SENIOR CLASS EXERCISES GIVEN ON THE CAMPUS

Senior Class of '15 at Training School Present Interesting Program

A FEATURE OF COMMENCEMENT

Class Day Exercises Were Very Entertaining and Instructive. A Beautiful Array of Handsomely Dressed Girls.

The Class Day Exercises again proved an enjoyable feature of the last Carolina Teachers Training School on commencement program when on Monday evening the senior class of 1915 entertained a large audience on the campus of the school. Long before the exercises began there were crowds of people gathered around the inclosure just to the west of the Girls' Dormitory and when the seniors marched in and took their places in the center of the spectators, they were greeted with contentions that showed that those present were eagerly watching to see and enjoy each number. The Juniors, Sophomores and the other classes were all dressed in their class colors and as the seniors, wearing dresses of green and white, their class colors, advanced, a beautiful and picturesque sight with all the beauty and happiness of spring was presented. There were many there who witnessed the exercises last year and now they have even greater cause for returning and witnessing the one by the class of 1915.

The first part of the program was the song of welcome, by the Seniors as a whole, and it put the audience into a mood all made each one there feel welcome and caused all to inhale the spirit and catch the real meaning of the "Class Day."

This was followed by the reading of the Class History by Miss Christine Johnson, of Greenville, the Class Historian. Miss Johnson read the achievements and accomplishments of the class and related interesting and funny incidents from the history of the class. Her story was in detail, giving literary honors, athletic honors and other honors won by their class. Miss Johnson had it all in "our shell," as it seemed, and she read it with clearness and ease.

The reading of the history was followed by another song by the Class after which Miss Ernestine Forbes, also of Greenville, came forward and gave an "Ode to our President." This was full of originality and the rhyme and the words were so good that it is hard to refer to it without giving it in full. The ode is as follows:

"When you have a task that is hard to do,
The very best way to do it
Is to take a running start and then
You'll find you'll soon get it thru."

And this is the task that is given to me
To write what is right about Mr. Wright
And give him all that is due.

He is staunch and loyal and kind
He is noble, wise and good,
He has let us do as we wanted to do
Whenever he possibly could.

As a leader he is there with the best of them,
As a president he leads them all.
The whole school adores him
And answers to every call.

There is nothing too good to be said about him,
There is nothing he wants us to do for him
That each girl is not willing to do.

We're grieved at leaving our dear Alma Mater,
But we're mighty glad to be thru.
Just to be the girls what you've been to us
And they'll be what we've been to you!

Miss Bettie Spencer, of Washington, appeared next on the program in the role of the "Palmett." She had a clear outline of the lines and marks of the hands of each Senior and her reading of the futures of each individual and her expression and manner of handing out her knowledge almost made one think she really was a fortune teller. Some were to be teachers and conduct Model schools, some were to be nurses, some were to teach the "fancy dances," one was to become Mayor of New York, one was to conduct a big laundry business, and so on until the whole class had had a laugh on one another.

Miss Connie Bishop, of Wilson, next stepped to the front and paid a splendid tribute to Mrs. Kate R. Beckwith, her beloved and esteemed Lady Principal. She spoke the sentiments of the class in telling that Mrs. Beckwith had done for them in many ways and her remarks were full of appreciation.

"It's a Long Way to Graduation," to the tune of "Tipperary" was then sung by the Class and the exercises were continued with the presentation of the Class Belles by Miss Clara Davis, of Atlanta, Ga.

Miss Davis called for Miss Willie Greene Day, of the Class of 1912, and the latter came forward and received the cup which the members of her class had presented to the Class of '15 when they graduated. Miss Day accepted it by making appropriate remarks relative to its return to them. Mr. H. E. Austin, of the Faculty and Class Adviser of the Senior Class was next asked to come forward and Miss Davis presented him the class banner. Mr. Austin, in accepting it, reminded the class of 1915 that he will remember the class of 1915 and that each of the seniors would always have a warm place in his heart.

The President of the Senior class, Miss Louise Moore, of Burkaw, appeared next and presented President Wright with a check for $200. "Are you Mrs. Dow?" asked the President. "The woman looked at him shyly. 'I am Amada Dow,' she admitted. 'Mr. Green wrote to me about you, Mrs. Dow, he said you wanted some trees cut down. I will see him about the matter.'"

