Sandy's Cleverness.

Sandy Macgregor was a shrewd, pawky chiel, fond of a joke, and it was a difficult matter to catch him napping.

One day several of the villagers had assembled in the local inn to discuss the alarming influence of complications, an Englishman named Robbins, who ran down all cures for it, had decidedly the worst of the argument with Sandy, and therefore resolved to touch Sandy on his tender point, namely, the pocket.

When Kissing Was Unknown.

Who knows that kissing is an English custom? We read in ancient history of a knight who visited the Field of the Cloth of Gold, and who, on being invited to a local castle, was addressed by the "kynde lady" of the establishment, who remarked: "Forsomuch as in England ye have such a custom as that a man may kysse a woman, therefore I will that ye shall kysse me, and ye shall also kysse all my maidens."

Ancient Ideas of Africa.

In medieval times Africa was an unknown continent, as well as Asia. Until a few years after the discovery of Columbus no one had sailed around it, and it was quite generally thought as it had previously been thought in regard to Asia, that the African continent extended on and on indefinitely. It was supposed that far to the south was the zone of heat, which no human being could live. This was by no means an unreasonable inference to the ancients. They knew that the farther they sailed to the north the colder it grew, and that in the extreme north was a region of perpetual ice and snow.

Mode of Speech.

As Dr. Pierson traveled about the southwest many years ago—he was an agent of the Bible society—he often put up for the night at very humble cabins, and commonly, before the family went to bed, he was invited to conduct family worship. The form of the invitation was peculiar and invariable.

Importance of Cheap Paper.

Without cheap paper the invention of printing would have benefited the world but little.

The newspapers, read by everybody and contributing to the general intelligence and advancement, are enabled to exist only by means of the cheap cost of the millions of pounds of paper they use every year. So with the cheap and attractive looking school books so essential to popular education. Our progress in pictorial art has been dependent upon the progress of papermaking.—Engineering Magazine.

Thought She Had a Bargain.

A lady from the Rural Districts Meets with a Disappointment.

It was Monday and Lower Washington street was crowded with the usual throng of hurrying pedestrians. At the corner of Milk street a young man with a satchel slung at his side was trying with some degree of success to attract the attention of those who passed. In one hand he held a pair of pantaloons with the heaviest part down, and as he swung them slowly back and forth he called out at varying intervals: "Here they are, now, only ten cents a pair; they remove wrinkles and prevent baggy knees. Ten cents is all they are."

Early Spelling.

Uniformity of spelling is a strictly modern accomplishment. In the descriptions of early meeting houses, "A square roof without dormers, with two Lucoons on each side," evidently means a roof without dormers or beams and with incunabae, but who, untraced to old records, would guess it!

Ventilation of Rooms.

To effect the constant exhalation of organic matter from the skin, as well as from the lungs, occupied rooms should be so arranged as to allow a constant change of the air contained in them. To meet this condition properly, an exit for air, as well as an inlet, should be provided. A fireplace is perhaps an ideal outlet, as it has a constant draft which assures an outgo of considerable power.

THE FOUR PARTIES—WHAT THEY STAND FOR.

We have presented to us this year four political parties with principles and men differing from each other so broadly that no man of ordinary intelligence or honesty can mistake the camp in which he belongs.

3. Next in order of time we have the Prohibition party which stands for a Prohibition of the whiskey traffic and a Prohibition by law of its manufacture and sale.

4. We have the People's party (so called) whose platform unmistakably declares for increasing the burdens of the people. No sane man with brains enough to make figures can set down and calculate the costs to the people of the purchase and control of all the railroads of this country without standing amazed and horrified, when he sees this frightful array of figures, that any man in North Carolina can be found to give his assent to so monstrous a proposition. That Weaver, the candidate of this party for the Presidency, should advocate such a monstrous proposition is not a surprise to any one familiar with his record. He has no regard for the enormity of the burdens he would pile upon mountain high upon the tax paying people of this country. He has been a member of Congress and there he made a record which should, of itself, be sufficient to drive away from him the possibility of any support from the people who work in the fields and pay taxes. On three separate occasions he introduced and tried to have passed into a law a proposition to appropriate $300,000,000, to pay the Federal soldiers the difference between the money in which they were paid and gold. Three hundred millions of dollars is an immense sum of money and yet this is the additional burden he wished to place upon us over and beyond those under which we are already staggering. So the people can take

Cleveland and economy and low taxes and the greatest freedom to the citizen. Or Harrison and extravagance and high taxes and Force Bills and a limited freedom to the citizen. Or Bidwell and no whiskey. Or Weaver and still heavier burdens, and enlarged pensions and government ownership of railroads and other wild schemes.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRIMARIES.

