Concert, Rally May Clash

GREENSBORO(AP) A concert promoter says he's "leaning toward" holding a concert in the Greensboro Coliseum the same day of an anti-Ku Klux Klan march to the facility.

Lawrence Toller, promoter for the Danville, Va.-based Anew Productions, says he's considering whether or not to cancel the concert.

The Feb. 2 Mobilization Committee is planning to hold the march from downtown Greensboro to the coliseum on Feb. 2. The group was denied a parade permit Monday because City Manager Tom Osborne said Toller's option on the coliseum kept him from issuing the permit.

Toller said he'll meet today with Lucius Walker of the International Foundation for Community Organizing, one of the groups wanting to hold the rally.

A spokesman for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference says the group is considering withdrawing support for the rally because of insufficient community support.

The march was scheduled in the wake of the shooting deaths of five Communist demonstrators at a "Death to the Klan" rally last Nov. 3 in Greensboro.

In related developments:

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission has concluded that southern regional director Bobby Dozier acted "within his bounds" when he remarked that the Nov. 3 shootings sent Greensboro's race relations into a tailspin.

Rep. Richardson Preyer, D-N.C., had asked the commission to investigate the comments.

Guilford County District Attorney Michael Schlosser says he'll seek a delay in the trials of the 14 men charged in connection with the shootings. He says the postponement is needed because the FBI is in control of most of the physical evidence in the case.

Court Upholds Ruling

RALEIGH (AP)—The state Court of Appeals has upheld a ruling by a Wake County Superior Court Judge that dismissed a constitutional challenge to North Carolina's liquor-by-the-drink law.

The Court of Appeals found Tuesday that the case was properly dismissed on all grounds but one. The court found the judge erred in addressing the constitutionality of the law in ruling on the motion to dismiss.

The appeals court didn't make any finding on the 1978 law's constitutionality. The law allows communities with ABC systems to hold local referendums on mixed-drink sales.

Four persons had filed the suit last January against the state Board of Alcoholic Control, the state attorney general and others. It asked the law be declared unconstitutional.

Judge James H. Pou Bailey dismissed the case last March. He concluded the plaintiffs had no legal standing to sue in the matter. The appeals court said that to have standing, the four would have had to show that the law would invade their legally protected interests and would cause them immediate harm.

But the appeals court ruled that it was improper to decide the constitutionality of the law in ruling on a motion to dismiss.

Court Action Pending Against Former Officer In Greenville Marijuana Case

Court Action Is Scheduled

...for former city policeman

By JERRY ALLEGOOD

The following article is reprinted from the Raleigh News and Observer, Jan. 9, 1980.

Five men convicted in an attempt to sell 8,500 pounds of marijuana in Pitt County last summer have received prison terms, but action is still pending against a former Greenville police officer and four others in the case.

Superior Court Judge Henry L. Stevens III on Monday imposed fines and prison terms ranging from three months to two years on the out-of-state defendants who pleaded guilty to possessing or conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute the controlled substance.

The marijuana was seized on July 23 on property owned by Douglas H. Ross, a sergeant with the Greenville Police Department who was suspended after his arrest. Ross, who is planning to take a lie detector test, was hospitalized recently with circulatory illness, court officials said.

The five sentenced by Stevens had pleaded in Pitt County on Oct. 18.

Stevens ordered the arrest and forfeiture of $60,000 bond for a sixth defendant who had pleaded in October. Manuel A. Garcia of Miami, Fla., did not appear for sentencing.

In addition to Ross and Garcia, charges are pending against Ross's wife Marga and his sister-in-law, Louise Johnson Whitehurst of Winterville. Conspiracy charges were dismissed against two others.

Assistant District Attorney Thomas Haigwood said Ross probably would be tried within the next 30 days and Mrs. Whitehurst, who has pleaded guilty to one charge, will be sentenced later.

State, federal and local law enforcement officers arrested eight people in a raid on Ross's land near Greenville as more than 150 bales of marijuana were being moved from a rental truck to a trailer. The marijuana was valued at $3.5 million.

Ross and his wife were arrested several days after the raid. Defense attorneys have asked the court to suppress evidence gained during a search of the premises because they contend that the search was illegal.

According to a search warrant issued prior to the raid, Ross was linked to the operation by a confidential source.

The application for the warrant, prepared by SBI Agent J.M. Wilson, said federal and state officers had observed other defendants in the case on Ross's property before the raid.

The search warrant said a special agent of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration identified one of the defendants, Armando Abreu, as a principal in at least 33 separate drug investigations involving felony violations.

"The confidential source stated that Abreu is closely associated with and is receiving inside information and protection from a sergeant who is on a police force in or around Greenville and that Abreu is also associated with the wife of this officer," the application said.

The application further said that Abreu was in the Greenville area to distribute about seven tons of marijuana, most of which was stored "in a building on the premises of the police sergeant who is providing the protection." It also said agents observed Abreu and associates opening doors of a truck body or outbuilding located behind Ross's residence.

Ross's attorney, Milton C. Williamson, argued in a pretrial motion that the search was illegal because the warrant did not specify the buildings that were searched, the reliability of the source was not known and because electronic surveillance allegedly was used.

Abreu, 35, received a two-year prison term and $10,000 fine for his involvement.

Other defendants and their sentences included Daniel Lee Guinand, 23, of Homestead, Fla., a five-year split sentence with three months active and the remainder probation and $5,000 fine; James Robert Bohanon, 42, of Camelsville, Ky., a five-year split sentence with four months active and the remainder probation and $5,000 fine.

Computer Aids Paper

Today's issue of The East Carolinian is the first to be produced with the aid of a new computer system which makes us the "best equipped college newspaper in the state," in the words of Senior Editor Marc Barnes.

The $30,000 system has made the typewriter almost obsolete in The East Carolinian newsroom. In the past, staff employees had to type their stories before giving them to the typesetter to be processed into print. With the new system, stories may be typed directly into video display screens and edited electronically before going into the typesetting process, which is now done automatically by a central computer.

According to Barnes, The East Carolinian's video display terminals are state-of-the-art print media tools which are becoming indispensable to modern newspapers. The new system was specifically designed for use by small newspapers, although systems like it are used by all major newspapers in North Carolina, said Barnes.

The equipment consists of three video display terminals, a wire recorder that encodes Associated Press copy for later retrieval, and a central computer which processes the stories into reproducible print.

Manufactured by the Compugraphic Corp. of Decatur, Ga., the equipment represents a major step upward from the previous production facilities which were intended for educational use in high school graphic arts classes.

Barnes noted that the funds for the purchase of the system will be drawn exclusively from The East Carolinian's advertising revenues. The $30,000 price tag also included training sessions for the newspaper's staff and all installation charges.

The capabilities of the new equipment have also made possible certain changes in the paper's layout style, notably in the design of the paper's name, in a more readable typeface, and in the flexibility in choosing type sizes and styles.

Barnes said that there were also other advantages in the equipment. "This newspaper exists for basically two reasons—first of all to inform the students and faculty of the university. Its other function is to teach students the essential skills of journalism. Systems like the one we are using now are becoming practically indispensable to modern commercial newspapers, and students who learn their way around this kind of equipment will have an advantage over those who do not."

Scanner Will Aid Diagnoses

By DOUG HINSON
ECU Medical Writer

A fast, safe and painless procedure that provides detailed diagnostic information and reduces the need for exploratory surgery is now available at Pitt County Memorial Hospital in conjunction with the East Carolina School of Medicine.

The computed tomographic scanner, or CT scanner, is a sophisticated device which produces cross-sectional images of the body to detect diseases, tumors, blood vessel damage and other disorders.

The CT scanner not only produces detailed pictures of organs but replaces many painful and risky diagnostic methods previously used, according to Dr. William Trought, ECU clinical assistant professor of radiology.

"Ordinary x-rays give us only two-dimensional view and do not reproduce subtle variations in tissue density," said Trought. In some cases, a lesion may be hidden or overshadowed by another structure."

"But with a CT scanner, we're able to get marvelously precise pictures of internal organs. They are highly accurate and efficient, and the noninvasive technique makes it more attractive to patients because there is no pain."

One risky and painful test which the CT scanner eliminates in some cases is the pneumoencephalogram, and x-ray method in which cerebral spinal fluid is replaced with air to provide contrast density.

The procedure, which employs principles from physics, mathematics and computer science, takes less than an hour to perform, with the actual scanning process lasting only five to 10 seconds. A circular scanner that sends and detects x-ray beams revolves around the body and takes multiple "looks" at the anatomy from 270 angles.

The information is transmitted to a computer which integrates the data and reproduces it as a picture or "slice" of the area. The image is usually very clear.

"It's very much like getting a picture from Mars," said Trought. "The computer is the key. It determines a math formula, then solves it and puts it on a screen similar to television."

According to Trought, the CT scanner is particularly useful for diagnosing brain abnormalities. It can accurately identify and locate tumors, blood clots and birth defects. Such accuracy is important because symptoms of some diseases are the same, but treatment is different.

Trought noted that because of its fast efficiency, the scanner is extremely valuable in emergencies.

The CT scanner may pay off in other ways too. "I think it's important for ECU and Pitt Hospital to have the newest and most modern radiologic methods available," Trought said.

ECU Professor Dies During Holidays

An associate professor in political science at ECU died of leukemia over the holidays.

Dr. Oral E. Parks, 48, was a member of the ECU staff for the past 11 years.

Dr. Parks died in Duke University Hospital on December 30. His death came as a shock to his colleagues.

"His death was very tragic and very sudden. He had been suffering from leukemia for five years, but no one in the department knew about it," said Dr. Tinsley E. Yarborough, chairman of the political science department.

"I suppose he wanted to keep it within the family at least in part so that people wouldn't treat him any differently," said Yarborough.

Dr. Parks was born in Draw, Texas and earned his bachelor's degree from Texas Technological College in 1957. A Fulbright scholar in the Philippines during 1959-60, Dr. Parks went on to receive his master's in 1960 and his doctorate in 1972 from Michigan State University.

Dr. Parks joined the staff here in 1968 as an assistant professor. His specialty was in party systems and political methodology.

An officer in the North Carolina Political Science Association, Dr. Parks also served as editor of that organization's journal. He was also a member of the American Political Science Association.

Dr. Parks is survived by his wife, Helen, and a son. A memorial service was held on January 2 in Greenville.

