The Ways and Means Committee has been holding meetings since the adjournment of Congress and is reported as making good headway on the tariff bill to be introduced at the regular session in December.

As usual almost every industry is represented before the Committee, and each one can readily admit that there may be some reason for some change in reference to every other protected industry, but so far as their own is concerned that ought to remain as it is.

This question is by far more vital to us than the free coinage of silver, or State banks, or many other things that have been more freely discussed than this in the past few months.

The farmers in this section are about through picking cotton and all of them find a short crop, and at present find extremely short prices, but those who have raised a plenty of forage, hog and hominy are independent to some extent.

LIABILITY OF CORPORATIONS.

Why the Public Is Not in Sympathy with Railroad Companies.

If corporations have no souls it goes without saying that they have liabilities, and that every blundering, willful, obstinate, and wrong-headed individual who comes to any harm, even while in the gross violation of the company's rules, expects to bring suit against said company and realize a bonanza. It is absolutely necessary that every branch of public service, especially all of the carrying systems, should have the strictest rules and that the employes should not only enforce them, but should be assisted in so doing by all sensible, right-minded people. It would seem the height of absurdity for anyone to put in a claim for personal damages for injuries sustained while riding on the steps of a car or hanging to the outside railing. There is nothing in reason to uphold such a claim except the determination to make the corporation pay at all hazards. Any person who receives any hurt while in direct violation of printed and posted regulations such as are required by law should be barred from any claim from damages under any circumstances whatever; but for such criminal carelessness on the part of the servants of railroad corporations, as has recently been the cause of the wholesale slaughter of passengers on the Harlem and the Long Island railroads, no damages which can be assessed against them are too heavy a penalty.

There are reasonable and honest bills that all corporations ought to pay, and these, as a rule, are quite enough. Where passengers are injured through the carelessness, bad management or accident of the system itself, there is excellent ground for a demand for the only reparation the corporation can make, and under such circumstances there should be no hesitation in doing the fair thing. It may, however, be said that if there was less disposition to fight just claims, the public would be more in sympathy with the effort of the corporate body to protect itself against imposition; but as all claims, just or unjust, are met with a dogged determination to neither yield a point nor pay a penny, it is little wonder that the general opinion seems to be that anyone who can get so much in luck.—N. Y. Ledger.

Grazing Rye and Barley.

How soon land may be grazed after sown to rye and barley for this purpose depends on uncertain conditions—the main items of which are the weather and state of fertility, and moisture of the field in which the grains are sown. If favorable weather accompanies and follows the deposit of the seed in a rich moist soil, it will be nicely vegetated within a week, and by one or two more weeks might be lightly cropped if desired. But if the ground is soft it would be best to hold stock off until the plants have tillered, and are covering the ground with a green carpet, which will take several weeks more. Four to six weeks may be soon enough to begin grazing, regard being made to growth and best treatment of the plants grazed.

How much grazing can be done on a given area is quite as uncertain and depends on the same conditions. The judgment of the grazier in removing the stock when the roots are likely to suffer from exposure to sun or teeth by too close cropping, or when by packing the too wet soil harm may be done, is also an important factor in this case. The skill with which the stock is handled and numbers apportioned to keep the growth cut off enough not to out-grow a good feeding height, and avoid cutting too short and packing, will be the controlling factor after grazing has begun.—F. E. EMERY, Agriculturist, N. C. Experiment Station.

Fruit Culture.

A bulletin (No. 92) is now ready for mailing, on the subject of fruit culture by the N. C. Agricultural Experiment Station at Raleigh. It contains 148 pages and is improved by having 91 cuts to illustrate the various subjects. It is very comprehensive in scope, embracing two general heads. The first includes propagation, planting and culture of fruit trees and fruit-bearing plants, and the preservation and shipping of fruits. The second head embraces insects and diseases affecting fruit trees, plants and fruit, with remedies for their destruction. The publication is copiously illustrated with cuts showing how to graft and propagate fruit trees and vines and train and prune them; also cuts of insects and how diseases effect them, together with appliances to destroy these enemies. It is a manual for growing fruit trees and keeping them, as well as for the care of fruits in reference to gathering, packing, shipping, drying, preserving, and canning them. Varieties of fruits are described, as well as those most suitable to various sections of North Carolina.

