Waite Back In Beirut In Search Of Hostages

By RODEINA KENAAN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite returned to Beirut today to resume his efforts to gain the release of foreign hostages in Lebanon.

The towering troubleshooter hugged and kissed several acquaintances who turned up to meet him at Beirut International Airport, where he arrived aboard an unscheduled Middle East Airlines flight from London.

Flight 8202 was the first from London since the airport reopened after a two-day shutdown caused by shellfire.

Waite was whisked away from the airport terminal by heavily armed militiamen of Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt. They escorted him in two cars from the airport to the Riviera Hotel on the Druse-controlled Ein Mreisseh seaside boulevard.

At the airport, Waite told reporters he did not plan to hold a news conference "at the moment." Asked whether he would focus on the release of Americans held by the pro-Iranian Islamic Jihad, he said: "No, No. We are concerned about all of the hostages and all the people that are here."

Waite, 47, the special envoy of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, had wanted to go to Lebanon before Christmas but put off his plans repeatedly because of recurring Shiite Moslem-Palestinian fighting in the area between Beirut airport and the city.

"He wants to see if he can achieve anything more in relation to the hostages," Anglican spokeswoman Eve Keatley said in London.

Sixteen foreigners, including six Americans, are missing in Lebanon. Since Waite began his negotiations with Shiite Moslem terrorists in 1985, three American hostages have been freed, but his role in their release is not clear.

In interviews last week in Rome, Waite said that on his earlier negotiating trips he was blindfolded while guerrillas moved him around Beirut, and that he conducted discussions with a gun held at his back. He said the guerrillas debated taking him hostage as well.

At about the same time Waite began his efforts on behalf of the hostages, a program of secret U.S. arms sales to Iran began with one of its goals the release of the hostages. Some of the Americans and other captives are held by Moslem groups believed loyal to Iran's Shiite leadership.

After news of the U.S. sales broke in November, Waite said his mission suffered a setback. He denied knowing about the arms supplies or other aspects of the secret U.S. policy.

However, Waite said in December that despite the arms scandal in Washington he still had credibility with his contacts in Lebanon. He said he wanted to try to raise the captives' morale by visiting before Christmas.

The three Americans released since Waite began his mission are the Rev. Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian minister, freed Sept. 14, 1985;. the

Mourners Praise Fallen EastCare Crew

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Members of the EastCare crew killed when their helicopter crashed in Jones County Thursday night were described by speakers at a memorial service Sunday afternoon as people who loved their work and believed in what they did.

There was standing room only in the sanctuary and people were sitting in an adjoining chapel as an estimated 1,000 mourners attended the service at Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

Among those present were grieving family members, the crew's coworkers at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, representatives of all other helicopter ambulance services in North Carolina — from Asheville, Charlotte, Winston-Salen, Durham, Chapel Hill and Dare County, flight crew representatives from Norfolk's Nightingale helicopter, and rescue squad workers from such places as Wilson County, Scotland Neck, Stony Creek, Jacksonville and various Pitt County squads.

EastCare's chief pilot, Perry Reynolds, 39, chief flight nurse Mike McGinnis, 32, and assistant chief flight nurse Pam Demaree, 28, were flying to Greenville from the U.S. Naval Hospital at Camp Lejeune with 3-month-old Xenia Lewis when the helicopter crashed.

During the service Harold McMillion, a Vietnam veteran and friend of Reynolds, said of the pilot: "It is important to acknowledge Perry Reynolds loved flying." He said Reynolds' "life was devoted to excellence, duty, to mission and to honor."

"If Perry were with us today, he would say continue the mission ... no matter how dangerous it is."

Reynolds, who had flown 261 missions for EastCare, had won the Bronze Star and the Distinguished Flying Cross while serving in Vietnam, McMillion said.

EastCare's medical director, Dr. Nick Benson, described Miss Demaree as a nurse who had brought clinical experience, love and common sense to the hospital's air ambulance servide.

"Pam was a person also endowed with a richness of common sense ... was a loving person. She loved the work she did. She loved those around here, and she loved the life she lived."

McGinnis was described by speakers as a man who emphasized the best in patient care, a man who recognized the dangers in flying but who was willing to take the risk to help others.

The Rev. J. Malloy Owen, pastor at Jarvis Memorial, told the congregation that the child's father had telephoned the church to say he was unable to attend the service. But Owen said Marine Cpl. David Lewis expressed his appreciation for the crew's effort.

Outside the church after the service a number of friends and colleagues of the crew members embraced one another and cried.

Mike Nesbit, director of emergency medical services in Dare County and a pilot for the county-owned helicopter ambulance, said after the service, "With it happening to EastCare it's getting close to home. You read about it, think about it ... and the next time somebody calls you go back up again."

Dr. O.E. Hartle, medical director of the emergency flight service at Charlotte Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, said EastCare had been "a good friend" for that hospital's air ambulance program.

"EastCare was up and going in November 1985," he said "and Mike McGinnis and Nick Benson essentially opened their books to me and taught me how to walk."

Phillip Ziady, a paramedic with the Wilson County Rescue Squad, said that, in many ways "it makes you ... prouder of the work you do because of the risks and the dangers and the sacrifices other people make."

Another rescue squad emergency medical technician said "they were our brothers."

Supreme Court Lets Ruling Stand In Cigarette Trial

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today let stand a ruling that shields cigarette makers from any legal liability for allegedly failing to warn adequately about the dangers of smoking.

The justices, without comment, refused to review a federal appeals court ruling that such legal claims are pre-empted by federal law.

The court thus steered clear of a still-pending lawsuit against three cigarette manufacturers by a Little Ferry, N.J., woman who died of lung cancer.

Rose Cipollone smoked for 40 years before quitting in 1982, after her right lung was removed. She died in 1984 but her husband, Antonio, continued her 1983 products liability lawsuit.

The lawsuit names as defendants Liggett Group Inc., Philip Morris Inc. and Loew's Theatres Inc., which owns Lorillard.

The suit alleged, among other things, that the three manufacturers are liable for Mrs. Cipollone's death because they failed to warn adequately about the health hazards of cigarette use and because they undermined the effectiveness of health warnings later required by federal law.

The Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act requires all cigarette packages and cigarette advertising to contain health warnings.

The first warning, required in 1966, said "Caution: Cigarette Smoking May Be Hazardous To Your Health." In 1970, the warning was amended to read, "Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous To Your Health."

The act was amended in 1985 to provide four rotational warnings.

One section of the act states, "No requirement or prohibition based on smoking and health shall be imposed under state law with respect to the advertising or promotion of any cigarettes the packages of which are labeled in conformity with the provisions of this chapter."

The three cigarette makers sued by Mrs. Cipollone said that section of the law pre-empted her claim of inadequate warning.

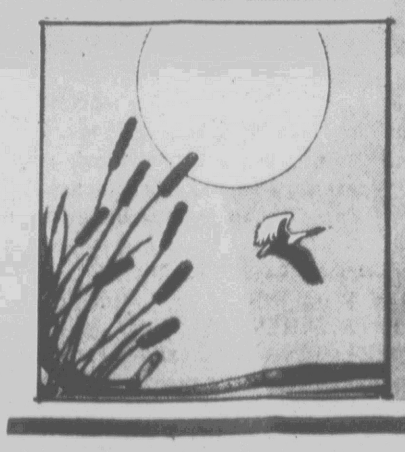

U.S. District Judge H. Lee Sarokin ruled that the federal law does not pre-empt such claims, but the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last April 7 reversed his ruling.

The appeals court, in a decision that became binding law for New Jersey, Delaware and Pennsylvania, said the federal law "pre-empts those state law damage actions relating to smoking and health that challenge either the adequacy of the warning on cigarette packages or the propriety of a party's actions with respect to the advertising and promotion of cigarettes."

U.S. Accepts Soviet Negotiator

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration today welcomed the appointment of a new chief Soviet arms negotiator and pledged to work "creatively and energetically" for a treaty curbing nuclear weapons.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said the Soviets had indicated their interest in "more active and dynamic work" in the negotiations that resume Thursday in Geneva by naming Yuli Voronstov, the first deputy foreign minister, to take charge of the talks.

At the same time, Speakes voiced President Reagan's confidence in the chief U.S. negotiator, Max M. Kampelman, and said he had "full authority in all matters of negotiations."

According to some reports, the Soviets had requested Kampelman be replaced by a higher-level U.S. negotiator.

Speakes said "our delegation is ready to work creatively and energetically with their Soviet counterparts."

Kampelman and his two principal deputies, Maynard Glitman and Ronald Lehman, fly to Geneva later today after receiving final instructions from Reagan.

Voronstov was named last week in Moscow to replace Viktor P. Karpov, who headed the Soviet delegation through the slow-moving talks on missile reductions on space-based defenses, which opened 22 months ago.

The shift raised hopes within the American delegation that the Soviets may be ready to offer compromises to wrap up an agreement to curb offensive weapons despite sharp differences on space-based defenses.

The Reagan administration had quietly lobbied Moscow to replace Karpov with someone of higher rank. Karpov struck senior U.S. arms control specialists as lacking the authority to make bold moves at the table.

Voronstov, 56, outranks his predecessor. He served seven years in Washington as second-in-command at the Soviet Embassy and was ambassador to Paris. In a speech last month, he called for the United States to join in a ban on nuclear weapons tests.

In the speech, Voronstov also accused the Reagan administration of trying to gain military superiority through the Strategic Defense Initiative. Known popularly as "Star Wars," the anti-missile program is one of the principal obstacles to a U.S.-Soviet arms control agreement.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has delayed wrapping up an accord — and, in turn, holding a summit meeting with Reagan in Washington — because the U.S. administration refuses to curtail the program.

Gorbachev contends Star Wars, with its exotic lasers, X-ray and particle beam technology, threatens to extend the arms competition into space. U.S. officials say the Soviets simply are trying to protect their

Pedestrian Killed

One pedestrian was killed and another seriously injured when the two were struck by a car on rural paved road 1110 near Grifton around 8:35 p.m. Sunday.

Trooper John Tomer of the N.C. Highway Patrol said Louis Lee Joyner, 39, of Route 2, Snow Hill, had stopped his car on the roadway and was talking to Maurice A. Willis, 17, also of Route 2, Snow Hill, a passenger in Joyner's car, when a car driven by Hubert Earl Suggs of Route 2, Vanceboro, struck the two.

Tomer said Suggs was apparently blinded by the headlights of Joyner's car failed to see the two men standing on the roadway. Joyner was killed, Tomer said, and Willis was seriously injured.

Willis was admitted to Pitt County Memorial Hospital in Greenville for treatment.

Investigation of the accident is continuing, according to Tomer.

Environmentalist Says Radioactive Protection Needed

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Most political decision-making is geared toward short-term solutions, but that won't work for low-level nuclear wastes that could remain radioactive for 300 to 500 years, an environmental lobbyist says.

"We need to pay now to avoid costs later, not to stick a massive clean-up bill on the state a hundred years from now," said William Holman, a lobbyist for several state environmental groups. "Environmental protection efforts are cost effective when you look to the long term. Most of our decision-making processes are on a two-year or four-year term. That's not long-term enough."

This spring the General Assembly will decide what approach North Carolina will take in handling low-level nuclear waste. The legislature will either repeal the state's membership in the Southeast Compact Commission for disposal of low-level nuclear waste, or it will accept the compact's decision to put the next regional waste dump in North Carolina.

"I think there are some unknowns that have to be grappled with," said Holman. "We're talking about a facility that has to handle it (radioactive waste) three to five hundred years. That's longer than North Carolina has been a state....

"We may be accused of playing on the uncertainty, but there is a lot of uncertainty. It's undeniable," Holman added.

Overriding the objections of North Carolina's representatives, the Southeast Compact Commission for Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management voted Sept. 11 for North Carolina as the site. Since then there has been talk of special commissions and study committees, preconditions for membership in the compact and sanctions for withdrawal.

Those who want North Carolina to stay in the compact say the technology exists to keep radiation from leaking out of a modern dump, or to recover any waste that might leak before it taints the environment.

The proponents include Duke Power Co. and the Carolina Power & Light Co., the two largest generators of low-level nuclear waste. A state consultant estimated that waste generators would have to pay $100 more per cubic foot to dispose of their waste if the state withdraws from the compact.

Others want North Carolina to pull out of the compact because they do not trust low-level radioactive waste. In particular, they have little faith that a waste dump or warehouse built today could still protect the environment 300 years from now.

If the state withdraws from the compact, it would have to build a dump or warehouse for its own low-level waste. Still, opponents of the compact argue that a single state's waste is less risky than eight states' waste.

All told, North Carolina produces a little more than 100,000 cubic feet of low-level waste a year, said Dayne Brown, the chief of the state's Radiation Protection Section. That amount would fill a one-story 300-by-30-foot building.

The volume of the waste has stayed the same for the past two years, but the radioactivity has been cut in half, state reports indicate. A single spent fuel rod from a nuclear reactor could contain 100 times as much radioactivity as all of North Carolina's low-level waste in 1985.

10 Thefts Reported To Police

Greenville police said 10 thefts were reported to the department over the weekend.

Officer W.E. Davis said a video cassette recorder and a camcorder and battery pack, with a combined value of $1,595, were taken from the Goodyear Service Center at the Buyers Market at West End Circle in a break-in reported at 1:20 a.m. Saturday, while Officer M.R. Benton said $40 in cash was taken from McCray Tingle of 2306 E. 10th St. after he was grabbed and threatened with a bottle in an incident at Glendale Court Apartments about 2:44 a.m.

Officer M.T. Schied said an air compressor was taken from 1208 N. Greene St. in an incident reported at 4:22 p.m. and said a bicycle was taken from 1213 Chestnut St. in an incident reported at 6:44 p.m., while Officer B.W. Lewis said a television set and video cassette recorder were taken from 1204 Legion St. in an incident reported at 6:35 p.m.

Officer C.A. Sharpe said a .12 gauge shotgun was taken from 313 E. 10th St. in a break-in reported at 11:05 p.m., while Officer W.S. Heath said a kerosene heater and a radio-tape player were taken from 302A Cadillac St. in a break-in reported at 11:15 p.m.

Officer K.A. Banks said a pair of reading glasses, a key chain and keys and several credit cards were taken from a car parked in a lot on Landmark Street in an incident reported at 11:55 p.m. Saturday, while Officer R.G. Mendenhall said a stereo system, including a tape deck, turntable, equalizer, compact disc player and tuner, a video cassette recorder, a television set and a telephone were taken from 11 Wilson Acres in a break-in reported at 8:13 p.m. Sunday.

According to Officer J.W. Isenhour, a battery was taken from a vehicle parked at 114E Catawba Road in an incident reported at 11:47 p.m.

Dealers Accused Of Rigging Bids

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Charges against four Philadelphia-area antiques dealers accused of rigging bids at auctions are the opening salvo against a surprisingly widespread practice, federal investigators say.

The bid-rigging involves a practice known as "pooling," in which dealers agree not to bid against each other for specific pieces of merchandise and then divide up the auctioned-off items among themselves.

Pooling can hold down by as much as 25 percent the amount a major item can fetch at auction, said Ted Maurer, a Pottstown auctioneer.

The practice, which violates federal antitrust law and can bring a three-year prison sentence and a fine, showed up often enough in the Philadelphia region to prompt the Justice Department to alert all its regional antitrust offices.

The 18-month probe resulted in charges last week against antiques dealers William McCarraher and John J. McClain Jr., who run businesses in Coatesville; Ronald Rhoades of Douglassville, and William H. Bunch of Woodbury, N.J.

"I know you've heard people say this before, but these cases are just the tip of the iceberg," said John Hughes, head of the mid-Atlantic office of the Justice Department's antitrust division.

A federal grand jury investigating the practice could return indictments against other dealers as soon as next month, he said.

A department source said the four dealers are cooperating in the investigation. The dealers declined comment on the advice of their attorneys.

"With this case, people involved in auction pools all over the country should be aware that the antitrust division of the United States Justice Department is looking for them," said department spokesman Mark Sheehan.

Investigators say they learned that dealers band together at auctions after figuring out who wants what items. Often meeting in plain sight, they select a leader who bids for them.

After getting the item, each dealer writes down a private bid on a piece of paper, and the highest bid wins. The buyer winds up paying a higher price than the winning bid at the auction, but a lower one than might have been paid had all the dealers in the pool bid against each other openly.

Maurer said pooling has been common for years, but some dealers felt they were only being smart, not breaking the law. But he said auctioneers knew better and appreciate the government's investigation.

"We feel that pooling is on the wrong side of the law, injurious to our clients, and I have preached that from my podium for 15 years," he said.

IMPROVING YOUR APPEARANCE

Whether you're conscious of it or not, your lip line can have an impact on how pleased or dissatisfied you are with your appearance, especially when you open your mouth to talk or smile. If you have a high lip line, for example, this means large areas of your upper teeth are exposed when you smile. If your upper teeth are uneven or reveal unattractive spaces between teeth, this can detract from your smile and make you want to smile less.

The same inhibition can exist if your upper teeth have had a lot of dental work that shows. With today's dental techniques, however, decayed teeth that have been restored can be made to look as natural and healthy as your other teeth.

Improper or uneven spacing between teeth can be corrected through the use of plastic or porcelain inserts. Also, any teeth that have been crowned and are now showing wear can be reshaped with additional porcelain to improve your appearance.

If you are concerned with your appearance, call our office for an appointment. There are a lot of new techniques in dentistry that can improve your smile and increase your self confidence.

Your Social Security Disability Benefits

ADDIE'S ADVICE

BENEFITS DENIED?

Have you been denied benefits under Social Security's disability benefits programs? Do not be discouraged. That happens to most people who apply the first time.

Have you asked for reconsideration of your disability claim and been turned down a second time? Again, don't be discouraged or give up. That's the way the disability system works today.

Take your case one step further and go before a Social Security Administrative Law Judge for a hearing with a qualified representative to present your case. Then the chances of your winning benefits are somewhere between 70% and 80%. The Judge will see you and hear your personal description of your physical or mental illness, and your representative will present your case as it applies to the complex rules of the Social Security Act.

If you have a hearing requested or scheduled before an Administrative Law Judge, call now for an immediate conference. There is no fee for an initial conference to discuss your eligibility for disability.

Freshmen Senators Puzzled Over Red-Ink Budget Items

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When freshman Sen. Terry Sanford got a chance this week to ask his first question as a member of Congress, it came at a Senate Budget Committee hearing and it nearly brought the house down.

"I probably would have asked this question six years ago if I had been here and every year since," said Sanford, D-N.C., "and that is, doesn't the president feel any compulsion to present a balanced budget?"

The question that Sanford asked of James C. Miller III, director of the Office of Management and Budget, drew laughter in the crowded hearing room, but it was meant seriously.

It is a question that finds lawmakers and economists in disagreement over whether such a feat is advisable or even possible.

"To precipitously eliminate the deficit would cause more troubles, more harm than good right now," Miller told reporters after the hearing. "The results would be to retard economic growth if you suddenly raised taxes to cover the deficit or suddenly eliminated all the spending necessary."

Reagan came to office in 1981 railing against the deficit, which in President Carter's last year was a then-imposing $28 billion, and pledging to do better. Yet Reagan has submitted spending plans seven times and each time has proposed deficit spending.

The last time the government had a balanced budget was in 1969, at the height of spending for the Vietnam War, when the year ended with a $3 billion surplus. Before Reagan, the highest deficit on record was $66 billion under President Ford in 1976.

Reagan's first budget proposal, for the 1982 fiscal year, called for a $45 billion deficit. In successive years, he proposed spending plans with deficits of $92 billion, $189 billion, $180 billion, $180 billion and $144 billion. In the document he presented Monday for 1988, he says spending would outweigh revenues by $108 billion, a figure many in Congress challenge.

Except for fiscal year 1984, every deficit turned out to be larger than the one envisioned in Reagan's budgets.

The total federal deficit is more than $2 trillion.

With such numbers in mind, Sen. Jim Sasser, D-Tenn., echoed Sanford's query later in Wednesday's hearing, saying, "Sometimes I think we sit here on the budget committee and overlook what ought to be the obvious. ... We have a saying down my way that at some point you have to belly up to the buzz saw. And we haven't done that for the past six years now."

As far as Miller and some others are concerned, an effort to eliminate the deficit this year by presenting a balanced budget is a noble but questionable proposition.

Many economists agree. They say that with 1987 red ink projected at $173 billion, a sufficient slash in federal spending or increase in taxation would leave the economy reeling and attract little political support.

"That would create a bigger furor than an unbalanced budget," said Cynthia Latta, senior financial economist for Data Resources, a Lexington, Mass., economic consulting firm. "Any budget that took another $100 billion out of expenses or added $100 billion to revenues would be more stillborn than the one we're seeing."

Murray Weidenbaum, Reagan's first chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers and now director of the Center for the Study of American Business in St. Louis, said, "It's just technically not feasible. If you were to cut spending or increase taxes by that amount, that would so depress the economy that you'd wind up collecting less taxes."

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., noted that the 1986 fiscal year, which ended last Sept. 30, saw a deficit of nearly $221 billion — a record.

"From plain old common sense, a balanced budget would be practically impossible and probably not the right thing to do for 1988 for economic reasons," he said. "When you go from a deficit of $200 billion to a balanced budget in one year, you would have to have Draconian cuts or Draconian taxes."

Domenici also noted that Reagan's 1988 deficit of $108 billion, if attained, would meet the requirements of the Gramm-Rudman law, which mandated steadily decreasing ceilings on the deficit with a goal of a balanced budget by 1991.

But others are less sympathetic to the president. Rep. William Gray, chairman of the House Budget Committee, calls Reagan "the Babe Ruth of deficits." He said Reagan's longtime support for a constitutional amendment that would require a balanced budget makes it reasonable to expect him to submit spending plans without deficits.

"It's a bit hypocritical for the president to talk about a constitutional amendment when he's had more than half a dozen opportunities to give Congress balanced budgets," Gray said.

And Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under Ford and now chairman of Townsend, Greenspan and Co., a New York economic consulting firm, said he believed that cuts in the deficit would lower interest rates, stimulating enough economic activity to offset the negative effects of a sudden drop in government spending.

"It's a question of political priorities," he said. "Unless there is a realistic expectation that ... you would get the economic results you'd expect, I know of no politician who'd be willing to take the political wrath for the steps necessary."

White House Seeks Delay On Clean-Water Bill Vote

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House wants the Senate to delay action on the clean water bill to spare President Reagan the prospect of vetoing the popular legislation just before his annual visit to the Capitol, congressional sources say.

"The White House doesn't want the veto before the State of the Union," said a Republican leadership source, referring to the president's annual speech to a joint session of Congress. The speech is scheduled for Jan. 27.

"There's no reason to make the president look bad before the speech," said the source, who asked not to be identified by name. Other sources, both Democratic and Republican, confirmed the move to slow down the legislation.

The $20 billion bill is identical to one vetoed as a budget-buster by Reagan last Nov. 6, two days after the elections and after Congress had left town and was unable to take override votes.

Senate Democratic leaders hoped to begin debate on the measure today and take a final vote as early as Tuesday. To move this quickly, however, they need unanimous consent.

Sources said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., has asked Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., to agree to hold off final action on the legislation until the end of the week, sources said.

The White House has not said whether Reagan will veto the bill a second time. However, Ed Dale, a spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, said presidential advisers will recommend a veto.

Dale said he had not heard of any White House move to delay the bill, but an official of the Environmental Protection Agency, which administers the clean-water program, said this was the strategy.

Meanwhile, the Senate Armed Services Committee was expected to hear testimony today from Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger on Reagan's $312 billion Defense Department budget request for 1988.

On Sunday, a member of the committee, Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., accused Weinberger of trying to mislead Congress by hurrying to begin work on two $3.5 billion aircraft carriers before Reagan leaves office.

Levin, appearing on the ABC-TV program, "This Week with David Brinkley," said Weinberger was accelerating by fours years the Pentagon's plans to begin work on the carriers.

However, Weinberger, appearing on the same broadcast, said it takes about seven years to plan and construct an aircraft carrier and that by ordering them now the government will save about $1.5 billion by the time the ships are delivered.

Last Thursday, the House voted 406-8 for its version of the clean water bill, which would authorize spending $20 billion to combat water pollution — $18 billion of which would help states construct sewage and wastewater treatment plants. Reagan has proposed $12 billion in assistance.

The size of the House vote and the fact that 76 senators are co-sponsoring the legislation indicate that both chambers can muster the two-thirds vote necessary to override a veto.

The House is not in session this week.

Math Study Says Curricula 'Weak'

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A new study concludes that American pupils are among the weakest mathematics performers among industrialized nations and blames curricula which lack "challenge and focus."

The report, "The Underachieving Curriculum: Assessing U.S. School Mathematics from an International Perspective," pointedly disputes some of the most often-heard explanations for the weak showing, such as poor teacher preparation, not enough class time devoted to math, and over-large class sizes.

Instead, the latest report, released Sunday, puts primary blame on the curriculum which, in typical U.S. classrooms, is pointlessly repetitious.

"The U.S. curriculum from an international point of view lacks challenge and focus. The curriculum typically keeps revisiting concepts, but the trouble is, with each revisit, we're not adding anything new," said Kenneth J. Travers, a University of Illinois mathematics education professor who was one of seven co-authors of the report.

