Fear Of Free-Falling Dollar Plunges Markets Into Dive

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — AnZother big drop in the dollar is heightening fears of inflation in the United States, recession in Japan and a potential rout in the financial markets that could seriously damage the world economy.
The dollar sank to another record low against the yen today, a day after reaching its lowest level against the Japanese currency since the late 1940s, when American occupation forces set exchange rates in the war-ravaged nation.
Japan's minister of international trade and industry, Hajime Tamura, meanwhile, said Japan would send senior officials to Washington this week to prepare for a high-level emergency meeting over the semiconductor trade if the United States agrees to the meeting.

Dollar jitters and trade tensions caused a sell-off Monday in stock and bond markets in Tokyo, London, New York and elsewhere.
Before Tamura's announcement, traders said they were worried in part by President Reagan's plan to put prohibitive tariffs on up to $300 million worth of Japanese electronic goods to force Japan into compliance with a trade agreement on computer chips.

"In my opinion, protectionism at this point is going to do nothing but serve to antagonize our trading partners, and a good example is happening right now," said Randy Holland, a foreign currency options trader for Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp.
The dollar broke through new lows steadily last week and again Monday despite the purchase of at least $10 billion on the open market by the central banks of Japan and to a lesser degree by the United States and other industrial nations.

"I think it's a very, very dangerous situation. Nobody can stop this movement, not even the Federal Reserve, market momentum is so strong," said Iida Toshihiko, senior yen dealer for Westpac Banking Corp.
The dollar closed at 145.65 yen on the Tokyo Foreign Exchange Market today. On Monday, it skidded to a low of 144.70 yen before finishing the day at 146.20 yen, still well below Friday's late rate. It finished at the same level later in Europe and the United States.

U.S. Adviser Killed

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — An estimated 800 leftist rebels attacked a major military base in Chalatenango province early today, and an American military adviser was among those killed, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said.
He was the first of the 55 U.S. military advisers killed in combat in the seven-year-long war.

Van Gogh's 'Sunflowers' Goes For Nearly $40 Million At Sale

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Spectators gasped and applauded as Vincent van Gogh's "Sunflowers," which the impoverished Dutch artist failed to sell for $125 before his suicide in 1890, was auctioned for $39.85 million.
An anonymous buyer bidding by telephone Monday paid 24.75 million pounds for the famous painting at Christie's auction house, more than tripling the record for a painting sold at auction.

The price stunned the 1,300 art buyers and enthusiasts from around the world who had crowded into the auction room.
Millionaires jumped to their feet and craned their necks for a better view as the bidding started, while a Japanese collector rushed to the middle of the room with his camera.

Gasps of astonishment were heard as the price surged beyond $32.2 million and spontaneous applause broke out as the auctioneer brought his hammer down to conclude the sale. It all took no more than five minutes.
Before the sale, Christie's had said it expected about $16.1 million would be bid for the painting — a burst of gold and other measuring 39 inches by 30 inches and showing 15 sunflowers.
On an April 18, 1985 auction, the J. Paul Getty art museum at Malibu, Calif. paid a record 8.1 million pounds, then $10.5 million, for Andrea Mantegna's "Adoration of the Magi."
That price was exceeded in dollars last December in London when an anonymous European collector bought a Paris street scene by Edouard Manet for 7.7 million pounds, then worth $11.1 million because the pound had risen in value.

Lori Starr of the wealthy Getty Museum said after Monday's sale, "We are not the buyers of 'Sunflowers.'" Christie's refused to name the buyer or even reveal which country the successful bidder was speaking from.
But rumors circulated that the buyer was in Japan. Christie's had sent the picture on a tour of Tokyo, New York and Zurich.
"I am 99.9 percent certain it was from Japan," said New York dealer Jacob Baal-Teshuva.

Action On Board Elections Delayed

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer
Pitt County Commissioners Monday postponed action on the adoption of a position paper on changing the method of electing members of the board until next week.
County Manager Kramer Jackson told commissioners that Raleigh lawyer Michael Crowell, hired by the board to help in the election-change process, would not be present at Monday's meeting.
Jackson said Crowell has talked with an attorney representing blacks in Pitt County — Leslie Winner of Charlotte — about minority approval for having three at-large members on a new board of commissioners. But Jackson said Ms. Winner had not had an opportunity to meet with clients in the county.
Jackson said Crowell, and possibly Ms. Winner, will be at the board's April 6 meeting.
But the board on Monday did discuss potential problems with housing people convicted of misdemeanor crimes in the county jail.

The state Department of Corrections last Friday stopped taking misdemeanor prisoners from county facilities because of overcrowding in state correctional centers.
Pitt County Sheriff Ralph Tyson said the move would cause overcrowding problems at the county jail.
He said for the year beginning July 1, 1985, 2,210 people were confined in the jail, which has a capacity of 83 inmates. As of Monday, Tyson said, 2,860 people had been confined in the jail since July 1, 1986.
"For the past six months," Tyson said, "we've averaged 75.7 people in the jail at any one time. Some weekends we've reached 100," with some prisoners being housed in jails in Ayden, Farmville and Bethel to handle the volume.
Tyson said, too, that the $12.50 a day the state pays to house prisoners

Whichard Honored As Oldest Worker

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer
David Julian Whichard, 92-year-old chairman of the board of The Daily Reflector, was honored at a noon ceremony today as the oldest known worker in Pitt County.
The banquet honoring Whichard and several other older workers was held at the Beef Barn. It was the first time the designation has been made.
Jim Hannan, manager of the Greenville office of the Employment Security Commission, conceived the idea of publicly honoring older workers. "I hope to make this an annual affair," Hannan said. "I feel it is an excellent way to pay tribute to our older citizens who have devoted long years to work in many different areas."
Coordination of this first year's older worker program, Hannan said, "was carried out by Mrs. Mildred Lewis, our older worker technician at ESC. She has really put her heart into this project."
In 1919, Whichard purchased The Daily Reflector from his father, founder David Jordan Whichard, soon after his return from service with the U.S. Army in France during World War I.
Except for his two years' service with the Army, Whichard has made his home in Greenville. He was mar-

ECU Selects Seven University Scholars

East Carolina University announced today the selection of seven outstanding high school seniors to receive prestigious 1987 University Scholars Awards for four years of study at ECU.
Three Pitt County students have been selected to receive the scholarships. They are Jamie Leigh Moore and Lynn Diane Worley, both of Greenville, and Melissa Ann Rose of Grifton.
Other scholarship winners are Jennifer Lynn Bennett of Fuquay-Varina; Patricia Lynn Jones of Kinston; Scotty Van Law of Graham, and Wendy Annette Watts of Rocky Mount.

The seven were selected from nearly 120 high school seniors across the nation who were nominated for the full tuition and expense scholarships awarded by ECU to recognize academic scholarship and leadership potential.
ECU officials said scholarships were made available to each of the finalists in the University Scholars competition.
University Scholars Awards are privately endowed scholarship funds named for the donors. Proceeds are used to provide tuition and expenses for four years of study at ECU. The University Scholars Program was inaugurated three years ago.

Pitt Republicans Swapping Barbs

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer
Ed Griffith, who was defeated in his bid for election as chairman of the Republican Party in Pitt County last week, said Monday that Carlton Smith, the new party chairman, "has broken the first rule of politics — always tell the truth."
In a statement reported in The Daily Reflector Friday, Smith denied supporting Barry McCarty, a candidate for state chairman, saying "I have not made up my mind yet ... not made a stand," on whether to support McCarty or Jack Hawke.
McCarty is being backed in his bid for the state Republican chairmanship by the National Congressional Club, Sen. Jesse Helm's political organization, while Hawke is Gov. Jim Martin's choice for the post.
But Griffith said a paid advertisement in the March issue of Common Sense, a monthly newsletter published by the National Congressional Club, has Smith's name listed second among members of McCarty's state steering committee.

He also said "key people in Smith's organization, including Michael Karachun and Nita Raspberry, are also listed as McCarty steering committee members."
"How Smith ... can endorse McCarty in one paper and deny it in another is beyond me," Griffith said.
Randy Doub, a member of the State Board of Transportation and Martin's campaign chairman in Pitt County, agreed with Griffith.
"Smith better learn quickly that he will lose credibility and alienate supporters by not being straightforward," Doub said. "Contrary to what Smith says, Smith and his supporters

Plumber Ordered To Repay Clients

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Joe Newton, a Charlotte plumbing and heating contractor, must refund the payments of all his firm's customers since March 29, 1981, a Superior Court judge ruled Monday. Attorneys on both sides of the state's unfair trade practices lawsuit against Newton said they did not know how much the refunds may cost him. But the order, by Judge B. Craig Ellis, may be "the most serious ever" in this state, said Phil Telfer, an assistant attorney general. Newton, 40, has been the subject of numerous complaints and lawsuits alleging he overcharged customers and billed them for unneeded work. Last April, the North Carolina Board of Examiners of Plumbing and Heating Contractors revoked Newton's plumbing contractor's license after reviewing 50 complaints alleging incompetent work and misconduct. Newton is still allowed to do minor plumbing repairs and replacements. The state's Consumer Protection Division filed suit against him March 29, 1985. That suit resulted in Monday's order. "The order is an indication of how the court viewed Mr. Newton's actions," said Telfer, of the Consumer Protection Division. "We really can't tell someone they can't do business." He said the order, based on a March 18 hearing in Wake County, also requires Newton to pay a $25,000 civil penalty and more than $10,000 for the state's legal fees. He also must disclose to all future customers the total amount he plans to charge them and provide a schedule of any variable fees. And he must also disclose in all contracts and advertising that his prices are higher than those of other contractors in the Charlotte area.

Friday Speaker

The department of foreign languages and literatures at East Carolina University will present Dr. James F. Bernhardt in a presentation Friday at 1 p.m. at Brewster C, Room 103 at ECU. Bernhardt who will speak on "TPR/PPR: College Level Total Physical Language Learning."

Thespian Festival

Twenty thespians from J.H. Rose High School recently attended the N.C. Thespian Festival in Hendersonville. The Rose students performed an original play written by the advanced theater arts class. They received a critique by Pam Ware, international trustee. The festival included dramatic and comedy plays, dance and show choir performances and workshops in all areas of the theater.

Science Fair Results

Over 100 projects were entered in South Greenville School's recent annual science fair. First-place winners in the non-experimental category were Peter Muller, Jay Williams and Dru Lewis. Receiving first place in the experimental category were Patrick Weaver, Marla Vacek and David Christian.

Professor Will Speak

Sigma Theta Tau, Beta Nu chapter, will begin its spring educational sessions Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Sheraton Greenville. Registration is at 6:15 p.m. Dr. Ada Lindsey, professor and dean of the University of California at Los Angeles School of Nursing, will be the speaker. The annual research symposium will follow on Friday from 8 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Sheraton. Dr. Lindsey will deliver the keynote address on "Programmatic and Collaborative Research." Four nurse educators and two nurse clinicians will present individual research endeavors. A graduate of Ohio State University and the University of Maryland, Dr. Lindsey has authored and co-authored various books and articles with a clinical focus. She was elected as a fellow of the American Academy of Nursing in 1980. Dinner reservations must be confirmed by Thursday through Mimi Quick, East Carolina University School of Nursing, 757-6061.

Social Services Board OKs Day Care Transportation

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Social Services approved additional transportation for children attending subsidized day care facilities at its Monday meeting.

Eligible clients assessed a day care fee now may be provided with transportation for their children. In the past, clients charged for day care services were responsible for providing their child with transportation.

A nominal fee, based on gross income, will be charged for the transportation service, according to Day Care Coordinator Barbara Turcotte. Social services will pay the remainder of the transportation fee charged by the center.

Free transportation will continue to be provided if the department pays for the entire day care expense of the child.

"If the family has its own means of transportation, we encourage them to make their own arrangements," Mrs. Turcotte said.

Only two of the centers contracted by the department — Bishop Payton Child Learning Center in Stokes and Loving Care Child Learning Center in Ayden — currently provide transportation, Mrs. Turcotte said.

An additional appropriation of $15,534 from the State Department of Social Services will allow for 35 additional day care slots, the board was told. Applications currently are being accepted to fill the additional slots.

With the new openings, a total of 160 children will be provided with subsidized day care in Pitt County. The projected day care expenditures for the county are $25,000 per month.

The department also received a block grant of $39,515 to support social work funds. The state funds replace monies deleted from the budget in August.

"We are still $10,000 short of the funds we had in July," said Department Director Edward Garrison. He said the funds will be used to support the Chore service in the county.

Eligibility Specialist Debbie Ryals reported that 33 cases were approved for the Emergency Assistance Program in the county during February. A total of $11,915 was spent under the program, mostly for eviction or foreclosure assistance.

Mrs. Ryals said that requests for emergency assistance have been increasing in the county. When the program began in November, 50 requests for the assistance were made; during February, over 100 persons applied.

In the state, over $1 million was spent for the Emergency Assistance Program for the month.

Garrison said that the preliminary work on the fiscal year 1987-1988 budget has been completed and that it should be ready for presentation to the Pitt County commissioners on April 24.

The board approved the addition of $1,299 in emergency assistance funds to the current budget. The funds were provided by Carolina Power and Light for emergency assistance to their customers. Also, the board approved a budget amendment for $5,100 in funds allocated by the United Way for emergency assistance. A total of $10,200 was provided by a grant and the monies were sent in two different payments.

The board went into executive session to consider an action on overpayment investigations.

School Board Hears Updates

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

The members of the Pitt County Board of Education were provided an instructional update at a Monday workshop meeting.

Eight instructional coordinators presented information on the educational programs and activities being conducted in the Pitt County schools.

Early Childhood Coordinator Ola Perry discussed the programs in the kindergarten through third grade. Focusing on the early school years as "building blocks" for a child's education, Mrs. Perry discussed record-keeping and promotion factors.

She said that an emphasis during kindergarten is providing students with basic skills. She said that unless the educational foundation is properly laid the child will not be successful in ensuing years.

Mrs. Perry noted that a problem for kindergarten teachers is the number of students who enter the schools without basic skills.

Tom Daly, mathematics and science coordinator, said that the curricula in his areas has become much broader than in the past. Students now "solve everyday problems," he said. "They learn skills and apply them."

He said the science programs in the county schools focus on the student learning for himself through hands-on experiences, such as through the River Park North educational program.

Daly noted that the biggest change in the mathematics program is the use of computers and calculators in the classroom. He said that "calculators have a place in Pitt County." After a student has mastered basic mathematical skills, a calculator provides reinforcement of the correct answer and allows a student to explore different mathematical areas.

Sue Branch, coordinator of language arts, social studies and foreign languages, told the board that new literature and reading textbooks have been approved and ordered for next school year.

She said that teachers are concentrating on writing skills. According to writing test scores, the students in Pitt County have improved their writing skills, "but we really need to work on this area," Mrs. Branch said.

She said that besides French and Spanish, Latin is being offered at D.H. Conley and J.H. Rose high schools.

Ann Harrison, coordinator of Media Technology Services, said that the schools are "in the midst of an information explosion. Information is now doubling ever 20 months and will continue to do so."

She said that films are being transferred to video tapes for better utilization in the classrooms.

Mrs. Harrison said that a project is being developed to establish an "on-line retrieval system" in the five county high schools that will allow schools to network their resources to provide all students with access to all resources.

She said that computers are being used by all students beginning with kindergarten classes.

Bob Dailey, physical education coordinator, said that the "Every Child A Winner" program has resulted in a significant improvement in fitness in the schools. The program stresses participation by all students in kindergarten through third grades.

Dailey is also coordinator of health, athletics and driver education for the schools.

Arts Education Coordinator Emmy Whitehead discussed the arts activities in the classrooms, as well as the special projects taking place and awards received by the county students.

Information also was presented by Textbooks Coordinator Carl Toot and Vocational Education Coordinator Don McLane.

Three more workshop sessions will be held to allow central office staff to discuss with the board additional instructional items, support services and the budget.

