Rain Clears Ice But Forecasters Say More Ahead

By CHERIE EVANS

Sleet and ice blanketed Pitt County Monday, creating hazardous road conditions and causing some homes to be without electricity for a few hours, but rain today washed away much of the ice and many of the problems it caused.

Forecasters said, however, that eastern North Carolina was not free of problems. A combination of rain, sleet and snow is forecast for late tonight, with lows in the mid 20s. Wednesday's high is expected to be in the upper 30s.

But for today, "road conditions this morning are good," said Mayo Allen of the Greenville Public Works Department. "They're wet and could be slippery in spots, but I don't know of any trouble spots."

Crews worked through the night putting sand on the roads, he said. "I think we got ahead of it (the ice storm). We started work immediately on some sidewalks and streets in areas we thought would give us trouble."

Roads in Pitt County are clearing as the temperature gets higher, said Sgt. C.E. Pearce of the Highway Patrol.

"The problems are going to be in shaded areas where the ground is frozen," he said. But "right now, Pitt County is in good shape."

Many businesses and local schools closed early Monday to get motorists off the roads before conditions got worse, but the ice did not melt without creating some accidents in the area.

More than 30 accidents were reported in the county Monday, and one was reported this morning, transportation officials said.

The Greenville Police Department said 13 accidents were reported in the city — five at the bridge on Memorial Drive and one on the Greene Street bridge across the Tar River.

Ice also caused electrical outages Monday as tree limbs fell on power lines, and "ice on the lines caused them to sag into the trees," said Roger Jones, director of electric systems at the Greenville Utilities Commission.

"The worse problem dealt with three substation breaker lockouts," he said. Crews worked until about 3:30 this morning on problems that caused power outages of three to four hours.

Many local meetings have been canceled or postponed today, and classes in the Pitt County Schools were delayed two hours while classes at Pitt Community College began at 10 a.m., and classes at East Carolina University began at noon.

The GUC water plant in north Greenville recorded 1.08 inches of precipitation from 7 a.m. Monday to 7 a.m. today while WNCT-TV in south Greenville recorded .93 inches from Monday and earlier today.

The Tar River level was at 5.9 feet above sea level this morning.

Chrysler Wants Dealership Ended

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

NEW BERN — Chrysler Motors Corp. has filed a petition in U.S. Eastern District Court asking that an action filed against them by Joe P. Cullipher Chrysler Plymouth Inc. of Greenville be heard in District Court rather than by the N.C. commissioner of motor vehicles.

Chrysler asked for the move to federal court in the petition, which was filed on Feb. 10 in New Bern, since it is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Highland Park, Mich.

Cullipher is a North Carolina corporation with its principal place of business in Greenville.

The case involves a dispute between Cullipher, a Chrysler dealer, and Chrysler concerning whether the automobile maker had good cause to terminate its Direct Dealer Agreement with Cullipher. The agreement is the authorization for Cullipher to operate as a Chrysler Corp. dealer.

According to records on file with the court, Chrysler attempted to terminate Cullipher's dealership in November of last year on the grounds that the Greenville firm "failed to comply with or perform its obligations under the Direct Dealer Agreements."

But Cullipher filed a petition with the state motor vehicles commissioner in January asking for a hearing on the question.

In a letter from Chrysler notifying Cullipher of the termination of the dealership agreement — which was included in documents filed with the court — the auto manufacturer charged that an audit of the dealership "disclosed evidence of substantial record keeping discrepancies and violations of sales incentive provisions," including the "submission of claims, over a prolonged period of time, for sales incentive payments for vehicles that were ineligible either because they were sold outside of the program period, or because they were placed in demonstrator service."

According to the court records, the amount of money involved in the alleged false claims is in excess of $10,000.

Cullipher declined to comment on the matter.

County Board Awards Contracts For Detox, Mental Health Facilities

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Monday approved awarding contracts for the construction of a detoxification facility for the mental health center and a storage building for Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Commissioners also reviewed briefly a draft report on county government space needs before ending the meeting without completing the agenda because of the icy weather.

The board approved awarding contracts for the detoxification facility provided architect James G. Hite could successfully negotiate with the low bidders to bring the cost of the project within the $415,000 in state grant money available for the project.

Hite told commissioners that the low base bids received for the project — $449,562 — were 15 percent over the state funds available.

Low bidder for the general contract was Wimco Corp., with a base bid of $406,000, while Braxton Britt Plumbing was the low bidder for the plumbing contract, with a bid of $21,400. White's Heating and Sheet Metal was the low bidder for the heating and air conditioning contract with a bid of $20,544 and T&H Electrical's $1,618 bid was the low for the electrical contract.

Contracts for construction of a storage facility for the hospital went to Farrior & Sons Inc., which submitted the low bid of $258,400 for the metal building to be located behind the county office building on West Fifth Street.

But County Engineer Phil Dickerson told the board that he had negotiated with Farrior to reduce the contract price to $256,505.

The hospital will reimburse the county for the cost of the building through lease payments made over a five-year period.

Reviewing a draft of the first phase of a master plan study — a space needs analysis — Hite suggested immediate space needs could be met by renting private buildings.

But he said ultimately the county will have to build additional space.

He said the draft needs analysis includes suggestions for the possible construction of a "six-level parking deck for 600 cars," which would cost about $2.8 million ($14 a square foot) on property now owned by the county on Greene Street and a five-story building (adjacent to the present courthouse) containing 90,000 square feet.

The draft also suggests the erection of a 160,000-square-foot building across Washington Street from the courthouse to complete the long range space requirements projected in the study draft.

A summary of needs and facilities included in the draft suggests that the 474 employees now working in the courthouse in downtown Greenville and the county office building on West Fifth Street will grow to 595 in the next five years, and suggests that the present 85,725 square feet of space owned by the county should be increased over time to 177,230 square feet.

The Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce presented commissioners a resolution asking the board to join with the Greenville City Council in

Soviet Dissidents To Be Freed

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet government spokesman said today that dissident Anatoly Koryagin has been ordered released from prison and that Jewish activist Josef Begun "most likely" will be freed soon.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Genady Gerasimov said a special commission of the Supreme Soviet, the Soviet parliament, that is reviewing dissident appeals for clemency decided Friday to release the 48-year-old Koryagin to "spare him further imprisonment."

Koryagin, a psychiatrist, was sentenced in 1981 to seven years in prison and five years internal exile after complaining the government was sending dissidents to mental hospitals.

At a briefing for foreign and Soviet journalists, Gerasimov also was asked about U.S. affairs specialist Georgy Arbatov's televised statement Sunday that the 55-year-old Begun had been released from Chistopol Prison, 500 miles east of Moscow.

Gerasimov said he had received a telegram from Begun's wife, Inna, asking that her husband be released as part of the current review of those sentenced for alleged anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda.

"Most likely this will be decided in a positive way," Gerasimov said, adding that the review process takes time.

He said about 150 dissidents have been released so far and that another 140 to 150 appeals were being considered.

Last week, Gerasimov said 140 dissidents had been freed by two decrees of the Supreme Soviet this month and that the commission was reviewing an equal number of other cases, as well as the laws under which the dissidents were sentenced.

It was not clear whether Begun or Koryagin asked for pardons, or whether they signed statements required of some other dissidents promising to cease anti-Soviet activity.

Gerasimov evaded a question about whether Koryagin would be required to emigrate in return for his freedom, as was reported in the Netherlands by the Bukovsky Foundation, a human rights monitoring group that spoke with Koryagin's wife, Galina, by telephone.

"He is now in prison where there is no desk to buy air tickets," Gerasimov said of Koryagin.

Gerasimov said the Supreme

Soviet decided Friday to free Koryagin, but that he was unsure whether the psychiatrist still was imprisoned in Kiev, capital of the Ukraine.

"Today or tomorrow he will be released," Gerasimov said.

The official Tass news agency issued a report on Gerasimov's comments, quoting him as saying Koryagin had been set free and that Begun's case was under review.

Fierce Fighting In Beirut Halts Refugee Food Efforts

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslems and Communist fighters waged fierce street battles today in west Beirut. Police said at least 21 people were killed, 100 were wounded and dozens of buildings burned out of control.

The third consecutive day of fighting frustrated efforts to locate Anglican Church hostage negotiator Terry Waite, who has been missing for almost a month, and trapped two American Moslem envoys at their hotel.

It also brought to a standstill attempts to send U.N. food supplies into the besieged Palestinian refugee camps of Bourj el-Barajneh and Chatilla. Nabih Berri's Shiite Moslem Amal militia allowed a U.N. food convoy into Bourj el-Barajneh on Saturday.

"Relative calm prevailed around both shantytowns because all parties are preoccupied with the Beirut conflict," police said today.

In Damascus, Syria, Berri told reporters that Amal would lift the blockade on all Palestinian camps starting Wednesday morning.

"Amal leaders took this decision secretly two days ago and the clashes in Beirut will not stop us implementing our decision," he said.

Amal on Monday lifted a four-month blockade around two small refugee camps, al-Bass and Bourj el-Shamali near the southern port of Tyre. Food trucks entered the camps.

The Shiite Moslem militia also allowed thousands of Palestinian women and children from the larger Rashidiyah camp to travel 2 miles to Tyre to buy food. No men emerged from the camp, fearing capture by the Shiites.

The conflict for control of west Beirut pitted Amal against the Moscow-oriented Communist Party and Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party militia.

It was their worst confrontation since Moslem militias wrested con-

Gymnastics Program

Preregistration will be held from 5 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. Wednesday at Elm Street Center by the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department for the youth gymnastics program.

The program is for boys and girls ages 2 and one-half to 16, with beginner, advanced beginner, intermediate and advanced classes. The session will begin Monday with classes in the afternoon and early evening hours. Youth will be divided according to age and/or ability.

For more details, call April Maxam at 752-9432.

Thefts Reported

Police said six thefts were reported to the Greenville department Monday.

Officer J.W. Corbett said a television set valued at $650 and a portable radio valued at $170 were taken from A30 Glendale Court in a break-in reported at 9:51 a.m., while Officer E.E. Laughinghouse said a kitchen range valued at $480 was taken from 815 Autumn Drive in an incident reported at 10:07 a.m.

Officer L.R. Kepler said a space heater was taken from 403 Hudson St. in an incident reported at 10:16 a.m., while Officer F.G. Pruitt said an electric wrench valued at $707 and a 70-horsepower boat motor valued at $3,500 were taken from 1206 S. Wright Road in an incident reported at 1:08 p.m.

Officer R.G. Mendenhall said a radio valued at $20 and a cassette tape recorder valued at $41 were taken from the Western Auto store at South Park Shopping Center in an incident reported at 3:42 p.m., while Officer A.P. White said several pieces of beef jerky with a total value of $7 were taken from the Fresh Way Food Store on East Tenth Street in an incident reported at 11:50 p.m.

Distribution Canceled

The commodities distribution scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday by the Pitt County Department of Social Services has been canceled due to inclement weather.

The commodities distribution has been rescheduled for March 4 and March 5 in the basement of the Pitt County Office Building, 1717 W. Fifth St.

DSS officials said that the icy weather has caused a delay in the transportation of the commodities from Raleigh to Greenville.

Boardings Increased

Piedmont Commuter flights, operated by CCAir of Charlotte, boarded 2,278 passengers at Pitt-Greenville Airport during January.

A spokesman said January boardings represented a 63 percent increase over the 1,439 boardings recorded in January 1986, but fell far short of the record 3,037 boardings recorded at the airport in October 1986.

The spokesman said poor weather conditions during January reduced the number of boardings all across the commuter airline's system.

Total boardings at Pitt-Greenville in 1986 amounted to 28,488 passengers.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH—Mary Boccaccio, curator of manuscripts for East Carolina University, points out items of interest to Vanessa Johnson, a junior from Washington. Materials in the exhibition include correspondence, photographs, diaries and other items from religious and medical missionaries to East Africa during the years 1883 to 1964. Also included are papers from North Carolina writer Inglis Fletcher. This and other exhibits will be on display in Joyner Library on the ECU campus through February in celebration of Black History Month. (ECU News Bureau Photo By Tony Rumble)

Black History Month Exhibit Centers On Writer, Missionaries

By TONY M. RUMPLE
ECU News Bureau

Materials drawn from the East Carolina Manuscript Collection, including writings and records by missionaries in Africa, have been assembled into a special exhibit titled "African Experience" for observance of Black History Month.

The exhibit "is about North Carolina people and their involvement in world events, particularly Africa," said Mary Boccaccio, curator of manuscripts for the collection in East Carolina University's Joyner Library.

Featured are materials from the papers of novelist Inglis Fletcher who traveled in Africa collecting material for her novels, "The White Leopard" and "Red Jasmine." About half of the exhibit is made up of the writer's correspondence, notes, diaries, published materials and photographs from her research journey in Africa in 1928.

Ms. Fletcher, who died in 1969, lived at Bandon Plantation in Edenton. Fletcher Residence Hall on the ECU campus was named in her honor.

In the display are photographs depicting the daily life and customs of African people and of a hunting expedition in Nyasaland. Other items include native cloth from an African village, brochures, newspapers and a diary.

The papers of a number of missionaries drawn from the Manuscript Collection reflect social, cultural and political development throughout the continent of Africa.

One of the missionaries, Catherine Parham, was in the Belgian Congo (Zaire) from 1931 to 1958. In correspondence with other missionaries, she describes the turmoil and unrest during the Congolese civil war.

Lorena Kelly, also stationed in Zaire, compiled "Good Housekeeping" in the Otetela language. Papers and photographs from two other missionaries, Myrtle Zicafoose and Ruth O'Toole, are also included. The two served in a leper colony in the Congo from 1931 to 1960.

Ms. Kelly was a native of Iredell County. Ms. Parham, Ms. Zicafoose and Ms. O'Toole chose Asheville as their retirement home following their careers as missionaries.

The African experience exhibit will be on display in Joyner Library through February.

PTA Fund-Raiser

The Elmhurst Elementary School Parent-Teacher Association is sponsoring a "Dinner Around the World" fund-raising event Friday from 6 p.m. until 8 p.m.

Foods from Italy, China, Mexico, Great Britain and the United States will be served. Elmhurst students will present a song pertaining to one of the countries and have prepared special projects relating to the countries.

Kindergarten students have studied Great Britain and how the U.S. flag evolved from the British flag. They also made Scottish tams.

First-grade students have learned about China and made lanterns, hats and good-luck dragons, second-graders made a replica of Italy's Leaning Tower of Pisa and chef hats. Third-graders learned the Mexican hat dance and made a pinata in the shape of a taco as part of their study of Mexico.

Activities at the dinner will include parchment printing in Chinese manuscript and the making of passports with the students dressed in Chinese costumes.

Census Data

The Census Bureau will collect current employment and unemployment data for the area today through Saturday, according to William Hill, director of the bureau's Charlotte regional office.

The local data will contribute to February's national employment and unemployment figures to be released March 6 by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Information supplied by individuals is kept confidential by law, with only statistical totals published.

EANC Chief Speaks

Cathy Jessen, president of the Coastal Plains Chapter of the Epilepsy Association of North Carolina, will speak to the junior class of the East Carolina University School of Nursing Wednesday about the psychosocial aspects of living with epilepsy.

Literature about seizure disorders on the national, state and local levels will be distributed Thursday in the neurology clinic of the Pitt County Health Department.

There will be a chapter meeting Feb. 26 at 7:30 p.m. in the Pitt County Mental Health Center.

Valentine Project

The first-grade classes at Farm Life School, Vanceboro, and the Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors recently presented each resident at Greenville Villa Nursing Home a personalized valentine and a helium balloon.

The event was sponsored by the Make America Better Committee of the Board of Realtors.

Committee Leaders

Chairmen for several committees were named at a recent meeting of the Town and Country Senior Citizens.

The new leaders include Louise Jordan, scrapbook; Lawrence Brewster, historian; Beatrice Weilenmann, program, and Oleva Zahniser, telephone.

Members and friends interested in the Williamsburg, Va., trip and Dutch Wonderland trip should call Sarah J. Ashton at 752-2912.

Senior Games clinics are being held at the Elm Street Gymnasium on Mondays from 9 a.m. until 11 a.m. and on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 9:30 a.m. until 11:30 a.m.

Ex-Patient Sues Nursing Center

A former resident of the University Nursing Center on N.C. 43 west of Greenville has filed a civil complaint seeking "in excess of $10,000 as compensatory and punitive damages" from the nursing home and two of its employees.

Clarence Earl Ormond, a patient in the center from 1980 to 1986, named University Nursing Center, Hillhaven Inc. (operators of the center), Kyle W. Dilday (nursing center manager), "Jane Doe, unknown director of nursing for University Nursing Center," and Dr. Joseph W. Ward, medical director for University Nursing, as defendants in the suit, which was filed Friday.

The complaint alleges that Ormond entered the nursing center in 1980 after being paralyzed from the waist down because of an auto accident.

"Over the course of six years," the suit charges, Ormond "developed bed sores ... in his buttocks area, with other bed sores ... on his ankles" and was "constantly constipated and was malnourished."

On Feb. 16, 1986, the complaint continues, Ormond "wheeled himself out of University Nursing Center" in a wheelchair and was taken to Raleigh, where he was admitted to Rex Hospital.

At Rex, the complaint alleges, Ormond was treated for his bed sores, underwent an "operation for a colostomy," and "finally one leg was amputated" so skin from one leg could be grafted onto the buttocks region.

The suit alleges that Ormond incurred "hundreds of thousands of dollars in medical expenses" and suffered "extreme physical and mental pain and suffering ... as a result of his condition at University Nursing Center."

Seniors Plan Trip

The Town and Country Senior Citizens are sponsoring a trip to Raleigh to attend the Ringling Brothers Circus March 4.

For information call Sarah J. Ashton at 752-2912. Reservations must be made by Thursday.

Slogan Needed

Organizers of the 1987 Greenville area "CROP Walk for the Hungry" are seeking a slogan to help publicize the April 5 event, a 10-mile walk to raise money for hunger relief organizations.

