APARI PASHA.
In a little house up a by street of the American quarter, and the name of the man who has just been taken to the city of Cairo to be executed, "Who is Arabi Pasha?" If you ask you that he is dead, but the other five do not know. After the bombardment of Alexandria he was sent to exile for six months, but was allowed some years ago to return to his native city. It was only after a week's hard feasting that I discovered, through a native journalist, the whereabouts of the great man. Even now, in his seventh year, he is a big man; in his prime he must have been an immense white hair and beard; a broad, thoughtful forehead, lighted by the Turkish tarboosh; kindly eyes, dimmed a little by age, but lighting up wonderfully when he talks about things which interest him; a straight, powerful nose, a lower lip, which must once have been hard and cruel, now softened by adversity. Though the day is warm, he wears an overcoat, and he walks heavily on a massive ebony stick.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Secondhand Mail Boxes.
The man who was spending his summer vacation in the country was looking quizzically at the mail boxes in the rural postoffice.
"I did not know this was such a large place," he said. "I thought it had a population of only about 4,000, but the mail box numbers run much higher than that, and I don't suppose every one in town rents a box either."
The postmaster peered out of his little barred window.
"I can explain that," he said. "You see, the country postoffices never get new boxes, but we have those left over when the city establishments make over their offices and get new boxes. So you see lots of country places are bound to have high numbered boxes."
"Although our numbers run over 4,000, you won't find any less than 1,000." Some other country postoffice drew the lower ones, I myself had rather got the big numbers, for it makes us seem like a bustling little city.—Washington Post.

Parks For the Future.
One of the many signs of an awakened civic intelligence in the way American communities are re-orienting the park idea and diversifying their public spaces. Within about a dozen years they have learned that there may be places where a vacant public square can be put to better use even than sodding it down in greenward. They are active in opposing the slavery of the "Keep Off the Grass" sign. They are not so keen as they were to erect statues, esplanades, terraces and ornamental fountains in their park areas. When nature has arrived at a good effect in a rocky ledge, a grove of noble trees or a rolling meadow, they are often content to let it alone.—New York Mail.

Why He Ceased Whistling.
One day as Field Marshal Wrangel and Emperor Frederick were walking in Berlin they met an apprentice boy who was whistling a lively tune, but stopped as they came nearer and doffed his cap with a pleasant smile. Wrangel was highly gratified with the civility of the lad and said to the crown prince: "There, your royal highness can see how loyal those apprentice lads are. How delighted they seem to be when they come across a member of the royal family!"
"Wrangel," said the crown prince, with a touch of merriment, "just ask the boy why he has stopped whistling."
"Here, my lad," exclaimed Wrangel. "Tell us why you ceased whistling."
"Whenever I see you," replied the boy, "I can't help laughing, and then a fellow can't whistle, you know."
"Yes," said one of the emperor's sons, who had been so busy all week sewing, you know, for my little girl. "You're so industrious, my dear," said the other, "and so ambitious to attempt so much. I'm sure I shouldn't dare. I sew so badly."
"I'm sure you underestimate your skill," returned the one with a smile like a rafter thrust. "I'm sure that gown you have on looks very well indeed." And every one within earshot knew that a score had been settled.

Such Is Life.
"It doesn't seem altogether fair," observes the man with the introspective eyes.
"What does not?" asks the man with the discouraged whiskers.
"There's old man Meehlergras's son Samuel. He wouldn't stay on the farm and become a tiller of the soil like his father. Ran away from home and studied art, then came back and painted some views of the old farm. And he got £150 for a picture of a field that his father would be glad to sell for a five pound note.—London Answers.

Cleaning White Ribbons.
"White ribbons—satin, messaline, lousine and the rest of the satiny kind—which have become soiled may be washed in tepid water in which soap has been dissolved. Stretch them out upon a board to dry—an ironing board covered with clean muslin is splendid for the purpose—pinning the ends firmly, so as to stretch the ribbon beyond the need of pressing it possible.