Republican Chairman

are pawns for Carter Wrenn and the Congressional Club. The appearance of Smith's name on McCarty's committee proves that."

Harold Zallen, who presided over the election during the convention last week, said he is disappointed in the turn in direction the local party has taken.

"Smith and his supporters over the past two years have disrupted Republican Party meetings with their divisive tactics," Zallen said. "They simply drove away and wore out many good people who had expressed an interest in the Republican Party and Pitt County."

"Smith and his followers are nothing short of political extremists," Zallen said. "We want the people of Pitt County to know that we will not be associated with their extremist tactics."

Doub, Griffith and Zallen all agreed that Helms could have prevented a division in the party.

"For the sake of party unity, Helms should have supported the governor's choice for state chairman, Jack Hawke, for the governor's re-election campaign," Doub suggested. "Likewise, the governor would have supported Senator Helms' choice for state chairman during Helms' expected re-election bid in 1990."

"Senator Helms' failure of leadership for party unity will cause many good Republicans to reconsider their support for Jesse Helms the next time he asks for it," Doub said.

Smith said this morning that Doub and Griffith were "trying to make a statewide race out of what (should have been) a local race," at last week's convention.

"Yes, I do support Barry McCarty."

At the time I made the statement on Friday," Smith said, "I was trying to reinforce that this was exclusively a local race, nothing more than a local race. As a person I do choose to support Barry McCarty."

As for being a pawn of the Congressional Club, Smith said "the Congressional Club is a respectable organization. Senator Helms was elected three times largely due to the efficient organization of the National Congressional Club."

"I think that Doub and Griffith are doing the Republican Party a grave disservice when they criticize an organization that has shown itself to be respectable, efficient ... by electing representatives to national office."

Smith continued, "I believe that the one thing that the National Congressional Club has done is shown itself to be a good organization. It's providing an ideological base, based on principle, with which conservative Democrats can identify."

"If Griffith and Doub choose to separate themselves from the conservatives of their own party, how can we feel they identify with conservative Democrats in North Carolina and work for the re-election of Governor Martin, whom I support?"

Smith said "In Pitt County, Republicans are outnumbered four to one. Without the support of conservative Democrats, how can we expect to elect Republicans?"

"They (Doub and Griffith) are not only alienating conservative Republicans, but conservative Democrats (as well)," Smith suggested.

"I re-enforce ... I support Barry McCarty, support Senator Jesse Helms and support Governor Jim Martin. I only hope Doub and Griffith do."

Thatcher Meets Sakharov To Show Western Support

MOSCOW (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met with dissidents Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner, at the British Embassy today in another show of support for Soviet human rights activists.

After an hour-long luncheon, Sakharov told reporters on the embassy steps, "We discussed what I always discuss: human rights."

"I expressed gratitude to her for the role she played in our fate and on other questions of human rights in the Soviet Union," he said, adding that nuclear disarmament also came up.

Mrs. Bonner said she thought the British leader, who is on a five-day official visit that began Saturday, was "a very charming person."

Mrs. Thatcher emerged from the embassy and, without commenting to reporters, sped away in a gleaming black Zil limousine to continue her meetings with Soviet officials.

According to British sources, Sakharov told Mrs. Thatcher, "Two years ago you could not imagine sitting around a lunch like this." The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

Sakharov, a physicist and the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize laureate whose nearly seven-year internal exile was lifted in December, had arrived for lunch in an embassy car with Bonner.

Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has promised to pursue democratic reform in the Soviet Union. His policy of "glasnost," or openness, has permitted freer discussion of certain subjects, and authorities have released several dozen political prisoners since December.

British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe and British Ambassador Sir Brian Cartledge also attended the luncheon with the Sakharovs.

The human rights issue is frequently raised by Mrs. Thatcher in speeches in Britain, and she emphasized it in her speech Monday night at a Kremlin banquet with Gorbachev.

She met earlier today with Soviet Premier Nikolai Ryzhkov, and told reporters afterward that her nearly nine hours of talks Monday with Gorbachev were "very good."

"We set a target for increased trade and I hope it will lead to increased friendship and increased understanding," Mrs. Thatcher told reporters at the steps of the British Embassy.

In a last-minute addition to the British leader's schedule, Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa, invited Mrs. Thatcher to a private dinner this evening.

Exxon Will Buy Into Aussie Firm

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Corp., the world's largest oil company, said today it will acquire a 25 percent stake in Australia's biggest onshore oil and gas production area by buying Delhi Petroleum Pty. Ltd. for $690 million.

Delhi is currently owned by CSR Ltd., an Australian conglomerate.

As part of the deal, CSR and Exxon will split equally any earnings due to hikes in oil prices from Delhi production over the next two years, Exxon said.

The purchase, through Exxon's Australian affiliate, reflects Exxon's policy of intensifying its focus on the energy business while shedding non-related holdings.

Last year, Exxon took several steps to streamline operations, including the sales of its Exxon Nuclear Corp. subsidiary; its share of its Manhattan headquarters building and its Reliance Electric Co. subsidiary. In addition, Exxon undertook a massive corporate restructuring that resulted in the departure of more than 6,000 employees.

In today's announcement, Exxon said the purchase will give its affiliate, Esso Exploration and Production Australia Inc., its first onshore oil and gas production in that country.

Evangelism, Politics

The world of television evangelism has been torn asunder in the wake of Jim Bakker's leaving PTL and selecting Jerry Falwell to head the ministry and attempt to keep it afloat.

Bakker's motel rendezvous disclosure brought a torrent of words from other well-known television religious personalities and left their critics and supporters alike in a state of bewilderment.

It is safe to say that television evangelism will never be the same. Oh, it will survive. There will be cosmetic changes by some to assure the public that their dollars are going to God's work. Some won't do anything. If the faithful believed in them before they will continue to believe.

Television has too many possibilities for evangelism. It obviously can be powerful in spreading the word, but its tremendous potential in bringing in the contributions has clearly been demonstrated. Thus television evangelism is here to stay.

It is proper, however, to look at the role of television evangelism in relation to politics following the PTL debacle. The role is clearly there. President Reagan has warmly embraced some of the prominent fundamentalists. Former President Carter also had his friends among the evangelists. Some political organizations have unabashedly assumed the arm twisting fund raising tactics, which the evangelists have used so effectively, to financially support their own various projects.

As certain as it is that television evangelism will be around, it is likely that the alliance with the politicians will be strained for a number of years.

Teaming up with anyone who is involved in the current confusion of television evangelism can have unknown political effects. No one is certain as to whether the result will be positive or negative with the American voter ... and if there is anything a politician shuns it is uncertainty.

If the current evangelists' in-fighting has done nothing else it is likely that it affected the alignment between the television pastors and the politicians — and that might prove to be beneficial to American politics, as well as religion.

Hard Row

Give the Philippine Republic's president credit for trying the olive branch route complete with a cease-fire, an opportunity to participate in national elections and peace talks. Her communist foes wouldn't bend. Peace talks with Moslem forces and a tribal insurgency also failed.

President Aquino's government also suspects Marcos supporters are trying to destabilize her administration through terror tactics.

The national elections demonstrated the communist cause failed to muster many voters in its behalf; and of course deposed Ferdinand Marcos was convincingly beaten. The popular choice, by far, was Cory Aquino.

An experienced military voice in the Cabinet urged early action against the communists warning they would use the cease-fire and time given to peace talks for strengthening their military position but the new president prevailed.

She did not want her peace initiative derailed; it was too important in her effort to rebuild the country's social structure and economy which had been wrecked by years of misrule.

Now Mrs. Aquino has drawn the sword.

She has requested military hardware from the United States but complains her ally has thus far provided mostly advice. Like it or not, she will get more advice and she will need it.

Arms will be important; but equally important are the strategems for winning over the people among whom the communist guerrillas hide. Land reform comes high on the list. So do bridges, clinics, hospitals, schools, banking systems, roads, libraries, transportation systems, clean water and the nurturing of national loyalties.

At the same time there will be fighting to be done. Mrs. Aquino has a hard row to hoe.

Where Is The Defense Budget Taking Us?

— Cody Shearer —

WASHINGTON — Washington's Spring Pentagon P.R. show went off as planned last week. The ink was barely dry on the Defense Department's annual report — warning of Soviet military advantages — when Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger asked the House Armed Services Committee for a 3 percent increase in military funding, after inflation.

The Soviets, Weinberger warned, aim "to acquire increasing amounts of enormous military strength each year, without any restraints imposed by public opinion and public debate."

There's a bit more debate over the Pentagon's annual budget bite. But defense outlays for 1988 are expected to top $297 billion compared to $134 billion in real dollars in 1980. Welfare benefits, by contrast, now cost the government about $100 billion a year. We know what the Reagan military buildup has done to the budget deficit. And that's where most of the debate will focus in the months ahead, as Congress labors to rein the administration's requests into line with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

There's growing evidence, however, that Congress should investigate not just the size of the military budget but where it is spent.

"By favoring certain industries over others," wrote University of California at Berkeley associate professor Ann Markusen in the World Policy Journal recently, "military spending is distorting the overall economic structure and granting serious costs in the process. Because the military hardware is increasingly sophisticated and because big-ticket items are so expensive that many fewer of them now are purchased annually, today's military outlays favor an entirely different set of industries than was favored in the past."

Since President Reagan took office the growth of military demand for electronics, computers and other high-tech equipment has caught and surpassed rises in the commercial demand for these products. This year, for example, about 63 percent of all U.S. communications production will directly or indirectly be linked to defense contracts.

At the same time, military demand for such basic output as steel, machine tools and other metal instruments has grown much less, and remains low by comparison. Only about 7 percent of machine tool production this year will be sold to the Pentagon.

In short, those who speak of developing an "industrial policy" for America, Markusen correctly points out, overlook one important fact: We've already got one. It's called the defense budget.

Some of the results of this policy, of course, have been beneficial. The federal government has since the 1960s put up most of the research and development money in this country and most of that research has been military-oriented. Spin-offs from the military to the commercial sector are an important source of product innovation.

But because of the emphasis on high tech, basic industries like steel, as well as consumer-targeted production of cars and home electronics, suffer neglect.

Electronic Church Of The Tender Wallet

"Lord, listen to me. This is the Rev. Shorty Beans, broadcasting on Channel 83, from the "Electronic Church of the Tender Wallet" in Boosterville, Va. This is not a test. I'm up to my cowboy boots in trouble.

"Somebody's trying to take my flock. I suspect it's that garden snake Rev. Jimmy Haggard, the one who takes MasterCard and VISA to heal arthritis sufferers. He wants my ministry so he can cash in on my late-night listeners. God, I need You to come up with a poison pill defense against this diabolically hostile takeover.

"Lord, don't listen to the stories about me committing a sexual transgression with my secretary in the TV control room. This is just the Devil's blackmail put out by Haggard to hurt my Nielsen ratings. You know and I know there is less hanky-panky in the "Church of the Tender Wallet" than any TV pulpit in the land.

"Haggard is putting out the word that I've sinned in church business administration. He can go to hell. Last year we grossed $100 million, of which You got two. Sales of my wife Barbie's gospel album have soared through the roof. The condos on the Red Sea Golf Course are finished, the Cain and Abel amusement park is SRO, and we're adding another wing to the 25-story Sodom and Gomorrah Motel.

"Haggard can't come close to our numbers. Ask him how many Sea of Galilee hot tubs he sold last month. He almost put his church into bankruptcy.

"Lord, we're willing to make any changes You want to cut expenses. You tell us how many on-camera faith healers to fire and we'll do it. Barbie is starting to save money already. She's dumped the entire symphony orchestra that always accompanies her spiritual version of "If I Were a Rich Man." And we've cut back on the fireworks display we set off every time a pledge of $5,000 lights up the telethon board.

"And get this — I decided to take a salary cut. I intend to say today on the air that I will accept no more pay from the "Church of the Tender Wallet" than Lee Iacocca takes out of Chrysler.

"Haggard has no right to bad-mouth me, Lord. He's Satan's hatchet man. If you allow him to take over our TV show the ratings will plummet to zero. He'll drive every viewer from our channel to "Miami Vice."

"Lord, I've got a great ploy to stop the takeover. I'm going to announce that if the listeners don't give me $8 million to prevent Haggard from grabbing my church, You are going to take me home. It's going to be "bye-bye" Rev. Shorty because I'm going to that big cathode tube cathedral in the sky.

"If that fails I will go for broke. I shall say that if my congregation doesn't raise the money I'm going to do something desperate. I'm going to run for President of the United States.

"I know what You're saying, Lord. Where do I come off running for President? It's very simple. I have all the qualifications any candidate has this year, not to mention my own TV network. I'm going to tell my flock a vote for me is a vote for You and — if you don't mind, Lord — I'm going to reveal that I have your endorsement. And if this doesn't do the trick I will bring up my war record.

"You don't have to make any personal appearances for me, Lord. By the same token You don't have to make a big deal of it if You are not going to be there.

"I think I've covered everything. We're only three minutes to air time. What I'm asking from You, Lord, is to help me stop the Devil's takeover of my ministry. If this means a Holy War, thy will be done. Trust me, Lord. I will always keep one eye on You and the other on the bottom line."

Strength For Today

We often hear people say, when they hear of a case of ingratitude or disloyalty, "Well, that's human nature." But they seldom call it human nature when they encounter a noble deed of sacrifice or altruism.

Actually, the goodness in mankind is just as much a reflection of human nature as evil propensities. History abounds with instances of selfless actions which reveal the real spiritual nobility of which mankind is capable.

If you are cynical about your fellow man, ask yourself whether the affection of your mother and father for you is based on self-interest or whether your feeling for your best friend has a dollar-and-cents value.

You will soon see that in spite of frequent aberrations, human relations are based on love and trust.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The Reagan Administration's response to the Japanese practice of "dumping" cheap semi-conductors on the American market is a drastic one. Plans are to impose tariffs on certain Japanese imports that will effectively double the cost of these goods in American. I suppose the intent is basically to get the Japanese to back off on these micro-chips.

Interestingly, this dumping practice directly affects the Southern California "Silicon Valley" industry which has had its woes in coping with a free market. This is an elitist industry.

My question is where were those strong sanctions when the blue collar workers were forced out of jobs in the auto, textile, and steel industries? There were no ad hoc Congressional committees set up to place an outlandish tariff on the cheap and often inferior goods dumped in the latter markets.

Could it be that the politicians have learned a lesson from the past? I doubt that. The cheap goods continue to pour in. I would suggest that, rather than U.S.A. protectionism, the knee-jerk response noted in paragraph one above smacks of California protectionism. After all, how many politicians vacation in southern North Carolina or southern Michigan or southern Pennsylvania?

To the editor:

I wish to clarify your paper's report of the Pitt County Republican Convention. Newly elected Pitt Republican Party Chairman Carlton Smith and Vice Chairman Mary Lou Sugg are loyal supporters of both Governor Martin and Senator Helms. It seems to me that the attempt to divide the local Republican Party based on individual members' preference of candidate for GOP State Chairman was instigated by Randy Doub.

Doub, a local attorney, struck unexpected paydirt when Governor Martin was swept into office with the '84 Reagan-Helms reelection landslide. He has since used a State Board of Transportation appointment to build himself a local political identity and to assemble a cadre of followers to serve his personal political ambitions. To the detriment of party harmony and the Governor's office, Doub's group attempted to divert the Convention's attention from the local candidates' qualifications to the McCarty-Hawke State Chairman race. This scheme to elect handpicked Doub operatives to local party office on the Governor's coattails failed.

The Pitt County delegates astutely selected the best available local Party leadership Tuesday night and left the McCarty-Hawke election to be decided when they vote at the State Convention in Asheville May 30th.

Questions For George Schultz

Analysis

PARIS — It is hard to explain to foreign friends why a man as well connected as George Schultz has to go up to Capitol Hill these days rattling a tin cup and pleading with Congress to restore the State Department's budget cuts.