This publication will be sent free to all residents of the State who apply, and to outsiders who send 10 cents in stamps. Apply to Dr. H. B. Battle, Director, Raleigh, N. C.

Fall-Grown Irish Potatoes.

Few of our people fully realize the long keeping quality of our Fall-grown Irish potatoes. We have now (Sept. 16) at the Station farm potatoes raised in the Fall of 1892 that are still sound. They are now somewhat shriveled and sprouted of course, but the fact that they are still sound and capable of growing, is significant. If we can succeed in keeping over these Fall-grown potatoes in perfect shape until, say the last of July, and then use them for seed, we feel sure that the late crop can be made a more certain one. Sometime since, a gentleman in Virginia sent me some of his Fall-grown potatoes he had kept over for seed. They were smooth and firm, with the eyes just fairly started. He wrote me that his plan was to keep them in a cool, dark cellar as long as possible, but as soon as they showed signs of sprouting to remove them at once to a dry, light place, and spread them out. This keeps the eyes from drawing out into long shoots, and they start with a stout green growth but elongate very slowly, and the sprouts are so firm that they can easily be handled and planted in July. We propose to experiment in this direction and hope some of our readers will do likewise, and report the results of planting these potatoes in comparison with the seed of the same season's growth.—W. F. MASON, Horticulturist, N. C. Experiment Station.

A THRILLING SITUATION.

The Second Mate Tells of a Great Experience of His.

How a Man Almost Drowns in Three Feet of Water—He Swims for the Painter Which Had Gotten Adrift and Becomes Exhausted.

It was the second mate of one of the great lake propellers that spoke as they were passing Pointe Aux Barques, and his words were to this effect: "That is a queer coast over there, and don't you forget it." The interlocutor, a passenger, promised that he would not forget it, providing the sailor man would tell him why the coast was queer.

"Well," said the sailor man, but without hitching his trousers or shifting his quid, or performing any of the nautical gymnastics attributed to his kind in the story books, "it wasn't exactly queer, perhaps, but it is a coast that I shall remember the longest day I live.

"It was about six years ago that I was sailing on a lumber schooner, and just when we were about where we are now the captain discovered that our yawl was adrift. We had been towing it and somehow the painter had parted or slipped, and there the boat was, nearly a mile away, drifting ashore as fast as the water could carry it. There was not a soul to be seen, and if there had been it would not have been an easy matter to get him to bring us our yawl, and the captain did not know what to do. Finally, as I saw the old man was a good deal worked up over it, I volunteered to swim ashore and bring the yawl, if he would run in as close as he could and anchor until I came aboard.

"The captain accepted my proposal very gladly, and as the water was warm I thought I would have a first-rate swim, little thinking what was in store for me. So I stripped and lowered myself into the water. For a quarter of an hour it was mere fun, but I soon found I had bit off more than I could chew. The shore was further off than I had figured, and I could see a few ominous looking clouds which indicated that the wind was rising, which might make it hard for me to get back to the schooner after I got the boat. I kept on, however, getting more and more exhausted every moment. I tried every way I knew to rest my tired legs and arms. First I turned on my back and swam in that position for awhile. Then I tried swimming on my side, then 'dog fashion,' and then floating. But all the time I was getting more and more worn out. I tried to signal the schooner, but my voice was so weak I could not make them hear and they did not understand, as I afterward learned, my frantic motions. Besides, they could not have helped me if they had, because they had no boat.

"I had swam about a mile and was still a mile from the shore. Mechanically I kept up my motions as well as I could, but I knew I was doomed. The water began to sing in my ears and my thoughts went back over my past life, as I have heard drowning men's always do. I thought of my poor wife and children, and wondered how they would get the news. I wondered whether my body would be found and get Christian burial or be carried out into the lake and find a last resting place there. It did not worry me much on my own account—I had ceased to care for myself, but I hoped somehow, for the sake of my family, that I should be washed ashore and that somebody would have my body carried home.

