Local Attorney Relates Memories Of Watergate

By OTIS ROBINSON
Staff Writer

When former Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher said, "The will of the people in the United States is the greatest resource that we have," he was making an accurate statement about eastern North Carolinians. One Greenville resident, however, stands out in the crowd.

At 41, Malcolm J. Howard, who is senior partner of Howard, Vincent, & Duffus, Attorneys at Law has proven himself as a man of ability and will. He credits determination as the key to success.

"I'll never forget the first four months that I was in practice," said the attorney. "For four months I made $125. I had two children and a wife. I said to myself then, 'It is going to be a long, tough road,' but I vowed to make it."

And make it he did. Since he began in September 1974, Howard's law firm has grown to five attorneys and 12 paralegal assistants. He stated that he handles about 500 cases a year and estimated the average lawyer's fee to be between $200 and $500.

But financial freedom has not been the sole impetus for Howard. Though he is a man of will, he explained that his major desires is to do God's will. "I can earn a living for my family and myself," he said.

"But Christianity comes first. My work is second."

Howard is active in many civic and community affairs. He serves on several boards in Greenville. Among them are the Area Chamber of Commerce, the East Carolina Vocational Center, and the Kennedy Home Baptist Orphanage. He is also on the board of deacons at The Memorial Baptist Church.

The Kinston native attended The Citadel in Charleston, S.C. for one year and then was appointed to the United States Military Academy at West Point where he graduated and then spent 10 years as an army officer.

"I thoroughly enjoyed my days at West Point," he commented. "But I do love my work here. I know how the law is made and how it is interpreted. I will work on the average of 12 to 14 hours a day, six days a week."

Howard graduated from Wake Forest University School of Law in 1970. He served as Legislative Counsel to the U.S. Congress for the Secretary of Army during the period 1971-1972. He was nominated for Secretary of the Army in 1980 by the Reagan Administration.

Howard spent eight months with the Nixon Administration as Chief Assistant to Special Counsel in the Watergate Defense. "The Watergate case was a very eye-opening experience," he explained.

"It was a very intriguing process." He added that he was able to meet President Nixon personally and found him to be "a pleasant gentleman."

The attorney offered advice for students planning to enter the legal field. "I suggest that anyone interested in pursuing a career in law to develop a good English background. Whether written or spoken, you are constantly using words. Being able to communicate is essential."

Though Howard has been practicing law for only six years, he says he is content with his practice and is not looking forward to retirement. "In my judgement, the lawyer really doesn't top out until he is 65," he stated. "Remember this is a business that experience really, really counts."

Howard is married to the former Eloise McGinty, daughter of Retired Air Force Colonel Robert P. McGinty, and they have two children, Shannon Lee, 11, and Joshua, 6.

"Mr. Howard is a fine man. He is very devoted to his wife and family and he is a very determined young man," says Chief Assistant U.S. Attorney Weldon Hollowell of Edenton.

Malcolm Howard practices law in this building on the corner of Third and Cotanche Streets.

Defense Claims Garwood Not Responsible For His Actions

CAMP LEJEUNE (UPI) — A Marine Corps prosecutor told a jury of Vietnam veterans Monday Pfc. Robert R. Garwood chose to help his Viet Cong captors rather than other Americans who were dying in the "muck and mire" of a communist prison camp.

Garwood, his starched dress uniform decorated with good conduct and Vietnam service medals, showed no emotion as Maj. Werner Hellmer, the chief prosecutor, told the five-member jury the defense claim Garwood was driven insane by torture is a "smoke-screen" that should be quickly rejected.

Garwood is charged with collaboration with the enemy during almost 14 years in Vietnam. He is also accused of striking an American prisoner in a jungle POW camp.

Garwood, the only Vietnam-era serviceman ever to stand trial for his actions in a prison camp, could receive a life prison sentence if convicted by the jury of Marine Corps officers.

Hellmer urged the jury to accept the testimony of eight former POWs who said they encountered Garwood in the jungle POW camps of South Vietnam, carrying a weapon, wearing the uniform of the communists and acting as a guard and interrogator.

"They were there, gentlemen, they were there," Hellmer said. Defense attorneys did not dispute the allegations made by the former POWs. Instead they presented four medical experts who testified Garwood suffers from a severe mental disorder caused by torture, isolation and childhood poverty.

The defense claims Garwood was not responsible for his actions because of that mental illness.

But Hellmer said Garwood was responsible enough to follow certain rules.

"He could abide by the rules of the Vietnamese but he could not abide by the rules that were the laws of the United States government," Hellmer said.

He said it was the other POWs, and not Garwood, who were subjected to the deprivation and torture.

"They were down in the compounds dying, gentlemen, in the muck and the mire," Hellmer said.

Hellmer said Garwood was sane enough to do what he believed was needed for him to survive.

"It all boiled down to survival of the fittest in that compound," he said.

Hellmer also said the other POWs have described Garwood as "rational."

"He was aware of who he was, he was aware of where he was," Hellmer said.

"He was able to make a choice." Hellmer also questioned the motives of defense psychiatrists.

"The government (psychiatrists) don't intend to write any books or articles," Hellmer said. "What kind of psychiatrist would do that, gentlemen self-serving, self-serving."

Garwood disappeared near Da Nang in 1965. He surfaced in Hanoi in 1979 when he passed a note to a foreign visitor, saying he wanted to return to the U.S.

Falwell Versus Penthouse

Judge Refuses Reverend's Suit

LYNCHBURG, Va. (UPI) — A federal judge today refused to extend his order banning the distribution of Penthouse Magazine, ruling the constitutional right to free speech outweighed any damage to the Rev. Jerry Falwell that may result from an interview in the magazine's March issue.

Falwell, a broadcast evangelist and founder of Moral Majority, obtained a temporary order Friday blocking circulation of 5 million copies of the magazine that contained an interview Falwell said was obtained under false pretenses.

U.S. District Judge James C. Turk today refused to grant a preliminary injunction extending the order. He said the public interest of the approximately 10 million readers of Penthouse each month is the primary concern.

"The proper relief is to seek compensatory damages after the fact rather than prior restraint," Turk said at the close of a 90-minute hearing in a courtroom filled with spectators and reporters.

"It is a First Amendment case," Turk said later.

Lawyers for Penthouse said the magazine could lose up to $14 million if it were forced to stop distribution.

Falwell's lawyers argued the case did not involve free speech, but instead was a case of "commercial exploitation" in which the magazine used Falwell's picture and opinions to increase its circulation.

Falwell testified that he was upset because free-lance writers Andrew Duncan and Sashii Brata promised when they interviewed him last year the taped conversations would be used for a book and a London newspaper and would not be sold to "pornographic" magazines.

"There'd be no problem here if they had said 'we stole this interview,'" Rev. Falwell knew nothing about it," Falwell said.

Falwell said if his followers "are left believing that we gave such an interview, it will damage irreparably our financial support."

Falwell conferred with his lawyers after Turk's ruling and said he would not appeal.

"We won," Penthouse lawyer Roy Grutman of New York said. "Another blow for freedom has been struck. The republic is safe for a while."

Falwell, however, said he intended to pursue a $10 million damage suit filed in U.S. District Court in Roanoke against Penthouse, Brata and Duncan.

After Turk issued the temporary restraining order Friday, Penthouse publisher Bob Guccione said copies of the March issue already had been distributed to wholesalers and news agents and were to be available to the public beginning today in most areas of the country and foreign countries.

At the outset of today's hearing, Falwell's lawyer, Tom Phillips Jr., said the whole question may be moot because distribution already apparently was out of Penthouse's hands.

New Amendment Moves Up Fall Election Date

By PAUL COLLINS
News Editor

The SGA Legislature ratified an amendment Monday reducing the number of hours needed to run for president, vice president or treasurer.

The amendment lowers the number of hours from 48 to 45. According to Rules and Judiciary Chairman Russell Overman the amendment will allow more students to participate in student government.

The new provision will allow participation by students whose majors allow them to average fewer than 16 hours per semester.

According to SGA Secretary Marianne Edwards half the students on campus fall into this category.

The legislature also ratified a number of other amendments to the election rules including one that will make polling hours uniform across campus. The new hours are 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. and were extended to allow students who do not return to their dorms until after 5 p.m. to vote.

The date for fall elections was also moved up to the third Wednesday after fall classes begin.

These amendments will take effect after spring semester.

In other business, the legislature passed by acclamation a commendation to the Lady Pirates for their performances against three nationally ranked opponents last week.

President Charlie Sherrad also noted that the SGA will be running shuttle buses at four more basketball games this semester.

Buses will run from in front of White and Clement Dorms for the women's games against North Carolina and Wake Forest and for the men's games against UNC-W and Delaware State.

Sherrad said that running buses to and from the USC game Friday night was a success. "The buses were packed," he said.

The SGA also voted to accept two new members, one day student legislator and a Greene dorm representative.