"If we are to continue our role as a world power," the secretary of state warned an apparently flinty-hearted House subcommittee last week, "we must be prepared to fund a foreign-affairs policy and a budget for operations of the size and dimension to support it."

Why doesn't Schultz simply turn to the sultan of Brunei, or those other oil-rich covert spendthrifts, the Saudis, and ask them to pitch in a couple of extra hundred million to bolster foreign aid and save the seven U.S. consulates Schultz is closing this year for lack of money?

If Congress persists in refusing to come up with the missing $50 million we owe the Philippines in military aid, surely King Fahd and his ambassadors will set up a monthly deposit plan to help us keep our bases there and keep Manila from going communist. And Americans would no doubt look forward to visiting the refurbished Sultan Sir Hassanah Bolkah-Ronald (A Joint Venture) in Frankfurt (A Joint Venture).

This absurd scenario is in fact the logical extension of Schultz's willingness to seek out secret funds from abroad to support the Nicaraguan contras last summer, when congressional funding was not available.

With all the other exotic angles of the Irangate scandal to explore, investigators, the press and the public have tended to slight what I think is one of the more challenging questions on the fringes of the scandal: Is it proper for policymakers to solicit money directly and covertly from foreign governments for U.S. foreign policy objectives, especially objectives that are intensely contested by Congress?

Schultz and his assistant secretary of state for Latin America, Elliott Abrams, clearly think that it is proper. They asked the sultan last summer to dig just a little way down into his deep pockets for a $10 million contribution to Ronald Reagan's favorite anticommunist charity, the contras. Abrams' testimony to the Tower Commission suggests that it was his idea, although he does not explain how he fastened on the tiny sultanate as the contras' sugar daddy.

(The Saudis do not appear to have been solicited. They nonetheless made sure the administration knew where to send any thank you notes for the monthly million or two they kicked in.)

Would the sultan of Brunei have made such a donation if he had been asked in contra leader Adolfo Calero's name instead of George Schultz's? Would Brunei have put the $10 million up as rapidly if someone other than Abrams had given the sultan's operatives the instructions to use a Geneva account (from which the money promptly vanished)?

In short, would there have been a deal without the implication that the sultan would be getting closer to Schultz and thus to Reagan by making the donation?

Influence peddlers never think of themselves as such; only others do. George Schultz would toss you out of his office if you asked him to do the things that have helped land Michael Deaver in such trouble. But if the payoff went to the contras and not to him, would he have been as alert to the appearance of a conflict-of-interest?

A final question: Was his request clearly sensitive to how Schultz himself may have appeared to a leader from a totally different culture — particularly to a foreign leader who had already made it known that he might be willing to pay to have his voice heard in the White House?

Strengthening Rules Of Accountability

WASHINGTON — It will be some time before we know the full story on the Irangate matter. In fact, we still don't know the answer to the two main questions: Who, in political responsibility, knew about and approved this scheme? And what happened to the money?

Nevertheless, we know enough already from the Tower Commission report and from other sources to conclude that two fundamental legal remedies must be adopted to prevent future Irangates. The first would outlaw the practice of the White House and the National Security Council conducting covert operations. The second would outlaw the "private government" strategy by which government leverage is used to raise funds from foreign governments and others. These funds are then treated as purely private and expended in any way the government orders without any legal accountability.

The Tower Commission made no such recommendations, but it may have been that it did not want to allow President Reagan to avoid making the administrative changes required to bind his administration by endorsing specific legislative recommendations designed to bind only future presidents.

The history of governmental abuse teaches us to adopt reforms while the public is still angry about the abuses. Thus, Watergate led to the adoption of campaign finance reforms and the creation of the independent counsel's office. Similarly, the disclosure of widespread abuses by our intelligence agencies led to the creation of the intelligence committees in the House and the Senate, the legal requirement that covert actions must be reported to Congress, the enactment of the electronic surveillance bill and the provision for a single, 10-year term for the director of the FBI. Many of these reforms, particularly the existence of the committees and the reporting requirements, have been helpful in sorting out the Irangate mess.

History also teaches us that such scandals, unfortunately, will recur, but we can at least reduce their likelihood and provide a better legal framework for discouraging their repetition and discovering the facts.

This year we celebrate the 200th anniversary of our Constitution. The key strategy of our Founders was based on the checks and balances designed to confine each branch of government within its own jurisdiction and to demand accountability of all public officials to the law and to the truth. In Madison's words, ambition was to be pitted against ambition.

Secret government, beyond the reach of the law and beyond accountability to the courts and Congress and thus to the public, was anathema to them. They well knew how tyranny develops.

The strategies pursued in Irangate, as in Watergate, and by the intelligence agencies, while different in detail, were in fact identical in principle: these actions were designed to evade our constitutional system by eluding all accountability. Why else would the White House decide to run this operation rather than let the CIA do it? Why was the director of central intelligence ordered to violate the law requiring him to report actions to Congress? The answer is simple and clear. Because the White House staff is not required to be confirmed by the Senate, its members would not be expected to testify and report to Congress; they could also avoid the press.

Similarly, the funds raised by governmental leverage — such as those raised from Saudi Arabia and Brunei — could be spent outside the appropriation process, thus avoiding the constitutional prohibition against the expenditure of public funds except by appropriation. They believed these funds could be spent despite the then-existing statutory prohibition against spending public money in aid of the contras.

The artifice here, of course, was to characterize what are really public funds as private money. This was a cute new trick that needs to be outlawed. If funds are so raised, they should be declared public funds to be deposited in the U.S. Treasury. How could these funds be called private when the administration obviously used its governmental leverage to raise them?

Tornado Leaves 4 Injured On Outer Banks

BUXTON, N.C. (AP) — A tornado raked Avon and Buxton on the Outer Banks this morning, leaving two homes and a mobile home in the water, destroying several boats and injuring four people, authorities said.

"I've never heard nothing come up like that. My God, it was terrible," said George C. Gray of Avon, who said his home was damaged but his family was unharmed.

Four people were injured, Dare

County communications director Bryan Meekins said, but he did not know the nature of their injuries. He said two of the people were treated at the scene, and two were brought to Albemarle Hospital in Elizabeth City.

The National Weather Service said the twister touched down about 6:45 a.m. near N.C. 12 in Buxton and a few minutes later in Avon. No watches or warnings had been issued before the storm hit, forecasters said.

"It appears that we had a tornado touch down in two places as it came across the Hatteras area this morning," said Wally DeMaurice at the weather service office at Hatteras. "Damage was rather extensive in the Buxton harbor area. A number of boats were destroyed or severely damaged."

Four mobile homes in Buxton were destroyed, DeMaurice said. A total of about 15 homes were damaged or destroyed in the community, Meekins said.

Seventeen boats at Scott's Boat Yard in Buxton were damaged or destroyed, Meekins said. DeMaurice estimated the damage to boats in the harbor area more than $200,000.

In Avon, five miles north of Buxton, three mobile homes were destroyed and one home was lifted off its foundation, DeMaurice said. A total of seven to 15 houses were damaged, Meekins said.

The tornado's path was a quarter-mile wide at its widest point and about 1½ miles long as it came across the island. Winds at the center of the storm were at least 100 miles per hour, he said.

"My son, George Jr., he lives right back of me and his house is leaking awful," Gray's wife, Selma said. "His roof is half off and it's leaking bad...I'm telling you it was a mess. The power's off and I'm telling you it's getting cold."

"We were asleep, it was about 6:30 and I heard it and it sounded like the whole house was shaking, like half of it was tearing off," she said. "I jumped out of bed as quick as I could."

"I've never been in a tornado before. Great big trees, the top just swirled out of them and the tops just blew over the yard, and it still raining hard," Mrs. Gray said.

Funding Proposal Outlined

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The day before Gov. Jim Martin was to submit his billion-dollar school financing program to the Legislature, Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan offered a counterproposal that would fund improvements of school buildings, wastewater systems and other government facilities.

The plan, outlined in a bill filed for introduction Monday by Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, would establish a North Carolina Local Government Finance Authority. The authority would sell bonds and, with the proceeds, purchase bonds or other obligations that local governments have issued for capital projects.

Jordan described his bill as an improvement on the Martin plan, under which the state was to issue $1 billion to $2 billion to create a fund from which local governments could borrow to pay for school construction and renovation. Martin was to announce the amount of his proposed bond issue today, when his bill was to be filed.

Jordan said his bill "does it all. This $2 billion covers the school finance needs, the water and sewer needs, it covers some money that might be needed for transportation facilities. It also has the amount that might be needed for infrastructure needs for higher education."

He described the plan as a way to help local governments get the most out of a half-cent local option sales tax increase authorized by the Legislature last year.

Local governments could issue bonds without getting permission in referendums as long as they didn't seek to borrow more than the sales tax increase would generate. The proposed legislation would allow local governments to pledge user fees to pay off their bonds.

Creation of the authority would enable local governments to borrow at lower interest rates, Royall said in a written statement.

Martin also has cited the tax as a revenue source for paying off loans under his school bond program.

Jordan said his bill "provides tools to deal with those issues without having to raise the ... sales tax," a reference to a penny increase proposed last week by Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville.

Arctic Blast Opens Danger Period For State Growers

By The Associated Press

A blast of Arctic air moving into North Carolina will kick off the most dangerous month of the year for Sandhills peach growers who have seen five of the last seven crops severely damaged by cold weather.

"April is peach-killing season," said Clyde Auman, a Moore County grower who has been in the peach business since 1931 and has 60 acres planted this year.

"Because peaches are in full blossom and still in the shuck, which provides some insulation, I think they could stand a light freeze," Auman said Monday.

Wednesday morning lows will be in the 20s over much of the state, the National Weather Service says. Similar lows are predicted for Thursday morning, and Friday morning lows are expected to be in the 30s in all but the extreme east.

Auman said he thought peaches could withstand 29 degrees for a short period of time, but after two hours there would be some damage. "If the freeze happened two weeks from now, it would just about clean us out," Auman said. "The further it goes, the more vulnerable they get."

There was a large peach harvest last year despite one frost in March and two in April. But except for the 1986 and 1984 crops, all other peach crops in the past seven years have been damaged by cold.

A Henderson County agriculture agent said damage to the county's apple crop should be only minimal.

"It depends on how long the temperature stays below freezing," Marvin Owings said Monday. He said the apples are still dormant but are beginning to expand in preparation for bloom.

"The more dormant the buds are, the less susceptible they are to cold weather," he said.

"What I'm telling growers is that they need to be prepared to go three nights," Katie Perry, an extension agricultural meteorologist, said.

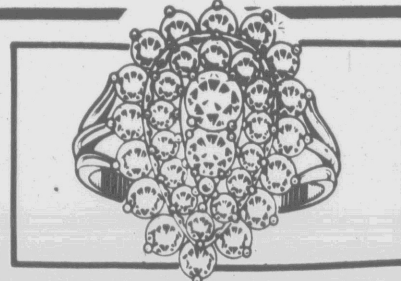

Ms. Perry said strawberry and blueberry farmers should use overhead irrigation to protect their crops. Few peach farmers have the necessary equipment for overhead irrigation, she said.

Spraying generates heat when the water being sprayed begins to freeze, Ms. Perry said.

Around the home, budding plants, such as azaleas, shouldn't be hurt as long as buds have not opened, she said.

Senate Oks Phosphate Ban

RALEIGH (AP) — Brushing aside complaints of heavy-handed tactics, the Senate approved a statewide ban on phosphorus in laundry detergents and sent the measure to the House, where Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan predicts a friendly reception.

"I would expect the House to say 'thank you' and act favorably on it," Jordan told reporters after the Senate's 32-15 approval of the bill Monday. "While it doesn't solve all the problems, it sure does give us a good start."

Demonstrating the bill's strength in the Senate, historically viewed as hostile territory for environmental protection measures, backers easily halted debate after about 15 minutes despite opponents' angry protests. On Friday, the Senate argued 90 minutes about the bill and seven proposed amendments before tentatively approving the bill.

Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt, said he knew of at least four or five amendments that senators had planned to offer. He and Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, grumbled that the majority should have given opponents a chance to have their say.

"Each one of us is sent here by people who trust us," Swain said. "We have made a contract with our constituents to represent them."

Taft added that "even if we've got the votes to ram home a motion ... I think the courteous thing to do is make sure we have fair and open debate on the issue."

Walker shrugged off the criticism, saying he had played by the Senate rules. Defending Walker, Jordan said he had seen debate shut off many times during his eight years as a senator and two as lieutenant governor.

"I can remember when I tried to get ERA (the Equal Rights Amendment) on the floor and Sen. (Ollie) Harris got up and tabled my motion before I even got a chance to say a word," Jordan said. "That's part of the process."

The lone amendment offered Monday called for applying the same rigorous anti-pollution standards to the lower Neuse River that are imposed in areas designated as nutrient-sensitive by the state Environmental Management Commission: the Chowan River, the Upper Neuse River and Jordan Lake.

Sen. William H. Barker, D-Pamlico, made an impassioned speech on behalf of the amendment. He said the butterfly, a "delicate morsel," had "succumbed to man's pollution" and all but disappeared from the lower Neuse, a phenomenon he blamed on phosphate pollution.

Excessive amounts of phosphorus create algae blooms that "suck the oxygen out of the river, killing the fish and killing the river," Barker said, urging his colleagues to listen for "the silent scream of the Neuse River."

POW Group Requests Probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group seeking the return of American prisoners of war in Southeast Asia has asked the Army and the Justice Department to investigate a National Security Council staffer they say tried to discredit a North Carolina congressional candidate in 1984.

Retired Army Col. Earl Hopper charged Monday that Col. Richard T. Childress offered former New York Rep. John LeBoutillier $40,000 a month and Drug Enforcement Administration credentials for a POW rescue project if he would discredit Bill Hendon, a former Republican congressman, who had been critical of the government's stand on the POW-MIA issue.

But LeBoutillier of Old Westbury, N.Y., called the allegations absurd, said he was never offered money and that the group is trying to oust Childress from the NSC.

Childress, who heads the NSC's Far East desk, plays a key role in investigating rumors of POWs in Southeast Asia. The POW group, the American League of Families of Prisoners of War in Laos, has charged that Childress is suppressing information that would prove there are scores of American POWs in Southeast Asia and that the government is doing nothing to win their release.

Hendon, who worked briefly at the Pentagon in 1983 and had access to classified information about possible POWs living in Indochina.

Margaret Reeves Weds C.D. Burrus

DUCK — Margaret Olivia Reeves and Conrad Daniel Burrus were united in marriage at 3 p.m. Saturday in the Duck United Methodist Church. The Rev. Bill Ruth officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Reeves Jr. of Grifton. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Burrus of Buxton.

The bride wore a candlelight colored chantilly lace sheath gown encrusted with pearl clusters and iridescents over a sweetheart neck slip dress which had a tea length skirt. The gown had long sleeves with bridal buttons fastening the sleeves and gown back. She wore baby's breath in her hair and carried a cascade bouquet of camellias, orchids, stephanotis and ivy.

The bride's only attendant was her sister, Kelly Reeves Epstein, of Charlotte.

The best man was William Barris of Buxton. Ushers included Charles Williams of Avon and David Gaskins of Buxton.

A program of wedding music was provided by Barbara Fletcher of Bethesda, Md., pianist. The father of the bridegroom and John Williams of Buxton sang duets.

The bride is an aquarist at the N.C. Aquarium on Roanoke Island and the bridegroom is a member of the family firm, Cape Dredging.

Nancy Fasset of Bethesda, Md., directed the wedding and Beth Burns of Manteo presided at the register.

After a wedding trip to Key West and other Florida points the couple will live in Wanchese.

Immediately following the ceremony the bride's parents gave a champagne reception at Sanderling Inn in Duck. Diane Tillett served cake.

A bridal breakfast was held at Port Trinity in Duck on Saturday. A rehearsal dinner and social hour was held at Sanderling Inn Friday evening.

The couple was also entertained at a bachelor party, bridesmaids luncheon, several cookouts and a bridal luncheon.

