GREENVILLE NORTH CAROLINA TUESDAY MAR. 13 1906.

Real estate must be booming in Charlotte, as the dealers have gone on fighting over it.

If they go on piling up charges of highway robbery on that Durham negro there may be danger of convicting him.

When so many people know that a man is insane it looks like the proper thing would be to have him confined without waiting for him to kill somebody.

If Dr. Matthews is acquitted on the ground of insanity, as looks probable, he should not be given his liberty any more as he might be crazy enough to kill somebody else.

The Greensboro Industrial News tells of a 4-year-old boy employed in a furniture factory there, whose hand was badly mangled by being caught in a machine around which he was at work. It strikes us as a boy that age should be at home with his mother and not employed anywhere, much less around machinery.

Another correspondent today discusses the recent suggestion of The Reflector of moving the county home nearer to Greenville and improving it. Every thoughtful citizen of the county ought to be interested in this matter. The home should be made creditable to a county of Pitt's prominence. The correspondent in question is willing to go in his own pocket to help make the home what it should be, and we are sure there are many other people in the county who would do likewise.

Greensboro must hurry with something else to keep in the public eye.

They have gone to fighting again over in the Philippines and Uncle Sam's expense fund will increase proportionally.

The President is losing his grip. Congress is about to go back on him on both the statehood and railroad rate bills.

The Republicans would now like to quiet it all up, but they ought to have thought of this before washing so much dirty linen in public.

North Carolina, too, seems to have turned over a new leaf and resolved to punish some murderers. Dr. Matthews was convicted in the face of the insanity plea.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From Our Regular Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., Mar. 9, 1906. Opposition to the rate bill has been latent all along and is crystallizing as the opportunity offers for the enemies of the measure to get a tangible reason for criticism.

Senator Scott of West Virginia is one of the latest to come into the open and array himself squarely against the administration measure. In a speech in the Senate this week, he took just the position that will be assumed later by a number of senators and denounced the proposed legislation as ill advised and inefficient.

He took the position that government regulation of rates was tantamount to government ownership, differing in degree but not in kind. He said that the experience of foreign governments had abundantly proved that the government could not make a rate that would meet the needs of expanding trade and commerce. And he said that a rate based on mileage alone would tend to centralize the trade of the country in a few cities that were geographically favored in their location or had the natural advantages of water location.

This last statement disclosed the radical weakness of the speakers position as it was obvious that a river or seaboard city the path to which was open to any sort of carrying competition would of necessity have the advantage of competition such as any favorably located point on the railroad ought to have. The advantage of location is obvious and inevitable if all shippers and all localities are treated on a perfectly equitable basis and the railroad, which is really the highroad of the country just as the rivers are, were thrown open to all comers on equal terms.

The Senator said that he wanted to see the railroads forced to make connections with branch and lateral lines and thus be forced to give free and equal access to all shippers to all markets. He also forced the principle of court review in any rate-making power that might be given. The address was altogether a very able argument, but it was principally interesting as indicating the lines along which amendments to the Hepburn bill are destined to be fought out.

Another effort is being made on the part of Porto Rico to secure home rule. The complaint of the islanders now is not that they are not well governed, but they fear that at some future time they might not be so well treated under the form of government that now exists in the island. The resident commissioner, Mr. Larringa, has appealed directly to the President to exert his influence with Congress to extend absolute autonomy to the island. This of course the President is not likely to do. He has enough on his hands with Congress at the present session without pulling on a fight over Porto Rico, which is doing very well as it is.

Time is drawing close for a vote on the live stock transportation bill which is drawn with a view to increasing the sufferings of all cattle transported to the market in the United States. There is being a strong fight made against the bill by the Humane Societies and an appeal is being circulated to each congressman to vote against the measure when it comes up on the floor of the House. The bill in question proposes to extend the time that cattle may be transported without food or water from 28 to 36 hours. The conditions are bad enough now, but the proposed measure for some reason has the support of the secretary of agriculture and would make the lot of the cattle fully eight hours worse.

THE RALSTON

HEALTH SHOE.

Shoemaking has been developed on wooden feet—lasts—which know no "pinch" nor discomfort. The soft, yielding, tender flesh of a live foot has thus been compelled to inhabit an unnatural, ill-fitting and oftentimes unsanitary shoe. To be foot-tired is the average man's daily inheritance. And how much ill health can be traced to an ill-fitting shoe. When the foot is improperly shod the delight of walking is gone, and man's best friend—his feet—refuse to him the comfort he should enjoy. A perfect walking shoe, one that keeps the foot always in good condition—can such be had?

This question brought into being the Ralston Health Shoe. Recognizing that the foot sole is a curve made by the twenty-six bones which form the heel, ball and toes (a fact strangely ignored by shoemakers in the past) we evolved a construction method which places prime importance in last modeling.

Ralston lasts are anatomically correct and differ from all other makes. Ralston construction is a principal combining comfort, ease, service, style, fit and commonsense—real quality in footwear, built into the shoes from the very start.