As was his bequest, Dr. Parks' body was cremated and his ashes spread over the Teton Mountains, a part of the Rockies which ranges between Idaho and Wyoming.

ECU Manuscript Collection Receives Family Letters

The personal papers of the only father and son to serve as lieutenant governors of North Carolina have been donated to the East Carolina Manuscript Collection in J.Y. Joyner Library.

H. Pat Taylor Jr., a prominent Wadesboro attorney, served as lieutenant governor from 1969 until 1973. His father Hoyt Patrick Taylor Sr. held the office from 1949 until 1953. ECU has received more than 20,000 items of personal correspondence, speeches, reports, political campaign files, clippings, photographs and other materials reflecting the public affairs of the Taylors between 1918 and 1973.

According to Manuscript Collection Director Don Lennon, "The Taylor papers constitute two extremely important state political collections. ECU is extremely fortunate to receive these significant research materials which will be invaluable to anyone studying state government and state politics between 1936 and 1973."

Taylor Sr. (1890-1964) served as an officer with the 371st Infantry in France during World War I. As a result of personal heroism in combat, he was awarded the Purple Heart, the Silver Star and a citaserved in the General Assembly for a decade before being elected Speaker of the House in 1965.

He was elected lieutenant governor in 1968, 20 years after his father. Robert W. Scott, whose father had been governor during Taylor Sr.'s term, was elected governor in 1968.

The collections will be properly arranged and described for research purposes. They will be housed with other manuscript holdings in Joyner Library. The ECU Manuscript Collection is open to the public Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

tion from General John J. Pershing. Taylor later served in the N.C. General Assembly (1937-1944) and held prominent positions such as legislative assistant to the governor (1945) and chairman of the Senate Finance (1939) and Appropriations (1945) committees.

Taylor Jr. was a Marine Corps officer before and during the Korean War. He subsequently practiced law in Wadesboro and

NAACP Charges Brutality

GREENVILLE(AP)—The Pitt County branch of the NAACP has written state officials to complain about the Pitt County Sheriff's Department's "blatant police brutality" against blacks.

D.D. Garrett, president of the Pitt County branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, complained about the problem in letters to state community relations officials, the news media and Sheriff Ralph Tyson.

Garrett cited one incident in which he said a sheriff's deputy struck Julius Wright of Greenville in the mouth with a flashlight without provocation. Garrett said the deputy was questioning Wright in connection with a stolen property investigation.

Tyson declined to discuss the incident because of pending court actions.

Wright was charged with possession of stolen property Nov. 29, but the charge was voluntarily dismissed Dec. 13. After a warrant was issued Nov. 29, Wright was convicted of resisting arrest.

The warrant said Deputy Lee Pascasio was trying to arrest Wright for possession of stolen property but that he resisted "by swinging a wooden chair at the officer."

Wright was sentenced to two years on probation but he has appealed the conviction to Superior Court.

Garrett also said that Stanley Daniels was injured by officers seeking information. Daniels is scheduled to go on trial in Pitt County Superior Court on charges of breaking and entering and receiving stolen goods.

April-- A Medical Miracle

April Murphy, 6, of Marshfield, MA., made medical history even before she was born. She was the first infant treated for a rare vitamin metabolism defect while still in her mother's womb. After the death of April's older sister, from the same brain-damaging disorder, methylmalonic acidemia (MMA), March of Dimes-supported researchers found a clue that ultimately saved April's life. While pregnant, her mother was given massive doses of vitamin B-12 which reached April through the placenta. The result—a healthy baby.

WITH FLYING COLORS, April passed her physical. She's healthy, thanks to prenatal detection and treatment.

UM-UM GOOD. April was five before tasting chocolate, steak, or every child's favorite—peanut butter.

BRAIN-DAMAGE AVERTED, April is growing well. She is in first grade at South River School in Marshfield.

A Maturing Work Force Comes Of Age

By ROBERT REINHOLD

Reprinted from The New York Times National Economic Survey, Jan. 6, 1980.

Odd as it may seem after so many years of having to cope with unemployment, the next decade is likely to mark the beginning of a major labor shortage for American business and industry. Because of a continuing decline in the birth rate that began with the "birth dearth" of the 1960's, fewer people will enter the labor force in the 1980's than did over the last 20 years when the post-war baby boom generation matured and swelled the ranks of workers.

With fewer young people going to work, the American labor force will increasingly be dominated by older workers, a reversal of historic trends. By 1990, according to Labor Department projections, the number of workers between 25 and 54 years of age will swell to 83 million, a 40 percent increase over the 1977 figure. This will mean that there will be a surplus of skilled older workers in the 1980's, limiting the opportunities for promotion and movement at the top end of the labor scale.

Adding to that trend will be the impact of the 1978 law that pushed the mandatory retirement age from 65 to 70 years old. Faced with the growing difficulty of trying to live on fixed incomes in the age of steep inflation, many older workers may be forced to stay on the job longer, further clogging a system already top-heavy with older workers.

The decline in the number of young people entering the job market will presumably open up more opportunities for women and minority groups. It will also create a shortage of workers to take lesser-skilled jobs, the kind that young people 16 to 24 years of age usually help to fill. This could spur further immigration, both legal and illegal, from Latin America and the Caribbean.

It could also solve the problem of teen-age unemployment better than the most massive of government programs. But the birth rate of blacks has not fallen nearly as fast as that of whites, meaning that the number of black teen-agers looking for work will not decrease substantially for many years. And even if suitable jobs are available, black youngsters often do not live where the jobs are likely to be.

This period of change for the American workforce in the 1980's will follow a decade in which even more radical upheavals took place: Women, freed from the burden of large families and impelled by the rising cost of living, took paying jobs in massive numbers in the 1970's. Additionally, blacks and other members of minority groups made greater strides in obtaining skilled well-paying jobs than in any comparable period.

Women took more than 60 percent of the increased number of jobs generated over the decade, and today half of all women over 16 years old hold jobs. In addition, about six of every 10 women with school-age children and four of every 10 with preschool youngsters are working. Women now bring in on an average about 30 percent of family income where there are two working spouses. This has helped considerably in the fight to maintain standards of living in the face of inflation.

The huge infusion of women helped raise the nation's total labor pool to more than 100 million in May 1978, a 20 percent rate of growth in a decade during which the population grew by only about 8 percent. Unfortunately, there were not enough jobs for everyone in the 1970's and unemployment became a chronic problem.

Moreover, new female workers, who entered the market relatively unskilled, were competing for the same kinds of jobs normally taken by minority-group teenagers. Thus the unemployment rate among black male teenagers grew from 28 percent in 1970 to about 40 percent today. This occurred even as the proportion of employed black adults working in white-collar, professional and managerial jobs increased markedly, suggesting that the gap between successful and unsuccessful blacks is widening.

Most experts do not expect women to continue entering the labor market at the high rate of the 1970's. But Ralph E. Smith of the Urban Institute, estimated that 52 million women will be working or looking for jobs by 1990, about 10 million more than are doing so today. Currently, more than 40 percent of the American workforce is female, and that share is projected to rise to 45 percent by 1990. However, a major question for the coming decade will be whether women can break out of the traditional "female" jobs in which they still predominate and whether they will reach pay parity with males when today their salaries average only 60 percent that of men.

Russians Threaten Veto

UNITED NATIONS (AP)—The United States was successful in its drive to arraign the Soviet Union before the General Assembly for its military intervention in Afghanistan, but the Russians announced that they would veto any resolution in the Security Council calling for sanctions against Iran.

With Security Council action on Afghanistan blocked by the Soviet veto, the council adopted a resolution Wednesday night asking for an emergency session of the 152-nation assembly to deal with the situation in the Central Asian nation.

Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim announced that the assembly, which ended its regular 1979 session on Monday, would meet at 3 p.m. EST today.

The emergency session is expected to last several days, and the debate is expected to be a replay of the debate in the Security Council last weekend, with most of the members attacking the Soviet action in Afghanistan and the Soviet Union and its communist allies defending it.

The United States and its allies were reported confident that they could muster the two-thirds majority necessary for adoption of the resolution vetoed by the Soviet Union in the Security Council. The big-power veto does not apply in the assembly, but adoption of the resolution will have only moral and propaganda value since the assembly has no power to order punitive action.

The resolution deplored the armed intervention in Afghanistan and called for the withdrawal of all foreign forces.

The opponents of the Soviet action took their case to the General Assembly under a procedure established in 1950 to deal with situations in which a veto prevented the Security Council from taking action to preserve or restore peace.

The resolution asking for the assembly session was submitted by the Philippines and Mexico, and the vote in the 15-nation council was 12-2, with the Soviet Union and East Germany voting no and Zambia abstaining.

The council vote Monday on the resolution calling for withdrawal of the Soviet troops had been 13-2, with Zambia voting with the majority. But that was an issue of substance on which the negative Soviet vote counted as a veto, while the resolution to go to the General Assembly was a procedural matter exempt from the veto of the five permanent council members: the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China.

Meanwhile, Tass, the official Soviet news agency, announced that U.S. plans to get the Security Council to vote sanctions against Iran were doomed to defeat.

"As regards the USSR, it will not tolerate any interference from the outside in the internal affairs of Iran, and will not allow the United States to impose a decision to apply economic sanctions against it," said Tass.

Scott's Funds Trail Hunt's

RALEIGH (AP)—Former Gov. Bob Scott's campaign for governor has raised approximately one-twelfth the amount of Gov. Jim Hunt's re-election campaign, but Scott says he's just started money-raising efforts.

In its annual financial report filed with the state Elections Board on Tuesday, Scott's committee showed it has collected $57,103.11 in contributions and has spent more than $31,000.

Hunt's re-election campaign reported raising $707,937.99.

Scott's report shows that more than 21 persons have contributed $1,000 or more each to the campaign. The list of contributions includes $1,500 from Scott's wife, Jessie Rae, and contributions of $250 to $300 from each of his four children.

The former governor said Monday he hopes to raise $250,000 before the May 6 Democratic primary.

"Jim Hunt has the ability to raise large amounts of money simply because he is the incumbent," said Julian Mann, Scott's campaign manager. "We've only held one fund-raiser to date, and most of the money has come unsolicited from old Scott allies."

Scott said he is confident enough money can be raised to "put on a credible campaign."