Contest deadline is Monday. Submit slogan entries, printed or typed with name and address and phone number to: CROP Slogan Contest, 501 E. 5th St., Greenville, 27834, or call 758-2030 for more information. A prize will be given to the person whose entry is chosen for the slogan.

Ribbon Cutting

A ribbon cutting ceremony will formally open the new Family Medicine Ambulatory Geriatric Center at 11 a.m. Wednesday.

The center, a service of the East Carolina University School of Medicine's Department of Family Medicine, is located in Building C of Physicians Quadrangle in the city medical district.

After a brief ceremony, visitors who wish may tour the center.

The center provides physician consultations and specialized referral care to elderly patients. It is operated by the Geriatric Division of the department of family medicine.

Session Canceled

Tonight's meeting of the Council for Exceptional Children, which was to be held at 7:30 in the media center of Wahl-Coates School, has been canceled due to inclement weather. The meeting will be rescheduled at a later date.

Chemists To Meet

Dr. Mary L. Good, president of the American Chemical Society, will speak on "What is a Chemist Today?" during a combined meeting of the Eastern North Carolina chapter and North Carolina sections of the ACS Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in 207 Venable Hall at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The lecture will be preceded by a social hour at 5:30 p.m. and dinner at 6:30 p.m. at the Carolina Inn in Chapel Hill.

Reservations may be made through the chemistry departments at East Carolina University, 757-6711, or UNC-Wilmington, 395-3450.

USDA Says 4 Of Every 10 Chickens Have Salmonella

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The problem of salmonella in the nation's poultry supply has grown so rapidly that today nearly four out of every 10 chickens sold to consumers are contaminated, the Agriculture Department says.

Contaminated food can result in salmonellosis, a food poisoning that produces flu-like symptoms within 12 hours to 36 hours after eating. The illness may last two days to seven days. And in some cases it can be deadly.

"We cannot have a risk-free food supply, but, on the other hand, if we can improve it, we should do so," says Donald L. Houston, head of the department's Food Safety and Inspection Service, the agency that oversees federal meat and poultry inspection.

The National Academy of Sciences plans to issue a report soon on the health-risk aspects of federal poultry inspection. In 1985, the NAS came down severely on USDA's inspection programs for not taking advantage of advanced technologies that could detect modern health risks, including salmonella and chemical residues.

Salmonella is a general name for some 2,000 closely related bacteria that develop in conducive surroundings, including the intestinal tracts of people and animals. Chickens and their fecal matter are prime salmonella sources.

In plants where sanitation rules are not enforced rigidly, the contamination rate can soar. Salmonella on or inside the slaughtered birds then moves into the consumer's kitchen, where it can be passed back and forth among chicken pieces or to other foods during preparation.

But salmonella also can be killed by heat during proper cooking, Houston said in a recent interview, and thorough washing of the hands after handling uncooked meat also can help prevent contamination.

That's why Houston says consumer education is an important part of holding down the spread of salmonella and other microbiological threats to human health.

"Eighty-five percent of the food poisoning cases are avoidable," he said.

Houston is hoping that the new NAS report will give his agency some powerful ammunition to seek legislative changes in the way poultry is inspected. For example, Houston and some others have maintained for years that there is no need to visually check every single bird that moves along the line at a slaughtering plant.

Spot-checking could do as well, he says, and that would allow USDA to use more of its resources to track down salmonella and the other unseen contaminants that are increasingly found in the poultry supply.

But the idea of modifying the traditional bird-by-bird inspection method — a visual process mainly focused on broken wings, bruises and other blemishes on naked chicken carcasses — does not set well with some consumer groups.

"We feel this would be backing down on existing consumer protection," says Ellen Haas, executive director of Public Voice, a private, non-profit consumer advocacy group. "We would not be supportive of less-than-continuous inspection."

Ms. Haas said her group last year supported a bill to allow less-than-continuous inspection of processed meat products, but also noted that the change in the law did not affect the traditional inspection of each animal at slaughter plants.

Asked in an interview about claims that USDA could pay more attention to microbial problems in plants if inspectors did not have to check every single bird, Ms. Haas said she didn't think such a trade-off was necessary.

"We have always called for microbiological standards and for them (USDA) to get a handle on that problem, along with chemical residues ... the two major problems that the inspection programs have," she said.

Nevertheless, Houston said there have been many allegations that "we spend too much time looking for problems associated with esthetics, such as broken wings and bruises" instead of more serious problems.

Houston said salmonella is one of the most serious problems in the poultry supply today, much of it undetected by current inspection practices.

According to the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, 56,657 cases of salmonella food poisoning were reported in 1985, compared with 23,174 cases in 1976. Figures for 1986 were unavailable.

Houston said the CDC numbers for reported cases mask the probability that the actual count is running much higher, projected at 2 million cases or more each year. And animal products — meat, poultry and dairy — are deeply involved, he said.

In the case of poultry, Houston said, "We're running at about a 37 percent salmonella contamination rate ... and we've got to turn that around."

Salmonella contamination of pork has turned up in about 12 percent of the products sampled, while beef contamination has been around 5 percent, he said.

Chapter Event

In observance of National Engineers Week Sunday through Feb. 28, the Eastern Carolina Chapter of the Professional Engineers of North Carolina will have a mouse trap car race at Washington Square Mall Saturday at 1 p.m. for Beaufort County high school juniors and seniors.

The annual "Mathcounts" competition at Rose High School Feb. 28 will feature seventh and eighth grade students competing to solve math problems.

Academic Honors

The following students were named to honor lists at Trinity Christian School for the second nine weeks of the school year:

A Honor Roll

Suzan Park, Heather Bass, Leanne Cherry, Andrea Maines, Christopher Wallace, Daniel Miles, Rachel Everett, Erica Cooke, Chris Hardee, Michael Maines, Travia Williams, Amy Woods, Michelle Braxton, D.J. Miles and Kyler Welch.

B Honor Roll

Mary Beth Bonar, Jana Ingalls, Candace Keel, Valerie Keel, Carla Martin, Jon Paul Nichols, Valerie Glover, Kullen Welch, Matthew Jones, Joseph Briley, Gina Cannon, Jason Setters, Jamie Smith, Scott Coghill, Lee Gillin, Ian Hawkins, Sunita Prasad, Miranda Sutton, Elnaz Tabrizi, Shannon Beachum, Brian Knox, Tracey Knox, Chuck Southerland, Rebecca Young, John Briley, Nick Pantilidis, Aprile Coghill, Brett Ingalls, Mahita Prasad, Eileen Mills, Diana Fitton, Suzanne Johansen, Angela Whelihan, Paul Alexander, Dennis Ray Jones, Kirk Welch, Jennifer Alexander, Natalie Godwin and Kreston Welch.

Meredith Dean's List

Several area students were named to the dean's list for the fall semester at Meredith College, Raleigh.

Students must earn a semester grade of at least 3.2 out of a possible 4.0 and must have completed a minimum of 12 semester hours and passed all courses taken at Meredith.

The dean's list students included:

Beaufort County — Bonnie Allen, Pantego; Denise Noble, Belhaven, and Laurel Mason Pearce, Washington, N.C.

Greene County — Carlissa Oakley, Route 1, Farmville.

Martin County — Elizabeth Barrett, Oak City.

Pitt County — Mary Elizabeth Dixon and Sharon Edwards, both of Ayden; Sara Beth Fulford, Kelly Johnson and Mary Leslie Joyner, all of Farmville, and Robin Calfee, Kimberly May and Celeste Pickett, all of Greenville.

Army Concerned Over How To Recover Dead In N-War

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army, concerned that recovering bodies from the battlefields of the future may expose living personnel to deadly chemicals or radiation, is trying to modernize its procedures for handling the remains of fallen soldiers.

The Army's concerns, particularly for a war fought in a "dirty environment" of nuclear or chemical contamination, already have led a study group to confront the need for new equipment such as radiation detectors and a new type of pouch to handle remains.

"This has not been a subject that's been popular and so it's been somewhat ignored," says Gary L. Wieting, a logistics specialist on the Army's Pentagon staff who heads the Army's Graves Registration Work Group.

"It is sensitive and must be handled that way. But it really is absolutely time to do this," he said. "Heaven help us, I hope we never have another war. But the issue has to be addressed to reflect modern warfare and techniques."

Wieting's group was formed after the Army's Quartermaster School completed a critical study last August that concluded the military still was relying on methods dating to World War II.

The group held its first meeting last October and is scheduled to meet again this week. The work probably won't be completed before the fall of 1988.

Besides the prospect of soldiers being killed as a result of nuclear, chemical or biological war, the group is considering what new technologies are available for use in a war zone to assist in identification of remains and what can be done to automate the process of tracking remains through what is now a maze of paperwork.

The group also is exploring the touchy subject of performing temporary burials in a war zone until remains can be transported home, and has asked the chief of chaplains to develop a non-denominational memorial service "for non-clergy personnel to perform at temporary interments."

"We don't plan to do that unless we absolutely have to," Wieting said in an interview last week. "But if we are forced to inter, we will absolutely go back. That is our national policy. We will always go back and bring those boys home."

The group includes about 30 officials, including representatives from the Air Force, Navy and Marines. But under military procedures, the Army bears primary responsibility for handling the combat casualties of all services.

Wieting said his group has a relatively simple charter: Use fresh approaches "to carry graves registration into the 21st century; to quickly and reverently recover and evacuate remains ... on the future battlefield."

Although the Quartermaster School's study is classified, an unclassified executive summary has been released. It discloses recommendations to the working group to consider automating the Army's system for identifying and handling remains, including the purchase of mini-computers for graves reservation specialists.

It also calls for research in such areas as the use of bar-code tags that can be scanned electronically to keep track of casualties as they are transported home.

Also recommended were studies of the use of automated, digital X-ray equipment to produce records on remains in the war zone for later use in positive identification, and even the use of "micro dot tooth tags" — tiny computer chips with identifying information that can be "cemented" with resin on a soldier's tooth.

Much of the study, however, focused on the problem of war involving nuclear, biological or chemical weapons. The military calls that an "NBC environment," and the study asserted: "There is no doctrine for graves registration operations in a NBC environment."

It added that Army specialists need training in ascertaining the levels of contamination on the battlefield, protecting themselves while recovering remains and handling contaminated remains.

The study found that all soldiers need some rudimentary training in handling casualties they encounter on a nuclear or chemical battlefield.

Owners Of 'Lemons' Unite To Complain

LATONIA, Ky. (AP) — Their cars have leaked floods of fluids, died dozens of deaths, and made more trips to the garage than to the grocery store. Now, the owners of such lemons are uniting to show displeasure to automakers.

About 30 people turned out Monday night for the initial meeting of the American Lemon Club, a grass-roots effort to put the squeeze on automakers who put clunkers on the road.

"It's really tough to try to fight them, especially if you're doing it alone," said co-founder Pat Trimble of Silver Grove. "I think from now on, they're going to get the message."

Their message: end the horror stories like those shared Monday night.

"The story of my life is trying to get a car that will run," lamented Pat Willman, 40, of Ludlow, who listed a litany of problems with his two cars.

Mark Owen of Dayton, said he bought a 2-year-old used car from a dealer and immediately got a taste of what to expect.

"It turned out to be a lemon," Owen said. "He gave me a complimentary tank of gas. As soon as I got it home, it was leaking all over the driveway."

Ms. Trimble, who has had plenty of car troubles of her own, offered this definition of a lemon: "It's a car that if you get it to start, when it drives down the road it will leak everything

'Peace Piper' Sues To Keep Smoking

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — When Erwin L. Rupert II spreads his gospel, he lights up a peace pipe. But the convert to Native American ways says that won't be possible when the city's ban on smoking in public takes effect.

The Harvard Divinity School student and law school graduate sued the city last week in Middlesex Superior Court, saying the ban, which begins March 7, will infringe on his religious freedom.

Rupert's specific complaint is that the smoking ban would prevent him from going into any Cambridge church to explain the tobacco-worshipping Society of the Peace Pipe.

"If I got invited to a church somewhere to talk about my religion, I would want to pass my pipe around," he said.

In addition to saying he is a member of the peace pipe society, the 31-year-old Rupert said he is a born-again Christian, minister and only member of the "New World Church," an initiate in Native American rites.

In his lawsuit, Rupert said he went to New Mexico after getting out of the Air Force in the 1970s. He lived there two years with Navajos and Apaches and was initiated into their culture, he said.

Simplification

Confusion reigns with the new W-4 form — so much so that the Internal Revenue Service plans to revise it.

Once the form was completed simply by stating the number of dependents you planned to claim when you filed your tax return for the calendar year.

With the new tax laws came a form which involves relatively complicated computations that have little to do with the actual number of dependents one is claiming.

The cries of anguish went up from millions of citizens and reached the halls of Congress. When Congress hears cries from enough citizens the government listens. Thus the planners are at work on a new W-4 form.

Until it is developed, however, taxpayers will still have to grapple with the old-new one. What they put down is important because it can mean the IRS will receive too little money from the taxpayer to meet the tax obligation at year's end or it will receive too much. Too little could mean a penalty to be paid by the taxpayer. Too much means the government has the taxpayer's money interest free for a period of time until the refund check is received.

Thus the taxpayer is left where he was for the time being. The W-4 form calculations still must be made to arrive at some reasonable amount of income tax withholding which will end or less balance with the tax obligation at the end of the year. For many that involves additional income other than wages and deductions like interest paid on a home loan.

After that all we can do is await the simplified W-4 form and hope it meets our needs in a way we can understand.

Few Changes

A Roper Organization survey of what goes into the American Dream found that dream alive and well; hewing rather closely to realistic and traditional elements.

More than 1,650 adult Americans were questioned. In the field of education, 84 percent mentioned importance of high school and 77 percent included the sending of one's children to college. A slightly smaller percentage put a college education for themselves as a priority item. (Maybe they included individuals who saw themselves as "over the hill" insofar as sharing that dream.)

Eighty percent underlined importance of freedom to choose how to live. Achieving financial security was, of course, a common ingredient. Owning a home was important to 78 percent of the respondents.

Overall, the survey found Americans are optimistic about available opportunities for their own changes of upward mobility, self-fulfillment or ability to pursue their goals. Ninety percent said they believed they have at least the same level of opportunities as most other Americans and almost half believed more opportunities exist today than in the past.

Ninety-five percent of those surveyed said a good parent was among the most important elements and 90 percent gave a high priority to a good marriage.

Oddly enough, more than half believed their dreams will be harder to attain a generation from now. That in itself should be an incentive for those who share that fear to work for a more promising future.

Drug abuse was seen as the greatest threat to the American Dream, followed by crime, the large federal deficits and a decline in the quality of the environment.

Whites were more optimistic about the dream than blacks. Thirty-three percent of whites said the dream is very much alive while 21 percent of blacks held that belief.

Too bad we have no similar survey made 40-50 years ago at hand to compare with the 1987 findings. The results might not have been so very far apart.

Wooing The 'Baby Busters'

WASHINGTON — "The Navy: It's not just a job. It's an adventure."

"The Air Force: We do more before 9 a.m. than most people do all day."

"Earn a degree in leadership. Be a Marine officer."

Rugged slogans like these have become commonplace in magazines and on the airwaves. Over the past 10 years, the armed forces have invested heavily in flashy ad campaigns designed to lure high school graduates into their programs.

But lately, the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines haven't been the only ones playing the enrollment game. Worried about declining enrollments, even many prestigious universities have turned to TV commercials and the like to attract applicants. Those high schoolers who are now waiting to hear whether they've been accepted to their chosen colleges or trade schools, or who are preparing to sign on with the military — or both — are the most "expensive" class, in terms of advertising dollars spent to court them, in history.

The wooing of the 18-year-old to higher education is a booming business. And it will get bigger. "In the old days," one college dean of admissions told Advertising Age, "marketing was something you learned in school. It wasn't something the school did." No more. The "baby bust" generation is coming of age.

Officially, the last baby boomers were born on Dec. 31, 1964. People born since then — folks who are now 22 years old and younger — are fundamentally different demographically from their older siblings and parents, because they are part of a shrinking pool rather than an expanding one.

In the mid-1970s, many local school districts were forced to close and consolidate schools, in order to economically handle smaller numbers of youngsters. Now, those students are older. Half a million fewer kids are expected to graduate high school this year than did 10 years ago, a drop of over 18 percent.

In order to keep their seats filled, more than two dozen major colleges and universities spent over $1,000 per week apiece on television commercials through September of last year, reports a New York ad industry newsletter. Near the head of that class, for example, is respected St. John's University of greater New York, which spent $145,000 for more than a dozen different TV spots during the first nine months of 1986.

There are, of course, a number of institutions, notably those in the Ivy League, which without extensive advertising manage to attract six to seven times more applicants than they can accept. But for those schools without such "brand names," the search for qualified high schoolers is demanding.

It's no surprise that much of the advertising stresses financial benefits. The armed forces have plied this angle longest: since 1980, the Army College Fund, and other military programs which can allow recruits to save upward of $25,000 for college, have been major selling points. A page of the best-selling magazine of 1987, the Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue, promises teens, "We (the Army National Guard) not only give you the money for college. We also give you the time."

Colleges, too, are leaning heavily on money and careers in their advertising. Boston's Northeastern University, whose $376,000 was the most spent on TV ads in the college market during the first three quarters of last year, promotes "education that works," whereby full-time students are employed for alternate semesters by local businesses. Career potential is a common theme in many other college media campaigns.

It's hard to fault higher education for catering to career interests. But one wonders whether financial gain as such is the basis on which 18-year-olds ought to be encouraged to choose their post-secondary institution.

Consider the armed forces. Their promotions have successfully highlighted the character-building and maturing aspects of military service. And even their offers of tuition money, as seen in Sports Illustrated, have carried with them the implicit message that education is an experience to be valued in and of itself.