ECU Placement Office Effectiveness Questioned

By CHAD BUFFKIN
Assistant News Editor

"I don't know any students who have got a job as a direct result of working with the campus placement office, however I am working with them now and I sure hope that I will be an exception. They gave me a packet of information that was useful in helping me to write a resume and get some interviews."

Statements similar to the one above are heard frequently on campus every year about this time as prospective graduates begin their frantic searches for jobs. Many seniors don't exactly know what to expect from the Career Planning and Placement Service on campus.

"Will they get me some interviews? What do I have to do?" The answer is yes. They will get you some interviews if you go over and sign up.

"But I thought they were supposed to find me a job." Well, they are capable of doing that too but there is a 99 percent chance that it won't be the kind of job you're looking for. What they can do is show you how to go about getting the job you want.

The philosophy and purpose of the Career Planning and Placement Service is to prepare students to make the transition from the world of education to the world of work. "Most students have a misconception of our office," said Furney James, Director of Career Planning and Placement. "Our function is not to get people jobs. We teach people how to get jobs."

Each year the service arranges for approximately 80 different companies, agencies and school systems to come to campus for the purpose of interviewing and recruiting students. During the month of February, 32 firms and seven school systems will have representatives on campus.

In addition to arranging and scheduling students for interviews, the service teaches students how to prepare for interviews, how to construct a proper resume and also how to build self-confidence.

According to James, about 75 percent of the students who use the service and properly follow the advice call back to say they have found the kind of job they want.

Student resumes are kept on file in the Career Planning and Placement office for 10 years. Currently about one half of all ECU seniors and about 400 alumni use the service each year.

Test Influence Exaggerated

(CPS) - Standardized test scores are not as important for getting into college as test critics claim, a new study of admissions procedures suggests. A report by the College Entrance Examination Board, which sponsors the Scholastic Aptitude Test, and the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers says admissions procedures are diverse enough to allow minority students to get into college even if "grade averages, class ranks, or admission test scores were significantly lower than those of other applicants." One reason the College Board undertook the just-released study of admissions procedures, Hanford says, was to help support its anti-truth-in-testing law arguments. "Sure we wanted to prove what we were saying," Hanford says. "And I think we've done so in a dispassionate, scientific way."

The laws give students access to test answers, and have been opposed by test-makers like the College Board as inefficient, unnecessary and expensive. College Board President George Hanford, among others, has argued that admissions officers weigh standardized tests in determining who gets into school more than other factors. "All members are urged to attend. Any interested persons are invited. You need not be a member."

Liquor Debate

Faction Distorts Real Issues

There is an anonymous group in the Greenville area circulating leaflets that indicate there will be more teen drinking, crime, child abuse, prostitution, and various other signs of moral decay if the bill on Liquor-by-the-Drink is passed on February 17th. These drastic predictions are far-fetched and ridiculous.

Statistics do indicate a rise in liquor consumption and alcohol related incidents in areas where this bill has become effective. However, to insinuate that a thing like prostitution, for example, is directly related to the legality of purchasing liquor by the drink instead of brown-bagging is outrageous.

Another example of the kind of logic that clouds the true issue was in the letter to the editor that appeared in this paper on Thursday, January 29, from the Concerned Citizens Committee. It stated that "New York City has more bars per capita than any other city in the world, but New York City is in bankruptcy." The letter goes on to conclude that, "Liquor does not help develop a community, but in fact destroys it." This kind of reasoning is not only faulty, but confuses the issue.

The pamphlets that were distributed conclude with the motto, "More drinks equal more drunks." However, an individual classified as a "drunk" will probably be a drunk whether the liquor is sold by the bottle or by the drink.

Restaurants wishing to participate in Liquor-by-the-Drink sales must pay an additional $10 per gallon tax on any bottle of liquor they purchase. This will help the state of North Carolina to fulfill its legal requirement of a balanced budget.

Liquor-by-the-Drink will put social, public drinking in a more controlled atmosphere. It is not a major factor in the overall moral decline of the community, as the anonymous group circulating this kind of propaganda is trying to indicate.

Foreign Relations Committee Carefully Studied Nomination

WASHINGTON — I learned long ago that it's risky business to proclaim any event as the longest or oldest or shortest in history. Still, it's a fairly safe conclusion that the hearings by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in connection with the nomination of General Alexander M. Haig as Secretary of State, probably broke all records in terms of time consumed.

We began on Friday, January 9, and met all day, and into the night. We met all day Saturday. The sessions on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of the following week began at 9 a.m., and sometimes ran until after 9 p.m. Finally, on Thursday morning, January 15, the Foreign Relations Committee voted, 15-2, to approve the Haig nomination and to report it to the full Senate.

HAIG — I have known General Haig since I arrived in Washington as a new

Jesse Helms

Senator in January 1973. He impressed me from the outset as an able man. When President-Elect Reagan announced that he had decided to nominate Al Haig to be Secretary of State, I immediately met at length with General Haig in my office.

We discussed every aspect of foreign policy, and I was totally satisfied with the assurances that he gave me. He will be his own man as Secretary of State; he will not permit the Department to be taken over by any second-level advisors, or anyone on the outside. I may as well put it frankly: I was concerned, and told General Haig so, that Henry Kissinger might be "lurking in the wings." I was given every assurance that this would not happen.

I have nothing against Mr. Kissinger personally, but this so-called "detente" with the Soviet Union bothered me when he was Secretary of State. There were many other things that bothered me, as well.

FRIENDS — As U.S. Secretary of State, Al Haig will immediately seek to strengthen U.S. alliances with non-communist nations around the world. In recent years, the tendency has been for the U.S. to ignore our potential friends. In fact, we have too often disavowed our friends in an attempt to pacify communist nations.

My feeling is that the United States should move to regain our position as a beacon of hope for the millions of people around the world who are today oppressed by communism. That does not mean that we should pick fights with anyone, but surely we should be standing up for freedom.

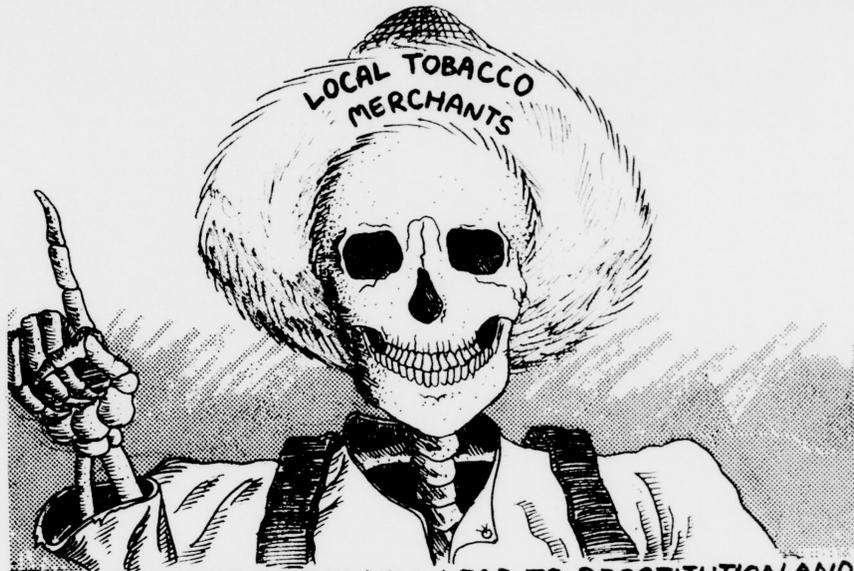

FOLLY — Our foreign policy for the past two decades has been largely a bipartisan folly. I believe that Secretary of State Haig will be attentive to people like Solzhenitsyn who have repeatedly sounded warnings about the takeover of the world by communism.

America must once again become a strong nation — morally and spiritually; we must have a superior defense capability to deter the threat of war; we must have an economy strong enough to encourage full productivity by our people.

We have been cutting corners for too long. We have compromised our principles and our priorities. It won't be easy to regain our position in world leadership, but we have no alternative to making the sacrifices to do it.

Alexander Haig convinced me that this will be his goal. That is why I supported his nomination vigorously. I was pleased, of course, when the lengthy hearings failed to produce anything other than an assessment that General Haig is an honorable, dedicated American. Not everyone will agree with him as he goes about his duties as Secretary of State. But if he lives up to the principles he and I discussed — and I am convinced he will — America will be a stronger and more highly respected nation.

Student Defends Cheerleaders

In regard to the recent editorial which maliciously criticized a lot of peoples' hard work, I must say there were a few ideas which were obviously not reflected upon long enough.

Before the ECU cheerleading squad can fit the description as defined by your American Heritage Dictionary as "one who leads group cheering," there must first be a group present for the cheerleaders to lead. Surely you do not expect the cheerleaders to magically fill Minges Coliseum.

Now, moving along to your concern of the cheerleaders not having any supervision. Our varsity cheerleaders, which are made up of mostly upperclassmen, are both old enough and mature enough to function effectively without supervision. By the way, how many supervisors hang around The East Carolinian?

According to you, and I quote, "The supervisor ... should make sure that the squad does its job, that being to cheer." I can't for the life of me figure out what you think the cheerleaders are doing at each game. Every game that I have been to, I have found the cheerleaders to be cheering.