Banquet Food Is Hustled Around

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

You are reading the words of one of the world's foremost authorities on banquet food.

I have had it chicken fried, baked, broiled and sauteed, steamed, roasted, fricasseed and blackened. I have had it stuffed with dressing, cheese, buttered herbs, chestnuts, and asphyxiated in its own gravy over rice, pastry cups, biscuits and pasta. It has been basted in butter, salsa, kumquats, lemon and pineapple. It has worn the costumes of a Brazilian samba, Hawaiian luau, Mexican fiesta, New Orleans Mardi Gras and the French leader Napoleon.

I am lucky to be alive.

In the middle of one of my lectures once, the burglar alarm went off and I hoisted my plate in surrender and said, "Take my salad, please."

In my mind, I have always visualized all banquets coming from a large kitchen somewhere in the central part of the United States. All food for every banquet is trafficked through there, and there is a head cook shouting orders.

"All right, people, listen up. It's 3 in the afternoon and those salads aren't on the table yet. The lettuce will never wilt by the time they're ready to eat if you don't get 'em out there. And get those rolls in baskets. They should have been exposed to air two hours ago.

"The entree tonight is filet mignon. Be sure to ask the guests if they prefer their steak well done, medium well, medium, medium rare or rare. They're all cooked the same. If a well-done complains about his meat, roll your eyes toward the ceiling and offer to bring it back and cook it some more. There's a table just inside the kitchen to set them on until they're cold before you return them. The tea bag for all the tea drinkers is on the same table as the well-done steaks.

"Arrangements have been made for two coffee pots to serve the 500 guests. It's always nice to give hope by saying, "The coffee is on the way." Don't be specific.

"After the salads are distributed, everyone is expected to be here for the most important part of the banquet ... the Flaming Baked Alaska drill. No one will remember anything about the meal, but they will remember if there is a cake with a candle out or a break in the line. Waste not, want not. All the food not served goes to the airlines."

Feeding a crowd has never been easy, but wouldn't you think with all the technology that has advanced our civilization, there could be a breakthrough in banquet food? Right now the choice is threefold: Give up crowds. Give up eating. Give up your will to live.

Program Topics Given Chapter

Programs on hair care, makeup and communicating have been given for members of Xi Gamma Xi chapter of Beta Sigma Phi.

Brenda Jester discussed hair styles and coloring while Carolyn Powell conducted a session on communicating and gave examples of how communications could be changed.

Plans for Founder's Day for Xi Gamma Xi and Eta Delta were discussed. It will be held at the Colonial Inn May 2 starting at 12:20 p.m.

Officers named for the coming year are Fran Rostar, president; Carol Bishton, vice president; Tana Hill, corresponding secretary; Jeanne Clark, recording secretary, and Sandra Everett, treasurer.

The April 14 meeting will be held at the home of Jeanne Clark.

Secure In Marriage, Willing To Share

DEAR ABBY: After years of reading you, I'm finally motivated to write in answer to "Jealous" whose husband "slow-danced" with a co-worker at an office party.

I'd like to comment on husbands dancing with others while their wives sit alone. I'm a wife who sits alone — by choice — while I encourage my husband to dance with the widows, divorced women and older singles who like to go out for an evening of music and dancing.

I was a widow myself for three years before remarriage, and although I love to dance, I seldom had the chance to. Now when my husband and I go out and I see many women without escorts, I insist that he dance with as many as possible.

I don't mind sharing my husband of 18 years on the dance floor, since we're so happy at home where it counts. — WILLING TO SHARE IN BAYSIDE, CALIF.

DEAR WILLING: Thank you for writing. You show a great empathy for the loneliness of others. You are obviously very secure in your own marriage. My hat is off to you, dear lady; your husband is a lucky hoofer.

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Looking Heavenward" who asked you whether she would be reunited in marriage with her first love in heaven, or would she be stuck with her "worthless" husband: That question has been of concern for many centuries.

According to the writings of Matthew in the New Testament, Jesus was asked this question regarding a woman who had been married to each of seven brothers: "When the dead rise to life, whose wife will she be?"

Jesus answered that when the dead rise to life, they will be like angels in heaven, and will neither be married or given in marriage. — JEAN M. ETZEL, CONNECTICUT

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the woman who wants to preserve her husband's tattoo after he dies rang a bell with me. It has been done!

In 1969, I visited the Kyoto National Art Museum in Japan where I was privileged to view an exhibit of Scythian, Persian and Central Asian art from the Hermitage Collection in Leningrad. One of the most impressive exhibits in that collection was the tattooed shoulder and arm of a man buried in the fourth century. It was preserved as a work of art by tanning the skin like leather.

Instead of ridiculing the lady, as others have done for wanting to preserve her husband's tattoo, I would recommend that she arrange now, with her husband's permission, for someone qualified to preserve this work of art that she loves. (Human skin tans beautifully — like leather.) Then she must find a mortician willing to cooperate with the procedure.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am sure Grandma Jones went down a few pegs in love and respect in the eyes of her 16-year-old grandson and his mother. — NAMELESS IN MANVEL, TEXAS

DEAR NAMELESS: Aw, c'mon! A simple "thank you" is not too much to expect in return for a gift. Show me a person who, for the sheer joy of giving, continues to give to someone who shows no sign of appreciation, and I'll show you a sap — or a saint.

DEAR ABBY: I'd like for you to settle an argument between my husband and me. We will abide by your decision. I am a housewife with three children. My husband is a judge.

Monday: He took a class (for enjoyment mostly) and was gone from breakfast until bedtime.

Tuesday: I played volleyball for one hour.

Wednesday: He went to a college basketball game. Again he was gone from breakfast until bedtime.

Thursday: We both stayed home.

Friday: He went to a professional basketball game with our 4-year-old son. (I could have gone, but was home ill.)

Saturday: His high school friends called and wanted him to play poker. This is when the argument occurred. I felt that he had been away from

DEAR ABBY: When my children were little, I sat them down with crayons and paper before they even knew how to write and said, "Copy this!" Then they would "draw" a picture of the gift they had received and copy their names, after which they placed X's for kisses. People shouldn't be so hard on kids. They learn what they are taught. — MINNESOTA MOM

DEAR ABBY: You are mistaken. A gift is something that is given without expectation of anything in return. If one expects something in return — it is not a gift.

Chapter Names New Officers

Audrey Harsany was named president of Eta Delta chapter of Beta Sigma Phi Tuesday night.

Other officers are Linda Patterson, vice president; Betty Womack, recording secretary; Susan Deans, corresponding secretary, and Beth Holland, treasurer.

Committee reports were given. The next meeting will be held April 14 at 7:30 p.m. A tour of the N.C. Children's Hospital at Pitt County Memorial Hospital will be held.

The meeting was held at the home of Ms. Holland.

Flower Show School Planned

ROCKY MOUNT — The Garden Club of North Carolina, Inc., East Carolina Judges Club and Garden Clubs of District 12 will sponsor a Flower Show School, Course IV at Nash Technical College.

The school will be held April 7-9 with registration at 8:30 a.m.

The instructor in artistic design is Mrs. Lofton M. Milstead Jr. of Charleston, W.Va.

The study and culture of ferns, iris and African violets will be taught by Mrs. George Quick of Swansboro.

Dollar

 Stock traders, already nervous about the huge run-up in prices since the beginning of 1987, reacted to the frenzy in the currency market by selling stocks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks plunged more than 80 points early in Monday's session and ended up down 57.39 points to 2,278.41 at the close of the New York Stock Exchange. Earlier, Tokyo's stock market suffered its second largest single-day loss in history, led downward by stocks in companies that rely heavily on exports.

Stocks fell on the London Stock Exchange as British dealers cited concern about a potential trade war with Japan and about the weakness of the dollar pulling the pound down. Stock prices also were lower in Paris and Frankfurt, West Germany, though to a lesser extent.

The underlying reason for the dollar's weakness is the huge U.S. trade deficit, which hit a record $170 billion last year, stirring demands for protection from imports.

Although Japan has more to lose from a trade war than the United States, recent trade friction has seemed to put more pressure on the dollar, analysts say. That may be because traders believe the United States will try to defuse protectionist sentiment at home by engineering a further decline in the dollar, thus making American products more competitive with foreign goods.

Board

 in the county jail is too little, when the average cost to house a person in Pitt's jail is about $23 a day. To make matters worse, Tyson said, the state pays nothing for the "estimated eight or nine" female prisoners housed in Pitt's jail each week.

Although no solution to the problem was arrived at Monday, commissioners received pledges from Superior Court Judges David Reid and Horton Roundtree for assistance in clearing the jail of as many people as possible to make more room.

But District Attorney Tom Haigwood, who also attended the meeting, said "I'm not going to quit asking the judges to send people to prison."

 ried to Virginia Suther, who died in August 1973. He is the father of two sons, David Jordan Whichard II and John S. Whichard. He has five grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Active from early years in church, civic and community affairs, Whichard was one of the charter members of the American Legion when it was chartered in November 1919 at Minneapolis, Minn. "I was one of two North Carolinians attending the charter meeting and was made national committeeman from North Carolina," he said.

"I helped organize the old Greenville Merchants' Association, which later was reorganized as the Greenville Chamber of Commerce. I am also the oldest continuous member of Memorial Baptist Church."

One activity in which Whichard has been actively committed to is the Greenville Masonic Lodge. "I joined 71 years ago, on my 21st birthday," he said, "and I'm a life member of the lodge, all the York Rite bodies and the Scottish Rite."

At a time when Greenville was much smaller, Whichard was instrumental in helping found the Pitt County American Legion Fair. "The fair has been important to Greenville and to Pitt County," Whichard said. "It's something everybody can enjoy."

In formulating the idea of honoring the county's oldest known worker, Hannan said "this is one part of our effort to bring to the public's attention the many possibilities workers 55 and over have for gainful employment, part time or full time."

"A number of area employers are more than willing to provide gainful employment to older people, many after retirement from their regular occupation. Sometimes older people want to go into some work different

DePauw's Steele Gets ECU Job

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Mike Steele, head coach of Division III member DePauw, will be named as the men's head basketball coach at East Carolina University, a source at the school told The Daily Reflector Monday.

The school scheduled a 2 p.m. news conference for today to make the formal announcement, the sports information director's office said this morning. Steele, 33, comes to East Carolina after a six-year tenure at the Greenville, Ind., school. During those six seasons, he built a 123-39 record, and appeared in the Division III NCAA regionals the last four years.

The job became open in late January when Charlie Harrison, head coach for five years, offered his resignation effective the end of the season.

The job was later offered to Middle Tennessee State's Bruce Stewart, who turned it down. Then, according to reports, the job was offered to Gannon University coach Tom Chapman. However, Chapman reportedly turned the job down because of the length of contract offered. ECU officials have denied that Chapman was offered the job although they had called a press conference for the morning that Chapman was on campus.

Chapman, however, told the Erie, Pa., Daily Times today that he came to Greenville last week with every intention of signing a contract for the job, but balked on one of the provisions of the pact.

That provision called for Chapman to make no statements regarding the athletic program or basketball program without first getting approval from the athletic director, Ken Karr.

Meanwhile, Harrison said that Karr had recommended to him two years ago that he hire Steele as an assistant coach. Harrison said he had already hired Mike Dement, who served one year, then returned to Cornell, where he had been an assistant, to become head coach this past year.

Steele's 1986-87 team went 21-6 and advanced to the regionals before losing. His 1986 team went 26-2 and lost in the regional finals. Along the way the team compiled a 24-game winning streak, the longest in DePauw history.

His 1984 team went 26-5 and advanced to the Division III Final Four before losing to the eventual champion and finishing third.

A native of Robinson, Ill., Steele put together four straight 20-plus win seasons at DePauw. The year before he came to the school, the team finished 5-20, and in his first year, he recorded a seven-win improvement. His 1983 team was 18-7 — the most wins ever by a DePauw team at that time.

Among highlights of his career are a 61-game home court winning streak, a Division III record.

Over the past 11 semesters, his team has compiled a 3.0 academic average of the 4-point scale, and he has had one Academic All-American.

A graduate of Purdue, Steele played four years with the Boilermakers, starting as a junior and serving as team captain as a senior. His sophomore year, Purdue won the NIT championship.

Named to the All-Big Ten Academic team, Steele won Purdue's Lambert Award for academic excellence by an athlete.

He earned his master's degree from Bowling Green University, where he coached the junior varsity team to a 21-1 record in 1977.

Following that he served for four years as an assistant coach at Butler University in Indiana, where he was in charge of recruiting.

Steele was hired two years ago as the head coach at Dartmouth University, but quit after only four days to return to DePauw.

He and his wife Sandy have two sons.

Indiana Wins, 74-73

Smart Shot Sinks Syracuse

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Bob Knight has his third national basketball championship as coach at Indiana University — unexpectedly, and with help from an unlikely source.

Led by junior college transfer Keith Smart, a support player during the season, the Hoosiers defeated Syracuse 74-73 Monday night to win the same title they won under Knight in 1981 and '76.

"Those first two teams were teams that couldn't be beat," Knight said. "They were dominant. This team won the thing by hanging in there and making some big plays."

"This will not go down as one of the dominant NCAA teams. We won some games by the skin of our teeth. But we were competitive, and we did get there. And we surpassed some things I wasn't sure we could do."

In 1976, the Indiana stars were Kent Benson and Scott May. In 1981, it was Isiah Thomas and Ray Tolbert. This time, it was Smart and Steve Alford and Daryl Thomas and Dean Garrett.

For Syracuse, the game represented 30 seconds of broken dreams. Leading 73-72 with a half-minute to play, Syracuse saw its star forward, freshman Derrick Coleman, miss from the free-throw line. Then, after Smart's baseline jumper with five seconds left put Indiana ahead, the Syracuse players were unable to get a timeout until the clock had ticked down to one second.

"There's only one team in the country better than us, and they're only one point better," Syracuse center Rony Seikaly said.

On their road to the championship final, both Indiana and Syracuse disposed of teams that had lived by the NCAA's newest wrinkle, the 3-point goal.

Providence, the top 3-point shooting team in the country, lost 77-63 to Syracuse in one semifinal, and the Hoosiers defeated top-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas, the country's No. 2 long-range team, 97-93 in the other semifinal Saturday.

Ironically, when it came to the championship, Indiana profited mightily from the rule that Knight hates so much. Alford, Indiana's all-time leading scorer, hit 7-of-10 3-point attempts and scored all but two of his team-leading 23 points from outside the 19-foot, 9-inch stripe.

"I got on Ed Steitz (secretary of the NCAA's Rules Committee) about the 3-point shot, and he's never hesitated to come back at me about it," Knight said. "He told me he put it in so I could use it with Steve Alford and win the national championship.

"The thing I like least in basketball is the 3-point shot. Thanks, Ed."

The championship was the fifth overall for the Hoosiers, 30-4, who also won in 1940 and 1953 under Branch McCracken. Only UCLA, with 10, has more. Kentucky also has five.

With the victory, Knight joined Adolph Rupp and John Wooden as the only coaches to win at least three times. Wooden led UCLA to 10 titles, while Rupp coached Kentucky to four NCAA crowns.

It came in an unusually quiet season for Knight, whose career has been marked by tantrums and chair-throwing. He was assessed only two technicals this season, and one came after he told an official he finally had made a good call.

"Things couldn't have ended up better for the three seniors on this team," Alford said of himself and teammates Thomas and reserve Todd Meier. "Over the years, we have grown very close as friends, and this year were able to provide leadership to this team."

"We were able to criticize each other and respond to it in a positive manner. For me, it has been a very rewarding experience playing for Coach Knight."

Although there was little consolation in losing, Syracuse could look back at one of its best seasons. The Orangemen finished 31-7 and were in their first NCAA championship game.

"The kids did everything we asked them to do the whole game, and it came down that somebody had to make a play at the end," Syracuse Coach Jim Boheim said. "Indiana made a great play, and that's why they won. They deserved it."

