a great comfort to her. Please give her my love.

Say 'hi' to your sisters from me. Take care of yourself and please write again soon. Your letters are precious to me.

I love you,

Sally

"We'll send you a child's picture and background information.

"We'll tell you the child's age, how the child lives, what the child wears, and how your 50¢ a day can help make a world of difference in a poor child's life.

"We'll also tell you how the child will be helped, and explain how you can write to the child and receive very special letters in return.

"Please send in the coupon today to learn more about a child you can help.

"Somewhere there is a child who is waiting to share letters of love with you."

The Best-Loved Fairy Tales

Fifty magical works of art adorning fifty exquisite bone china plates. Astonishingly detailed collector's miniatures, decorated in 24 karat gold. Created expressly for this collection by one of the most gifted young artists of our time.

Issued in a strictly limited edition by Franklin Porcelain. Your subscription should be entered by July 31, 1979.

ONCE UPON A TIME there lived a little girl whose greatest pleasure was to lose herself in a world far removed from the world of everyday. A world of tall glass mountains and gingerbread cottages; of frog princes and pumpkin coaches. A world of heart-stopping fears that made her shudder . . . deliciously . . . and the happiest of happy endings that made her very toes tingle! The World of Fairy Tales.

When the little girl grew up and became an artist of renown, she never forgot that alluring world of magic, and some of her finest work was interpreting in art full of captivating, curious detail those wonderful childhood dreams.

And now artistic success has brought Carol Lawson (that was the little girl's name) the opportunity to accomplish a remarkable work she has long contemplated: the creation of an intensely personal series of fairy tale works in fine porcelain. Grand in concept . . . yet exquisitely miniature in size.

The Best-Loved Fairy Tales collection will include fifty enchanting miniature plates, beautifully crafted in fine bone china. Each one will portray a favorite scene from one of the world's best-loved fairy tales. And each plate will be accompanied by the artist's comments on why she chose the tale, and her own highly individual approach to its portrayal.

The fascination of the miniature

Carol Lawson has chosen to create her art for miniature plates because she felt that their daintiness would be quite perfect. Indeed, fairy tales themselves are crammed with evidence of our fascination with all things miniature—and there's a recognized tradition of creating miniature porcelain plates which over the years have attracted the attention of collectors. As the artist herself says: "What a challenge—to re-create all the jumbling, tumbling events, the colors and treasures, the heroes and villains of the fairy tales, in precise detail, but to this tiny scale!"

Capturing the spirit of our favorite fairy tales

One of the most appealing things about the plates is the flourishing energy and sheer virtuosity which the artist has brought to the portrayal of each fairy tale. For she has captured the very spirit and essence of our favorite stories, in scenes rich in fascinating detail.

From the engaging, rounded forms of the three bears, and their open-eyed amazement at finding little Goldilocks snuggled under Baby Bear's patchwork counterpane . . . to the myriad green and twining tendrils of the magic beanstalk which young Jack climbs so boldly . . . Carol Lawson has illuminated every scene with an intensity of colorful detail, embroidering each with the kaleidoscope patterns of her imagination.

And this same vivid imagination has been brought to play on the intricate and delicate border design of pure 24 karat gold which encircles each plate.

The Best-Loved Fairy Tales is truly a remarkable achievement. Imagine holding in your hands, for the very first time, one of these perfect little plates in miniature: sensing the silky smoothness of the high-shining glaze with your fingers; admiring with a wondering eye the fine translucency of the china; examining the minute details of the design . . . the rich reds and blues of Tom Thumb's butterfly steed . . . holding the burnished-bright gold border up to a light, to admire its intricacy and elegance.

Unique Signature Edition

For the benefit of those who acquire this remarkable work by an artist of growing international reputation, each plate will bear on the back the name of the collection, the words "limited edition," the title of the tale portrayed and the artist's full signature—in 24 karat gold. This exclusive Signature Edition—the first edition of this remarkable miniature collection—will be always distinguishable from any subsequent edition: for the plates in this premiere Signature Edition will be the only ones ever to bear the artist's full signature. A Certificate of Authenticity accompanying the collection will attest to this fact, and to the limited nature of the edition. The Best-Loved Fairy Tales collection in the Signature Edition is available only direct from Franklin Porcelain, and for a limited time only. The price is just $14.50 for each plate.