Jay, puzzled at finding his agent had rented one of the cottages to other than the white people, pursued the agent through the street toward the agent's office. Near his destination he was just in time to snatch a young woman from under the wheels of a racing automobile.

As it was, they were both lunging against the curbstone, and the young woman lay pale and white against Jay's arm.

"I'll show you," volunteered a woman, and she led the way toward Jay's row of cottages.

She passed them all until she came to the last one, the abode of the Widow Dow.

"I will go inside with you," she said. "The doctor is on his way now," she said, as she opened the gate.

Amada Dow met them in the porch, and she took the slender, unconscious form in her arms and bore her upstairs, where the village doctor arrived in a few moments.

Jay Dickson, wandering restlessly in the little garden, could not rid his mind of that lovely face which had lain against his shoulder. It was a pale, spirituelle face, framed in rich, red hair that grew low on her forehead. Jay looked at her with a creamy cheek were thick and dark and curling. What color were her eyes?

"What called him anyway?" he asked himself fiercely. Never before had he cared about the color of women's eyes!

The doctor came down and spoke to him.

"Her arm is broken," he said. "It's her working arm," sniffed Amada, as she went out.

"Mrs. Dow is an artist," explained the doctor in a low tone. "She's been having hard shedding. I understand, and I guess losing the use of her right hand for many weeks won't help any."

ABOUT WIDOW DOW

By CLARICE GAINES

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure News Paper Syndicate.

Jay Dickson frowned over the letter from the manager of his house in the section. The house had been an inheritance from his Uncle Peter and the income from the half dozen little cottages had been an addition to his income. Of course, the property was sadly out of repair and a great deal of money had been spent upon it, still the agent had made many complaints about dissatisfied tenants.

Jay reread the letter.

"About this Widow Dow," said the agent, "she lives in the last cottage at the very edge of the woods, and she says that one of the trees should be cut down because the shade makes her place damp. I tell you she ought not to make complaints when she is bedridden with her rest."

"That's" muttered Jay, thrusting the letter into his pocket. "I'll run down there myself and have it out with Mrs. Dow."

The next day, quite unknown to Jay, Dickson, he stepped out of the station and took a short cut through the woods to reach his property.

He was not prepared for the huge black woman who waddled across the garden with a heavy foot. Her woolly hair was tied up in a snowy turban and her white gown was immaculate.

"Are you Mrs. Dow?" asked Jay. The woman looked at him shyly. "I am Amada Dow," she admitted. "Mr. Green wrote to me about you, Mrs. Dow, he said you wanted some trees cut down. I will see him about the matter."

SIXTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT

"I know it is not so, but it sounds good."

In mentioning the custom of schools in choosing and inviting speakers, Mr. Winston brought in the story of the young man who found himself on the operating table of a hospital about to be operated on for appendicitis and awaking and asking the doctor if it were necessary that his appendix be taken out. "No, but it is customary," said the doctor. "So," said Mr. Winston, "it is not necessary that I be here today, but it is customary."

"I have nothing to learn you this morning in history, geography, etc., but I have come to talk to you in plain, practical ways and to give you the benefit of my experiences and observations and to tell you things which I think the women of every school in the state should know. Once when I used to teach school I stood an examination on my teaching ability and in making a report on my examination it was said that I 'spelt well' that I 'wrote well', but that I didn't 'so' still." This last part of the report is not a requirement in the schools of today. It makes no difference how much the teacher moves about today, he can be in a thousand different places, just so he accomplishes his work.

Mr. Winston said that he made his first speech on education in 1871 at Patterson's Mill in Orange county when he was a freshman at the University. "At this time, said he, I had a vision of the part that the young woman should play around the fireside and in the public school houses. I thought that later a child taught in the public schools should make the solutions in questions of business, exchange and other affairs. I wanted the child who had been reared in the public and rural schools to come forward and be the leader."

"I express to you a common and every day truth—the strength and the power of the state does not depend

How An Old Time Shipping Master Got It

(By Asa Higgs)

Down in Buenos Aires there is a shipping master by the name of Tommy Moore. At least there was one there by that name. He's dead now, poor fellow, and his death is lauded by all the men who have sailed the seas for any appreciable length of time.