The Democratic—not the Weaver—Primaries are called to meet at 3 P. M. Saturday the 23rd. Only Democrats are expected to participate in these primaries and these are all earnestly expected and requested to be present. There has been some talk, we hear, about our position on this important party question. It does not seem to us that our position is open to criticism or debate. It is too plain for a man to make a mistake about. Some one has said we hear, that we are trying to read them out of the party. We beg to inform them this is a mistake. We do not propose to read any one out. We want them all to stay with us and help win a great victory for us, for the farmers and laboring people of this country. It pains us to see our people dividing up and turning against each other. Yet we admit that a man has a right to vote for Harrison if he desires to do so. He has no less the right to vote for Weaver or even for Bidwell. But we do insist and we do so in all kindness to our erring brethren that a man who supports Harrison has no right or place in a Democratic Primary. It is equally clear that those who support Weaver ought not to be hanging around a Democratic Primary calling themselves Democrats. Is it possible that those who intend to support Weaver are ashamed to confess they belong to the People's party so called? Do they want to still retain the name of Democrat to give respectability to their desertion of its candidates and principles? If any one has made up his mind to vote for Cleveland he ought to attend the Democrat primaries. If he expects to vote for Harrison he ought to attend the Republican primaries. If Bidwell is his man he ought to be present at the Prohibition primaries when they are called. If he expects to vote for Weaver he ought to attend the meetings of the Peoples party which are called we hear for the 30th of this month. But before any man who has ever been a Democrat makes up his mind to vote for Weaver and commits himself by attending one of his meetings we want him to read what Weaver has said of him. At one time he said of you in a public speech:

"What is the use of further arraigning the Democracy with all heavy crime at the bar of public opinion? We know that its arts comprise murder, treason, theft, arson, fraud, perjury and all crimes possible for an organization to commit. It would be a mercy to put its record a million miles deep in the pit that is mentioned in Holy Writ: and I may add that if a large and distinguished assortment of its alleged statement were sent along it would be only common justice."

At another time he said, "No Republican can ever, under any circumstances, have any part or lot with the hungry, rebellious, man-hating, woman selling gang corporations under the name of Democracy, a name so full of stench and poison that it should be blotted from the vocabulary of civilized man and handed over to the barbarians that it so fully now and in all the past has represented."

And this is not all. At another time he said of you, "But then, what could you expect from the poor, blind, diseased, decrepit, dismal, damned old Democratic party?"

And yet some men say that a man may vote for this man and still be a Democrat. The thing is absurd. If a man has yet been unable to determine his line of duty there he should, it seems to us, remain away from all these party meetings till he has made up his mind what his duty to himself and his country requires him to do. We repeat the whole thing is simple and easy and too plain to admit of debate or mistake. Let the Democrats attend their meetings, the Republicans theirs, the Prohibitionists theirs and the Weaverites theirs. Then we will know who is who and what is what, and there will be no occasion for calling in question men's party fealty or rightful action. This every citizen has a right to do and no one dare molest him. If we know the self respecting people of Pitt as well as we think we do this is the course they will pursue, and our well attended Democratic primaries next Saturday will probably be the most orderly and loyal and patriotic ever held in the county. We shall expect the spirit of 74 to be among our people and stir them to a united and heroic effort to drive from power the party which then tried to fix upon us the horrors of Civil Rights and in whose ranks Weaver was then fighting.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The State Capital and Things Seen After Leaving San Francisco. It was on Saturday morning, May 28th, that we seven North Carolinians crossed the ferry from San Francisco to Oakland and took the Southern Pacific train for Sacramento, the capital of California. The train was due to reach Sacramento by noon, and it was the purpose of our party to spend the remainder of the day there, and depart on the 10 P. M. train with the regular excursion party due to pass at that hour. Such a program was finally carried out, but at much later hours because of freshets encountered. Arriving opposite Benicia where our train should have crossed the ferry, it was found that high water has caused the ferry dock to sink and that a journey 50 miles out of the way must be made. Getting back from the ocean and away from the delightful climate experienced close to the coast we found the day growing exceedingly warm, and being in a crowded car travel was anything else than comfortable.

The country along the valley of the Sacramento river is a fine farming and stock raising section. Grain and fruits are raised in abundance. Immediately near the river considerable damage was done by overflow, the water at this time being unusually high. Approaching the city of Sacramento the damage by the overflow was much greater than farther down stream. The water front of the city was submerged, railroad tracks were covered, and in some places water was up to the floor of cars and buildings. More than once water came half way to the axles of the car on which our party traveled. The river was higher than ever known before, the rise being a little above 27 feet. Seeing so much water here reminded me of the great flood at St. Louis written about in a former letter, only here there was not the slightest comparison to the destruction and devastation attendant upon the overflow of the Mississippi. The reader may be wondering what causes such great freshets in a region where I have been writing that rain falls but seldom if at all. Rain had nothing to do with this freshet in the Sacramento, but the water all came from melting snow in the mountains. May is the month in which the bulk of the mountain snow melts and such a flood of water is sent down into the valleys as to fill the rivers to overflowing.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