A handsome hardwood frame

Each subscriber will also receive, at no charge, a handsome hardwood frame with enough space on its shelves to accommodate every one of the fifty plates.

The Signature Edition of The Best-Loved Fairy Tales will be permanently limited, and your application for it should be postmarked by July 31, 1979. A final announcement will be made later, and the rolls for the Signature Edition will close forever in October. After that date, this edition will never be made available again.

The Best-Loved Fairy Tales miniature porcelain plate collection: what better way could there be to keep in touch with that romantic and invigorating land of wonder and fantasy than through the enjoyment of these lovely miniature plates. And, beautiful as they are now, these remarkable collector's plates in miniature will be enjoyed right down the years, and treasured as heirlooms in time to come.

But, to be eligible, the subscription form below must be returned to Franklin Porcelain, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania, postmarked by July 31, 1979.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

Digestive Disorders

An aching belly is really a pain, and for those millions of people who suffer from chronic digestive disorders that pain rarely abates. Doctors often have difficulty treating digestive problems because frequently there is little that is physically wrong, so for information about their condition patients are turning to groups such as the American Digestive Disease Society (ADDS).

"People come to us for practical information," says Jane Gross, the Society's vice president. "Many of them have questions that don't necessarily need to be answered by a physician.

"Often, stress and tension are the cause of some of these conditions," Gross continues, "and for us it's an issue of helping people avoid what causes their problem. For other patients the cure may be something as simple as cutting certain foods out of their diet."

Dr. Henry Colcher, president of ADDS, feels that the role of the organization is to "teach the patient to ask questions." ADDS publishes free pamphlets on various digestive disorders, and for those who join the organization a health news letter, personal counseling and a doctor referral service are available. For more information, write to the American Digestive Disease Society, Dept. FW, 420 Lexington Ave., N.Y., N.Y. 10017.

220 Million And Counting...

The United States Census Bureau is gearing up for the 1980 census. However, the census forms have undergone a few changes since the last count in 1970. This time, there will be no more "head of household," a term that once usually referred to the man of the family. And the marital status questions on the form will include a "never married" designation for couples who live together.

Charles Nam, a director of Florida State University's Center for the Study of Population, says that the Bureau plans to mount an extensive campaign to improve population counts, particularly in ethnic communities, because of pressure from minority and special-interest groups. Consequently, in late March 1980, more than 100 million census forms will be mailed out to about 220 million people. Census Day is April 1, so you can take time out from your taxes to complete the questionnaire.

Creatures Of The Deep

Taking your dog for a walk is a perfectly normal everyday task, but walking a shark? "Well," says Bruce Miller, an aquarium supervisor at the Sea World Shark Institute in the Florida Keys, "after we've brought in a shark, what I really do is swim beside him, guiding him around by his dorsal fin and getting him used to his new tank. We call it 'walking,' and it's the last stage in my job of collecting sharks for research and display in aquariums.

"Shark feeding time is at dusk and dawn," explains Bruce, "so in the evening we put out a 2,400-foot line with hooks and bait at 40-foot intervals. We use a special hook which the shark can't swallow and allow enough leader so that the shark will have plenty of swimming room.

"At dawn we begin our collecting," continues the marine biologist. "We slowly pull the sharks up to the side of the boat, and then lift them out of the water on a stretcher. The shark goes into a shallow tank and the crew massages him. This rubdown and the superoxygenated water have a calming effect on the animal."

Since he's obviously on a first-name basis with a number of sharks, does Miller think these creatures of the deep deserve their reputation? "Sharks," he says, "are really scavengers, although they do have a keen sense of smell, and blood does attract them. There are about 100 shark attacks a year, and about eight or nine people are fatally injured. But fewer people are killed by sharks than by bees or lightning." So, the odds are in your favor.

The Language Gap

Few Americans speak or understand a foreign language, and President Carter has appointed a Commission on Foreign Languages and International Studies to investigate how this ignorance is affecting our country's international stature. At a regional public meeting held at Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H., committee members cited the two following examples of problems in language translation.

In some foreign markets, cars with interiors marked "Body by Fisher" were being advertised as having "Corpses by Fisher." The Americans in charge of marketing didn't understand the language of the host country well enough to catch the distortion.

When Pepsi was first introduced to Taiwan, the slogan "Come Alive" became, in Chinese, the sacrilegious message, "Pepsi brings your ancestors back from the grave."

