Yes, wife, we're going to move once more; The last time I declare, Sends word it wants us there!

some things this time with us we'll take, Some leave here in disgust, And some we'll lose, and some we'll break, break,
As movers always must.
The family Bible we will find

Rigid Economy.

St. Joseph Herald.

There is a good story told of the conomical qualities of two well known and wealthy gentlemen living in the east part of town that is a good lesson for those recklessly extravagant persons who are not possessed of the true spirit of economy. On a certain night, one of these gentleman called on the other to transact a little business at the former's residence The host lighted a candle that they might examine some papers, but im-mediately blew it out again when they were through, leaving both sitting in the dark.

Why did you blow out the candle asked the caller. Oh, we can talk in the dark as well as in the light, and it saves the candle, was the reply.

They continued their conversation for a short time, when the host heard some mysterions sounds coming from the direction of the allers's chair, and inquired what his friend was doing.

"Why," said his friend, it's dark "It does not require experience to in here, and no one can see me, so I pay an honest debt; it only needs the thought I would take off my trousers in here, and no one can see me, so I to save the wear on them."

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE-COOPER UNION-A GREAT FLAG SCHEME.

(Regular Correspondent.) New York, Oct. 14th 1890. The fifty-ninth annual exhibition of the American Institute began last week in the big exposition building at 63rd street and Third avenue. For the coming two months this big fair will be one of the most popular attractions of the Metropos, representing, as it does to a large extent, our progress in the industrial arts and mechanical ingenuity. To enumerate in this space its many interesting and in structive sights is obviously impossible. Suffice it to say that the exhibition aims to be national in its nature, and is a business enterprise George Bancroft, the historian, of the first magnitude. Cooper's warehouse at Henderson, N C., is an institution which belongs to the history of the State. No warehouse, perhaps, in the South has ever acquired such popularity among such we believe its patronage will be larger than ever before.

Mr. Cooper has inaugurated a system in the management of his mammoth warehouse by which everything goes on as smoothly as clock work. In the basement from 50 to 75 hands are employed which side? assorting tobacco as it comes in from the farmers' barns. A great many planters don't have room or time to assort their crops during the curing season, so they haul or ship their crops right to Cooper's warehouse. Here it is carefully assorted and repacked or placed on the ware-house floor for sale. In the business department of this big warehouse can be seen tobacco from almost every county in the Eastern half of the Sanford Express. "The moving principle of protection has just been shown in Georgia by the action of the farmers of that State in deciding to hereafter use cotton bagging to the exclusion of jute, though the former sells for twelve and one half cents, while jute is only eight cents per yard. The music with which the bells of Heaven explanation of the change is that farmers propose to make up the exra expense to them for the cost of bagging by increase demand for this cotton, which the general use of the cotton bagging will create. It is calculated that if the demand for the cotton bagging should increase the price of cotton only a half a cent, that small rise would more than counter-balance the difference of the cost between jute and cotton. The jute at eight, for the purpose of decreasing the supply of cotton and raising its price. That is all the real interest he has in the matter. Mills are built to manufacture cotton bagging, instead of jute because this planter will not use the latter. The bagging of these mills is all sold to the planter so long as it is to his in-terest to buy it. When it is not to his interest, he can go back to jute at eight cents per yard. He has a choice between two kinds of bagging. In this particular commodity he has been able to force competition, but the price of his cotton is still fixed in the free trade market of Liverpool. He produces a great surplus beyond the demand of Amer-

How is it with the American manufacturer? He sells all his goods in the American market with but tittle competition from abroad. If there is competition at home and a surplus is created, he goes into a trust and kills off the competition. He shuts down his mills and turns his men into the streets, and produces no more than protection forces the consumers to pay him a good price for. His business grows immense and discourages the growth of smaller American market or perish in the nother to a believers's ear it is the name of Jesus. Jesus! it is the name which moves the harps of Heaven to melody. Jesus! the life of all our joys. If there be one name more charming, more precious than another it is this name. It is woven into the very warp and woof of our psalmody. Many of our hymns begin with it, music with which the bells of Heaven ring; a song in a word; an ocean for comprehension, although a drop for brevity; a matchless oratorio in the syllables; a gathering up of the hallelujahs of eternity in five letters. Yes, it is the name that calms all fear, when death's dark shadows draweth near, for it doth speak of Heaven and rest, and sweetest bliss amid the blest.

cost between jute and cotton. The analogy between this and the argument for protection is evident. The protectionist says to the farmer: "Help me to create a demand at home for what you produce and you will help yourself, for you will increase the consumption of your product and obviously increase the competition for it. That means a rise in prices."—Protective Organ.

The arguments of the Georgia cotton planter and the protectionist are not analogous. The Georgia planter covers his bale with cotton bagging at twelve and one-half cents instead of jute at eight, for the purpose of de-