"One would have expected more from the advanced industrialized country that has provided the world with so much technical leadership," Travers said.

"In school mathematics the United States is an underachieving nation and our curriculum is helping to create a nation of underachievers," said the study.

The report will be a main topic at an international math symposium at the National Academy of Sciences in Washington Jan. 15-16, and comes on the heels of a study released by U.S. Education Secretary William J. Bennett extolling Japanese elementary and secondary schools. He suggested that Americans should borrow some educational lessons from Japan, especially the view that "progress can be made by practically anyone who tries hard enough."

Challenging the idea that large class size is responsible for poor U.S. math performance, the report pointed out that in Japan, average eighth-grade class size is 40, and in 12th grade it is 43. Both exceed U.S. averages of 26 students in eighth grade, and 20 in 12th grade.

And the average amount of time devoted to math in U.S. schools was 144 hours per year, compared to 101 hours for Japanese youngsters, according to the study.

The report also questions the common practice of tracking students early in their school careers according to their mathematics ability.

The problem, Travers said in a telephone interview, is that typically the eighth grade math curriculum in U.S. schools repeats elementary math, while students in other countries move along briskly to new concepts.

"In the eighth grade we just do sorting and tracking. Significant portions of kids are kept in grade school arithmetic. That's not found to nearly that extent in other countries, and the Japanese don't track students at all," Travers said.

Among other recommendations, the report called for renewed scrutiny of math textbook quality, increased status and rewards for math teachers, and improved professional development programs for teachers.

The study draws heavily from the widely publicized "Second International Mathematics Study" released in 1984 showing U.S. eight- and 12th graders ranking no better than average, and often far worse, in a variety of mathematical subjects compared with 19 other nations and territories.

Most Frosh Want Career In Business

WASHINGTON (AP) — One college freshman in four is looking toward a career in business, while interest is on the upswing in teaching but down on computers, according to a survey of college freshmen.

The 21st annual survey by the University of California, Los Angeles, and the American Council on Education also found more freshmen going into debt and fewer getting federal grants for college.

The study released Saturday was drawn from questionnaires completed by 290,249 students who entered 552 colleges and universities last fall.

Seventeen percent of the freshmen reported getting Pell Grants, federal scholarships based on need for low- and middle-income students, compared to almost 20 percent last year and 31.5 percent in 1980.

By contrast, more than a quarter of the freshmen have taken out Guaranteed Student Loans, up from 23 percent last year and about 21 percent in 1980.

The figures "point to dramatic shifts in the way American college students and their families have had to cope with changing federal aid policies over the past six years," said Alexander W. Astin, a UCLA education professor who directed the study.

But Bruce Carnes, deputy undersecretary of the U.S. Department of Education, which provided $80,000 for the survey, said the financial aid statistics were "seriously flawed." About 24 percent of all college students actually get Pell Grants, he said, and the rate was never as high as 31.5 percent.

The Reagan administration, in its new 1988 budget, proposed cutting the $3.8 billion Pell Grant program in half over two years and sharply reducing or eliminating student loan subsidies. The recommendations came only two weeks after the Congressional Joint Economic Committee reported that one-third to one-half of all students now leave college in debt.

Administration Wants More HMOs Involved In Medicare

WASHINGTON (AP) — Limiting how much the government will pay for medical treatment for Medicare recipients will not lower the quality of care because physicians will not allow that to happen, the government's health chief said today.

Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen told leaders of private health maintenance organizations that a major administration initiative this year will be to get the best care for the lowest cost through expansion of what he called the private health plan option.

"Quite simply, it is a plan to offer people and providers a choice between traditional Medicare, as we all know it, and Medicare delivered through a private health plan," Bowen said in remarks to the 10th annual HMO Conference of the Group Health Association of America.

More than 800,000 of Medicare's 30 million beneficiaries already participate in so-called managed care programs, mostly through traditional health maintenance organizations.

Under such an approach, Medicare makes a monthly lump-sum payment to a private plan which then assumes full responsibility for providing the necessary health care for a participant.

Bowen said such new plans would have broad latitude to decide how to organize themselves, how services are to be used and how to pay doctors and hospitals.

The aim is to cure four main problems that beset Medicare: medical price inflation, excess use of services, inefficient care and dissatisfaction with payment paperwork, he said.

"We know that managed care is not only cost-effective care, but good care as well," Bowen said. "Ensuring that the right patient gets the right care at the right time and place is the essence of managed care — and that can only lead to better outcomes for the patient."

Bowen, a physician himself, said, "I've always believed ... that the best and final guarantee of quality care is the physician. As long as we can maintain that strong tradition of the doctor who cares first and foremost about their patient, then I say quality care is in good hands."

Discounting fears that that tradition is threatened by "this era of fixed price reimbursement," Bowen said. "Competition among private health plans extends to the quality of care those plans offer and in the years to come consumers will become much more savvy about differences in quality."

He said that means managed care systems will be competing among themselves for the best health care providers. "If a physician, nurse or other professional isn't happy with the quality of care a plan is providing, they're free to quit and join another," he said.

"And in the high tradition of excellence that American medicine is renowned for, I see that happening at times," Bowen said.

Strong Foundation

The year 1986 was a successful one for contributions to East Carolina University.

James L. Lanier, vice chancellor of Institutional Advancement, reported sharp increases in giving to the general foundation, Pirate Club and medical foundation.

Lanier said contributions to the general foundation more than doubled the amount for 1985. Cash, securities and land contributions during 1986 amounted to about $2.4 million, compared to $1.1 million in 1985. The Medical Foundation reported contributions running about three times as much as in 1985. Contributions to the ECU Educational Foundation (Pirates Club) increased by about $300,000 to about $1.1 million

Lanier credited a campaign for the School of Business, tax changes and "working a lot harder" as the reasons for the big increases.

Clearly 1986 was a very good year. That tells us that supporters of the university are interested in its improvement and are prepared to help finance the betterment of East Carolina University. We can all be grateful for this support. We can also recognize that the building of endowments for the university and the medical school are the wave of the future.

ECU receives strong financial support from the state. That builds good universities. The great universities of our nation, however, invariably are rich in endowments. It is frequently contributed funds which create professorships and make it possible to retain eminent authorities in their fields. It is such funding that provides prestigious scholarships which attract the brightest young people of our nation and it is often foundation funds which support research that is so essential to the development of an outstanding university.

In what is certain to be growth decades ahead we will be hearing more about contributions to ECU's foundations. Likely we will be discussing $50 million to $100 million in general foundation money.

We have built a base for a fine university. Now comes the difficult part of seeking to develop a truly great and well respected university. That comes down to financing.

Cautious

N.C. Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham looks for some good farm news in 1987 but even that will be tempered by influences of the 1986 crop year.

In his estimation our poultry producers are going to benefit from lower grain prices and a continuing increase in consumption of their birds.

He is hopeful that with good weather conditions (always a questionmark) and continued growers' effort to produce quality leaf, tobacco income will improve somewhat this year.

That's two conditionally hopeful forecasts. He is even more reserved about the rest of the story.

Grain bins, he warns, are bursting at the seams; "overproduction and depressed worldwide prices will continue to hold down prices for wheat and soybeans". He says if the U.S. dollar remains weak against currencies of importing countries, and if the economic situation in those countries improves, there's a chance of increased farm product exports.

On balance he does not give Tar Heel agriculture a lot to cheer about, but then there are so many factors that can adversely affect the agriculture economy that the "safe" prediction is one of caution.

It's a natural reaction among those called upon to prognosticate. They'd rather be safe than sorry.

Today's Thought

A $1.024 trillion federal budget rolls right off the tongue — especially if you put all those zeros behind it.

Replacing Paul Volcker

'Whether Volcker stays or goes is viewed by many Fed-watchers as irrelevant. Since his dramatic reversal by a single vote last year on a discount rate cut, Volcker's rule has been more collegial.'

WASHINGTON — The survival of Donald T. Regan as White House chief of staff not only diminishes chances for Paul Volcker to win another term as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board but makes Beryl Sprinkel, currently President Reagan's chief economic adviser, his probable successor.

Indeed, Sprinkel is the odds-on favorite to become the nation's chief central banker. His selection to the Fed could be decided this week as Regan pins down recommended appointments to be submitted to the president. Although Volcker's chairmanship does not open until next year, there is a movement afoot to name Sprinkel to an existing vacancy on the Fed so that he can be on hand to replace the chairman.

This prospect is excruciating for supply-siders, who have awaited Volcker's demise in hopes that one of their own, Fed vice chairman Manuel Johnson, would succeed him. They view Sprinkel, a leading acolyte of Milton Friedman's monetarist school, as infinitely more dangerous than Volcker in obstructing their dream of international monetary reform and in discouraging economic growth.

Only a month ago, champagne corks figuratively were popping among Fed staffers when it appeared that Don Regan would be an imminent victim of the Iranian arms affair. Without Regan present and with the administration in a crisis, it was thought that the prestigious Volcker would naturally glide into a third four-year term as governor.

But the doughty Regan has fought back and appears to have the chief of staff's job for as long as he wants it. And according to White House sources, he certainly wants it long enough to deny Volcker reappointment.

Nor can Volcker count on any help this time from Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, who in 1983 as chief of staff engineered Volcker's second term reappointment over the objections of Regan (then at the Treasury). Baker has been burning over the Fed chairman's criticism of his international monetary policy. According to insiders, he has told Regan that he now appreciates his attitude toward Volcker.

That has reassured supply-siders who assumed that Regan would recommend the promotion of Johnson, his former assistant secretary at the Treasury. But the chief of staff dislikes too hasty advancement of youth, and he considers Johnson, at age 37, at least four years away from sufficient ripeness. Regan prefers another of his former Treasury subordinates, ex-under secretary Sprinkel.

Regan has until Aug. 1 (when Volcker's term ends) to ponder this, except for the fact the president must fill two vacant Federal Reserve governorships. One has been reserved for a Texan (with Houston investment banker Edward Kelly the current White House choice). The other has been earmarked for Lafe Olson, Citibank economist and a monetarist.

But what happens, it is asked at the White House, if Volcker is not reappointed chairman but — against tradition and all expectations — decides to serve out the balance of his term as governor? The president would then have to pick somebody now on the board (probably Johnson), or stick with Volcker. That cul-de-sac appointment could be avoided by picking Sprinkel now.

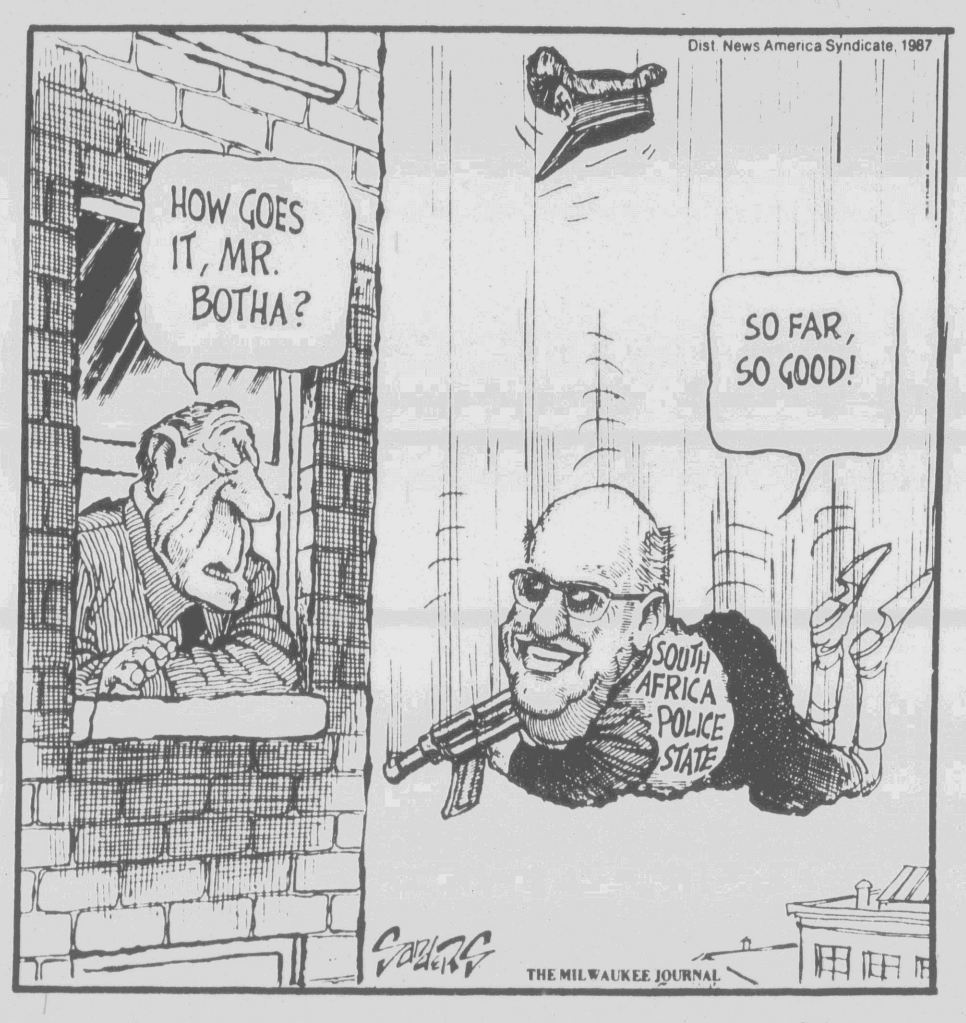

As a bank economist in Chicago, Sprinkel built a reputation as a fanatical monetarist (a "Friedmaniac") who seemed to picture Western civilization as hinging on dips and rises in the money supply. But as chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, he has mellowed and inside the White House has been pooh-poohing the importance of M-1 money supply projections.

Whether Volcker stays or goes is viewed by many Fed-watchers as irrelevant. Since his dramatic reversal by a single vote last year on a discount rate cut, Volcker's rule has been more collegial. All the old Volcker followers are gone from the board. Nobody expects that he would even try to block a new discount rate if, as is expected, the Reaganite majority deems it necessary to boost the economy.

Still, talk about Chairman Sprinkel disturbs Rep. Jack Kemp, the supply-sider who has been a sharp critic of Volcker. "What this economy needs," he told us, "is not another monetarist at the Federal Reserve Board." He prefers a chairman from within the board — Martha Seger, Johnson or Wayne Angel.

Kemp is not alone. At the Fed and in Wall Street, the prospect of Beryl Sprinkel replacing Paul Volcker is variously described as "astonishing," "outrageous," and "idiotic." One seasoned Fed-watcher denigrates him as "Don Regan's tool." But he is also Don Regan's leading choice and could be the president's nomination for the Fed before the week is over.

Republicans To Lose Skilled Mediator

RALEIGH (AP) — In a farewell speech to his colleagues on the final day of the 1986 General Assembly session, Sen. Bill Redman stated that he had "never been prouder than I am right now to be a member of this Senate."

Redman wasn't engaging in hyperbole. The Statesville Republican had experienced some rough times in his four terms in the Statehouse — especially in 1985, when as Senate minority leader he struggled to ward off attacks on newly elected Gov. Jim Martin from hostile Democrats.

This was a year later, however, and Martin had compromised with the Democratic leadership to produce a $200 million highway financing package that highlighted the 1986 short session. Redman was sponsor of the bill and a key figure in the maneuvering and negotiating that resulted in its enactment.

Redman's performance as mediator, salesman and Senate GOP leader won accolades from his fellow Republicans and Democrats, who agree he will be missed this year. Martin has appointed Redman to the state Utilities Commission, which will require that he resign from the Legislature.

John Jordan, a former senator and a Raleigh lawyer regarded as perhaps the state's most effective lobbyist, says no one will feel Redman's absence more than Martin.

"I think he needs a strong person in the Senate even more this year than last year," Jordan said. "The real strength of Bill was that although he was partisan, he was ... a reasonable person to talk to. In the General Assembly, the key to success at anything is compromise."

Several factors make the need for effective sponsors of Martin's legislative program especially acute this year, observers say.

First, the 1988 election is approaching. Several legislative leaders are expected to seek statewide office and will be maneuvering for publicity and position.

The biggest race, of course, will be for governor, and a showdown is looming between Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who presides over the Senate.

Jordan has walked a tightrope since the 1984 election, balancing his role as co-leader (with House Speaker Liston Ramsey) of the Democratic opposition with an effort to avoid appearing unfair to the popular Republican governor.

Political insiders say Jordan needs to maintain the fairness image this year. But politics being what it is, it's unlikely that the lieutenant governor will shed tears if Martin's initiatives fall by the wayside while Jordan's become law and put his stamp on the 1987 session.

Secondly, Martin's hard-hitting stump speeches in last year's legislative campaign infuriated many Democrats, some of whom say they're even less inclined than before to treat him kindly.

Redman, an ex-military aviator and moderate conservative who's usually easygoing but becomes righteously indignant at perceived Democratic unfairness, says his successor will have a tough — but not impossible — task.

"It's my feeling that about 35 percent of the Senate (Democrats) have a built-in bias, and the rest of them are open to reasonable ideas if you convince them they're good for the state," he said. "So the strategy that's used in approaching them is paramount."

While some Republican legislators — particularly the newer ones — are pushing for a more confrontational approach in their dealings with the Democrats, Redman advises choosing battles with care.

"At times, confrontation is appropriate," he said. "It's a lot easier to throw a hand grenade than to catch one. But when you throw a hand grenade, you need to remember that there's a timing device on it, and some people can throw it back pretty quickly.

"You have to realize that you're in the minority, and as a result there are certain things you can accomplish and certain things you can't."

At this point, it's uncertain who the next majority leader will be. There are only 10 Republicans in the 50-member Senate, but three of them — Don Kincaid, R-Caldwell, Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, and Paul Smith, R-Rowan — are vying for minority leader. The winner likely will be chosen in a caucus after the Legislature convenes next month.

Kincaid, who claims to have five solid votes, was minority leader twice in the 1970s. He's the senior Senate Republican, having served there since 1973 after three House terms.

He agrees that it's best to seek compromise with the Democratic leadership when possible, but anticipates some partisan wrangling in what promises to be a politically charged session.

"They (Democrats) may be licking their chops a little bit," Kincaid said. "It's essential to have a minority leader who knows when to hold and when to fold."

Public Forum

To the editor:

According to your Jan. 6, 1987, article concerning the school attendance line public hearing, Mrs. Julie Tucker stated that the mean achievement score of Sadie Saulter students is significantly less than that of students attending W.H. Robinson. Mrs. Tucker also allegedly states that overall education of parents of Sadie Saulter students is less than that of W.H. Robinson parents.

Mr. David Ames says that city schools will continue to be 40 percent white — 60 percent black, while the county schools will be 70 percent white — 30 percent black.

The Westhaven section 3-7 residents' position paper indicates that Sadie Saulter is overcrowded, while W.H. Robinson has student growth potential.

All of this indicates that redistricting is definitely needed if our public school system is to be as equitable as possible for all Pitt County students. It will be extremely difficult to establish a redistricting plan that is equitable in all of the above parameters as well as in the concept of proximity to schools.

By the way, I personally favor the "neighborhood school" concept. However, such a concept has obviously gone the way of the Edsel and "Five Points" in downtown Greenville.

One more thing — there are plenty of great, intelligent kids at Sadie Saulter School. And the parents have careers in teaching, the ministry, medicine, retail sales, services, law enforcement, public construction, engineering, public finance and most any other career that would occur at any other school.

Strength For Today

Last words are always significant. The words of great men upon their deathbeds give us not only an insight into their lives but insight into the meaning of life itself.

Said the great evangelist Dwight L. Moody, "Earth is receding; heaven is approaching." The novelist Sir Walter Scott said, "I feel as if I were to be myself again." Charles Wesley, who wrote 6,000 hymns, said with his last breath, "I shall be satisfied with thy likeness — satisfied, satisfied." His brother John, founder of Methodism, made his last statement: "The best of all is, God is with us." Father Damien, the leper priest of Molokai, said, "My work, with all its faults and failures, is in His hand."

Everyone enters life with a wail upon his lips. But fortunate is the person who can confront death with the happy conviction that the best is yet to come.

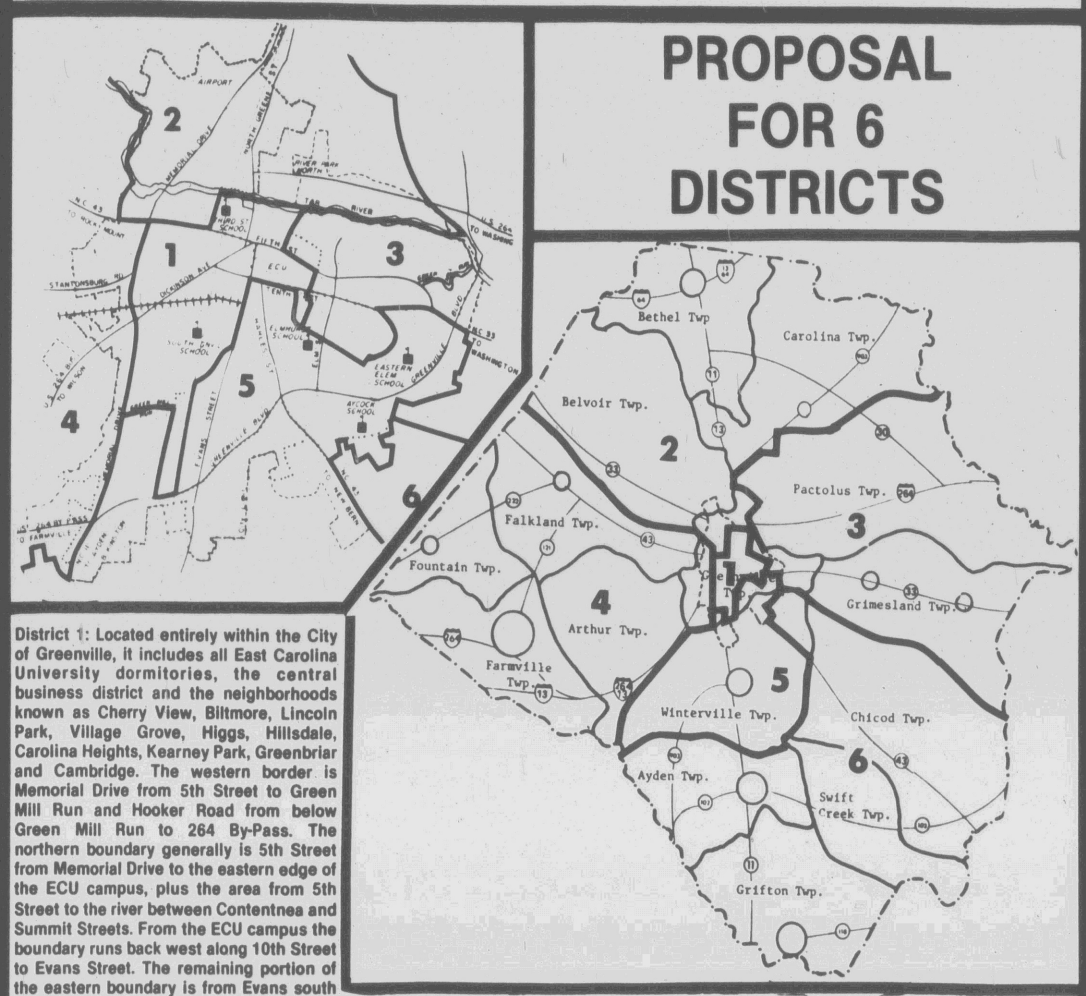

Public Notice

The Pitt County Board of Education will conduct a Public Hearing on January 15, 1987, 7:00 p.m., in the Second Floor Commissioners' Auditorium of the Pitt County Office Building, 1717 West Fifth Street.

The purpose of the meeting is to receive comments from Pitt County citizens regarding proposed Board of Education election line alternatives. Maps and descriptions of each plan under consideration are as follows:

Citizens wishing to comment are encouraged to contact the Office of Public Information at 752-2934, ext. 258.

PROPOSAL FOR 6 DISTRICTS

District 1: Located entirely within the City of Greenville, it includes all East Carolina University dormitories, the central business district and the neighborhoods known as Cherry View, Biltmore, Lincoln Park, Village Grove, Higgs, Hillsdale, Carolina Heights, Kearney Park, Greenbriar and Cambridge. The western border is Memorial Drive from 5th Street to Green Mill Run and Hooker Road from below Green Mill Run to 264 By-Pass. The northern boundary generally is 5th Street from Memorial Drive to the eastern edge of the ECU campus, plus the area from 5th Street to the river between Contentnea and Summit Streets. From the ECU campus the boundary runs back west along 10th Street to Evans Street. The remaining portion of the eastern boundary is from Evans south to Green Mill Run, along the creek to the Seaboard Coastline Railroad, and south on the railroad tracks to 264 By-Pass.

District 2: It includes the Greenville Heights, Riverdale, Page and Moyewood neighborhoods, all the City of Greenville north of the river, including the airport and Meadowbrook, plus River Park North, the portions of Greenville Township northwest and northeast of the city, and all of the townships of Belvoir, Bethel and Carolina. The parts of the City of Greenvile within the district are everything north of the river and the area between the river to 5th Street, from the western edge of the city to Contentnea Street. The area of the district outside the city runs from the Tar River west of Greenville around the northern part of the county to and including Carolina Township. Included are Belvoir Crossroads, Hollands, Bethel, Whitehurst, Oakley, Stokes, Whichard and Staton.