Public Forum

To the editor:

An announcement made in the Jan. 28 edition of The Daily Reflector called attention to a show called "Galaxy of Stars." It is sponsored by the American Senior Citizens Association. We have received a number of inquiries regarding the show and the sponsor. The Pitt County Council on Aging is not affiliated in any way with the association and is not a sponsor of the show.

Subsequent announcements and a television program have caused some confusion on the matter. We hope this will clarify where we stand.

Jeffrey McAllister,
executive director
Frank G. Fuller,
chairman
Pitt County Council on Aging

To the editor:

The act of lobbying, defined by Webster as attempting to influence public officials, is as basic to American democracy as the patriots' cry for "no taxation without representation." In its infinite wisdom, the Internal Revenue Service now proposes new rules that will force many charitable foundations to stop lobbying in order to maintain tax-exempt status. Yes, Virginia, the same government that gives these foundations tax-exempt status because they operate in the public's interest now wants to silence their efforts to influence the public's policymakers.

Not to be undone by the same folks who recently brought us the "simplified" W-4 worksheet, the coalition protesting the new I.R.S. rules already includes the American Cancer Society, Catholic Charities USA, Goodwill Industries of America, Physicians for Social Responsibility, the American Symphony Orchestra League and the Sierra Club. Thankfully, individuals can still lobby their hearts out and in this instance, can have the greatest impact on the I.R.S. through their Congressional delegation. Write directly to Senator Terry Sanford, Dirksen Office Building, and Representative Walter B. Jones, 241 Cannon Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20215. Ask them to use all their influence to persuade the I.R.S. to withdraw its proposed regulations governing lobbying by public charities.

Diane B. Hankins, member
Cypress Group of Sierra Club

To the editor:

The answer for new school district lines is not as difficult as one may think. The new district lines should reflect educational needs, sound fiscal management and minimal emotional trauma caused by changing schools.

The new elementary school was originally built to accommodate the overflow of students in the Robinson-Cox area. To accomplish these goals, the original district line proposals, with a few minor adjustments, is obviously the most sensible plan to adopt.

Kristi Clark
Winterville

To the editor:

In response to those who may think otherwise, there is absolutely no construction in progress at W.H. Robinson, except for fixing door knobs, leaks in the bathroom, etc.

We are all concerned about capital outlay funds and who will be recipients. Let us remember the original agreement between the city and the county schools. In the merger proposal, it was stated that capital outlay funds would be earmarked for the "old county schools." These funds were to cover the repair of existing structures, replace outdated structures and add additions where necessary.

It is the responsibility of elected officials and school personnel that the limited funds be used wisely and that their promises be adhered to.

Bill Fagundus
Winterville

To the editor:

As a past Pitt County school board member, I realize the complexity of the task the present board now faces. Changes in a school system are always accompanied with mixed emotions by children and parents. When looking at the proposals at hand, let us place special emphasis on what is in the best educational and emotional interest of the children.

The New School was originally built to alleviate the overcrowding of the W.H. Robinson and A.G. Cox schools. In using the New School as intended it will allow for a minimal amount of busing. I, a grandparent, seriously doubt many parents want their children bused for long periods of time.

In order to minimize the emotional upheaval of some students, the Grandfather Clause would be beneficial. It would benefit children presently in the system and their siblings through high school.

A.D. McLawhorn
Winterville

To the editor:

Many views and opinions continue to surface concerning redistricting and the New School. The original proposal of the school board to relieve the overcrowded conditions at W.H. Robinson and A.G. Cox by using the New School seems to be the best plan at this time, with a few minor changes. Children and their parents are waiting for an answer about where to enroll for the next school year. Let us move on that immediate concern now. I don't believe it is the time to try and solve all the problems that come with merger, such as redistricting the whole county-city, or throwing all the capital outlay funds into a general pot. These problems and their solutions need to be studied and evaluated over a period of time so that wise decisions can be made. Let the school board set some long range goals, but for now let us be cost-efficient, move as few students and faculty as possible by using the New School as intended. Implement the Grandfather Clause and allow families the time needed to adjust to a new system and the changes that will inevitably come.

Strength For Today

Movements to improve the condition of mankind have been discussed for hundreds of years. Out of such hopes has come the dream of Utopia. But very few people, when they use the term "Utopia," realize that it means literally "no place." Utopia has never existed and never will. Throughout our lives all of us have to face a world order far removed from the exalted dreams of Utopian reformers.

Does this mean that all attempts at reform should be abandoned? By no means. While Utopia is only a dream, the world can be improved in manifold ways using means that are readily available.

But this will require a change in attitude on the part of all of us. We must admit our own failings and acknowledge that improvement can come only when we try to follow the will of God rather than our own wills.

Redefining AMB Treaty Will Disrupt Arms Balance

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has launched a concerted effort to lock future administrations into his flawed Star Wars program.

As revealed over the past few weeks, the administration now plans to reorient the Strategic Defense Initiative from a long-term exploratory research effort to a phased early-deployment program. By refocusing the program on near-term objectives, the administration apparently hopes to stimulate congressional and public support for a program of such magnitude that its momentum will be unstoppable. To eliminate legal barriers, the administration also plans to unilaterally reinterpret key provisions of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty in a manner that would destroy the treaty's intent and lead to its early demise.

Pursuit of this plan will destroy any lingering prospects for progress in arms control during Reagan's term. Such disregard for international commitments, as demonstrated by the tortuous reinterpretation of the ABM Treaty, will further reduce U.S. international credibility, already severely weakened by the Iran-contra scandal. If the plan should succeed, Reagan's legacy will be a major acceleration in the strategic arms race, vast new military demands on the budget and a major reduction in U.S. security.

Formal announcement of these decisions has been slowed, but not altered, by extremely negative reactions from congressional leaders and North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies, who had not been consulted. On Feb. 6, in a remarkably blunt letter, Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., warned the president that a unilateral reinterpretation of the treaty as ratified by the Senate "would provoke a Constitutional confrontation of profound dimensions." Moreover, lack of support from the military services has complicated the administration's plans. The day before, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, in congressional testimony, did not support making any early deployment decision, because sufficient information was not available.

Confronting such pressures, Secretary of State George P. Shultz announced on national TV last Sunday that the administration would not implement its reinterpretation of the treaty without consulting Congress and the NATO allies.

The administration was so anxious to launch the new crusade for "Star Wars" that it seriously considered making the deployment decision in the absence of an agreed program. Attorney General Edward Meese III put the case for early deployment bluntly: "It will be in place and can't be tampered with by future administrations." While the president's desire to lock his successors into his unattainable vision of an impenetrable defense was predictable, the support within the administration for these unnecessary and premature decisions suggests that some advisers see the deeply divisive national debate it will generate as a welcome diversion from the increasing political damage of the Iran-contra scandal.

Far from implementing the exotic technologies that are confidently heralded by SDI propagandists, the early deployment program has instead fallen back on upgraded technical approaches originally rejected 10 to 25 years ago. The first layer of the three-layered defense will apparently depend on satellite borne rockets that will use infra-red sensors to home in on Soviet missiles during their launch phase. The rockets would destroy the launchers by direct hits, now described as kinetic kill. This is the same concept as the Bambi ABM system cancelled in 1962, for lack of technical promise. The second level would depend on radar-controlled ground-based missiles equipped with infra-red sensors designed to seek out and collide with warheads outside the atmosphere. The third layer would perform the same mission within the atmosphere. This is essentially the old Safeguard ABM concept, abandoned in the early 1970s as cost ineffective, with homing sensors substituted for nuclear warheads.

The new systems for early deployment are technically flawed for exactly the same reason as the earlier versions. The satellites in the first layer and any radars controlling the second and third layers would be extremely vulnerable targets, and there is little likelihood the system would survive long enough to perform. The first layer could easily be defeated by Soviet deployment of shorter burn boosters. The second layer would easily be overwhelmed by decoys, for which no satisfactory means of discrimination will even in principle be available. The ability of the final stage to operate at all in a nuclear environment is questionable. There is no prospect that such a system will meet the administration's own criteria for deployment: technically feasible, survivable and cost-effective at the margin. Little wonder the Joint Chiefs are unwilling to support a deployment decision at this time.

The ABM Treaty clearly stands in the way of the development, testing and deployment of such a system, as well as more advanced systems based on more exotic technologies. In October 1985, seeking to remove this barrier, Robert C. McFarlane, then Reagan's national security adviser, announced to an amazed world that administration lawyers had discovered the ABM Treaty allowed rather than banned testing and development of space-based and other mobile defensive systems — provided they were based on new physical principles such as lasers. This remarkable reinterpretation is contrary to the obvious meaning and fundamental objectives of the treaty, the Senate's understanding during the ratification process and U.S. and Soviet interpretation and actions for 13 years — until October 1985. It was also contrary to the understanding of all U.S. negotiators, except one now in the government, who reversed his position after the announcement of the reinterpretation. This may seem a rather arcane debate, but acceptance of the new "broad" interpretation would gut a central provision of the treaty and create a loophole large enough to accommodate work on an advanced ABM system up to final deployment.

Nominees Abound For Hypocrisy Awards

WASHINGTON — Given the richness of the subject, the daily examples of new offenses and the plethora of nominees, it's difficult to pick the winner of the American Hypocrisy Award of 1987. It is, after all, early in the season, and many more choices are sure to be available. Here, though, are a few of the leading entries:

•Democratic congressional leaders, representing the party of the people and purity in public life, who come to power warning against the excesses of big business and corporate greed — and then immediately put the arm on fund-raisers and lobbyists, demanding double the going price for access.

•All members of Congress who voted against giving themselves a deserved pay raise — and then happily took the money through a shameful and cowardly bit of legislative legerdemain.

•Liberace's doctor, who claimed that "a watermelon diet" helped cause the entertainer's death — not the AIDS virus that, in fact, did help kill him. On reflection, this whopper might better be placed in the American Duplicity Award category, also fat and growing this year.

•Everyone in the White House, from President Reagan down, who has lectured U.S. allies about not dealing with terrorists and reiterated America's steadfast policy against having anything to do with modern barbarians, radical or otherwise — despite daily proof that U.S. policy has been to do exactly that.

Deserving though all these are, here's a personal choice for the leading contender in this year's genuine American hypocrisy-in-action sweepstakes: the television networks, for refusing to accept condom advertising.

What an exquisite example of hypocrisy. The networks, as fully engaged in the business of selling sex as any area of American life, are demurely rejecting condom commercials.

No matter what rationale is offered for this rejection, and they range from questions about morality and public taste to concern about offending innocent sensibilities, none stands up under serious examination. Or not so serious, either, considering what the networks routinely deem permissible public fare, for a profit, of course.

'Here's a personal choice for the leading contender in this year's genuine American hypocrisy-in-action sweepstakes: the television networks, for refusing to accept condom advertising.'

On virtually any network at any hour, day or night, one can see sexual themes highlighted in abundance. The daily daytime soaps, I recently had a chance to observe as I whiled away the time with fellow prospective jurors in District of Columbia Superior Court jury lounge, thrive on them. It's not a sly, insinuating sort of sexual depiction, but scene after scene of panting couples popping into and out of bed.

Network daytime talk shows routinely discuss, in clinical and anatomically explicit detail, sexual functions and dysfunctions, the quality and variety of orgasms, the kinds and uses of contraceptives, patterns of male and female homosexuality, the pluses and minuses of affairs. They also offer discussion about everything viewers probably don't want to know about abortion, adultery and venereal disease, for starters.

At night — well, watch J.R. & Co. demonstrate how to glamorize infidelity on "Dallas." These and other immensely popular and profitable TV programs are proof that, in the world of television, sex is still the big best-seller.

When it comes to products advertised over network TV, the day has long passed when old taboos were operative about mentioning anything involving bodily functions.

Were it not so serious, the furor over condom commercials would be amusing, proof despite all evidence otherwise that the spirit of blue-nosed Puritanism still thrives in the supposedly licentious America of the '80s. The United States faces a public-health problem of great magnitude in the growing numbers of people who have contracted AIDS, in large part through sexual transmission.

Until a cure is found, the only certain safeguard lies in educating people how best to avoid contracting it. One means is sexual abstinence. Another is sexual protection, in the form of using condoms. Both require a concerted public educational campaign of the kind urged by Surgeon General C. Everett Koop.

In this context, the networks' prohibition against condom commercials should be reconsidered. No one claims that such commercials alone will resolve this public-health menace. They are only a part of the process.

The networks can make a simple contribution by doing what they already know how to do best: make a profit by selling something associated with sex.

'Monk' Harrington Cashes In On His Feasts

By MARCIA STUTTS
 Virginian-Pilot and Ledger-Star
 LEWISTON, N.C. (AP) — For 22 years, the good old boys who called the shots in North Carolina gathered each fall for a back-slapping, oyster-slurping, bourbon-sipping outdoor feast staged at Sen. Joseph Julian "Monk" Harrington's rustic retreat on the bank of the Roanoke River.

The annual affair started out modestly in 1960, Harrington said, and for several years only 300 to 400 people showed up.

Usually held on the last weekend in deer season, the bash would kick off on Friday evening with a meal of such delicacies as pigtail soup, venison stew, steamed oysters, fried chicken and collards — typically washed down with bourbon. On Saturdays, the festivities were concluded with a deer hunt for the 50 or so diehards who remained.

The Democratic get-together in Bertie County "was our one big night of the year. It drew a lot of attention to this part of the state," said Harrington, who stopped giving the parties after 1982, when more than 800 people showed up. "They got too big and too expensive. But I never turned anyone away."

The feasts got bigger as Harrington's political stature grew, and top Democrats from throughout the state flocked to roaring bonfires by the river on those nippy December evenings to hustle support or revel in Democratic solidarity — depending on the whether the nearest election was just ahead or just behind them.

The "political hunts," as Harrington calls them, helped him earn a niche in the Democratic organization and added glitter to his reputation in the northeastern counties. He was elected to the Senate for the first time in 1962, found the job to his liking, and has been there ever since.

This year, he is the Senate's senior member and begins his second term as president pro tempore of that body. That means that Harrington, as the ranking legislator, runs the Senate when its president, the lieutenant governor, is absent.

The annual shindigs also set the tone for a political career which has succeeded, by Harrington's own admission, partly because "I knew a lot of people and a lot of people knew me" and because he did not aspire to higher office.

"Politics was about halfway a hobby with me," Harrington said. "I didn't go to Raleigh looking for anybody else's big job. The fact that I didn't shoot for something else made me a better senator. If you got your mind on higher things, it's distracting. I did not have to sell myself."

He is "durable, stable and loyal," said Gates County native Thad Eure, who holds a nationwide record for durability after 50 years as secretary of state. "No matter how he voted on anything or what he proposed for his local district or for the state," Eure said, "a Monk Harrington judgment call is good."

Harrington has kept his Bertie County flavor despite 25 legislative years in Raleigh.

Tall and grey-haired, Harrington uses a brand of fractured English that not only colors his speech but frequently disarms listeners who are less entranced with what he says than how he says it.

Emmett Burden of Raleigh, a native of Aulander who was a freshman House member from Bertie County when Harrington first went to Raleigh, said the senator's Bertie backwoods style and gregarious nature have served him well.

"He is a dispenser of the Queen's English, and he makes mistakes," Burden said. "But he turns it to his advantage and he gets the message across."

And, Burden added, "He has a down-home way of making friends and of turning those friendships to his advantage. He knows the very top people. His range of friends is a formidable political force."

Born and raised in Bertie County, "Monk" Harrington got his nickname from a brief encounter with one of the more colorful backwoods traditions. "My mama told me when I was about six years old, a boarder at our house took me to see a still," Harrington said in an interview. "I heard a lot of people talking about monkey rum. When we got home, I got to telling Mama about monkey rum this and monkey rum that."

The name "Monk" stuck long after he had forgotten the adventure at the still.

Harrington left high school in his senior year to play professional baseball with a New York Giants farm club in Mississippi.

The war interrupted his baseball career, and Harrington went to work at Newport News Shipyard for about a year before he was drafted. In the Army, he was stationed at Fort Bragg and at the Army Air Force's Overseas Resupply Depot at Greensboro.

After his discharge, Harrington came back to Lewiston and joined the family business, the Harrington Manufacturing Co., which had been founded by his grandfather in 1913.

By 1950, Harrington was running the business, which had become a major manufacturer of farm machinery.

"We were in tobacco and peanuts, and in the '70s, shifted more to tobacco. We did right well for 40 or 50 years," Harrington said.

The invention and marketing of the first successful tobacco harvester during the 1970s, when the leaf's bright promise was at its peak, pushed the company's sales as high as $42 million in 1975. During those years, the Harrington Manufacturing Co. was the biggest employer in Bertie County.

In 1982, two of the company's warehouses had been torched by an arsonist hired by a business rival and fellow legislator, former Rep. G. Ronald Taylor of Bladen County.

Taylor received a 20-year prison term for his part in the fire, which did an estimated $1.2 million in damages to the Lewiston warehouses.

Before he went to the Senate, Harrington's experience as an elected official was limited to service on the town council and the school board. But his zest for the political life had developed earlier when he "worked hard for Kerr Scott to help get him elected governor" in 1948.

Later, Harrington was a county manager for L.H. Fountain, who was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in the late 1940s from the 2nd Congressional District. Before his election to the Senate, Harrington had toiled in the northeast in Terry Sanford's campaign for governor in 1960.

His old friend, Philip P. Godwin Jr., from Gates County, a member of the state Board of Transportation, said the groundwork paid off. "He has a way of working behind the scenes and he has been very perceptive or fortunate in selecting people to support" — especially Sanford, Robert Scott and Jim Hunt in their races for governor.

Harrington took his Senate seat during the social and racial unrest of the early 1960s, and aligned himself closely with Sanford, who was still governor. The new senator had a hand in forming the Good Neighbor Council to help smooth the way for integration.