GREENVILLE, July 4, 1892.—The Board of Commissioners of Pitt county met this day in regular session, present C. Dawson, chairman, S. A. Gainer, C. V. Newton, T. E. Keel and Leonidas Fleming. contemplation, and the city was beginning to do what some old North Carolina towns that could be mentioned have yet failed to do—wake up. The city had a well equipped electric street service which extended for two miles beyond the limits to the sit of a new spacious park. The State house is a very grand structure in the midst of magnificent grounds, and near it was one of the handsomest church edifices I saw anywhere. These two buildings would be a credit to any city.

One thing that made me form an admiration for the Sacramento people was to learn that they had much devotion and talent for the finer arts. There was a handsome and well appointed building known as the Crocker art gallery. In a portion of the building was an art school. The upper floor contained large halls hung in artistic effect with exquisite paintings so full sizes, some of them copies of the world's master productions. These were all numbered, and opposite the corresponding number in a guide furnished the visitor a brief history of each picture and its connection could be had. Some of us passed an hour profitably and pleasantly here, as through the vision our spirits communed with those whose master touch had spread upon a lifeless canvass such vivid scenes of living beauty. This gallery was a donation from another California's wealthy citizens, who generously gave of his means for the blessing and comfort of his fellow man.

The train upon which we were to leave Sacramento was due at 10 o'clock P. M. but being also detained by the freshets we had the pleasure of boarding the cars after a tiresome wait of nearly four hours. It was 1:40 Sunday morning when we North Carolinians took quarters in the sleeping car occupied by the Oregon and Washington delegations and went steaming away northward enroute for Portland, Ore. Sometime during the night all the cars containing the editors who were to return home by this route were brought together, and we awoke next morning to find ourselves in a solid train of twelve Pullman cars filled with editors, their wives, daughters, cousins and sweethearts. The remainder of the trip to Portland we were all together except once when the train had to divide in two sections in order to make the heavy grades in crossing the mountains.

Northern California is exceedingly mountainous, and as the westerners term it, very scenic. Some of the scenes passed through cannot be forgotten. Especially does old Mt. Shasta impress itself indelibly upon the traveler, so much so as to frequently provoke the bard to sing its praise in verse. Through nearly a whole day's travel its lofty head, wearing a covering of glistening snow, is seen towering far above all other peaks in the vicinity. Near Dunsuir is the famous Shasta Soda Springs whose waters are extensively sought after. The train stops a short while here, giving the passengers opportunity to quaff the sparkling water and drink in the bounty of the surroundings. At Sisson, the highest town passed in crossing the mountain range, the view of Shasta was grand, the relief in front of the town. All around the mountains were covered in snow. At this place also there was a brass band out at the depot to serenade the editors, notwithstanding the fact that it was Sunday. All through these mountains the engineering and construction of the railroad was simply wonderful.

At 2 o'clock on Monday we reached the depot at Sacramento—more than two hours late—but after getting dinner we all set out to see as much of the city as possible during the remainder of the day. It struck us as being a very old town, not possessing in a very great degree the push and energy characteristic of a western city. While it had a few imposing buildings, most of them were of a more or less ancient architectural design, low and squat. The chief residence portions of the city were far in advance of the business streets, in them being many very handsome buildings surrounded by beautiful grounds. There were evidences however that improvements were in progress and in

A Good Yield.

Mr. Ruel Willoughby, of Beaver Dam, told us Thursday that he harvested this season 63 bushels of wheat from 5 bushels of seed sown. This is by no means a sorry yield. He also told us that the late weather has seriously damaged all crops now growing, and in some instances the yield will hardly be more than half a crop.

Thought it was Heavy.

We heard of an amusing incident happening over near the new railroad, the other day. A farmer was sending a load of potatoes to the nearest depot for shipment, and told the colored man in charge of the cart to bring back a bill of lading with him. Very much to the planter's amusement the colored man turned and innocently asked: "Boss, dis yer recon I kin git it on de kart by myself?"

For Democrats.

They are Democratic primaries to be held in the several townships next Saturday, and these are to select delegates to attend a Democratic county convention and the delegates in that Democratic convention are to nominate Democratic candidates for the various offices to be filled. This being so, none but Democrats have any right to participate either in the primaries or the county convention.

Mrs. Jones was about 48 years old and leaves three children and many friends to mourn her death.

Watch Out.

A gentleman living southwest of town told the REFLECTOR to warn the people of the community to be careful from whom they purchased any fresh meat.