"He (Scott) has said we could run a viable campaign on $250,000, and I think we can," said Bryant Haskins, Scott's press secretary. "We will just have to spend our money wisely."

Hunt's report showed his committee has spent $238,000 and has put $450,000 in high interest-bearing savings certificates.

Republican state Sen. I. Beverly Lake Jr. of Raleigh reported raising $65,375.50 for his gubernatorial campaign. Another candidate for governor, Republican Charles J. Carstens Jr., reported that he has received $50 in contributions.

This Newspaper's Opinion

The Angry Bear

Rarely has a world started out a new year, and a new decade with so many things wrong in the world. American hostages are still being held in the American embassy in Tehran, and the situation in Afghanistan worsens before our eyes each night on the six o'clock news.

For the first time since 1945, Soviet troops, which some estimates place as high as 100,000 blatantly walked across the Afghan borders to install a puppet ruler into power. It was the first time since World War II that Soviet armies have been used to dictate the Kremlin's will on a foreign country that was not previously under Soviet control.

Immediately, President Carter accused Soviet Communist Party Chief Leonid Brezhnev of making the false statement that Afghan leaders had invited the Russian army into the country. In turn, the Soviet state controlled press establishment said that Carter's comments were "bellicose and wicked."

Carter then went into a week of consultation with his top aides. An unprecedented Carter administration move saw the American diplomat recalled from Moscow — a move that some saw as a growing indication of a new American toughness in that troubled region of the world.

President Carter, in one of his toughest speeches yet on national television decide to cancel remaining Soviet fishing privileges and cultural exchanges brought strong protest from the Soviets.

Yet, what other options did Carter have? He could not have launched a massive military attack, because this would have only started World War III. He could not have ordered troops into the bordering countries of Pakistan and Iran, because of how his actions would have been seen by the Soviets.

The Solutions

The only solution we can force is for the United States to hold off, if possible, further Soviet intervention in the Middle East until we can develop technology to free ourselves of foreign oil. We have for too long been at the mercy of foreign powers who hold the pursestrings to our economy — pursestrings which, if pulled too hard, will wreck the economy of the United States, Japan, and the countries of eastern Europe.

Invasion Of Privacy

It has long been a common practice at ECU for fraternities, sororities, student government and numerous other student organizations to ask the administration to verify whether their members have a minimum grade point average of 2.0.

Normally, a list of names or I.D. numbers are submitted with the question: Do these people have a 2.0 or does this person have a 2.0?

That is why Congress passed the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974.

The major thrust of this law is to prevent administrators from revealing a student's grades to a third party.

More often than not the unsuspecting student does not even know that his grade point average has been somewhat revealed.

The law is very specific in stating that administrators and faculty members may have access to a students records without the students prior written consent, but that's as far as it goes.

Administrators and faculty members have no right whatsoever to reveal a student's grade point average to a third party, and such revelations are in violation of United States law.

The ECU administration should give serious thought to revising some of its procedures in answering inquiries from student organizations about how high or low an individual student's grades are.

Any student who wishes to seek a position or an elected office that requires a 2.0 could simply sign a release form. This would protect the unsuspecting student from having his grades revealed with out his consent.

Invasion of privacy is a grave constitutional concern, and the right to privacy must be protected at all costs.

Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Jack Anderson and Joe Spear

WASHINGTON—In this holiday season of charity and giving, professional panhandlers enjoy a harvest of handouts with their hard luck stories. We're generally a soft touch for most of them. But we'll have to draw the line in this column on our nominee for professional panhandler of the year.

The well-heeled winner of the award is former President Richard M. Nixon who has his hand out for more dollars from the U.S. Treasury to subsidize his life in political exile. Since resigning from the White House in disgrace, the unindicted Watergate conspirator has luxuriated at his San Clemente estate on the shores of the Pacific with the government picking up the tab for his office expenses. It's been costing the taxpayers about $300,000 a year.

With the wanderlust of a deposed shah, Nixon has decided to abandon the sunny clime of California and move to New York City. As a former chief executive, the pardon-ed ex-president is entitled to collect eight dollars a square foot for office space to house a staff, seclude himself in writing self-serving memoirs and make phone calls to still sympathetic adherents.

Nixon has discovered that office rentals in Manhattan amount to approximately $30 a foot. He wants to be compensated for his more expensive high-rise Ivory Tower. Additionally, he's trying to put the bite on the government for moving his operations for the West Coast.

Members of Congress are quietly getting ready to rebuff Nixon's panhandling approach, especially since he's been reluctant to pay up to $66,000 he owes the government for fancy improvements to the San Clemente property he sold for a substantial profit.

Nixon's solicitation for more public largesse is now being weighed at the White House. It will be up to Jimmy Carter whether to request Nixon's extra funds form Congress in the budget he sends to the Hill in January.

Expensive Protection

The unwanted shah of Iran is also bemoaning his high cost of living now that he no longer sits on a Peacock Throne padded with his country's oil millions. Members of his family confide that the shah may have to sell some of his real estate holdings to maintain his luxurious life style in Panama or elsewhere if he moves on.

On of his new expenses is for a security guard which used to be taken care of by the Iranian government. The rabid revolutionary regime that supplanted him has threatened openly to assassinate him. The warning took on a deadly serious aspect when the shah's nephew was gunned down recently in Paris by boastful agents of the Ayatollah Khomeini.

To protect his life, the shah has hired Jack O'Connor's Protection service, a high-priced agency run by a former New York police detective. During the shah's stay at the New York Sloan-Kettering Hospital Center, two of O'Connor's heavily armed men stood guard outside the convalescent monarch's 17th floor medical suite. His private quarters were shielded by specially installed steel doors and bullet-proof windows.

Another six guards, half of them O'Connor's agents were positioned around the clock inside the shah's room itself. All wore bullet-proof vests and they kept handy a bomb blanket in the event someone tried to kill their client with a bomb or a grenade.

When the shah slipped out of this country to Panama, eight of O'Connor's most trusted operatives accompanied him to the island sanctuary. They were instructed to be ready to travel anywhere in the world at a moment's notice. They coordinated their security precautions with the Panamanian government which provided additional help.

O'Connor's protective blanket is now extended to all members of the shah's family. Among those being shielded are a son at Williams College in Massachusetts, a daughter at a Connecticut boarding school and three other children at private New York schools.

Judicial Jollity

There wasn't much ho-ho-hoing at the Christmas party tossed this year by the nine brethren of the Supreme Court for their law clerks and other underlings. The press corps which covers the Court was excluded and only a few select outside guests were invited.

We've learned however that there was precious little jollity in the wake of our disclosures of the hair-pulling that goes on among the justices behind the velvet red curtain that separates the public chamber and their private quarters.

The fare for the festive occasion was gallons of spiked punch, catered gourmet appetizers and fancy pastries. The invitations to the affair gave the impression that the justices had paid for the christmas goodies out of their own pockets and a court spokesman insisted to us this was so.

The employees, however, were aware that the party was funded at least partially by profits from vending machines located around the building. Most of the nickels, dimes and quarters in the machines come from snack-hungry employees and tourist visitors.

Watch On Waste

A University of Wisconsin researcher has found a Shangri-la project in the Andes of Ecuador at the expense of the American taxpayer. The National Science Foundation last year coughed up $30,000 for Prof. Richard Mazess to study why the natives in the mountains managed to live so long. Many of the people claimed to have been born more than 100 years ago.

Mazess discovered from his on-the-spot research that the Ecuadorian elders were fibbing about their ages. Church records showed they were younger than they claimed.

Nonetheless the federal agency doled out an additional $26,000 for Mazess to pursue the Fountain of Youth in the Andes.

New Year's Resolution

By LARRY POPELKA

It's a new year, and time for us all to sit down and draw up this year's crop of New Year's resolutions.

New Year's resolutions have always played an important role at my house. Every New Year's eve we'd all gather 'round our kitchen table and Sis and I would resolve to get better grades in school, Mom and Dad would vow to go on a diet, and we'd all throw in a few more noble thoughts, like resolving to have more fun.

Of course, none of it ever made any difference, because New Year's resolutions — like politicians' promises — are never meant to be kept. My Mom and Dad weigh no less now than they did 20 years ago. Sis and I never did any better in school. And none of us really had that much more fun.

The nice thing about New Year's resolutions is that they sound impressive when you make them, but two or three weeks later you can forget all about them and no one will ever give a hoot. That's the whole point.

So in the spirit of the new year I've come up with a few "meaningful" resolutions for 1980. Since this is also a new decade it's a particularly important year for resolutions. Therefore, I've been working extra hard on these. If you're having a hard time with your own resolutions, feel free to take any of mine and adopt them as your own.

Nixon Named Panhandler Of The Year

Carter Fights Illiteracy

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Carter administration, grappling with the stubborn youth unemployment problem, is mounting a frontal assault on functional illiteracy and bankrolling the campaign with a $50 percent boost in spending.

Informed administration sources said President Carter will unveil a new approach to youth joblessness Thursday based on attacking functional illiteracy—the inability to read, write or do simple math. Coupled with this will be a broad effort to bring the nation's schools into a battle that has been waged largely through Labor Department job training programs.

The proposal will contain the only major new program and one of the largest spending increases in the budget Carter submits to Congress Jan. 28.

The proposal results from a nine-month study of the $4-billion-a-year youth employment programs by a task force under the direction of Vice President Walter F. Mondale.

The sources, who requested anonymity, said the president will call for additional spending of $1.2 billion in fiscal 1981 and $2 billion in fiscal 1982. If Congress approves, that will bring total spending to $6 billion in the 12 months beginning Oct. 1, 1981.

An unstated side benefit for a president challenged for renomination is that the proposal may shore up his support among labor, urban, civil rights and other Democratic Party constituencies.

The target is four million youths, aged 14 to 21, who face serious employment problems in the 1980s. Half have already dropped out of school and are unemployed; of those, 40 percent are minorities. The other two million are still in school, but in the poorest districts and in the bottom third of their class. Carter's planners hope the new program will reach three million of these youths.

Administration sources said the task force made three discoveries about the seemingly intractable problem of joblessness among the young: it will be worse in the 1980s for some youths and some communities; employers say their biggest problem is finding youths who have mastered the three R's; and they base their hiring of such youths mostly on a record of reliability in a previous job.

The shift of the economy from blue- to white-collar jobs has been dramatic. In 1950, 34 percent of all jobs were open to workers without a high school diploma. By 1970, only 9 percent were, but the high school dropout rate has remained at 13 percent.