The General Assembly tried to do away with the council in 1965, Harrington said. "That's when I made my first political talk. We had to have $50,000 to continue the Good Neighbor Council. I was serving on the Budget Committee. I told them this was the very thing we had to have. I got some help and I got that $50,000." He believes his finest accomplishment was helping bring a medical school to East Carolina University in Greenville in 1977. "That has proven to be the biggest single thing eastern North Carolina has obtained. It has made a tremendous difference in our medical care. Part of us used to go to Norfolk or Duke. Now, back this way, people go to Greenville."

Harrington's staying power in the Senate has been secure with the help of his black constituents, who now make up 65 percent of the registered voters in his district. The 2nd Senate District has been redrawn twice since the 1980 census to ensure a black majority.

The frequent changes in the boundaries of his district have been a challenge and a concern to Harrington, for they have changed the character of the geographic area he represents.

"I have served the whole coast of North Carolina, right up to within 45 miles of Raleigh — 17 counties over the past 25 years," he said.

Those changes also gave him competition, and the 1984 state Senate race was the most difficult election he has seen. He was challenged by Frank Ballance, a black lawyer and House member from Warrenton, who cried "foul" when Harrington announced he would run after putting out the word in the 1982 election that he would not seek another term.

"He did not keep his word," Ballance said. "I would have had a different attitude about running if he had not given his pledge not to run again." Harrington argued that he did not know if the predominantly black electorate would support him when he said he would retire, but a strong showing in 1982 against a black opponent and pleas from people in the district persuaded him to try again.

Even Ballance admitted that Harrington still had strong support in the black community. "He is not a racist and he has been fair. He has not gotten out front on all the issues, but he has been fair."

Ballance added that he and Harrington "have no great philosophical differences."

Like other colleagues, he said Harrington's leadership style is based on friendship and persuasion. "He comes and talks with you. I think he serves in that position to the best of his ability."

Cobb Gets GOP Post In Senate

RALEIGH (AP) — Ill feelings from Gov. Jim Martin's tactics in the 1986 election campaign should not prevent Democrats from giving his programs fair treatment this year, the newly elected Senate GOP leader says.

"Shoot, if I didn't talk to any Democrats who said bad things about me in political campaigns, I wouldn't have anybody to talk to," Sen. Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, said Monday night.

Cobb, a Charlotte attorney, was elected Senate minority leader after the other remaining contender, Sen. Paul Smith, R-Rowan, withdrew.

Cobb will replace Sen. Bill Redman, R-Iredell, who is expected to leave the Senate next month to join the state Utilities Commission.

As Senate GOP leader, Cobb faces the task of pushing Martin's programs in a chamber where Democrats outnumber Republicans 40-10. Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, a Democrat who presides over the Senate, is expected to challenge Martin in the 1988 election.

"I think a lot of what the governor's going to propose not only will have a fair hearing but will be passed, maybe with a few Democrat modifications," Cobb told reporters after a closed-door caucus. He acknowledged, however, that the GOP likely would encounter politically motivated jabs at the governor and vowed to fight them.

He said Senate Republicans would try to form coalitions with conservative Democrats as they did in the 1985-86 session, when there were 12 Republicans in the upper chamber.

Cobb, who served three terms in the Legislature in the 1970s before returning in 1985, described himself as a "compromise or consensus" choice for minority leader.

Originally, there were three contenders — Cobb, Smith and former minority leader Donald Kincaid, R-Caldwell. At one point, Smith and Kincaid claimed to have five votes apiece.

Kincaid announced his withdrawal last Thursday, saying demands of his business and family left too little time for the task.

Martin Urges Legislators 'To Join With Me'

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Republican Gov. Jim Martin, who based his inaugural address on a unity theme two years ago, is again calling for bipartisanship as he submits his 1987 program to a Legislature dominated by skeptical Democrats.

"There is ... a time for partisanship, as when we compete for electoral trust and favor. That's healthy," Martin said Monday night in his biennial State of the State address to a joint General Assembly session.

"Yet, there is just as surely a time for bipartisanship, when we must set aside partisanship to unite for the good of all of North Carolina," Martin said in his evening speech, which was televised statewide.

His live audience in the House chamber of the Legislative Building was smaller than usual because a winter storm kept perhaps one-fourth of the assembly's 170 members from returning to Raleigh after a weekend at home.

Martin repeatedly urged lawmakers to "join with me" in his quest to improve North Carolina's schools, fight illiteracy and build the economy. His 38-minute speech contained few proposals that he had not made public in recent months, including big-ticket items in his $19.6 billion 1987-89 budget.

He outlined four major education initiatives: limited statewide implementation of the career ladder plan for teachers; a $1.5 billion loan program for school construction; scheduled funding of the Basic Education Program; and making the position of superintendent of public instruction appointive instead of elective.

Martin declared 1987 the "Year of the Reader" in North Carolina, saying it would serve as a rallying cry for a "coordinated assault on illiteracy" that he compared with President Kennedy's vow to put an American on the moon.

He also called for enactment of proposals in his Blueprint for Economic Development such as establishment of three "agricultural parks" to expand markets for farm products and a one-stop business licensing office.

Martin, whose relationship with the Legislature's Democratic leadership was frigid during the 1985 session, downplayed their differences in his speech.

The governor mentioned only briefly his support of a gubernatorial veto and cutting the state abortion fund. He praised the leadership for promising to conduct less business behind closed doors and for working with him on emergency legislation to reduce prison overcrowding.

He said a bipartisan committee should devise a plan for merit selection of appellate judges and endorsed non-partisan, local election of District Court and Superior Court judges.

Yet, Martin's speech also reflected the political situation he confronts, particularly the likelihood that Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan will challenge his re-election in 1988.

On three occasions, Martin depicted his proposals as avoiding the "status quo," which Jordan declared the state's biggest enemy in a speech to the Senate after the Legislature convened last week.

Legislators reacted politely but coolly to the speech, interrupting only 10 times with applause that the Republican delegation usually started.

Martin called the state's record on secondary and elementary education "our weakest," noting North Carolina students' relatively poor showing on standard tests and calling the dropout rate "embarrassing and unacceptable."

He made a strong pitch for the controversial career ladder, which the North Carolina Association of Educators says is riddled with shortcomings.

"Of course, there are some who would be timid and wait and wait and wait," Martin, a former Davidson College chemistry professor, said. "I say: Let's go forward."

Sixteen of the state's 141 school systems are in the third year of experimental career ladder programs. Martin's proposed 1987-89 budget calls for launching pilot programs in another 12 systems the first year of the biennial and starting part of the program in the remaining 113 systems the second year. In 1989, he said, the Legislature could decide whether to proceed further.

Martin's school construction plan, unveiled last fall, has drawn opposition from some legislators largely because of its cost. The plan calls for issuing $1.5 billion in bonds to create a pool from which local governments could borrow at low interest.

Counties would pay back the state using proceeds from a local-option sales tax increase authorized by the Legislature in 1986, a portion of which was earmarked for school construction, Martin said.

"This plan will get the job done; and it is affordable," Martin said.

Discussing his emphasis on fighting illiteracy, Martin said he would ask leaders of a number of groups to serve on a new North Carolina Literacy Council to be chaired by William Friday, former president of the University of North Carolina.

"I ask you to join with me to direct our minds and our energies to solving this problem," Martin said. "Together, we can chart our course, and boldly proclaim on behalf of everyone in this one united state: 'We are going to read — all of us!'"

Elsewhere, Martin called for: — A "fair roads law" to make distribution of transportation money more equitable.

— Approval of his $29 million emergency plan to expand the state prison system and avoid a federal takeover. He did not mention, however, his support of privately operated prisons.

— A number of major capital projects, including a new Judicial Center in Raleigh and expansion of the state's two seaports, and a $120 million revolving loan fund for water and sewer improvements.

— A 4.5 percent pay raise for teachers and state employees.

ICE, AND MORE ICE — The rails of an overpass in downtown Asheville shows the weather across North Carolina Monday as a winter ice storm glazed most of the state under up to eight inches of sleet. Ice Storm Glazes State; More May Be On Way

By DAVID DROSHAK
Associated Press Writer

A winter storm that left North Carolina huddled under a glaze of ice has been blamed for at least two deaths, and forecasters say a second winter storm approaching the state could keep highways frozen through the end of the week.

"The problem is there's another one of these systems that's developing in the Southwest and we may get hit again by Tuesday night or Wednesday," said Robert Muller of the National Weather Service at Raleigh-Durham Airport. "If this system continues on a track similar to this storm, then we can expect more."

But weather service forecasters said the second storm should not pile up as much snow and sleet as Monday.

Eight inches of sleet was reported in Person and Granville counties, with 4 inches in Durham, Wake and other central counties. Snow accumulations in the mountains ranged from 3 to 6 inches.

Ice-covered roads were expected to make driving hazardous today. More than 1,200 auto accidents were reported Monday morning as the storm swept through the state.

State Rep. Harry Payne, D-New Hanover, who drove from Wilmington to Raleigh, arrived just minutes before Gov. Jim Martin's State of the State address Monday night.

"The last 16 miles were a solid block of ice — I felt like it was an Arctic tundra," Payne said. "I expected to see dogsleds any minute."

On a rural road in Scotland County, a 42-year-old woman and a juvenile were killed about 7:30 a.m. Monday when the car the woman was driving slid on an ice-slickened bridge over U.S. 74 and hit another car head-on, according to Trooper William Bullock of the Highway Patrol. Bullock said both victims were from Maxton, but their names had not been released Monday night.

Willis Cooke, a communications supervisor with the Highway Patrol, estimated that more than 1,200 accidents had occurred over a 12-hour period starting at midnight Sunday.

The hardest hit area was reported by the Highway Patrol at its Salisbury station, where Cooke said more than 230 accidents occurred. The Raleigh station reported nearly 200 accidents, Cooke said.

"It's just terrible driving," said Lt. Bill Lake of the Salisbury Police Department. "Nothing serious though, just knocks and bruises."

On a Greensboro city street, a tractor-trailer slammed into a car and Greyhound bus carrying about 30 people, but no one was seriously injured, according to a dispatcher with the Greensboro Police Department.

Near Winston-Salem, a tanker truck loaded with 8,800 gallons of gasoline overturned on icy U.S. 421 about 8 a.m. and exploded in the median, authorities said. The truck driver jumped to safety just seconds before the explosion.

Cross Along I-26 Will Be Rebuilt

COLUMBUS, N.C. (AP) — A cross that became the focus of a Christmas controversy will be erected again near its original site, a civic club official said.

But this time, the cross will be placed on private property rather than state-owned land, said J.D. Butts, president of the Columbus Lions Club.

Butts said Monday the club is negotiating with a Polk County landowner to put another cross on Tryon Peak in time for Easter.

The club for years put a lighted cross on a state-owned fire tower on the mountain, but was forced to remove it when the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union complained about its location.

NCCLU officials said the cross, a symbol of Christianity, should not be put on state property because that violated provisions of the U.S. Constitution requiring the separation of church and state.

The club took down the cross, a familiar sight during the holidays for passersby on Interstate 26.

But the community rallied around the club's cause and supported its attempt to find a new site, Butts said. "The outpouring of support has been fantastic," he said.

A landowner on Tryon Peak has a tower he is willing to let the club use, Butts said. "We're not planning on anything, though, until we get it (agreement) in writing," he said.

The old cross was 40 feet tall, a structure built of wire and conduit and featuring incandescent bulbs. The new cross will be at least 50 feet tall, Butts said.

The club also has more money to build a better cross. Since it took down the old structure, the organization has received donations from throughout the area and a local newspaper started a fund to pay for a new cross.

"This has unified the area," Butts said. "It's been a very positive thing."

Butts said he is confident the club will have a new cross erected by Easter.

But the members need to get busy soon. "We have to get our act together," he said. "If we don't, we'll all have to leave Columbus."

Debate Growing Over Speed Limit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Western and rural lawmakers leading the move to increase the federal speed limit to 65 mph are bolstering their case with public opinion polls, states' rights arguments and even lessons about teaching children to respect the law.

"A child now sits in the back seat and watches his old man drive and put it at 62 mph, because that is where you can get by," Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., said during debate on the measure last week. "It happens to be that the speed limit is 55. That is a pretty poor law."

But they are being countered by legislators and their allies, largely from urban and Eastern states, whose major argument is safety.

"Every recognizable piece of evidence indicates that speed on highways kills and that trucks and other vehicles operate most safely at lower speeds," says Robert Mann, spokesman for the American Trucking Association.

The Senate passed a highway bill Feb. 4 that would allow states to increase the speed limit to 65 mph on segments of interstates outside urban areas. The highway bill approved by the House on Jan. 21 would retain the 55 mph limit. Conferees from the two chambers are expected to begin meeting this week.

Part of the dispute is tactical. According to the office of Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho, chief Senate supporter of the higher speed limit, the bill would allow higher speeds on 33,910 miles of the 43,291 miles of interstate.

Al Lauerdorf, traffic safety specialist with the National Safety Council, which favors the lower limit, says, "We look at that as probably an opening. If they get that, probably they'll go further."

The American Automobile Association, which favors allowing states to set higher speed limits, commissioned a poll last September asking whether speed limits should be increased on rural interstates. The results: 56 percent said yes and 40 percent said no.

The telephone survey of 1,014 randomly selected adults had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percent, and represented a reversal of an identical poll in 1985, when 43 percent said speeds should be increased and 55 percent said no.

The lower limit was instituted in 1974 in response to the oil embargo. Symms argues "the energy scare has passed" and says the 55 mph limit costs 1 billion additional hours of passenger time each year.

But House supporters of 55 such as James Howard, D-N.J., chairman of the Public Works and Transportation Committee, disagree.

"My main argument for 55 is it saves fuel, it saves lives and it saves money," Howard says.

Howard and his allies say the lower speed limit saves about 167,000 barrels of oil daily, and reduces automobile maintenance costs because cars run more efficiently at the lower speed. And they say the billion extra hours of passenger time works out to an average of one minute for each car trip.

But their major point is lives saved.

The National Safety Council, the Chicago-based group that monitors highway issues, estimates that because of the 55 mph speed limit, 20,000 to 36,000 lives have been saved since 1974.

Symms and his supporters say, however, that part of the reason for the decline in fatalities has been improved auto and road technology, and less driving due to higher gasoline prices.

Scarritt School

DURHAM (A) — Scarritt Graduate School in Nashville, Tenn., may become part of Duke Divinity School by the summer of 1988, Scarritt officials said Monday.

Scarritt would become a part of Duke's Divinity School, according to Steve Brannon, vice president of Scarritt.

"Negotiations with Duke are forthcoming," Brannon said. "We entertained affiliation with Vanderbilt, SMU (Southern Methodist University) and Emory, as well as Duke. Each one of those universities offered something different. We are excited about the possibility of affiliation with Duke."

Scarritt Graduate School has 112 master's and doctoral degree candidates in the fields of Christian education and church music.

If negotiations succeed, Scarritt would sell its property in Nashville, a 10-acre campus with Gothic-style buildings located two blocks from Vanderbilt University.

Money from the sale then would be used to open the Scarritt Center for Christian Education at Duke. Money from the school's $4 million endowment would be used to set up a foundation for the Scarritt Center.

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — Authorities found a building equipped to grow thousands of marijuana plants Sunday and charged a Burke County man with possession of marijuana with intent to sell and distribute.

Barry James Reid, 43, was being held in the Burke County Jail Monday under $50,000. He was arrested Sunday morning on DWI charges, Burke County authorities said.

Authorities found the full-scale growing operation in the old Whitehall Galleries Ltd. near Bridgewater Road Sunday afternoon. There was no one in the building at the time of the search.

In the building, authorities found 100 two-foot marijuana plants worth an estimated $160,000, growing lights, several hundred pounds of potting soil, a watering system and light and soil measuring devices, authorities said.

Officers said the growing operation was in the early stages of operation and that the building had the capacity to grow thousands of additional plants.

North Carolina and has developed what it considers a sound plan for regulating those pollutants.

If adopted by the state, the panel's ideas would help keep North Carolinians from breathing harmful chemicals generated by factories and other sources, they say. Currently, only eight pollutants are regulated by federal standards for clean air.

The panel's nine-month effort was requested by the Division of Environmental Management of the N.C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, which has been seeking to protect the public without placing unnecessary burdens on industry.

Spice Recall

RALEIGH (AP) — A Massachusetts company is recalling bottles of "epicure salt" sold in wooden and plastic spice racks containing 24, 30 or 32 glass bottles of spices, the North Carolina Department of Agriculture said Monday.

Some 3,000 spice racks containing the jar labeled "epicure salt" were sold across the United States by M. Kamenstein Corp. of Gardner, Mass., or White Plains, N.Y.

Instead of containing regular table salt, the bottles may contain sodium nitrite, a curing salt, said NCDA spokeswoman June Brotherton.

"Large amounts of sodium nitrite ingested can cause a person to turn blue, suffer severe headaches and nausea, have symptoms of cardiovascular collapse and could cause death," she said.

Anyone who bought a wooden or plastic spice rack after Oct. 1, 1986, should examine the rack to see if it contains a jar labeled "epicure salt," she said. The jars should be returned to: "Spice Replacement, M. Kamenstein, 206 Central St., Gardner, Mass., 01440."

The wooden spice racks had the model numbers 30W2, 11106-32, 507-24, 23106-32 and 352-24. The model numbers on the plastic spice racks were 4024-21, 4024-22, 4024-24, 4024-25, and 4024-29.

An average, 14 cubic-foot, frost-free refrigerator costs approximately $11.63 per month to operate at today's electricity prices; a non-frost free refrigerator costs $7.13 to operate.

Great Lakes Could Stay High

CHICAGO (AP) — The rain-swollen Great Lakes, responsible for extensive shore and property damage, could take six to 10 years to recede to their average levels with normal rainfall during that time, a study says.

A succession of dry years, such as those in the 1960s that drove lakes Michigan and Erie to record lows, would do the job in only three or four years, it says.

But more wet years like the past two could drive Lake Michigan up as far as 18 inches and Lake Erie up as far as 9 inches in three to four years, the projections say.