The farmers living along the swamp three miles from town have recently been troubled considerably by some thief or thieves stealing their hogs, and in order to stop the losses by stopping the thieves fed strychnine to some of their hogs. It was thought that the hogs were stolen and sold dressed, hence the warning that purchasers should know of whom they buy.

The Days of Miracles has not Passed.

During the storm last Sunday, lightning struck one chimney of Mr. L. A. Cobb's house, and from there it ran down the front wall of the house tearing up the floor, but traced some conductor from the front to back of house and to the kitchen chimney, but the miraculous thing about it was that their child was saved unhurt. He was in the cradle not over one foot from the wall, where the lightning went to the floor and heavy pieces of timber passed over the cradle and were driven through the door on opposite side of room, the plastering and glass fell in the cradle sufficient to wrap him up, but the hand of God was about him, and he did not so much as receive a shock. The damage done to the house is estimated at about $600, and is covered by insurance.—Griffon Light.

OPENING OF THE EASTERN.

The Date set for September 1st—$100 in Prizes for a Couple to be Married in the Warehouse.

Joyner & Heilbroner have decided upon Thursday, Sept. 1st, as the grand opening day for their new mammoth warehouse, the Eastern. The warehouse and stables will all be completed in ample time and they have secured a large number of buyers to operate on this market.

It is their intention to show to the world that this section raises the finest tobacco on the continent, and they want every farmer to bring a load of his very best to the opening break. You will get the highest prices for it.

This opening break is going to be a gala day for Greenville, and it promises also to be a happy day for any couple who will take advantage of the occasion and get married in the Eastern Warehouse on Sept. 1st. The managers have secured over $100 worth of presents to be given to the bride and groom of the occasion, and the first couple making it known that they will accept the proposition and be present will take the prizes home with them. A list of the presents and contributors appears in the REFLECTOR advertising columns to-day.

Now, a word as to the proprietors of the Eastern. O. L. Joyner is 23 years old, and the eldest son of Mr. Jacob Joyner. He has had a liberal academic education and followed this with a thorough business course at the Kentucky University. He has been identified with the tobacco industry since its first introduction into Pitt county and has acquired an extended knowledge of the weed. He has had experience upon warehouse floors and will be perfectly at home as one of the managers of the Eastern. As to his reliability we would not presume to offer a word, as he is too well known all over this and adjoining counties.

Alex Heilbroner, the junior partner, is just turning his majority, and for his years possesses a business experience and capacity seldom found in a young man. He is second son of Mr. L. Heilbroner, of Tarboro, and since early boyhood has lived with his uncle, Mr. M. R. Lang, in Greenville. For several years he had almost the entire management of his uncle's immense business, and as a successful financier stands at the head of the list. His tobacco experience dates back only one year, but always gifted with the art of mastering whatever he undertook in an unusually brief time, he has learned as much about it in the one year as many older heads in the business know. His character and integrity stand without a blemish. He will have charge of the office work and book-keeping.

These young men have the necessary capital to back them and will see that every one dealing with them is treated fairly.

Remember the opening break, September 1st.

Cleveland and Carr Club.

There was a liberal turn out of citizens at the Court House last Thursday evening, the occasion of the organization of the Cleveland and Carr Club. The large number present showed that the people are realizing the importance of taking an active interest in the present campaign.

A. L. Blow, chairman of the county executive committee, called the meeting to order and stated its object. His reference to Grover Cleveland, the Democratic nominee for President, and Elias Carr, the Democratic nominee for Governor, was greeted with a burst of applause as he mentioned each name.

Maj. Latham moved that life-long Democrat, Dr. C. J. O'Hagan, be made temporary chairman of the meeting. In taking the chair Dr. O'Hagan stated that for 30 years he had been identified with the Democracy of Pitt county. The principles of that party had stood the onslaught of war, of defeat and of every kind of combination against it, but it stood to-day the same as always, while the Republican party had been forced to change its name time and again to deceive the people under a new guise. He wanted the Democracy to make no compromises, as he had rather see it meet defeat fighting for principle than to see it victorious at a sacrifice of principle. His remarks were frequently cheered.

Dr. J. Whitehead was made temporary secretary of the meeting.

The rolls were opened for the signatures of persons wishing to join the club and work for the success of the party, and 110 names were enrolled.

It was moved by Dr. Jones that the chair appoint three committees, consisting of five persons each—one on permanent organization, one on constitution and by-laws, and one on soliciting membership. The chair suggested that the motion also include a committee to raise a flag on the public square, which was agreed to and the motion adopted. The following are the committees:

On organization—J. G. Moyer, John Flanagan, Jos. J. Frigg, G. B. King, J. A. K. Tucker.

On constitution and by-laws—J. L. Fleming, A. L. Blow, S. T. Hooker, J. D. Williamson, J. S. Conington.

