"Thank you," said Ethel, as she helped herself liberally. "Yes, she likes you a great deal better." "But how do you know? What did your sister say about me?" "Oh, she says she don't mind going to walk in the woods with you."

"But why should she?"
"Well, she's afraid to go with ome of the other men. She says they're always killing snakes, and she hates snakes worse than any-

"Does she, really?" "Yes; that's why she's so down on Jack Ford. He killed a great big black snake the last time she went with him, and now she can't hardly bear the sight of him."

"That's funny." "And yesterday Mr. Fish took up a stick and crept up behind a rattlesnake that was lying on a rock and knocked him on the head. So she won't have anything more to do with him." "I see."

"And Tom Hickox never kills snakes, but he's always seeing them and calling her attention to them. She says she can't stand a man who sees snakes all the time.'

"But I see snakes, too, some times," said Willie Bird, doubtfully. "Oh, but Mamie doesn't mind that," replied Ethel, consolingly. "She says she knows the snakes you see aren't real ones!"-Harry Romaine, in Brooklyn Life.

The stage has furnished many amusing anecdotes, and has in many instances served to bring out the latent humor of the masses. One of these, told of the actor Taillade, illustrates the aptness of the gallery god in the hour of need. It seems that Taillade was acting in some forgotten piece with an abnormally ponderous actress, Mlle. Suzanne Lagris by name, whom he was supposed in one of the scenes to carry off half fainting on his back. But his arms were too short to embrace the well-developed figure of Mlle.
