My Dear Sir & Friend:-

After seeing you Thursday morning I had another talk with my brother. He is at heart as fully in sympathy with the reforms aimed at by the Alliance as any man in the State. Local troubles caused him quite too harshly of men in the Alliance, as I think, he will be more careful & discreet in the future. On the other hand I hope, if opportunity presents itself, you will say to some of the extreme Alliance men in that section that they are acting very unjustly towards him.

in botching his paper. Intemperance of speech & action on both sides, causes all the trouble.

I appreciate very much more than I can tell you the kindness you did me in speaking about Charles & the impression that some good old livesmen had of his course. That is the kind of candid frankness that I value most highly.

The papers are still awaiting your Ashville address - I'll send some in.

Let us hear from you with regularity from time to time. I will thank you

Sincerely

Joseph M. Davies