"Once there were more such jobs than dropouts; now there are increasingly more dropouts than jobs for them," one source said.

The problem for business was illustrated by a telephone company that told the task force it has to interview 12 to 15 persons to find one qualified to take orders for telephones.

The task force found the heavy emphasis on previous job experience left youths who had never had a job in a Catch-22 situation, but almost as bad off were those who had worked only in government-financed job programs.

As a result, the Carter program will add a Basic Employability-Skills Training program in the new Department of Education. Of the new money, Education will get $900 million in 1981 and $1 billion in 1982; Labor will get the remainder.

Carter's planners hope the Education segment will reach one million youths in junior highs and high schools through these five components:

"It will finance the teaching of basic reading, writing and mathematical skills. The task force found that federal aid to education has left a big gap between the pre-school Head Start and elementary school Title I programs, on the one hand, and a series of college aid programs, on the other.

"It will provide money for school systems to hire employment counselors to set up part-time school, part-time work programs. The task force found such programs are attractive to youths and can provide private job experience.

"It will pay for school systems to develop classes and information about local labor markets. 'Everybody's out there telling kids to become key punch operators, but those jobs will decline in the 1980s,' one source said. 'We hope schools will bring in local personnel managers to talk about their needs.'

"It will pay for training teachers in literacy instruction. 'More than one teacher told us something like, 'I'm a biology teacher and I don't know how to teach reading,'"

"It will provide money to expand and integrate existing vocational education throughout local school districts. 'Public vocational education has a good track record with kids and private industry,' a source said.

At the Labor Department, three youth programs will be combined into one, giving local officials more flexibility.

A Jangle In Your Pocket, A Tiger In Your Tank

WINSTON-SALEM (AP)—A pocket full of silver will buy a lot of gas at a Leon Cooke's Shell station.

Cooke is offering $18 worth of gas for $1 in silver coins as long as they're real silver. That means coins minted in or before 1964.

The offer started last Saturday, and Cooke originally pumped $15 worth of gas for $1 in coins. But he increased the amount to stay in line with the rising price of silver.

In silver markets in New York Tuesday, the precious metal closed at $31.75 an ounce. A dollar's worth of silver coins weighs about three-quarters of an ounce.

Cooke flashed a grin when he was asked how the offer was going and quickly produced two silver dollars from his pocket.

"We collected $20 worth of silver dimes on Monday," he said. " ... People like a good deal."

Cooke said he had been thinking about trading gas for silver for quite a while but had held back until silver prices began to rise. He admits to making "a little extra profit" on the deal.

For the most part, he said, customers have reacted with surprise when they learn of the offer. Some tell him they are going home to get their silver; others seem a little skeptical, he said.

But Cooke said he thinks more people will begin bartering metals such as gold and silver for gas and other items.

"With the economy the way it is, this could develop into a trend in this country," he said.

Student Union Films Committee Plays The Hits

By KAREN WENDT
Features Editor

The Student Union Films Committee has released their schedule of films for the spring semester, and the list looks incredibly good. The committee will be offering a variety of films to students with the schedule showing a multitude of films varying from love stories to science fiction.

The first film of the semester will be "Superman" which will be shown at 7:00 and 9:15 on Friday and Saturday nights. The film stars Christopher Reeve, Margot Kidder, Marlon Brando, Gene Hackman, Glen Ford, and Jackie Cooper.

The films brings to life a 'hero' that we have all known since childhood realistically and with remarkable special effects. As they said in the commercials, "you'll believe a man can fly". A film well worth going to, as anyone who has seen it can tell you.

Another of the films which will appear in January is a box office blockbuster, "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

Called "one of the most spectacular movies ever made," the film employs an incredible variety of special effects to achieve an audience belief that there are creatures from another world who have the ability to come to this planet and communicate with human beings.

As Frank Rich of Time magazine stated "At the end of 'Close Encounters' the audience is sitting with him (Steven Spielberg, Director) in the lap of the universe, ready and waiting for new magic to fall into their lives." This film will be appearing on January 18 and 19, also at 7:00 and 9:15.

The last film of January will be "Clockwork Orange" directed by Stanley Kubrick and starring Malcom McDowell, Patrick Magee and Adrienne Corri.

Kubrick, who was also the creator of "Dr. Strangelove" and "2001: A Space Odyssey" helped to create what Rex Reed of the New York Sunday News called "one of the few perfect movies I have seen in my lifetime."

A chilling film with futuristic photography and settings.

Also in the month of January the films, "Hearts and Minds", "The Forgotten American", and a Detective Double Feature, showing "Death on the Nile" and "Murder by Decree" will be shown.

In February the committee will be showing the films "Hooper," "Halloween," "Last Tango in Paris," "Blazing Saddles," and "Dracula."

Special attractions will include "Days of Heaven", the Unquiet Deaths of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, "Beware of the Holy Whore" and a sixtie double feature featuring "Carnal Knowledge" and "Getting Straight."

March will highlight the films "Godfather" and "Love at First Bite".