Your remark concerning professional help for the ECU cheerleading squad may be a good idea, but with a budget of $1,000, who can afford it.

Now finally as to your "cubby hole" analogy: The only sensible area for the cheerleaders to situate themselves in Minges Coliseum is behind one of the baskets. If you think about it long enough, where do most of the collegiate and professional basketball cheerleaders position themselves?

Thanks for your time, and next time use your head!

King Remembered

On January 15, 1981 Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday was celebrated on campus. A full program was planned in recognition of this great civil rights leader. The program started at twelve noon. The Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity did a step in his honor. The step was followed by a moment of silence. Martin Luther King's famous speech "I Have A Dream" was played in remembrance of this magnetic speaker. Five hundred students marched to the Ledonia Wright

Afro-American Cultural Center singing "We Shall Overcome". These students were holding hands as they marched to promote the feeling of unity. The Negro National Anthem was sung proudly. The Fountain of Life Christian Fellowship Choir sang two selections. A brief biography was done by Micheal Lockamy of Dr. King. Mary Williams, acquisition librarian, gave the crowd a few remarks about the ceremony.

This program was covered by Channel 9 here in Greenville. I was disappointed, to say the least, by the coverage provided by our student paper THE EAST CAROLINIAN. On Tuesday, January 20, 1981 a photograph appeared at the bottom of the 1st page with twenty-one little words about the program provided by the students remembering Martin Luther King.

It is sad that this great man is gone. It will be even sadder if he is ever forgotten.

Intelligence Insulted

Normally my critical urges stay buried deep within my bosom by the realization that their manifestations fall only upon already decided, monotonic ears; however, the article in the East Carolinian's Jan. 27th issue entitled "Preparing Steak Can Be Easy" urges, invites, instigates, simply pleads and begs ridicule. Statements such as "When you plan to cook steaks, the first thing you must do is buy them." "Be very observant of the meat department in your supermarket." "...thick steaks take longer to cook." "Doneness" is a matter of personal preference," these insult the intelligence of a college student. Surely better filler material can be found; if not, this paper is in dire trouble.

Library Unbearable

What's this I hear about an energy crisis? That can't be true judging from Joyner Library's all-out efforts to turn East Carolina campus into a tropical paradise. Sure, we all like warm weather, but 85 degrees in midwinter is slightly overdoing it.

After passing through the entrance to the library, the heat becomes almost unbearable to the average human being, who has just emerged from a very comfortable environment on the outside. The sudden adjustment that the body is forced to make is a shock to the human anatomy.

But aside from the fact that this extreme contrast in environments could cause the students bodily harm, such as colds, flu, pneumonia, etc., it is a severe waste of an expensive, not to mention scarce, supply of energy. If the East Carolina University budget cannot support two worthwhile sports like wrestling and women's field hockey, it is amazing to me that there is enough money available to overheat such a huge building as Joyner Library.

The atmosphere is not very complementary to studying, but it does have a great deal to offer those interested in catching up on lost sleep. Don't despair, though, something has been done to remedy the situation. The library doors are spread open wide to generously disperse the excess heat to other needy parts of campus, namely the outdoors. It may seem too complicated, but what would be wrong with an alternate solution of turning the thermostat down a few degrees? Forgive me if that is too much to ask of university officials.

I am sorry to see an upstanding university, such as ours, totally ignore the need to conserve the world's exhaustible energy supply. Waste, of anything, but especially of something as essential to survival as energy, is a sad practice. Until the library can be cooled down a bit, the students and the environment will continue to suffer.

How much more effort would a few steps to lower the temperature of Joyner take, compared to the amount of money that could be saved? Maybe ECU students would like to go to a library to study instead of a sauna. If America can put a man on the moon, why can't East Carolina University keep its library at a sensible temperature?

A Decade Of Underground Comics

San Francisco — Ten years ago the Rip Off Press was just a wild-eyed scheme, involving Texans, printing presses and comic books. Today, with a little help from the Freak Brothers, it's one of the nation's greatest underground comic book publishing houses. Fred Todd, President of Rip Off Press, Inc., talks about the early days and the days ahead.

Q: It all started ten years ago. How did it begin?
A: Well, there was a batch of Texans who had come to San Francisco from Austin. It was the 60s and everything was happening. More of it was happening in San Francisco so the four Texans who were to become the Rip Off Press ended up here.

Jack Jackson was thinking about how to get his pioneer underground comic God Nose reprinted. Gilbert Shelton made a trip out from Austin with a spring-breaking load of Feeds & Heds, his comic.

Dave Moriarty kinda stood in the middle and said, "Gee, let's get all this together . . . let's buy a printing press." Moriarty was living in my flat in the space where a washing machine would have been if I could have afforded a washing machine. He had decided that the key to the universe was a printing press.

Q: So you decided to become a publisher, distributor and printer of comic books?

A: Right. I threw in some money because I was the one with the downtown job as a computer programmer, and, consequently, the money. These other guys were just crazy hippies. We bought a little Davidson press for something like a hundred bucks apiece down. It was really just a glorified mimeo machine.

Our first job was a four-color poster on coated paper. We threw away two-thirds of the press run . . . we had to pull the sheets off the press . . . they made this terrible ripping noise. (Sigh!) I didn't really like that phase of the Rip Off Press . . . when we were all being gentleman printers. (Laughter.)

Q: Where was Rip Off Press' first home?

A: It started off at Mowry's Opera House at Laguna and Grove in San Francisco. It was an incredible place! Don Donahue, the mad printer of Apex Novelties was up there printing Snatch Comics on this old Multilith and heating up his brandy and sake on a little electric stove. It was a big old place with a porno movie maker in one part, and a couple of rock bands practicing.

It ended when a building down the street burned and our attic caught fire, too. Fortunately the firemen were just down the street and they came and put it out real quick. But, the ceiling came down. It ruined the first press run of our first publication, R. Crumb's Comics & Stories. So, we took the printing press apart and carried it down three flights of stairs and threw it in the back of my Falcon.

Q: Where next?
A: Jaxon was the art director and accountant for the Family Dog, which had just folded, so we moved into their old office, right past the eviction notice on the door. The building was owned by the urban renewal agency, which took on the responsibility of resettling us . . . into a soon-to-be-demolished building . . . a corner store on the fifth busiest intersection of town! I consider this one the golden periods. The sun shine in the windows . . . we paid $60 a month rent for the place, including an apartment in which six people lived.

By this time we were doing about one third publishing and two thirds job printing. Our first year we published Crumb's little comic, and his first Motor City Comics. Gilbert's Hydrogen Bomb was one of the early ones . . . perhaps the first dollar comic. But pretty much it was living on ten dollars a week and if somebody came in and bought some comic we'd eat lunch.

The urban renewal folks finally decided to tear down our building and make it into a parking lot, so we moved to our present home at the foot of San Francisco's scenic Potrero Hill. Things started happening. We got this monster press, the Ebco, made by the Electric Boat Company after they gave up making submarines. It was a terrible machine . . . it maintained and not wonderful to begin with . . . the printers cursed it regularly. We got a two-color Solna press. Then we bought a web press.

There's two parts to a comic book. There's the cover, which we were already printing on our Solna. Then there's the insides which are printed on newsprint by a web press. These presses are huge capital investments . . . they're 60 to 70 feet long, ten feet high, five feet wide, taking five or six people to operate, working real hard in unison after great training. A press capable of eating trainloads of paper.

Well, our gang of clowns would go out there and fumble around and try to remember what it was they did last time we made comic books, ruin a couple three plates and chew up half a forest of paper.

Then along came the great newsprint shortage of 1973 at about the same time we started a magazine, the Rip Off Review of Western Culture. Between the web and the magazine we soon owed a potful of money to all the paper companies in town. The sheriff came and repossessed the web and it took two days to get it out of the building.

The only thing selling for us then was the first two issues of the Freak Brothers comic. We'd print ten or twenty thousand at a time . . . as many as we could convince some printer we could pay for. We'd truck 'em to our warehouse and sell 'em and wait for the money. Then we'd do it again. We very carefully did nothing but that for two years.

Sometime along in the darkest part of all that, Gilbert came in one morning, pulled a stool up to a light table and began drawing a Freak Brothers strip. There had been some talk about him being tired of drawing the brothers and we all thought maybe the world had seen the last of those hairy dudes. But what he started that morning became Freak Brothers Comic #1.

Q: Two quick last questions: Are you rich?

A: Hah! Sears hasn't given me a credit card yet!

Q: Are you happy?

A: Am I happy? Well, some days.

Spice Up Your Canned Foods With Some Tasty Recipes

By KATHY WEYLER
Staff Writer

If you live in a dorm room or small apartment, you know how little storage space you have. Plus, you probably have an almost miniature refrigerator. If this is the case, keeping fresh food in your room is a problem. After all, a tiny refrigerator fills up awfully fast.