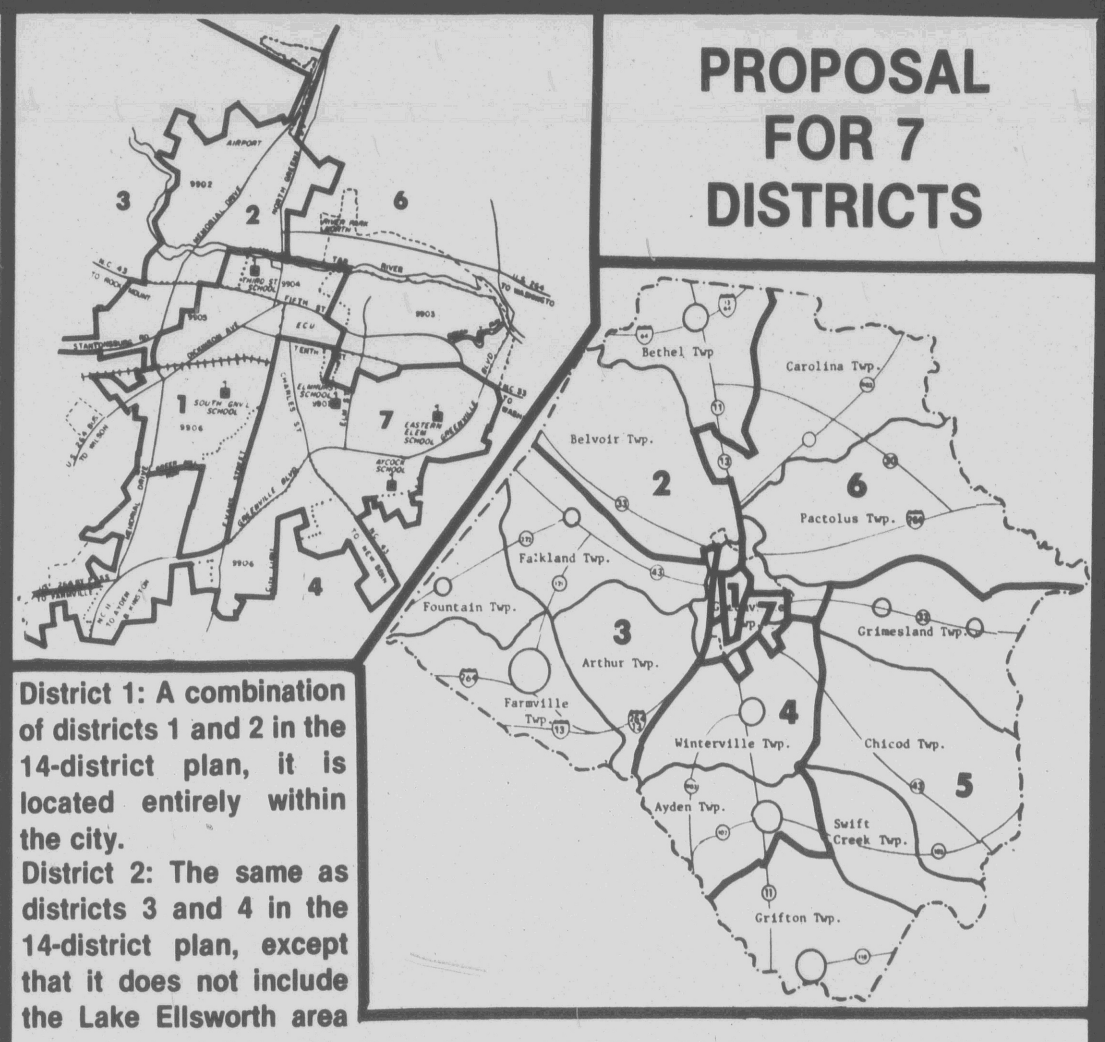

District 3: Covering much of the eastern third of the county, plus the northeastern part of Greenville, it includes all of Pactolus and Grimesland townships and the area immediately east of the City of Greenville and north of Highway 43. Included are Simpson, Grimesland and the Brook Valley area east of the city. The areas within the city are Chatham Circle, College View, Johnston Heights, Wilson Acres, Green Spring Park, Brook Green, Easthaven, College Court and Coghill.

District 4: Covering the western quarter of the county, it includes all of Falkland, Fountain, Farmville and Arthur townships and most of the City of Greenville west of Memorial Drive. The area of the city included in the district is everything west of Memorial Drive and south of 5th Street, including the county offices, Westwood, the Greenville Country Club, Rollingwood and Oakdale. Outside the city the district includes Falkland, Bruce, Rock Spring, Fountain, Farmville, Bell Arthur, Frog Level and Ballards Crossroads.

District 5: It includes almost all of Winterville Township plus the southern and southeastern portions of the City of Greenville. The only part of Winterville Township not included is the portion east of Highway 43 (Cherry Oaks). Winterville Township includes Winterville, Cannons Crossroads and Bells Fork. The parts of Greenville in the district generally are those east of Memorial Drive and south and east of Green Mill Run, but not Cambridge, Brook Green, Easthaven or Coghill or any of the ECU campus. Neighborhoods in the district include Sedgefield, West Haven, Belvedere, Lakewood Pines, Sherwood Acres, Lynndale, Stratford, Forest Hills, Engelwood, Oakmont, Drexelbrook, Dellwood, Hartington & Williams, Speight and Eastwood.

District 6: Covering the southeastern third of the county, it includes all of Ayden, Grifton, Swift Creek and Chicod townships and the portion of Winterville Township east of Highway 43 (Cherry Oaks). Included are Ayden, Redalia, Grifton, Coxville, Gardnerville, Clayroot, Shelmerdine, Black Jack, Elmira Crossroads, McGowans Crossroads, Hollywood Crossroad and Venters.

PROPOSAL FOR 7 DISTRICTS

District 1: A combination of districts 1 and 2 in the 14-district plan, it is located entirely within the city.

District 2: The same as districts 3 and 4 in the 14-district plan, except that it does not include the Lake Ellsworth area or the part of Greenville Township west of the city. The district combines the western edge and northern part of the city (as described in districts 3 and 4 of the 14-district plan) with all of Belvoir and Bethel townships.

District 3: Combines all of Falkland, Fountain, Farmville and Arthur townships with the part of Greenville Township west of the city and the Lake Ellsworth portion of the city.

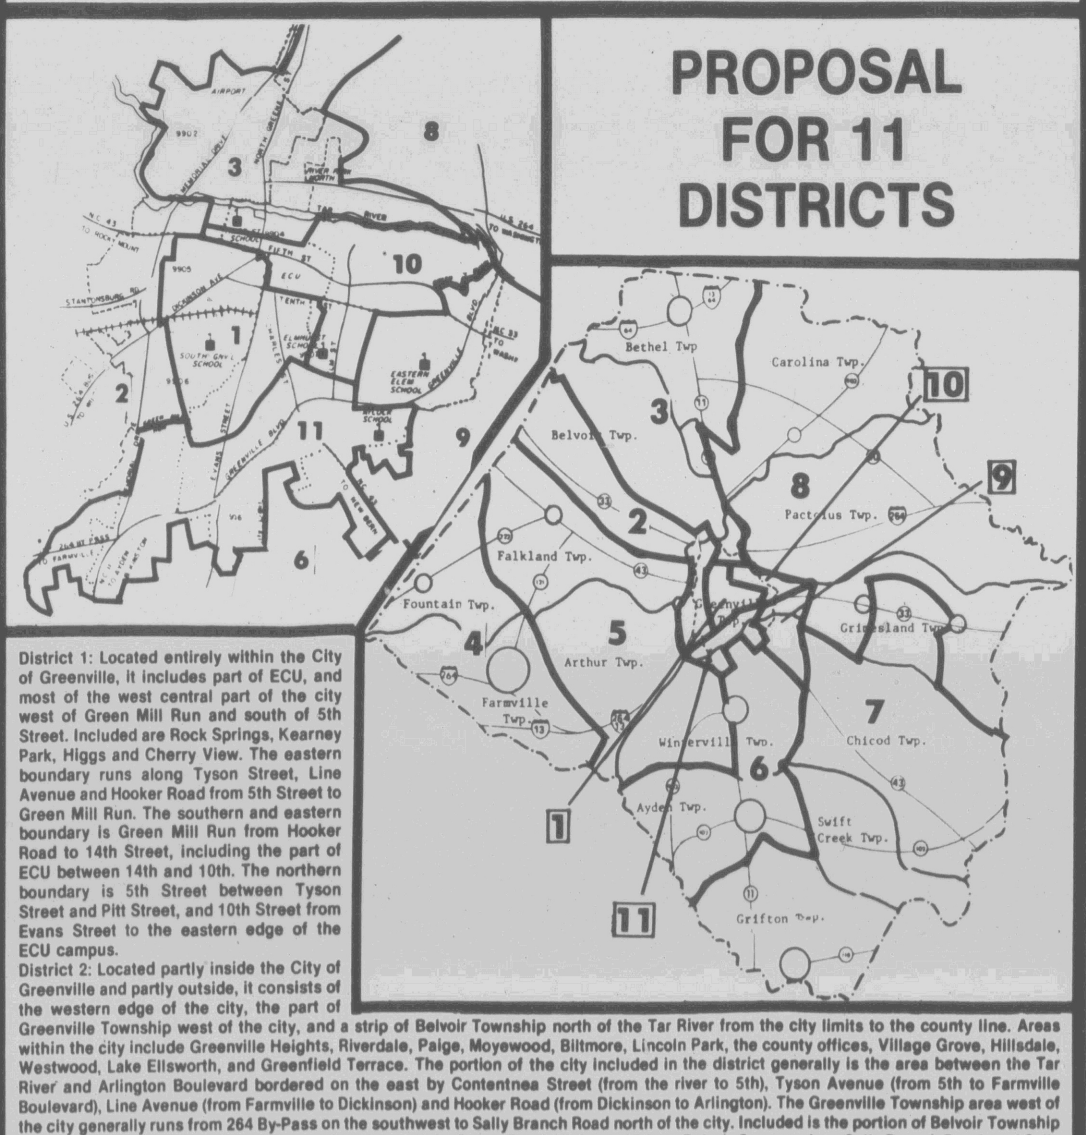

District 4: All of Ayden Township plus all of Winterville Township outside the City of Greenville.

District 5: All of Grifton, Swift Creek, Chicod and Grimesland Townships.

District 6: Consists of districts 11 and 12 from the 14-district plan plus the Riverview Estates portion of Greenville.

District 7: Consists of districts 13 and 14 of the 14-district plan minus the Riverview Estates portion of Greenville.

PROPOSAL FOR 11 DISTRICTS

District 1: Located entirely within the City of Greenville, it includes part of ECU, and most of the west central part of the city west of Green Mill Run and south of 5th Street. Included are Rock Springs, Kearney Park, Higgs and Cherry View. The eastern boundary runs along Tyson Street, Line Avenue and Hooker Road from 5th Street to Green Mill Run. The southern and eastern boundary is Green Mill Run from Hooker Road to 14th Street, including the part of ECU between 14th and 10th. The northern boundary is 5th Street between Tyson Street and Pitt Street, and 10th Street from Evans Street to the eastern edge of the ECU campus.

District 2: Located partly inside the City of Greenville and partly outside, it consists of the western edge of the city, the part of Greenville Township west of the city, and a strip of Belvoir Township north of the Tar River from the city limits to the county line. Areas within the city include Greenville Heights, Riverdale, Paige, Moyewood, Biltmore, Lincoln Park, the county offices, Village Grove, Hillsdale, Westwood, Lake Ellsworth, and Greenfield Terrace. The portion of the city included in the district generally is the area between the Tar River and Arlington Boulevard bordered on the east by Contentnea Street (from the river to 5th), Tyson Avenue (from 5th to Farmville Boulevard), Line Avenue (from Farmville to Dickinson) and Hooker Road (from Dickinson to Arlington). The Greenville Township area west of the city generally runs from 264 By-Pass on the southwest to Sally Branch Road north of the city. Included is the portion of Belvoir Township bordered on the south by the Tar River and on the north by Porter Road, Highway 33 from Belvoir Crossroads to Sally Branch Road, and Sally Branch Road between 33 and Highway 11. Included are Penny Hill, Hollands and Belvoir Crossroads.

District 3: Combining part of the City of Greenville with part of Belvoir Township and all of Bethel Township, it includes all of the city north of the Tar River except Greenfield Terrace plus the downtown business area between the river and 4th Street from Contentnea Street to Summit Street. Included from the city are the airport, Meadowbrook, and River Park North. The portion of Belvoir Township in the district is the area north and east of the boundary of Porter Road, Highway 33 from Belvoir Crossroads to Sally Branch Road, and Sally Branch Road from 33 to Highway 11. All of Bethel Township is in the district including Bethel and Whitehurst.

District 4: Consisting of the Farmville and Fountain townships, it includes Farmville, Marlboro, California, Toddy, Fountain and Sharp Point.

District 5: Covering much of the area directly west of Greenville, it includes all of Falkland and Arthur townships plus the town of Winterville and the part of Winterville Township west of Highway 11. Included are Falkland, Bruce, Dupree Crossroads, Kings Crossroads, Rock Spring, Bell Arthur, Frog Level and Ballards Crossroads.

District 6: Combining all of Ayden Township with part of Winterville Township, it includes the part of Winterville Township south of the City of Greenville, and east of Highway 11 up to Highway 43. Included are Ayden, Roundtree, Redalia, Haddocks Crossroads, Cannon Crossroads, Bells Fork and Windsor.

District 7: Covering the southeast quarter of the county, it includes all of Grifton, Swift Creek and Chicod townships and part of Grimesland Township. Included are Grifton, Hanrahan, Coxville, St. Johns, Stokestown, Venters, Gardnerville, Clayroot, Shelmerdine, Chicod, Calico, Elmira Crossroads, Black Jack, Cox Crossing, Hollywood Crossroad and McGowans Crossroad. The portion of Grimesland Township in the district generally is the area between Simpson (but not including Simpson) and Hams Crossroads, including Galloway Crossroads.

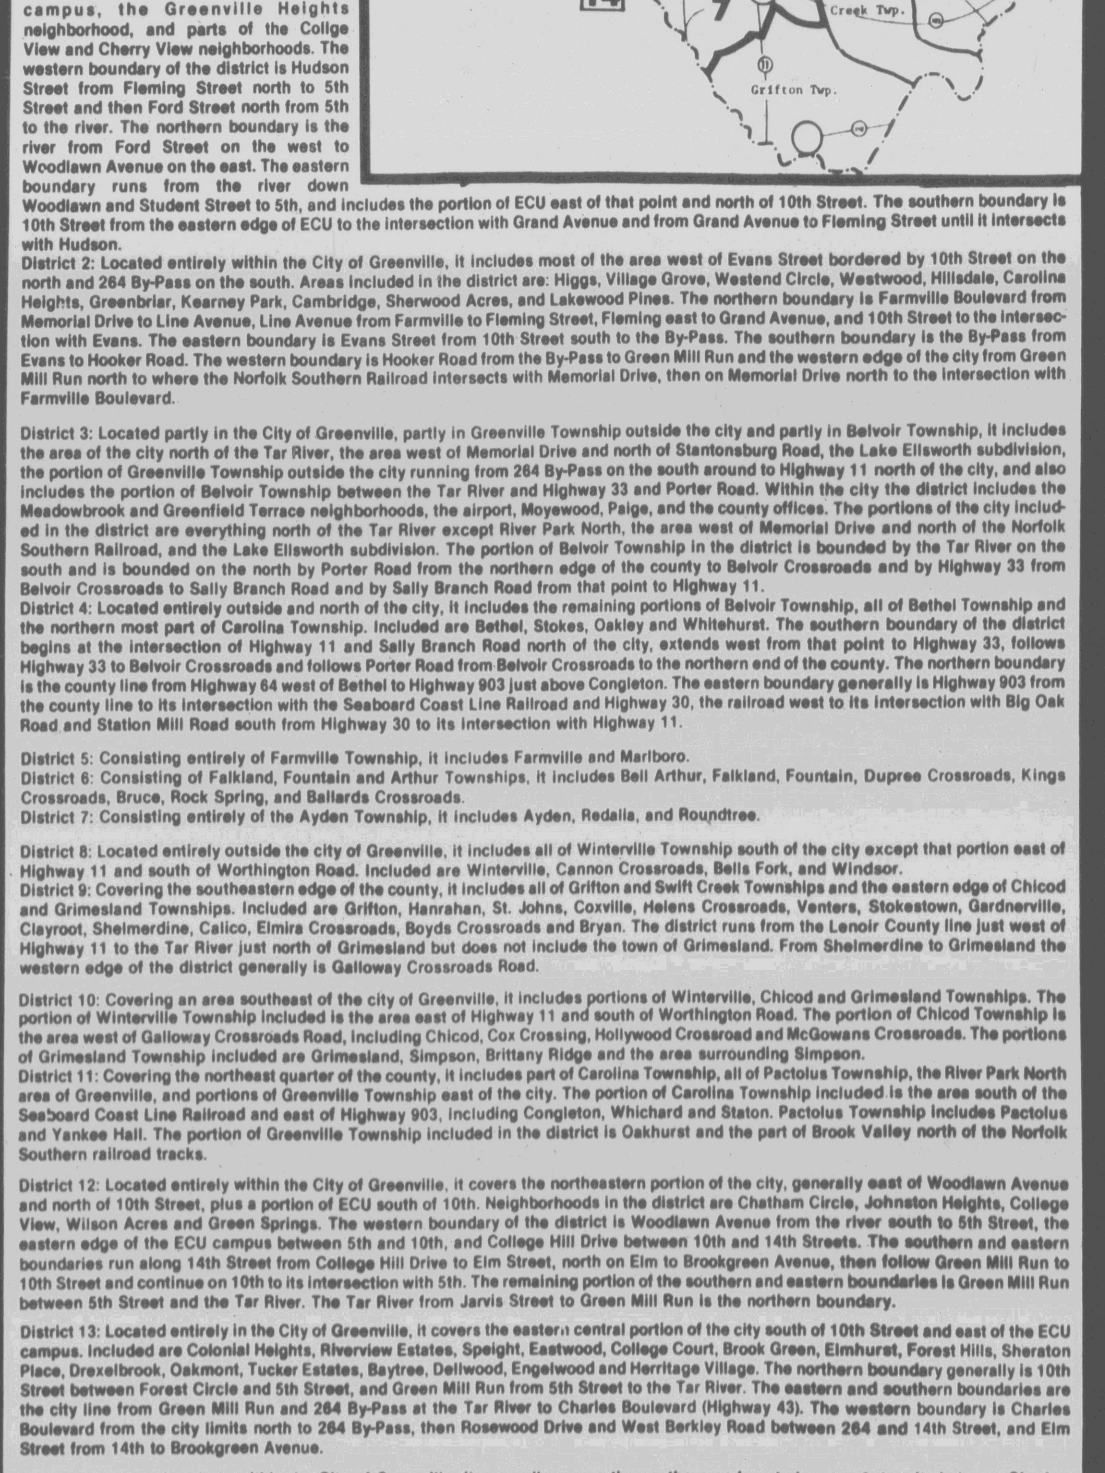

District 8: Covering the northeast quarter of the county, it includes all of Carolina and Pactolus townships and the part of Grimesland Township not in District 7. Included are Oakley, Congleton, Stokes, Whichard, Staton, Pactolus, Simpson, Grimesland, Bryan and Boyds Crossroads.

District 9: Covering the eastern edge of the City of Greenville and areas just east of the city, it consists of parts of both Greenville and Winterville townships. The portion outside the city generally lies between Highway 43 and the Tar River, including Cherry Oaks, Brook Valley and Oakhurst. Within the city, it generally includes the eastern part of the city bordered on the north and west by Green Mill Run from the Tar River to 10th Street, 10th Street from 5th east to Fornes Run, Fornes Run south to the Norfolk Southern Railroad (just south of 14th), and the railroad tracks from Fornes Run to the city limits. Areas in the district include Riverview Estates, Colonial Heights, College Court, Coghill, part of Engelwood, Eastwood, Hartington & Williams, Speight and Golden Place.

District 10: Located entirely within the City of Greenville, it includes most of the area between 10th Street and the Tar River east of downtown plus part of ECU and the Brook Green neighborhood. The northern boundary is the Tar River from Summit Street east to Green Mill Run. The southern boundary is 10th Street from the western edge of ECU (Lawrence Street) east to 10th's intersection with 5th. The district also includes the area between 10th and 14th streets, from ECU on the west to Fornes Run on the east. In the district are Chatham Circle, College View, Johnston Heights, Green Springs, Brook Green and part of Easthaven.

District 11: Located entirely within the City of Greenville, it consists generally of the southern third of the city. The northern boundary, going from west to east, consists of Arlington Boulevard from the city limits to Hooker Road, Green Mill Run from Hooker to 14th Street, 14th from Green Mill Run to Elm, Overlook and Crestwood and Beaumont from Elm to the Norfolk Southern Railroad, and the railroad to the city limits. In the district are Greenbriar, Sedgefield, Red Oak, Oakdale, West Haven, Club Pines, Belvedere, Cambridge, Lakewood Pines, Arlington Plaza, Brentwood, Lynndale, Lynndale Townes, Stratford, Forest Hills, Sheraton Place, Drexelbrook, Oakmont, Upton Courts, Dellwood, Herritage Village and part of Engelwood.

PROPOSAL FOR 14 DISTRICTS

District 1: Located entirely within the City of Greenville, it includes most of the area between the Tar River and 10th Street from Ford Street on the west to Woodlawn Avenue on the east, plus a portion of the East Carolina University campus to the east of Woodlawn. The district includes downtown Greenville, much of the ECU campus, the Greenville Heights neighborhood, and parts of the Colige View and Cherry View neighborhoods. The western boundary of the district is Hudson Street from Fleming Street north to 5th Street and then Ford Street north from 5th to the river. The northern boundary is the river from Ford Street on the west to Woodlawn Avenue on the east. The eastern boundary runs from the river down Woodlawn and Student Street to 5th, and includes the portion of ECU east of that point and north of 10th Street. The southern boundary is 10th Street from the eastern edge of ECU to the intersection with Grand Avenue and from Grand Avenue to Fleming Street until it intersects with Hudson.

District 2: Located entirely within the City of Greenville, it includes most of the area west of Evans Street bordered by 10th Street on the north and 264 By-Pass on the south. Areas included in the district are: Higgs, Village Grove, Westend Circle, Westwood, Hillsdale, Carolina Heights, Greenbriar, Kearney Park, Cambridge, Sherwood Acres, and Lakewood Pines. The northern boundary is Farmville Boulevard from Memorial Drive to Line Avenue, Line Avenue from Farmville to Fleming Street, Fleming east to Grand Avenue, and 10th Street to the intersection with Evans. The eastern boundary is Evans Street from 10th Street south to the By-Pass. The southern boundary is the By-Pass from Evans to Hooker Road. The western boundary is Hooker Road from the By-Pass to Green Mill Run and the western edge of the city from Green Mill Run north to where the Norfolk Southern Railroad intersects with Memorial Drive, then on Memorial Drive north to the intersection with Farmville Boulevard.

District 3: Located partly in the City of Greenville, partly in Greenville Township outside the city and partly in Belvoir Township, it includes the area of the city north of the Tar River, the area west of Memorial Drive and north of Stantonsburg Road, the Lake Ellsworth subdivision, the portion of Greenville Township outside the city running from 264 By-Pass on the south around to Highway 11 north of the city, and also includes the portion of Belvoir Township between the Tar River and Highway 33 and Porter Road. Within the city the district includes the Meadowbrook and Greenfield Terrace neighborhoods, the airport, Moyewood, Paige, and the county offices. The portions of the city included in the district are everything north of the Tar River except River Park North, the area west of Memorial Drive and north of the Norfolk Southern Railroad, and the Lake Ellsworth subdivision. The portion of Belvoir Township in the district is bounded by the Tar River on the south and is bounded on the north by Porter Road from the northern edge of the county to Belvoir Crossroads and by Highway 33 from Belvoir Crossroads to Sally Branch Road and by Sally Branch Road from that point to Highway 11.

District 4: Located entirely outside and north of the city, it includes the remaining portions of Belvoir Township, all of Bethel Township and the northern most part of Carolina Township. Included are Bethel, Stokes, Oakley and Whitehurst. The southern boundary of the district begins at the intersection of Highway 11 and Sally Branch Road north of the city, extends west from that point to Highway 33, follows Highway 33 to Belvoir Crossroads and follows Porter Road from Belvoir Crossroads to the northern end of the county. The northern boundary is the county line from Highway 64 west of Bethel to Highway 903 just above Congleton. The eastern boundary generally is Highway 903 from the county line to its intersection with the Seaboard Coast Line Railroad and Highway 30, the railroad west to its intersection with Big Oak Road and Station Mill Road south from Highway 30 to its intersection with Highway 11.

District 5: Consisting entirely of Farmville Township, it includes Farmville and Marlboro.

District 6: Consisting of Falkland, Fountain and Arthur Townships, it includes Bell Arthur, Falkland, Fountain, Dupree Crossroads, Kings Crossroads, Bruce, Rock Spring, and Ballards Crossroads.

