activities. However, this group is a pitifully small minority when compared to the entire student body.

The purpose in building the Robert H. Wright Building was to offer to the entire student body an opportunity to follow whatever religious and social activities it desired. Indeed, the building was formerly referred to as the Social-Religious Building. In the face of that evidence, any attempt to squeeze out a social activity to substitute a so-called "curricula" phase of student life is defeating the primary purpose of the builders of the edifice.

In considering a question of this kind, there can be but one criteria for arriving at an intelligent answer. Does this act of cutting down on student recreation time do the most good for the most people? The action by the administration fails miserably to stand up under such a question. Students of this college have been deprived of their long such as "The Role of the Student established privileges to meet the convenience of a limited few. How can such an action be justified in the name of fairness?
