Parsons's place, you have answered this question once, but fear there been any change of sentiment; I hint not, for in time wearing against liberty he is to be compared to the responsible friends of Bray.
But enough. I'm tired

Dear Father,

Mother, I think, is getting better every day. She was suffering yesterday afternoon with a head ache, but it yielded almost instantly to treatment, & she was quite herself before bed time. Isn't the Democratic party in a stew? The more I think upon this subject, the less I hold in esteem the principal actors. I sincerely trust that you will never be thrown more tangibly in contact with the deteriorating influence of politics than you are at present. Perhaps I should have said, trying, for to strong characters they are trying, and deteriorating to weak ones. But in this latter category, I could not class you, Self interests, it seems, has, or rather, will dictate the vote of every Senator on the Wilson bill, Laying aside the principles of Christianity, & looking at the matter through the total absence of the medium of sentiment, we, it seems to me, are justified in coming to conclude that such a state of affairs can not last much longer, Egoism persisted in, will overturn any government that the hands of man can mould, the past has proved it, And in this connection let me ask what of our friend D. Josephus? N. C. papers seldom refer to him, but here in Washington I hear constant reference to his extraordinary power with the great fat father, & to the possibility of his securing