District 7: Consisting entirely of the Ayden Township, it includes Ayden, Redalia, and Roundtree.

District 8: Located entirely outside the city of Greenville, it includes all of Winterville Township south of the city except that portion east of Highway 11 and south of Worthington Road. Included are Winterville, Cannon Crossroads, Bells Fork, and Windsor.

District 9: Covering the southeastern edge of the county, it includes all of Grifton and Swift Creek Townships and the eastern edge of Chicod and Grimesland Townships. Included are Grifton, Hanrahan, St. Johns, Coxville, Helens Crossroads, Venters, Stokestown, Gardnerville, Clayroot, Shelmerdine, Calico, Elmira Crossroads, Boyds Crossroads and Bryan. The district runs from the Lenoir County line just west of Highway 11 to the Tar River just north of Grimesland but does not include the town of Grimesland. From Shelmerdine to Grimesland the western edge of the district generally is Galloway Crossroads Road.

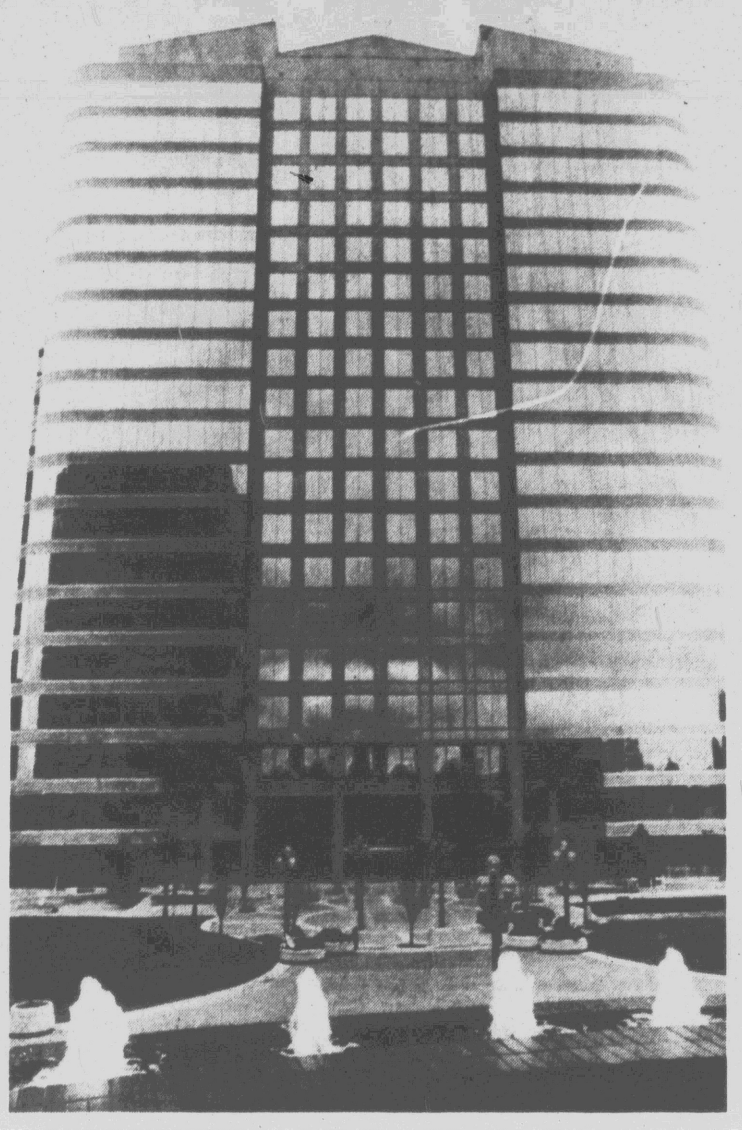

District 10: Covering an area southeast of the city of Greenville, it includes portions of Winterville, Chicod and Grimesland Townships. The portion of Winterville Township included is the area east of Highway 11 and south of Worthington Road. The portion of Chicod Township is the area west of Galloway Crossroads Road, including Chicod, Cox Crossing, Hollywood Crossroad and McGowans Crossroads. The portions of Grimesland Township included are Grimesland, Simpson, Brittany Ridge and the area surrounding Simpson.

District 11: Covering the northeast quarter of the county, it includes part of Carolina Township, all of Pactolus Township, the River Park North area of Greenville, and portions of Greenville Township east of the city. The portion of Carolina Township included is the area south of the Seaboard Coast Line Railroad and east of Highway 903, including Congleton, Whichard and Staton. Pactolus Township includes Pactolus and Yankee Hall. The portion of Greenville Township included in the district is Oakhurst and the part of Brook Valley north of the Norfolk Southern railroad tracks.

District 12: Located entirely within the City of Greenville, it covers the northeastern portion of the city, generally east of Woodlawn Avenue and north of 10th Street, plus a portion of ECU south of 10th. Neighborhoods in the district are Chatham Circle, Johnston Heights, College View, Wilson Acres and Green Springs. The western boundary of the district is Woodlawn Avenue from the river south to 5th Street, the eastern edge of the ECU campus between 5th and 10th, and College Hill Drive between 10th and 14th Streets. The southern and eastern boundaries run along 14th Street from College Hill Drive to Elm Street, north on Elm to Brookgreen Avenue, then follow Green Mill Run to 10th Street and continue on 10th to its intersection with 5th. The remaining portion of the southern and eastern boundaries is Green Mill Run between 5th Street and the Tar River. The Tar River from Jarvis Street to Green Mill Run is the northern boundary.

District 13: Located entirely in the City of Greenville, it covers the eastern central portion of the city south of 10th Street and east of the ECU campus. Included are Colonial Heights, Riverview Estates, Speight, Eastwood, College Court, Brook Green, Elmhurst, Forest Hills, Sheraton Place, Drexelbrook, Oakmont, Tucker Estates, Baytree, Dellwood, Engelwood and Herritage Village. The northern boundary generally is 10th Street between Forest Circle and 5th Street, and Green Mill Run from 5th Street to the Tar River. The eastern and southern boundaries are the city line from Green Mill Run and 264 By-Pass at the Tar River to Charles Boulevard (Highway 43). The western boundary is Charles Boulevard from the city limits north to 264 By-Pass, then Rosewood Drive and West Berkley Road between 264 and 14th Street, and Elm Street from 14th to Brookgreen Avenue.

District 14: Located entirely within the City of Greenville, it generally covers the southern and central parts of the city between Charles Boulevard and the western edge of the city. Included are Rock Springs, Stratford, Brentwood, Lynndale, Lynndale Townes, Belvedere, Club Pines, West Haven, Sedgefield, Fairlane, Summerfield, Rollingwood, Oakdale, Red Oak, and the Greenville Country Club. The northern boundary, running west to east, is Green Mill Run from the city limits to Hooker Road, Hooker Road south to 264 By-Pass, 264 from Hooker to Evans Street, Evans north to 10th Street, and 10th Street to College Hill Drive. The eastern boundary is College Hill Drive between 10th and 14th, then W. Berkley Road and Rosewood Drive to 264 By-Pass, and Charles Boulevard (Highway 43) from 264 to the southern city limits.

Southeast Begins New Year Still Recovering From Drought

By JOHN A. BOLT
Associated Press Writer

The Southeast, still recovering from one of the worst droughts on record, began the new year with rising lake levels and predictions of a wetter-than-normal first quarter.

"Basically you've got a situation where all the lakes are recovering, some more than others," said Rob Holland, a spokesman in Atlanta for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which manages many lakes throughout the Southeast.

"Some have recovered virtually all of their storage, and are in fact above normal for this time of year," he said.

And National Weather Service meteorologist Marvin Maddox in Atlanta said the 90-day forecast calls for a better than 55 percent chance of above-normal rainfall throughout the Southeast.

Last year's drought began when the first three months, usually the wettest of the year, were significantly drier than normal. By summer, lakes had fallen to record lows and farmers faced financial peril from millions of dollars of lost crops.

While the first days of this January have been dry, Maddox said predicted weekend rains easily could erase any deficits.

Water managers credit heavier-than-usual rainfall during the end of 1986 for the recovery of water tables in the region.

Lake Lanier, located northeast of Atlanta and a key to water supplies and in north Georgia and Chattahoochee River levels further south, has risen 5.7 feet from its low in October, but is still 10.5 feet below normal.

Clarks Hill Lake on the Georgia-South Carolina is up 7.1 feet, but remains 6.4 feet short of full pool.

In Tennessee, resource managers hope for more rain.

"There are no heavy rains in the forecast and this is the time of year that normally we get heavy rains to fill our reservoirs," said Ralph Brooks, assistant director of the Tennessee Valley Authority's division of air and water resources in Knoxville.

"We'd like to see some heavy rains. We've just had two years of drought and here we are going into another year. We'd like to at least get 5 inches in January," Brooks said.

Two North Carolina lakes hit hardest by the drought have recovered, said Allen Piner, a hydraulic engineer with the corp's reservoir regulation section in North Carolina.

Jordan Lake is back to normal, after being down 8 feet in November, and Falls Lake has erased a 6-foot deficit in August.

"Observed rainfall for November was above normal at Jordan and at Falls," Piner said. "This allowed the lakes to recover partially. They recovered fully just recently — in late December and early January."

In Florida, "We had enough (rain) to help everybody's feelings and keep the peanut crop up some, but we haven't had enough to get the water table up much," according to Andy Andreasen, livestock agent for Jackson County, one of four Florida counties hardest hit by the drought.

The agricultural outlook elsewhere is also unclear.

"Small grain right now is looking pretty good," and livestock and poultry are "in pretty good shape" in North Carolina, said state Department of Agriculture spokesman Jim Devine.

Georgia officials say it will be spring before they know what impact the drought had on farmers' plans. "But we do expect farmers to probably be cautious and we also expect to again see reduced acreage for many of our crops," said state Agriculture Department spokesman Steve Rich.

"For many farmers the effects of the drought will be long-lasting and probably will be the final downfall of some of the farmers who have been fighting against the threat of foreclosure for many months," Rich said.

One of the most public effects of the drought came when farmers from the Midwest and other areas joined together to send hay to Southeast farmers whose cattle faced starvation because their own hay crops had failed.

That effort still is going on in many states, although winter hay crops are coming in.

"Farmers were able to harvest and cut hay after the rains we had in the fall, and for many of them there was probably enough to get them through the winter months," said Georgia's Rich.

Virginia's hay situation also has improved.

"With the hay harvested, the carryover production from the year before and donated hay, we probably will have enough hay to get through," said Clarence Dunkerly, statistician-in-charge of the Virginia Agriculture Statistics Service.

'It will be nip and tuck and some individual farmers may have problems," Dunkerly said.

Lanoe Branham, coordinator for South Carolina's Hay Central operation of the state agriculture department, said, "As for the feed situation or the grain situation in this case, we don't have a good feel for it."

U.S. Constitution

State Prepares For Anniversary

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina is preparing to celebrate the 200th anniversary of a document that many Tar Heel political leaders despised when they first saw it in 1787.

North Carolina was one of two states, along with Rhode Island, that refused to ratify the U.S. Constitution after George Washington, Ben Franklin, James Madison and 36 other signers submitted it to the 13 original states.

And Thomas Person, a state senator from Granville County, went so far as to brand Washington, the father of the country, as "a damned rascal and traitor to his country for putting his name to such an infamous paper as the new Constitution."

The strongly anti-federalist Person, for whom Person County is named, later claimed he never made such an ugly statement, but the quote has found its way into the textbooks.

North Carolina's refusal to sign the Constitution the first time around should not cause any belated embarrassment as the celebration begins two centuries later, says Rob Sikorski, associate director of the N.C. Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

Sikorski says he thinks the state's role in the constitutional ratification process is something to be cherished.

"There was a lot of uncertainty, a lot of unanswered questions at the time," said Sikorski, a constitutional scholar. "How would it influence North Carolina's economy? How would it influence the churches?"

Two centuries later, the Constitution is still debated in North Carolina and across the country, not only in courtrooms, but on street corners and lunch counters.

The salute to the Constitution will last three years. That's how long it took to get the Constitution drafted, signed and for North Carolina to finally ratify it.

The North Carolina celebration will include citizen meetings in the 100 counties to discuss the relevance of the Constitution today. There will also be pilgrimages to the shrine of the Constitution in Philadelphia, and major events in 1988 and 1989 in Hillsborough and Fayetteville.

Perhaps most appealing event is the prospect of a one-time only national holiday — Sept. 17, the 200th anniversary of the day the Constitution was signed in Philadelphia.

Congress must approve the holiday and politicians say opposition is expected in Washington because of the cost of yet another federal holiday.

Developer Says RJR Seeks Lease

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — An Atlanta development company has confirmed it is negotiating office leases with RJR-Nabisco Inc., which is reportedly considering moving its headquarters from Winston-Salem.

Cort Nagle of Trammell Crow Co. in Atlanta said Sunday his company has been negotiating with RJR-Nabisco, but no leases have been signed. He declined to identify specific sites under negotiation.

"They have asked us not to comment in any way, shape or form," Nagle told The Charlotte Observer.

The possible move was first reported in Saturday editions of The Atlanta Constitution and The Atlanta Journal. The newspaper said the tobacco and consumer products giant's management will propose the headquarters move at a board of directors' meeting Thursday.

Earl Smith, chairman of the Cobb County, Ga., board of commissioners, said Sunday he believed the possible RJR Nabisco move was related to a request he had received to reserve time this week "for a major announcement."

The Greensboro News & Record reported that an unnamed source close to the RJR board of directors said the report of a move "is not an unfounded rumor," but added, "no decision has been made."

Gene Dyson, president of the Business Council of Georgia, which is involved in economic development, said Saturday he believes there is an 85 percent likelihood RJR Nabisco will move its corporate headquarters to Atlanta.

Citing sources in the Atlanta business community, Dyson said "all of the indications" suggest a move is likely.

Sources told the Greensboro newspaper 200 to 300 workers could lose their jobs if the company's headquarters is moved.

"This is an issue that's on the table," the source told the newspaper. "The possibility is not out of the question."

Company officials continued to decline to confirm or deny reports about the possible move. "We're just not going to comment on these stories," said RJR Nabisco spokesman David Fishel in Winston-Salem. "At all."

Meanwhile, civic and business leaders across the state geared up for a fight to keep the company giant from relocating.

Winston-Salem Mayor Wayne Corpening said he personally would call on RJR Na bisco officials today to ask about rumors of a potential headquarters move.

"I'm the mayor, aren't I?" Corpening said Sunday. "Certain things, you've got to do yourself."

"We have time left for a defense, and we'll be doing our best to sit down with the company as soon as possible," Charles Webb, executive director of the Winston-Salem Chamber of Commerce told The Charlotte Observer.

Officials in Winston-Salem said RJR Nabisco had given no advance indications of any decision to leave the city.

"The news that broke is a definite surprise to the people in Winston-Salem," Webb said.

Researcher Says Accidental Discovery Of AZT Made Her Do 'Double Take'

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — A researcher at Burroughs Wellcome Co. says she stumbled upon the AZT drug by accident in November 1984 and did a "double take" when an AIDS-like virus had disappeared in a contaminated petri dish.

Researcher Marty St. Clair says she was screening chemical compounds for an AIDS treatment in 1984, and AZT was part of a batch of 15 sent to her for testing.

She said AZT had been synthesized as an anti-cancer drug in the 1960s, but had proved ineffective against tumors. Most scientists had ignored AZT since then, but Burroughs Wellcome had kept it on the shelf because it seemed to be effective against some viruses.

Ms. St. Clair had contaminated petri dishes with an AIDS-like virus found in animals. A week later, she said the virus had vanished in the dishes with AZT in them. At first, she worried she had made a mistake.

"I've got to repeat it," she thought. She called Dr. Sandra Nusinoff Lehrman, a senior research scientist and one of 60 researchers working on the project.

"I can remember going up to the lab and just saying, 'Wow.' " Ms. Lehrman said in an interview.

Ms. St. Clair duplicated the experiment — with the same results.

"It was incredible," she said.

By February 1985, Burroughs Wellcome had the drug tested on human viruses. Again, the same results.

The company applied to the Food and Drug Administration for permission to test the drug for safety in 19 humans, an approval process that usually takes at least a month. Recognizing the urgency, the FDA approved the request in seven days.

The first dose of AZT was given to a patient July 3, 1985.

"The first study on people was to see if there were bad effects," Ms. Lehrman said. "It was exciting. It was important for AIDS, but there were other important scientific implications related to the virus."

The drug proved safe, but uncertainties remained, she said.

Burroughs Wellcome decided to do a controlled study, beginning in February, on 282 patients at 12 hospitals nationwide. It was a double-blind placebo test, meaning that half the patients would get the drug and half a dummy pill, and neither patient nor doctor would know who got what.

When the testing was over, the evidence was startling, yet grim: Sixteen of 137 placebo patients died, compared with only one of 145 taking AZT.

"AZT really is the first drug that shows a potential for altering the course," Ms, Lehrman said. "It's terribly exciting, and yet there's so much more to do. There are a lot of questions still to be answered. We are working with a continued sense of urgency."

At the same time, scientists at Burroughs Wellcome and worldwide are looking for other, more effective drugs.

On Friday, ICN Pharmaceuticals in California announced that a drug called riba virin seemed to stop early infection caused by the AIDS virus. Earlier in the week, President Reagan called the fight against AIDS "the administration's highest public-health priority," and asked Congress for nearly $1 billion for research over the next two years.

Regional Meetings Scheduled On AIDS

RALEIGH (AP) — State education officials next month will sponsor eight regional meetings of health educators across the state to discuss how to introduce AIDS education into the classroom.

"We can't turn our backs on a problem like AIDS," said Al Proctor, health director for the State Department of Public Instruction. "I think there is going to be controversy about it, and I think there are going to be some objections to it."

The state will apply for a share of $10 million soon to be distributed by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control to be used to teach children how to protect themselves against AIDS, Proctor said.

Information about acquired immune deficiency syndrome, a fatal disease that cripples the body's immune system, is controversial because telling children how to avoid it means telling them about homosexuality and condoms. The disease is spread primarily through sexual intercourse, and most of its 29,000 U.S. victims have been homosexuals.

"Obviously, you cannot talk aboud AIDS without talking about homosexuality," said Bob Frye, health education consultant for the Department of Public Instruction. The disease also can be transmitted through blood transfusions and on the needles used by drug addicts.

This spring, the education department will make revisions to include AIDS in its handbook on sexually transmitted diseases, which is used by seventh-grade health teachers, Frye said. The state likely will recommend that children be taught about AIDS in grades seven through nine, he sid.

The State Division of Health Services' AIDS Program, launched in August with an $85,000 federal grant, is reviewing videotapes about AIDS, said David H. Jolly, health educator.

In the meantime, many local school systems are pressing forward with AIDS education programs of their own.

Diet Pill System Sweeping U.S.

Super Dream Pill Guaranteed Weight Loss

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH — According to a review of customers' files, here's what people are saying about the amazing, vastly improved "new version" of the world famous Dream Pill System for fast, guaranteed weight loss featuring Super Lite Dreams tablets:

"I lost 25 lbs. with a 30 day supply." Mrs. J.N.S., Ft. Payne, AL.

"Losing 1 lb. per day." Mr. J.G., Pineville, KY.

"I've lost 34 lbs. and I'm still losing." Mrs. J.K., Garden Grove, CA.

"I have been on Dream Pill for one month and feel great . . . have lost 27 lbs. Mr. A.D., Anadarko, OK.

The System's Dream Pill combines two natural substances called L-arginine and L-ornithine which can stimulate the body's production of growth hormone. Diet researchers believe that growth hormone may be what's responsible for allowing teenagers to down thousands of calories in hamburgers and other foods and still be thin as a rail.

Growth Hormone is present in people up through the teenage years, then slowly diminishes with age. But L-arginine and L-ornithine make the body 'think' it belongs to a teenager again, allowing adults to eat as much as they want — and still be thin and wiry.

Life Extension Authors Confirm Results

Durk Pearson and Sandy Shaw, graduates of MIT and UCLA respectively, introduced these miracle substances to the public in their runaway best selling book, Life Extension. Much to her amazement, while taking L-arginine for its healing effects on a broken foot, Sandy lost 25 pounds of fat and put on 5 pounds of firm-toned muscle in six weeks. According to Durk's calculations, the pill caused Sandy to lose 400 times as much fat as she would otherwise have lost — without dieting!

Robeson Inquests Have Cleared Officers In Shootings

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Three Robeson County coroner's inquests held in the last six years have cleared law enforcement officers who killed someone while on duty, and in at least two of those cases the victims were unarmed, court records show.

The latest inquest, in November 1986, cleared Sheriff's Deputy Kevin Stone — the son of Sheriff Hubert Stone — in the shooting death of Jimmy Earl Cummings.

Cummings, a suspected drug dealer, was shot in the head Nov. 1. After deliberating about five minutes, a six-member coroner's jury unanimously ruled Nov. 13 that Stone killed the unarmed Fairmont man by accident and-or in self-defense.

Robeson is one of the few counties in North Carolina to hold on to the coroner system. Most have abolished the elective office in favor of medical examiners.

But District Attorney Joe Freeman Britt, who represented the state in the last three inquests in Robeson County, defended the coroner's role.

"There are certain cases that need to be aired in public," he told The Fayetteville Times.

Asked his criteria for calling an inquest, Britt said that only the coroner has that authority. However, Coroner Chalmers Biggs said that Britt instructed him to call an inquest in the Cummings case.

"I just go along with what he wants me to do," Biggs said.

In the two other coroner inquests — one in 1981 and the other in 1979 — law enforcement officers also were cleared of any wrongdoing.

In the 1979 case, a Philadelphia, Pa., man was fatally shot by Robeson County sheriff's detective Thurman Mitchell as the officer attempted to place the man under arrest on a drug charge.

John J. Mazzola Jr., who was unarmed, was shot in the heart July 30 in a field along Interstate 95 about 11 miles south of Lumberton, according to records. A large quantity of marijuana was found in a rental car he had abandoned along the highway.

The officer told investigators he shot because he was afraid Mazzola would take his gun and kill him. The coroner's jury voted 4-2 not to hold Mitchell, although one eyewitness to the event said he thought Mazzola was walking toward the officer to give himself up when he was shot, records show.

On Oct. 14, 1981, a coroner's jury voted 5-1 not to charge Lumberton Police Lt. B.C. Britt in the death of Emmanuel Steven Pattaway. Pattaway, 22, was shot in the back on Sept. 17 of that year as he attempted to escape from a hardware store he apparently had intended to burglarize.

Ten other coroner's inquests held in Robeson County between 1970 and 1975 dealt mostly with traffic deaths.

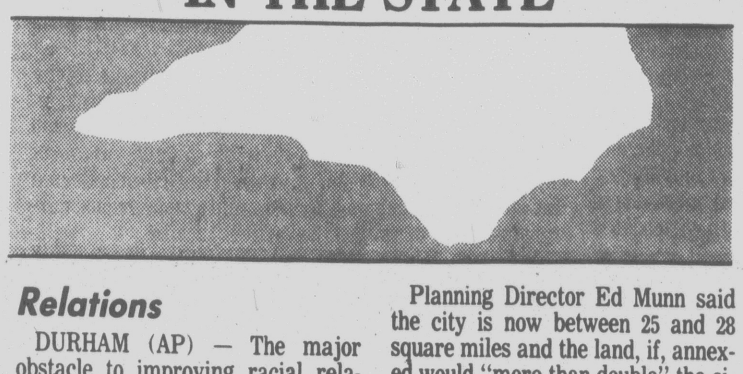

Since the Cummings' inquest, a coalition of concerned citizens in Robeson County has organized to protest the handling of the case and to demand reforms in law enforcement and court procedures.

George Gardner, executive director of the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union, announced Friday that the group would provide legal assistance to the Cummings family in legal matters that arise from the shooting.

Gardner said Cummings' civil rights were "violently denied" and said the report of the coroner raises more questions about the "integrity of the investigation than anything else made public."

And 10 days ago, the head of a South Carolina-based advocacy group for the poor called for Gov. Jim Martin to appoint a special prosecutor in Cummings' death.

IN THE STATE

Relations

DURHAM (AP) — The major obstacle to improving racial relations lies in the refusal of large numbers of individuals to give up the notion that they are part of an exceptional racial group, a Duke University professor who knew Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. says.

With the approach of the second federal holiday on Jan. 19 honoring King's birthday, Dr. C. Eric Lincoln, a sociologist of religion and expert on the history of race relations in America, said the slain civil rights leader's dream of racial equality and peace doesn't look greatly improved.

"There are no exceptional racial groups; there are only exceptional individuals," Lincoln said recently.

Lincoln also sees apartheid in South Africa as a major stumbling block to King's dream.

Dunn Fire

DUNN, N.C. (AP) — A fire that started before daybreak today destroyed a Pizza Inn restaurant and a Faircloth's Sporting Goods Center in Dunn.

Officials think the fire started in the pizza restaurant at the Floral Gardens Shopping Center at about 4 a.m. Five other stores in the shopping center had smoke and water damage.

No one was injured in the fire, officials said.

Bankers Fined

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A federal judge has sentenced two former Bank of Pilot Mountain officials and fined them a total of $175,000 for misapplying money and omitting bank records on transactions.

