EX-GOV. AYCOCK

(Continued from 1st page) should find a willing helper in ever one in the state of North Carolina. Bishop Kilgo, with his deep, me dius voice and rich flow of beautiful words held the attendance for about twenty minutes and swayed them at will as he told the meaning of Mr. Aycock's life to North Carolina. "There are men who have eyes, but do not see; who have ears but hear not; have tact, but do no fell. Others who have eyes and see roperties which help to make then eneficiary to mankind. On the other hand there are men who see. portunity suggester to them through his proprieties of seeing, hearing and feeling. Aycock was one of these men. A life full of activity and opportunities grasped for the benefit of the sons and daughters of the state of which he was a native."

Bishop Kilgo, as is his custom would, once in a while impart the timber of confidence to his voice and throwing his arms on the pulpit and leaning forward over it would lower his voice and engage in confidential phrases with his listeners, telling them of intimate bits of history of the great man whose body lay before

A short time before the funeral ser vices in the church were concluded the heavy clouds over head broke into torrential showers which dispersed the hundreds who had been unable to gain admittance into the church. Umbrellas, coats and wraps offered but little shelter from the rain. Every nook and corner which offered any kind of shelter from the pouring rain was occupied in the immediate neighborhood of the Baptist church and when the body was placed on the hearst a little after six o'clock the weather made it impossible to follow it to the cemeter otherwise than in a closed carriage Over forty-five vehicles formed behind the funeral coach and the slow procession began toward Oakwood cemetery, where the interment took

A great number of people from the state made the journey to Raleigh many special trains arriving at Un ion station with delegations from al most every town in North Carolina