On soliciting members—W. H. Smith, C. D. Rountree, S. W. Brooks, Nash Hardee, S. S. Fleming.

On flag—B. F. Sugg, W. L. Dudley, C. F. White, J. J. Dancy, J. S. Smith.

Gov. Jarvis was called for and made a strong speech. He spoke at length of the record of Grover Cleveland and showed that he had done more for the nation and for the South than any man who had been President since the war. He was followed by Maj. Latham who also put in some good words for the party and its leaders.

G. B. King was called, but owing to the lateness of the hour excused himself with only a few remarks. H. Hardee, D. H. James and R. W. King were called for and while neither made a speech each declared himself solid for Cleveland and Democracy.

Maj. Latham offered the motion that every member of the club attend his Democratic primary on the 23rd. Carried.

On motion the club adjourned to meet again Thursday night, 21st.

A Voice from the Medical Fraternity.

Mrs. Joe Penrose—Madam—About April, 1887, I treated Sam Privett for Scrofula, affecting the glands of the neck, causing suppuration, which finally terminated in running sores. I had done for him all that I could, and considered his chances for life very small, and told you so, and that if you would benefit him with your remedy, I would give you a certificate of the fact. That you have done your part, the boy is now a living witness, and I shall not hesitate to prescribe in any similar case I may be called upon to treat. I am very truly, Yours, H. M. D.

HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH SINGLE.

I draw my chair before the fire. My dressing gown falls on my knees. The faithful friends who never desert me look at me as though I were a piece of the changing moon. In all the solitude of my life, I have never been so lonely as when I am alone.

The general Antonio is near. And Bevel's standing by his side. The "Redskins" like to see the red. Here Lilywhite and Nyrone's Guide, Pendants, "Pleek," Swift, and here the "Redskins" like to see the red. Lecker and Fraet together stand, And Dolson ready to my hand.

The bleak wind whistles across the street. The fire burns up more cheerfully. What need I, I say, love's bitterness? I am not Miss Blanche Amory. We'll rest content with our defeat. No more content, thanks for me! Or only this, lullied by your purr! To close my eyes and think of her.

The midnight and the fire is near. Hour after hour my thoughts will stray. And leave me lonely as the night. Along the wall remembered way. The letter that, no doubt, I held. There's something in the way I say. I'll write her in the self same strain. Perhaps she won't say "No" again. —Edmund Viny in "Temple Bar."

$500 REWARD.

"That isn't a bad reward!" "No; if a fellow could catch him, he would make pretty good wages. Let's see," and the second speaker began to read the postal card that the postmaster at Hard Scramble had just tucked to the door of the store that constituted the "office," so that every one might read:

500 Reward will be paid for the arrest and delivery of the man known as the "cut-off" of the Tonto Basin country. He is about twenty-five years old, six feet tall, and slim, with light complexion, and has a big scar on the right side of his face. He is wanted for robbery and other crimes. If killed in resisting arrest the reward will be paid on condition of proof of his identity. When last heard from was making for the Tonto Basin country.

By the time the reader had finished, a crowd of half a dozen or more men surrounded him. "Now if that fellow is headed for the Tonto Basin country it wouldn't be much of a trick to take him," said the first speaker reflectively, as if debating with himself the advisability of making the attempt.

"If you hear me he ain't going to be taken in, and the fellow that tries it is going to have his hands full for three years and ain't got two yet. They say he's right on the shoot," remarked another of the crowd. "Well, a fellow ought to know him as soon as he sees him from that description," hazarded the first speaker, "if he got up close enough to see the scar, and then all he'd have to do would be to turn loose at him if he didn't throw up his hands, and he'd hold him. But, nobody but him would be to cross over the mountains into the basin with this snow on the ground. Blamed if I don't think I'll go after him!"

"Well, somebody ought to round him up," asserted some one in the crowd; "he's been foolin' round here long enough, jes' havin' his own way, sorter as if the country belonged to him. Durned if I wouldn't go with you, if I didn't have to take this grub home, and the boys in camp."

"Well, if any of you want to go, all right. I'm going," replied the man addressed as Hi.

It was not the first time that Hi Lansing had been on such expeditions. He was one of those men for whom danger seems to have a fascination. At his remark Frank Crandall, a young fellow who had been standing quietly by, volunteered to accompany him. The crowd turned toward him with more interest than they had thus far evinced during the entire proceedings. It was but a few months since he had come among them, fresh from the east, to take charge of one of the mines which had been closed down by the winter's storms. For weeks he had been cooped up in the isolated settlement, and he was looking for something to break its monotony.

"Well, get your horse and gun and come," replied Hi, and in an instant the two men had left the room to arm and equip themselves for the chase, while the loungers gathered around the stove to discuss the probabilities of their success. In a few minutes the two men rode past the store, each armed with rifle and shotgun, and the crowd, stepping out, bade them good-by, with the oft-repeated warning, "Be keeful and don't let him get the drop on ye."