Judge Richard C. Erwin on Friday sentenced former bank president W. Frank Badgett to 340 days in prison and fined him $75,000 for misapplying more than $2.6 million of the bank's money from 1983 to 1985.

Erwin also fined J. Wick Gordon, the former chairman of the board of the bank, $100,000 and gave him a suspended sentence on a related charge of omitting bank records about some of the transactions.

On Nov. 26, a jury in U.S. District Court in Winston-Salem convicted Badgett on 35 of 45 counts contained in an indictment that charged him with misapplying more than $2.7 million of the bank's money. Many of those transactions involved Fit-All Sportswear Inc., a company in which Badgett and Gordon were officers and stockholders.

Shopper Slaying

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — A Battleboro man has been charged with first-degree murder in the December slaying of a Rocky Mount woman who disappeared during a shopping trip, Nash County Sheriff Frank Brown said.

Brown said Tommy Demetrius Arrington, 23, was arrested at his home Saturday at 2:40 a.m. in connection with the stabbing death of 28-year-old Mary Nelms Viverette. Arrington is being held without bond in the Nash County Jail, Brown said.

Annexation

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — Gastonia City Council members have taken an unprecedented first step in an annexation plan that could eventually more than double the size of the city.

As part of the largest single annexation plan ever to cross the city council table, officials adopted a "resolution of consideration to annex" a massive land tract which extends from Paysour Mountain to the South Carolina line.

The land tract, if incorporated, would make Gastonia's city limits contiguous with the city limits of Cramerton, Lowell, Ranlo and Dallas.

Gastonia officials say they "have no idea" how many acres the proposed area is, how much it would cost to service or how many households would be affected.

Planning Director Ed Munn said the city is now between 25 and 28 square miles and the land, if, annexed would "more than double" the city's size.

Fire Deaths

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Fires have killed eight people in Winston-Salem since Dec. 8 — a statistic that alarms city fire officials.

"That's an outrageous number, and it didn't have to be," Lester Ervin, the chief of the Winston-Salem Fire Department, said. During the same period a year ago, the city had no fire deaths.

The number of fires in Winston-Salem fell from 389 in 1985 to 279 in 1986. But despite the decrease, Ervin said that fires usually increase during the winter months because of malfunctions in heating systems. And fire officials said that they're especially concerned that eight residents of the city were unable to get out in time during recent fires.

Concert Added

RALEIGH (AP) — A third concert by the British rock group Genesis has been added after a flurry of activity at Triangle Ticketrons this weekend sold out a second show by the group in about two hours, officials said.

Officials said tickets for the second concert were sold out by noon Saturday. Ticket sales began about 10 a.m. The third concert is expected to sell out by Monday, said Sylvia Barrett, box office manager at the Raleigh Civic Center.

Genesis, which features singer Phil Collins, will perform Jan. 31 and Feb. 22 and Feb. 23 in the the Dean E. Smith Student Activities Center on the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill campus.

The first and second Genesis concerts sold out in two hours.

Unemployment

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's unemployment rate remained unchanged at 5.4 percent in December, figures released by the U.S. Department of Labor shows.

The U.S. Department of Labor figures for December show North Carolina's labor force at 3,220,000 with 3,047,000 employed and 173,000 unemployed.

North Carolina's unemployment rate is the fifth lowest among the 11 largest states, figures show.

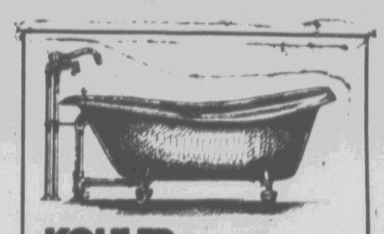

Copter Lost

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A Navy helicopter sank after ditching in the Atlantic Ocean about 70 miles east of Cape Canaveral, Fla., but the three crewmen were rescued, a spokeswoman for the Naval Air Force Atlantic said.

The crew apparently experienced "an in-flight emergency" Sunday, said Cmdr. Jolene Keefer, but she said she did not have details. She said the crewmen were not injured.

The FH-2 Seasprite anti-submarine helicopter was on a routine mission flying from the cruiser USS Yorktown, based in Norfolk, she said.

The crewmen were identified as Lt. Cmdr. Clifton W. Moore, 32, of Swansboro, N.C., the pilot; Lt. Charles D. Webb, 26, of Charlotte, N.C., the co-pilot, and Airman Scott J. Martin, 20, of Mankato, Minn.

Biologist Says Human Life Span Could Be Extended With Enzymes

By The Associated Press

A Duke University biologist says if scientists can learn to deploy a group of human enzymes he discovered, people might be able to live to a maximum age of 90, 100 or more.

"Nobody's saying immortal," Irwin Fridovich said. "But people think you can slow down the aging process and lengthen the average life span."

Fridovich's 1967 discovery of the enzymes with researcher Joe M. McCord gave credibility to the oxygen-radical theory. Now, scientists are studying their potential for defending body cells from cancer, heart attacks and other diseases that usually claim victims' lives by age 70 or 80.

Richard G. Cutler, a researcher at the National Institute on Aging, recently implanted mice with an enzyme-producing gene to see if it would make them live longer.

"This is a very critical experiment," Cutler said. "It looks like we might be on the verge of extending the life span."

Other scientists are testing the enzymes ability to minimize damage in animals from heart attacks and postpone brain death from strokes. At least one biotechnology company is in the first stages of testing the enzymes' potential in humans, despite criticism from researchers who think it is premature.

Although scientists disagree over the practical application, most agree the enzymes are the linchpin in a theory of aging that has gained credibility in recent years.

Most scientists were skeptical in 1950 when a few radiologists proposed that oxygen radicals, produced by the body's own cells, were responsible for human aging. Oxygen radicals are formed from the air people breathe.

More conventional theories suggest that all body cells age according to a biological clock set by their genes. Each cell reproduces a certain number of times and then dies.

Another theory proposes that hormones, regulated by the brain, influence cellular aging and death.

With each breath, oxygen is inhaled into the lungs and carried from there through the bloodstream to body cells. Inside the cells, the oxygen is used to make energy during a process called oxidation. Some of the byproducts of the oxidation are oxygen radicals, scientists say.

"We all burn oxygen in the cell," said Dr. Gregory B. Bulkley, a Johns Hopkins University researcher who has studied the compounds. Bulkley has described the oxygen radicals as "flame throwers" that would burn up the cell without the "fire extinguisher" action of the defense enzymes.

Because oxygen radicals are known to be so chemically violent, most researchers initially doubted that they were produced in the human body, Bulkley said.

The picture changed when Fridovich discovered the defense enzymes. The idea that body cells could routinely manufacture oxygen radicals — compounds that can rip them apart — was made plausible by the enzymes' counteracting presence.

But the enzymes do not provide an air-tight defense against the oxygen radicals, and some damage occurs. Researchers now think that tiny amounts of that cellular damage accumulate over decades, gradually eroding the cells' ability to carry out essential body functions.

"If you've lived 50 years, you've accumulated perhaps five times more damage than at age 10," Fridovich said. "But if you can manipulate, by genetic means, the level of defense, you can manipulate life span."

Cities Taking Hard Stand On Signs

GREENSBORO (AP) — Greensboro may become the latest North Carolina city to limit huge roadside signs, but billboard industry officials say they hope to convince cities not to run them out of business.

"As far as I'm concerned, the billboard companies are dead," Greensboro council member Charles Forrester said. "It's just a matter of time. If this council can just muster the collective spine, we can do it now."

Raleigh and Durham have moved toward virtual elimination of large billboards. Chapel Hill and Nags Head have outlawed them. Winston-Salem has cut their size in the center city and on smaller thoroughfares, while High Point limits them to industrial zones.

"I believe I'd probably be thinking about getting into another business if I were a sign company," said Carol Morris, a city planner in Charlotte, where officials hope to limit billboards strictly in an effort to spur economic growth.

Greensboro officials are expected to debate the billboard issue in a City Council meeting next month.

Greensboro's options include a blanket elimination of signs except on primary federal roads such as Interstate 40, banning them within a 1-to-5 mile radius of downtown excluding major highways, or prohibiting them from scenic corridors into town.

City officials don't have a confirmed count of signs within the city, but estimate there are between 400 and 500 billboards, most of them with signs on two sides.

In the past three years, Greensboro has cut its number of billboards by three dozen under a local ordinance adopted in 1982, said Henry H. Isaacson, an attorney representing Naegele Outdoor Advertising of the Triad.

Naegele is part of one of the nation's larger sign networks.

"If the 1982 ordinance needs fine tuning, we don't object to that," Isaacson said. "What we object to is being run out of business."

Isaacson says that since 1983, only 23 signs have been erected in Greensboro, while 60 were dismantled.

Mayor John W. Forbis says the changes should stop short of the near-total elimination called for by Forrester and supported in varying degrees by several others on the council.

"I'm not a billboard person but, by the same token, I'm not disposed to pass punitive legislation against an industry that would cause it to go out of business," Forbis said.

Raleigh was North Carolina's first major city to take a hard line against billboards.

In 1983, it restricted billboards to industrial zones and limited display areas to 150 square feet per sign, as compared to Greensboro's maximum of 772 square feet allowed in most non-residential areas. Raleigh's law requires the removal of larger signs within 5½ years, a grace period that allows sign companies to recover their investment.

Naegele's Raleigh branch filed suit against the ordinance, but so far has been unsuccessful. The company lost most recently in federal appeals court in Richmond, Va., and the case is before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Isaacson says one of the key issues in the Raleigh case is the 5½-year grace period, whether that's sufficient compensation for the sign company's loss of income. Naegele raised the same issue in a suit against Durham after that city enacted similar legislation in 1984, and could be expected to do likewise against any total ban Greensboro would attempt.

"You don't take property under our constitution without just compensation," Isaacson said. "I don't think you can recapture your investment in 5½ years."

Baptist Newspaper Resumes Publication

ATLANTA (AP) — Some people speculated last summer that the Southern Baptist Advocate might have folded, but publication of the controversial newspaper has resumed and the new issue jumps headlong into the bitter fray between the denomination's conservative and moderate members.

Until a few days ago, the Advocate had not published since July. The Rev. Robert M. Tenery, the Advocate's editor and pastor of Burkemont Baptist Church in Morganton, N.C., said publication was suspended temporarily after the Baptist Peace Committee asked denomination members to tone down their political rhetoric.

Tenery said the Advocate broke it's silence because the Baptist Press, the denomination's news agency, and several state Baptist newspapers lately have published stories with a moderate bias.

"We just felt that things were so one-sided and the moderate-liberal faction was just getting all the ink they wanted," he said.

"We just thought we'd wait until we had something to say," said the Rev. Paige Patterson, president of the Criswell Center for Bible Studies in Dallas and a supporter of the Advocate.

The new issue was mailed to conservative Baptist churches and individuals across the country. In it Patterson critiques a book by Temp Sparkman, a professor at Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Kansas City.

Patterson describes Sparkman's book, "The Salvation and Nurture of the Child of God," as "arguably the most dangerous book written by a Southern Baptist in our generation."

Passages in the book have been cited by Baptist conservatives as evidence that Sparkman is a heretic.

Missing Painting

MISSING MATISSE BACK ON DISPLAY — A painting Henri Matisse made of his daughter in 1915-1916 that was last seen in a German exhibition in 1930 has turned up in a West Palm Beach art gallery. "Marguerite, la toque de velours bleu," was put on display Thursday at the Norton Gallery of Art after a Palm Beach couple who said they were unaware art scholars had been searching for the work, donated it to the museum. West Palm Beach resident Peggy King is shown viewing the painting. (AP Laserphoto)

Marsh Arabs Changing

By MICHAEL DOBBS
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

AL HUWAIR, Iraq — Haji Abdul Mehsin has lived through a revolution. In the space of a single generation, he has witnessed the destruction of a way of life that dates back five or six thousand years.

For as far back as anyone around here can recall, the Mehsin family have been boat builders. Their specialty was the tarada — a sleek, high-prowed canoe used by Arab sheiks to paddle around the marshes that stretched across southern Iraq into Iran.

Today, the sheiks have been dispossessed by Iraq's socialist government. The marshes formed by the basin of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers are in the process of being drained. Taradas are as obsolescent as the Viking ships they vaguely resemble. Mehsin has opened a grocery store.

For better or for worse, a society that has attracted the interest of writers, explorers and anthropologists is on the verge of extinction. The 20th century forces of economic development, war and oil exploration have finally caught up with the Marsh Arabs.

The social and economic revolution that has taken place in the marshes of southern Iraq is the kind of event that rarely makes news headlines. But it is arguably just as profound as the media-saturated political upheavals in countries such as the Philippines and South Africa. It is certainly irreversible.

"In the old days, this whole area was covered by water. We lived in houses made of reeds. There were no roads and no solid buildings. Everybody used boats to get about," said Mehsin, whose skill as a craftsman made him a revered figure among the marsh people. "All that has changed."

The street outside Mehsin's grocery store is filled with automobiles. Garish advertisements for modern consumer goods are pasted to the walls of houses. A squadron of French-built Iraqi jets returning from a bombing raid against Iran roars overhead.

Once part of old Sumer, one of the earliest civilizations in the Middle East, Al Huwair now looks like thousands of other Third World villages. Canals have been replaced by roads. Workshops where bearded Sabaean craftsmen used to labor over canoes have been turned into teahouses. The village has been cut off from the great marsh that was the reason for its existence just a few years ago.

The art of building the tarada — which was handed down from generation to generation — will probably die with Mehsin. One of his sons has become a teacher. The other is a technician with the Ministry of Agriculture.

Perhaps the most remarkable description of the Marsh Arab way of life has come from an inveterate British traveler, Wilfred Thesiger. Educated at Eton and Oxford, Thesiger lived among the marsh people for seven years in a quixotic attempt to escape the pressures of modern civilization.

Recording his impressions after a first visit to the marshes in 1951, he wrote: "A naked man in a canoe with a trident in his hand, reed houses built upon water, black, dripping buffaloes ... stars reflected in dark water, the croaking of frogs, canoes coming home at evening, peace and continuity, the stillness of a world that never knew an engine."

Thesiger's portrait of the marshes as a water-garden of Eden is contested by many Iraqis. The ruling Baath Socialist Party, which has made an ideological obsession out of economic development, regards the centuries-old way of life of the marsh people as hopelessly obscurantist. It even discourages use of their traditional name, the Madan, calling it synonymous with backwardness.

Since the 1968 revolution, strenuous efforts have been made to end the isolation of the marshes. Schools, health clinics and electric pylons began to sprout across the watery landscape. Schemes proliferated for draining the marshes to create millions of extra acres of fertile agricultural land.

Further disruption has been caused by the six-year-old Persian Gulf war with Iran. Much of the area has been transformed into a military zone — with Iraq's defensive requirements dictating the nature of engineering works. Parts of the marshes have been flooded to impede an Iranian invasion. Other areas have been dried to create extra defensive depth for Iraqi troops.

According to local officials, about 75 villages in the "eastern marshes" near the border have been evacuated for fear of Iranian attacks.

Some of the evacuated marsh people were given new, prefabricated housing in Al Huwair. They have now been told that they will probably have to move again. Valuable oil deposits have been discovered in the region.

Thaamar Swaalem Mishaal comes from a family of sheiks. A distinguished-looking figure in his black-and-white checkered headdress, he projects a natural authority. His ancestors owned large tracts of land in the marshes and exercised considerable political and judicial power over the population.

Like other sheiks, Mishaal virtually has been coopted by the government. He is treated with respect and has been named an official of the local agricultural cooperative. In return, he is expected to provide enthusiastic support for the government's development plans.

"The past was dark but today is light," proclaims Mishaal, welcoming visitors to his mudhif, a traditional guest house built of giant reeds, in the shape of a Quonset hut. "We were cut off from the outside world. We had no electricity, no education. Today, we have everything we need."

Sitting squat-legged alongside the reed walls of the mudhif, beneath a portrait of President Saddam Hussein, are Mishaal's brothers, sons, uncles and cousins, about 40 persons in all. They nod gravely as he tells anecdotes about the bad, old colonial days when the tribe conducted hit-and-run raids against British military garrisons, darting in and out of the marshes in their taradas.

Mishaal's mudhif, with its reed pillars shaped into horseshoe arches, is firmly on dry land. But it performs a similar function to the traditional mudhifs floating on islands in the marshes. It is both a meeting place for the villagers and a hospitality suite for visitors.

Guests are first served fresh coffee, very strong and bitter. Then come plates of roast lamb, curds, fruit and vegetable curry laid out on the rugs on the floor of the mudhif. Two whole sheep's heads are plonked down in front of the visitors, evidence of the clan's wealth as well as proof that the animals have just been slaughtered.

As is customary, only senior family members join the guests in devouring the feast, tearing into the food with their hands. The leftovers are then divided in turn between junior relatives, women, children and animals.

After lunch, Mishaal invites his guests to explore a network of canals that is all that remains of the primeval swamp. Everybody climbs aboard a flat-bottomed reed boat powered by an outboard engine. The former sheik shouts orders from the prow as a Japanese journalist snaps pictures of reed huts. An official from the Ministry of Information clings to the sides of the boat, anxious not to soil his neatly pressed safari suit.

Standing on the banks of the canals, groups of loose-limbed Marsh Arabs gather to watch the curious procession go past. Children punt rafts through the bulrushes on their way home from school, moving their arms in the slow, graceful motions learned from their ancestors. Water buffaloes wallow in the water, occasionally nudging the sides of the boat.

Geese cry in the distance as wisps of smoke from burning reed beds twirl into an endless, brilliant sky.

The apparent timelessness of such scenes serves, in a paradoxical way, to point up the revolution that has occurred in Marsh Arab society. Perhaps the most startling changes are visible at the local secondary school, where children who might once have been content with spending their days in the marshes now dream of life in the cities.

A class of 15-year-olds mentioned occupations such as "airline pilot" or "engineer" when a visitor asked what they would like to become after leaving school. None of the children wanted to be a fisherman, the traditional occupation of the Marsh Arabs. One girl put up her hand when the class was asked if anyone would like to be a farmer — but she corrected the job description to "agricultural engineer."

The flight from the marshes was condemned by Thesiger, who described as "pitiful" the belief that a "meager education" could open the door to fame and fortune.

"They did not realize that there were hundreds of thousands of others in Iraq with the same qualifications. In fact, if they left home, they probably ended by selling newspapers or Coca-Cola in Basra or Baghdad, as well as stealing from cars and pimping for taxi drivers to keep alive," Thesiger wrote in his book "The Marsh Arabs."

Such comments may contain some truth. But they have made Thesiger an unpopular, much-derided figure in a country whose entire ideology is based on the abstract notion of progress.

'Good Money' Is Well Paid

Dear Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the letter in your column from "Worried in Indiana," who said, "My son is a smart fellow. He makes good money." Abby, what is "good money"? I have heard this term used many times.

I have been a printer for more than 30 years, and the only "bad money" I have ever seen was counterfeit.
BILL LITTLE, SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR BILL LITTLE: Come on — anyone who makes "good money" is well paid. People who knowingly work for "bad money" (counterfeit) should spend good money to have their heads examined.

DEAR ABBY: I saw red after reading the letter from "No Name," a 40-year-old divorcee, who had spent the night with a handsome, 37-year-old Vietnam veteran and was turned off when she found that his body (chest and pelvic area) had been patched up with surgical-type plastic. He had explained beforehand that he had been "seriously injured" in Vietnam, so she shouldn't be shocked.

She said: "He's a perfect date — intelligent, educated and well-bred. He was on the football team in college and he also studied ballet. He loves to cook, bake, crochet, knit and do needlepoint. He's an excellent dancer, owns his own business and has plenty of money. (He's a "computer consultant," whatever that is.) After we made love (just that one time, which was just OK), I began to wonder if maybe he was a transsexual (a female who had had a sex-change operation). I don't plan to see him again because, frankly, he left me with the creeps."

Abby, I spent two years in Vietnam as a nurse attached to the 1st Cavalry, and I would like to tell "No Name" that she was undoubtedly dealing with a bona fide vet who had stepped on a Vietnamese land mine, specifically designed to detonate in midair, catching its victims in the chest, hips, pelvis and thighs.

I saw numerous young men come into our operating room with wounds beyond description from shrapnel. Many had to be patched up in any way possible, which would account for the extensive use of plastic to hold this man's body together. (Transsexuals, by the way, do not need plastic parts.)

And yes, his body would look "different," having been repaired by doctors and nurses whose first concern was trying to save his life — not how the results would look.

I think "No Name" has stumbled onto a rare find: a man who was probably embarrassed by the physical appearance of his body, but was willing to expose it honestly instead of hiding behind a wall of shame and fear, as many people are inclined to do. Imagine how he must feel each time he makes love to a woman for the first time, wondering how she will react. Might that not have had something to do with the quality of their initial physical encounter?

This man needs compassion and understanding for the physical and mental torment he has suffered, not rejection from a woman who finds him "creepy," or questions his sexuality because he doesn't conform to her standards of what a "real" man should look like. Do you really think because he likes to cook, bake, etc., it makes him less masculine? Wake up — this is the 1980s! I'm now a carpenter and a trucker, but I'm still a woman!

Either open your eyes and recognize what a fine man he is — or send his address to me. I'll take him, no questions asked. — ALL WOMAN

DEAR WOMAN: Your compassionate letter addresses itself to the disabled veterans of all wars, and speaks for all physically disabled people whose bodies "look different." Thank you for lighting a thousand candles to illuminate an area that has been dark with ignorance for far too long.

(Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.)

Birthday Dinner Held Saturday

FARMVILLE — Deacon John L. Gorham of Farmville was honored at a dinner at Moyes Chapel Church Saturday afternoon in celebration of his 90th birthday.

Hosts and hostesses were his children. The program was conducted by his daughters, Beatrice Harris of Greenville and Mattie Baker of Farmville.

Program participants included the Rev. Willie H. Joyner of Farmville, the Rev. Ollie Gorham of Baltimore, Md., nephew of the honoree, Terry Baker and Merie Baker, granddaughters of the honoree.

Others taking part were Ruby Turnage of Baltimore, Carleen Phillips, Blannie Lee Heart, Thomas Cox of Farmville and Eldress Shirley Gorham of Baltimore. Marjorie Ward of Greenville read words of congratulations from President and Mrs. Reagan. Olivia Pretty, daughter of the honoree, made brief remarks.

Special guests were introduced.

Dinner was served by the honoree's grandchildren.

Product Comes From Mistakes

By KARREN MILLS
Associated Press Writer

HARMONY, Minn. (AP) — There was a time when Merlin Hoiness, a full-blooded Norwegian, would just groan and say "Uff-Da" when rounds of lefse would get torn as they were being rolled out by his workers.

But now his "Uff-Da" comes with a grin as he cuts and deep fries those torn rounds of potato dough, making crisp, salty snack chips that his Norsland Kitchens sells under the label "Uff-Da Chips."

The chips are named after an expression that is a household word in Scandinavian homes.

"It means shucks, geez. It's really something you say if you react when something isn't so good," said Tei-Tei Markley, chancellor at the Norwegian consulate in Minneapolis.

"I was so used to saying 'Uff-Da,' I guess that's why I called them that," Hoiness said.

Hoiness, who first marketed his chips last May at a Syttende Mei celebration in Minneapolis, experimented for about a year before he began selling the chips.

"People here seemed to like them, so I figured if somebody here liked them they probably would like them somewhere else too," said Hoiness, 70, who started the lefse business with his son five years ago upon retiring from 30 years in the grocery business.

On his first day of business he sold 2,100 1½-ounce packages at 50 cents each. In the first five months, Hoiness said, Norsland Kitchens produced between 25,000 and 30,000 packages of Uff-Da Chips, which are sold in specialty shops and by mail order at prices ranging from 75 cents to $1.09 a package.

The venture proved so successful that Hoiness says sometimes his plant has to make lefse especially for turning into chips, torn or not. But he doesn't really like to do that.

"We prefer to use the scraps. We try not to tear our lefse," said Hoiness, who admits to being "kind of an experimenter."

The chips remain a small part of his total business. Last year Norsland Kitchens made 86,000 packages of lefse, two 14-inch rounds to a package. It takes one pound of potatoes to make 2½ rounds of lefse, Hoiness said.

During the busy part of the year, the staff of 18 produces 3,000 rounds of lefse a day, using 1,200 pounds of potatoes.

The process begins with a machine that can peel 100 pounds of potatoes in three minutes. The potatoes then go into a kettle that steam cooks 350 pounds at a time. Another machine grinds the cooked potatoes, before they are cooled overnight.

"Then we mix in the flour, shortening and salt," Hoiness said, and the dough is weighed and formed into rounds by another machine. The rounds are flattened before going to the rolling tables, where each piece of dough is hand rolled 16 times.

"Lefse dough is very difficult to get out thin. It's a lot harder to handle than tortilla dough," said Hoiness. There is not yet a machine that can handle the job, he added.

After rolling, the thin rounds of dough are transferred onto a long, flat stovetop, where they are baked on both sides, then put on a conveyor where they partially cool. Employees then fold and package the lefse.

Traditionally, lefse is spread with butter, and sometimes sprinkled with sugar, then rolled into finger-like cylinders before being eaten.