"I don't know how long it took me to think all this. Probably it was not more than a minute, but it seemed to be ages and all the time I was feebly moving my arms and feet and just keeping my head above water. Meanwhile I had got perhaps within half a mile of the shore. I made up my mind—or rather it made itself up—that this was just as good a place to drown in as any other, and abandoning motion I sank to the bottom.

"It did not take as long as I expected it would to reach the bottom. In fact, I struck it with both hands and feet as soon as I had fairly stopped moving. I kept my feet on it, and, straightening up, found that the water came about up to my waist. I suppose I ought to have fallen on my knees in thankfulness, but instead of that I waded ashore the maddest man on the coast. I got the yawl and sculled it back to the schooner which was waiting at anchor for me, and as I went back I had the curiosity to take soundings and found that I had been exhausting myself swimming for more than a mile when the water was not more than four feet deep."

"Was the captain glad to get you back?" the sailor man was asked.

"Blast the captain!" was the response. "All he said was: 'You confounded fool, didn't you know that there was a mile and a half of shoal water all along that coast?'"

A Moral City.

The great moral city of the great west is to be Newburg, Ore. The city council passed an ordinance a few days ago forbidding any person under the age of eighteen to wander about the town after seven o'clock p. m. between November and April and after eight o'clock during the rest of the year, unless bearing a written permit from or being in company with parents or guardians. The penalty is to be a fine not less than five nor more than twenty dollars, or imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty days.

