Dear Father:

I have not ceased to think of, & to pity you for a moment today. But the less I say of your address at Washington, the better. Suffice it to observe, that I am more nervous over it, than you could possibly be. You know that the country place, Carviers, is owned by Mrs Van Riewick, & the Lamonts are out there this summer, as usual, & paying no rent for it, as usual, I mention this fact to show you that they, under these circumstances, should not attempt to place any restrictions upon people wishing to go out there, yesterday

Say, Mrs Lambert said "Mattie," (Mrs Law is at 1413 K at just now) "I wish you would bring Ma out on the train tomorrow, because I can not allow Tom on the place again, He corrupts my servants," Which means of course that Mattie can not visit the place again unless she discharges Tom, for whom Mrs L. has developed a great hatred, (It is because they are so much alike I suppose,) I can not but recall just here, a remark she made to me several years ago, while we were all out at Cambridge, "Mr Carr" (referring to Mattie with whom she had had a spat) "I wish you would take this woman away from here, & never bring her back", If I could but tell you all, (as yet you have heard nothing) you could readily understand why I am I speak soberly, & after 5 years of deliberation when I say that — & — for penuriousness, hatred, envy & jealousy are unequalled in all the world. No novelists, in his wildest dreams, ever painted hearts as theirs. When a dollar is to be divided, they hold not as sacred the sufferings of the living, or the memories of the dead. I have seen violated the very sanctity of the sick room, and a quarrel for money — brought almost within the portals of the death chamber. Family affection, except where it subserves selfish ends, has been eliminated; parental solicitude converted into a vulgar curiosity, and maternal honor and integrity assailed with the venom & coarseness of a billings-gate. This is Lusk, extremely house, & for aught I know, may be unchristian, yet facts are facts, & were I not able to prove, should never have made these declarations.