During Tommy's life he made a real good thing of the business of signing men on the old sailing ships that crept into the port of Buenos Aires. Signing them and pocketing the advance money, giving in exchange a berth on some old starvation packet, was Tommy's game, and many are the men who have been strapped into his dive and sent out to sea without a rag of clothing and no tobacco.

Tommy Moore had a long and fascinating life before he went to his reward. If there was any for him, he was born in Ireland and then came to this country and enlisted in the United States navy. Falling to be satisfied with conditions in the American navy, Tommy jumped his ship when in a South American port, managed to get down to Buenos Aires and started his shipping houses. For a number of years he furnished all the square rigged ships coming into Buenos Aires with men, and during this time he built up one of the biggest reputations of any shipping master in the world. His name was known from Port Said to San Francisco, and every man that went to sea hated him.

It is told that once when a Norwegian sailing ship was ready to put to sea, and Tommy could not find enough men to fill her, he went to the morgue, purchased a dead man's body, sent it aboard the ship and told the skipper that it was an able bodied seaman. When the ship got to sea, the man was found to be dead and about half rotten. That did not worry Tommy in the least, for he had gotten the advance money already and was several hundred miles in the way of the ship.

Along about 1860 Tommy grew tired of life on shore, so he bought an old three masted bark and sailed for England. Tommy made his trip up the Western ocean without a mishap, and reached Liverpool where he discharged his cargo, paid off his crew and then set about to get a return cargo for Buenos Aires.

After a couple of months, Tommy had his hold full of English goods going out to Argentina, and was preparing to sail on Wednesday morning.

He signed on a crew except one man, and then set about to fill out the ship's complement could not be found in all Liverpool. The English shipping commission would not let Tommy put to sea without his full crew, so there was a tug boat waiting in the river, and one man lacking for the crew.

Tommy went ashore to a shipping master to see if he happened to know, and put the proposition up to him.

"Sheeny, says Tommy, I've got to have a man tomorrow morning."

"Nothin' doin', says Sheeny.

"Sheeny here's a five pound note waiting for you when you place a man aboard that ship of mine," says the venerable Tommy.

"Alright" came from Sheeny.

He always got busy when he was shown the color of the money.

Late that night Sheeny and another fellow brought something aboard and it into the fo'c'sle. Next morning we fellows gave it a shake, and it asked feebly.

"Where am I? Who placed me aboard this blooming ship?"

We gently informed him that he should a ship bound for South America. At that the fellow, who was puny, let out a scream like that of an angry cat, and made a dive for the after poop, where he found the old man smoking his pipe in much ease.

"Are you the captain?" says the new hand.

"I am, says Tommy, and what of it?"

"I have been shanghaied and placed aboard this ship against my will, says the bloke, and I call upon you to set me ashore at once."

"Ho, you do, says the skipper, and I call upon you to get to washin' down the decks as quick as the lord, will let you? Catch hold of that bucket, you lazy swab."

"How dare you address me in such terms," replied the bloke, who was told as follows that he had his name.

"Look here my man, says the skipper, if I come down off this poop, I'll make you want to eat that bucket?"

At that, the bloke let out another scream, and the old man made a dive for him. His fist caught under the jaw, and the hammering Tommy gave that bloke was a rum one.

When he had finished with him, Al-

Innsbruck, Austria, June 15.—via Buchs and Geneva, Switzerland, and Paris, 2:20 p. M.—Twenty-five thousand Austro-Hungarian troops left Trent yesterday and are now advancing against the Italians on the Riva Rovereto front.

"Now you have fixed yourself. You'll probably get ten years for kidnaping me," said the skipper.

The skipper grew meek and mild at that, and got down on his knees to Algy.

"I never knew who it was, my Lord," said the skipper.

Algy didn't reply to this, so the skipper went ahead and told him that he would take him back to Liverpool.

"I've told him that he had taken a fancy to the trip in the ship, and that he would move his clothes aft, and live as a passenger, and that instead of going to Buenos Aires, the skipper could call in at Rio and set him ashore."

"With pleasure, my Lord," said Tommy.

Algy moved aft, and became a fairly holy terror. He bossed the skipper and mate around. Learned them some better manners, and took charge of things generally.

After due time the ship reached Rio, and after calling on the old man for ten pounds expenses home, Algy stepped down in the dingy, and was rowed ashore.

