The evening of March 19, 1921 was given over for the Inter-Society debate held between the Sidney Lanier Society and the Edgar Allan Poe Society. The debate was held at 8 P.M. in the Auditorium. The members of the two societies met in the assigned places and marched into the Assembly Hall. The Poes sat on the West side under their colors of red and white, and the Laniers on the East side under the green and gold. The stage was effectively decorated with pennants and flowers. The time before the debate was spent in both societies alternately singing songs. Miss Helen Bohnson then gave a brief history of former debates, explained and gave regulations governing the Open Forum. The Open Forum was very interesting and at times exciting. Mr. Underwood presided. Mr. Wright was called on to deliver the decision of the judges. After several minutes of intense suspense on the part of the audience, Mr. Wright presented the cup to the Laniers. The winners went wild with enthusiasm while the Poes silently determined to win the cup next year.

The meeting adjourned.
