The writer of this who is superintendent of schools, distinctly remembers how, ten years ago, while visiting the Arba school and teaching a class, his attention was drawn to her bright face and well prepared lessons. He observed her later in the same school marking her perfect doportment and studious habits.

Later, when after a year's stay at the State Normal College, she began teaching there was no more popular and beloved teacher than she, always winniing the respect and good will not only of her pupils but of the older people as well. Those who knew her best and who had an opoprtunity to observe her beautiful Christian character, unselfish in all things and loyal to right, have no doubt that she is today in the better land, in the presence of that Savior whom she loved so