Do not despair. Canned food is a handy invention for people in such circumstances. At the mention of canned food, visions of tuna fish and ravioli probably dance through your head, right? Wrong! Almost anything you can buy fresh, you can buy in a can. Next time you have an hour or so to kill, go browse in your local supermarket if you don't believe me. You'll find an amazing variety of foods in cans, and a wide variety of prices as well.

When buying canned food — or anything for that matter — keep in mind that the costliest isn't necessarily the best. All grocery stores carry nationally and/or locally known brands, the kind you see advertised on TV. Many, however, carry their own brands. This means the name of the store will appear somewhere on the label. This also means that you will pay less for a product that's just as good as well-known ones but isn't advertised on TV.

Some stores also carry lower quality brands. You needn't be afraid of anything being wrong with such canned products. Their main fault is that they don't look quite as pretty as higher quality brands. The price tags, however, are much prettier.

Don't confuse low quality brands with the generic brands some stores carry. Generic products are usually of good quality but are merely missing fancy packaging. The label on a generic can of beans, for instance, will most likely be white and sport the word "BEANS" in big black letters. Generic brands are often very good buys.

But perhaps you are hesitant about canned food because of its reputation for tastelessness. If you're willing to go to a little extra trouble, canned food doesn't have to be predictable and tasteless. With a little help from a few extra ingredients even the most ordinary canned food — yes, even canned spaghetti! — can become tasty.

SPAGHETTI A LA STOCKTON

Empty the contents of one can of spaghetti into a pan. Add one stalk of chopped celery (remove the leafy ends) and about one-half of a chopped, medium-sized onion. Stir in well. Add one teaspoon of chili powder (more if you like very spicy foods), a pinch of salt and pepper, stir again, and heat until hot throughout.

TUNA CRUNCH

In a Corningware or metal (not glass!) one-quart casserole dish: melt two one-fourth inch pats of butter over low heat. Add two large (or three small) chopped stalks of celery, one medium-sized chopped onion and cook over low heat in the butter, stirring occasionally. When tender, remove from heat and add one can of tuna (drained), one can of cream of mushroom soup, and one-half can of chow mein noodles. Mix well. Bake in toaster oven or regular oven at 325° for about twenty-five to thirty minutes. Then stir, top with remaining noodles, and bake five more minutes before serving.

QUICK STEW

Cook rice according to package direction (you'll want to use only half all the ingredients if you're cooking for only one or two people). After the rice is cooked, set aside. Heat one can of chunky soup, whichever kind you prefer, until piping hot. If you wish to thicken it add about two tablespoons of flour while cooking and stir in well. Serve over rice.

'Cat People' Are An Interesting Breed

By TIM HARPER
1981 National News Bureau

The Iowa Legislature was debating a bill imposing penalties of up to a year in jail and a $1,000 fine for motorists who don't stop after running over a dog or cat.

Sen. James Gallagher, a Jessup, Iowa, farmer, rose in opposition.

"I can see stopping a car for a dog," he argued. "But a cat? You squish a cat and go on."

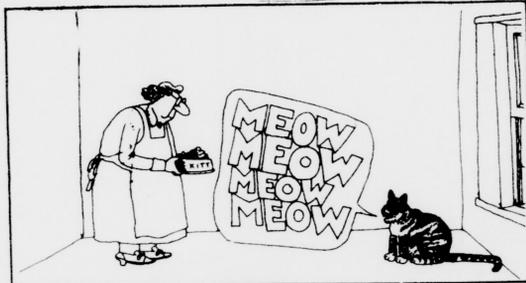

Gallagher said later he only meant that some drivers might not be aware of hitting a cat on a dark highway, but his explanation mattered little to the hundreds of feline lovers who sent him angry letters after the bill was defeated.

Gallagher, himself the owner of four dogs and two cats, said the furor taught him something about the difference between people who have just dogs and just cats: "I don't think dog owners are quite as possessive."

The senator's musing was one of the latest observations on "cat people," a breed that has been growing ever since Felis catus crept out of the desert to become the exalted mouser in better Egyptian homes and granaries 5,000 years ago.

While the nation's 23 million cats and their owners — cats live in one of every five U.S. households — are outnumbered nearly 2-1 by dogs and dog owners, most cat people prefer to think of themselves differently than those who prefer dogs, or, God forbid, no pet at all.

"Usually, cat people are nicer,"

From "Cat" by B. Kliban (Workman Publishing)

says Calla Fricke, who makes a living cat-sitting for wealthy New Yorkers on vacation. "And their houses are cleaner."

Actually, even cat haters generally admit felines are better suited to city apartments because they are usually smaller, cheaper, quieter, cleaner and less troublesome than dogs.

"But dogs are much more responsive than cats," says Cynthia Kohl, who grooms both. "You can't pet them the way you can a dog."

"I hate cats," Manhattan fashion designer Susan Obercon says with no apparent remorse. "They're too sly. They jump up on the kitchen table and lick the butter. They sneak up in the middle of the night and jump on your bed. They give me the creeps."

Those are fighting words to felinophiles who spend their lives shooting down old wives' tales like the one about cats sucking away babies' breath. But cat people have a few counter-offensive jabs, too.

"People get dogs for protection," Vera Meehan, a 76-year-old widow who lives in a Manhattan apartment with two cats, says. "But I get just as much protection from my Siamese without all that barking and uproar."

While dogs are traditionally seen as more "masculine" in terms of pet preference, there are apparently few bona fide "cat ladies" — the stereotypical spinster whose home is overrun with kitty fur and litter.

"But I've heard there's some lady in New Jersey who's supposed to have 1,700 cats," White Plains, N.Y., animal behavioralist Daniel Tortora says.

This mystique has been around ever since the early Egyptians began mummifying favored cats whose mousing days were over. The Egyptians eventually deified the beast as Bast, goddess of moonlight, fertility, wisdom and hunting.

In some ways, this mystique is still going strong for cat fanciers like Liz Szumski, who has four felines.

"Cats can teach you a lot," she says. "It's something that's hard to put into words. I look into one of my cats' eyes and it's like seeing the past, all of history. It's as if she's a throwback to 100 million years ago."

"God made the cat," 19th century French satirist Joseph Mery wrote, "to give man the pleasure of caressing the tiger."

Mysticism aside, there is scant scientific evidence to show just how and why, or even if cat people are really fundamentally different from the rest of the human race.

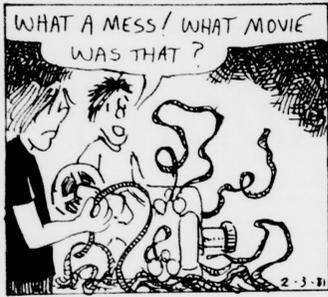

Dr. Peter Borchelt of New York City's Animal Behavior Therapy Clinic says the few studies done on the subject recently are largely inconclusive.

One study, he says, shows dog owners get more emotional satisfaction from their pets, and have better relationships with other people.

"Cat owners are generally a little more aloof or asocial," he says, "while dog owners are more interested in controlling the things around them."

Carol Wilbourn, a "cat shrink" who treats tabbies for aberrant behavior, agrees: "You can't own a cat. Dogs like to take orders, but a cat lives to please himself."

ECU Historians Publish Judge Larkins' Memoirs

A book detailing the personal memoirs of Judge John D. Larkins Jr. of Trenton, "Politics, Bar and Bench: A Memoir of U.S. District Judge John Davis Larkins Jr.," has been published by the Historical Society of Eastern North Carolina.

The editors are Dr. Fred Ragan, chairman of the Department of History, East Carolina University, and Don Lennon, director of the East Carolina Manuscript Collection, ECU.

John D. Larkins, at age 26, became the youngest member ever to serve in the State Senate of North Carolina. He served nine terms as a state senator, becoming chairman of every major committee, chairman of the Advisory Budget Commission, chairman of the state Democratic Party and Democratic national committeeman. He ran for governor in 1960, but lost in the primary. Then President John F. Kennedy appointed him to the federal court bench for the Eastern District of North Carolina.

presided over many major federal cases including school integration and civil rights suits, environmental disputes and numerous criminal trials.

The hardbound volume of Larkins' memoirs is 171 pages plus appendices and index and contains 17 illustrations.

Interesting Events At Other Colleges

the country. But K.A.O.S. (Killing as an Organized Sport) won't be sanctioned by the Oregon State U. Student Activities Committee. The Experimental College had proposed funding an organized campus-wide game, in which students stalk one another with rubber-dart guns, but the committee decided that possible problems, such as the harassment of unwilling players, were too great and nixed the idea. The committee is trying to come up with revised rules emphasizing the "positive elements" of the game, such as the chance for students to acquire new friends, so that it can be reconsidered next term.

A security newsletter published at the U. of Oklahoma is distributed in campus bathrooms, because that's where people have time to read, ac-ording to a security committee spokesman. The publication, which discusses such subjects as a rumor control service and false fire alarms, is called "Tank Times." A Syracuse U. researcher used restroom walls for a poster campaign teaching Cardio-Pulmonary Resuscitation. A follow-up showed that students who were merely exposed to the posters did much better on a CPR test than those who weren't and actually knew CPR techniques as well as a test group that had had formal instruction in it.