"No one has really captured the way of making old fashioned lefse in a commercial way," said Hoiness, who developed his own rolling tables, which rotate like a potter's wheel so the employee doesn't have to change direction while rolling out the dough.

BROILERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 48.00 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2½ to 3 pounds birds. 91 percent of the loads offered have been confirmed with a final weighted average of 47.68 cents fob dock or equivalent. The market is steady and the live supply is adequate for a moderate to good demand. Average weights heavy. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Friday was 1,959,000, compared to 1,875,000 last Monday.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn steady to 2 cents higher at mostly 1.72-1.87 in East and mostly 1.85-1.92 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans steady at mostly 4.80-4.99¾ in East and mostly 4.84-5.04 in the Piedmont; wheat mostly 2.40-2.58; (new crop wheat 2.18-2.35).

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed today, pausing after its strong advance over the first six sessions of the year.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials edged up 1.12 to 2,007.03 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 7 to 6 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 508 up, 580 down and 467 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 23.31 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Energy stocks were mostly higher, continuing to benefit from the recent rally in world oil prices. Texaco rose 1 to 39; Mobil ⅜ to 41⅞, and Occidental Petroleum ½ to 31.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks slipped .12 to 148.27. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index climbed 1.43 to 285.22.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 3.66 to 2,005.91, closing out the week with a gain of 78.60 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9 to 5 on the NYSE, with 1,041 up, 577 down and 382 unchanged. Big Board volume totaled 193.03 million shares, against 194.52 million in the previous session.

U.S. Gasoline Prices Spurt As OPEC Switches Policy

By DONALD WOUTAT
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

The ultimate success of the price-fixing and production-cutting plan by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries remains far from clear, but it is certainly working at the moment.

A surge of nearly 25 percent in crude oil prices to more than $18 a barrel has shown up almost as quickly at the pumps, where gasoline prices across the United States have spurted about five cents a gallon in the three weeks since OPEC reached its hard-won agreement.

The speedy increase in retail prices has occurred even though virtually all the gasoline currently being sold to motorists was refined from petroleum bought before crude oil prices began their surge.

By contrast, the more gradual decline in retail gasoline prices early last year as the price of crude tumbled was explained at the time as a normal delay while the cheaper crude oil worked its way through the refining system and reached the gasoline pumps.

"Then, they said it was because they still had expensive oil in the system. Now, they've got cheap stuff in the system and they're already raising prices," said Scott T. Jones, vice president at Chase Econometrics and a former oil company economist. "They'll raise prices every chance they get."

Economists say this phenomenon might have been accelerated by the weakened condition of the oil industry, which was severely damaged by last year's price collapse and has a genuine need to widen its slim profit margins.

"I think the market welcomed the opportunity to go up," said James Huccaby, manager for pricing at Chevron USA in San Francisco.

"Certainly from a consumer's standpoint, it sure does appear that we raise prices faster than we lower them. But we've been operating at pretty low margins. Our prices have been barely enough to cover refining costs."

Oil industry officials say that even if the price of crude oil did not climb any further, gasoline prices could be expected to edge up another three cents, for a total increase of eight cents a gallon. That would be in response to the recent $3-a-barrel increase, to $18, for crude oil.

At the wholesale level, Huccaby said, prices have already increased about eight cents a gallon since the OPEC accord. The trade publication Oil Daily said some wholesale gasoline prices last week had reached their highest levels since July.

Similar price increases are being registered in the spot markets for heating oil and other petroleum products.

Consulting economist Irwin M. Seltzer calculates that if the OPEC agreement remains in place all year and drives crude oil prices to the $18- to $20-a-barrel range, it will add half a percentage point to the nation's inflation rate in 1987 and reduce economic growth by about the same amount. Oil's price collapse was the main reason for a drop in the producer price index last year.

"The effect is not good because some of the benefits of the lower prices were just now beginning to materialize," said Seltzer, director of the Harvard University Energy and Environmental Policy Center. "But it's good news if you're a Texan or an Arab."

While the rise in gasoline prices is based on the increase in the cost of petroleum, the spurt in crude oil prices has more to do with the psychology of the oil markets than the economics of it. OPEC's new system of fixed prices does not officially take effect until Feb. 1, and it isn't yet clear whether the cartel's members are cutting production as promised.

Crew Remembered

EastCare had flown 856 trouble-free missions since the emergency helicopter service began operations 21 months ago.

But Jay Golden, chief of the National Transportation Safety Board's Atlanta field office, said after the EastCare crash that the board "is doing a special study on EMS helicopters" because of the number of emergency medical service helicopter crashes.

"The board has recognized that there may be a problem and is looking at it in depth," he said.

Last year, 13 people died in 14 medical helicopter crashes in the nation.

In September of last year, a Bell 222 UT helicopter operated by the Bowman Gray-N.C. Baptist Hospital Medical Center in Winston-Salem crashed into a mointain side en route to a Virginia hospital. The pilot and two flight nurses aboard were killed.

A Duke University Medical Center helicopter, also a Bell 222 UT, went down in a remote area of Durham County in July, injuring one nurse slightly.

The Duke crash was caused by a mechanical failure and the hospital no longer uses the Bell 222 UT.

The EastCare helicopter that crashed — owned by OmniFlight Service of Baltimore, Md., which has an excellent safety record according to the Federal Aviation Administration — was a Bell 206 LongRanger.

"It's kind of a new phanomenon," Golden said. "It's a new industry, it's growing, and it involves aviation safety. It's our mandate to ensure aviation safety."

Waite Returns

Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, a Roman Catholic priest, freed last July 26; and David Jacobsen, former dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut, freed last Nov. 2.

Still held or missing are Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; Thomas Sutherland, acting dean of agriculture at the American University; U.S. Embassy officer William Buckley; Frank Herbert Reed, director of a Lebanese school; Joseph James Cicippio, acting comptroller at the American University; and Edward Austin Tracy, a writer.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, a Shiite group that released Weir, Jenco and Jacobsen and still holds Anderson and Sutherland, said in October 1984 that it killed Buckley. No body was found, but Lebanese and Western sources believe he was killed earlier, possibly after being tortured.

In addition to the Americans, five Frenchmen, two Britons, one dual Irish-British citizen, one Italian and one South Korean are missing in Lebanon.

Waite won freedom for Britons held in Iran and Libya before trying to assist hostages held in Lebanon. He always has stressed that his efforts are humanitarian with no political bias. He also has tried to put the religious element to the fore, giving strong emphasis to tenets of the Islamic faith against taking captives.

Talks Resuming

head start on a defense against missiles.

Kampelman and his negotiating team will be looking for signs of Soviet conciliation on the controversial subject when the talks reopen Thursday.

The U.S. negotiator has urged the Soviets to build on the record of the Reykjavik summit meeting between Reagan and Gorbachev. There, in October, the two leaders tentatively agreed to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe and to negotiate sharp reductions in strategic bombers, submarines and intercontinental ballistic missiles.

However, the talks broke down over Reagan's refusal to curb Star Wars. Since then, the United States has backed away from a commitment to try to ban all ballistic missiles.

Kampelman and Secretary of State George P. Shultz contend keeping some missiles could serve as a hedge against Soviet cheating.

Kampelman said Friday he would not take any new proposals to Geneva, but was awaiting a Soviet response to standing American offers.

"If they should come to believe that every time we come back we are coming with something new, that provides an incentive for them not to respond to us now because we are coming with a concession tomorrow," Kampelman said in a televised news conference carried by Worldnet, the U.S. Information Service satellite broadcast system.

Appearing Sunday on ABC-TV, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said he did not anticipate a quick breakthrough to result from Vorontsov's appointment.

"We haven't anything to indicate that the Soviets are going to be any more tractable or willing to sign deep-reduction agreements that are thoroughly verifiable," Weinberger said.

Back At Work

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today paid his first visit to the Oval Office since surgery a week ago, meeting with Vice President George Bush and White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan.

Reagan, who underwent successful prostate surgery last Monday, has been instructed by his physicians to abstain from strenuous activity for six weeks and to follow a limited work schedule, taking on more activity as his strength increases.

Translation

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet television's main evening news program, "Vremya," has begun offering simultaneous translation in sign language for the deaf and hard-of-hearing.

Translation for the deaf is the latest in a series of recent changes in "Vremya," which is used for major Kremlin announcements and carries the authority of the Soviet government.

New graphics, fast-paced music and live reporting from abroad also have been introduced. The Communist Party daily Pravda said last May the efforts were a qualified success but that foreign and sports coverage still were too dull.

Christening

LONDON (AP) — Two kings and two queens attended the christening of Leonora Knatchbull, great-granddaughter of the late Earl Mountbatten.

King Juan Carlos and Queen Sophia of Spain and the exiled King Constantine and Queen Anne-Marie of Greece attended the ceremony at Romsey Abbey, 80 miles southwest of London. Juan Carlos and Anne-Marie were the god-parents.

Mountbatten, who was murdered by guerrillas in Ireland in 1979, was a cousin of Queen Elizabeth II and uncle of her Greek-descended husband, Prince Philip.

The baby girl, daughter of Lord and Lady Romsey, was christened Leonora Louise Marie Elizabeth Knatchbull at the 30-minute service.

Spokesman

WASHINGTON (AP) — Marlin Fitzwater, the press secretary to Vice President George Bush, will be named the chief spokesman for President Reagan, sources said today.

Fitzwater will succeed Larry Speakes, who is leaving the White House after six years to become a senior communications adviser at Merrill Lynch.

The 44-year-old Fitzwater has served in a wide variety of government public affairs posts. From August 1983 until April 1985, when he moved to Bush's office, Fitzwater was a White House deputy press secretary under Speakes.

He served as a press spokesman for nine years at the Environmental Protection Agency before moving to the Treasury Department as spokesman for then-Secretary Donald T. Regan, who now is White House chief of staff.

Broncos, Giants Head To Super Bowl

Giants Roll By Redskins, 17-0

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Five minutes after earning their first Super Bowl trip, the New York Giants ended the celebration.

No more patting one another on the back, no more dancing on the field, no more scaling walls to kiss wives in the stands.

The road to the Super Bowl had past through Giants Stadium and all that now stands in the way of the Giants and the NFL title is the Denver Broncos, and Coach Bill Parcells' next dynasty is well aware of that.

The Giants took the last step to Pasadena, Calif. on Sunday by riding a blustery wind, a frightening defense and opportunistic offense to post a 17-0 victory over the Washington Redskins in the NFC title game.

"It's great to be playing in the Super Bowl," NFL MVP Lawrence Taylor said. "However, it's one thing to play in it and another thing to win it. It's not over yet."

The Super Bowl will be the Giants' second meeting with the Broncos this season and most were not too thrilled about the prospect of seeing quarterback John Elway and company again despite a 19-16 victory over Denver on Nov. 23.

"They took it to us the first time," Giants center Bart Oates said. "We were lucky to win. They were ready for everything we did.

"We managed three field goals and George Martin ran one back (for a TD)," he added. "I began to feel hopeless out there."

That hopeless feeling was something the Redskins had against the Giants in this third confrontation between the NFC East rivals, and the tide in this one may have changed as early as the opening coin flip.

The Giants won the toss and decided to put a 32 mph wind at their backs.

"That's the toughest wind I've played in since I've been here," said Parcells, who decided about 7:15 a.m. to take the wind if the Giants won the toss.

The Redskins never got out of trouble in the first quarter and the Giants got their first two possessions in Washington territory, converting them into scores as they defeated the Skins for the third time this season.

The first points came on a 47-yard field goal by Raul Allegre and an 11-yard touchdown pass from Phil Simms to Lionel Manuel made it 10-0 with 5:32 left in the period.

It was Manuel's first reception since being injured in the third game of the season and came after Washington turned down a holding penalty, giving New York a second-chance to convert a third-down play, which Simms did with a 25-yard pass to Manuel.

"The wind took us out of the game," Washington guard R.C. Theilemann said.

The Giants defense also had a little to do with Washington's futility on offense, although the Skins helped out by dropping a number of Jay Schroeder passes.

Washington gained 190 yards on offense and was held to just 40 yards rushing. Schroeder, who suffered a mild concussion late in the game, completed 20 of 50 passes for 195 yards. The most telling statistic was third and fourth down conversions. The Redskins were 0-for-14 on third down and 0-for-4 on fourth down.

"It's frightening the way we are playing on defense," Giants All Pro defensive end Leonard Marshall said. "What have we've given up, three points in the last two games? I never expected we would play this well."

The Giants offense has been adequate. It gained just 199 yards with Simms completing seven of 14 passes for 90 yards, and Joe Morris gaining 87 yards on 29 carries.

Morris scored the Giants' final touchdown midway through the second quarter on a 1-yard run that capped a 49-yard drive set up when the Redskins botched a field goal attempt on a bad snap by center Jeff Bostic.

Forced to play catchup in the second half, the Redskins ran the ball only once, throwing 34 passes. However, the closest they got to the Giants' end zone was the 23-yard line with 2:00 to play.

By then, the 76,633 fans in Giants Stadium had already started tearing up their programs and giving the Giants an early ticker-tape parade. When the final gun sounded, Pepper Johnson and William Roberts started

Elway, Broncos Go To Pasadena

CLEVELAND (AP) — John Elway is finally going to the Rose Bowl.

"We're going to Pasadena, the place I was never able to get to in college," the former Stanford quarterback said Sunday after he and the Denver Broncos became the AFC champions by beating the favored Cleveland Browns 23-20 in overtime. "I didn't think this would ever happen."

The comeback victory sent the Broncos into the Super Bowl Jan. 25 at the Rose Bowl against the New York Giants, who beat the Washington Redskins 17-0 Sunday for the NFC title.

It also buried the last of any doubts about Elway's talent or desire.

The 26-year-old quarterback ran for 20 yards, offsetting an 8-yard sack, and passed for 78 on a 98-yard drive that tied the game with 37 seconds remaining in regulation.

"John got in the huddle, looked at us and stared," receiver Steve Watson said. "He was all cool, as cool as he could be. He smiled at us and said, 'Fellas, if we work hard, good things are going to happen.' And that's what happened."

In overtime, Elway hit two long passes on the Broncos' first possession to set up Rich Karlis' game-winning, 33-yard field goal.

"There are still going to be critics, but I just have to continue to do the best that I can," said Elway, who was unable to lead his college team to the Rose Bowl and then lost in both of his NFL playoff appearances before this year.

"I was expected to walk on water when I came into this league," Elway said. "The more I wanted it, the harder I tried and the worse it seemed to get."

His work this season, however, earned Elway a trip to the Pro Bowl — and, now, the Super Bowl. Denver, which went 11-5 to win the AFC West this year, went to the Super Bowl without Elway nine years ago and lost to Dallas 27-10.

Elway completed 22 of 38 passes for 244 yards on Sunday, and he scrambled four times for another 56 yards.

"It really hurts him to hear the criticism," Denver Coach Dan Reeves said. "I could see the determination in his eyes today like I've never seen before. I think he proved to a lot of people that he's come a long way."

Denver trailed 20-13 after Cleveland scored on a 48-yard pass from Bernie Kosar to Brian Brennan with 5:43 to play. The ensuing kickoff was mishandled by Ken Bell and left the Broncos at their own 2-yard line.

"After the game last week, I knew anything was possible," Cleveland cornerback Hanford Dixon said of the Browns' 23-20 double-overtime victory over the New York Jets. "We still had to go out and stop them, which we didn't."

With the game on the line, Elway took control, shredding the Browns' proud "Dawg" defense and quieting the sellout crowd of 79,915.

"We knew Elway was a good quarterback," said Dixon, who nicknamed Cleveland's secondary the "Dawgs" two years ago. "He was able to break out of the containment a lot and do a lot of things a lot of other quarterbacks are not able to do."

Sammy Winder, who rushed for 83 yards on 26 carries, got the Broncos out of the hole with a 5-yard reception and runs of 3 and 2 yards for a critical first down.

Elway, ignoring the pain of an ankle sprained in last week's 22-17 playoff victory over New England, then scrambled and passed Denver the rest of the way, keeping the drive alive with a 20-yard pass to Mark Jackson on third-and-18 and finishing it with a 5-yard bullet to Jackson with 37 seconds left.

"We didn't think we'd have to go into overtime, but we've been there before and we had the opportunities," said Kosar, whose two first-half interceptions spoiled an otherwise good day. He finished with 18 completions in 32 attempts for 259 yards and two touchdowns.

The Denver defense shut the Browns down on their one overtime possession.

The Broncos then took a punt at their own 25 and needed nine plays to win it. Elway threw 22 yards to Orson Mobley and 28 to Watson to move the ball into range for Karlis.

Elway scrambled away from the pass rush before completing the pass to Watson, which took the ball to the Cleveland 22.

"We were in a zone coverage then," Dixon said. "I broke up to cover the run and Felix Wright was coming over the top (to cover Watson)."

Wright got there too late, however, and four plays later, Karlis ended it with a kick that barely got inside the left upright.

It was the Broncos' first playoff victory ever on the road after three losses. They had not played in an overtime game previously this season, while Cleveland had won three overtime games including the playoff victory over the Jets.

"This football team is not finished," Schottenheimer said. "We will be back."

The Browns' 12 regular-season victories and one playoff win gave them the first 13-victory season in their history. They have never been to a Super Bowl and haven't won an NFL championship since 1964.

Lakers Ease Past Spurs

By BILL BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The Los Angeles Lakers, after losing two consecutive games for the first time this season, seemed poised for an easy victory with the San Antonio Spurs providing the competition.

But the Lakers, who have won games by 38, 37 and 36 points since Jan. 1, didn't clinch their 111-109 home victory Sunday night until the final buzzer, when Alvin Robertson missed a three-pointer from 28 feet.

The Spurs, who have a 9-26 record, second-worst in the NBA, tried to get tough against the Lakers, who still have the league's best record of 27-8 despite losses last week at Utah and Golden State.

"Every year teams realize they can't run with us so they try to beat us up and sometimes it works," Lakers guard Michael Cooper said. "Utah and Golden State did it and San Antonio tried it. We know it's coming and we have to adjust to it."

"San Antonio defensed us very well," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "They gave a lot of weakside help and double-teamed and jammed us when the ball was inside."

Nevertheless, James Worthy hit 12 of 15 shots and scored 30 points for the Lakers, while Magic Johnson added 26.

Elsewhere in the NBA, Seattle defeated Utah 127-111 and Portland beat Milwaukee 103-91.

Guards Jon Sundvold and Robertson scored 20 points each for the Spurs, while David Greenwood and rookie Walter Berry had 17 apiece.

The Lakers led 101-92 before the Spurs closed the gap to 104-103 on a layup by Berry with 3:08 to play. Los Angeles appeared to regain control on four free throws by Johnson and a basket by Byron Scott for a 110-105 edge with 2:02 left.

But San Antonio stayed close as a jumper by Robertson and a layup by Mychal Thompson with 12 seconds remaining made it 110-109 before Cooper hit one of two free throws with five seconds left. After a timeout, Robertson missed the last-gasp attempt.

"We intended to go to Walter and let him drive or to Sundvold for a three-point shot, but we couldn't get the ball into either of them," Spurs Coach Bob Weiss said. "Alvin threw up the shot too fast."

"I had the ball and let it fly out of panic," Robertson said.

"It's very disappointing to lose when you have a shot like this at the Lakers," Weiss added. "You want to take it home with you. We've been playing well and losing like this often."

Berry now has scored a total of 37 points in his last two games after he managed just 44 points in his first 14 appearances this season, most of them at Portland.

But despite hitting six of seven shots from the field, he missed two free throws with 47 seconds left that might have meant the difference against Los Angeles.

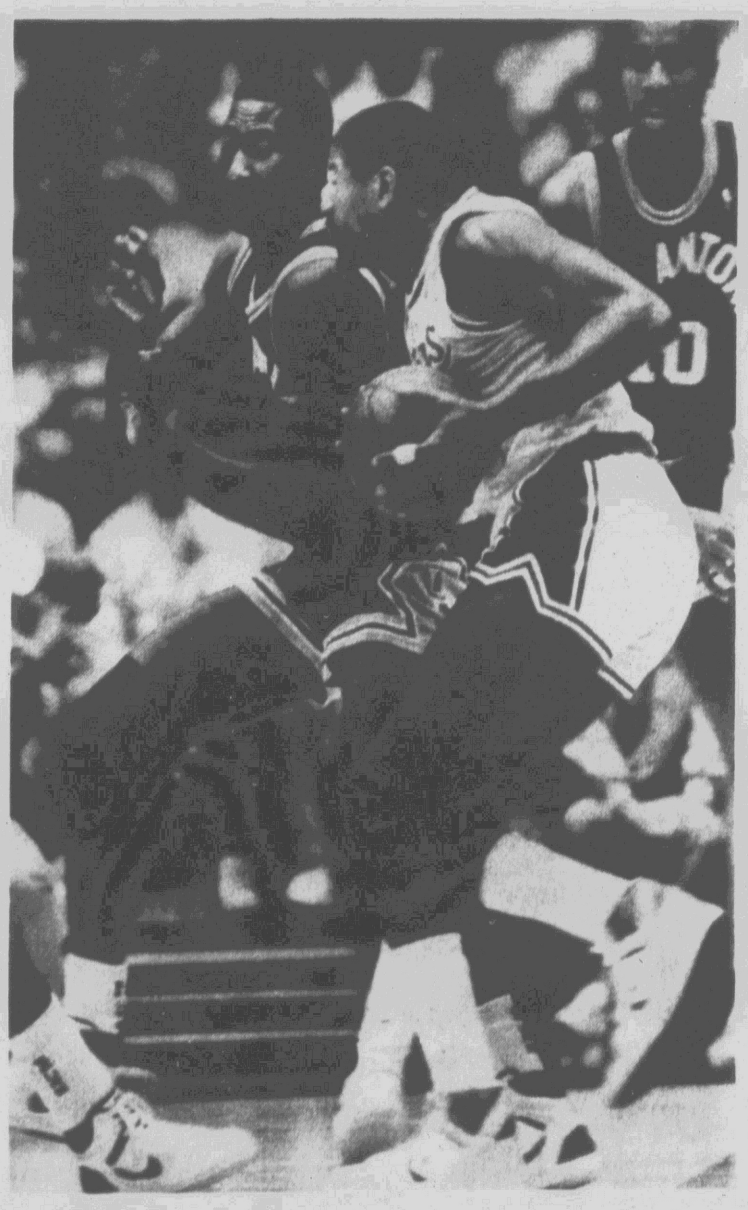

"I felt like I had a good game," Berry said. "I came in and got a lot of offensive rebounds, but the free throws I missed near the end hurt us."

Sonics 127, Jazz 111

Tom Chambers and Dale Ellis scored 17 points each in the first half as Seattle led by as many as 26 points en route to victory over Utah.

Chambers finished with 31 points, Ellis with 30 and Xavier McDaniel with 24 for the SuperSonics, who outscored the Jazz 37-12 during one stretch of the first and second quarters for a 55-29 advantage. After Seattle led 65-46 at halftime, McDaniel scored 12 points in the third period as the Sonics extended their margin to 102-78.

Karl Malone finished with 23 points for the Jazz, while John Stockton added 21.

Broncos Answer Critics

CLEVELAND (AP) — They said the Denver Broncos have neither the character nor the talent to drive 98 yards when the pressure is on. They said John Elway is immature and erratic and will never realize his huge potential. They said Rich Karlis tends to choke on clutch field goals.

Now the critics, having digested those pungent remarks, are calling the Broncos the AFC champions.

A dramatic, come-from-behind 23-20 overtime victory over the Cleveland Browns on Sunday propelled the Broncos into the Super Bowl against the New York Giants on Jan. 25. The Giants defeated Washington 17-0 in the NFC title game Sunday.

"There's been a lot of bunk about how we played down the stretch (losing four of the last eight regular-season games), and I think a lot of people questioned our character," linebacker Tom Jackson said.

"Some people in the media said we had no chance. The Browns didn't show any respect for us. They ran off at the mouth all week. But it all narrows down to this: They go home and we go to Pasadena. We are a team to be reckoned with."

More than an hour after the game ended, Coach Dan Reeves, who has been to five Super Bowls as a player or assistant coach and has considerable "big game" experience, was pinching himself.

"I'm still kind of numb," he said. "My heart is beating pretty fast. This team gave its all, and I'm so proud of every player.

"I can't tell you how it feels to be going to the Super Bowl. I wish everybody had the opportunity to have this kind of thrill."

Elway drove the Broncos 98 yards for a tying touchdown in the final 5:32 of regulation. In overtime, after the Broncos defense stopped Cleveland's opening drive, Elway moved his team into position for Karlis' winning 33-yard field goal.

"I've been in a lot of close games, but when you drive 98 yards to tie it up at the end — well, that's an unbelievable feeling," Reeves said. "Honestly, I felt like we had a chance. Anytime you have a John Elway as your quarterback you have a chance. I could see the determination in his eyes. I can't say enough about the poise he showed on that drive.

"This is the biggest thrill of my coaching career. And the way we did it was awesome. It sounds almost like a Hollywood script."

Elway, who completed 22 of 38 passes for 244 yards, found the long drive at the end something to remember.

"That drive probably is something I might not be able to do again," Elway said. "I'm going to have to sit down and think about it. The day before a big game, you dream of doing things like that."

Although Reeves never lost faith, he was discouraged several times.