The old man thought he had got off light, and was happy the rest of the voyage, or until we reached Buenos Aires.

When we dropped the anchor, we saw a police boat coming out to meet us, and the old man got scared, thinking Algy had given him away.

The boat came along, and one of the cops told the skipper that there was a man on board that they wanted.

"We left him at Rio, said the skipper, he's a Lord."

"Arrt, said the policeman, he's Algy, and you are the biggest fool I ever met."

At this the skipper went wild, and gave the cop a crack over the head with a boat hook. After being bullied for a month by a thief, and then have a cop to tell him he was a fool, was more than Tommy could bear.

The skipper got a month, for it is a dead game to monkey with the cops.

"These men have fired here and there and continue to fire into the backs of our troops, at isolated soldiers and officers and provision convoys. Following provisionally attacking columns, especially in wooded regions, which permit waiting in ambush without difficulty, these brigands even have fired on doctors while they were treating wounded, upon the wounded themselves and upon ambulance staffs."

The note says an Austrian agent who was concealed in the vicinity discharged two shots from a revolver at an observer who was directing a battery of heavy Italian artillery but without effect. The communication closes with the assertion that it is the purpose of the Austrians "to check Italian operations and also lead the Italians to exercise cruel reprisals."

End.

After due time the ship reached Rio, and after calling on the old man for ten pounds expenses home, Algy stepped down in the dingy, and was rowed ashore.

The old man thought he had got off light, and was happy the rest of the voyage, or until we reached Buenos Aires.

When we dropped the anchor, we saw a police boat coming out to meet us, and the old man got scared, thinking Algy had given him away.

The boat came along, and one of the cops told the skipper that there was a man on board that they wanted.

"We left him at Rio, said the skipper, he's a Lord."

"Arrt, said the policeman, he's Algy, and you are the biggest fool I ever met."

At this the skipper went wild, and gave the cop a crack over the head with a boat hook. After being bullied for a month by a thief, and then have a cop to tell him he was a fool, was more than Tommy could bear.

The skipper got a month, for it is a dead game to monkey with the cops.

"These men have fired here and there and continue to fire into the backs of our troops, at isolated soldiers and officers and provision convoys. Following provisionally attacking columns, especially in wooded regions, which permit waiting in ambush without difficulty, these brigands even have fired on doctors while they were treating wounded, upon the wounded themselves and upon ambulance staffs."

The note says an Austrian agent who was concealed in the vicinity discharged two shots from a revolver at an observer who was directing a battery of heavy Italian artillery but without effect. The communication closes with the assertion that it is the purpose of the Austrians "to check Italian operations and also lead the Italians to exercise cruel reprisals."

End.

Washington Man Is Found Dead in a Room in Norfolk

(Special to The Reflector.)
Washington, N. C., June 15th.—A wire was received this morning from Norfolk, stating that J. B. Russell, a local employee of the Norfolk Southern, had been found dead in a room on Bausch street in Norfolk.

The case was opened and it is not known whether it was murder or suicide. It is thought probable that the man had become dependent upon his business affairs and committed suicide.

He leaves a wife and four children in Washington.

A white boy and negro who were in the employ of Hooper are now doing time for their theft. They claimed to be doing the bidding of Hooper when they got the cow and butchered it.

FIRE ON DOCTORS

Innsbruck, Austria, June 15.—via Buchs and Geneva, Switzerland, and Paris, 2:20 p. M.—Twenty-five thousand Austro-Hungarian troops left Trent yesterday and are now advancing against the Italians on the Riva Rovereto front.

"Now you have fixed yourself. You'll probably get ten years for kidnaping me," said the skipper.

The skipper grew meek and mild at that, and got down on his knees to Algy.

"I never knew who it was, my Lord," said the skipper.

Algy didn't reply to this, so the skipper went ahead and told him that he would take him back to Liverpool.

"I've told him that he had taken a fancy to the trip in the ship, and that he would move his clothes aft, and live as a passenger, and that instead of going to Buenos Aires, the skipper could call in at Rio and set him ashore."

"With pleasure, my Lord," said Tommy.

Algy moved aft, and became a fairly holy terror. He bossed the skipper and mate around. Learned them some better manners, and took charge of things generally.