"It wasn't a foul shot that lost the game."

Boheim has taken the Orangemen to the tournament nine times in his 11 seasons but had never gotten past the second round until this year. After Syracuse's second-round victory over Western Kentucky, Seikaly pronounced the monkey off Boheim's back.

Boheim bristled when reminded that he carried a reputation as a coach who couldn't win the big ones. "The media puts too much attention on tournament records," he said. "We could have lost in the first round, and if he had, I guess I would still be a lousy coach."

Perhaps the monkey is back, but his younger players were optimistic of a bright future.

"There's no reason for us to hang our heads," Coleman said. "Hopefully, we'll be back."

Smart scored 21 points for Indiana and was named the Most Outstanding Player of the Final Four. He had six assists, five rebounds and a lean-in jumper after driving the left baseline into the game.

"We were concentrating on the 3-pointer by Alford, and that's why they were able to go inside," Coleman said.

On Indiana's final possession, Syracuse went to a box-and-one zone defense with Howard Triche assigned to Alford.

"We were just trying to contain the perimeter," Triche said. "We were successful for a little while, and the ball kept going in and back out. There was a little bit of a scramble, and he (Smart) came up with a pretty good shot."

Syracuse led by as many as eight points, 52-44, with 13:14 to play, but Smart had three points and an assist in a 10-0 run that got Indiana ahead 54-52. Smart scored 10 points in the

McGraw Is CAA Player Of Week

Junior outfielder Jay McGraw, who led East Carolina to five consecutive victories last week, has been named the Colonial Athletic Association baseball player of the week.

McGraw batted .571 (12-21) for the week including two doubles, a triple and a home run. The Charlotte native also collected the game winning RBI in three of the five games, scored six runs and stole a base.

ECU, 13-2 overall and 6-0 in the CAA, swept a double-header from non-conference foe Rider on Tuesday, then topped Colonial rival William and Mary three times over the weekend in Williamsburg, Va. The Pirates, winners of eight straight, are the only unbeaten team in the CAA.

In the double header versus Rider, McGraw went 2-3 in the first game, and punched in the eventual game-winning run in the bottom half of the sixth in the 6-5 win. In the nightcap, McGraw belted his third home run of the year with two out in the bottom of the seventh to give ECU a 7-5 victory.

At William and Mary, McGraw went 3-6 (2 RBI, game-winner), 4-4 (two doubles and a triple) and 2-4 (double, two RBI) as ECU downed the Tribe 13-3, 26-0 and 5-4, respectively. McGraw, whose batting average had dipped to .207, upped his average to .360 with the productive week.

Indiana Fans Jam Streets, Night Spots To Celebrate

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Indiana University fans jammed streets and night spots around the campus early today, celebrating their Hoosiers' basketball championship for the NCAA basketball championship.

"Nobody's really tried to tear up anything," Bloomington police Sgt. John Coleman said. "We've seen some people throwing bottles, and that's a little scary but nothing real serious."

Bloomington Hospital treated about 50 people Monday night and early today for minor injuries, mostly bruises and sprains, said Sandy Fiscus, the hospital's director of marketing.

Ice and snow covered the streets, prompting a few snowball fights. Thousands of fans gathered beneath an informal fireworks show at Showalter Fountain on campus.

"This is great, I love it," Frank S. Haut said. "I've been here for three years. I'm a junior, I've been waiting for this."

"This is bedlam, chaos, completely frantic," Matt Lucas, a cook at a popular student hangout, said after Indiana's 74-73 victory over the Orangemen.

"It kept you on the edge of your seat the whole time," said Ken Bonnignon of Clyde, Ohio, in town for a convention. "That's the kind of game you hope you see once in awhile."

"It was close all the way," said Merle Booker of Connell, Wash. "I didn't think they were going to pull it out."

Police blocked off the area around Dunn Street and Kirkwood Avenue near the campus to avoid a repeat of Saturday night, when celebrants dented car roofs and hoods by jumping onto the tops of vehicles.

But a pickup truck that made it through the cordon became a makeshift parade float for more than two dozen fans as the truck edged its way through the thick crowds.

Police acted swiftly to quell a battle that erupted between fans on the roof of one building who fired bottle rockets at celebrants throwing snowballs at them.

"We're doing OK right now," said Capt. Steve Sharp, night shift commander who cleared some of the fans from the roof of Nick's English Hut, a traditional postgame hangout.

Carlos Burgos was selling T-shirts and hats commemorating the championship.

"Business is great," he said. "They've been all over me. They aren't asking me what it costs. They are just grabbing it."

Screams and blaring horns could be heard across the southern Indiana campus and around the surrounding area as fans celebrated the victory. Students ran through the Memorial Union on campus shouting IU slogans and cheering.

Sports Med Meet Set

The 17th annual East Carolina Sports Medicine Conference will be held April 10-11 at the Allied Health Building on the ECU campus.

The conference, sanctioned by the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction's Sports Medicine Division, annually brings in speakers to address topics relating to injuries and treatment and preventive actions for athletes.

The conference is opened to certified athletic trainers, teacher-trainers, coaches, student trainers and team physicians in schools with and without a sports medicine program.

Registration will begin at 8 a.m. April 10 and the session will conclude at 5 p.m. The April 11 session will last from 8:30 a.m. until 5:15 p.m.

Tuition for the conference is $45 per person, and includes lectures, labs, materials, notebooks, refreshments and a pig pickin'. Overnight accommodations, if needed, are the responsibility of those attending the conference and should be handled separately.

The deadline for registration is Wednesday. For more information, or to register, contact the Sports Medicine Conference, Division of Continuing Education, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C. 27834-4353, or telephone 757-6143.

Smart Says It Was Team Effort

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Keith Smart, who put on a one-man show in Indiana's NCAA championship victory over Syracuse, insisted his supporting cast should have its name in lights as well.

"It was a team effort the whole night," Smart said after scoring 17 of his 21 points in the second half, including the game-winning shot with five seconds to play, in the Hoosiers' 74-73 victory Monday night. His late-game heroics resulted in his being named the Final Four's Most Outstanding Player.

"We played together all year, and at the end, any five of the players could have taken the shot," he said.

But it was Smart who got the call, and he won the game by sinking a jumper from the left baseline.

"I didn't think it was going to go in," Smart said. "I was just hoping it would hit the rim and one of the other guys would grab it and put it in."

Ironically, that's how Indiana advanced to the Final Four, when Daryl Thomas' air ball with six seconds to play against Louisiana State was put in by Rick Calloway, giving the Hoosiers a one-point win.

Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim said the Orangemen used a box-and-one defense in the closing seconds to make sure two-time All-America Steve Alford didn't get the ball.

"Smart made a great play," Alford said.

With time running out, Smart had the ball left of the key and dumped it inside to Thomas, who then gave it back to Smart, who went over Howard Triche for the game-winner.

"He came up with a pretty good shot and made an excellent play," Triche said.

That Smart, a junior college transfer who grew up 70 miles away in Baton Rouge, hit the game-winner should have surprised no one. He scored 14 points in the final 9:35, including eight of the Hoosiers' last nine points.

"When we started that stretch, we wanted Keith to get 12 points before the home folks," Indiana Coach Bob Knight said jokingly. "I figured 16 points would be enough to win it, and we wanted Keith to get 12 of them."

Alford, the Hoosiers' all-time scoring leader, finished with 23 points, all but two from 3-point range. However, he made only one basket in the final 11 minutes as Syracuse hounded him with a number of different defensive schemes.

But Smart, who scored 14 points before fouling out in the Hoosiers' 97-93 semifinal victory over Nevada-Las Vegas, took charge and kept Indiana in the game.

"At halftime, Coach told me I had to get into the game," Smart said. "I was able to penetrate the gaps, dump off some passes and make some shots."

"They were giving me the baseline. I knew if I could get one step, I'd be all right."

Is the baseline jumper his favorite shot?

"If it goes in, that's my shot," he said.

Thomas, whose 20 points from inside helped give Smart room to work, gave credit to his teammate for taking control.

"He played way above his head. He was just outstanding," Thomas said.

Smart shrugged when asked if he decided in the closing minutes to take matters into his hands.

"It looked like that, but it didn't feel that way at all," he said. "Steve Alford is the man on this team."

"I just took what was given to me."

Syracuse was sagging inside and covering Steve tight, so he was looking for me and that worked.

"We have never panicked, not one time this year," he said. "If Steve is covered, someone steps forward. Daryl has done it, Dean (Garrett) has done it. Tonight it was my turn."

"I couldn't dream of coming home like this and having this happen," he said.

Smart and Alford were voted to the all-tournament team, along with Sherman Douglas and Derrick Coleman of Syracuse, and Armon Gilliam of Nevada-Las Vegas.

Syracuse Fans Go On Rampage Following Loss

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — The somber mood in Syracuse turned into one of frustration and violence early today as thousands of Syracuse University fans went on a rampage following their team's heartbreaking one-point loss to Indiana in the battle for the national basketball championship.

Police said an estimated 4,000 youths stormed university streets, some of them taunting police, throwing beer cans and causing damage to businesses and each other. Police had charged about 15 people with disorderly conduct by 12:30 a.m. today, after moving into the huge crowd and ordering people to disperse.

The throng, still chanting obscenities aimed at Indiana Coach Bob Knight, began to disperse shortly before 1 a.m.

In the hours after Indiana had posted its 74-73 triumph, however, youths broke windows, tore down signs and swung from telephone lines in a repeat performance of the destruction that took place Saturday after Syracuse's semifinal win over Providence.

Numerous people suffered minor injuries in drunken brawls and others were hurt by flying beer cans, police said.

The trouble started about 11 p.m. and surprised police, who had reported no major problems in the hour immediately after the end of Monday night's game.

Then youths started ripping down trees and throwing beer cans through store windows along Marshall Street and South Crouse Avenue.

Police Capt. Dean Bender said officers were forced to move into the crowd after employees in an ice cream store told them a man was lying in front of their store injured.

"We tried to do it peacefully, but when we moved in, it got pretty wild," Bender said. "We don't like to do that. We'd rather just watch, you're better off that way. But there was a man down. We had no choice."

The man's injuries apparently were not serious.

A force of 100 police officers, some in riot gear and some on horseback, marched into the crowd shortly before midnight and hauled off some of the more unruly fans. Both the police and their four horses quickly became the targets of the youths, who threw beer cans and bottles at them as they moved through the crowd.

Police Chief Leigh Hunt said he ordered his force to disperse the crowd after the fans became violent and the situation appeared to be getting out of control.

"Climbing up on the trees is a problem because that's when they become dangerous to themselves," Hunt said. "If they fall off they could get hurt pretty bad."

At several points, police moved away from the crowd and stood back as a line of youths taunted them and threw cans at them.

Fifty officers were on duty from the start of the game and were able to keep matters under control until about 11:30 p.m. Additional officers in riot gear were bused to the scene before midnight.

Officers initially thought there would not be a repeat of the violence that wracked the area Saturday night. Police had hoped for rain to keep the size of the crowd down, but the rain didn't come and the number of fans kept growing as the night went on.

"We were here early and we were here when they came out of the bars, and that helped," said Sgt. Tony Mangel.

final 5:41, including a driving layup that pulled Indiana within 73-72 with 32 seconds to play. The basket came on a fast break after a missed free throw by Syracuse's Triche.

"I just took what was given to me," said Smart, who came in averaging 10.9 points per game. "Syracuse was sagging inside and covering Steve tight, so he was looking for me and that worked. It's great to have a player like Steve because it opens up so much for the others on the team."

With 30 seconds left, Indiana called timeout, and Smart fouled Coleman on the inbounds play, sending Syracuse to the line with 28 seconds left. Boeheim opted to send all his players back on defense, so Indiana lined up along the lane alone.

Coleman, a 69-percent foul shooter for the season, missed the first shot of the 1-and-1, turning over possession to Indiana, which worked for Smart's final shot at the five-second mark.

Questioned about the strategy of clearing the foul lane, Boeheim said: "I think I made a mistake. I think I made it on the earlier free throw (by Triche). I should have kept the guys back then, and maybe they wouldn't have gotten the transition basket Smart got. We had the lead, and we weren't worrying about scoring more points. We had enough points to win."

After working the ball in and out several times, Indiana got it to Smart. Smart, who went to Garden City Junior College in Kansas the past two years, took a pass from Thomas and worked along the baseline for the winning shot.

"We worked it around for about 10 seconds, and I knew time was running out, so I just took the shot," Smart said. "Actually, the play was designed for Steve, but it broke down and the shot went to me."

"Pickup games are the only time I've ever made a shot like this before."

Thomas said he was trying "to set up a screen to get Steve open and work time off the clock. I got the ball, turned and posted my defensive man, and he didn't budge. That's when I hit Keith with the pass, and he hit the shot."

Several Syracuse players said they tried to call timeout after regaining possession, but they were ignored by the referees.

"All of us tried," Coleman said. "But I don't think the referees could hear us from all the noise."

Syracuse guard Greg Monroe said both he and Triche "signaled for timeout. I saw three seconds left. I was near halfcourt, and Howard was right near the referee, but they didn't see it."

Sophomore guard Sherman Douglas led Syracuse with 20 points, and Seikaly had 18, but only one after returning from a three-minute rest with 12 minutes left. Monroe finished with 12. Thomas had 20 for Indiana, and Garrett had 10 points and 10 rebounds.

Repeating that a third national championship meant little to him personally, Knight said:

"It pleases me tremendously for the kids and for our system. I'm obviously a target for a lot of criticism for one reason or another — some justified and some not — and here we have three different sets of kids with three championships. Our record has been pretty good in the tournament, and what that means to me is pretty good testimony that we're doing things the way they should be done."

"The last couple of regular-season games, I was rooting for Penn State and Joe Paterno to win the football championships. I think it's great that two teams with high graduation rates and no recruiting garbage can win national championships in the same season."

"Maybe people will look at that and say, 'Well, if they can do it that way, so can we.'"

Weather Forces Cancellations

East Carolina's Monday night baseball game against Southern Maine was washed out by the weather and will not be rescheduled.

The contest was only one of several outdoor events lost to the weather.

East Carolina and Southern Maine are scheduled to play a single game tonight at 8 p.m. at Harrington Field.

Rose High School's track meet with New Bern was moved to Thursday, and a meet with Beddingfield, scheduled for Thursday, was rescheduled for today. A golf match with Beddingfield, rained out Monday, was reset for today. A girls track meet with Eastern Wayne, Conley, Farmville Central and Rose was also postponed. The Conley-Rose segment will be run on Monday, but the Eastern Wayne-Farmville Central segments are uncertain as to makeup.

A golf match at Ayden-Gritton, involving Farmville Central and Pamlico has not been reset, while a boys' track meet between Farmville and SouthWest Edgecombe has been reset for today.

Conley's golf match with Washington has been rescheduled for May 11.

Labonte Has Broken Shoulder

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — NASCAR driver Terry Labonte suffered a "significant fracture" of his shoulder blade in a wreck in the TransSouth 500 at Darlington International Raceway, the team promoter says.

Labonte was taken to McLeod Regional Medical center after the accident in Sunday's race at Darlington International Raceway and was released about 10 p.m., said Bob Latford, a spokesman for Budweiser, which promotes Labonte's team.

Labonte returned home to High Point after being released. He saw an orthopedic surgeon in Hickory on Monday, Latford said during a telephone interview from his Charlotte office.

The surgeon said Labonte suffered "a significant fracture of the lower portion of the shoulder blade" but that it was too early to tell how long Labonte would be out of action, Latford said.

Initially, officials had said Labonte would be out four to six weeks.

Two things working in Labonte's favor were that he injured his right shoulder and the injury was on the lower portion of the shoulder, Latford said. Labonte is left-handed.

"The surgeon said the lower on the shoulder the better," Latford said.