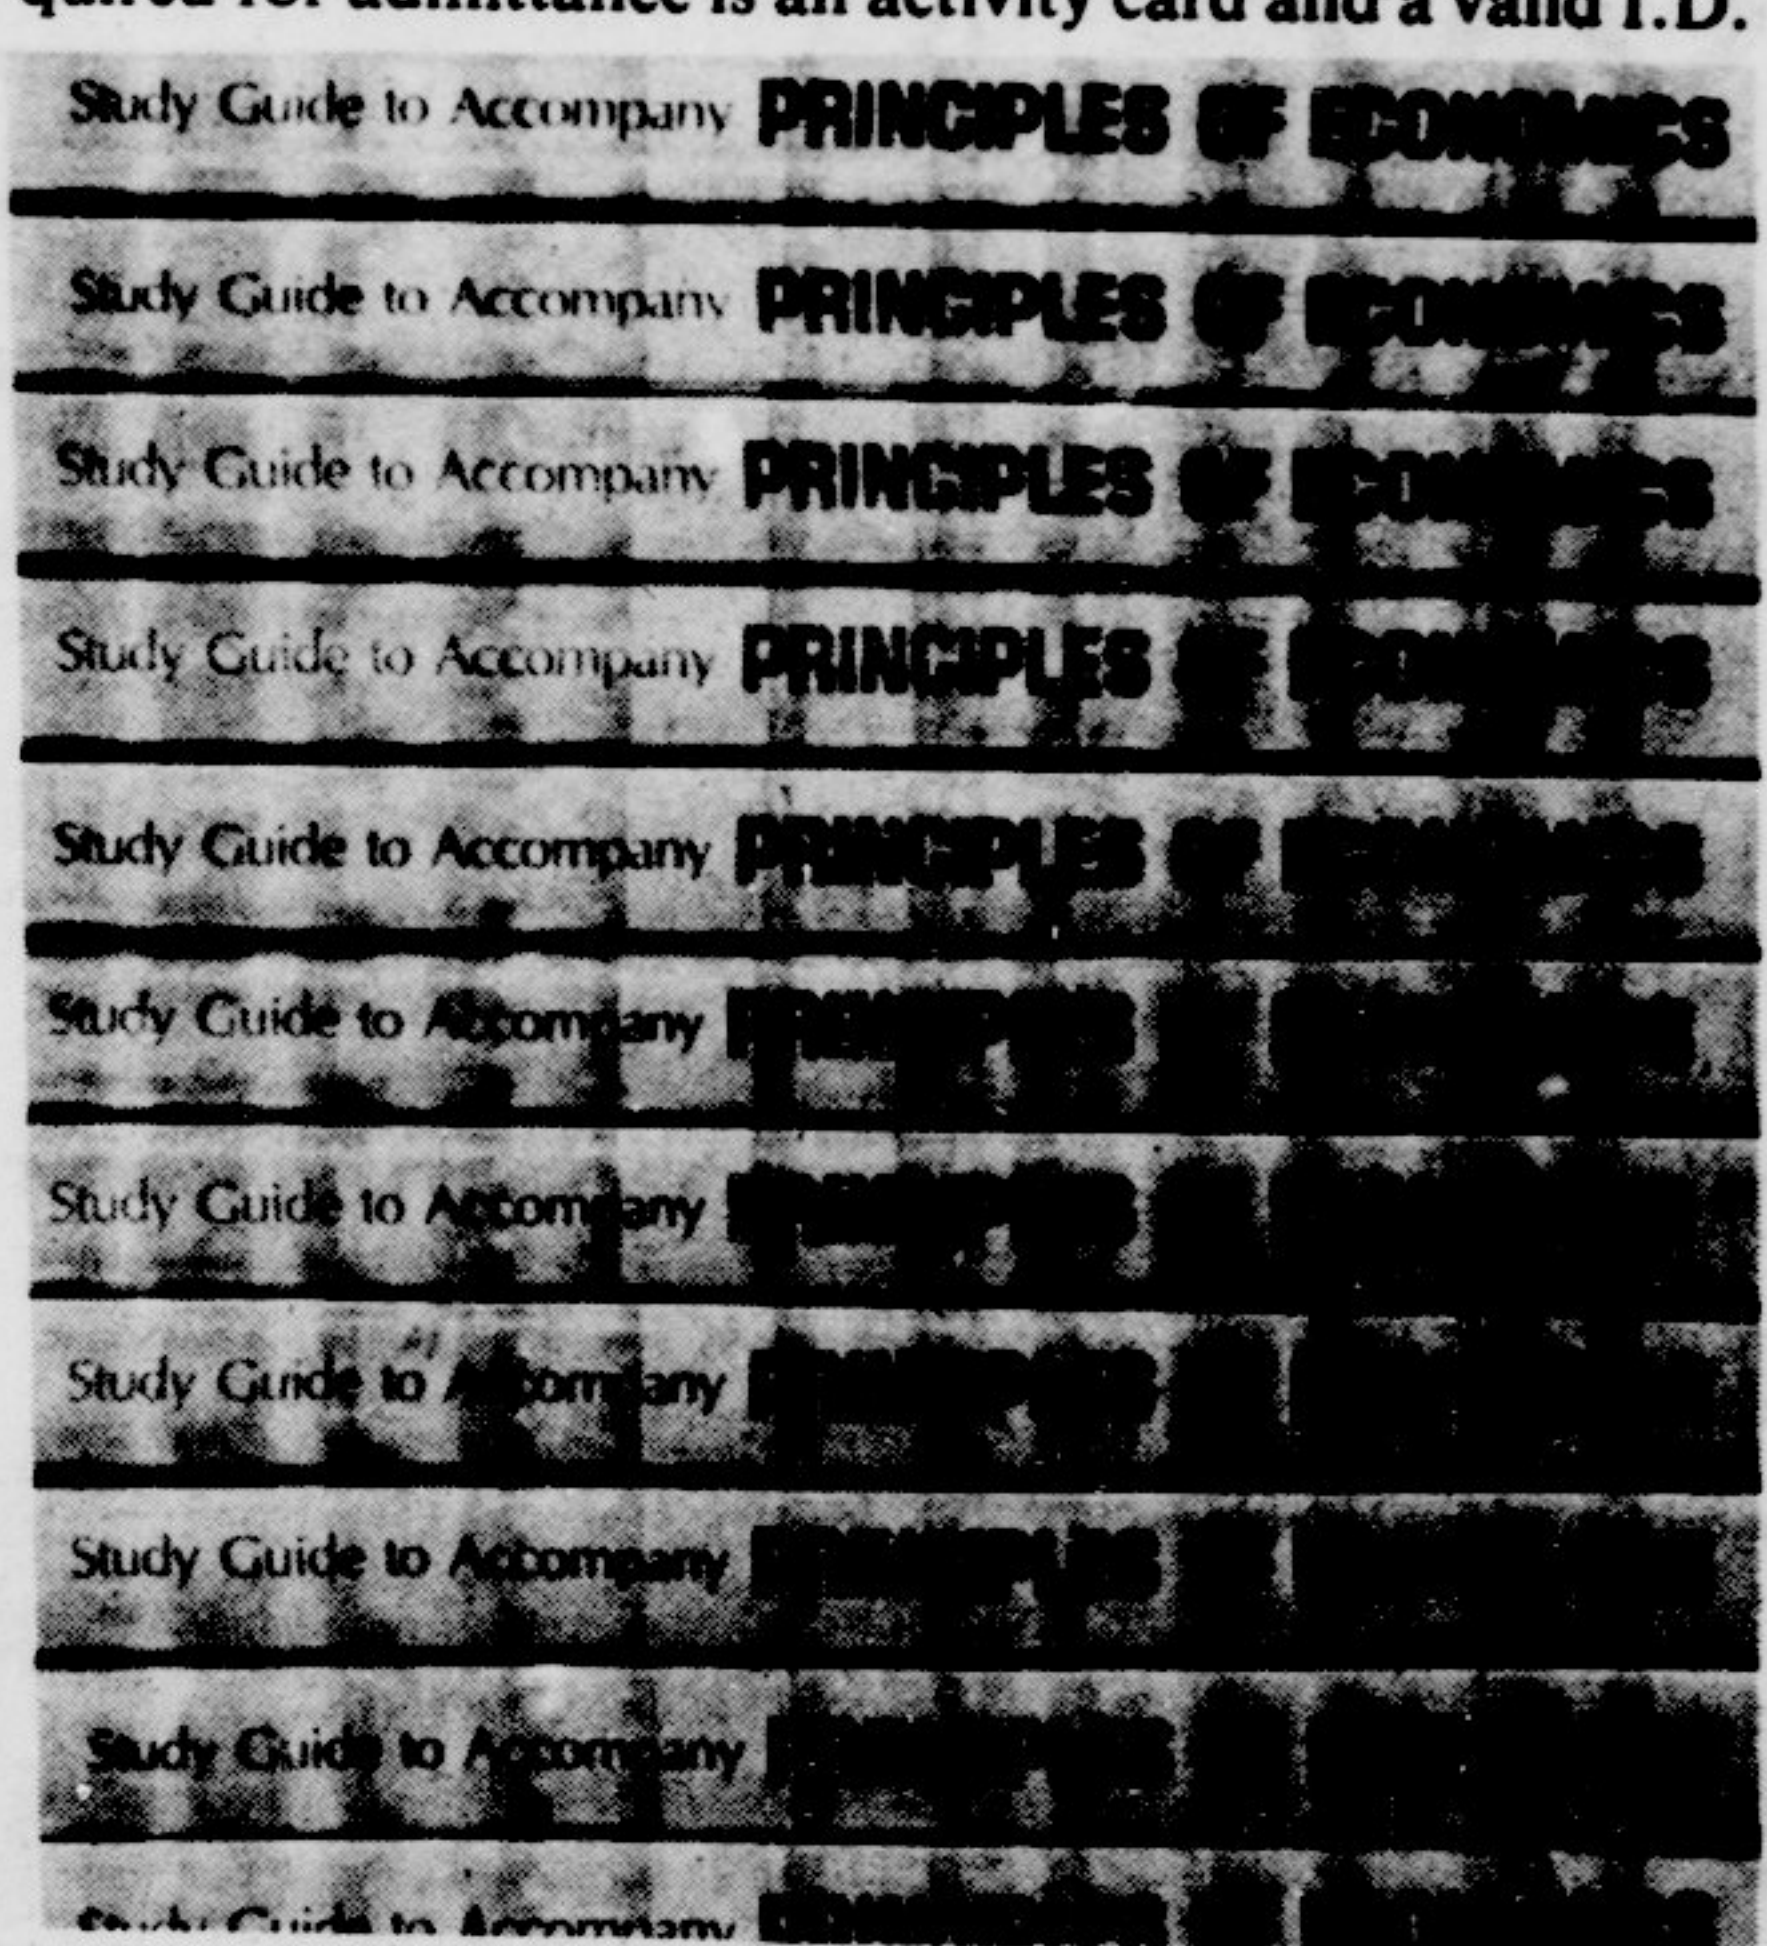

Special features will include "Citizen Kane," a Shakespeare double feature including "Henry V" and "The Taming of the Shrew" and also the film "Day for Night".

April will spotlight the films "Animal House," which is expected to be a tremendous crowd pleaser, "Gone with the Wind," and "Monty Python and the Holy Grail".

Special feature will include a concert double feature which is expected to draw a large crowd featuring Rod Stewart and the Rolling Stones, and "The Diary of Adam and Eve".

For exam week they will be showing "Fantastic Planet."

The films are free to most students and all that is required for admittance is an activity card and a valid I.D.

It's Just Another New Year's Eve

By Jay Stone
Staff Writer

I rolled back into Greenville on a fine sunny Monday, December 31 to the biting throb of "Physical Graffiti." Ah, Rock-n-Roll won't you show me the way.

I did not particularly surprise me to discover that Greenville was almost entirely deserted—utterly devoid of its student population. "For God's sake!" I thought, "What a dismal prospect. New Years Eve in this ghost town."

I proceeded to unload all of the Christmas presents I had from the car and stashed them in my house, and then to rush over the a neighbors house and exchange Christmas tales and wine. New Years Eve was almost upon us.

We had come to the realization that the only intelligent thing to do was to see this thing through together, and besides she knew of a couple of parties and by combining forces we could double our options.

It was upon that optimistic note that I left to get a celebratory bottle of champagne. As I turned into the "Pirate Pit Stop" I spied an ominous message. "Roxy New Year's Eve Party—Monday, Dec. 31."

Seeing it glaring out at the passers by like it was, I knew that it would certainly attract a crowd. I would probably be among them.

By and by both myself and my New Year's Eve comrade began to achieve that fine high mental plateau of intoxication that one seldom attains more than once in an evening. I took it as a sign. An intelligence far more evolved than mine was obviously trying to tell me something. I downed my last glass of champagne and left to get dressed for the first party that my friend and I had slated for the evening.

It is difficult to fully grasp all of the ramifications of getting dressed for a New Year's celebration until one is confronted with it. I felt that it would be necessary for my clothes to convey my message. But my message was obscure even to me. I wanted to communicate a general theme of optimism for the decade ahead and perhaps, score, yes, even loathing for the one we would be leaving behind. Finally my mind spoke to me and it told me what it wanted me to do.

It was with such a relief to have the dilemma of my wardrobe cleared out of the way that I rushed back to my friends house only to discover that she was facing the same issue with only moderate success.

Finally after some deliberation, she seemed satisfied with her reflection and we left for a small private sort of gathering at the home of an acquaintance.

When we arrived we discovered our contemporaries sitting in a loose half circle sipping gin fizzes and bobbing rhythmically to some manner of heathen background music. Out of nowhere paraphernalia materialized and hemp incense filled the air. The conversation became patently abstract, but we were all following it—if for no other reason than to see where it would lead. My friend however was becoming restless in an obvious way and that was our cue to wind it up and leave, or perhaps take wing would be a better terminology here. Anyway we bid our farewells and proceeded to the house of Omens where I had been told we could find some amusement.

We knocked on the door in eager anticipation. After a few minutes a handsome man with a mustache and a long kaftan answered the door and made a sign that seemed to beckon for us to come in. As soon as we walked through the door my friend and I knew we had come to a strange place.

In the center of the room was a steaming jacuzzi with a lot of nude people splashing around in it. On one side of the room was a beautiful woman clad in a diaphanous robe. She looked at me and winked, while at the same time our congenial host in the kaftan led my companion to the jacuzzi. We seemed to me sim-

Earth to Enterprise...Earth to Enterprise...Scotty, beam me up. There is no intelligent life among critics on this planet.

It is a sad commentary on the cinematic arts when a movie as grand as "Star Trek" is panned almost universally for all the wrong reasons. "Star Trek" is one of the most intelligent and entertaining movies in its genre and one of the most significant films of our lifetime.

The problem may be that each endeavor is expected to live up to the criteria established by its predecessors. Why can't a film be judged in terms of its own value? "Star Trek" suffers from endless associations with "Star Wars."

Obviously, not being totally objective is my big flaw, but "Star Trek" is not just another space fantasy movie. It is a homecoming! "Star Trek" is not a cult; it is a religion. The trekkies have made their pilgrimage, have met with their apostles aboard the Enterprise and have emerged fulfilled.

Perhaps the finest moment in the movie comes when Capt. James T. Kirk once again greets the love of his life—the Enterprise. His expression of delight is only matched by the glee of the viewers.