"Casper, the friendly ghost writer," as the ad listed him, was arrested in New York on charges of selling students term papers. Dennis King, who had placed the ad in the Village Voice, thus became the first person to be charged under the state's 1974 law banning the sale of academic research papers.

Buffett Concert Soon; Tickets Selling Fast

Tickets for the Feb. 2 Jimmy Buffett concert went on sale yesterday in the Central Ticket Office in Mendenhall Student Center. Over 600 tickets were sold in the first day of sales.

Tickets will be sold only on campus until Thursday, and after that they will also be on sale at Apple Records, the Record Bars at Pitt Plaza and the Carolina East Mall, the Wilmington Record Bar and WXQR in Jacksonville.

The Central Ticket Office will now be open on weekends during the Free Flicks, so you can buy a Buffet ticket and get a free films poster. The ticket office is also open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on weekdays. They accept MasterCard, Visa, cash or money order.

Jimmy Buffett is proclaiming 1981 with a new MCA album. It is pure Buffett — nine songs of great music and good fun with perhaps a touch of maturity not found in his previous albums. The months since the release of Volcano (his last LP) have been productive and rewarding for Jimmy. Four successful road tours (in the midst of the widely discussed concert attendance slump), and a dozen new songs have given Buffett the confidence which sparks this new album.

One new tune, "I'm Growing Older, But Not Up," may perfectly describe the off-hours lifestyle, but the title skimps justice on Jimmy's continual improvement as a lyricist, vocalist and onstage performer.

True to form, the new material on Coconut Telegraph emphasizes Buffett's light cynicism and refreshing insights in our plight on this planet. Drawing on his travels, his affairs with the boats, the islands and the tropical ocean, his marvelous sense of humor, and his all-new responsibilities as a father, Jimmy has pieced together the annual puzzle which, in the end, becomes a "tight" album.

His fans may recall that earlier albums seemed always to include a couple songs written by Jimmy's acquaintances or band members. Similarly, contributions by singer-songwriters J.D. Souther, Mac McAnally and Dave Loggins round out the album perfectly.

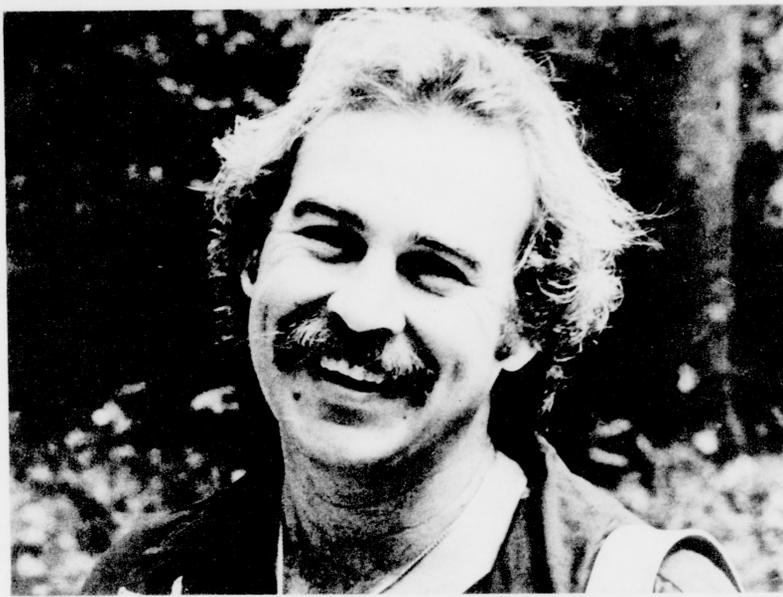

In the past five years, Buffett has toured regularly with his high-spirited Coral Reefer Band. Members of the group have become as well known to regular audiences as Jimmy himself. Yet a highlight of Buffett's concerts was his mid-show unaccompanied acoustic set of half dozen songs.

This past October and November Jimmy carried the idea one step further with his extremely successful "Hot Dog and a Road Map Tour" — his first set of solo concerts since "Margaritaville" shot him into the Top Ten. In addition to the satisfaction of sell-out crowds (though in smaller halls more suited to one voice and two guitars), Jimmy had the opportunity to perform more of the laid-back Buffett favorites which tended to get lost in the upbeat variety of the full-blown Coral Reefer shows.

On Coconut Telegraph, the title song concerns next-day gossip about indiscretions of the night before. Other topics move from getting away from it all ("The Weather Is Here, Wish You Were Beautiful"), to home state nostalgia (the classic "Stats Fell on Alabama"), to a song for his daughter entitled "Little Miss Magic."

The Coral Reefer Band will tour again in 1981; and after being able to kick off his shoes, sit on a midstage barstool and make 'em cheer, Jimmy already plans another solo tour for late in the year. Meanwhile, keep your ear to the Coconut Telegraph and keep an eye out for shallow water.

Popular recording star Jimmy Buffett will be in concert at Minges Coliseum on Saturday, Feb. 21 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $6.50 for ECU students and $8.50 for the public. Over 600 tickets were sold in the first day of sales yesterday.

Lily Tomlin Bouncing Back

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter

HOLLYWOOD UPI — Lily Tomlin perhaps the country's most versatile comedian appeared to have crashed and burned two years ago when she and John Travolta revolted moviegoers in "Moment By Moment."

It was a poorly conceived movie about a middle aged woman involved in a tawdry love affair with an adolescent punk.

Critics justifiably bombed "Moment By Moment" unmercifully and box offices stagnated.

Hollywood wondered if Lily had come to the end of the road. Before "Moment By Moment" she had won an Oscar nomination for "Nashville" three Emmy Awards for TV specials a special Tony Award for her one woman Broadway show and a Grammy for her comedy album.

But Lily was far from a career eclipse.

This year she bounced back higher than ever. Her "Nine to Five" movie with Dolly Parton and Jane Fonda is a runaway hit her notices superb. Next month "The Incredible Shrinking Woman" — a tour de force for Lily — will be released by Universal Pictures.

Monday night she stars in her first TV special in five years "Lily: Sold Out" a CBS musical comedy with a bunch of guest stars including Parton and Fonda, Paul Anka, Liberace and Joan Rivers.

Lily contributed to the script and is executive producer of the hour long show.

Other phenomenal resurgence Lily said, "I take it in stride. Show business is full of ups and down. I feel like I'm part of the show business family, you know? It's a nice feeling to be a member of the group."

"You can't not be famous once you've been famous if you know what I mean. It follows you around. Once you get in the public eye you stay there. Did you ever hear of anybody in show business getting unfamous?"

Lily became a public figure 15 years ago with "Rowan and Martin's Laugh In." She and Goldie Hawn reaped the great career rewards from the show emerging as superstars in their own rights.

Since then Lily has based much of her one woman concert shows on the characters she formulated on "Laugh In" — Ernestine and telephone operator Susie Sorority, Mrs. Beasley and others.

She has added a new character — Tommy Velour, male Los Vegas headliner to Monday night's show in addition to being seen as Ernestine organist, Bobbie Jeanine, Mrs. Beasley the housewife, Tess the bag woman and Chrystal The Terrible Tumbleweed the quadruplegic.

"I was helping put together one of the sketches for the show and thought it would be a great idea to include Jane Fonda," Lily said. "When I called her she was really enthusiastic about appearing with me.

"A few days later I got a call from Dolly who said, 'How come I'm not on the show and Jane is?'"

So we wrote in a part for Dolly too. "If the right opportunity presents itself, i.e. a good script all three of us would like to make a sequel to 'Nine to Five.'"

Like "Nine to Five," Lily's show is a light satire on the battle of the sexes with, of course, the women winning out in the end while gently getting their feminist message across.

In addition to Lily five of the eight writers on the show are women.

Lily during lunch at Hollywood's Brown Derby was dressed in gray beige sweater, pink beige blouse and tan pants tucked into knee high boots.

She said, "It isn't necessary to come down too hard with feminist messages. In 'Nine to Five' we kept it light and funny with satire."

Black History Films Showing Wednesday

This Wednesday night at 8 p.m. in Mendenhall's Hendrix Theatre, the Student Union Minority Arts Committee will present a Black History Double Feature as part of its Spring Semester Films Series. Two short films are scheduled.

"Black History, Lost, Stolen, or Strayed," the first film of the double feature, is an outstanding film which focuses on "lost" black history and the effect of its absence in the history books upon black people, particularly children.

"Black Shadows on a Silver Screen," the last half of the twin bill, documents the treatment of Blacks in Hollywood films and Black efforts to combat these stereotypes and increase Black self esteem by creating their own companies to produce films for Black audiences.

The first of these emerges after the outrageous treatment of Blacks in Griffith's BIRTH OF A NATION. Footage from some of these early works reveals committed artistry, in spite of adverse conditions.

Violence On TV Still Increasing, Says Coalition

By PATRICIA KOZA

WASHINGTON UPI—The National Coalition on Television Violence says 16 persons have killed themselves imitating the Russian roulette scene from the movie "Deer Hunter" shown last year on television.