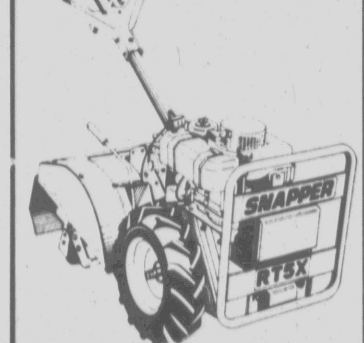

Latford also said no decision has been announced on who will take Labonte's place on the Junior Johnson team.

Labonte was involved in a six-car accident in which his car was hit by two cars on lap 145 of the 365-lap race at the newly paved track, the oldest superspeedway on the Winston Cup circuit.

Gibson Shelved By Rib Injury

By The Associated Press

With the defection of catcher Lance Parrish, the Detroit Tigers already had a power shortage. If Kirk Gibson is seriously hurt, it may be a real blackout.

Gibson, who missed six weeks last season with an ankle injury, suffered pulled rib muscles Monday while taking batting practice in a cage located in an old Navy airplane hanger at the Tigers' spring training complex. The indoor workout was necessitated by the fourth successive day of heavy rain in central Florida.

Gibson, batting against a machine, cried out in pain and dropped to the ground, holding his right side, after swinging at a pitch.

"That's how it must feel to be shot," said Gibson, who had trouble breathing immediately after the mishap. "This is something, isn't it?"

Dr. David J. Collon, the team's orthopedic consultant, said he couldn't determine how long Gibson would be sidelined. He said the slugger might be ready by opening day, with some pain, but there is no guarantee.

"We'll have to wait and see how he feels tomorrow (Tuesday)," Collon said. "I think, knowing Gibby, the odds are that he'll play opening day. We all know Gibby's ability to come back from an injury."

Collon said that if Gibson was very sore on Tuesday, his chances of playing against the New York Yankees next Monday were slim.

"In theory, it could go three or four weeks," Collon said.

Meanwhile, relief ace Willie Hernandez learned that he has an inflammation around his rotator cuff. Hernandez, who has pitched only seven innings in five spring games, first experienced pain in his left shoulder last Tuesday.

Collon diagnosed the problem as some minor inflammation around the outside of the rotator cuff. He gave Hernandez some medication and prescribed a combination of rest and resistance-type exercises.

"He doesn't think it's too serious," Hernandez said. "It's more than I thought, though. It scared me a little."

Six more exhibition games were rained out, thoroughly embarrassing some Chambers of Commerce. But there was plenty of action off the field.

The Chicago Cubs acquired veteran catcher Jim Sundberg from the Kansas City Royals in exchange for outfielder Thad Bosley and pitcher Dave Gumpert. Sundberg, 35, hit .212 last season but had a career-high 12 home runs and led American League catchers with a .995 fielding percentage.

General Manager Lou Gorman of the Boston Red Sox said that agents for AWOL pitching ace Roger Clemens had made "a new proposal" in contract negotiations for the 1986 AL MVP and Cy Young Award winner. Gorman said that the fact the agents called "is encouraging" but he didn't sound too enthusiastic about the proposal.

"I'll have to study it, but on the surface it would seem to still average out to $1 million a year for two years," Gorman said.

The Red Sox rejected Clemens' demands for $2.4 million for two years before he walked out of camp on March 6. The club's latest offer was $500,000, plus a possible $475,000 in incentives.

Veteran pitcher Tim Lollar wasn't able to take advantage of Clemens' absence. The Red Sox asked waivers on Lollar for the purpose of giving him his unconditional release despite a guaranteed $635,000 contract.

The Red Sox made more news when Buddy LeRoux ended an uneasy alliance with the other two owners by selling them his general partnership in the club. He said he decided reluctantly to sell to Haywood Sullivan and Jean R. Yawkey because they wouldn't sell their shares to him and "a number of things have occurred in the past six months which were concerning to me." LeRoux didn't specify what they were.

The sale price has been reported at about $7 million. LeRoux, Sullivan and Mrs. Yawkey bought the club in 1978 from the estate of Tom Yawkey.

The Old and the New Monday's biggest housecleaning was done by the Baltimore Orioles, who farmed out first baseman-outfielder Jim Traber, the rookie sensation of 1986, cut relief pitchers Rich Bordi, Brad Havens and Jack O'Connor and rookie designated hitter Tom Dodd and put veteran reliever Tippy Martinez on the disabled list.

"I don't feel I got a chance to play the outfield here," Traber said. "Two games was not any kind of chance. I think they gave me false hopes, saying the left field and right field jobs were open. I can hit the ball and can help a major league team, whether it's the Orioles or someone else."

Martinez, who had arthroscopic shoulder surgery after pitching only 16 innings last season, is expected to report to an extended spring training program to continue his rehabilitation. Bordi was 6-4 last season but only 2-3 in his last 17 appearances with an 8.26 earned run average.

It's kind of late to get hooked up with another big team now, unless something happens," Bordi said. Meanwhile, Cal Ripken Jr. broke out of a 6-for-46 slump with three doubles and a single, driving in five runs as the Orioles defeated the Montreal Expos 9-7 and ended a five-game losing streak. John Shelby had a double and an inside-the-park homer.

The Minnesota Twins released veteran infielder Ron Washington.

St. Louis Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog said rookie Jim Lindeman will start his season in right field. "I'll start him every day and give him an all-out chance," Herzog said. "I've been very impressed with him. He's shown no problem with breaking pitches."

Lindeman is batting .350 this spring with three home runs and a club-leading 15 RBIs while playing third base, first base, left and right field. Andy Van Slyke will switch from right field to center until Willie McGee recovers from off-season knee surgery.

Graig Nettles' hot spring has earned him the chance for another major league summer. The Atlanta Braves told the 42-year-old former New York Yankees star that he made the team as a backup first baseman-third baseman. Nettles helped his chances Sunday by hitting three homers in a game against Baltimore.

With Mario Soto still recuperating from last August's arthroscopic shoulder surgery, the Cincinnati Reds announced that Tom Browning will be their Opening Day starter next Monday against Montreal. Bill Gullickson will start the second

Medical Report New York Mets relief pitcher Roger McDowell was in satisfactory condition after undergoing surgery for a hernia. The Mets said McDowell's 90-minute operation was routine. He is expected to miss 6-8 weeks and the Mets put him and rookie third baseman Dave Magadan on the disabled list. Magadan was treated for a viral infection of the lymph nodes two weeks ago and cannot throw or swing a bat for 11 more days.

Toronto pitcher Craig McMurtry and Atlanta second baseman Damaso Garcia, who were traded for each other last month, both went on the disabled list. McMurtry underwent an emergency appendectomy, while Garcia has a sore knee and will undergo arthroscopic surgery this week. The Blue Jays also put reliever Gary Lavelle on the 15-day disabled list as part of his scheduled rehabilitation from a tendon transplant.

Exhibition Games —Rick Mahler allowed one run and seven hits in eight innings as the Braves defeated the New York Yankees 6-1. The Braves broke a 1-1 tie in the sixth inning with a four-run outburst against loser Charles Hudson.

—Mike Mason became the first Texas pitcher to go eight innings, giving up one run and seven hits as the Rangers beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 6-1. Oddibe McDowell homered for Texas.

—Milwaukee's Bill Wegman allowed one run and six hits in seven innings as the Brewers edged the Chicago Cubs 2-1.

—Candy Maldonado hit a two-run homer and an RBI single in San Francisco's eight-run sixth inning as the Giants totaled 19 hits in a 19-8 victory over the Oakland Athletics. In the eighth inning, losing pitcher Cliff Young threw three wild pitches and the A's committed two errors. Mackey Sasser hit a solo homer for the Giants and Matt Williams had a three-run shot.

—The Cleveland Indians, held to two hits through eight innings, rallied for four runs in the ninth to defeat the Seattle Mariners 5-3. Brett Butler tripled home the tying run and scored on Julio Franco's single. Joe Carter followed with a two-run homer. Cory Snyder also homered for Cleveland.

—Don Sutton pitched six innings and Wally Joyner's two-run single keyed a three-run second as the California Angels blanked the San Diego Padres 6-0.

IU Fans Write Dream Ending

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Indiana basketball fans defied predictions of record-setting cold and gusting winds early today to write their own endings to the Hoosiers' championship season.

Indiana's 74-73 triumph over Syracuse was "a fitting final chapter to the book," said Indiana booster Jim Marshall, referring to "On the Brink," an account of a season with the Indiana basketball team that has been an object of derision among Hoosier fans.

"I'm going to go home to Indianapolis and write the last chapter and send it to Bob Knight," he said.

"These boys are tired of being called quitters. The fans quit, but the boys didn't," he said.

Marshall and his wife, Diana, were two of the hundreds of people who ignored predictions of freezing temperatures and braved winds gusting up to 31 mph to crowd French Quarter bars and restaurants.

"When you're a fan you do whatever it takes to get the job done," Mike White of Indianapolis said.

Syracuse fans took to the streets also.

"We didn't want to go back to the hotel room and pout," said Craig Sherman, a recent Syracuse graduate.

"We'll party with the Indiana people," his friend Max King said. "If they're not jerks."

"Like we would have been," Sherman added.

Unlike the revelers after Saturday night's semifinal games, who celebrated with a loud street party, today's celebrants were more subdued, perhaps because they were drained by the close contest or perhaps because there was just one winner.

"Foul shooting, that was our Achilles' heel," said Alan Brickman, a Syracuse graduate and attorney, who said he has represented such Orangemen as John Mackey, Jim Nance and Larry Csonka.

"Coleman's on the line ready to shoot and they call a timeout," Brickman said.

"I've been waiting 45 years to win a title and we lost on a Bobby Knight timeout."

Despite the temperatures, New Orleans police said they expected a large crowd to jam the narrow streets. "And we expect it to go on for quite a while, too," said police Sgt. Ronald Boucette

"I don't expect the cold to bother these people, Boucette said. "They're from Indiana, Syracuse, northern schools, the cold weather shouldn't have any effect on them."

"Syracuse has a heck of a basketball team," Marshall said.

"I thought we had a better chance against UNLV. If Keith Smart hadn't come through for us we would have been in a lot of trouble," he said.

"We lost, but we've lost before," King said. "I'm not sad and I'm not bummed."

"We'll be back next year," senior Sharon Fegerabend added, "We're young."

"I'm pretty ecstatic right now," Jeff Hannah, 25, of Bloomington, Ind., said as he sat in the patio of Pat O'Brien's bar. "I was born and raised on Indiana basketball."

Syracuse Lived It All In 1 Minute

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Syracuse experienced a season full of highs and lows in one final frustrating minute.

The 10th-ranked Orangemen failed to win their first national championship Monday night, falling to No. 3 Indiana 74-73 when Keith Smart hit a sjde jumper with five seconds to play to give the Hoosiers their fifth national championship and third under Coach Bob Knight.

Syracuse called a timeout with one second to play and the missing four seconds after Smart's shot were just 1-15th of the frantic, controversial final minute.

"When the last minute of play began, the game was tied 70-70. Four seconds later, Syracuse had a two-point lead when Howard Triche, who was 1-for-7 from the field in the first half, hit his second straight field goal. Triche grabbed his only rebound of the game 18 seconds later when Smart missed a jumper from the right baseline, and was fouled by Steve Alford.

Triche made the front end of the 1-and-1, but missed the second. Smart grabbed the rebound and drove the length of the court for a driving basket that brought the Hoosiers within one point.

Smart then fouled freshman forward Derrick Coleman, who had 19 rebounds in the game, and sent him to the foul line. Indiana called timeout.

"I felt confident, there wasn't any emotion," Coleman said. "I wasn't nervous, I knew it could be the game."

Coleman was the only Syracuse player on the Orangemen's side of the court as Coach Jim Boheim decided to have his other four players back for defense.

Coleman missed and Indiana's Daryl Thomas grabbed the rebound.

"When I released it I knew it was off to the right," Coleman said. "Coach didn't want anyone on the foul line so we wouldn't get in any foul trouble."

Fouls weren't the problem. Keith Smart was.

"I think I made a mistake," said Boheim, who has coached the Orangemen for 11 seasons. "If I made a mistake, I think I made it on the earlier free throw. I think we should have kept guys back then, maybe they wouldn't have gotten the transition basket that Smart got. We had the lead and we weren't worrying about scoring more points. We had enough to win."

They did, until Smart made his game-winner with five seconds left at the same end of the Superdome that North Carolina freshman Michael Jordan did five years ago to the day to give the Tar Heels the national championship over Georgetown.

"We expected Alford to get the ball," center Rony Seikaly, who finished with 18 points and 10 rebounds, said. "That's why we were so surprised when Smart got it and let it go."

"I was ready on the weak side for the rebound but it hit the bottom of the net."

Syracuse then had trouble calling time, or at least getting the officials to recognize that it wanted a timeout.

"Both Howard and I signaled time out and I thought there were about three seconds left," said Greg Monroe, who finished with 12 points, including two of eight 3-point attempts. "I was a little more toward halfcourt and Howard was there by the official and we both signaled time out. Two ticks went off and there was one second left."

Coleman agreed with Monroe. "I guess the ref didn't hear us," Coleman, who scored eight points, said. "We tried (to call the timeout). We all tried."

Coleman wasn't happy with the thought of the Orangemen coming so close to the title in their first Final Four appearance since 1975.

"The season doesn't mean nothing to me," he said. "Coach said there was no reason to hang my head. Hopefully we'll be back some time before I graduate."

Syracuse loses only Monroe and Triche, the third- and fifth-leading scorers, respectively. Coleman and Seikaly will be back on the frontline and sophomore Sherman Douglas, who led the Orangemen with 20 points and seven assists against Indiana, will anchor the backcourt.

Can there be anything positive for Syracuse about the toughest and last loss of a 31-7 season?

"There's only one team better than us," Seikaly said. "And they're only one point better."

Delay Develops In Dome Construction

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The Army Corps of Engineers, citing additional construction described in a developer's internal memoranda, asked for more detail Monday before permitting construction to go ahead on a proposed 70,000-seat domed football stadium in St. Louis County.

At issue was whether ancillary construction projects would push the project beyond boundaries of a northwest St. Louis County area for which a permit was issued in May 1985. Corps Col. Robert M. Amrine said if the project along the Missouri River is to be expanded, a new application must be submitted.

Developers of a proposed $130 million stadium cleared a legal hurdle earlier this month when environmental groups dropped a lawsuit challenging the Corps of Engineers permit. The environmentalists retained the right to challenge construction, however.

The stadium, a pet project of County Executive Gene McNary, would serve as a new home for the NFL's St. Louis Cardinals.

Amrine, in a letter he wrote to the stadium's developer, said an alternative to revoking the Corps' permit would be for sponsoring county officials to submit an application for filling wetlands over a greater area than originally described.

Developers currently have permission to fill four wetlands acres, Amrine said. In addition, he said, they also stated that improvements on roads already in existence would meet the needs of traffic generated by the stadium.

Amrine's letter was addressed to B. R. Smith, president of Sverdrup Corp., the proposed stadium's engineer and developer.

The Corps of Engineers officer said he is re-evaluating the construction permit on the basis of memoranda suggesting that hotels, racetracks and trade centers might become part of the commercial project.

Cardinals owner William V. Bidwill earlier this month signed a letter of intent to occupy the proposed Riverport dome, if it is built. Bidwill said he wants ground broken for the project by November.

McNary and Mayor Vincent C. Schoemehl Jr. of St. Louis engaged in a tug of war to gain backing for the stadium. Bidwill insists the Cardinals need to supplant 53,000-seat Busch Stadium downtown.

Only recently, Bidwill said his NFL team has no plans to move to another city at least through the 1987 season. Two years ago, although disclaiming he was interested in moving the franchise, he listened to offers from cities such as Phoenix and Jacksonville.

Amrine, in a letter he wrote to the stadium's developer, said an alternative to revoking the Corps' permit would be for sponsoring county officials to submit an application for filling wetlands over a greater area than originally described.