Ah, the nuance of language.

Lifestyles

Media. Radio and television news directors say that public apathy, management interference and lack of money are the major impediments to good broadcast journalism. According to a report in the Columbia Journalism Review, "mini-news shows" are the most conspicuous breakthroughs into prime time by network news departments.

Shortages. Last year the demand for blood increased 15 percent, but in this country of over 200 million people only 3 percent donated blood, creating a bad shortage. The development of a synthetic blood may prove to be the solution. One firm's "bionic" blood is in its final testing stages. Once it is on the market — in five or 10 years — the blood will have the capability of being stored for up to a year and will be able to be injected into anyone, regardless of blood type.

Stress. A training program in relaxation may help to alleviate the stresses of police work, says Michael Abbamonte of the department of industrial engineering at the University of Texas at Arlington. Using biofeedback devices to monitor the tension of the frontalis muscle, located in the forehead, Abbamonte found that the resulting awareness of physical tension, combined with specific relaxation training, definitely benefitted the six officers tested.

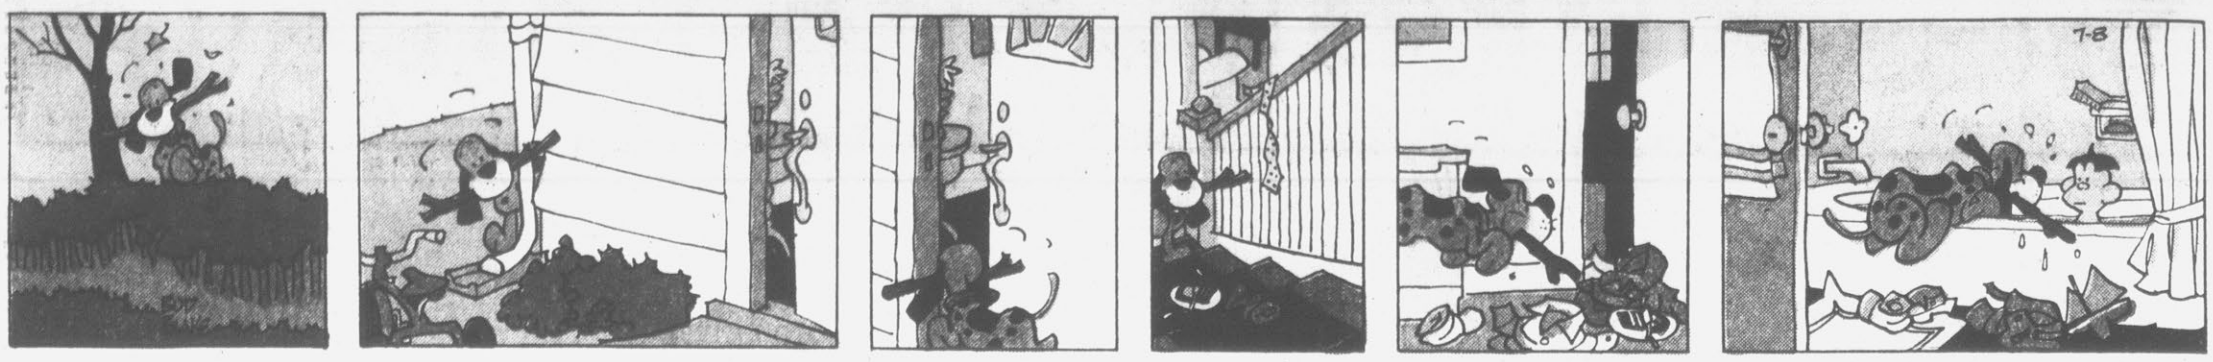
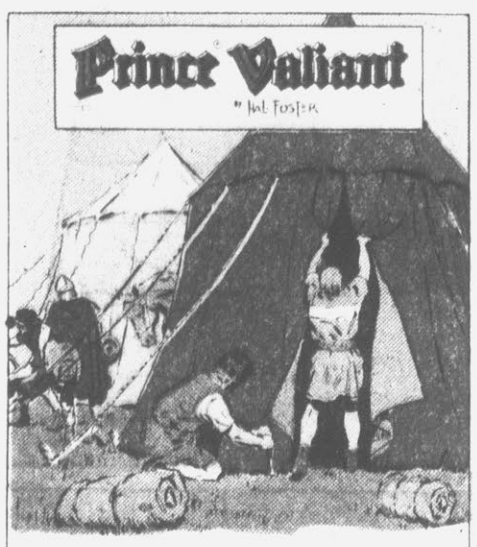
TIGER

by BUD BLAKE





Our Story: AT DAWN NEXT DAY THE PAVILIONS ARE FOLDED UP AND LOADED ON THE PACKHORSE AND THE LONG RIDE TO LORD VANOC'S FIEF BEGINS.