"We felt it was important to jump on top early," he said. "But we didn't get it done. We got some key turnovers, but we weren't able to capitalize on them, which usually comes back to haunt you. But we came back at the end."

Karlis was another hero. Villified during a poor 1985 season and haunted by hitting uprights in consecutive games in 1984, he has had a solid 1986. His three field goals on Sunday extended his consecutive string to nine.

"I knew it was going to come down to Mark (Cleveland kicker Mark Moseley) or me," Karlis said. "It was inevitable."

As he went on the field, his bare foot beginning to turn blue in the cold of the wind-swept stadium, Karlis' teammates told him, "Just like practice, just like practice."

UNLV Stays #1 In AP Top 20

By JIM O'CONNELL
AP Sports Writer

Nevada-Las Vegas remained atop The Associated Press' college basketball poll for the sixth straight week today as the top seven teams were unchanged from last week.

Iowa, 15-0, remained second after receiving five first-place votes and 1,172 points, 20 more than North Carolina, 13-1, which received two first-place votes.

Iowa, one of four Big Ten teams to rank in the Top Eight, registered conference victories over Wisconsin, 78-63, and Minnesota, 78-57, last week, while North Carolina won its two Atlantic Coast Conference games, 98-65 over Maryland, and 85-77 over then-No. 17 Duke.

Indiana, Syracuse, Purdue and DePaul maintained the fourth through seventh places, respectively.

Indiana, 11-1, had 992 points, nine more than Syracuse, 14-0. Purdue, 12-1, received 939 points, followed by DePaul, 12-0, with 870.

Illinois, a member of the Big Ten along with Indiana and Purdue, jumped from 12th to eighth with 747 points. The Fighting Illini, 12-2, had three conference victories last week, 79-72 over Michigan State, 68-66 over Wisconsin and 76-69 over Northwestern.

Georgetown, 11-1, jumped from 16th to ninth with 689 points following Big East Conference victories over then-No. 10 St. John's, 60-46, and then-No. 14 Pittsburgh, 82-70.

Auburn, 9-2, rounded out the Top Ten with 620 points, 35 more than No. 11 Temple.

Following Temple in the Second Ten were: Clemson, St. John's, Duke, Alabama, Oklahoma, North Carolina State, Pittsburgh, Navy and Kansas.

Last week's Second Ten was: Oklahoma, Illinois, Auburn, Pittsburgh, Navy, Georgetown, Duke, North Carolina State, Kansas and Clemson.

Kentucky, ranked ninth last week, was the only team to fall from the rankings, being replaced by fellow Southeastern Conference member Alabama.

Alabama, 10-2, was ranked in the preseason poll and for the first two weeks in the regular season, eighth and 18th, before falling. The Crimson Tide has won seven consecutive games since a 76-67 loss to Duke.

Clemson, the lowest ranked of the five undefeated Division I teams, jumped from 20th to 12th with victories over then-No. 18 North Carolina State, 73-69, and Wake Forest, 91-88 in overtime. Like the Big Ten, the ACC has four members in the Top Twenty — North Carolina, Duke, North Carolina State and Clemson.

PCC Wins Tourney

Tony Clemons hit three of four free throws over the final two minutes to lead Pitt Community College over Farmville, 58-55, in the finals of the Pitt Community College Invitational Basketball Tournament Sunday.

Pitt trailed 26-25 at the half, but took the lead for good with 17:20 left on a basket by Clemons, who was the MVP of the tournament. Pitt led the rest of the way and used clutch free throw shooting over the final two minutes by Clemons and Joel Isley, who canned two of three free throws during that span.

Jarvis Wiggins and Tyrone Andrews led Pitt with 15 points each. Clemons added 10 more. Kenneth Gorham led Farmville with 19 points.

It was the second time these two teams had met in the double elimination tournament, with Pitt taking a 62-58 win in an game played earlier Sunday. Farmville advanced to face Pitt again after beating 427 Auto in the consolation round, 68-59.

In the earlier game, Pitt again used clutch free throw shooting in the final two minutes by Clemons (4-4) and Isley (3-4).

Wiggins had 27 points to lead Pitt in the first game against Farmville while Mike Baker had 22 for Farmville.

Gymnastics

MOREHEAD CITY — The Greenville Gymnastics club placed well in Class IV qualifying sectional held this weekend.

In the seven to eight age group, Ginger Gilbert was first in vaulting with an 8.0; first in the uneven bars with a 4.55 and third in the all Around with a 23.15.

The top finisher in the nine to 11 age group was Amy Rose. She took second on the balance beam with a 7.70; fourth in vaulting with an 8.10; fifth on the uneven bars with a 6.55 and eighth on the floor exercise with an 8.90. That gave her third in the all-around with a total of 31.25.

Laura Gilbert also qualified in that age group, taking second in vaulting with an 8.25; seventh on the uneven bars with a 6.15 and eighth in the all-around with a 29.55.

Susu Hunnicutt was third on the floor exercise with an 9.10. Sara Stancill was fourth on the uneven bars with a 6.6 and she had 28.45 on the all-around to qualify for the state meet. Sara Mohror had 27.70 in the all-around to qualifty for the state meet.

The leader in the 12-14 age group was Lori Evans. She took first in the all-around with a 29.70; second on the floor exercise with a 9.25 and fourth on the uneven bars with a 5.80.

Wendy Dixon was second in the all-around with a 29.65; first on the floor exercise with a 9.6; third on the uneven bars with a 5.85 and fifth on the balance beam with a 6.55.

Christy Thompson was fourth in the all-around with a 29.20; second in vaulting with an 8.10 and sixth on the uneven bars with a 5.45. Anne Taylor was first on the uneven bars with a 6.15; third in vaulting with a 7.95 and tied in the floor exercise for sixth with an 8.8. She tied Lee Goldfarb in that event.

Terri Davis took sixth in the balance beam with a 6.40.

dancing on the field, and Jim Burt scaled a 6-foot wall to kiss his wife who was seated in the stands.

It was business as usual when they reached the locker room.

"One of the reasons you don't hear all the shouts and boyish laughter is because we realize we've come this far," Oates said. "We are to close to what we want to accomplish, but we realize we haven't accomplished what we set out to accomplish. That's a Super Bowl victory, not a Super Bowl appearance."

Turner Will Transfer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Former South Carolina quarterback Pat Turner, who is transferring to Georgia Tech, says an injury in spring practice didn't cost him a shot at the starting job.

Turner was injured during spring practice when the Gamecocks were putting in their new run-and-shoot offense. Many believed that hurt him in his battle with fellow redshirt freshman Todd Ellis for the top job, but Turner said the injury didn't hurt "my chances that much."

"I felt I came back and played very well in the fall," he said. "I did miss a couple of weeks in the spring with a pulled hamstring, but I was able to learn it (the new offense) pretty well from the playbook."

Turner, who said Friday he'll enroll at Georgia Tech in the spring quarter, said "things just didn't work out" at South Carolina.

"But I still have a lot of friends there who will always be my friends," he said. "I'll be interested in following their program, and I'll be pulling for them to do well."

Turner, a 6-foot-3, 195-pound redshirt freshman who backed up Ellis this past season, announced in December he was transferring. Since then, he apparently narrowed his choices to Auburn, Florida, East Carolina and Georgia Tech.

"After listening to several schools, talking to several coaches and looking at the situation from the academic and athletic standpoints, I just felt Georgia Tech was the place for me," Turner said.

Turner said he had been leaning toward Georgia Tech for some time. But he said when Coach Bill Curry left for Alabama he had some second thoughts.

"I had talked at some length with Coach Curry, and I was very high on Georgia Tech," he said.

Cleveland took a 7-0 lead on Kosar's 6-yard pass to Herman Fontenot in the first quarter, played in 30-degree weather with occasional snow flurries and a 14 mph wind blowing in off Lake Erie.

A 19-yard Karlis field goal and Gerald Willhite's 1-yard touchdown run — both set up by Cleveland turnovers — gave Denver a 10-7 lead, but Cleveland's Mark Moseley tied it with a 29-yard field goal just before the half.

After field goals by Moseley and Karlis extended the tie to 13-13, Brennan caught a Kosar bomb at the 18-yard line and ran past fallen safety Dennis Smith for a 48-yard touchdown with 5:43 left in regulation.

"It looked bleak when they got the long touchdown pass. But whenever you have John Elway as your quarterback, you have a chance," Reeves said. "I'll tell you, you think about these things as a coach and a player all your life, and then it goes through the uprights and you know you're going to the Super Bowl. Well, it's an unbelievable feeling."

NBA Bound?

David Robinson, Navy's 7-1 center, talks to reporters Sunday about the decision by the Navy that he will serve in the active Naval Reserve for two years full time and four years restricted duty when he graduates from the Naval Academy in May. The decision could allow Robinson to play in the NBA as early as next season. (AP Laserphoto)

Robinson Pondering Options

ANNAPOLIS Md. (AP) — David Robinson's future in the NBA is assured. The question remaining is how soon he'll play.

The 7-foot-1 U.S. Naval Academy center could be a part-time pro player as early as next season, provided the team likely to pick him No. 1 in the NBA lottery can live with such an arrangement.

While leaving an option open to pursue an amateur career through the 1988 Olympics, Robinson indicated Sunday he is leaning toward the NBA if something can be worked out.

Robinson was once faced with five years of active duty after graduation in May, an obligation that would have severely hampered his pro aspirations.

But Secretary of the Navy John Lehman ruled Friday that Robinson, too tall for unrestricted line duty on ships, submarines or in the air, would be commissioned as a restricted line or staff corps ensign in the U.S. Navy Reserve.

Two years of active duty would be followed by four years in a "drilling reserve status," when Robinson would be required to spend only one weekend a month and two weeks a year on active duty.

Even during the first two years, however, Robinson would be free to play basketball provided he gets permission from his commanding officer and it doesn't interfere with his military duties.

It was possible, Robinson speculated, that the team drafting him would overlook limited contributions of the first two years, "while priming me for when I get out."

A Navy source said restricted line officers usually serve at Pensacola, Fla., Norfolk, Va., Washington, D.C., Jacksonville, Fla., Newport News, Va., Seattle, San Francisco, or San Diego.

Robinson would be given even more leeway should he go the amateur route, since he would be excused from military duties to try out for and play in the upcoming Pan-American Games and next year's Olympics. "I'm going to look at both options — it really depends on which drives me more," said Robinson, who also must decide what type of duty he will request as a reserve.

"Right now," he said, "it's between supply and the civil engineering corps. Before the (NBA) draft, I'd like to have a rough idea of what I want to do and a good idea of places I might go."

At a news conference Sunday, Robinson's initial reaction to Lehman's ruling was: "Two years are better than five."

The decision paralleled another which allowed former Navy football star Napoleon McCallum to play with the NFL Los Angeles Raiders while on duty.

"I think they were case-by-case, one-time decisions," Navy Athletic Director Bo Coppedge said. "I don't think anyone has declared any type of policy."

Robinson, apparently upset by the delay in the announcement concerning his future, scored only eight points at the 15-ranked Middies were upset 64-62 by Richmond Thursday night. That was Robinson's lowest output since his freshman year, snapping a streak of 76 games in double figures.

But he bounced back with 45 points Saturday night, tying an Academy record as Navy beat James Madison 95-70. He also grabbed 21 rebounds.

Through 11 games, Robinson is averaging 27.8 points and 12.9 rebounds, and has blocked 56 shots.

Pam Pack Tops Farmville, 48-44

FARMVILLE — Washington High School slipped past hosting Farmville Central in a pair of nonconference basketball games Saturday night.

Washington won the boys' game, 48-44, and took a 40-33 win in the girls' outing.

The Jaguars, who slipped to 9-2 with the loss, moved out to a 14-8 lead in the opening quarter. But in the second frame, Washington began to come back, outhitting the Jaguars, 14-12. Farmville still led, however, at the half, 26-22.

In the third period, Washington outhit Farmville, 20-14, and pushed out into a 42-40 lead. The Pam Pack then held off Farmville in a slow-paced final period, 6-4, to post the win.

Frankie Warren led Washington with 21 points while Frans Holscher added 10. James Reid led Farmville with 19.

Washington is now 2-9 on the year.

In the girls' game, Washington built up a 12-6 lead in the first quarter and increased that to 21-12 by halftime. In the third quarter, Farmville rallied, however, 14-8, and cut the lead to 29-26. But Washington held them off in the final quarter, 11-7, to get the win.

Tonya Holley led Washington with 14 while Angie Holley hit 12. Liesa Lang led Farmville with 19.

Both girls teams are now 6-3 on the year.

Farmville plays host to South Lenoir on Tuesday while Washington visits North Lenoir, both in conference action.

It was to be a showplace for the passing of Heisman Trophy winner Vinnie Testaverde. Instead, it was defensive back K.C. Clark of San Jose State who wound up with the honors and the passes.

Clark intercepted three passes, including two thrown by Testaverde, the University of Miami quarterback, to lead the West to a 24-17 victory in the Japan Bowl and end the college football season.

"It seemed like I was just in the right place at the right time," said Clark, named the outstanding defender in the game played in Yokohama.

His first theft came on the game's opening play against Testaverde. And his last interception came in the East end zone on a pass by Alabama's Mike Shula, followed by a dizzying runback to set up the West's winning touchdown.

The East, leading 17-16, was threatening to score an insurance touchdown when Clark grabbed the ball. He weaved all over the field, gaining 34 yards, and then lateraled to Mark Moore of Oklahoma State, who ran another 18 yards to the East 48.

Three plays later, quarterback Mark Stevens of UCLA hit Stephen Baker of Fresno State in the end zone with a 36-yard pass with two minutes left to play to win the game.

West Coach Jim Sweeney of Fresno State said his first reaction was to hope Clark would stay in the end zone with the intercepted pass. "But after he started running it out, we said he was a genius."

In other bowl games played over the weekend, the West proved to be the best.

At the Hula Bowl in Honolulu, the West downed the East 16-14, while the West defeated the East 24-21 in the East-West Shrine game Palo Alto, Calif.

Testaverde, the most effective passer of the 1986 regular season, completed 10 of 18 passes for 145 yards, and Shula hit on 5 of 14 for 89 yards.

But Stevens ended the day with 17 completions in 19 tries for 225 yards and two touchdowns. He also passed to Robert Smith of Iowa for a two-point conversion after the last touchdown.

'MacGyver' Role Gives Star Chance At Childhood Dream

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — If fans watching the New York Rangers hockey team warmups didn't notice No. 11, that was a compliment to Richard Dean Anderson.

"There's nothing more embarrassing to me than some celebrity type to get into a professional sports arena with some team and essentially get in the way. From the word go, I did not want to be in the way," said Anderson, star of the television series "MacGyver."

Anderson, a Minnesotan, once aspired to play in the National Hockey League but had the dream shattered by a series of injuries, including two broken arms, incurred playing on his varsity team.

Today, instead, he is the hero of the ABC series, now in its second season.

The Rangers, far from snubbing him as a celebrity interloper, turned out to be fans of "MacGyver" and jokingly asked him to fix their equipment. His TV character uses scientific knowledge and ordinary objects to invent solutions to international predicaments from acid leaks to kidnappings.

When Anderson was offered the chance at a promotional appearance with the Rangers during warmups for a game with the Hartford Whalers last month, he didn't hesitate.

"I told them that I'd give them my first born AND an arm and a leg if that's what they wanted, I'd give anything to do that," he said in the interview room after the workout, his face still dripping sweat.

"Seriously, I was a nervous wreck out this varsity team.

"Seriously, I was a nervous wreck out there. This is kind of a culmination of a little boy's dream come true — I had all kinds of aspirations and dreams of being a professional hockey player when I was growing up."

Despite his success as "MacGyver," Athere's an element of dancer's improvisation. There are set plays, individual prowess is needed and obviously teamwork. It's a complete support system, it's like a little family, a very private family.

"I took a friend of mine to a hockey game one time and a fight eventually broke out and she asked me why they were fighting. I tried to explain and stopped in midsentence and realized there was no way to explain all the little things that take place in the course of the game."

He said he has thrown off the gloves himself, in a charity game.

High Definition TV Has Test Run

By DEBORAH MESCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The standing-room-only audience whispered words like "remarkable" and "amazing" as federal regulators, officials and members of the public glimpsed the future in the first over-the-air broadcast of high definition television.

During the demonstration last week at Federal Communications Commission headquarters here, displayed on a 50-inch TV screen, scenes from the 1984 summer Olympic Games were clear and crisp, the colors bold and vibrant. Alongside on another large-screen TV set, the same picture from a regular broadcast signal was fuzzy and the colors dull in comparison.

The demonstration was the latest move in a campaign by TV broadcasters to protect unused UHF frequency space that currently is reserved for television broadcasts but that the FCC is considering signing over to other uses, including mobile radio operators.

"This spectrum space should be preserved for TV broadcasters," said John Abel, NAB executive vice president. "If this doesn't happen, we'll be shut out forever from being able to broadcast high definition TV."

The FCC is expected to act within the next several months on a proposal to assign UHF spectrum space to two-way mobile radios used by police and fire departments and delivery services in eight cities where space is running out.

"We've got to listen to them (TV broadcasters). We've got to look at the future and see what's coming down the line. But I don't think this is today's decision. It's tomorrow's," said James C. McKinney, chief of the FCC's mass media bureau.

McKinney noted that the level of high definition technology today cannot deliver a signal that could be picked up by conventional TV sets, unlike compatibility between black-and-white and color broadcasts.

"They've got to have compatibility first before they can hope to make a strong case for the spectrum," McKinney said.

Broadcasters say they have no doubt high definition TV, called HDTV, will be well received by the American public, despite the initial high cost of special TV sets to scan 1,125 horizontal lines — nearly twice the number than make up the picture on a conventional set.

"Every indication is that the public is interested in a high quality signal, whether it is sound or video," Abel said, citing the growth in sales of compact disc players, stereo television sets and high quality VCRs.

The technology could be available commercially from Japanese manufacturers within two years for video cassette recorders and a short time later for cable TV. And industry experts expect the price of receivers, initially expected to cost $2,000 to $3,000, to drop as demand grows.

Broadcast capability compatible with conventional TV sets will take longer to develop, but broadcasters say the key to over-the-air delivery will not be technology but the availability of spectrum space. High definition requires more space on the spectrum than TV signals now use, and broadcasters say they will need the extra space on the UHF band.

"It's highly unlikely, probably impossible, to cram enough information into the current six megahertz channel to broadcast high definition," which requires eight megahertz, Abel said.

Meanwhile, operators of two-way mobile radios are quickly using up their available frequencies in some areas of the country, which prompted the FCC to consider the spectrum sharing proposal.

"We're not out of channels yet, but by the time the channels could be assigned the need would be there," said Travis Marshall, a senior vice president at Motorola Inc., a leading mobile-radio equipment supplier.

The number of mobile radios is estimated to be nearly 10 million nationwide and growing by 8 percent to 10 percent a year, Marshall said.

John D. Lane, a Washington lawyer who represents public safety agencies, makes the mobile-radio operators' case for priority use of the airwaves, saying, "The Communications Act has a priority for public safety."

"Public safety comes first, safety of lives and property. The commission has a duty to take care of public safety first, and not new television delivery services," he said.

Ritter Scheduled In New ABC Series

By MORGAN GENDEL
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Here are "three" that definitely sound like good "company": actor John Ritter, formerly of "Three's Company," and "L.A. Law" creators Steven Bochco and Terry Louise Fisher are teaming up on a new half-hour series for ABC.

Ritter will star and Bochco and Fisher will write the first three episodes, ABC Entertainment President Brandon Stoddard told TV reporters last week.

Sources say the show will be an "unconventional" comedy, perhaps bordering on the dramatic. Details are sketchy since the pilot episode has yet to be scripted.

Both Ritter and Bochco have deals at 20th Century Fox Television — Bochco is exclusive to that studio for the next few years — but they got together through unofficial channels. The pair reportedly met last June while vacationing separately with their respective families in Hawaii.

Why would Bochco, who rose to prominence at NBC with "Hill Street Blues," jump across the dial to third-ranked ABC?

The answer is that ABC has a long-standing commitment to put on another series by Ritter, who helped deliver the network a hit with "Three's Company." So any writer that becomes associated with him right now is also working for ABC.

Bochco himself had the same kind of deal at NBC, which is why "L.A. Law" ended up there after Bochco and "Hill Street's" producer, MTM Enterprises, parted company.

Bridal Fair

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Syndicated talk show host Oprah Winfrey gave a speech at a bridal fair but said she didn't know why she had been invited.

"I have been told to talk about marriage, but I'm thinking about how to get married myself. I may ask these women for some pointers," she said.

She said she accepted the invitation Saturday to thank the city for making her show a hit. "Some people visit the cities where their shows aren't doing well," she said. "That's negative. I visit where we are doing well to thank those cities."

"The Oprah Winfrey Show" has grown to rival Phil Donahue's talk show in less than a year. "I knew people would like it because it's what I would watch if I were out there watching TV," she said.

Secret Surgery

The President's recent surgery was widely and accurately reported. But the health of some past U.S. Presidents has been all but top secret. Grover Cleveland's surgery for cancer of the mouth is a case in point. His operation was performed on a yacht cruising New York's East River. Even the Vice President was kept in the dark. Cleveland's speedy recovery made it easy to keep the secret. Only after Cleveland's death, years later, was the operation reported.

DO YOU KNOW — In 1985, President Reagan underwent surgery for what type of cancer?

FRIDAY'S ANSWER — The Sequoia National Forest is located in California.

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY Jan. 13

GENERAL TENDENCIES: There can be some muddled thinking about matters associated with home, family, or property interests today. It would be wise to check all the facts and figures.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): A family tie may make a request that needs study before accepting it. Organize some long-term enterprise.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Don't permit some out-of-town matter to disturb your routines. Use your best judgment and avoid going with hunches.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Give financial affairs your full attention. Await some better time before taking on any new interests.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Don't show that you feel slighted by the actions of an ouside partner or you can lose out.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): You could be misinformed about a work intrest which could bring you much loss, so be careful.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Handle correspondence that is important, but leave the rest for tomorrow. Avoid one who is selfish.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Plan how to add to business affairs and gain more income in the near future. Study home afairs and improve them.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Make wise plans for gaining your cherished desires. A letter you receive from afar needs much thought.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Be sure to study your personal wishes well and plan how to gain greater happiness. Don't overspend.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): A good friend can show you how to live a more purposeful and happy life. Try to be more altruistic.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Don't get so bogged down with work details that you fail to handle the more important issues.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Adopt a new attitude in your dealings with others. Cut down on friends who waste your time.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be attractive and magnetic but will also work unusual angles to gain his, or her, own way. Give a good business course in school that will help your progeny to be more practical. Teach that whatever is honestly earned can be retained and enjoyed.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQJ63 ♡K1052 ◇9 ♣874
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Since partner has made a reverse bid, you are in a forcing auction. In the modern style, the only regressive bid you have available is two no trump and, in some sequences, a rebid of your own suit—any other bid is game-forcing. Therefore, you need do no more than bid three hearts now, setting the suit. If partner simply goes on to game, you are just worth a cue-bid of four spades to alert him to the possibility of a slam.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠73 ♡A109 ◇AQ9852 ♣72
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	1 ♡	2 ◇	Pass
3 ♣	3 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—If you could be sure that you had a second heart stopper or that one of your suits would run, you might venture three no trump. Here, however, you cannot be certain your side has a game, so take the sure profit by punishing the opponents. Double.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ1063 ◇J982 ♣KQ7
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ◇	1 ♡	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Obviously, the choice lies between an immediate cue-bid or some spade bid. We prefer an immediate jump to two spades. The trouble with a cue-bid now is you might not have enough room later to convince partner of the quality of your spades. You can always cue-bid hearts later.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠93 ♡AJ7 ◇82 ♣AKJ1063
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	2 ♣	Pass	3 ♣
Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—There is a strong temptation to bid three no trump. However, even if that is the right final contract, it is by no means sure that you should declare it. We would much prefer a bid of three hearts, advising partner of our intentions and allowing him to convert to three no trump if he has both unbid suits stopped.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ52 ♡KJ6 ◇A83 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—The reply depends on your methods. If you play limit raises, your hand is worth four spades and no more. If you play forcing jump raises, you could be in slam territory, and the way to investigate is with a cue-bid of four diamonds.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQJ954 ♡9 ◇K103 ♣AQ8
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have to decide whether to support partner's suit or to stress the quality of your hand and your spades. We would jump to three spades, which conveys to partner both parts of this latter message.

China Suspends Propaganda Chief Over Student Unrest

By DANIEL SOUTHERLAND
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

PEKING — China's Communist Party has begun a shakeup of senior propaganda officials who are being blamed for failing to counter western ideas that have "poisoned the minds" of student demonstrators, according to a Chinese source.

The source, who is usually well informed on such matters, said that Zhu Houze, the head of the party's propaganda department, was temporarily suspended from his duties following student demonstrations that reached more than a dozen cities between Dec. 5 and Dec. 31.

The department's information director, Zhong Peizhang, was also replaced by a deputy director, Wang Furu, and two new deputy directors were also added, according to a report Sunday in the pro-communist newspaper Wen Wei Po. The newspaper is based in Hong Kong and is closely connected with Peking.