Indiana The Tops But Not At Its Best, Knight Says

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer
NEW ORLEANS (AP)—There is just no satisfying some people. Bobby Knight's Indiana Hoosiers had just won the national championship, but the coach still saw room for improvement.

"I'm still not sure we're a really good basketball team," he said dryly after Indiana's 74-73 victory delivered the NCAA tournament title Monday night. "We will not go down in history as one of the dominant NCAA champions."
 Knight, however, must go down as one of the dominant coaches, winning his third NCAA title. Only UCLA's John Wooden, with 10, and Kentucky's Adolph Rupp, with four, have won more.

If this Indiana team did not enchant its coach, at least he granted that it had made some progress.
 "Three years ago, this team had a tough time asserting itself, hanging on to leads," he said. "We were ahead of Louisville in one game and then got outscored 28-7. Then, at South Bend, we were ahead of Notre Dame and got outscored 29-8. That's 21 points in five or six minutes in two games. That's how far this team has come from that."

"I'm pleased for them and with them."
 Knight, dressed in what has become his trademark red pullover sweater, spent a quiet night on the sidelines, rarely yelling at his players or the officials. The volatile image he has developed over the years was absent. It was almost as if he had changed with the times.

On one second-half sequence, Syracuse's Rony Seikaly blocked a shot that the Indiana bench thought was goaltending. Every man on the Hoosier sidelines leaped up in protest — except the man in the red sweater.

Another time, when Keith Smart, Indiana's eventual hero, threw the ball away badly on a turnover, Knight yanked him immediately. But when Smart came to the bench, the coach did not yell at him, choosing instead to pat the player on the back. The support may have paid important dividends later when Smart won the game.

When he was exasperated with plays or players, Knight simply leaned back in his chair, sometimes covering his eyes, sometimes holding his head. At halftime, when Steve Alford's 3-point shot just before the buzzer gave Indiana a one-point lead, Knight was the last man off the bench, trailing his team into the locker room.

"I didn't feel really good walking off the floor at the half because we weren't as sharp as we were on Saturday," he said. "Syracuse had us standing around a little bit. We were pressing a little bit more than we should and not really getting the ball where we wanted to."

Alford's 3-pointer was one of seven that the All-America guard hit in the game. Knight saw some irony in that, considering his well-documented opposition to the new rule.

"I got on Ed Steitz (secretary-editor of the rules committee) about the 3-point shot the first time I saw him after the rule was put in," Knight said. "He never hesitates to go back at me. He said, 'We put it in so you could use it with Alford and win the national championship.' I said, 'OK, you come in and draw the offenses.'"

"The thing I like least in basketball is the 3-pointer. Then I look at tonight's statistics and we made three more 3-pointers than Syracuse and that's the difference."

"Thanks, Ed."

Hearns Says Sugar Ray Will See New Hagler

An AP Sports Analysis
By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Boxing Writer

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP)—Thomas Hearns isn't sure which Sugar Ray Leonard will show up next Monday night. But he's certain Leonard will be facing a different Marvelous Marvin Hagler.

Hagler "won't be that aggressive again in his entire life," Hearns said in recalling his third-round knockout loss to the middleweight champion on April 15, 1985, at Las Vegas.

"Another fight like that would kill him."

Hagler shot out of his corner against Hearns, missing with his first punch and almost falling. The first round was savage and Hearns never recovered.

Hagler showed more emotion and took more chances in the eight-minute fight than at any time during his 62-2-2 career. It would be a very difficult performance to repeat. Hagler is very aware of Leonard's stature in the public mind, but it also seems he could have feared an active Hearns more than he fears Leonard, who will be fighting for only the second time in some 62 months.

In Leonard's last fight, his only one since retinal surgery on his left eye in 1982, he got off the canvas in the fourth round to stop journeyman Kevin Howard in the ninth round on May 11, 1984, at Worcester, Mass.

Leonard, who looked tentative for the most of that bout, announced his retirement again after the fight. He now contends it was a hasty decision, one he wouldn't have made the next day.

"If Sugar Ray Leonard comes out like that, he's dead. He hasn't got a chance if he fights that way," said Hearns, the former World Boxing Association welterweight and World Boxing Council super welterweight champion who now holds the WBC light heavyweight title.

"But if he fights Hagler likes he fought me," Hearns said, "it's going to be a great fight."

On Sept. 16, 1981, outdoors at Caesars Palace, where Monday's fight will be held, the unbeaten Hearns fought the once-beaten Leonard, the World Boxing Council champion, for the undisputed welterweight title.

Leonard had Hearns in trouble in the sixth and seventh rounds, turning "Hit Man" into a boxer. Leonard also knocked down Hearns in the 13th round, but with two rounds remaining Hearns was slightly ahead on each of the three official cards.

Leonard stopped Hearns in the 14th round.

"Which Ray Leonard is going to show up?" Hearns wondered.

It's a question that strikes to the very heart of the scheduled 12-round fight.
 "It's a real long time not to have fought," Hearns said of Leonard's layoff. "But he's been in and out of the gym and he's been boxing. I think the sparring will compensate for the inactivity."

However, a lot of boxing people think a boxer learns in the gym, but only gets in fighting trim by fighting.

As for the fight, Hearns said, "I think Ray can outsmart him and out-box him. If Ray outboxes him, he should win. If Ray runs and is afraid, I think Hagler will win."

"If Marvin can get in there and land some shots and take charge, he can win."

The outcome?
 "I think it will go the distance. It's a tossup," Hearns said. "I'm hoping and praying the winner will want to fight me."

Oscar Show Plods Through To Finish

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Academy Awards show once again groped for an ending like a playwright in search of a third act. Monday night's telecast on ABC got off to a lively start and offered promise that the show would reverse the trend of recent years and be brisk, suspenseful and exciting. But by the second act, it already had begun to stagger, and toward the end the show became as bloated and tiresome as any in recent years. It ran 21 minutes overtime. In the East that put it well after midnight.

The show's ratings have been declining the past three years. It's easy to see why. After a half-hearted attempt to put the emphasis on the competition, to keep the focus on the movies and the nominees, the producers succumbed to the temptation to turn it — once again — into a variety show.

Paul Hogan, the star of "Crocodile Dundee," put his finger on it when he said, "As a TV show it does tend to get off the boil, especially around the third or fourth hour."

Actually, there were plenty of pleasant moments. The unlikely singing trio of Telly Savalas, Pat Morita and Dom De Luise got the show off to a rousing start. A production number, yes, but with some originality.

It was an inspired touch to have Shirley MacLaine, who presented the awards for screenwriting, arrive in a flying saucer. She went along with the joke and kidded about writing on cave walls in another lifetime.

Paul Newman, Michael Caine Get Their Long-Awaited Oscars

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Veteran actors Paul Newman and Michael Caine weren't on hand for their long-awaited Oscars, but their no-shows weren't intended to be snubs. Newman, the year's best actor, said he was superstitious after going home a loser seven previous times. Caine, who won after four misses, was stuck filming "Jaws IV" in the Bahamas.

"I'm thrilled," Newman said from his Connecticut home upon learning he had won for his role as an aging pool shark. "I'm on a roll now and maybe now I can get a job."

The Oscar drought also ended Monday night for another Hollywood veteran with box-office clout, Steven Spielberg, who received the Irving Thalberg Award for career achievement and got a standing ovation from the audience.

"I'm resisting like crazy using Sally Field's line of two years ago," said Spielberg, recalling Miss Field's breathless exclamation: "You like me!"

The night's top prize, best picture, was decidedly unsentimental. It went to "Platoon," the grim saga of war without glory in Vietnam that won four Oscars, more than any other movie this year.

Woody Allen's "Hannah and Her Sisters" earned him a best screenplay Oscar and captured supporting actor and actress honors for Caine and Dianne Wiest.

The Academy of Motion Picture

Arts and Sciences also awarded Ralph Bellamy, still handsome at 82, an honorary Oscar for his 103 movie roles.

The makers of "Platoon" hailed their victory as a signal of America's commitment to peace.

"I think what you're saying is that for the first time you really understand what happened over there," said Oliver Stone, who also was named best director. "And I think what you're saying is that it should never ever in our lifetimes happen again."

Producer Arnold Kopelson said the film had "brought to this generation a new perspective of war, that war is not glamorous, that it maims and kills."

Stone saw the triumph for Platoon as a "Cinderella ending" for a movie that struggled to life over opposition from those who thought it would never win popular success. It was one of several emotional high points in a night of longshots.

Marlee Matlin, a deaf actress who overcame her longtime barrier of silence to claim the best-actress Oscar for "Children of a Lesser God," said she hoped her award would open new doors for her.

"I just want work, anything any actress would want," the 21-year-old star said in sign language backstage.

"I'm an actress who just doesn't happen to hear," she said. "I have my own hearing. It's different from yours, but it's mine."

Miss Matlin's award was made doubly poignant by its presenter — William Hurt, her romantic co-star on and off screen, who kissed her softly as he placed the golden statuette in her hands.

The 59th annual Academy Awards brought long-awaited validation to veterans Newman and Caine whose names glittered in lights for decades while Oscar eluded their grasp.

"The jinx is broken. He's in!" rejoiced Robert Wise, president of the academy, who accepted Newman's award for the reprise role of "Hustler" Eddie Felson in "The Color of Money." Newman won a special Oscar last year for his career achievements.

Caine was honored for his performance as an urbane philanderer in "Hannah." Actress Sigourney Weaver accepted the award, saying, "I know how much it would mean to him to be here, and having worked with him I know how much he deserves it."

Spielberg, snubbed last year for his much-nominated "The Color Purple," refused to hold a grudge. "It's very hard for me to field questions about last year because there's always this year and the year after," he said, noting he still hopes to win a real Oscar.

"Close Encounters of a Third Kind," "E.T." and "Raiders of the Lost Ark," vowed to turn his talents to "entertaining scripts of substance."

A no-show who has, in fact, never shown up for an Oscar ceremony was Allen, whose quirky family saga of manners and mores in 1980s Manhattan gleaned golden statuettes for supporting actor and actress as well as original screenplay.

"He'll just be thrilled!" Miss Wiest said after picking up her Oscar for her role as the husband-searching neurotic in the movie.

Asked if she had discussed with Allen her decision to appear at the ceremony he skipped, she said: "I just told him I was going to buy a party dress and go!"

How would the award affect her career?

"Maybe I'll work for somebody besides Woody," said the whimsical actress who has also appeared in Allen's "Purple Rose of Cairo" and "Radio Days."

Saddest Year

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Comedian Minnie Pearl says the year 1963 stands out in her memory as the saddest year at the Grand Ole Opry because of the deaths of singer Patsy Cline and other country greats in two accidents.

Miss Cline, Cowboy Copas, Hawkshaw Hawkins and Randy Hughes died in a single-engine airplane crash while returning to Nashville from a benefit concert in Kansas City, Mo.

Jack Anglin, of the Johnny and Jack country duo, was killed in a car accident a few days later en route to Miss Cline's memorial service.

Miss Pearl, whose real name is Sarah Cannon, reminisced about Miss Cline and the others in a column Monday in the Nashville Banner.

Hollywood's finest glittered and glowed at last night's Academy Awards. But while the movie capital still makes great motion pictures, the heyday of the movie theater may have passed. In 1914, movie theaters were so popular that West Point graduates gave New York City's ushers special training in the logistics of moving crowds through small spaces. Two years after the "talkies" were introduced, American theaters were attracting an estimated 100 million patrons a week.

DO YOU KNOW — What is the name of the Academy Award statue?

MONDAY'S ANSWER — Van Gogh was born in the Netherlands.

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY April 1

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Today it is necessary to use much caution where financial and other practical interests are concerned. Expect delays in being able to put across any deals.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Scheduling a wise course to handle your material affairs is necessary to gain your ambitions accurately.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You may find it difficult to get your point across, but don't fret since tomorrow conditions improve for you.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): The best way to handle a problem is to study it objectively and handle it logically. You're soon rid of it.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You may be closer to gaining some goal for which you have long labored, so don't give up now.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Don't get involved in outside matters of a credit nature today. A bigwig who understands you is too busy to help.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Avoid an argument with one who is very stubborn. Make an effort to understand his, or her, views.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): You have made a promise that you want to break, but do nothing as yet. Your mate needs your support now.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Be sure you listen attentively to what a partner says. Keep working on a public affair that seems stalemated.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): You may be annoyed at some part of your activities, but handle this objectively for the right results.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): A good friend may be in a strange mood today and will not agree with an amusement plan you've made, so forget it.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Control your temper since the wrong word at home could cause a severe quarrel to ensue.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Study communications well and overcome any difficulties connected with them. Don't take any risks today.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be very strong willed and selfish, so teach this one to take the views and feelings of others into consideration, thus becoming more cooperative and well-liked. Your progeny can become successful in any line of business he, or she, finds appealing.

 Let's take at another look at a theme we considered last week. Suppose someone asked you the right way to play the club combination in today's diagram. How would you reply?

The proper answer is that you don't have enough information to give an intelligent response. If you need four tricks from the suit, the correct line is to cash the ace and then finesse the jack. But what if you require only three tricks?

The auction is simple enough. In keeping with modern theory, South's opening bid showed 21-22 points. Simple arithmetic fold North his side had adequate values for a small slam but not enough to consider a grand slam, so he headed for his goal via the most direct route.

With four cards to the queen in one major and four to the knave in the other, West decided a lead in either of those suits was too risky. The diamond sequence looked safe enough. As it turned out, however, that solved one of declarer's problems, for it gave declarer four sure tricks in the suit and, therefore, nine fast tricks outside the club suit.

Is there a way to guarantee three club tricks regardless of how the suit is distributed? Yes. Win the opening lead in hand, lead a low club and go up with the king. Now return a club. If East shows out, rise with the ace and lead another club toward the jack. No matter what West does, you must make three tricks

Suppose that East produces a low club: what now? Must you guess?

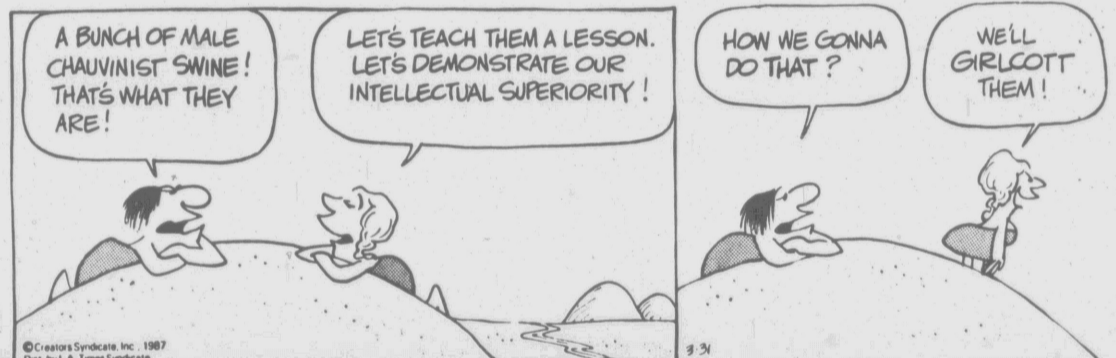

Not at all. Simply insert your nine. If West shows out, the ace will be your third trick; if West wins, there is only one club outstanding and you can draw it with the ace and then take your long card in the suit.

Art Detectives End Two-Continent Probe, Declare Painting Genuine

By ROBERT M. ANDREWS
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — After detective work on two continents, a curator at the National Gallery of Art says he has established beyond doubt that a painting owned by a New York art dealer is the work of Dutch master Jan Vermeer. If so, it would be the world's 35th known Vermeer.

The claim by Arthur K. Wheelock Jr. is expected to stir great interest — and some controversy — in the art world.

With the help of elaborate laboratory equipment, extensive research in New York, Washington and the Netherlands and his own intuition as a Vermeer expert, Wheelock says he has made his case that the 17th century religious painting stored in a New York warehouse is a genuine Vermeer.

