Carolina Offers War Training

Chapel Hill, N. C., Jan....

Designed to give 16 and 17 year old youths facing military service an opportunity to obtain educational preparation which will be of practical benefit, the College for War Training will pen at the University of North Carcina on January 27.

The program which will last from three to eighteen months, depending on the individual, is believed to be the first of its kind to be announced by any American university since the start of the war and, as such, is attracting national attention. Qualified high and prep school seniors may enroll in the War college provided they pass a comprehensive entrance examination. Such students must be in the academic top onethird of their class, must have a minimum of 12 credits or units toward graduation, and