Officials in the party's propaganda department play an important role in the political and cultural debate here. As chief of the department, Zhu has developed a reputation among Chinese writers as a broad-minded "liberal" who spoke out last year against government intervention in cultural and artistic work and called for restraint by party members in criticizing unorthodox views.

Judging by recent official editorials said to be inspired by Deng, this tolerant attitude is now viewed to have contributed to an atmosphere in which student dissent was able to flourish.

In recent days, editorials in official newspapers and reports in Hong Kong's Wen Wei Po have indicated that authorities are taking a tough line against the protests. Deng, according to Wen Wei Po, has also called for the ouster of certain unnamed party officials who had been promoting "bourgeois liberalism," which Chinese and western observers have interpreted to mean western democratic ideas.

Western diplomats and journalists in Beijing have had little access to Zhu. Believed to be in his mid-50s, Zhu is a former chief of Guizhou province who took over the party's propaganda department in August 1985, replacing a well-known conservative ideologue, Deng Liqun.

In a cover story on China's ideological and cultural liberalization, Asiaweek magazine reported last June that Zhu Houze had delivered a speech that May calling for "democratic pluralism."

In a jab at party conservatives, Zhu was reported to have said, "only through the comparison and contention of different viewpoints and ideas can people gradually arrive at a truthful understanding of the developmental laws of objective facts."

The magazine called Zhu the "liberal commissar" and the only ranking Communist Party official who had openly embraced the concept of wholesale westernization. Official editorials have attacked such a concept in recent days.

The Guangming Daily, the main official newspaper for intellectuals, Sunday published a front-page commentary saying "total westernization means abandoning socialism."

The editorial referred to a certain unnamed university vice president, a clear reference to Fang Lizhi, a vice president at the University of Science and Technology of China in the eastern city of Hefei, about 600 miles south of Peking. Fang has been accused of advocating westernization and is believed to have been expelled from the Communist Party. He has been a hero of student demonstrators.

Propaganda chief Zhu's main supporter at the party's top level is believed to be Hu Qili, 57, a Politburo member closely allied with the party's general secretary, Hu Yaobang. Hu Qili, no relative of Hu Yaobang, has not been seen in public recently, and there has been speculation that the student demonstrations caused him to lose standing within the party.

Hu Yaobang, 71, long considered the logical successor to Deng as China's top leader, has also been absent from the public eye recently. He was supposed to meet with the visiting chief of Japan's governing Liberal Democratic Party today but an official said he was "exhausted" from work at the moment and would not be receiving any visitors.

Prince Edward Cuts Short Training Stint In Marines

LONDON (AP) — Prince Edward, the youngest son of Queen Elizabeth II, resigned today from the Royal Marines, Buckingham Palace announced.

A statement from the palace said the 22-year-old prince had concluded "that he does not wish to make the service his long-term career."

Edward, who is fifth in line for the throne, had undergone 10 weeks of a 34-week marine training course and held the rank of acting lieutenant. He was ranked in the top six of his group of 40 trainees.

"An announcement about his future plans is not expected for some time," the palace said.

Other members of his family, including older brothers Charles and Andrew, joined the Royal Navy, as did his father, grandfather King George VI and great-grandfather King George V.

Tom Corby, the only reporter with daily access to Buckingham Palace as court correspondent of the domestic Press Association news agency, said today: "Anybody close to the prince knows he is as keen on rigorous outdoor activity as the other male members of his family. ...To even consider questioning a service career in a family with an historic military tradition shows a special kind of bravery. Behind the facade of a charming, mannered prince there could be an assertive and analytical non-conformist who knows what is best for himself."

Model Romy Adlington, 20, who was Edward's girl friend for a year in 1983 and who told a reporter last week that she consoled him with "moral support" at Buckingham Palace, said Edward stood up to the physical challenge of the marines but could not take the mental pressure.

PRINCE EDWARD

The Royal Marines said in a statement: "We are obviously disappointed he has resigned his commission and we wish him every success in his future career. We fully understand his reasons and we wish him the best of good fortune."

Edward met his commanding officer, Col. Ian Moore, for 10 minutes this morning at the marines' commando training depot at Lympstone, Devon, 140 miles southwest of London, before the decision was announced.

Like most members of the royal family, Edward is heavily subsidized by British taxpayers, receiving about $30,000 annually. As an acting lieutenant in the Royal Marines, he was paid about $12,000.

By resigning, he must refund the marines the $12,000 to $15,000 he received in financial support during his officer cadet program at Cambridge University, where he graduated last June.

Even before the palace announced his decision, London newspapers treated the resignation as a foregone conclusion.

The Sun, a racy tabloid which reported last Wednesday that the prince wanted out, ran the headline: "It's All Over. Edward tells the Royals: No change of heart."

Reporters on the royal beat said Edward's father, Prince Philip, told his son he should stay with the marines.

Philip "stamped on Edward's hopes of taking up a new career in the theater" during stormy talks at Sandringham House in eastern England, where the family spent the post-Christmas holidays, the Sun reported.

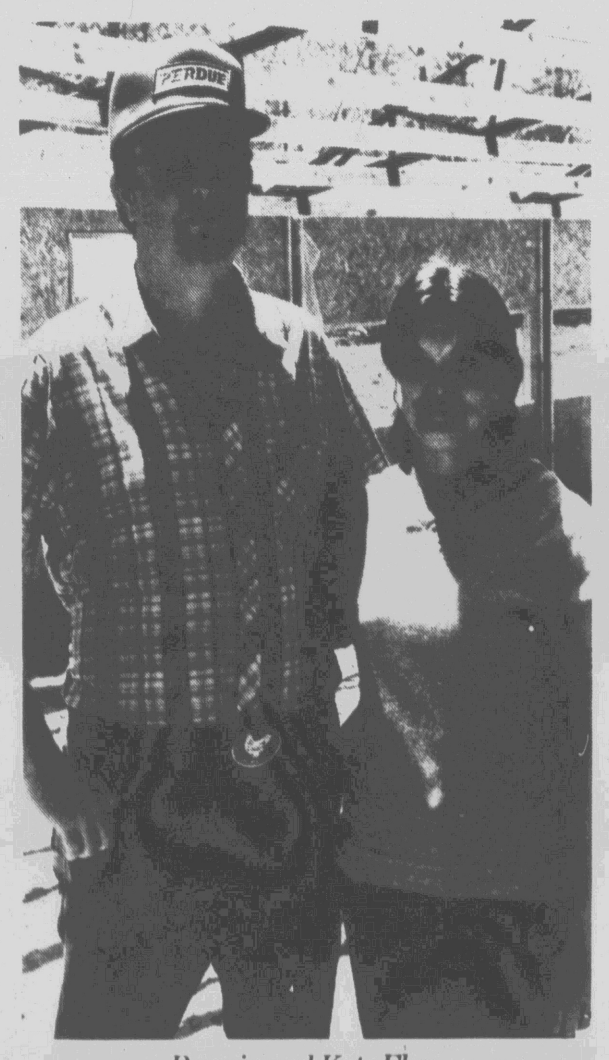

Edward took part in amateur theatricals at school and Cambridge University and obviously enjoyed it.

The Times quoted unidentified marine sources saying: "Prince Edward's dilemma was due entirely to a personal conviction on his part that he no longer felt a career in the marines was right for him and was not, in any way, a result of excessively harsh treatment during training, or from any feeling that he could not make the grade."

Edward had to give up rugby football at Cambridge after several hard knocks and he has a leg injury from the game. On the marine training course he twisted an ankle, damaged a knee and got a black eye and bloody nose in a boxing match.

He was the first member of the royal family to join the marines.

"Perdue Has Gone Above And Beyond The Call To Help Our Business Succeed."

Ronnie and Kate Flye, Leggett, North Carolina

Kate: "For as long as I've known Ronnie, he's wanted to be his own boss. To rely on himself—not to have to punch any time clock. And I've wanted to leave my public job too, but for a different reason; I've always wanted to be able to stay here, at home.

"Well, Ronnie had talked with Perdue back when he had graduated from high school, and so he knew about the company. And I agreed that working with Perdue was the perfect solution for us. So in 1983, we built 2 Perdue chicken houses.

"Perdue is giving us the chance to do what we've always wanted. We've got the income to make up for what we would otherwise be making working for someone, and I can stay here and help Ronnie with the farm, too. I feed the hogs, and well, I don't plant because Ronnie says my rows are too crooked. But I do manage the majority of both chicken houses by myself. And I'd say to any woman who was thinking about working with Perdue to come and look at what I'm doing here.

"I had never worked with chickens before, and it's not tough work. Of course there's more to it when the chickens are little babies, and I need help with the hoppers—so Ronnie helps then. But mostly, I'm in charge.

"The houses are pretty much automated, and it takes me only about 2 or 3 hours a day. Now, that's consistent; someone needs to be here, but it's not hard. I remember with our first flock, Ronnie and I were scared to leave and go anywhere. But we learned when we needed to stick around, and by the second flock, we could pretty much set our own hours. You can't do that unless the business is yours!"

Ronnie: "And Perdue has gone above and beyond the call to see that the business is a success. From the start, they've been very good on helping out; when we first built these houses, they were here 3 times a week.

"Perdue has been honest from the start, too. They've done exactly what they said they would do for us, and things have gone very much the way they said they would. And with Perdue's new housing supplement, we're assured what we'll make on our flocks.

"Like their ad says, when you work with Perdue, you really do come face to face with success. Right now, Kate and I are looking to build our third house.

"So I'd highly recommend Perdue to anybody. And I can tell you, with all honesty, that the only things we would have done differently with Perdue is that we wouldn't have built these houses just 3 years ago. We would have built them 13 years ago!"

Give yourself a raise—raisin' with Perdue.

I'd like to know more about growing with Perdue.

Senate Report Depicts Reagan As Leader Easily Led Astray

By SARA FRITZ
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is portrayed in the Senate Intelligence Committee's secret report on the Iran-contra scandal as a passive leader who was easily led into a major foreign policy blunder by overzealous White House aides, Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres and a few free-wheeling international arms dealers.

And while the report's description of Reagan's role in the affair is certainly unflattering, it is also clear from every available account of the yet-unpublished document why White House officials are urging that it be made public. So far, congressional investigators have no evidence of presidential wrongdoing.

"There is no smoking gun," said Committee chairman David Boren, D-Okla.

Democrats such as Boren, who oppose publication of the report, are now being accused by the White House of trying to suppress information that would help to exonerate the president. White House Communications Director Patrick J. Buchanan strongly questioned the Democrats' argument that the report represents the results of an incomplete investigation.

"The Democrats tell us this investigation must be dragged out to get at the truth," said Buchanan. "They're not after the truth; they're after Ronald Reagan."

Yet even Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., who as the committee's former chairman was responsible for drafting the report, admitted that no final conclusions can be drawn about the president's involvement until Congress hears from key witnesses such as former White House aide Oliver North, who refused to testify before the Senate Intelligence Committee.

"Unless Ollie North testifies," said Durenberger, "they'll never, never get the answer to the question 'Did Ronald Reagan know?'"

In general, the committee found that the sales of U.S. arms to Iran were initiated by the president at the request of Peres and that the plan to divert profits from the arms sales to the Nicaraguan rebels was advocated by Israel and an Iranian arms dealer — apparently as an incentive to keep the Reagan administration interested in continuing the arms shipments.

In addition, while the committee found no evidence to prove that the contras actually received any money from the deal, it appears that about $8.5 million was diverted with the intent of sending it to the contras — all or most of it coming from the pockets of private investors who were not fully repaid for the money they had put up to facilitate the arms deal.

According to a variety of sources who have read it, the committee's lengthy report cites these instances of Reagan's personal involvement in the Iran-contra scandal:

—Despite White House denials, committee members appear to believe the testimony of former White House national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane that the president orally approved Israeli arms shipments in August 1985. Sources said that McFarlane provided the committee with convincing details of meetings leading up to the decision as well as a persuasive account of how the president gave his approval.

—The president signed at least two findings — one dated Jan. 6, 1986, and the other a few days later, Jan. 17 — permitting the direct shipments of U.S. arms to Iran. The two findings differed in only three words. It is not known why the sale did not proceed after the first finding, but it is known that Reagan met again with aides on Jan. 7 to review the matter once more.

—When the president signed the Jan. 17 finding, he did not read the accompanying three-page action memo prepared by North. Nor was the memo initialed by the president. Instead, John M. Poindexter, then the national security adviser, read excerpts of the memo to Reagan and signed the president's initials. It is presumed by committee investigators that Reagan was already familiar with the issues and did not feel a need to read the supporting document.

—The president was persuaded last February to continue the arms sales to Iran — even though the first shipments failed to win release of American hostages held in Lebanon — when he received a personal letter from Peres pleading for continuation of the policy. The letter was deleted from the committee's report at the request of State Department officials, who routinely prevent the release of communications between heads of state.

—Reagan personally wrote a letter to Peres later to thank him for the role played by Amiram Nir, the Israeli emissary who is credited in the report with having convinced the Reagan administration to begin direct arms shipments to Iran last January and with proposing the diversion of profits to the contras.

At the insistence of one Democratic member, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the report emphasizes that the committee was unable to reach many important conclusions — one of them being whether the president was unaware of the diversion of funds to the contras, as he claims.

Despite a lack of evidence, committee members clearly are divided on the issue of whether the money could have been diverted to the contras without the president's knowledge. But even those who support Reagan's story acknowledge that it serves only to reinforce a portrait of him as too detached from the day-to-day details of government.

"For the president," said a GOP source, "the worst part is that the report gives a stronger sense that he didn't know what was going on. The White House wants it out to prove they did nothing wrong but it also reinforces the concept that they did nothing right either."

It is understood that the report finds both Nir and Manucher Ghorbanifar, an Iranian arms dealer who served as a go-between in the deal, had suggested that some of the profits from the arms sale be diverted to the contras. In fact, according to sources, Nir also offered direct Israeli funding of the contras and Israel later may have shipped them some weapons.

Committee Vice Chairman William S. Cohen, R-Me., said the committee found that the president erred by taking the advice of men such as Ghorbanifar, Nir and North over the advice of Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger, who opposed the sale of arms to Iran from the outset.

"I think what is clear is that the president turned to amateurs for his advice on a major foreign policy initiative, rather than listening to the sound and seasoned voices of the experts," he said. "And that's where I think the president made his mistake."

Israeli Minister Asks Probe

By GLENN FRANKEL
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

JERUSALEM — An Israeli Cabinet minister has called for an investigation of allegations, which continued to mount Sunday, that Israel's role in the Iran arms deal and efforts to supply the rebels in Nicaragua was much deeper than officials here have maintained.

According to a draft report of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, new details of which were published here today, Israel's attempt to open contacts between the United States and Iran began with a meeting between an Israeli official, two Israeli weapons dealers and an Iranian arms merchant in late 1984, at least four months before the White House requested Israeli help in doing so.

The confidential report directly contradicts Israeli claims that the Reagan administration's Iran connection was an American initiative in which Israel became involved only after it was asked for its help in April 1985 in a meeting here between then-prime minister Shimon Peres and National Security Council consultant Michael Ledeen.

An investigation and white paper responding to the allegations were called for Sunday by Amnon Rubinstein, head of the small left-of-center Shinui party. While he has little political leverage, his statement marked the first time a member of Israel's coalition goverment has called for such a probe.

Rubinstein said he believed the denials of government leaders such as Peres, who is now foreign minister, and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir. But he said it was possible that either these leaders "didn't get the right information" from subordinates, or Reagan administration officials — whose testimony before the committee is the basis for much of the information in the draft — had decided "that Israel was going to be made a scapegoat."

If accurate, the report's claim adds support to the view expressed consistently in the draft that the Iran arms affair was initiated and kept alive at critical moments by Israeli officials and arms merchants whose interests in the matter may have differed from those of the United States.

The four men who the report says met in late 1984 — diplomat David Kimche, who was then director general of the Israeli Foreign Ministry; Israeli weapons dealers Yaacov Nimrodi and Al Schwimmer and Iranian arms merchant Manucher Ghorbanifar — later became the main actors in establishing the secret arms-for-hostages exchange that began the following fall.

These details were among several new pieces of information from the confidential draft reported Sunday by Erel Ginai, the Washington correspondent for the Yediot Ahronot newspaper. The description of the late 1984 meeting is on page 19 of the draft, he reported.

Kimche has denied the draft's account and on Sunday, other Israeli officials today stuck to previous statements denying Israel had initiated the affair and calling allegations in the draft report "baseless" and "distorted."

Details from the draft, as reported here, have been emerging publicly for several days and many of them point directly to Israel, whose leaders have contended they played only a marginal role in the affair and were motivated solely by the desire to help an ally obtain the release of kidnapped citizens held in Lebanon by Shiite Moslem allies of Iran's Khomeini government.

The most dramatic allegation in the report of the draft here is that Peres' counter-terrorism adviser, Amiram Nir, who took over from Kimche managing the Israeli end of the Iran affair in late 1985, first suggested to National Security Council aide Lt. Col. Oliver L. North last January that the Iranians could be overcharged for U.S. weapons and that the profits be funneled to the rebels in Nicaragua. The draft also contends Israel sent a shipload of Soviet-made weapons, presumably captured in Lebanon, to the contras last September.

TAKING A STROLL — Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, the White House aide fired from his job for alleged involvement in the sale of arms to Iran, walks with his daughter on the front lawn of their home in Great Falls, Va., on Sunday. Congressional investigators have found evidence that North coordinated arms shipments to the Nicaraguan rebels, also, congressional sources said. (AP Laserphoto)

Paper Says Israelis Are Training Contras

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — An Israeli newspaper reported today that Israeli instructors are training Nicaraguan Contra rebels in Honduras and possibly are being paid by the U.S. government.

In a report from Washington, the daily Haaretz quoted unidentified American sources as saying the Israeli instructors were paid by the Honduran government and were not official representatives of the Israeli army.

But Haaretz also quoted unidentified Israeli military sources as saying payment may come from "American sources or intelligence groups."

A Defense Ministry official in Tel Aviv, speaking on condition of anonymity, called the report "baseless."

Haaretz said the military instructors were training Contras at U.S. Army bases in Tegucigalpa, the Honduran capital, and in Palma Rola. It said the Israelis also were training Honduran soldiers.

The paper quoted the unidentified U.S. sources as saying Washington may have approved the recent sale of 12 Israeli-built Kfir jet fighters to Honduras as a "token of gratitude for Israeli co-operation in extending aid to the Contras." The United States must approve such sales because the planes include U.S. components.

Iran Reports New Attack Against Iraq

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran claimed today its troops launched a new, three-pronged attack overnight on Iraqi troops south of the Iraqi port city of Basra while Iraq said its air force jets raided three Iranian cities.

Both sides in the 6-year-old war reported fierce fighting in the marshes near the Shatt al-Arab waterway and claimed their forces killed thousands of enemy troops.

Foreign correspondents were not allowed into the battle zones, and war communiques monitored in Nicosia could not be verified independently.

Iraq said its warplanes raided the central Iranian cities of Isfahan and Qom, the home city of revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, and Dezful, a garrison town in southern Iran, for the third consecutive day.

A military spokesman in Baghdad said the attacks were in retaliation for a missile attack Sunday on the Iraqi capital and the repeated shelling of the southern port city of Basra, Iraq's second largest city.

Iran denied that Qom was hit again, saying Iraqi planes were driven off before they could attack. But it said residential areas were rocketed in Isfahan, damaging houses, and scores were killed or injured in Dezful during missile attacks Sunday.

Iran had threatened to launch a decisive "final offensive" before the Iranian new year begins March 21. The objective appeared to be the capture or encirclement of Basra.

Iran's official Iranian Republic News Agency (IRNA) said its fighter-bombers overnight launched six missions against economic and military centers east of Basra and the northern towns of Ranya, Aqra and Sheikh Saad. It said all planes returned safely to base.

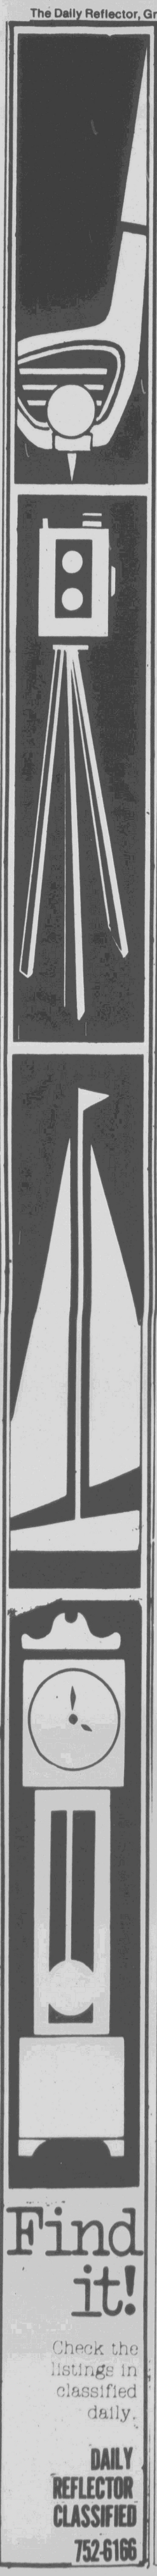

An Iranian gunboat fired two artillery rounds at the Atlantic Dignity, a Liberian-registered tanker, as it cruised toward the Strait of Hormuz carrying 80,000 tons of Kuwaiti fuel oil to Italy, Persian Gulf-based marine salvage executives reported today.

In Hong Kong, a spokesman for the ship's owner, Island Navigation Corp. Ltd., said the ship was only slightly damaged and none of the 24 South Korean crew members were injured.

It was the fourth tanker attacked by Iran in eight days in its effort to cripple the oil industry of Iraq and any countries that aid Iraq, including Kuwait.

Iran claimed 1,000 Iraqis were killed Sunday as Iranian fighters shouting "Allah akbar!" ("God is great!") routed enemy forces on the Iraqi side of the border just west of the Iranian outpost of Shalamcheh.

Iranian news agency correspondents who visited the area today, about 18 miles southeast of Basra, said deserted Iraqi tanks and the bodies of soldiers littered the battlefield. They said thick smoke rose from burning Iraqi equipment.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

"BOND ORDER AUTHORIZING THE ISSUANCE OF $700,000 SANITARY SEWER BONDS OF THE TOWN OF GRIMESLAND"

WHEREAS, the Town Council of the Town of Grimesland deems it advisable to make the improvements hereinafter described; and

WHEREAS, the Town Council has caused to be filed with the Secretary of the Local Government Commission of North Carolina an application for Commission approval of the bonds hereinafter described as required by The Local Government Finance Act, and the Secretary of the Local Government Commission has notified the Council that the application has been filed and accepted for submission to the Local Government Commission; NOW, THEREFORE,

BE IT ORDERED by the Town Council of the Town of Grimesland, as follows:

Section 1. The Town Council of the Town of Grimesland has ascertained and hereby determines that it is necessary to provide a wastewater treatment system within and without the Town, including the acquisition, construction and installation of a lagoon treatment plant, aeration field, lift station, pumps and collection lines and including the acquisition, construction and installation of necessary machinery and equipment and the acquisition of land or rights-in-land required therefor and to pay capital costs of such improvements.

Section 2. In order to raise the money required to pay capital costs of providing the improvements as set forth above, in addition to any funds which may be made available for such purpose from any other source, bonds of the Town of Grimesland are hereby authorized and shall be issued pursuant to The Local Government Finance Act of North Carolina. The maximum aggregate principal amount of said bonds authorized by this bond order shall be $700,000.

Section 3. A tax sufficient to pay the principal of and interest on said bonds when due shall be annually levied and collected. The revenues of the facilities hereinbefore described may be pledged to the payment of the interest on and principal of said bonds if and to the extend that the Council shall hereafter determine by resolution prior to the issuance of said bonds. In such event, the tax to pay the principal of and interest on said bonds may be reduced by the amount of such revenues available for the payment of such principal and interest.

Section 4. A sworn statement of the Town's debt has been filed with the Town Clerk and is open to public inspection.

Section 5. This bond order shall take effect when approved by the voters of the Town at a referendum.

The foregoing bond order has been introduced and a sworn statement of debt has been filed under The Local Government Bond Act showing the appraised value of the Town of Grimesland to be $6,819,027.00 and the net debt thereof, including the proposed bonds, to be $700,000.00. A tax will be levied to pay the principal of and interest on the bonds if they are issued. Anyone who wishes to be heard on the questions of the validity of the bond order and the advisability of issuing the bonds may appear at a public hearing or an adjournment thereof to be held at The Town Hall in Grimesland, North Carolina, at 7:00 o'clock P.M., on the 20th day of January, 1987.

The big banks would be a lot smaller if they didn't require such high checking balances.

We'll give you free checking and interest with a Prestige Checking account at First Federal. All for a low minimum balance of $300.

If you do business with one of the big banks, examine the service charges on your checking account. We think you'll be surprised.

If you check with anyone but First Federal, you're probably paying more in service charges than you're earning in interest...if you earn interest at all.

Now examine the benefits of First Federal's Prestige Checking account. When you maintain a balance of only $300 or more, you receive interest, no-fee travelers checks, free notary services, our no-charge Prestige Place 24-hour teller and Prestige Emergency Cash in over 5500 locations nationwide. All insured to $100,000 by the FSLIC.

Maybe we could be a lot bigger if we require higher minimum balances on our interest checking accounts. But at First Federal, we'd rather be better than bigger.