The crust of the unbroken snow cracked crisply under foot as the two rode on fast, leaving the little settlement in their rear. For some time neither spoke, but at last the silence was broken by Lansing asking his companion, "Did you ever try this kind of thing before?"

"No," replied the young man, "I never have."

"Well, then, you want to be keeful. If you don't lose yer head, you're all right. The only danger is that we may run on him before we know it."

"And if we do, what then?" asked the young man.

"Well, he will probably commence shooting, and if he does, and you ain't hit the first rattle out of a box, why you want to get off'n your horse and get behind something and shoot back. If their ain't anything to get behind, keep your horse between you and him and keep a-shootin'. Whatever you do, don't let go of your gun. But what we want to do is to see him first, and then we've got the play on him, and all you have to do is to tell him to throw up."

"And if he don't throw up?" asked Crandall.

"Well, then you can't hit him. The reward will be paid just the same."

The apparent indifference with which Lansing spoke of the entire matter, much as if he were discussing the best method of hunting a wild animal, shocked the young man, but he had committed himself too far to withdraw. Besides, he had that feeling that all men have when they are young—the curiosity to know whether or not he could rely on himself when danger threatened.

"We should strike his trail on the hills here, but as he is really headed for the basin country," said Lansing. They had been riding for several hours in silence through the snow, unbroken by aught save the scattered pines that here and there dotted the mesa. Before them towered the mountains through whose passes the man whom they were after would have to pass in his search for safety in the half settled hills beyond.

As the two men rode along, nowing in each direction the snow covered mesa, Lansing suddenly wheeled his horse to the right, and when Crandall joined him he pointed to a narrow trail where two horses had passed through the snow.

"That's him. He's driving 'em here, passing another way," he hasn't passed by very long, either. The snow hasn't had time to drift in it," said he.

With the discovery of his whole demeanor had changed. A new look came into his eyes and his voice sounded strange. He even grasped his weapons in a manner different to that he had heretofore displayed.

"He's right ahead, and we want to look out for the older man. If they began to follow the trail, as they approached the summit of each hill they would stop their horses, and Lansing would dismount and crawl to the top so that he might look, without being discovered, into the valley beyond, in order that they might not come on the fugitive too suddenly.

They had traveled this way for several miles, when, reining in his horse, Lansing pointed to what seemed an old road leading off to the right of the one they were following, and said:

"That's the 'cut-off' into the basin. I thought he would take it, but he probably doesn't know the country. You had better take it and ride on ahead until you strike the road we're on again. Then, if you can't find his tracks, you had better ride back to meet me until you do. I will follow the trail."

The young man tried to expostulate with Lansing for the great risk he was assuming in thus following the trail alone, but his companion was obdurate, and cutting the argument short by again warning the young man to be on his guard, he rode on, following the trail in the snow, while the younger man, finished with a crowd of half a dozen or more men surrounded him.

Noticing his walking away, the wounded man said:

"For God's sake, don't leave me. Now that you have killed me, stay by my side, and don't let me die like a dog."

The voice was one of entreaty, and Crandall returned and seated himself in the snow by the man's side. The sun had gone down and the twilight gleamed in the sky with the light of the night. Crandall covered the wounded man's body with his overcoat and raised his head from the snow. Almost unconsciously he noted that as the patch of red made by the blood grew larger and larger, the face of the wounded man grew whiter and whiter. He never took his eyes from Crandall's face, while his breath came quicker and shorter, as if he were in great pain.

With a gasp he remembered that he had been breathing through his hand. He had been breathing through his hand. He had been breathing through his hand. He had been breathing through his hand.

Then he rode back on the main road in the direction from which he had come, to meet his comrade and the fugitive. He had just ascended one of the many rolling hills when in the distance he discovered a man riding one horse and driving another.

At the sight his heart almost stood still. He dismounted, and leading his horse to one side concealed him in a clump of young pines. Then he returned to the roadside and waited. The man was urging his horses forward, but they seemed to be weary and made but slow progress. Crandall felt his heart beat faster and faster as the length of time it took the man to reach him.

He examined his revolver and rifle, cocking each, to see that they were in order. He seemed to relieve the tension of his nerves. After he had done this, he knelt down so that he could fire with surer aim, and waited. He did not care much now whether the man resisted or not. If the fugitive resisted, he would have to stand the consequence of resistance. It was nothing to him. He could hear the footfall of the approaching horses in the snow, and he cocked his rifle so as to be ready.

The setting sun shone full in the man's face, but Crandall forgot to look for the man's horse. The man said to the right, although he had resolved to do so particularly.

