Senator Simmons has introduced A. M. Moscley, ment to the railroad interstate commerce bill now pending, which will be of interest to North arolina, and which he believe f adopted will largely remedy the complaints as to discrimination against North Carolina towns and cities in favor of those of Virginia. The amend ment simply proposes to strike out the words with reference t the long and short haul in th act of 1887, "under substantially similar circumstances and con ditions," and insert instead of them the words "when natural circumstances and conditions are substantially similar." It is thought these will give the relief desired, because the Sapreme court has decided that the words of the original act include artificial, as well as natural conditions. The effect of the amendment will be to exclude from consider ation by the commission artificial

Business in Politics. There are fanciful dreamers who still think and act as though there were nothing in politics except sentiment: This sentiment grows out of some great policies of government involving the personal right of citizens, or. stated otherwise, the rights of Greenville, the person in government. Partisan politics is largely based upon this kind of sentiment. All the great parties that have arisen in American politics were founded upon some great moral question having business as a secondary consideration. When the republic was first established there were tories as well as patriots. There were those who believed in America and Repub. GRENVILLENC lican form of government while there were many others who had no sympathy with Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton and other founders. The fathers differed in some policies relating to business, but business was nevertheless a strong factor, fundamentally in partisan organization.