In that case, a severe storm would mean "you could have massive evacuations along the west end of Lake Erie" in Michigan and Ontario, said Frank Quinn, chief hydrologist at the federal Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Quinn described the projections to reporters Monday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The rain-swollen lakes Erie, Huron and Michigan are about 3.5 feet above their average February levels, with lakes Michigan and Huron at record levels for this century.

Lake Superior is lower than last year because of dry weather, while Lake Ontario has been able to drain off the equivalent of 2 feet by discharging into the St. Lawrence Seaway, Quinn said.

High water has set the stage for storms to create flooding, extensive damage to homes, severe erosion and road closings.

Lack of ice on the lakes this year has worsened the situation because ice acts as a buffer, breaking waves offshore, Quinn said.

The Newest Name In Mortgage Banking Has A Long Family History.

First Union Mortgage Corporation may be a brand new name on the mortgage banking scene. But our company has been arranging mortgage loans for American families for over 40 years.

You see, until recently, we were Cameron-Brown Company, one of the largest mortgage banking firms in America. And now, we've changed our name to reflect our long association with First Union Corporation, one of America's fastest-growing bank holding companies.

But even though our name has changed, we're not about to change what has made us so successful. We offer a wide variety of conventional, FHA and VA mortgage plans.

We also offer some very attractive refinancing plans. Plus income property loans. And a complete line of insurance services.

What's more, we're providing important new services like relocation financing, which helps corporations move employees from city to city efficiently and economically.

And when you deal with First Union Mortgage, you know you're doing business with one of the most trusted companies in America. A company with a servicing portfolio exceeding $10 billion. A network of over 130 offices located in 33 states. And, of course, 40 years of experience.

So whether you're a home buyer shopping for a loan, a builder, or a Realtor, call the First Union Mortgage office nearest you.

And find out more about mortgage banking's exciting new name.

Childproofing Is Modern Concept

By PEGGY BROWN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

The parents of a newly crawling baby or a faster-than-the-speed-of-adult toddler often don't know quite what hit them. As Dr. Christopher Green, author of the funny and sanity-preserving book "Toddler Taming" puts it, they are experiencing "the collapse of the dream home."

After years of shopping for just the right furniture, the perfect accessories, the best area rugs, the most stylish mini-blinds, parents of a mobile baby often find they have to undo at least some of what they've done. And as the babies become toddlers — learning to walk and run and climb up on chairs and, finally, to pull those chairs over to where they want to go — the most carefully planned decorating scheme can become only a memory.

Childproofing is a modern concept. Dr. Benjamin Spock's advice on "arranging the house for a wandering baby" was revolutionary when he first published "Baby and Child Care" in 1946.

It was the age of no-nos. "People thought in terms that a child has to be disciplined, a child has to be taught — he has to conform to civilization and the family," the 83-year-old Spock said in a telephone interview from the Virgin Islands, where he lives on a boat. "My mother never tried to think up ingenious ways of doing anything. She just told her kids, 'You're not to touch' — and she meant it."

Children are "absolutely determined to explore space and taste everything and test everything, shake everything and so on," he said. Childproofing should help parents "who are frustrated by the child's determination to test everything; and try to keep parents from relying entirely on prohibitions — which, if you succeeded, would turn children into robots, which of course you can't do."

Instead, he said, "it's a practical matter of gradually increasing the prohibitions by getting the child to learn in one way or another that no means no."

Besides lessening conflicts between parents and child, making the home a safe place for children can save a lot of heartache. Hospital emergency rooms constantly see the results of mistakes by careless parents. Babies fall off changing tables, or down stairs in walkers. Or get electrical burns from playing with outlets or appliances. Or fall out of windows. Or drown if left alone in the tub in the time it takes to answer a phone call.

The Long Island (N.Y.) Regional Poison Control Center at Nassau County Medical Center, got 39,132 calls last year. Mostly, they came from parents of young children who had gotten into something dangerous. They'd drunk Drano and ammonia from under the sink; taken aspirin, Tylenol or other medications from a pocketbook or an unlocked medicine chest; drunk perfume found on a bureau or liquor from a cabinet; gotten into antifreeze or insecticides or paints; eaten poisonous plants like the common philodendron or dieffenbachia. None of these children died, according to assistant director Thomas Caraccio, but many were hospitalized for serious injuries.

But with foresight and supervision, parents can set up a household that — as much as humanly possible — is free of risks.

"Expecting a child to take responsibility for their own safety is not a reasonable thing to do," says Dr. Joy Nagelberg, head of the pediatric emergency room at Schneider Children's Hospital in New Hyde Park, N.Y. "You have to make sure you make their environment as safe as possible."

First, read a book. Any number of paperbacks have sections on childproofing the home. Besides Spock, some good ones include "The Childwise Catalog" by Jack Gillis and Mary Ellen R. Fise (Pocket Books); "A Sigh of Relief," by Martin I. Green (Bantam Books), an essential supplement to a first aid kit; "Toddler Taming," by Dr. Christopher Green (Ballantine Books); "How to Parent," by Dr. Fitzhugh Dodson (Signet Books).

After you've educated yourself, get down on your hands and knees and crawl — yes, crawl — like a baby. You'll be surprised at the hazards you may find: a coin on the floor, a frayed cord, a heating grate, an unplugged outlet.

The guideline here is, if it's dangerous — or if you're in doubt whether it is — keep it high up and, preferably, locked up.

Keep the number of your local Poison Control Center by the telephone.

Caraccio says that parents should keep a bottle of syrup of ipecac, an inexpensive over-the-counter medication that induces vomiting, but should never use it without being directed to by a poison control specialist or a physician. Corrosives such as Drano or lye can cause more problems if vomiting is induced.

Move all cleaning products, medications, car-care products and cosmetics to high shelves. Move knives up high. Turn pot handles to the back of the stove when cooking. Keep laundry rooms, basements, attics and garages securely locked.

Keep your water thermostat at the lowest setting (hot water can scald in one second) or, if you live in an apartment, run the cold faucet last so that even the hot faucet starts out cold. Never, ever, leave a baby or young child in the tub.

Put gates on stairs. At the top, use gates that screw into the wall. Pressure gates can give way.

Criminals Divided Into Three Groups

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

Up until now, criminals have been divided into two basic categories: blue collar and white collar. If one person taps another over the head with a tire iron in a dark alley, he is a blue-collar criminal. If a congressman rips off contributors to his reelection by buying a condo for his mistress in Mexico, he is a white-collar criminal.

But the ones no one has ever paid much attention to are the ring-around-the-collar criminals. They're the ordinary, nice people who mow their lawns every Sunday morning, clip coupons for cash refunds, buy Girl Scout cookies and see their dentists twice a year.

At first, they kept a pretty low profile. Maybe they'd park their cars in the middle of two parking spaces or check out of express lines with one item over the limit, but that wasn't so bad.

A couple of them ripped a few pens from their chains in the bank and stuffed a towel or a bath mat in their luggage from the Holiday Inn, but, hey, a lot of people did it.

Eventually, some of them started pilfering books from the public library, and some large losses began to appear on the ledgers. Words like "criminal offense" were being dropped. Later, copying tapes for their cassette players brought about protest from the record industry.

Now, ring-around-the-collar larceny is getting big according to restaurant owners. Diners are lifting every cracker, roll, butter pat, sugar, catsup and mustard packet, toothpick, jar of jelly and candy mint within their grasp. Owners say it is costing them millions every year. These losses even exceed thefts by dishonest employees ... if you can believe that. You know that when someone steals a packet of (ugh) marmalade, the morals of this country are going to you-know-where in a bushel basket!

It's like a ritual. After the bill has been paid, diners' hands work a table like a pair of scissors ... stuffing condiments in their pockets and handbags and taking a second doggie bag so the cabbage rolls won't leak on the way home. I can't figure out the ring-around-the-collar pilferer. My husband and I went on a cruise a few years back where they had unique little jars that held peanuts in the bar. Despite the fact they were sold in the gift shop for $6 and the cruise cost each person $7,000 a week, every peanut jar was stolen.

As I understand it, the bread in a basket has to be replaced for each new diner, so what would be the harm of taking it home, but the rest of the stuff is not really up for grabs.

To date, no one has pressed charges or talked incarceration for small theft of mustard, sugar, crackers, mints or (ugh) marmalade. My suggestion for heavy and frequent offenders would be to put them on an airline from coast to coast. They'd never steal food again.

Bridal Policy

A black and white glossy five by seven photograph is requested for engagement announcements in The Daily Reflector. For publication in a Sunday edition, the information must be submitted by 12 noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. After three weeks, only an announcement will be printed.

Wedding write-ups will be printed through the first week with a one column picture. During the second week, a one column picture will be used with a write-up giving less description and after the second week, just as an announcement.

Wedding forms and pictures should be returned to The Daily Reflector one week prior to the date of the wedding. All information should be typed or written neatly.

Creative Writing Contest Named, Deadline Set

The Greenville Woman's Club has named its creative writing contest in honor of Elizabeth Savage. The deadline for entries in this year's contest is April 15.

The naming of winners and presentation of certificates of merit will be held at the May 8 of the Woman's Club.

The writing contest is open to all students in grades K-8 in public and private schools. Schools are asked to submit an example of students' creative writing process.

Categories are creative poetry — rhyme arrangement including couplet, triplet, quatrain or limerick; syllabic arrangement including haiku, cinquain, lanterne, septolet or tanke; free verse; stories; essays; sonnets and patterned writing.

Contestants must submit two copies, typed, double spaced or in manuscript writing. Each copy should include a title page with the following information name; age; grade; teacher; school and home or school telephone.

Sue Branch, language arts-social studies coordinator, will collect examples of creative writing process from the public schools and Elsie Eagon from private schools.

Exchange Student Goes To Australia

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The interview with Tammy Hunsucker was published in the The News-Times, Morehead City-Beaufort.)

Tammy Hunsucker of Beaufort is spending six months in Australia as an exchange student.

A 17-year-old junior at East Carteret High School, she is the daughter of Ann Smith of Beaufort, formerly of Greenville. Her father is Richard Hunsucker of Myrtle Beach, S.C. Her younger sister, Kathy, goes to Beaufort Middle School.

Miss Hunsucker heard about the possibility of applying to be an exchange student through the American Intracultural Student Exchange program. She obtained application blanks from Mary Johnson at East Carteret High School and submitted her application. Her first choice was to go to Switzerland. In May, she learned that she could be an exchange student to Australia.

She found out about her family in September and is staying in Cheltenham, a suburb of Melbourne, with Margaret and Bob Henry. The couple has three children.

She is attending a high school near the Henry home, and is studying math, Australian history, English and chemistry. She is also taking French II by correspondence through the school.

Most activities and sports are more community oriented than school oriented there, she said, so she is not able to continue her band studies. She has been playing clarinet in the school band since sixth grade.

Miss Hunsucker said that when she wrote to the Henry family, she asked about what kind of clothing to bring and was told to "just bring a bunch of jeans and sweaters."

It is summer there now, and she was warned to expect "a hot summer and a mild winter."

Asked about her particular interest in Australia, she said that she hoped to be able to get a first-hand look at the Australian government at work. She served as a page in Washington last summer and would like to compare the two types of governments.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "On the Outside Looking In," the graduate student who's shy and insecure. He described himself as "nice looking, personable, intelligent, sensitive, with a good sense of humor." Well, I have the same qualities as this male, only I'm 23, not ugly, tall with long blond hair, and I'm female. I also have trouble connecting with members of the opposite sex, but I think it's the way I dress.

I dress like a "biker" — black leather jacket and black knee-high leather boots. Guys, especially the clean-cut ones — the kind I like — usually get the wrong impression of me; they think I'm a "tough" girl and they don't bother to talk to me. I'm not "tough" — I have very high moral standards. I just like the look of leather.

Very often when my friends and I go dancing at a bar, we get offers from a lot of weirdos who try to pick us up and take us outside to tango in the back seat of their car. Meanwhile, we try to think of a nice, polite way to say, "Leave us alone."

Here's a message for "Looking In": Don't give up. I'd love to meet you, but I know that's impossible because Abby isn't running a dating service. So next time you're at a bar, or walking down the street, if you see a tall blonde in a black leather jacket, please stop and get acquainted. — A NICE LEATHER-LOVING GIRL

DEAR GIRL: You say clean-cut guys don't bother to talk to you because you dress in black leather and look like a "biker." The guys whom you call "weirdos," who want to pick you up for immoral purposes, may just LOOK like weirdos — their moral standards might be as high as yours.

The way a person dresses is a statement he makes about himself. If you don't want to look like a "tough girl," don't dress like one. And don't you judge another person's character and motives until you get to know him, and if you're lucky, no one will judge you before he gets to know you. But start with yourself.

DEAR ABBY: So macho Al in Santa Barbara says he hates pants on women because he can't tell the women from the men. How about when you're driving down the street and the driver in front of you has a nice head of hair down to her shoulders, and when you pass her, you notice that "she" also has a beard and moustache.

Now that is what I call ridiculous!

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market kicked off the week with a strong upsurge today.

At 10 a.m., the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks stood at 2,200.79, up 17.44 points after a half-hour of trading. The market was closed Monday in observance of the George Washington's Birthday holiday.

Gainers outpaced losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks by about 7-to-4, with 718 issues higher, 408 lower and 453 unchanged.

Volume of Big Board-listed stocks totaled 29.69 million shares.

While keeping a close eye on every development in the unfolding insider trading scandal, stock traders have also been equally alert for chances to play the market against itself.

Last week's Dow Jones industrial index showed a net loss of 3.52 points, dragged down in part by Wall Street's depression over the new arrests of well-known individuals and reports of investigations into the activities of major brokerage houses.

Even so, traders said, as Friday's stock prices sagged, the slump attracted a host of bargain-hunters, a positive change that was amplified by computerized program buying before some pre-holiday weekend profit-taking set in.

Analysts noted that secondary issues were continuing to strengthen, as blue chips tended to flatten out. Friday's Nasdaq composite index, for example, hit a record 412.16, after rising 3.30 points.

Today's New York Stock Exchange index of all its listed shares stood at 160.67, up 1.11 at 10 a.m. At the American Stock Exchange, the AMEX index was up 1.79 at 318.04.

On Friday, the Dow Jones industrial average closed at 2,183.35, up 17.57.

NYSE volume totaled 184.38 million shares.

The NYSE composite index gained 1.98, to 159.56. The AMEX index gained 1.84, to 316.25.

Contractor Pleads Guilty To Mail Fraud

WASHINGTON (AP) — Martin Marietta Corp., one of the nation's largest defense contractors, pleaded guilty today to mail fraud and making a false statement in connection with travel rebates it should have turned over to the federal government.

The guilty pleas on two counts of mail fraud and one count of making a false statement were entered in U.S. District Court in Baltimore.

The amount of rebates credited to Martin Marietta exceeded $1.8 million and about 75 percent of the travel was incurred on government-sponsored contracts, the U.S. attorney in Baltimore, Breckinridge L. Wilcox, said in a statement. Martin Marietta performed $2.9 billion in business for the Defense Department in 1986.

The U.S. attorney's office said that the Bethesda, Md.,-based company entered into a mail fraud scheme arising out of an arrangement Martin Marietta made with a travel agency.

According to documents unsealed in court, the arrangement would allow Martin Marietta to retain rebates from government-sponsored travel, rather than credit such commissions back to the government as required by the Defense Department.

The travel agency involved in the arrangement was IVI Travel Inc. of Chicago.

A Martin Marietta subsidiary had been set up to perform services for the travel agency.

Wilcox's statement said Martin Marietta's position was that the rebates were initially intended to be earned by the newly established subsidiary.

But the court documents said Martin Marietta admitted that for a year ending in October 1984, the defense contractor received the rebates without regard to services performed by the Martin Marietta subsidiary.

The documents noted the existence of an internal memorandum delivered to a Martin Marietta vice president describing the travel agency arrangement as "very imaginative in getting around the rebate restrictions."

Piedmont Gets Bid

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Piedmont Aviation announced today that Norfolk Southern Corp. has proposed the acquisition of Piedmont for $65 a share in cash and that Piedmont has received an alternate merger proposal from U.S. Air Group Inc.

Opening trading of Piedmont stock was delayed prior to release of the announcement.

Norfolk Southern will prepare a tender offer for the stock, Piedmont said, subject to approval of both companies' boards of directors. Norfolk Southern does not require regulatory approval because it was obtained previously.

Fierce Fighting Reported In Beirut

trol of west Beirut from the Lebanese army in February 1984.

The antagonists battled with jeep-mounted 106mm recoilless guns, .50-caliber machine guns, automatic weapons and shoulder-fired armor-piercing rockets.

The intensity of the fighting prevented ambulances and fire engines from entering many residential neighborhoods where fires burned out of control. Police said several apartment buildings were gutted.

Among the fatalities was a Lebanese Red Cross recruit killed while helping trapped residents evacuate the 12-story El Dorado office and apartment building in west Beirut's commercial district of Hamra. Two other Red Cross rescuers were wounded, according to police.

Syrian military observers, assigned since last summer to restore order to west Beirut, unsuccessfully called a cease-fire at daybreak.

The Syrian observers formed joint committees of Communist, Druse and Amal officials, but police said the committee members came under sniper fire during attempts to enforce a truce.

The American University Hospital, the nation's biggest medical center, appealed for blood donations.

Some of the heaviest fighting flared around west Beirut's Commodore Hotel, which served as a base of operations for many foreign correspondents before dozens of kidnappings drove them from the sector.

The Communists have tilted with Amal since the 1982 Israeli invasion, when the mainstream Shiite militia started eating into the Communist Party's Shiite power base in south Lebanon. The past two years saw shootouts, kidnappings and assassinations of provincial leaders of the two sides in the south.

The Communists fought street battles with the extremist Hezbollah Shiite faction in Beirut last year. That year the Communists joined Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party, the pro-Syrian Baath Party and the Syrian Social Nationalist Party, a leftist Lebanese faction that advocates creation of a Greater Syria, in a new alliance called the National Democratic Front.