The criticisms are many and often reflect a lack of understanding of the part of the critics. The movie is overindulgent. In an effort to go for the big bucks of "Star Wars," the motion picture industry forced their cheap thrills technology on Gene Roddenberry. The movie could have been produced on half the budget but so could most of the production from Hollywood!

The motion picture was made mainly for children; thus over-

Welcome Back Sucker

Oh the joys of moving back into the dorms.

Everyone should be coming back to campus today, if they are not already here, and what do we have to look forward to?

Well there are the joys of drop-add. Waiting in line to get inside a building to wait in line for a little longer to find out that the class that will fit into your schedule closed out two people before you and the only one left is underwater basketweaving. Ah the joys of college.

Then there is the first day of class when all of the professors put the fear of God into all of the unsuspecting freshmen and transfer students. Not by all means fair, but effective for about the first half of the semester.

Then there is buying books. More fun for all of you folks who like to stand in line, but with an added plus: you can spend money too. How much joy can one person take in a day (or two, or three, or four).

By this time the first of the semester letters to home is about due. "Dear Mom and Dad, How are you. Please send money. Your loving son/daughter. The next joy comes when you get the answer. NO.

But seriously there are some things to look forward to in the coming semester. I just can't think of any of them right now. 'But after all tomorrow is another day'.

Album Review — Top Albums Of 1979 According To Critic

By Pat Minges
Features Writer

It just seems the thing to do. Each year critics seem compelled to thrust down a suspecting public's throat their own selection of the best of everything for the preceding year. In their ignorance, this act is usually performed before the year is out and often their choices are premature. Before feelings of inadequacy overwhelm me, I would like to inflict me selections upon you, just to cajol you.

Let's call these awards The Jukes, after a notorious family known for their corruptness and stupidity. Maybe if we revolt against such egomania, these critics would go out and get a real job.

Eve Seen Through Bleary Eyes

patico with each other and knew that we would stay here for a while.

Two hours later we emerged from the house of omens, our karma very much intact and progressing splendidly. My friend and I exchanged a warm hug. We were allies against an indifferent world and we had received an omen together.

We had no other recourse under the circumstances, but to proceed to the Roxy New Year's Eve party.

After quickly dispensing with the five dollar cover charge we became immersed within the dark, smoky bowls of the Twin Rinks Skating facility.

Strange people in aluminum foil masks forged about uninhibited, exercising wreckless abandon as if it were a yoga asana.

At the stroke of midnight everybody hugged and kissed everybody and there was some general partying and merriment. At some point my friend and I managed to wish each other a happy New Year after which we lost track of each other.

I left and on my departure I looked skyward at the moon. It hung in the sky seeming detached from the concerns of mortal men yet inextricably linked to them. Behind me someone screamed something profane and yet something profound "Happy F----- New Year and may the 80's be a hell of a lot more interesting and dramatic than the 70's."

Star Trek Is Not Star Wars

phases of a point was necessary at times. What lags into monotony for most adults is appealing to the intellectual facilities of a youngster.

The movie was stimulating both intellectually and philosophically. What a Time critic called boring "metaphysical meandering" seemed to me interesting dialogue about technological and human values.

In one moronic comparison to "Star Wars," critics have decried the lack of a sinister evil being like those which terrified us in "Star Wars" and "Alien." Who needs it? The old good versus evil theme is infinitely more shopworn than the "Star Trek" premise.

The tenet behind "Star Trek" is more intelligent, that of the forces of good attempting to overcome that which they do not understand. Is that not the ultimate goal of all scientific, religious and academic pursuit?

The evil in life greets us everyday. Darth Vader was the most popular character in "Star Wars." Are these the positive human values we would like our children exposed to?

There is one thing that has consistently disgusted me about Hollywood's attempts to portray characters from other worlds. Are we such egotists that we expect alien creatures to be humanoids? Spielberg's creature in "Close Encounters" looked like an infant with a thyroid problem. "Alien's" monster resembled Jimmy Carter in leather drag, and Darth Vader let a cloak and mask girth his humanity. "Star Trek" presents a creature so vast and complex that it is almost beyond man's capacity for understanding; yet it was created by man. The alien in "Star Trek" is both innovative and attractive and deals with the aforementioned problem very well. Persis Khimbas sure don't look like no alien.

The critics wailed about the absence of big battle scenes in "Star Trek" as well. Must we have violence to be entertained? If these guys want violence, we'll send them to see "Dawn of the Dead"; perhaps that will satiate their desires. They would probably never ask for violence again. "Star Trek" leaves the battle scenes at home, and I applaud them for it. Hopefully it is the dawn of a new day.

MUSE Concert Better Than Woodstock

By PAT MINGES
Features Writer

Never before has there been anything like it. The Monterey Pop Festival wasn't. Woodstock may have been a lot of things, but it really wasn't. Altamont certainly wasn't. George Harrison's Concert for Bangladesh was really the closest thing ever to it. What it was, was a concert — the Musicians United to Save Energy concert, held in Madison Square Garden from September 19-23 last year. Never in the history of modern music has an event procured such a sparkling galaxy of influential musicians.

Yet never has there been such a severe threat to the well being of humanity. The menace of nuclear proliferation is perhaps the greatest of all social evils; it represents the possible elimination of our society for the maximization of corporate profits. It poses the threat of death to hundreds of workers involved with the nuclear industry and the chance of genetic abnormalities for their offspring.

The numbers in the loss category are insignificant when compared to the tremendous financial gains associated with the power industry. These are the same guys who are destroying the economy and well being of the United States through their manipulation of the oil industry, the same ones who are forging the Third World War. The Iranians are not mad at the people of the United States; they are mad at the corporations who have lobbied the government into support of what Amnesty International described as "one of the most violent regimes in the history of mankind" and possessing "the worst record on human rights in the world." It is not the United States who should be brought to trial but the corporations. We must stop them, before they stop us. Perhaps the fight against the nuclear industry is the first spark of Karl Marx's predicted proletariat revolution.

If the anti-nuke protest is the spark, then MUSE is the kindling. The struggling artists of the '60s have bonded together to take their commitments to the streets, and the politically and socially motivated youths of the '70s will no longer just protest. As the Doobie Brothers put it, "You, telling me the things you're gonna do for me ... Well, I ain't blind, and I don't like what I think I see ... Takin' it to the streets." The musicians and artists of MUSE are united to give our children's children a chance to enjoy the beauty of our world, troubled as it may be. They deserve it.

The concert at Madison Square Garden was a gathering of the most impressive artists of the decade. When I first saw the promotion for the concert in the Village Voice, I was astounded and delighted at the array of stars and tried to get tickets, but they were sold out within 24 hours. I chanced to see a benefit concert for the Palmetto Alliance in South Carolina last spring featuring Jackson Browne, David Lyndley, and John Sebastian in an all acoustic concert. It was more than just a concert, it was an event of truly social significance.

The MUSE concert featured The Doobies, Jackson Browne, Crosby, Stills and Nash, Bruce Springsteen and The E. Street Band, James Taylor, Carly Simon, Graham Nash, Bonnie Raitt, Tom Petty and The Heartbreakers, Raydio, Nicolette Larson, Poco, Chaka Kahn, Jesse Colin Young, Ry Cooder, John Hall, Gil Scott Heron, Sweet Honey In The Rock, and a host of studio musicians and technicians. The proceeds of the concert and those of the upcoming motion picture go toward the fight against the nuclear armageddon.

The concert has now been released in the Bread and Roses format of three albums, packed together in one of the most valuable production efforts ever released. Along with the albums comes an enlightening 16-page booklet on the MUSE organization, the concert and, most of all, on the nuclear threat. It also features a mindful of superb photographs and short essays from the stars themselves. It is the best deal that has ever come out, and all of the proceeds go to a non-nuclear future.

There is not a bad song on the album, and it has many positively brilliant moments, but the biggest triumph of the concert was none other than the Boss himself, Bruce Springsteen. He certainly asks a lot of questions for someone from New Jersey! The critics were not overwhelmed with the concert, but they all sang praises of the mystic from Asbury Park. His rocking rendition of a Mitch Ryder medley included on the No Nukes album is the finest point of the album and shows that Springsteen was far from an overnight sensation. He is the most dominant influence to emerge from the corporate rock decade of the '70s. Bruce and Tom Petty are the future of traditional rock 'n' roll.

There are many other fine moments on the album. Perhaps the finest single cut on the album is John and Johanna Hall's "Power" featuring The Doobies and James Taylor. It is a dynamic tune that perhaps best sums up the concepts behind the album. Almost everyone joins in and the song's strength will bring tears to your eyes ... it does to these old cynical eyes, at least!

Jackson Browne is the person who seemed to possess the material which seemed to best fit the scenario of this endeavor. His "Before The Deluge" has become the them song of the anti-nuke movement because of its poignant lyricism and powerful presence. His new song "Crow On The Cradle," heretofore unreleased, shows that Jackson is the top songwriter to emerge from the last decade. It is a frightening tune. David Lyndley's violin is at it's searing best, making one weak at the knees.

The Pirates tra

Martin Top ECU Signee

By CHARLES CHANDLER
Sports Editor

In announcing the signings of twelve high school players a few days ago, East Carolina head football coach Ed Emory said he was "glad to have them on our side."

"We have a good cross section by positions," noted Emory, "and I'm sure they'll all go on to successful careers."

Heading the group of the early Pirate signees is running back James Martin of Evergreen. The 5-11, 200-pounder rushed for over 2,000 yards last fall in leading West Columbus High School to its third straight league championship.

Martin gained 1,702 yards during the regular season and eclipsed the 2,000 barrier in his teams' two playoff contests. He also led the team in scoring, with an amazing 30 touchdowns to his credit.

Among the other top prospects signed by the Pirates is nose guard Tony Smith of Laurinburg, who was included on a number of lists naming the top prospects in the state as named by the media.

Emory, who came to the Pirates after this season from Georgia Tech, also lured two top prospects from the Peach State to Greenville.

Defensive ends Jeff Autry of Covington, Ga. and Derrick Strickland of Atlanta, Ga. both have earned recognition from several major colleges.

Also among the early Pirate recruits is kicker Ted King of local J.H. Rose High School.

Though recruiting has been first and foremost on Emory's mind, he has also been busy putting together a coaching staff. The new staff, though still incomplete, includes three coaches who have served in similar capacities at East Carolina before.

Holdovers from last year under Pat Dye include Frank Orgel, recently named defensive coordinator, and Henry Trevathan, a longtime ECU aide who will handle the wide receivers.

