"Doctor, what is the matter with me?" The man who had ealled together all the experts that he could collect to pass on his condition, raised himself up anxiously as the spokesman came in.

That able practitioner smiled sadly and shook his head. "It is too soon yet to determine,"

he replied. "Too soon!" exclaimed the patient. "Too soon! Why, my dear sir, you doctors have been examining me with instruments and pounding me now for the last fortyeight hours. Aren't you in a position to name my trouble?"

"Not quite yet, sir," was the

"Well, when can I know?" The able doctor rested his glass es reflectively upon the bed-post. "My dear sir," he replied, "just as soon as we can get together nod determine the matter by a two

The notes given out by the bright stars are stated to be far less pure and clear.

The Poet Laureate's Salary.

It may be some comfort to laboring men to know that the salar, of the poet laurente of England is $300 · year and a hogshead of wine thrown in. Of course this represents only a fractional part of what Mr. Alfred Austin really earns. Still it is all that he gets for being poet laurente to the Eng. h speaking race. This salary is without any prospect of a raise, al hough it was increased to its present munificent proportions when Lord Tennyson died. Some time before his death it was decided to increase his salary to that amount, but the government did not decide till after his death. Thus the present poet laureate came in for the rise intended for Lord Tennyson.