American Moslem envoys Mohammed Mehdi and Dale Shaheen, who came to west Beirut on Saturday to seek the release of kidnapped foreigners, were among those trapped in the Commodore by the fighting.

seeking local legislation to levy a motel room occupancy tax of "no less than 3 percent." The money raised by the tax — an estimated $200,000 a year — would be used to promote travel, tourism and conventions.

According to the resolution, there are 1,328 motel rooms available for travelers and conventioners in the county and 3,699 of the present jobs in the county are "travel related."

No action on the request was taken Monday. But commissioners said the board will meet with the City Council in an effort to come up with a local bill to present to the General Assembly.

The board also agreed to submit a preapplication for a grant to finance a drug education and enforcement program after Bethel Mayor Frank Hemingway asked commissioners to consider such a program.

Supported by the mayors of Ayden and Greenville, Hemingway said the proposed drug program could cost $100,000 a year which could be funded 50 percent from the federal government, 25 percent from the state and the remainder from county funds.

Ayden Police Chief Tim Phillips, outlining tentative plans for the program, said part of the money would be used to "make the public aware of the drug problem" in the county and to encourage people to "turn in drug dealers."

Other money would be used to help pay for information of drug dealers through the Crime Stoppers program.

Once information is received by Crime Stoppers, Phillips said, law enforcement agencies would begin undercover operations to arrest the dealers.

Phillips suggested that a portion of the money could also be used to purchase a drug sniffing dog for use by law enforcement agencies throughout the county.

Winthrop Bombs Pirates, 66-52

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

ROCK HILL, S.C. — Three minutes into East Carolina's basketball game with Winthrop College Monday night, the fuse on the Pirate offense began to fizzle, and when the time bomb finally went off a few minutes later, the Pirates self-destructed.

From there on out, the Eagles, only 7-18 on the season, were in complete control of the game, rolling up a stunning 66-52 victory.

"We started the game doing a good job on defense, and our first three offensive possessions we moved the ball well and got good shots and baskets," ECU Coach Charlie Harrison said.

"But then we forced them into six bad shots or turnovers and came back down, did exactly what we wanted to, got good shots and it just wouldn't go in the hole.

"It was just like air going out of a balloon after that," Harrison said.

"We should have had a 10 or 12 point lead at that point, but there's a big difference between should have and did," Harrison said. "They suddenly found that they had a chance to win the game and they did."

From a 6-0 deficit, Winthrop struggled back to finally tie it at 12-12 on a three-point basket by John Weiss with 7:56 left to go, then took the lead on a Kenny Smith shot with 6:35 to go, 16-14.

East Carolina tied it up at 16-16 and 18-18, but at that point went even icier cold that the outside weather, going over four minutes without a point while Winthrop was throwing in eight unanswered points. Greg Washington started it with a jumper from the foul line at 4:59 for a 20-18 lead and after Weiss missed at the foul line, Sean Smith tossed the rebound back for a 22-18 edge. Ted Houpt hit off the break and Kenny Smith added two free throws to make it 26-18 with 2:41 left.

Keith Sledge finally broke the ice over the ECU basket with a jumper from the key, but former West Craven star Lenwood Harris hit two free throws with five seconds left to up it to 28-20. Jeff Kelly was fouled at the horn and made both as the Pirates trailed, 28-22, at intermission

Blue Edwards hit two free throws 30 seconds into the second half to cut the lead to four, but Houpt countered with a three pointer. Edwards hit a turnaround jumper in the lane, was fouled, but missed the chance to offset the Eagle play. He did come back down the floor on the next possession to score and trim the margin to 31-28 with 17:52 showing.

Winthrop eased back out to a six-point lead at 40-34, but Leon Bass and John Williams both hit shots to bring the Pirates back within two, 40-38, with 10:31 to play.

But after another exchange of baskets, Houpt hit two free throws, and Kenny Smith hit two straight baskets up close. Houpt then hit from underneath to open up a 50-40 lead with 5:39 to play.

Winthrop then spread out the offense, opening up the baseline for Harris, who drove in three straight times to score and add free throws for three-point plays, opening up as much as a 12-point edge.

East Carolina's continued inability to hit when it counted finished off things as the Pirates were forced to foul four times in the final 1:10 with Winthrop making five of seven at the line, running the lead to as much as 16, 66-50, before the end.

"We didn't score and they got their rhythm going and did a good job with screens and making us work," Harrison said. "We got good shots but they wouldn't go for us. It's been that way for the last six or seven or eight games."

The Pirates shot only 37.2 percent from the floor, 22 of 59 while Winthrop made a fine 58.3 percent, 21 of 36.

East Carolina wanted to get the ball inside against the Eagles, and was successful in doing so. But they got only 16 of 37 from their three front-court men, most of them taken from no further than 10 feet away from the basket.

The shorter Eagles also outbounded the Pirates, 38-29, led by Kenny Smith with nine. Marchell

Henry and Edwards each had six to pace the Pirates.

"When the ball quit going in, we started standing around. That's why they beat us on the boards," Harrison said.

Harris paced the Winthrop scoring with 21 while Houpt added 17 and Washington hit 11.

East Carolina was led by Edwards and Bass with 16 each.

The win was Winthrop's second in a row after the Eagles had snapped a 13-game losing streak Saturday night with a 90-58 romp over Augusta.

East Carolina, in its last road game of the regular season, falls to 11-14, having lost its last four games in a row.

The Pirates have two games remaining in the regular season, both home Colonial Athletic Association contests. Saturday night, they entertain George Mason, while James Madison comes to Greenville on Monday.

After that, it's on to the CAA tournament in Hampton, Va., on Feb. 28.

State Slaps Brooklyn, 107-79

By The Associated Press

North Carolina State cleared its bench and every player on the roster made the scoring column as the Wolfpack defeated Brooklyn College 107-79.

Senior forward Bennie Bolton tossed in 20 points, sophomore center Charles Shackelford added 18 and sophomore guard Walker Lambiotte had 16 as North Carolina State improved to 14-12.

Senior center Keith Grady led all scorers with 28 points for Brooklyn, while junior forward Frank Gregov chipped in with 15 and freshman guard Spiros Kilpatrick had 13 for the Kingsmen, 10-13.

Brooklyn's only lead was at 2-0. The Wolfpack took its biggest lead at 86-50 on a basket by Avie Lester with 10:11 left. They matched that lead on a three-pointer by Andy Kennedy at 89-53 with 9:22 to play.

The Kingsmen could come no closer than 25 points the rest of the way.

In other games involving Atlantic Coast Conference teams Monday, Virginia took a 74-67 victory over Dayton and Maryland defeated Central Florida 73-55.

Senior forward Andrew Kennedy scored 27 points as the Cavaliers relied on short jump shots and free throws to beat Dayton.

Virginia, 16-8, led from the start, stretching a five-point halftime lead into a 14-point second-half margin through high-percentage shots. Dayton, 11-12, cut the lead to 64-61 on a three-point shot by senior guard

Dan Christie with 2:36 to play, but couldn't get closer.

Virginia didn't attempt a three-point shot in the game, instead cashing in on Dayton's foul problems. Dayton committed 26 fouls to

Runnin' Rebels Remain #1 Team

By The Associated Press

Nevada-Las Vegas remained a comfortable No. 1 in the weekly Associated Press college basketball poll, while Indiana had as much trouble staying No. 2 in the balloting as it has winning games.

UNLV, 26-1 after three Pacific Coast Athletic Association victories last week, collected 50 of 65 first-place votes and 1,279 of a possible 1,300 points from a nationwide panel of sportswriters and sportscasters.

Indiana, meanwhile, paid a price for its 77-75 escape over Big Ten doormat Northwestern. The Hoosiers' lead over No. 3 North Carolina was reduced to a single point.

In keeping with the spirit of things, Indiana needed three overtimes to beat Wisconsin 86-85 Monday night to improve to 21-2. Iowa's 80-73 loss to Purdue and Oklahoma's two defeats by a combined three points prompted a shuffling in the ratings.

The Second Ten was led by Georgetown, followed by Alabama, Oklahoma, Illinois, Kansas, Texas Christian, Duke, Florida, Providence and St. John's.

Last week's Second Ten featured Illinois, Clemson, Georgetown, Alabama, Duke, St. John's, Kansas, TCU, Florida and Providence.

Badgers Extend Indiana To 3 OTs

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The Indiana Hoosiers apparently bring out the best in the worst of the Big Ten.

Having just recently escaped with a close victory over Northwestern last week, the second-ranked Hoosiers were extended to three overtimes Monday night in beating lowly Wisconsin, 86-85.

"They deserved to win the ballgame," Indiana Coach Bobby Knight said of the Badgers. "They played hard and well."

Wisconsin Coach Steve Yoder, whose Badgers are tied with Northwestern for last place in the conference, said that "for guys who have been maligned the last four weeks, I thought our players were just great."

He said, though, it was no consolation playing the Hoosiers that close.

"We've been too close too many times to think about that," Yoder said. "What we needed was a victory, but we didn't get it."

In other action, it was No. 4 DePaul 88, Monmouth 53; No. 5 Temple 84, Duquesne 56; No. 9 Syracuse 96, Villanova 82, and No. 20 St. John's 63, Fairleigh Dickinson 59.

Dean Garrett hit a follow shot with four seconds left in the third overtime to give Indiana the win. Garrett, who led all scorers with 21 points, grabbed a rebound off a missed shot by Joe Hillman and banked it in.

J.J. Weber scored 20 points for Wisconsin before fouling out in the second overtime. Mike Heineman also had 20 for the Badgers.

Steve Alford scored 13 points to become Indiana's all-time leading scorer. Alford missed his first two shots of the game before hitting a three-pointer from the corner with 14:40 to surpass the late Don Schlundt, who scored 2,192 points from 1952-55.

"I feel real empathy for Wisconsin," Knight said. "But the thing that teams like Wisconsin have to understand is that they can't just play hard against us, they have to play that way against everybody. That's why Wisconsin hasn't won too many games."

The Hoosiers, who just got by Northwestern 77-75 last week, improved their record to 21-2, including 12-1 in the conference. Wisconsin has a 1-12 record in the Big Ten and is 11-15 overall.

No. 9 Syracuse 96, Villanova 82
Sherman Douglas scored 25 points, hitting 10-of-10 from the field, and Rony Seikaly and Derrick Coleman had 20 each as Syracuse overcame a 15-point deficit early in the second half to beat Villanova.

Villanova outscored Syracuse 7-2 at the start of the second half to take a 55-40 lead. But Syracuse, led by Douglas, who scored 18 in the final half, and Seikaly and Coleman each with 13 in the last 20 minutes, rallied to finally move ahead, 74-73, with 5:39 left.

Once Syracuse got the lead on a pair of free throws by Douglas, the Orangemen outscored the Wildcats 22-9 the rest of the way.

Doug West led Villanova with 21 points and Harold Jensen had 19.

"They played our kind of game, running up and down, said Douglas. "That's not their style. We knew it would catch up with them. We're at our best when we run."

No. 20 St. John's 63, F. Dickinson 59
Marcus Broadnax hit a 15-foot jumper with 31 seconds left and Willie Glass added two free throws with seven seconds remaining as St. John's edged Fairleigh Dickinson at Madison Square Garden.

Fairleigh Dickinson trailed 54-45, but then outscored St. John's 14-2 to take a 59-56 lead on a tip-in by Damarai Riddick with 2:31 to play. The Redmen tied the score on a three-point play by Shelton Jones with 1:20 remaining and took the lead on the basket by Broadnax, his only one of the game.

Derrick Lewis led four Maryland players in double figures and the Terrapins exploded for 46 second-half points to defeat Central Florida.

Lewis, a 6-foot-7 junior center, scored 18 points, grabbed eight rebounds and blocked six shots as Maryland broke a six-game losing streak.

Malones Wreaking Havoc All Over NBA Opponents

By The Associated Press

While the Boston Celtics were having problems with Utah's Karl Malone, the Phoenix Suns had double Malone trouble.

Karl Malone scored 25 points and pulled down 15 rebounds and the Utah reserves outscored the Boston bench 56-6 as the Jazz defeated the Celtics 109-89 Monday night.

Meanwhile, Jeff Malone tied his season-high with 38 points and Moses Malone shook off the flu that kept him on the bench at the start of the game to score 36 and pull down a game-high 11 rebounds as the Washington Bullets beat the Phoenix Suns 124-110.

"Malone was all over the boards and was running the fast break," Boston Coach K.C. Jones said.

"We had trouble with both Malones," said Phoenix Coach John MacLeod.

In other NBA games, it was Cleveland 105, Seattle 94; Houston 105, Dallas 100; Milwaukee 128, New Jersey 124; Sacramento 124, Chicago 120 in overtime; Philadelphia 111, New York 101; Indiana 112, Golden State 93 and Portland 110, Los Angeles Clippers 105.

Karl Malone scored seven points in the fourth quarter as Utah broke open a tight game, outscoring Boston 26-16. Darrell Griffith, who didn't play in the first quarter, added 23 points, including five 3-point goals, and Thurl Bailey had 18 while John Stockton dished out 17 assists.

"We weren't in sync all night," said Larry Bird, who led Boston with 26 points. "After we went up by six early in the third quarter, everything just fell apart. It seemed like Malone was able to do whatever he wanted to tonight."

So were his teammates. Jones said the Jazz players were "all three feet off the ground. They got the loose balls and the offensive boards. (Mark) Eaton blocked up the middle. They ran their stuff well, they just did everything they wanted. Meanwhile, we were bad on offense and we had too many turnovers."

Moses Malone, who complained of dizziness before the game and sat out the first period, came off the bench to score nine points in the second quarter while Jeff Malone added seven to give the Bullets a 60-49 halftime lead. Moses added 12 points in the third period as Washington took an 89-76 lead.

Walter Davis paced Phoenix with 24 points and Larry Nance added 23 but Washington notched 18 steals and forced Phoenix into 27 turnovers.

"We played exceptional defense," Bullets Coach Kevin Loughery said. "In fact, for the first three quarters that's about as well as we can play defense. When Moses couldn't start, (Terry) Catledge did a heck of a job early to get us going. Then Moses came in and really played well. The Suns played well, but I think we were too physical."

Cavaliers 105, SuperSonics 94
Ron Harper scored 28 points and Brad Daugherty 21 while Cleveland held high-scoring Tom Chambers and Xavier McDaniel to a combined 16 points in handing visiting Seattle its sixth straight setback.

Chambers, averaging 23.9 points, was held to 11. McDaniel, scoring at a 22.4 clip, did not score until 2:55 was left in the game and finished with five points. Dale Ellis led Seattle with 17 points, nearly seven below his average.

"We know that with those guys you can write in the book 20 points for each of them almost every game," said Cleveland Coach Wilkens, who last season was the SuperSonics' general manager.

Rockets 105, Mavericks 100
Houston's Akeem Olajuwon scored 36 points and blocked a shot by Rolando Blackman with 13 seconds to play and Cedric Maxwell made four free throws in the final nine seconds as the third-place Rockets moved within five games of the first-place Mavericks in the Midwest Division.

Blackman, who scored 22 points, could have put Dallas back in the lead but Olajuwon's block kept Houston in front.

Bucks 128, Nets 124
Sidney Moncrief, in his second game since returning from an injury, scored 20 points, 11 in the final period, and passed the 10,000-point career mark, helping Milwaukee to its fifth straight victory, tying its longest streak of the season.

The third-place Bucks are just two games behind first-place Atlanta in the Central Division. The Nets have lost 10 of their last 11 games and 16 of 18.

Ricky Pierce led Milwaukee with 23 points while Cummings and Paul Pressey each had 21. Buck Williams and Mike Gminski had 22 apiece for visiting New Jersey.

Milwaukee Coach Don Nelson said he had planned to use Moncrief only the first five minutes of each quarter. He played 24 minutes.

Kings 124, Bulls 120
Sacramento's Eddie Johnson scored seven of his 17 points in overtime and Reggie Theus hit two clutch free throws with 12 seconds remaining.

Chicago's Michael Jordan, who led all scorers with 43 points, gave the Bulls a 120-119 lead on a pair of free throws with 1:31 left.

But Johnson put the visiting Kings ahead to stay at 121-120 on a 15-foot jumper with 56 seconds left and Theus, who scored 28 points, made his free throws when he was fouled by Jordan after LaSalle Thompson's steal.

Otis Thorpe led Sacramento with 29 points while Chicago's Dave Corzine of the Bulls had a season-high 26.

76ers 111, Knicks 101
Charles Barkley scored 17 points and grabbed 19 rebounds while Tim McCormick had 19 points to lead six Philadelphia players in double figures. With the score tied 20-20 in the first quarter, the 76ers ran off 10 consecutive points and never trailed thereafter.

Maurice Cheeks and Roy Hinson each had 18 points, Andrew Toney 15 and Erving 10 for Philadelphia. Erving did not play in the final period because of a jammed middle finger on his right hand. Patrick Ewing led New York with 24 points.

Pacers 112, Warriors 93
Indiana used Chuck Person's 25 points and a club record 40-point first quarter to beat Golden State.

Indiana led 40-25 after the first quarter, including 12 of Vern Fleming's 18 points. Golden State got as close as 70-66 with 5:23 to go in the third quarter but the Pacers then boosted their lead to as much as 21 points remaining thanks to a 10-0 spurt, six by Person.

Trail Blazers 110, Clippers 105
Clyde Drexler tied his season high with 36 points and Jerome Kersey added 19 in place of the injured Kiki Vandeweghe. Although they had only eight healthy players due to Vandeweghe's back spasms and Michael Holton's bruised thigh, the Blazers stormed to a 19-point lead late in the second quarter.

Trail Blazers 110, Clippers 105
Trail Blazers 88-73 after three quarters, the Clippers opened the final period with an 18-3 run and Earl Cureton's layup with 7:28 left tied the game 91-91. Cureton's two free throws with 2:46 left gave the Clippers their first lead since the opening period at 102-101, but Portland scored six of the next eight points to ice the win.