When he first discovered the fugitive he scanned the road behind him to discover Lansing, but the nearer the man approached the less Crandall cared whether Lansing came or not. He let the man approach nearer and nearer, so that his aim would be the more accurate. He could not resist the temptation to fire the first shot. The face of the man grew more and more distinct. He seemed to be oblivious to his surroundings. Crandall felt almost disposed to let him pass, but the thought that every one would think him a coward if he did so spurred him on, and, rising erect, he ordered the man to surrender.

The horse that the man was driving in front of him, frightened at Crandall's appearance, swerved from the road, leaving the two men facing each other. For an instant Crandall looked straight into the other's eyes. Then the man raised his rifle from the pommel of the saddle, and Crandall fired. The horse which the man was riding sprang from the road and at the same moment its rider's gun was discharged. The smoke from Crandall's own gun blew back into his eyes, and he turned to find the man's movements of the man at whom he had fired.

As he saw the man still erect in his saddle, he felt the feverish haste to fire again, come over him that men feel when they have shot and missed, and know that their life may be the forfeit of their failure. He threw another cartridge into the chamber of his rifle, and raised it to his shoulder, but before he could fire the man reeled from his saddle and fell, while his frightened horse galloped off through the pines.

Crandall stepped toward him, holding his rifle prepared to fire again, if necessary. As he did so the man raised his hand and said simply: "Don't fire—you've got me." The snow was already red with blood when he lay. For the first time Crandall looked for the scar that the description said was on the man's face. For an instant he did not see it, and his heart seemed to stop beating with the fear of having made a mistake, and when on drawing nearer he saw that it was there, that only the pallor which had spread over the man's face had made it indistinct, he could have cried out with joy at the feeling of relief that passed over him.

"Are you badly wounded?" he asked.

"I don't know how bad it is. It is here somewhere," the man said, placing his hand on his breast as if to indicate the exact spot. "It feels numblike," he added. Stooping down Crandall unbuckled and took of the man's pistol belt and his rifle, and then he turned to his own shirt. As he did so his fingers came in contact with the warm blood, and he involuntarily drew back with a feeling of disgust.

"Did you find it?" asked the man, who was watching him closely, and who had observed the movement.

Recalled to himself by the question, Crandall again covered the wound, and the man said: "Where the blood did not cover it it looked like marble, despite the dark hair on it. He could not see the wound on account of the blood until he had wiped the latter from the breast, and then he found it."

"What do you think of it?" the man asked.

"There it is," replied Crandall. He could not say more. The appealing tone in the man's voice for some hope—some encouragement—made him feel faint and sick.

"What do you think of it?" the man repeated in a querulous voice, and as he did so he coughed until his mouth filled with blood, and he spat it out on the white snow.

Crandall shook his head and walked toward where his horse was tied. He felt that he could not follow the man any longer he would faint. Noticing his walking away, the wounded man said:

"For God's sake, don't leave me. Now that you have killed me, stay by my side, and don't let me die like a dog."

The voice was one of entreaty, and Crandall returned and seated himself in the snow by the man's side. The sun had gone down and the twilight gleamed in the sky with the light of the night. the New What to Do.

Mrs. Swishlock, writing of her experience as a nurse in army hospital, tells this story:

I was passing through one of the wards when I came upon a young Philadelphia zouave in a perfect paroxysm of anguish. Three nurses stood around him, and to my inquiry, "What is the matter?" they replied by dumb show that coming death was the matter, and that all would soon be over, while in words they told me that he had not slept for forty-eight hours.

I had one of them place a chair for me, sat down, and with my long, thin hands grasped the thigh stump, which was making all the trouble, drew and pressed the muscles into a natural, easy position, cooled and talked and comforted the sufferer as I should have done a sick baby, and in ten minutes he was asleep.

Then I whispered to the nurses to bring cotton and oakum and little cushions, made them put the cotton and oakum in small tufts to my index finger, and while I crooned my directions in a sing song, lullaby air, worked in this support, gradually and imperceptibly withdrawing my hands until I could substitute the little cushions for the force by which I had been holding the muscles in proper position. This done, my boy soldier slept as sweetly as he ever had done in his crib.

The next morning a nurse came running for me to hurry to him. He had slept for six hours, walked, had his breakfast and had his wound dressed, and now the pain was back as bad as ever. I went, fixed the mangled muscle with reference to his change of position, made a half mold to hold it there, and before I had finished he began an eight hour sleep.

Ten days afterward he was sent home to his mother, and I heard of him no more.

Jogged His Memory.

The nine lives of a cat are often a difficult subject to deal with. Uncle John Townsend had a number of cats as his only companions in the little farmhouse and finally decided that one of them must be disposed of. His brother, who lived on the adjoining farm, offered to kill it for him.

"Well, now, Almer, I calculate I'll have you kill that black cat. He ain't no good except to eat. He won't hunt, and I won't have nothin' round that can't earn its own livin'; so you just take him off."