Returning to the Pirate fold is Wright Anderson, named offensive coordinator by Emory. Anderson was an assistant at ECU under Dye three years ago before leaving to take a similar post at the University of Illinois. Anderson was among the coaches who put in the wishbone during Dye's first season at the Pirate helm six years ago.

Other recently named Pirate assistants include Jim Gudger, who will handle the offensive line. Gudger comes to ECU from Lenoir Rhyne. Jim Holland will coach the outside linebackers. Holland was an assistant at Clemson while Emory was there and was most recently the head coach at Garringer High School in Charlotte.

The new defensive line coach is Rob Sanders. The one-time head coach at Fayetteville's Douglas Byrd High most recently served with Emory as an assistant at Georgia Tech.

Ex-UNC defensive standout Rod Broadway and Ron West were named as part-time assistants. While at UNC, Broadway became one of the great defensive linemen in Tar Heel history.

Expected to be named to the Pirate staff this week is former William and Mary assistant Steve Schanil. Also mentioned as a possible future staff member is Tommy Bowden, son of Florida State coach Bobby Bowden. The younger Bowden is also under consideration at several other colleges seeking assistants, including the University of New Mexico.

Rams To Become "New Jets"?

Remember Super Bowl III when Joe Namath and the New York Jets of the upstart American Football League upset the powerhouse Baltimore Colts of the established NFL?

If you do, then keep it in mind as Super Bowl XIV approaches. It is possible that some similarities could show up.

The "super" matchup this year, featuring the powerful Pittsburgh Steelers and the much less potent Los Angeles Rams, has many of the same ingredients that the Jet-Colt matchup had.

One of the teams is from a conference that is much less powerful than the conference of its opponent. The National Football Conference, of which the Rams are members, rates far below the American Football Conference in nearly every category. The Steelers, of course, are members of the AFC.

The 1968 Colts, 16-7 losers to the Jets in the third Super Bowl, were considered one of the game's greatest teams of all time going into the contest. There was simply no way the Jets could stay in the game with them for the first half, much less the entire game.

The Colts had perhaps the game's greatest quarterback ever in Jonny Unitas and a super backfield headed by Tom Matte. The Colt receivers were great, too, with Jimmy Orr and John Mackey on hand to haul in Unitas passes.

The defense of the Colts was also hailed as great with all-pros like Roy Hilton, Bubba Smith and Mike Curtis on hand to chase away opponents' points.

The 1979 Pittsburgh Steelers are now in the position that those '68

Colts were in. They are the established power of the NFL, with both a super offense and defense. They are preparing to play a team in the Rams that is at least a ten point underdog.

Is it possible that Terry Bradshaw, Franco Harris, Lynn Swann, Jack Lambert, Joe Greene and the rest of the Steelers could become complacent and lose to the Rams?

It appears that this is the only way the Californians could win, right? Wrong.

Just as the Jets were taken lightly by the fans simply because they were not an established power does not take away from the fact that they were a great team.

Much the same can be said for the Rams. They have fought adversity all season long to end up in Pasadena for the Super Bowl.

Injuries to key players throughout the season kept the Rams from putting together a decent record, as their final 9-7 mark attests. Without those injuries Rams may well have finished with as many as 12 victories.

Despite the fact that the Steelers are the defending champions and the favorites to retain their Super Bowl title, it must be remembered that the Rams are not patsies. They are capable of playing championship-caliber football.

Super Bowl XIV should not turn out exactly like Super Bowl III simply because the Steelers of '79 could probably defeat any team that ever played the game. But, in case the Rams do pull an upset, comparisons to the feat accomplished by the Jets over a decade ago will surely come from all over.

Lady Pirates Bounce Back

By JIMMY DUPREE
Assistant Sports Editor

After a disappointing fourth-place finish in the Carolina Christmas Classic in which the Lady Pirates lost to currently 19th ranked Clemson (83-78) and then 20th ranked Mercer (81-66), East Carolina's Lady Pirates bounced back to claim a trio of victories during a tour of West Virginia and Virginia.

ECU began the northern visit with a narrow 63-59 triumph over Marshall January 3 in Huntington, W. Vir. Fran Hooks' layup on an inbound play with 5:35 before intermission gave the Lady Bucs a 25-14 lead, but the Thundering Herd cut the margin to six with :58 remaining.

All-American candidate Rosie Thompson netted a pair of free throws and a field goal and freshman Mary Denkler added a field goal to make the score 37-25 at the half.

Thompson tallied 25 points on the night to lead ECU to victory despite a second half comeback in which Marshall cut the gap to two with 9:45 left in the contest. Denkler provided 13 points and grabbed a game-high 12 rebounds.

"This is the worst win we have had to date," said ECU coach Cathy Andruzzi. "The floor was really slippery and we weren't able to run the ball as well as we would have liked to. Offensively, we weren't getting the easy shots off. We just didn't play a good fundamental game."

The next game of the series was to be more pleasant for the Pirate nomads. West Virginia University fell to ECU 67-56, but actually had the game tied with 4:59 before halftime, 21-21. The Lady Bucs managed to build to a 31-23 advantage at the half.

WVU hit the first bucket of the decisive second half, but ECU rattled off the next 13 points and cruised to victory behind Thompson's 23 points and Kathy Riley's 17. Center Marcia Girven grabbed 12 caroms to claim honors in that department.

"We knew if we played the way we did against Marshall we would be in trouble," commented Andruzzi. "When mistakes were made, we came back down the floor and made adjustments."

After building to a seemingly insurmountable 43-20 halftime edge, East Carolina appeared to be out for one of their most impressive victories, but the Gobblers had other ideas. The Pirates lead increased to as much as 25, but VPI quickly cut the gap to 64-49 on a three-point play by Sandy Berry with 6:18 left in the contest.

East Carolina struggled defensively, while VPI surged on offense, but time ran out as the before the Gobblers could deny the Lady Pirates their 11th win against three defeats.

"I think by far this is the best game we've played in a long time," said Andruzzi following the game played at the Blacksburg, Va. campus. "We ran a lot of variations on our zone defenses today—you're going to win on defense."

"We've had a tough season so far. We're really pleased with the record (11-3) so far."

Pirates Lose Thriller

TULSA, Okla.- For the East Carolina basketball team it was a case of "so close but oh so far away" last Monday night when it suffered a heartbreaking 83-82 loss to Oral Roberts.

The Pirates trailed by as many as 11 points in the first half before narrowing the margin to two at halftime, 48-46. Two free throws by George Maynor in the opening moments of the second half tied the score at 48.

ECU went on to build as much as an 11-point advantage in the final half before succumbing to a late surge by the Titans.

Trailing 82-81 with nine seconds remaining, ORU signaled for a timeout. Moments later several Titan shots fell short before Antonio Martin was fouled while going up for a rebound by ECU's George Maynor with but two seconds left in the contest.

Martin made both ends of the one-and-one situation that he faced, putting the Titans up by one and forcing Pirate coach Dave Odom to call a timeout in an attempt to set up a last-ditch attempt at victory. Odom's plan was never given a chance as the Titans stole the ensuing ECU inbound pass.

The Pirates shot an astonishing 66.7 per cent from the floor, but suffered greatly from their poor performance at the free throw line. ECU missed its final eight attempts at the charity strike, a cardinal sin when playing on the road against an established team such as the Titans.

ECU was led by swingman Herb Krusen's 23 points, most of them coming on long range bombs. Forward Herb Gray followed with 18 points. Maynor added 14 while his running mate at guard, Tony Byles, tallied 10.

Martin led the Titans, now 4-6, with his 16-point, 13-rebound performance.

The Pirates, 6-7 following the loss, travel to Baptist College for a game tonight (Thursday) before returning to Greenville for a home matchup with Atlantic Christian College on Saturday. Gametime for that contest in Minges Coliseum is 7:30 p.m.

State's Nevitt And Parzych Battle ECU's Szymanski And Miles

Duke Loses

By The Associated Press

Minutes after his 18th-ranked Clemson University basketball team pulled off its upset of the year, an 87-82 overtime decision over top-ranked and previously unbeaten Duke.

Tiger head coach Bill Foster felt a little like joking. "Ah, just another dull win," he said, directing the comment at those who had questioned his easy December home schedule. "One of these days, we're gonna have to get somebody in here who can play this game."

Duke coach Bill Foster admitted it was "one heckuva ballgame. I think it goes to show what we all have been saying all along

* there are an awfully lot of good teams in the country."

In other games Wednesday involving Atlantic Coast Conference teams, 15th-ranked North Carolina downed Wake Forest, 72-68, and Georgia Tech defeated Western Carolina, 70-60.

Duke came into the game with Clemson with a 12-0 record and a No. 1 ranking. Clemson, meanwhile, sported a 10-1 overall record and a 2-0 Atlantic Coast Conference mark. The Tigers had struggled into the Top 20 two days earlier.

A week ago, the Tigers gave Duke advance warning of their capabilities with a 93-76 upset over

ECU Grapplers Finish Third

By JIMMY DuPRE
Assistant Sports Editor

Having claimed third place in the 'Rose Bowl of wrestling,' the Wilkes Open, East Carolina's grapplers return to the friendly confines of Minges Coliseum Saturday for a 2p.m. match against perennial power West Chester State.

Seniors D.T. Joyner and Butch Revils climbed championships in their respective weight classes; only the second time ECU has captured two championships at the Wilkes tourney.

Joyner, a fifth year heavyweight who missed the 1978-79 season due to a football injury, also claimed the Most Pins Award in the tournament by pinning five opponents in as many matches.

Joyner's record now stands at 20-2 on the season, with one of his losses to the number one wrestler in the NCAA.

Revils captured the 177 pound division with superior decisions (winning by over eight points) over each of his opponents.

"Revils really dominated his weight class," said Steers.

"Joyner had very strong competition---by no means were his matches easy."

Steers also lauded Steve Goode for his third-place effort in the 177 class and Jay Dever in the 190 division.

The first year coach admits that his team "can be beaten by a well-balanced attack."

"We have to have a well-balanced attack to win," said Steers.

"They (West Chester State) have two outstanding guys in Jorge Leon in the 118 division and John Licota at 167. Both are national qualifiers."

The Pirates are at home again next Tuesday at 7:30p.m. against East Stroudsburg.