"This is still further proof that television violence kills and that on-the-air warnings are of little value," said the coalition formed last year to monitor TV violence.

The coalition in its January newsletter listed the names of 15 persons it said died imitating the "Deer Hunter" scene dating back to March 20. It said the 16th was reported in Pennsylvania this month but gave no name.

It also said two other persons were seriously wounded including an "unidentified White House Secret Service agent" on Nov. 21.

The coalition said stations in Atlanta, Denver, Phoenix, Louisville, Oklahoma City, Little Rock, Fort Wayne, and St. Louis plan to show uncut versions of the film this year.

On another subject the coalition said more X-rated films were produced in 1980 than those for general audiences with production of G-rated films falling from 32 percent of all films made in 1968 to only 4 percent last year.

The coalition said it began monitoring theatre movies last September because its own surveys show 45 percent of television violence comes from movies shown on TV.

The Motion Picture Association of America uses the following voluntary rating system: G for general audiences all ages admitted; PG for parental guidance suggested some material may not be suitable for children; R for restricted under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian; and X for no one under 18 admitted; the age limit may vary in certain areas.

The monitoring showed PG rated movies averaged 15.6 violent acts per hour while R rated movies averaged 15.1. About 61 percent of PG movies and 39 percent of R movies were in the high violence category defined by the coalition as having more than 10 violent acts each hour.

One film "Shogun Assassin" produced by Tristar averaged 123 violent acts per hour the coalition said. It was followed by "Flash Gordon," a Universal film, with 82 per hour and "Any Which Way You Can," a Warner film, with 29.

Coalition Chairman Dr. Thomas Radecki, associated with the Southern Illinois University School of Medicine, attributed the growth of movie violence to the rating system.

"The MPAA rating system has made it seem childish to want to go to a movie without sex or violence," he said. "Producers are forced to add violence or an adult scene to avoid the G rating."

Sally Field stars in her award-winning role as Norma Rae in this weekend's Free Flick on Friday and Saturday. Showings will be at 5, 7 and 9 p.m. in the Hendrix Theatre in Mendenhall. While waiting in line for the film, be sure to pick up your free Spring Semester Student Union Films Poster.

Union Labor Corner

Sally Field Is Norma Rae

This Friday and Saturday night at 5, 7, and 9 p.m. in Mendenhall Student Center's Hendrix Theatre, the Student Union Films Committee will feature Sally Field's dynamic performance in the film "Norma Rae."

Admission is by ECU Student ID and Activity Card or by Mendenhall Student Center Membership Card for faculty and staff members on campus.

The film for next weekend, February 13 and 14, is the shocker "When A Stranger Calls." The film will be shown in the Hendrix Theatre at 5, 7, and 9 p.m.

Next Wednesday evening at 8 p.m. in the Hendrix Theatre, the films committee will screen Kubrick's "Dr. Strangelove."

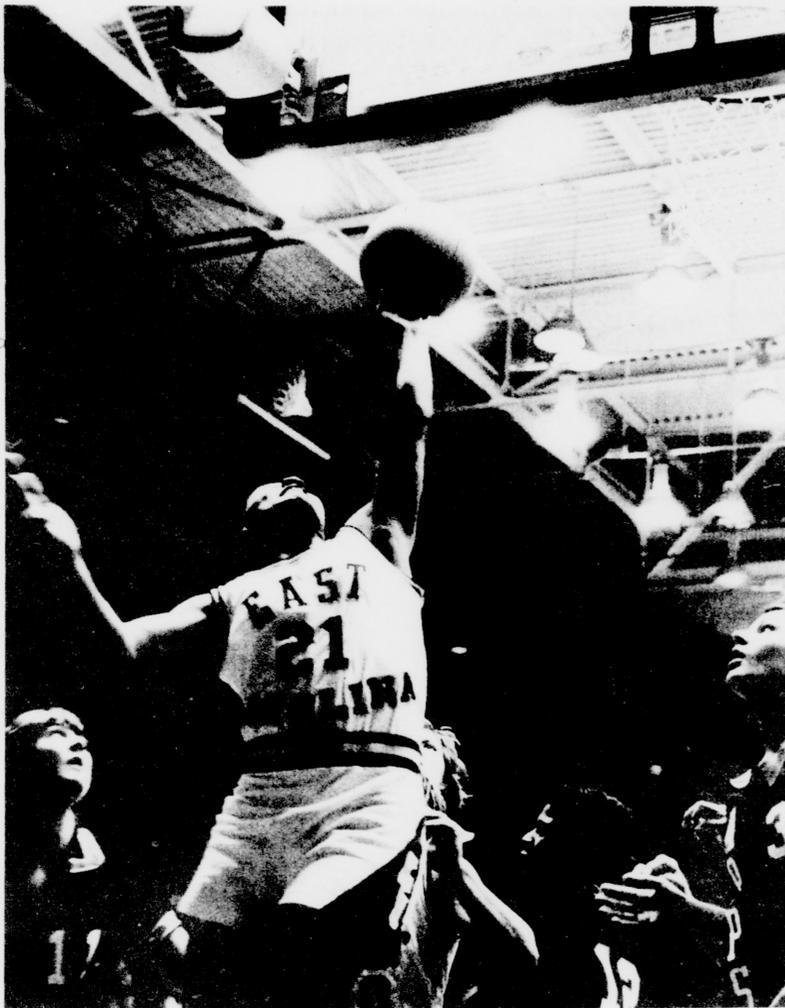

Sally Field performs without Burt Reynolds in 1979's "Norma Rae." Field took the Academy Award for Best Actress that year for her amazing portrayal of the title character in the film.

Sally Field is an energetic and attractive performer; Martin Ritt ("Sonder," "Conrack") is a nobly intentioned director; Irving Havetch and Harriet Frank Jr. are old-pro screenwriters with a healthy dose of social commitment, and all their hearts are clearly in the right place.

Field is Norma Rae, a lovable, loose-living ball of fire who is inspired by an equally lovable New York Jewish labor organizer, Reuben Warshovsky (Ron Leibman), to organize a union among the mistreated textile workers in a small Southern town. The conditions are appalling enough to cause her mother (Barbara Baxley) to go deaf and literally kill her father (Pat Hingle). It's a town badly in need of a knight in white armor, but not one who happens to be a Jewish Yankee. The only one who sees things differently is, of course, Norma Rae — and her tough/tender friendship with Reuben makes for the cutest mismatch since Beauty and the Beast.

He's a stranger to the South, she's never met a Jew. He's all intellect, she's pure instinct. Being a city slicker, he naturally falls right into cow dung and cuts his finger when he takes up whittling. He gives her his copy of Dylan Thomas, she gives him the spark to carry on the cause. They tell each other how wonderful they are. Norma Rae's new husband (Beau Bridges), a lovable redneck saint, is understandably upset by all the time she's spending with Reuben, but rest assured, everything's platonic. And rest assured that the union gets voted in — with surprising ease. Reuben packs his bags, though it would seem his work has just begun.

A gung-ho salute to organized labor may seem a bit peculiar in 1979, when there's so much evidence of union decline and corruption. Even so, there is room for a stirring attack on the textile industry's injustices.

Lady Bucs Split, Now Ranked 18th

By CHARLES CHANDLER
Sports Editor

The drama of the East Carolina women's basketball team continued in full force last Friday night as the then-19th-ranked Lady Pirates took on powerful eighth-ranked Southern Cal in Minges Coliseum.

The game followed back-to-back wins by ECU over two other ranked teams, Virginia (15) and N.C. State (13).

The State game set an all-time Minges attendance record for a men's game of 4,000. Attendance at the Southern Cal contest topped that (4,500) despite over four inches of fresh snow that fell on the ground Saturday.

The trip into the winter weather was well worth the trouble of the fans, as the Lady Pirates got 26 points from forward Mary Denkler and almost pulled off a major upset, falling to the Trojans 77-73.

The Lady Bucs, whose nine game winning streak was snapped by USC, got back into their winning ways on Sunday by routing Appalachian State, 96-54, improving their record to 17-4.

Monday morning's polls were not as kind to ECU as some had expected, the Lady Pirates moving up to the 18th position following last week's play.

In Friday's game, ECU went into the dressing room at halftime down by five, 41-36, despite a fantastic first-half performance by USC's dynamic duo of Paula and Pam McGee.

The identical twins, both 6-3, tallied 27 points in the opening half alone.

The Lady Trojans came out strong to start the second period and built their lead to 11 points, 55-44, following a Pam McGee layup.

ECU failed to buckle, though, as the noisy Minges crowd urged their support. The Bucs downed USC 16-8 during the next eight minutes to narrow the margin to three, 63-60.

The margin became one, 67-66, after back-to-back field goals by Mary Denkler and Lydia Roundtree, the latter coming with 5:54 remaining.

The Lady Pirates had two opportunities after holding Southern Cal to take the lead, but failed on both occasions.