So said Uncle John on the morning that Almer came to fulfill his promise.

"Kind of a likely lookin cat," ventured Almer.

"That'n a memory for rats," replied Uncle John; "you jest take him off."

Almer departed with the cat and a shotgun. At night he came over again.

"Killed the old cat, did ye?" asked his brother.

"I reckon I did," replied Almer; "he won't be troubled about rat huntin after this."

Uncle John made no reply, but pointed toward the hearthstone, where sat old Blackie, as well apparently as ever.

"Well," ejaculated Almer in surprise. Then, after a moment's silence, he turned toward his brother and said: "That's a likely cat. Kinder forgetful, maybe, but I reckon he'll hunt all right now. I didn't kill him, but I sort of jogged his memory." —Youth's Companion.

No Use for a Circulation List.

A London insurance man said yesterday: "We have in London one of the most unique newspapers in the world; for, while it is published every day in the year except Sundays, a copy of it is never sold or circulated. The Evening Telegraph of London is issued each afternoon from the office of The Daily Telegraph, which paper is a morning paper in England, and with one exception, the largest in the world.

"The proprietors of The Daily Telegraph, in printing the evening edition, which is copyrighted, do so merely in order to protect themselves in the right to the use of the name in case they ever care to issue an evening edition, and also to prevent any one else from starting such a sheet, and gaining the great advantage which the use of the title, Evening Telegraph, would give."—Philadelphia Record.

False Hair in Elizabeth's Time.

Queen Elizabeth had eighty wigs in her collection, and her cousin, Mary, queen of Scots, had "as many as a hundred," and among the incongruous presents made her while confined a prisoner in gloomy Lochleven, previous to her being beheaded, wigs were numerous! Gentlemen who particularly wished to please their lady friends presented them with wigs of the latest fashion of hair and newest style of coiffure.

Presenting his acquaintance of today with a wig, he would say, "This is the latest in back hair."—Washington Star.

Why the Hat is Dangerous.

Time was when the owl, the kestrel, the hawk and the weasel, all enemies of the field mouse, were numerous and gave it little chance to increase and multiply, but for some time there has been a scarcity of these safeguards and the mice have prospered. With the germs of a deadly disease distributed among these millions of little pilferers and destroyers of man's labor in the field, who knows but that ere long we shall receive the startling news of an epidemic raging whereof time disease was almost unknown?

The horde of mice migrate to other localities and the disease breaks out in distant places, and the medical world, while laboring to dissipate the plague, struggles in vain to trace it to its source, falling back at last to the convenient convention that it started in the Punjab or in the westward from the tablelands of Manchouree or drifted ashore from the woods borne by the Gulf Stream from the Baragossa sea, or was produced in some mysterious way by the thaumaturgical action of sun spots.

French Gallantry.

During the Franco-German war, when many French prisoners were at Rastatt, the Countess Zeppelin was "like a real mother to them." Every morning, says Chaplain Guers, she came with cartloads of linen, clothing, medicine and other stores, and as she divided them among the men she had a kind word for each.

One day, after distributing all she had brought, she stopped before a subaltern just deprived of a limb. "Ah, my poor friend," said she "there is nothing left for you." "Madame," replied the soldier, "a smile from you will content me."

Here was French gallantry, cropping out amid the most horrible surroundings!

An Answer to Prayer.

A score of ministers had met in Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's vestry and had been telling their experiences. "It is just like a Methodist class meeting," said Mr. Crozier, a Wesleyan. "Well," said Mr. Spurgeon, "it is astonishing how Christians, when they meet together, fall into the use of one another's theological language. Our good brother, the Primitive Methodist minister, who prayed last night, said 'I will help the Lord to answer that prayer. If the whole lot of you will go down stairs into my tank, my brother will be delighted to baptize you all.'"—New York Observer.

Patent Medicines Differ.—One has reasonable, another has not. One has confidence, born of success, another has only "hopes."

Don't take it for granted that all patent medicines are alike. They are not. Let the years of uninterupted success and the tens of thousands of cured and happy men and women, place Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Remedy on the side of the comparison to which they belong. And there isn't a State of territory, no—nor hardly a country in the world, whether its people realize it or not, but have men and women in them that're happier because of their discovery and their effects.

Think of this in health. Think of it in disease. And then think whether you can afford to make the trial if the makers can afford to take the risk to give you money back, as they do, if they do not benefit or cure you.

When cutting open the trunk of an elm a live toad was found lying concealed about three feet from the root. It skipped away very alertly, yet we are told, no tree was more sound, nor could any aperture be discovered through which the little captive could have penetrated. It is supposed that the toad from which the origin of the name has accidentally been transferred up in the tree from the first moment of its vegetation.