Pirate Swimmers Return

By JIMMY DuPREE
Assistant Sports Editor

After a conditioning trip to Florida during the break in classes, East Carolina's swimming team returns to action tonight at 7 p.m. at Minges Natatorium in a meet against the University of Maine.

Coach Ray Scharf points out that the members of the squad paid their own way to the 'sunshine' state, with many of them driving their own cars.

"The kids had a wonderful time and they're really ready for the season," says Scharf.

The Pirate tankmen trained in Florida from December 28 through January 6, and according to Scharf, each swam a total of about nine miles in that period.

There is good news and bad news for followers of ECU swimming, though.

Standout freshman Mike Triau and steady senior Bill Fehling have been ruled doubtful for the matchup with Maine. Both reportedly were taken sick while in Florida.

When the 'world goes to Moscow' for the summer Olympics, East Carolina could be represented.

John Tudor, who completed his East Carolina eligibility in the 1978-79 season, had already qualified for the Olympic trials in the 200 meter freestyle and has been joined by Kelly Hopkins.

Hopkins qualified in the 100m breaststroke with a time of :57.2 and in the 200m freestyle with a time of 2:06.00. Both will have to make the final Olympic team when trials are held at Austin, Texas in May.

Scharf reports that

Tudor has since beat the defending national champion with a time of 1:39.00.

To defeat Maine, the Pirates will have to overcome a 16 point deficit which will exist as soon as the competition begins. Though rich in swimming heritage, ECU has no diver—a situation which may cause the Bucs to lose meets which they could have otherwise won.

"Maine is exceptionally improved over last year," says Scharf. "Last year they shaved for us and made it a real close match. I think we've got a shot at them."

The Pirates will host South Carolina Saturday at 1 p.m., but Scharf admits his club has a limited chance at victory.

"Their men are outstanding," he said. "They beat North Carolina last year. We're very much of an underdog, but don't count us out."

"If we get beat, it won't be because of a lack of conditioning. It will simply be because the other team is better than we are."

Debbie Meyer Speaks Out

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Debbie Meyer, once the queen of the world's swimmers, has seen the best and the worst of the Olympic Games, yet feels that the great international sports spectacle should be kept free from government interference.

"Unless you have given the better part of your life to the Olympic movement, as I have, and unless you have actually lived in the Olympic Village, you shouldn't be too quick to make a decision on the boycott idea," says the dimpled heroine of the 1968 Games.

"Once you're inside the gates, there is a whole new attitude. There are smiles and handshakes and camaraderie. No matter what language you speak, there is communication."

it's eye contact.

"You forget politics. All the international boundaries are down. Ideological rivalries are forgotten. If it were left to the youth of the world, there would be no wars."

Debbie, 27, of Hayward, Calif., won three gold medals in Mexico City, where days before army troops were shooting down students in the streets. The Soviet Union had just invaded Czechoslovakia.

Four years later at Munich, as a part-time journalist, she saw the West Germans strive to erase the memory of Adolf Hitler and for 16 of the 19 days stage the most pleasant and relaxed Olympics of all time.

They festooned their streets with pastel colors instead of nationalistic flags, while security police moved through the Village like Miami Beach vacationers in their white flannels and blue blazers, not a gun or stick in sight.

Then the Arab terrorists moved in on the Israelis in an ugly adventure that left 16 people dead and almost resulted in cancellation of the Games.

"I'm glad they didn't cancel them," Debbie said. "The Israelis, most of all, would have insisted that they go on. You can't let the Games become hostage to violence. That way, you lose everything."

Debbie can speak with authority. The Olympics have taken up most of the years of her young life: first as a competitor, winner of 19 national cham-ionships and setter of 20 world records in freestyle swimming, then as a part-time coach, commentator, advisor to the U.S. Olympic Committee and now good will ambassador for one of the corporations sponsoring the U.S. Olympic effort.

The company is Life Savers, Inc.

Soon with figure skater Dorothy Hamill she will launch a multimillion dollar campaign for U.S. Olympic funds.

"We're going to dump 91,650 packages of gum drops and candy on Lake Placid for the Winter Olympic athletes," she said. The sweet tooth has no international boundaries.

Debbie was asked if she felt that nationalism in the Games should be downplayed by using only the Olympic anthem and symbols.

"I don't know," she replied. "I got goose-pimples when I stood on the victory stand and saw the American flag raised. I felt a part of the youth of America."

Tar Heels Down Wake

then fourth-ranked North Carolina.

At the half, the Tigers trailed Duke 43-41, losing a 10-point lead late in the first 20 minutes of play. The Blue Devils led by as many as five points with 12:17 left.

Forward Al Wood scored 16 points to lead 15th-ranked North Carolina to a victory, but Wood's most spectacular contribution may have been a steal he converted into a four-point play.

Wood appeared ready to dunk the ball when Wake Forest's Benny McKaig grabbed his waist. Nonetheless, Wood threw up a desperation shot that dropped through the basket.

Because it was an intentional foul, Wood received two shots and sank both.

"I have clowned around, but you never expect to hit a shot like that," Wood said afterward.

Mike O'Koren, whose steal clinched the victory, agreed. "You make a funny shot like that, it kind of hurts you (Wake Forest), mentally and on the scoreboard, too," he said.

The teams remained within four points of each other throughout most of the second half.

Tar Heel coach Dean Smith, praised Wood and O'Koren. "We wanted to get Al the ball more in the second half. Wake did a good job defensively in the first half of keeping the ball away from him," Smith said.

The Tar Heels entered the game 0-2 in the ACC and 6-3 overall. The Deacons are now 6-6 overall and 0-3 in the ACC.

Top scorers for Wake Forest included Guy Morgan with 14 points, David Morris with 12 and Will Singleton with 11.

Len Horton scored 22 points to carry Georgia Tech past Western Carolina. The Yellow Jackets held a 29-22 halftime lead and increased it to 50-35 with 6:41 left to play.

Rob Noyes added 15 points for Georgia Tech, including five in the last 1:37.

For the Catamounts, sophomore Greg Dennis led the scoring with 26 points. Freshman Ronnie Carr added 15.

Tech is now 4-8 while Western Carolina dropped to 8-4.

Forward Eddie Talley turned out a valiant 26-point effort, but it was not enough to help winless Baptist as Campbell defeated the Buccaneers 77-60 in a college basketball game Wednesday night.

Campbell, now 5-5, placed four starters in double figures, led by senior guard Fred Whitfield with 16 points.

Campbell jumped out to an early 14-4 lead with 15 left in the half and led by as much as 13 before Baptist cut the advantage to seven, 35-28, at halftime.

The Fighting Campbells maintained a comfortable lead throughout the second half and outscored Baptist 18-8 in the final three minutes to claim the victory.

The Buccaneers are 0-8.

Braves Favor Pitchers In Draft

ATLANTA (AP)—The Atlanta Braves picked four college pitchers in Tuesday's winter draft of free agent amateur baseball players.

The first pick was Joe McMurtry, a 20-year-old right-hander from Troy, Texas. The 6-foot-5, 195-pounder from McLennan Community College in Waco, Texas, was the fourth player chosen.

Atlanta's second-round choice was David Chiono, 19, a 6-foot, 170-pound right-hander from Yuba Junior College in Marysville, Calif.

The Braves picked Scott Patterson, 21, a 6-foot-2, 175-pound right-hander from Long Beach Junior College in California, and Daniel McFadden, 19, a 6-foot-3, 180-pounder from Spartanburg Methodist College in South Carolina, in the secondary phase of the draft for players who were previously drafted but never signed.

Three Georgia players were chosen in the draft, all of them in the regular phase. They were Richard Felt, a pitcher from Snellville, chosen by Montreal in the first round; Timothy Greene, a pitcher from Macon, and William Taylor, a pitcher from Boston, Ga., selected by Minnesota and Texas, respectively, in the second round.

McMurtry is "a big, strong young man with an above-average fastball," said Braves scouting director Paul Snyder. "He has a sinker and a slider. Like most young, hard throwers, control is his problem, which is to be expected."

"We'll make him an offer and try to sign him right now, but I think he'll want to play this season," said McLennan, Snyder said.

McMurtry was second on the Braves' list of preferred prospects, behind right-hander Colin McLaughlin of Connecticut, who was chosen first in the draft by Toronto.

Atlanta retains negotiation rights to McMurtry until the summer draft in June.

Johnson, Threeths Back Says DeVoe

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP)—Tennessee Basketball Coach Don DeVoe has lifted the suspensions of two of his ballplayers in time for tonight's game against Southeastern Conference rival Florida at Gainesville.

Saying they have been punished enough, DeVoe on Tuesday welcomed back to the squad his top scorer, Reggie Johnson, and reserve center Chuck Threeths.

The suspensions, for sneaking out of motel room in Memphis against coaches' orders last week, were to have run through Thursday.

"I think Reggie and Chuck have been penalized enough," DeVoe said Tuesday after meeting with the two players in his office. "Basically, I don't want to do anything that's going to hinder our chances of winning another important basketball game."

Playing without Johnson and Threeths, Tennessee upset then second-ranked Kentucky 49-47 last Saturday to emerge alone at the top of the Southeastern Conference standings with a 4-0 SEC record and a 9-3 mark overall.

One of those losses, a 70-68 defeat by 19th-ranked Indiana a week earlier, came when Johnson and Threeths were out on suspension for missing a team meal in San Diego.

"I thought we had taken care of it when we were out in California," DeVoe said. "But I believe they both understand now that they must abide by the rules. Their efforts in early morning workouts merit a return to the squad."

Johnson, a 6-foot-9 forward and the Volunteers' leading scorer with a 19.2 point average, and Threeths, a 6-foot-6 reserve forward averaging better than 5.2 points, were suspended last Thursday after an assistant coach spotted them out after hours.

As part of their punishment, they were not allowed to practice with the team two days last week and they were put on a disciplinary running program.

"Geez, they've handled it beautifully," DeVoe said. "They've been there every morning and gone through a real workout every day everything from basketball to weightlifting to sprinting."

DeVoe said he still has not decided whether

Johnson will start against Florida, who will have a new coach behind the bench for the game.

Coach John Lotz was fired after the Gators' 82-62 loss to Auburn last Saturday and assistant Ed Visscher was named as Lotz' interim replacement.

"We're looking forward to playing Tennessee like I am to meeting the Ayatollah," Visscher said.