The Meeting Closes.
The series of meetings which had been conducted by Rev. J. H. Lambert in the Baptist church for two weeks, closed Sunday night. Though the meetings were not attended by any immediate outward results in the way of conversions, they cannot fail to be productive of vast good to the church and to the community. The people of Greenville have never listened to a more able series of sermons than these, and impressions made by them will have an influence for years to come. Mr. Lambert's discourses are entirely void of anything sensational or calculated to create excitement. He preaches the Bible plainly and forcibly, appealing to men's reason rather than to their feelings. He argues that it is right to be a Christian, and a man shows the highest principle of which he is capable when he accepts Jesus because it is right to do so. No one could listen to him without having a higher estimation of Christian character. There were large congregations at the services and the people listened intently. While all of the sermons were excellent, there were four especially of the series which made an impression on his hearers that will be lasting. They were the ones on "Justification by Faith," delivered on Tuesday night; "Filial Obligations," on Thursday night; "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," on Sunday morning, and "Why am I a Christian?" on Sunday night. We never listened to a more grandly painted word picture than that he portrayed at the close of Sunday morning's sermon of Jesus from infancy to ascension.
The doors of the church were not reopened to receive members during the meeting, but it is probable they will be at the service to-morrow night.
Mr. Lambert has very greatly endeared himself to all the people here, both professor and non-professor, and all hope he will make Greenville his permanent home. The influence for good of such a man is beyond value.
Thanksgiving Closing.
The people throughout the county who trade in Greenville should take notice that all business here will be suspended on Thanksgiving Day, and make arrangements for trading or selling produce accordingly, so as to avoid confusion on that day to transact business and the stores closed. MOST AWFUL TRAGEDY.
Two Men Fight to Death—Quarrel Over A Bit of Land and Die Within 5 Feet of Each Other.
Tragedies are not unknown to Pitt county, but perhaps the most terrible ever occurring within her borders was that which took place out in Swift Creek township early last Wednesday morning. The startling intelligence reached Greenville between 10 and 11 o'clock that J. H. Smith and Abner Slaughter, living about eleven miles from town—neighbors, well-to-do farmers, most of families and both much esteemed citizens—had engaged in a personal difficulty and both lay dead upon the scene of altercation.
Coroner W. E. Warren was notified, summoned a jury and repaired to the scene, and began an inquest about 1 o'clock.
The cause of this bloody combat that cost two good men their lives and held another in prison for trial, made two widows and five orphans, and carried great sorrow and trouble into oh, so many homes of their large family connection, was the disputed ownership of a little piece of woods land—about 10 acres, or possibly a little over—that lay near to Slaughter's house. Both men claimed it and had on different occasions had some words about it. They lived about a third of a mile apart on opposite sides of the road. Slaughter went upon the disputed land on Tuesday, with two young men working for him, and cut some rails to make a hog pen. Wednesday morning they went back to finish the work and to cut up into wood the tops and portions of the felled trees not split into rails. It was at this time the difficulty occurred.
How the encounter took place, which ended in the death of both men, was told by the three witnesses examined before the coroner. They were G. F. Smith, J. A. Harby and G. F. Sutton—the first named being a brother of J. H. Smith, the last two being the young men at work with Slaughter. G. F. Smith said in substance that he was passing the road with his brother J. H. Smith, and his brother remarked that Slaughter was at work on his land and asked him to walk over there with him. He advised his brother not to go as it might occasion a difficulty. Arriving where Slaughter was at work some words passed between J. H. Smith and the latter about having forbidden each other to work or enter upon the land. Smith ordered the work stopped at once, but Slaughter ordered his hands to go on with their work and raised his own axe to continue cutting on the tree. Smith shot Slaughter immediately with a pistol, Slaughter drew a pistol and returned the fire, and the two men clinched, discharging their pistols into each other as fast as they could shoot. Witness said he went up to separate them, when Slaughter snatched the pistol at him and he struck Slaughter on the head with a rod of iron he was taking home to mend from his mill. Seeing his brother fall he left Slaughter and went to his side.
The testimony of the other two witnesses was substantially the same as Smith's as to the words about forbidding each other entering upon the land and as to the shooting, but both said they did not see Slaughter snap his pistol at G. F. Smith, and that the latter went up to the combatants striking Slaughter several blows with the iron, and showing no disposition to separate them. Witness Harby said that after J. H. Smith fell, G. F. Smith and Slaughter tussled over the piece of iron until Slaughter also fell.
Neither lived but a short while. What a heart-rending spectacle that was, two men lying dead within 5 feet of each other, their lives sacrificed over so small a matter.
Dr. F. W. Brown made a post mortem examination of the bodies. Smith was struck with three bullets and grazed with the fourth, while Slaughter was struck with three bullets and had two cuts on the head from blows. The bullets in both men struck vital parts and were the cause of death.
The coroner's jury was composed of W. L. Cobb, S. F. Sugg, G. E. Harris, W. L. Brown, S. T. Hooker and W. B. James. They rendered a verdict as to each body; in one case that "J. H. Smith came to his death from pistol shots at the hand of Abner Slaughter," and in the other case that "Abner Slaughter came to his death from pistol shots at the hand of J. H. Smith, and that G. F. Smith was held as an accomplice." G. F. Smith was brought by the constable of the township to Greenville and placed in jail.
The body of Mr. Slaughter was buried on Thursday afternoon, and that of Mr. Smith on Friday. The former leaves a wife and four children, three of them quite small; and the latter leaves a wife and infant. The REFLECTOR is truly sorry for and deeply sympathizes with all affected by this sad tragedy. Oh, that men would take warning from such deeds and settle their differences amicably, without resorting to such violence as had their own lives to destruction and engulf in grief and trouble all who are near and dear to them. No occurrence in the county has caused more excitement than this. May the like never happen again.
Editors Marring.
Mr. J. E. Robinson, editor of the Gold-boro Argus, was married in that town to Miss Ada C. Humphreys, on last Wednesday.
Mr. W. P. Whitaker, one of the editors of the Raleigh Observer, was married last Wednesday to Miss Mary Carroll, daughter of Mr. O. J. Carroll.
Acquitted.
Young Isaac Sugg, son of Col. I. A. Sugg, who was tried for his life at Halifax Superior Court last week, for the killing of M. A. James at Hogwood in June, was acquitted. The boy was ably defended in the trial by Hon. W. H. Day, W. A. Dunn Esq., ex-Gov. T. J. Jarvis and Col. Sugg. The trial occupied nearly one and a half days, and the jury brought in a verdict in thirty minutes that the boy was not guilty.