The oil painting, measuring 40 by 32 1/2 inches, is titled "St. Praxedis." It depicts a legendary Roman virgin whose unusual religious calling was to mop up the blood of beheaded Christian martyrs.

The picture is signed by the artist, using the name "Meer," in the lower left corner and is dated 1655 — very early in Vermeer's brilliant but brief career. Twenty years later, the artist died in poverty at age 43 in his native Delft, his genius yet unrecognized.

The trouble was "St. Praxedis" doesn't look Dutch. In fact, says Wheelock, it is Vermeer's copy of a work painted 10 to 15 years earlier by an obscure Italian artist, Felice Ficherelli. The Ficherelli now hangs in a private collection in Ferrara, Italy.

"It's fascinating," said Wheelock, curator of northern Baroque painting. "It seems so remote from what he ended up doing. It has his signature on it, but the painting doesn't look like his."

The painting surfaced in New York in 1969, when dealer Spencer A. Samuels bought it from the family of a private collector, Jacob Reider, after his death. Exhibited at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the painting was attributed to Ficherelli even though it bore Vermeer's signature.

In 1983, Samuels invited Wheelock to examine the painting. "It was one of those times when you look at a painting and know it's right," Wheelock said. "The technique, the handling of the paint, the style, the colors — it kind of sang out to me."

Samuels offered the picture to the National Gallery for what Wheelock described as an incredibly low price for a Vermeer, whose work is so valued that it has been the target of thieves and forgers for centuries.

Wheelock urged National Gallery director J. Carter Brown to accept the offer. He wrote Brown in a memorandum that the painting was important for "providing a rare example of Vermeer's early work."

Brown rejected the advice. He said that at the time the gallery had no purchase funds. In any event, the National Gallery already has "three fabulous Vermeers," he said.

"This is not a typical Vermeer but a copy, which makes it a fascinating historical document for an ideal collection," Brown said. "But our decisions must be made in the real world, weighing available resources against other opportunities to fill other gaps in our collection."

Samuels refused to disclose his offer to the National Gallery but said the current market price of the painting is "well into seven figures."

"It's not what I'd call a Vermeer Vermeer," Samuels said, "but it is a very fine quality work by a young artist and sheds new light on Vermeer's early career, about which we know virtually nothing."

Besides the three at the National Gallery, the other Vermeers are held by museums in New York and Boston and in Britain, the Netherlands, East and West Germany, France and Austria.

Wheelock's claim that "St. Praxedis" is an authentic Vermeer is bound to be disputed, partly because it is a dramatic departure from the artist's usual subjects — quiet, softly lighted rooms where young Dutch women engage in timeless pursuits, making lace, playing a lute, pouring milk from a jug, reading a letter, sipping wine with a gentleman visitor.

Yet Wheelock says he saw Vermeer in the lush strawberry hue of the saint's robes, the vivid deep blue of the background and the woman's sad, melancholy mood. He also noticed weak rendering of her hands, and recalled that Vermeer "often had difficulties with hands."

For two months in the National Gallery's white-walled conservation laboratory, Wheelock scrutinized the painting with high-powered microscope, X-rays, ultraviolet light and infrared photography. These devices enabled him to examine the canvas base, the layers, textures and composition of paints beneath the varnished surface and the artist's telltale brush strokes.

"There was nothing in the lab that said it couldn't be right," Wheelock said.

"But the best thing to trust is your eye, looking at it over time, seeing how it lives with you. Does your initial reaction hold? You've got to let it live with you on different days, when your mood is different, when it's sunny or overcast, when you're tired or when you're fresh."

Pondering the picture day after day, Wheelock became convinced that it unmistakably was Vermeer's handiwork.

He has a theory how Vermeer might have been inspired to copy Ficherelli's rather gruesome picture. Although Vermeer never visited Italy, Wheelock says, there is a strong possibility that he studied in his early 20s in Amsterdam, then a major art market, where he might have spotted Ficherelli's painting.

Wheelock also noted that the artist was a zealous convert to Roman Catholicism, married a Catholic woman in 1653 and named his son Ignatius after another Catholic saint.

Another clue, according to Samuels, is a partially obscured inscription next to Vermeer's signature that appears to read "after Il Riposo," which means "the lazy one" in Italian.

Ficherelli had a reputation for indolence and his output was extremely limited. His nickname was "Il Riposo."

Voice Of America Cuts Air Time By 10 Percent, Plans Staff Cuts

By BILL McALLISTER
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Voice of America, facing what its director has called "fiscally induced laryngitis," has cut its broadcasting hours by more than 10 percent, has stopped most hiring and is planning to trim its staff by 19 percent of the levels authorized last fall.

The cutbacks, the latest of which took effect this weekend, have prompted charges that "the Voice" is being throttled by U.S. Information Agency Director Charles Z. Wick, who wants to increase the agency's spending on a satellite-based world television network.

Members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, in a slap at Wick, last week approved budget legislation that would effectively prevent him from diverting VOA funds into other USA programs. The committee, according to Richard McBride, staff director of the subcommittee on international operations, is convinced that the VOA's radio programs have an established worldwide following and skeptical of Wick's claims that there are billions of viewers for his Worldnet TV system.

"Just because there is (TV) programming doesn't mean they're getting the programs to the viewers," said McBride. "That's why we're not certain anybody is listening."

Wick was not available for comment Monday, but VOA Deputy Director Robert L. Barry defended the Reagan administration's funding of the radio service. "This is not a zero-sum game," he said. "It is not a radio vs. television situation."

All foreign programs have been hurt by budget cuts, "some more than others," he said.

VOA Director Richard W. Carlson warned Congress this month that much of the agency's recent progress is "in grave peril," threatened by what he said a VOA veteran called "roller coaster" broadcasting, induced by the ups and downs of budgetary uncertainties.

In response, the Foreign Affairs Committee agreed last week to give a separate budget title to VOA and some of its programming, to ensure that those services get all the funds appropriated for them, McBride said.

"Parochially, we can't object," said Barry. But he added that he agrees with Wick's opposition to the measure. "It's a bad idea to have our foreign affairs activities directed by congressional edict. Agency directors have got to have some flexibility."

The House committee action, setting VOA's budget for the next two years, came too late to halt the latest VOA cuts, according to Barry. He predicted that the VOA, whose broadcast hours have climbed steadily during the 1980s, will have to adjust to less broadcasting.

"I see us operating in a continued environment of austerity," he said in an interview. "The times of getting whatever we said we needed are over."

Most cuts, he said, have been made in what administrators believe are marginal programming areas. Over the weekend, for example, VOA ended an hour of direct broadcasts to Portugal, one-half hour to Albania and an hour of English broadcasts aimed at Latin America.

FCC Chief Departs

DALLAS (AP) — Federal Communications Commission Chairman Mark S. Fowler today said the nation and all media could suffer unless radio and television broadcasters unite against government control.

In remarks prepared for delivery in his farewell speech to the National Association of Broadcasters, Fowler called for full editorial freedom in the next decade for the electronic media.

That includes elimination of the Fairness Doctrine, a policy that requires broadcasters to present opposing views of issues, and laws requiring stations to offer political candidates equal time to present their views and to give candidates low-priced advertising time.

"I want to see broadcasters as free as newspapers and magazines to write, report and editorialize," he said. "I want broadcasting as free as other media, from movies to magazines, from T-shirts to tabloids, in expressing views and in enlightening us about our society and the world."

Fowler has pressed during his nearly six years as chairman of the regulatory agency for elimination of all content regulation of broadcast programming.

Pontiff Begins Trip

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II embarked today on one of the most sensitive trips of his papacy, a visit to South America that will include meetings with President Augusto Pinochet of Chile and his church opponents.

The pontiff, making his 33rd foreign pilgrimage since becoming head of the Roman Catholic Church in 1978, left in a special Boeing 747 from Rome's Ciampino Military Airport at about 10 a.m. (3 a.m. EST), airport officials said.

He plans an overnight stop in Uruguay, six days in Chile and six days in Argentina.

His stop in Montevideo, Uruguay, will commemorate the beginning in 1978 of Vatican-sponsored negotiations that led to a peaceful solution of the Beagle Channel dispute, over which Chile and Argentina nearly went to war.

The pontiff is scheduled to hold private meetings with Pinochet on Thursday, and also will meet with Chilean church leaders.

Oral Roberts Ending Vigil

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — With God's reported threat to his life apparently lifted by a successful $8 million fund-raising effort, evangelist Oral Roberts today was spending a final day in a prayer tower vigil.

Three months ago, Roberts said on national television that God told him he would die by today if he failed to raise the money for medical missionary scholarships.

When the final money arrived in the form of a $1.3 million donation announced 10 days ago, Roberts said the fund-raising would have been futile unless followers continued to contribute to his ministry's ongoing operations.

He began a 10-day vigil March 22 in his 200-foot prayer tower at the center of the Oral Roberts University campus.

Ministry officials acknowledged Friday that Roberts had reached the goal of $8 million he said God had set. On Jan. 4, Roberts told a national television audience he would die by the end of March if that amount were not raised.

The statement caused a furor in religious circles and prompted widespread criticism of the pioneer television evangelist.

Remnants Of China's 'Lost Army' Follow Old Lifestyles In Thailand

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer
SANTIKHIRI, Thailand (AP) — Remnants of the Nationalist Chinese "lost army" of nearly 40 years ago still cling to a bygone way of life here in this mist-shrouded Thai village.

Now in their late 60s and 70s, the veterans of Chiang Kai-shek's defeated Kuomintang (KMT) have brought a 1930s Chinese lifestyle to Thailand. The god of good fortune and classical aphorisms adorn housefronts; the click of chopsticks and the wail of Chinese opera issue from dusky interiors.

Thai officials, however, are trying to assimilate them and their offspring into Thai society to keep the KMT from firmly establishing a state within a state in northern Thailand.

Santikhiri is one of 13 villages where an estimated 13,000 to 20,000 Nationalists and their families live, often with other refugees and earlier migrants from southern China's Yunnan province.

Chiang and most of his Nationalist followers fled to Taiwan after their defeat by the Chinese Communists in 1949, but before that the Kuomintang's 93rd Division — "the lost army" — trekked out of Yunnan into Burma to stage forays into China against the Communists.

The KMT troops were unwelcome in Burma; in order to sustain their military organization, they became major narcotics traffickers.

They moved then into Thailand and earned their keep and the right to carry weapons by helping the Thai government fight Communist insurgents in the 1960s and 1970s and safeguarding sensitive frontier areas.

Some members of the KMT community stayed with narcotics trafficking in Thailand. Others went into jade smuggling but more recently some have gone into the tourist business here in the picturesque mountains.

But wizened, white-haired Chinese men in Santikhiri and other villages still dream of the mountains of Yunnan, and some of their songs pledge allegiance to their own chieftains.

Thailand maintains that its policies of control and assimilation inevitably will convert the Chinese.

"The Thais are very good at assimilating outsiders," said Col. Pang Malakul of the Thai army. "We are trying to convince the KMT that to get along in Thai society they must adapt. We have accepted them; so now they must change."

The KMT are generally split between two groups. Gen. Ly Wen-huan, now 69 years old and nearly blind, set up his KMT 3rd Army in Thailand's Chiang Mai province, while Gen. Tuan Shi-wen headquartered his 5th Army in this Chiang Rai province village. Tuan died in 1981 and is buried here.

U.S. drug enforcement officials in Bangkok, and Thai military sources in northern Thailand, say the Kuomintang may be less involved in narcotics than in the past.

Marines Replacing Guards At U.S. Embassy In Moscow

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree, one of two former Marine security guards suspected of espionage while working in Moscow, received a psychological examination to ensure he is capable of standing trial.

Lonetree, 25, spent most of the day Monday at the Bethesda Naval Hospital outside Washington undergoing a "routine psychological exam," said Maj. Tony Rothfork, a Marine spokesman.

He was later returned to the Marine base at Quantico, Va., where he has been held since shortly after his arrest last December.

Rothfork declined to discuss the exam, but as Lonetree was being tested at the naval hospital there were these developments:

—The Marine Corps announced it had agreed to an unprecedented replacement of every security guard now serving at the Moscow embassy with a new group of Marines. The 28 guards are not suspected of any wrongdoing, but will be gradually transferred to Quantico and later assigned to other posts, the corps said.

"This measure is precautionary in nature and is intended to facilitate an investigation of the security program at the U.S. Embassy," the corps and State Department said in a joint statement.

—Lonetree's defense attorneys stepped up their complaints about the military's handling of the case, repeating claims the latest charges against their client were based on a "confession" that had been formally withdrawn by Cpl. Arnold Bracy, the second Marine guard arrested in the case.

"That means they can't use it in any court-martial; it's hearsay evidence and Bracy has repudiated it," said William Kunstler, a New York attorney who is helping defend Lonetree.

—Pentagon sources disclosed Bracy, 21, had been administratively reduced in rank to corporal from sergeant while serving in Moscow because of allegations of "fraternization" with a woman.

The sources, speaking only on condition they not be identified, had previously disclosed that both Lonetree and Bracy became involved with Soviet women while working in Moscow — Lonetree with a translator and Bracy with a cook.

—Unclassified summaries of the interrogation of Lonetree disclosed the Marine told investigators he received $3,500 in cash for providing information to the Soviets.

The Marine Corps, in its formal statement of charges against Lonetree, has said nothing of Russian payments to the guard, alleging only that Lonetree paid Bracy $1,000.

—Those same unclassified interrogation summaries quoted Lonetree as saying he cooperated with a Soviet agent because he was interested in "knowing what the KGB wanted to know," but found himself in over his head.

There were conflicting reports on Monday as to why Lonetree had been subjected to the psychological examination.

The Marine Corps declined to discuss the matter, beyond noting that such tests were explicitly authorized under the Uniform Code of Military Justice "if there is reason to believe that the accused lacks mental responsibility for any offense that he's charged with, or lacks the capacity to stand trial."

Earlier in the day, Pentagon sources indicated Lonetree underwent the mental exam at the request of defense attorneys. But Kunstler, in an interview Monday night, denied the defense requested the exam.

"It was requested by the prosecution, not by us," he said. "I think they requested it for rebuttal purposes, in case our defense raises a question of mental competency."

Kunstler declined to discuss the specifics of the defense case. But he did assert the interrogation record of Lonetree, which he released to reporters, showed the Marine was either spinning out a fantasy or responding to coercion by the investigators.

The lawyer also said he had spoken to Lonetree by telephone Monday night following the psychological exam "and he seems fine."

"He also told me he can't recall ever drawing a guard shift with Bracy," Kunstler added.

The Marine Corps has charged that Lonetree used Bracy as a lookout while escorting Soviet agents through sensitive areas of the Moscow embassy on numerous occasions late at night last year.

It also has accused Lonetree of providing the Soviets with secret documents from the embassy.

There's Still One Tax Deduction That Hasn't Gone Into Retirement.

If you've been reading about the recent changes in the tax law, you probably know that many tax deductions are soon going to be a thing of the past.

Fortunately, there is still one tax deduction that isn't going into retirement: an NCNB IRA.

NCNB
IRA Options

Fixed-Rate Accounts
Variable-Rate Accounts
Mutual Funds
Government Securities
Stocks and Bonds

Invest in an NCNB IRA by April 15 and you can deduct the entire amount from your 1986 taxes. So it makes a lot of sense to get an IRA from NCNB now, if you haven't already.

But regardless of how the tax law affects you in 1987 and beyond, an NCNB IRA is still one of the best ways around to prepare for your retirement.

An NCNB IRA offers the widest variety of investment options, from fixed-rate accounts to mutual funds. So you can find the combination that works best for you.

What's more, you won't pay tax on interest you earn on this year's IRA or future contributions until you make withdrawals at retirement.

So just drop by your neighborhood NCNB office today and ask us about an IRA. With all of the advantages that an NCNB IRA has to offer, you'd really have to be off your rocker not to take full advantage of them.

NCNB

Member FDIC. Substantial penalty for early withdrawal.