The Trojans built their lead back up to six, 73-67, and appeared to have the game well in hand before ECU's Kathy Riley began making her presence felt.

Riley scored the next six Lady Pirate points as her team narrowed Southern Cal's lead to 75-73 on a Riley layup with 15 seconds remaining.

Following a timeout, Lillian Barnes fouled Trojan Theresa Smith, sending her to the line with a one-and-one opportunity with 11 seconds left.

The ECU fans reacted to the situation with wreckless abandon, crowding the area behind the goal Smith was to shoot at, and waving their hands back and forth.

Smith missed the front end of the one-and-one but the ever-present Paula McGee was there for the rebound and dished off to teammate Terri Huff, who was fouled by Laurie Sikes.

Huff also faced the wild crowd her teammate had faced and also missed the front end of her one-and-one opportunity.

Paula McGee was there again, though, pulling down the oh-so-crucial rebound and laying it in for the final margin of four.

The McGee sisters finished with a combined total of 47 points, Pam gaining 20 and Paula 27. The two added 27 rebounds, Paula pulling 15 and her sister 12.

"They're the best big girls I've seen this year besides (ODU's 6-8 Anne) Donovan," ECU coach Cathy Andruzzi said after the contest.

Despite the presence of the McGee's, ECU was outbounded by the Trojans by only three, 42-39.

"I was very pleased with our rebounding against them," Andruzzi claimed. "(Marcia) Given and Lydia (Roundtree) did a fine job for us."

Given finished the night with ten rebounds in addition to her ten points while Roundtree added eight pulls to her eight points.

In the Sunday win over Appalachian, the Lady Pirates got 14 points from Mary Denkler in jumping to a 53-30 halftime lead and were never headed, going on to a 96-54 romp.

Sam Jones led the Lady Pirates with 18 points while Roundtree contributed 17. Denkler saw very little second-half playing time and finished with 14.

Following the game Andruzzi praised her team's efforts. "You have to avoid a letdown. You can lose games not respecting your opponents. Our kids aren't bigtimers. They respect all their opponents."

Andruzzi's counterpart, ASU coach Judy Clarke, also had some nice words for the now-18th ranked Lady Pirates.

"East Carolina's fast and good at shooting the ball," Clarke said. "I can see why they beat State. I would rank them with Clemson. They outshine State and look better than Carolina."

The Lady Pirates get back to their NCAIAW schedule this Thursday, hosting arch-rival North Carolina in Minges Coliseum in a 7:30 p.m. matchup.

Frosh McNair Sparkles

ECU Downs Samford, 75-50

By CHARLES CHANDLER
Sports Editor

"I don't think I'm getting too far off the limb when I say this is the best game we've played all year."

ECU head basketball coach Dave Odom was obviously pleased with his Pirates following their 75-50 win over Samford in Minges Coliseum last night.

Odom had feared the little-known Birmingham, Alabama school after seeing them in person.

"The people in Greenville didn't see as good a Samford team as I saw last Saturday night," Odom said. "I hope we're partly responsible for that. They just looked super Saturday — scared me to death."

The Pirates had trouble shaking Samford early. After the game was tied 16-16 on a bucket by Samford's Steve Barker at the 8:02 mark of the first half, the Bucs made their move.

Two long jumpers by Mark McLaurin highlighted an 11-0 run during a four-minute span by ECU that pushed the Buc lead to 27-16.

ECU went into the dressing at the half with that same 11-point margin, 33-22.

The Pirates blew the game open in the second half as freshman swingman Bill McNair enjoyed the best half of his short career, scoring 11 points and pulling down five rebounds.

A slam dunk over two Samford defenders accounted for two of McNair's points and brought the sparse Minges Coliseum crowd of 1,200 to life.

Seven of the Dunn native's points came in the game's last 2:24 when the Pirates built their lead to its 25-point final margin.

McNair finished the game with a career-high 13 points, six rebounds and four assists in only 18 minutes of play.

In playing the best game of his career, McNair canned six of seven field goals.

"I think Bill kind of found himself tonight," Odom said. "His job is now to put several games together back-to-back."

Junior forward David Underwood paced the Pirates with 14 points, his third straight double-figure offensive performance. The guard tandem of Charles Watkins and Barry Wright added 11 and 10 points, respectively.

The Pirates held Barker, who was leading Samford with an 18-point-plus per game average coming into the contest, to but four points. For this Odom was particularly proud.

"I thought Barry Wright did an outstanding defensive job on Barker," said the second-year ECU mentor. "Barker's a fine basketball player."

Odom claimed that the Pirates played well in every phase of the game in evening their record at 10-10.

"I'm glad we were finally able to look like a real basketball team in Greenville," he said. "I think we did all the things tonight that make up a good team. About the only thing I could complain about was our shot selection at times."

The Pirates now must travel to Raleigh to take on Campbell College in a 7:30 p.m. game Wednesday. Odom hopes to return to Greenville with a winning record.

"That would be nice," he said. "If we play well, we've got a chance to go over .500 for the first time in memory. That's a relief."

After the matchup with Campbell the Pirates return home for an exhibition game with Athletes in Action, a group of former college stars that tour the country.

Included among those coming to Greenville are ex-Notre Dame star Rich Branning, former UCLA center Big Sims and ex-Arkansas stars Marvin Delph and Steve Schall.

Game time for the Athletes in Action game has been changed from a 7:30 p.m. start to a 7 p.m. tipoff.

ECU Guards Charles Watkins (left) and Barry Wright (right) display some of the tough defense that helped the team to a win over Samford last night.

Andruzzi: Ranking Not Easy

By JIMMY DuPREE
Editor

Suddenly East Carolina University has a nationally ranked basketball team.

Not only does ECU have a nationally ranked team, but that team has begun to move up the poll. In last week's Associated Press Top 20 Women's poll, the Lady Pirates broke in with a ranking of 19th. Just a week later, the squad climbed a notch to the 18th position and solidified its place in the Top 20.

The Lady Pirates now own a 17-4 overall mark on the season, with a 1-0 tally against NCAIAW opposition, but that mark will be on the line Thursday at 7:30 p.m. as they host the Tar Heels of UNC-Chapel Hill. The Lady Bucs handed the Heels an 87-75 defeat in the Carolinian Christmas Classic in Chapel Hill.

But has that climb been as fast as many observers believe. Hardly, as ECU head coach Cathy Andruzzi is quick to point out.

"This program has grown a lot," she says. "This is my third year here and we've really come a long way."

"These girls I have here now are much harder workers than in the past two years. That's not to take anything away from those teams. I credit those teams for starting all this. The progress of this year's team is a product of the past two years."

When Andruzzi came to East Carolina in the summer of 1978, she found but a mere sample of the tools she would need to build a team competitive on the national AIAW Division I level. In her first game as the Pirate coach, ECU fell to Division II Campbell 70-69, and later that season dropped another to Division II High Point 77-67. The Lady Bucs went on to post an 18-11 mark that season.

Her second session afforded the first real chance at recruiting. Andruzzi had had at ECU. Prize catches of that venture were All-American candidate Kathy Riley, Wagner standout Heidi Owen and a 6-0 shooter named Mary Denkler.

That version of the Lady Pirates posted a 21-10 mark and finished third at the NCAIAW Tournament in Raleigh. Many felt they deserved a shot at the Regionals, but the lack of a win over a name team probably put an early death to that possibility.

The 1979-80 Lady Pirates had played one of the toughest schedules in the nation, but most major opposition walked away handily. Old Dominion's Monarchs pounded ECU 112-77 in Norfolk. South Carolina's Gamecocks bruised the Pirates for a 97-54 win in the Palmetto state. N.C. State escaped the Lady Bucs' trap for an 81-76 win in Minges Coliseum, and later trashed ECU 84-47 in Reynolds Coliseum.

ECU just had not posted a win against a name-brand opponent; until January 25, 1981, that is.

On that date the Lady Pirates finally made the break-through. Cathy Andruzzi had planned for for two years. An 84-78 victory over the nationally-ranked Virginia Cavaliers in Charlottesville on Super Sunday catapulted East Carolina into the Top 20; a position which the team really hasn't had time to savor yet.

A 78-77 victory over N.C. State last Wednesday and a narrow 77-73 loss against 8th ranked Southern Cal Friday was expected to move the Pirates further up the poll than the 18th slot, but the politics of the poll just wouldn't allow it.

Nonetheless, Andruzzi is satisfied with the progress of the program.

"Everything we've done has taken a lot of hard work," she explains. "I've got to be pleased with the kids' mental attitude. We're confident, but we're humble. We don't want any let-downs. We know where we want to be and we have a long way to go to get there."

Andruzzi looks at the national ranking in a manner which many people may find difficult to understand.

"No East Carolina team gets anything easy," she states regretfully. "You really have to fight the name barrier. Many people don't know if East Carolina is in North or South Carolina."

"I love the fans; I love it when those fans come in to yell for the team. Its effect is on the whole athletic program; the whole school. Right now the whole school is "Lady Pirate basketball, and that's great. But you can see it in the community as well as the school. People in coffee shops are talking about Lady Pirate basketball; people in laundries are talking about Lady Pirate basketball; everybody has gotten excited."