Rowson Lifts Seahawks Past Boston College

BOSTON (AP) — Senior Brian Rowson scored 31 points, including 19 in the second half, to lift the University of North Carolina-Wilmington over Boston College 63-59 in a nonconference basketball game Monday night.

The victory was the Seahawks' sixth in a row, raising their record to 15-9 while the Eagles dropped to 9-15.

Rowson scored nine points in a 14-9 streak midway through the second half, which put the visitors up 42-34. However, a Boston College surge capped by three straight baskets by junior Tyrone Scott tied the game at 44-44 with 6:04 remaining.

Boston College stayed close for the remainder of the game, but senior Sandy Anderson hit four key free throws down the stretch to steal the victory.

Rowson carried the Seahawks to a 26-23 lead at intermission with 12 first-half points.

Anderson backed Rowson with 13 points and seven assists.

Dana Barros and Troy Bowers scored 15 points each to lead the Eagles.

Career Mark

Milwaukee's Sidney Moncrief (4) puts up a short jump shot for his 10,000th career point during fourth-quarter action from Monday night's game against New Jersey at the Milwaukee Arena. The shot was short and Moncrief was fouled going for the rebound. He made the two free throws to reach the milestone. The Bucks also went on to win the game, 128-124. (AP Laserphoto)

Overlooked Wade Leads Runnin' Rebs

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Standing a mere six feet in a game of giants, it's easy to overlook Mark Wade when he stands on the sidelines with his Nevada-Las Vegas teammates.

Come gametime, however, Wade becomes the floor general for the top-ranked college basketball team in the country. Even though he would rather dish off than dunk, he's a hard man to overlook.

"After so many years of playing this position, you kind of get used to it," Wade said of passing the ball, and the glory, to his teammates. "It's never bothered me because we've been winning. I think I would be upset if we were losing. I'd feel I was not contributing enough."

He has been contributing plenty — in fact, at a record-setting pace — to a UNLV offense that is averaging about 96 points a game.

Wade, a senior, is deep into what could be the best year statistically for any point guard in history and is within reach of NCAA career assist records.

Wade, who set an NCAA single-game assist record with 21 against Navy on Dec. 29, was credited with 12 in an 86-76 victory over California-Santa Barbara on Saturday, UNLV's 26th victory against one loss. That boosted his career total to 294, five more than the UNLV mark held by Danny Tarkanian, son of Coach Jerry Tarkanian.

Wade averages 10.8 assists a game, 1.3 more than the NCAA-record 9.5 of Hofstra's Rob Weingard in 1985. He needs only 35 to break the NCAA single-season record of 328 set last year by Mark Jackson of St. John's. With four regular-season games remaining, he could get that record before the Rebels head into post-season play.

Given those statistics, Wade doesn't worry that he scores only five points a game.

"I think I've been a vital part of this team," Wade said. "I do other things on the court, too. I get things started defensively."

"Mark is a great leader, a great defender and a super passer," Jerry Tarkanian said. "He's the type of guy you like leading the ball club."

"And he's got a great work ethic. He works so hard that it spreads to everybody on the ball club."

Wade, a San Pedro, Calif., native, went to Oklahoma as a freshman, drawn by the idea of being a teammate of Sooner star Wayman Tisdale and being close to his second love, college football. But after a year of riding the bench, he returned to California and played a year at El Camino Junior College.

Then it was off to Las Vegas, where the coach was anxious to find a ball-handling replacement for his son, who was graduating.

Rose Wrestlers Take 4th Place

The Rose wrestling team totaled four second place finishes, two thirds and three fourths to end up fourth in the Big East Conference wrestling tournament this past weekend.

Rocky Mount was first with 188½ points, followed by Wilson Hunt (152); Northeastern (151½); Rose (121½); Northern Nash (91); Wilson Beddingfield (70½); Wilson Fike (53) and Kingston (8).

Coping With Fame No Easy Task

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

When she was 21, Nancy Lopez felt like she was 26. Before long, she was crying herself to sleep at night.

Boris Becker is 19 and feels like he's 24. He long since fled his homeland for privacy.

"When you're young, deep down inside you can't cope," Lopez said. "You think you can, but you really can't."

Sports zillionaires — 15 going on 50, hounded for time and money, pestered by agents and friends looking for meal tickets.

Fame is thrust upon them at an age when their peers worry about acne and dating.

It happened to Dwight Gooden. Mike Tyson, too.

"You wake up one morning, and all of a sudden you've got more money and more attention than you ever dreamed of, more people who want a piece of you than you ever dreamed possible," Michael Jordan said.

It was in her third season that Nancy Lopez's life began to crumble.

Barely 20, she won a record nine tournaments in her 1978 rookie season, perking up her tour the way Arnold Palmer revived the men's game 20 years earlier. She was No. 1 again in '79 with eight victories. She married sportscastror Tim Melton on Jan. 6, 1979, her 22nd birthday.

In 1980, she won four events, three in '81 and two in '82. She lost her golf swing and gained weight.

"I had gotten married, and I kind of stopped working on my game," Lopez said. "I got into bad habits. I didn't practice. I was miserable. I cried every day back at the hotel. I was really disgusted with myself."

She was on the road 10 months of the year, playing in 25 tournaments as a rookie, 19 in '79 and 24 in each of the next two seasons. In her spare time, she managed a growing endorsement empire, which now includes accounts with Nabisco, Endicott-Johnson shoes, Geritol and interests in Japan.

She and Melton were divorced in May 1982.

"My husband really couldn't handle the time that I was away from him and the things I was doing to further my career," Lopez said. She also said she was worried, at one point, that Melton "was marrying me for my money."

Now working in Houston, Melton told The Associated Press he was not ready to talk about the breakup.

Lopez said her false sense of maturity contributed.

"It was an unreal time," she said. "All the time I was winning, I never got to sit back and enjoy it because I was so busy. It's hard for me to even remember what happened because I never absorbed it.

"My biggest problem was getting married at 21. When I was 19, I never thought I would have gotten married at 21. But when I was 21, I thought I was 26. I felt like I was grown up, but I really wasn't."

"The way my career started, I felt like I really was thrown into growing up too quick."

Lopez is 30 now. She was No. 1 again in 1985, setting records for single-season earnings ($416,472) and scoring average (70.73). She took off most of last season to have her second daughter with Ray Knight, whom she married in 1983. Their home on Trowbridge Road, in a pricey section of Albany, Ga., has a batting cage out back and a Volvo in the driveway. Knight won the car as MVP of the World Series with the New York Mets.

Lopez's first victory this season at Sarasota, Fla., was the 35th of her career, qualifying her for the Hall of Fame. It was her dream as well as her father's.

Before she ever went on tour, Domingo Lopez admonished his daughter: "Even if you're the greatest player in the world, and the richest player in the world, you be the same Nancy."

"I told her, 'You don't use people like some women do. They get good and turn their backs on people. Those people are the ones who like you and they keep you where you are.'"

"That's why she's still my Nancy."

Elvira Becker watched her red-haired, freckle-faced son of 17 walk through the lobby of an English hotel on his way to the awards dinner. Boris Becker, who had just won Wimbledon, was dressed in a white dinner jacket — suave and elegant, looking more like 007 than Tom Sawyer.

"He's not our little boy anymore," she said.

Becker, now 19, has since won another Wimbledon title. His earnings in 1986, including endorsements, were estimated at $10 million, and some newspapers report his career bankroll already at $24 million.

West Germans, particularly teenagers, gave him a hero's welcome in 1985 when he became the youngest player to win Wimbledon. The love affair lasted until they found out he had left home for Monte Carlo.

Becker was criticized by reporters and by the German parliament for pulling up stakes. He said he wanted privacy, but he was accused of leaving for tax purposes and to escape military service in his homeland. An "Anti-Becker Club" was formed by a Frankfurt post office worker, and there were death threats.

At the same time, he was applauded at home for being named sports ambassador of UNICEF, and he was still pursued by the media. Demands from the press became so intense he signed a contract with West Germany's largest circulation newspaper, Bild Zeitung, to limit his exclusive interviews.

Out of this mixed bag of adoration and revilement, Becker says he most misses his freedom and lost youth. Others think he's just another spoiled tennis brat.

"It's not easy for me to walk around the streets at home anymore," Becker said. "I can walk in the streets in Monte Carlo. I can go to the movies. I can go to discos, and I won't be mobbed by fans like I am in Germany."

Said his manager, Ion Tiriac: "Being young or being old, you have to worry about the attention. He's handled it decently. He has to get used to it and cope with it."

Meantime, Becker says he has aged beyond his years. "I feel like I'm 24, not 19, like I skipped a few years in my life."

Last month his trainer, Guenther Bosch, quit after Becker spit at the umpire, broke his racket and threw tennis balls at the crowd while losing to a nobody in the Australian Open. Bosch said Becker had poor work habits, and he feared further association with Becker would "put my good name at risk."

As for money, friends say he carefully tends to his fortune, limiting his spending to discos, music and his new girlfriend, 22-year-old Benedicte Courtin, a law student and daughter of Monte Carlo's chief of alien registration. Becker also bought himself a sports car, and a few sports coats, reportedly at Courtin's behest.

It was a Tuesday night in April of the 1986 baseball season, and Dwight Gooden's reputation was about to take another rap.

Before training camp opened, he tried to cover up an ankle injury, and later he was fined for missing a spring workout. This time, Gooden had been detained by police at LaGuardia Airport after he, his sister and fiancée were involved in an argument with a rental-car agent.

"Maybe future pictures of me will have a number under my face instead of on my back," Gooden joked. Mug shots don't seem funny any more.

Those around Gooden characterize him as a good kid, still trying to hold onto a youth he never had, a little out of place in a world of blazing lights and seven-figure salaries, a straw hat at the Metropolitan Opera.

Gooden's trouble may have had its start in Tampa, Fla., where he still lives with his folks, in a new four-bedroom home not far from their old house. Besides his parents, he is surrounded by friends and relatives — two sisters, cousins, nephews and three half brothers.

"Some things about him are going to have to change, let's be frank," said Billy Reed, Gooden's Little League and high school coach. "Sometimes people want to make you do things. Buy this, do that. They think he has all the money in the world. You've got to pick your friends. You've got to say no."

The Mets have asked Gooden to consider moving away from Tampa during the offseason, but they have not pressed the issue because "he's so close to his mother and father, we're afraid of a backlash," General Manager Frank Cashen said. "He really wants to go back to Tampa. That's where he's comfortable."

And he still doesn't want to let go of his youth.

"One time, he's suppose to do a commercial," Cashen said. "He didn't show, so we went looking for him. He's out in the schoolyard shooting baskets with the kids. That's what he wants to do. He's really just a kid. We kind of robbed him of that."

At 19 and already in his third professional season, Gooden was named the National League's 1984 Rookie of the Year with the Mets. In 1985, he won the Cy Young Award with a 24-4 record. He set a hatful of strikeout records and was rewarded with a $1.32 million contract.

That's when the real trouble began for young Dr. K.

The Mets won the World Series, but Gooden had the year of a mortal, 17-6, and failed in two World Series starts against Boston. He skipped the Mets' ticker-tape parade, saying he had partied too much the night before. In November, he broke off his engagement to Carlene Pearson and revealed he had a son by another woman.

Last Dec. 13, Gooden was arrested along with a nephew and three other friends after a late-night fight with Tampa police. He was on his way back from a basketball game when police stopped him in his $44,000 silver Mercedes with "DOC" license plates.

Gooden pleaded no contest to two third-degree felony charges of battery on a police officer and resisting arrest. He is on probation.

"Dwight is fighting himself," said Gooden's boyhood friend, Montreal Expos pitcher Floyd Youmans. "He doesn't know how he's supposed to be now that he's a millionaire. ... It all came so fast to him."

Gooden was told by his lawyer to refuse interviews following the Tampa arrest. The AP attempted to interview him at his home twice, but no one came to the door.

"He's always been a nice kid, good work habits, very polite," Reed said. "Whatever he had to do, he did it. I never even saw him get mad."

The nickname "Air Jordan" conjurs a lofty image, but off the court, Michael Jordan is pretty down to earth — with one exception. He's crazy about clothes.

The Chicago Bulls guard owns about 40 suits and 40 pairs of shoes, and once he made a special one-day trip to a Paris tailor that cost him $8,000.

Still, his basic approach to life is no-nonsense, instilled in him early by his parents, James and Delores Jordan.

"Michael set goals and worked hard to achieve them," James said. "He was never one who thought he could get by without working."

Jordan was 22 when he was named NBA rookie of the year for 1984-85. Though he missed most of last season with a broken foot, he is averaging more than 35 points a game this year and threatening the NBA scoring record for guards.

Jordan is paying the price of stardom, but he's getting back a nice piece of change. The "Air Jordan" sneaker contract alone is worth $2.5 million, and he's in the third year of a seven-year contract estimated at $6 million.

"Nearly everything in the first few weeks were beyond my expectations," Jordan said. "but I've handled everything that comes with the life — the money, the attention, the privileges — the best way I could. I've got a family that keeps me in line, that wouldn't hesitate to let me know if I started behaving different."

"You get so used to being taken care of that you get in a mind-set where you expect it to go on," Jordan said. "Then, one day, you don't have people to screen out the danger, no one to go through the people around you."

Besides the clothes, Jordan has spent some of his money on a retirement home for his folks in Sherill's Ford, N.C. He keeps a BMW in North Carolina, and he also owns a Corvette and a Chevy Blazer, gifts from a local dealer.

"You hear about the problems (with athletes) and you never know if they are entirely true," Jordan said, "but you better realize you're in the spotlight, that people will pick up on what you do. When you do spectacular things, the papers report it. When you do foolish things, you better know it's going to make the news, too."

Soviet Says 'Amerika' Is 'Outrageous' Propaganda

By MARK KNOLLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A Soviet diplomat says Americans watching the "Amerika" miniseries are getting a dose of "laughable" anti-Soviet propaganda.

"We feel it serves very negative and sinister purposes: that of continuing to fan anti-Soviet feelings to perpetuate the enemy image," Vitaly Churkin, first secretary at the Soviet Embassy, said Monday night.

The 14½-hour made-for-TV movie, being broadcast this week, depicts life in 1947 America, 10 years after a Soviet takeover. Soviet rulers are portrayed as cruel and callous, determined to crush any Americans who might try to overthrow their Russian masters.

The Soviet Embassy called a news conference for today to register further indignation over "Amerika."

But Monday night, Churkin sat for a series of interviews — conducted via satellite — with local TV newscasters around the nation, many of them at ABC affiliates televising the controversial miniseries.

He said the program was "outrageous in its concept" and that it reflected "a slide toward cultural fascism" in the United States.

Churkin said the premise of a Soviet takeover of the United States was not only "far-fetched," it was bad drama as well. He said it would make Americans "hate the Russians through the sheer boredom of the production."

He said "Amerika" was "laughable as a work of art."

In interview after interview, he went out of his way to make the point that the Soviet Union had never invaded the United States but that America had in fact, invaded Russia from 1917 to 1922.

OLD MAN — Actor Ford Rainey plays a tough old man unwilling to give in quietly to a world of foreign domination on "Amerika," the ABC-TV series running this week. It will conclude Sunday night.

Ignoring the Soviet reputation for revisionism, Churkin said there is "a cultural tendency in the United States to rewrite history, to change things so that maybe the next generation of Americans would have it completely wrong."

And although he labels "Amerika" as "an insult to the American people," Churkin said he thinks it would be instructional for the Soviet people to see the series so they could learn how they're depicted in the United States.

"Amerika," starring Kris Kristoferson, Robert Urich and Christine Lahti, has drawn protests in this country from groups claiming it would harm U.S.-Soviet relations.

On Sunday, protesters turned out near the United Nations and outside offices of ABC and its affiliates in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and Atlanta. Supporters of the program showed up in Los Angeles and at Yale University.

In San Francisco, 50 Latvians gathered to watch the first segment. Some said it brought back stark memories of a Soviet takeover during World War II.

Monday night in Boston, protester Chris Snow said, "We don't like the idea of focusing on cold-war hatred."

ABC spokesman Tom Mackin said the network had no response to the protests, adding, "They have the right to peacefully assemble."

The network estimated that 70 million people saw at least part of the opening episode of "Amerika" on Sunday night, ABC spokesman Vic Ghidalia said.

Allen Funt Celebrates 40th Year

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In the last 40 years the question Allen Funt has heard the most is: "Where's the camera?"

Funt, America's prankster, is celebrating 40 years of "Candid Camera" in a one-hour special Tuesday night on CBS. It's a collection of some of the funniest moments in four decades of catching people un-awares.

Remember the talking mailbox? The tiny car with the bottomless gas tank? The guy facing the rear of the elevator? The trick telephones and coffee cups? Funt has been tickling funnybones by secretly photographing people encountering the ridiculous and the unexpected since 1947.

"Candid Camera" has been on all three networks and in syndication. It became the 1970 movie "What Do You Say To A Naked Lady?" and the old shows are available on videotape. It contributed to the language the phrase "Smile! You're on 'Candid Camera!'" and inspired numerous cartoons.

"All the bathrooms in my house at Carmel are decorated wall-to-wall with cartoons," Funt said. "One has a stewardess trying to pacify a frightened passenger. She says, 'Sir, the pilot only looks like Allen Funt.'"

The genial, white-haired Funt sat down in his Los Angeles home at the end of a long day of working on the special.

"I've been working on it for the last 3½ months," he said. "The major task has been to look through 40 years of material to try to get some approach to it. CBS wanted more of a story than just excerpts. It probably would have gone faster if I could remember everything. But I'd forgotten about half of the stuff we did. I'd look at film and have absolutely no memory of it."

The show began on radio as "Candid Microphone" and has been almost continuously on the air since.