Shoes made on Ralston lasts are nature shoes, conforming to the natural foot, and because they need no "breaking-in" they never lose that charm and style for which Ralston shoes are famous—and which cannot be obtained in other methods of manufacture.

In the selection of materials for Ralston shoes the World's best makers are searched and every bit of upper, top, or sole leather, linings and fittings must pass the Ralston test before acceptance. The same idea with our employees. Each and all must do his or her part according to the Ralston ten, whether it is cutting, stitching, lasting, making or finishing. The result is a shoe unrivaled in pleasure giving, service and guarding in comfort and style. Thus our immense factory with its army of happy, skillful employees is dedicated to the people of the foot salvation from cramped and unsuitable footwear. The Ralston Shoe cannot be duplicated at the price asked—$4.00—and as good a shoe is not made or sold for less.

The Latest Oxford, College Pattern, Extra large Eyeslets, Very Stylish. If you want something distinctive, individual, come and see this shoe.

I have been cured of my little girl's very bad case of eczema, which covered a great part of her body. She has not had a symptom of it for six years. Respectfully,

THE CITY OF JALAPA.
An Old Fashioned Place, Curious Even in Mexico.
Jalapa means a "place of water and sands." It was an Indian town at the time of the conquest, and because of its position on what for a long while was the main road between Vera Cruz and the City of Mexico it early became a place of importance. After the establishment of the republic it was made the capital of the state of Vera Cruz. Between the years 1720 and 1777 a great animosity was held here for the sale of goods brought for years by the fleet from Cadiz, whence it derived the name of Jalapa de la Perla, frequently applied to the city in documents of the eighteenth century.

The city is famous throughout Mexico for the exceeding beauty of its women and of its situation. From these, its pleasing characteristics, arise the saying that Jalapa is a part of heaven let down to earth, and the proverb, "Las Jalapenas son halagenas" (beholding alluring are the women of Jalapa). A less pleasing characteristic, its frequent days of mist and rain, at once the cause of and a very serious drawback upon the enjoyment of its green loveliness, has given rise to yet another saying in Jalapa. During these melancholy days the Jalapeno, muffled in his serape and smoking, dismally mutters, "Ave Maria purisima, pue venga el sol!" (Holy Virgin, let the sun shine!)

The city is a curious, old-fashioned place—curious even in Mexico, where everything seems odd to the tourist—with narrow, crooked streets, lined with tile roofed houses, whose pitched roofs project their eaves so far that they seem to cover the sidewalks like a shed, and pending from these are spouts to carry the rainfall from the roof to the center of the roadway. The city has a perfect drainage system, based upon and indeed consisting almost entirely of the facilities so lavishly bestowed by nature in the shape of rain and grade. The streets slope gently from the sidewalk on either side to the center of the roadway, thus practically forming high troughs or gutters, and all dirt or refuse matter is immediately washed beyond the city limits by the rains, which fall, at least for a short time, almost daily throughout the entire year. This accounts for the scrupulously clean appearance of the city, which impresses those who have visited other Mexican cities not so advantageously located in respect to drainage as Jalapa. So abrupt is the descent of the streets down the side of the hill that no attempt is made to use carts or carriages for transportation of goods or persons. A tramway which provides a means of transportation to Coatepec runs through a portion of the main thoroughfare and is the only wheeled vehicle to be found within the city limits, and even this requires six mules to haul it up the steep grades from the railroad station to the hotels. All merchandise is carried from one part of the city to another by cargadores and pack mules, which latter are utilized extensively and almost to the exclusion of the burro and the horse.

A walk through the streets of the city is replete by many interesting sights. The lavanderas, or washerwomen, pursue their vocation in the public streets at large basins or troughs, which have been placed in all parts of the city for their accommodation. The churches are open all through the day, and at all hours worshippers may be found.—"Modern Mexico."

Why the Greid Came Back.
A boy who had been working in a baker shop for some time was just about to finish his trade. One night when the boss was gone he broke the marble slab he milled his loaves on, so he went to the marble yard to secure another, but could not find one, says Lippincott's Magazine. On his way back he passed a graveyard, and as it was very dark he jumped over and pulled up a small headstone about the right size and took it back and finished his job. The next day after the bread had been delivered nearly all of it was sent back. The baker looked at it and broke several loaves open, but found nothing wrong. Then he happened to turn one of the loaves over and found on the underside of every loaf the inscription: "Here lies the body of Mrs. —, Born A. D. 1822; died A. D. 1740."

An Easy Way.
A Swede and an Irishman were out walking together when a storm came up. The rain fell violently. They took refuge under a tree. The tree for about fifteen minutes made a good refuge; then it began to leak. The cold raindrops began to fall down the Irishman's neck, and he began to complain. "Oh, never mind," said the Swede; "there are plenty of trees. As soon as this one is wet through we'll go to another."