GALAN IS DELIGHTED THAT SIR GAWAIN IS ONE OF THE PARTY, FOR HE IS A TRUSTED FRIEND OF THE FAMILY.

DURING THE AFTERNOON A STORM RISES; LIGHTNING RIPS THE CLOUDS. THEN COMES THE RAIN AND SIR VANOC DRAWS HIS CAPE AROUND LADY ENID.

TOWARD EVENING THE WELCOMING LIGHTS OF AN INN BECKON THEM TO FOOD AND SHELTER.

BUT BEFORE THEY CAN DON DRY CLOTHES, A FRANTIC SERF BURSTS IN THE DOOR CRYING: "TO THE DAM, EVERYONE, ELSE IT WILL BREAK AND DESTROY US ALL!"

OF COURSE GALAN WANTS TO GO BUT GAWAIN SAYS: "NO, SOMEONE MUST STAY HERE TO PROTECT THE LADY ENID!"

2213

ALSO CAUGHT OUT IN THE STORM ARE TWO KNIGHTS OF DUBIOUS CHARACTER. THEY, TOO, SEE THE LIGHTS OF THE INN AND HOPE THERE WILL BE PRETTY YOUNG WAITRESSES AND GOOD WINE.

HONEY, DO YOU HAVE ANY CHANGE?

THERE'S A LOOSE SCREW ON THE HINGE OF OUR BACK DOOR THAT NEEDS TO BE TIGHTENED

THIS QUARTER SHOULD DO THE JOB

HONEY, I NEED TO POUND THE SCREW IN TO GET IT STARTED ...COULD I BORROW YOUR SHOE?

OKAY, HERE'S THE SHOE

I NEED TO BORROW YOUR PIPE

I HAVE TO WEDGE THE DOOR UP SO THE HOLES WILL BE IN LINE

HONEY, I NEED YOUR BELT

I HAVE TO TIE THE DOOR OPEN

YOUR BELT WASN'T LONG ENOUGH...

BUT IF YOU LET ME BORROW YOUR SHIRT I FIGURE I CAN MAKE IT THE PERFECT LENGTH

STEVE CANYON

by MILTON CANIFF

YES, SIR, I DISOBEYED A DIRECT ORDER

...AND MR. MINK! THEY WERE IN SERIOUS TROUBLE ON THE DOCK!

OLSON, YOU KNOW THE RULES! I'LL PAY YOU OFF AND PUT YOU ASHORE AT OUR NEXT PORT OF CALL!

COL. CANYON, MR. MINK AND THE WOMAN WILL DISEMBARK ALSO—AND GO THEIR OWN WAYS!

WELL, THAT'S THE VERDICT

WOW, LEIGHTON! WE DIDN'T MEAN TO GET YOU INTO TROUBLE—AND LOSE YOUR JOB!

THIS TANKER IS OWNED BY ARABS—AND MS. CONVOY IS AN ACTIVIST IN THE WOMEN'S RIGHTS MOVEMENT! THE SKIPPER'S IN A SQUEEZE!

HOW CAN WE SEE THAT CONVOY GETS MEDICAL HELP?

BUT SHE IS MY RESPONSIBILITY! WHY SHOULD YOU...

WELL, YOU DIDN'T TAKE VERY GOOD CARE OF MY MOTHER!

HEY, LISTEN, KID...

HOLD IT, JOHN

WHAT ELSE WOULD HE THINK?

AN AMBULANCE IS ORDERED BY RADIO—AND WHEN THE TANKER IS IN THE CANAL, THE PASSENGERS AND LEIGHTON OLSON LEAVE THE SHIP...

LOOK, LEIGHTON, ONCE MORE, MAY I---

HURRY AND CATCH YOUR PLANE, COL. CANYON

I'M SURE YOU HAVE IMPORTANT INTERNATIONAL MATTERS TO ATTEND TO!
