

Carrow.

HE HAS A DREAM. By U-KNOW.

Last night I lay on soft, clean bed, With drowny pillows to raise my head. For awhile it seemed I could not sleep, Strange thoughts across my mind did creep I drempt I had to tramp a mile: And then I seem'd to doze awhile A burden, too, I must needs carry,

Though worn and weary, I must not

Perhaps from the pattering of the graph office.

So rugged looked the road ahead I laid me back upon my bed.

But sleep seem'd further from

Than th' stars that twinkled in Skies.

Then I thought what can it be That tonight so troubles me?

It seem'd to lay on me a sin.

A sin that we may all blot out By building up a better route

O'cr such miserable muck

> The Anonymous Letter The man who writes to another an usive letter and fails to sign his ame to it is a contemptible coward. has also in it the elements of as ssination. Language is too weak to fitly characterize the prowling hy as who strike in the dark. The can be no circumstances justifying anonymous letter. If one afraid to own what he writes he hould not write. It is amazing to s that men (and sometimes women) will resort to this lowflung practice to gratify their spleer without ex posing their bones. No person who has been well bred will write an nonymous letter. We make this atement without reservation. It i possible for a gentleman to think such a thing and of course n lady will do what a gentleman would shrink from with horror. If ever der any circumstances, you have tempted to give a "piece of ir mind" to anybody withou igning your name to it, let us im ore you, good friend, to resist th ievil, for it is a temptation that omes straight from the pit. A sober econd thought will convince you of the infamy of such a proceeding, and if you have a spark of man hood, will mantle your cheeks wit shame that such a thought ever ered your mind. Take this advic from one who would rejoice to see every young person who reads this paper make a worthy and honorabl record: never write a letter you are ashamed to sign .-- Charity and Chil-
