

Tarbores m e May 13th 95

Dear Sir

Can you tell^m who Roscommon was, as he gives the best answer to the little poem, enacted before Judge Starbuck, by John Day & Spear Whitaker
I ever saw in two short lines of verse,

"Immodest words admit of no defence For want of decency, is, a want of sense"

Signed, Roscommon.

N B

I have a dim recollection of those two men, who went cocked Cap & primed to cut each others throats for years, and am surprised to see them so fondly united in the course of a fusion contestant^{Case} so much inclined to add to the trials of a down trodden people. Can it be that they are looking to Butler ism as their final resting place in Politics? & now for another cartoon from Butler, for his last was a failure. This is my 4th week - in bed & I had hoped to hear from you one more time.
I have nothing against any man But my Country calls to me we have just passed thro

a great trouble

Harwell

E Macneil