In 1948, "Candid Camera" was on ABC. The following year it went to NBC. CBS had it the next year. The show returned to NBC briefly in 1953. CBS picked it up in 1960 and it ran for seven years.

The syndicated show was on the air from 1974-78. The reruns are still in syndication and on cable.

Unexpected uses of the show have been found in the academic and medical worlds. Cornell University uses it in a program of psychology and sociology because of the human behavior it displays.

Barker Says He'll Go If Furs Remain

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Miss USA Pageant host Bob Barker said he will not preside over tonight's nationally televised competition if pageant officials continue to insist that semifinalists wear fur coats.

Barker, an animal rights activist who is celebrating his 20th year with the pageant, said Miss USA officials knew of his position on furs and he was shocked to learn they planned to use them anyway.

"They've placed me in a position that would be untenable after speaking at various locations around the country telling people not to wear furs," Barker said Monday night. "I think it would be hypocritical of me to appear if the furs are used."

"To do this, I thought, was thoughtless," Barker said.

The pageant plans to have the semifinalists, who will be announced during the CBS-TV broadcast, emerge from a stage-set ski lodge wearing swimsuits and furs.

George Honchar, president and executive producer of Miss Universe Inc., said the fur coats are necessary because of advertising commitments. He said he would depend on Barker's professionalism not to break his contract.

"I'm really not looking at throwing Bob's number of years with the event out the window," he said after meeting with Barker on Monday night.

Islamic Revival

Iran's recent victories against Iraq may be emboldening Islamic fundamentalists throughout the Middle East. In the past, Islam itself has been able to spread rapidly. When the prophet Muhammad died in 632, Islam occupied only a small portion of Arabia. One hundred years later, it had spread to Egypt and other parts of Africa, as well as through Persia to India and Central Asia. Today, Islam is the second most-populous religion. Christianity is first.

DO YOU KNOW — What is the third most-populous religion?

MONDAY'S ANSWER — Howard Carter discovered Tutankhamen's tomb.

2-17-87 Knowledge Unlimited, Inc. 1987

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY Feb. 18

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Put into motion whatever unusual progressive plans you have now, for soon you find that one who is very impulsive will try to thwart your efforts.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): A new contact has the knowledge that can be helpful to you. So cultivate this person. Be tactful.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You can keep the promises you have made in a most wise manner. Don't permit anything to disturb you.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): An associate shows you how to gain a cherished desire. A friend later tries to change your plans, but hold your ground.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You can produce more at your job than usual. Later you find civic matters need your attention.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Get some amusement or romance set up. Be very cooperative tonight and study something worthwhile.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Talk over with family members your practical matters. Get together with influential people and learn a good deal.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Be certain to get important letters out before you get together with associates. Have some fun tonight.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Get some financial or property affair settled. Plan for greater abundance in the near future.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Get into some personal activities that can be beneficial to you. Be with congenials tonight.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Rid yourself of a problematical affair. Later please your family with the aid of a bigwig.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Get in touch with a dynamic person you know. Plan a trip that will be taken soon.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Today is the best time to handle some worldly affair. Be happy with the one you love tonight.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will have every ability to understand the problems of others and be able to help them to get the right solutions to them. Upon reaching maturity your progeny will want to make a sudden change, but this soon passes and he, or she, is willing to work hard.

king of diamonds and continues with the ace and another.

At first glance, it might seem that, because of the split trump honors, you can hold your losers to two diamonds and a spade. Ruff the third diamond and take a losing trump finesse, then get back to your hand with a heart to repeat the finesse. However, that line has a flaw. After winning his queen of spades, East can lead a fourth diamond, allowing West to score his king of spades by overruffing declarer.

That defense should not be too difficult to visualize, but declarer does have an elegant counter. After ruffing the diamond, declarer should cash the king of hearts and overtake the jack with the queen to take the club finesse! When that wins, declarer discards dummy's last diamond on the ace of clubs and now leads a trump.

Assume the ten rides to East's queen (it doesn't help for West to cover). East's diamond return is ruffed in dummy, after which declarer returns to hand with a heart ruff to lead a second round of trumps. When the king appears, it is all over—the table is high.

ON TRIAL — John Demjanjuk, second from left, listens to lawyer Mark O'Connor, front row right, during his trial Monday in Jerusalem. Demjanjuk is on trial on charges that he tortured and gassed 850,000 Jews in World War II concentration camps. If convicted, he could face the death penalty. (AP Laserphoto)

Demjanjuk Lawyer Claims Israel Staging 'Show Trial'

By MARY SEDOR
Associated Press Writer
JERUSALEM (AP) — An attorney for John Demjanjuk today protested the state's first witness and charged the prosecution was staging a show trial by recounting the horrors of the Holocaust to press its case against the retired Ohio autoworker accused of Nazi war crimes.

Demjanjuk listened to the proceedings without emotion, yawning occasionally and fiddling with the earphones through which he heard simultaneous translation from Hebrew into English.

The trial began Nov. 26, but recessed the same day to give the defense time to prepare its case. It reopened Monday to a capacity crowd of about 400 spectators and journalists in a movie theater converted into a courtroom.

The indictment charges Demjanjuk was the notorious guard "Ivan the Terrible" who beat and tortured victims before turning on the gas chamber engines at Treblinka, a death camp in German-occupied Poland, in 1942 and 1943.

He is charged with "crimes against the Jewish people, crimes against humanity, war crimes and crimes against persecuted persons."

Demjanjuk, 66, claims he was not "Ivan the Terrible" and was never at Treblinka. He could face execution if convicted.

His Israeli defense attorney, Yoram Sheftel, objected to the prosecution's first witness, the director of the Yad Vashem Holocaust museum Yitzhak Arad, who has written a book about Treblinka. Arad's entire family was killed by the Nazis.

Sheftel contended there was no need to explain the Nazi extermination program of the Jews because the defense was not questioning the historical facts.

"The defense does not query any of these points," Sheftel said. Unfolding the history of the Holocaust "is a clear effort to turn this into a show trial for the mass media," he said.

However, the three-judge panel hearing the case overruled the objection and allowed Arad to proceed with his testimony.

Using several props, Arad detailed the Holocaust and Hitler's "final solution" to rid Europe of its Jews. The prosecution intends to present 30,000 documents during the trial.

Demjanjuk was flanked by two policemen. His son John Jr., 21, sat behind him and occasionally leaned forward to speak to him. The audience included Holocaust survivors and young religious Jews, among them teen-age girls knitting yarmulkes, the traditional cap worn by Orthodox Jews.

During Monday's session, several in the audience wept. One spectator shouted that Demjanjuk had strangled his family.

Demjanjuk is only the second person to stand trial for Nazi war crimes in Israel. The government intends to use the proceedings to teach young Israelis about the Holocaust, during which 6 million Jews perished in German-run death camps.

During Monday's session, defense attorney Mark O'Connor said the Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk was captured by the Germans in 1941 while serving with the Soviet army and was interned at the Chelm camp for prisoners of war near Treblinka.

He entered the United States in 1952, became a U.S. citizen and settled in the Cleveland suburb of Seven Hills. He was stripped of his U.S. citizenship and extradited to Israel one year ago.

O'Connor said the charges against his client should be dismissed because Demjanjuk was extradited from the United States on an order specifying he would be tried for murder, not war crimes.

But Judge Dov Levine, chairman of the three-member panel hearing the case, rejected the argument, saying, "The (U.S. extradition) document made it clear that by murder, it meant all the crimes mentioned by the extradition request."

Demjanjuk is being prosecuted under a 1950 Nazi and Nazi Collaborators Act, which allows war criminals to be tried in Israel for war crimes committed outside the Jewish state.

The trial is being conducted under tight security, but Demjanjuk was not confined to a bulletproof glass cage, as was Adolf Eichmann, the only other person tried in Israel on war crimes charges.

Philippine Rebels Holding Villagers

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Communist rebels took an entire village hostage after slaying the community leader, and killed five other people in separate attacks, the military said today.

The deaths brought to at least 50 the number of people killed in rebel attacks since a six-month cease-fire with the government expired Feb. 8.

In a report to his superiors in Manila, Col. Benjamin Aguilar, the provincial constabulary commander in Isabela, said he dispatched helicopter-backed troops to the remote village of Bubog after about 120 Communist rebels occupied it Monday.

He said the rebels killed the village headman and took the residents hostage. He did not give the population of the village, 200 miles northeast of Manila, or other details.

Due to poor communications to the area, it was not clear if the rebels were still in the village today.

Another village official, two constabulary troopers and two policemen were shot dead by Communist hitmen in the provinces of Zambales, Albay, Camarines Norte, Camarines Sur and Iloilo on Monday, the Philippines Constabulary reported.

The slain soldiers and policemen were divested of their firearms, the Constabulary said.

The Communist rebels of the New People's Army have been waging an insurgency for 18 years.

Meanwhile in Manila, President Corazon Aquino signed an administrative order Monday changing the designation of government ministries to "departments," and Cabinet ministers to "secretaries."

The statement from her office said the move was in keeping with the new presidential-style government mandated by the newly ratified constitution.

In the order, Mrs. Aquino said deputy ministers would henceforth be referred to as undersecretaries and assistant ministers would be designated assistant secretaries.

The constitution, which confirms Mrs. Aquino in office until 1992, was approved by 76 percent of the 22 million voters in a plebiscite Feb. 2 and went into effect last Wednesday.

Contras Expect More Aid With Change In Leadership

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — The departure of Adolfo Calero from the main Contra umbrella group will help convince Congress that Nicaragua's anti-Sandinista rebels deserve continued U.S. aid, another top rebel leader said.

Calero insisted Monday that patriotism prompted his decision to quit the three-man directorate of the United Nicaraguan Opposition or UNO, the Contra coalition through which the Reagan administration is channeling $100 million in aid.

But Alfonso Robelo, another UNO director, acknowledged having urged Calero's resignation in hopes of mending rifts in the Contra leadership.

"Calero had to sacrifice himself for this and that's what he did," Robelo said Monday at a news conference in San Jose.

Calero announced his resignation at a news conference in Miami. He retained his leadership of the main Contra fighting force, the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, or FDN, which claims about 18,000 troops. Various other Contra groups, some linked to UNO and others on their own, are estimated to have a total of 2,000 fighters.

UNO long had been divided by a power struggle among its directors and differences of opinion on the best way to oust the leftist Sandinista government that took power in Nicaragua in a 1979 revolution.

UNO was formed at State Department urging in 1985 to bring together several Contra groups. Disputes broke out almost immediately between Calero, a successful businessman under the U.S.-backed regime of President Antonio Somoza, and the two other directors, Robelo and Arturo Cruz, who both briefly sided with the Sandinista government before breaking over its leftist policies.

Cruz said UNO was concentrating too much on military affairs and needed a better image, especially in human rights, for any chance at acceptance within Nicaragua as an alternative to the Sandinistas. He threatened to quit if Calero stayed.

The Nicaraguan government did not comment Monday on Calero's resignation. However, Vice President Sergio Ramirez Mercado, commenting on speculation that Calero would resign, said late Sunday that the Contras and their internal problems were "irrelevant because they have been strategically defeated."

Referring to Washington, he said: "The problem is who directs (the Contras), who gives the money and material resources and who is pulling the puppet-strings in this pantomime."

Reagan administration officials have worried openly that UNO's public disputes would weaken its support among members of Congress who want to see signs of Contra gains before committing more support to the rebels.

The rebels, most of whom are based in Honduras, have made little headway in five years of fighting the Sandinistas.

Gorbachev Plays Up Role Of Host At Strange Bash

By WILLIAM J. EATON

MOSCOW — It may have been one of the most diverse guest lists in Kremlin history when Mikhail S. Gorbachev threw a party Monday for delegates to a Moscow peace forum.

For starters, the leader of the atheistic Soviet state was surrounded by more than 200 religious leaders in a variety of black, white and saffron robes.

There were plenty of capitalists to go with the resident Communists, scientists and glamorous film stars, dedicated doctors and writers with lots of ego.

For old Moscow hands, the presence of dissident physicist Andrei D. Sakharov at the Kremlin reception was the most surprising. Less than two months ago, Sakharov was in lonely exile in the industrial city of Gorky. Thanks to Gorbachev, however, he was freed, allowed to return to Moscow and take part in the peace forum.

Sakharov was besieged for autographs in the morning session and overwhelmed by admirers at the reception; he seemed to love every minute of it.

Gorbachev, who reportedly wanted a diversified group of delegates, obviously enjoyed the role of host. He worked his way around the buffet tables, loaded with caviar and smoked salmon, to shake hands like a Midwestern politician at his own fund-raiser.

He chatted with Yoko Ono, the diminutive widow of Beatle John Lennon, rubbed shoulders with the mayor of Lawrence, Kan., and greeted millionaire industrialist Armand Hammer.

Actor Kris Kristofferson, a star of the Kremlin-denounced American television mini-series "Amerika," had only a bit part in the Moscow production, applauding enthusiastically during Gorbachev's remarks to the delegates.

Writers Gore Vidal and Norman Mailer, both admirers of Gorbachev's audacity in promoting change in Soviet life, praised the session despite their common dislike of "abstract nouns," they said.

"I am intrigued by glasnost," Mailer told a reporter, quoting the term Gorbachev has used in calling for greater openness in Soviet governmental affairs.

Former anti-war activist Daniel Ellsberg, "Megatrends" author John Nesbitt, actor Gregory Peck and Robert V. Roosa, a Wall Street investment banker, also were there.

The Kremlin guests crossed generations. Susan Eisenhower, granddaughter of the late President Eisenhower, had a long talk with Andrei A. Gromyko, the 75-year-old Soviet president. "It was quite a thrill," she said.

Some of the Americans in attendance felt that Moscow was "in" this year now that the relatively youthful (55) and relatively suave Gorbachev was making waves in the world and at home.

Now that Sakharov was no longer in exile, one of the reasons for not accepting a Kremlin invitation has been removed, an American participant said.

"This season it's Moscow that's the hot ticket and not Paris or New York," said one American delegate who asked not to be quoted by name.

The party itself illustrated the "openness" that Gorbachev is advocating.

"He went over very big with this crowd," said one satisfied American delegate.

Six of the nineteen members of the Politburo attended Gorbachev's reception, according to Tass. The news agency said the Kremlin chief had a "lively exchange of views" with Petra Kelly of the West German Greens party, British actor Peter Ustinov and Donald Kendall, board chairman of PepsiCo.

"The reception was held in a friendly atmosphere of ease and frankness," Tass reported, which is Moscow jargon for one heckuva good party.

Irish Voters To Decide Fate Of Prime Minister

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Ireland votes in a general election today that opinion polls predict will end in defeat for Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald but may deny challenger Charles Haughey an outright majority.

An absolute majority for Haughey in the 166-seat Dail, or lower house of the Irish Parliament, would mean a remarkable comeback for a politician who has served two abbreviated terms as prime minister in a career dogged by controversy.

Defeat for FitzGerald probably would mean his political demise, despite the worldwide acclaim he reaped in 1985 as a peacemaker in Northern Ireland when he signed the Anglo-Irish accord with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

The agreement gives mainly Roman Catholic Ireland a voice in running the British province, where Protestants outnumber Catholics 3-2.

Polls are open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., with 459 candidates running in 41 constituencies. Vote counting begins 12 hours after polls close, and early results are expected by midday Wednesday.

The most recent opinion poll found Friday that Haughey's Fianna Fail party was supported by 45 percent of the 2.4 million voters, 15 percentage points ahead of FitzGerald's Fine Gael party.

Forty-five percent is regarded as the bare minimum for winning a majority of seats. But clearcut forecasts were hampered by the complexity of Ireland's electoral system, in which voters list candidates in order of preference.

Predictions also were clouded by the 15 percent of voters who said they still had not made up their minds.

Unless Haughey wins an outright majority, Ireland faces another of the coalitions or minority governments that have emerged from three previous elections over the past six years.

This absence of strong government is widely blamed for Ireland's economic disarray — five growthless years, record 19.6 percent unemployment, a $36 billion national debt and the highest interest rates in Europe.

Haughey's weakness is his vague manifesto, which speaks of generating growth to create 57,000 jobs but does not specify how.

In contrast, the donnish, mild-mannered FitzGerald has spelled out the bad news in detail. In effect, he is seeking a mandate to continue administering harsh remedies, including a 60 percent income tax on the average white-collar salary and cutbacks in the social welfare payments on which 40 percent of the populace depends in varying degrees.

The economy has overshadowed all other issues, such as Roman Catholic church domination of family law and the strife in Northern Ireland.

Even Sinn Fein, the political wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, has focused more on social issues than on the fight to unite Ireland and Northern Ireland.

Sinn Fein is running in its first election since voting last November to end its 65-year boycott of the Dail.

If Haughey doesn't get an outright majority he could lose the party leadership, since Fianna Fail always prided has itself on governing without coalition help.

FitzGerald stands a chance of allying with the third strongest party, the newly formed center-right Progressive Democrats.

Vietnamese Switch 12 Cabinet Ministers

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam announced today that 12 ministers — including Vietnam War hero Gen. Van Tien Dung — have been fired in one of the most sweeping government shake-ups in that Communist nation's history.

Analysts said the firings were part of an effort to inject vigor and efficiency into an aging leadership that led Vietnam to victory in wars against the French and Americans but failed to bring post-war economic recovery.

The Voice of Vietnam radio, monitored in Bangkok, said 12 ministers lost seats on the Council of Ministers, while a 13th was shifted to a new portfolio. It said several ministries were merged and other government agencies were incorporated into ministries.

The move follows the unprecedented resignations of three top officials from their Communist Party posts last December and a revamp of the all-powerful party Politburo. The three officials — General Secretary Truong Chinh, Prime Minister Pham Van Dong, and key Politburo member Le Duc Tho — still hold their government posts.

The Voice of Vietnam said Dung, the defense minister and architect of the final, victorious offensive against South Vietnam in 1975, was replaced by Le Duc Anh, the mastermind of Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia in late 1978.