"The greatest thing is the support we've gotten from all the men's and women's programs around the school."

"They want quality; they want a winner."

"We've just started in this program," Andruzzi states confidently.

Wrestlers Split Weekend Pair, Finale Coming

By WILLIAM YELVERTON
Staff Writer

The wrestling Pirates of East Carolina didn't have such a bad weekend after all.

After losing a heart-breaker to Atlantic Coast Conference member Maryland, 28-22, Friday night, the Bucs bounced back to whip George Washington 30-16 the following evening to pick up their second dual meet win of the year against five losses.

FCU's Butch Revils continued his assault on his first undefeated season by pinning two opponents over the weekend to run his season record to 17-0.

The Pirate All-American won the 177-pound class against Maryland and then moved up to the 190-pound class against GW to capture that win. James Ellison is also having an excellent season for the Pirates and improved his record to 18-4 over the weekend with two victories, his also coming via pins.

Ellison's wins came in the 190-pound class at Maryland and at 177 against George Washington.

The Pirates gave the Terrapins all they could handle before succumbing Friday night. Maryland carried a 7-2 record into the match, which was decided by several crucial pins.

In the 142-pound class, ECU's Gary Webb battled to a draw while Brent Chambers put up a struggle before losing to Terp Kevin Colabucci, the nation's seventh-rated 167-pounder.

In the win over GW, other Pirate victors included David Jerose at 126 pounds, Webb at 142 and Mendell Tyson in the heavyweight class.

Head coach Hachiro Oishi claimed that his team was still hobbled with the injuries that have bothered the Pirates for weeks.

"The injuries are hurting us," he stressed. Without them we could have beaten Maryland. We're still giving a good effort and a couple of our guys will probably go to the Nationals."

The Buc grapplers return home to Minges Coliseum this Saturday for a meet with Virginia Tech, Appalachian State and N.C. Central. The match is set to begin at 12 noon. With the prior cancellation of the ECU wrestling program by Athletic Director Ken Karr, this marks the last time that the Pirates will wrestle in Minges.

ECU Soccer Teams Compete

Two teams from East Carolina participated in the David and Goliath Indoor Soccer Tournament at Atlantic Christian College in Wilson, last weekend.

Both the Pirate Soccer Team and a group of six students, called the ECU Club for this tournament, made honorable showings. The journey was so named because of the attendance of such powerhouse teams as Villanova, UNC-Chapel Hill, N.C. State, Wake Forest, and surprisingly powerful UNC-Greensboro which knocked off UNC-CH, 2-0.

The Pirate team and the ECU Club happened to be in the same four-team division in Saturday's round robin play with Villanova and ACC.

The ECU Club, playing with the minimum six players for the entire tournament, played strong defense and gained a 0-0 score against each of the other three teams. This gave them three points, one for each tie.

Meanwhile, the Pirates tied the ECU

Club 0-0, tied Villanova 1-1, and lost to ACC 1-0, giving them two points.

In Sunday's single elimination round, the Club played ACC again to a 0-0 tie in regulation, but lost in the sudden victory shoot-out. The Pirates also lost in a shoot-out with N.C. State after tying them 1-1 in hard-fought game.

Eleven N.C. Players Vying For Pizza Hut Cage Classic

WICHITA, Kan. — Eleven players from North Carolina have been nominated for selection to the All-Star teams competing in the 10th annual Pizza Hut Basketball Classic.

They include: Gene Banks, Duke; Anthony Boggan, St. Augustine; Danny Davis, UNC-Wilmington (Alliance); Kenny Dennard, Duke (King); Art Gaskins, Elizabeth City (Windsor); Todd Haynes, Davidson; Frank Johnson, Wake Forest; Craig Watts, North Carolina State; and Al Wood, North Carolina.

Also nominated from North Carolina are Anthony Miles (Arkansas State) of Durham; and Mike Oliver (Lamar) of Mt. Olive.

The nominees were among 150 top eligible seniors placed on the ballot by a panel of eight veteran basketball writers representing each section of the country.

The final selection of the teams will be made by college basketball's experts — writers, broadcasters and coaches — with eight players elected to each team. Two additional players on each squad will be selected at-large.

Coaches for the Pizza Hut Basketball classic will be Denny

Crum of Louisville (East) and Larry Brown of UCLA (West). These two men directed college basketball's surprise teams of 1980 into the final of the NCAA Basketball Tournament, where Louisville prevailed, 59-54, in a come-from-behind victory.

Among the 150 nominees are 12 NCAA Division II and NAIA stars, representing such schools as Alabama State, Briar Cliff, Fort Hays and Texas A&I.

The Pizza Hut Basketball Classic, which has raised more than $500,000 for various charities since its inception in 1972,

THE GREAT AMERICAN BEER SWITCH

50% of Michelob fans pull the switch for Schlitz

48% of 200 loyal Budweiser drinkers also prefer Schlitz

Schlitz' impressive showing against Michelob wasn't the first time loyal beer drinkers picked Schlitz over their brand. Results were similar in earlier tests against number one selling Budweiser.

In a live TV taste test conducted just before the second half of the Oakland-Houston playoff game, 49 out of 100 loyal Bud drinkers preferred Schlitz over their own beer. A week later, 100 more Bud drinkers were tested. This time, 50%—exactly half—pulled the switch for Schlitz.

All in all, 48% of the loyal Bud drinkers tested liked Schlitz better. Plus to the test, the panelists had signed affidavits affirming that Budweiser was their beer. Most of them seemed confident that Bud would be their choice in the test. At least 48% left with a new outlook, and some, perhaps, a new beer.

"I was confident" states Schlitz Chief Frank Sellinger

The results of the taste tests were not unexpected for Schlitz Chief Executive, Frank Sellinger.

"Some people thought it was risky to do live TV taste tests in front of millions of people," says Sellinger, "but it didn't take nerve, it just took confidence."

Sellinger, a master brewer for 40 years, has helped brew some of the world's finest beers. Since joining the company three years ago, he has concentrated on making Schlitz the best premium beer on the market.

"They brought me here to brew the best," says Sellinger. "And this Schlitz is it."

It seems quite a few of the Bud, Miller and Michelob drinkers tested agree.

It was Schlitz vs. Michelob Beer—and former NFL Referee Tommy Bell called the score for Schlitz in the live TV taste test.

50 out of 100 Michelob drinkers pick Schlitz on live Super Bowl TV

100 million fans watched as Schlitz took on Michelob in the finale of "The Great American Beer Switch." The dramatic test was conducted live during half-time of the Super Bowl game.

The huge audience witnessed 100 loyal Michelob drinkers choose between two unlabelled mugs—those with Michelob and today's Schlitz. The outcome proved a surprise to many Michelob drinkers who found themselves preferring the taste of Schlitz over the taste of Michelob.

Each of the 100 loyal Michelob drinkers was served two beers, one Schlitz and one Michelob, in unlabelled mugs. Tasters were told to indicate a tie, or make a choice by pulling an electronic switch left or right in the direction of the beer they preferred. To ensure fairness, the testing was conducted by a leading independent consumer research firm. The results were calculated by another top statistical research company, Black and Veatch, Inc.

Before the test, the Michelob drinkers predicted that they would pick their own brand. A lot of them seemed surprised as they watched the number of Michelob drinkers who preferred Schlitz flash before the national TV.

200 Miller drinkers tested: Schlitz is preferred by 37%

In the weeks following the impressive showing against #1 Budweiser, Schlitz went head to head against another leading beer—Miller.

In two taste tests appearing on live television, a total of 200 loyal Miller drinkers were asked to choose between their beer and Schlitz. Again, a significant number of Miller drinkers decided their beer was second best and pulled the switch for Schlitz.

Beer fans surprised at choice of Schlitz

Panelists who decided their beer was second best and chose Schlitz expressed surprise. Similar reactions have been registered in other taste tests across the country.

"I honestly selected the beer I preferred and it wasn't Miller," admitted Miller drinker, Albert Gualano.

"I'm genuinely surprised," exclaimed Guy D'Anne, "I thought Bud was better but I've been proved wrong." "Schlitz has much better flavor than Miller, and it goes down easier," attested Bill Weber, "I could drink it all night."

Panelist Bernie Felsbit summed up the reaction of many of the Bud, Miller and Michelob drinkers when he said, "There may be a new beer in my future."

Loyal Michelob drinkers chose between unlabelled mugs of their Michelob and today's Schlitz.

Do it yourself—try the "Great American Beer Switch" test

This test requires two identical mugs, a Schlitz and your regular beer, at equal temperatures. Label the mugs "1" and "2" so the taster won't know which beer is which. Pour the beers to equal heads out of the taster's sight.

To ensure that the choice is made on taste alone, serve the beer in non-transparent mugs or have the taster close his eyes. Now let the taster sample both of the beers and choose the one that tastes better. Now you taste both beers yourself. Did you pick your regular brand? Or today's Schlitz?
