Three Seek Presidency; Filing Deadline Nears

With only two days left to file, the race for Student Government Association president already has more candidates than last year's field, with three candidates already filed for the office and at least one other likely to file before Friday.

John Rainey, chairman of the SGA Legislature's Appropriations Committee, has filed for the post, along with Mark Niewald, Student Residence Association president and Media Board chairman, and junior marketing major Jay Brigel.

The two-man race for SGA vice president is between Sophomore the three. Class President Rob Poole, who is also in Army ROTC, and SGA legislator Mike McPartland, who is new chairman of the Mendenhall Major Attractions Committee and business manager at The East Carolinian. Student Lee Lane and SRA College Hill representative Jay Johnson have filed for the treasurer's seat. No one has yet filed for secretary.

All the candidates are white

None of the incumbent SGA executive officers are running for reelection or for another office.

None of the candidates for president is expected at this point to be a clear favorite. Rainey, a member of the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity, may have strong support from the some Greek organizations, and Niewald, though he has polarized some students in recent days over the "quiet dorm" issue, may be able to count on support from many dormitory students. Brigel, a resident advisor in Garrett dormitory, is considered the least known of

In the race for the vice presidency, both candidates are well known on campus. Poole was freshman class president and drives a bus for the SGA Transit System in addition to his ROTC involvement; McPartland is a member of the Phi Kappa Tau fraternity in addition to his current posts.

The election is set for March 21.

Hunt Scheduled To Deliver 'Major Campaign Speech' In Hendrix Theatre April 3

By JENNIFER JENDRASIAK

Gov. James B. Hunt is scheduled to give a "major campaign speech" at ECU on April 3, according to Don Hobart, a spokesman for the Hunt committee.

Hunt will be speaking on his foreign policy and defense positions. The speech will be sponsored by the ECU chapter of Phi Kappa Phi, the national honor society, and will be a continuation of this year's symposium, the topic of which is "Peace and War, 1984: Power and Moral Responsibility." "This is a precedent for us," said Fred Broadhurst of the School of Technology and chairman of the symposium committee. Broadhurst said the symposium has never expanded in this manner before.

Plans are also being made to have Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., speak on the same subject. Broadhurst said this would not coincide with the Hunt speech and stressed that the goal is not debate, but rather a display of the candidates' "scholarly perspectives" on the subject.

The event will take place in Hendrix Theatre in Mendenhall Student Center.

Committee Seeking Student Input

Survey Planned For Fall

By JENNIFER JENDRASIAK

A survey designed to discover students' musical tastes is one of the activities planned to increase the quality of the concert program at ECU.

Mike McPartland will replace Jerry Dilsaver as head of the Major Attractions Committee next semester. The committee was the subject of much debate last fall following the financially unsuccessful Charlie Daniels Band concert. The concert prior to the Daniels' engagement, featuring Evelyn Champagne King and The Dazz Band, also lost money.

Planning concerts which are financially successful and which appeal to students "is not a oneman job," McPartland said. For this reason, he plans to select committee members who are interested in music and in working in the promotion of the concerts. "I see the main function of committee members as advertisement and promotion," he said. McPartland wants to analyze bands, new releases and past concerts to determine the best selection for concerts. He stressed, however, that all decisions will be made by the committee, not the Ficklen Stadium has been considered as an alternative location, and concerts have been held there in the past. The problem with this, McPartland said, was that "3,000 people paid for the concert and 10,000 people watched it." Because of the problems of security and weather conditions, Minges is really the only feasible concert location.

Competition was another problem cited by McPartland. "If there is a big band playing in Raleigh, people will go there instead," he said. In addition, the Major Attractions Committee is on a limited budget and thus concert options available are also limited.

McPartland said his studentinterest survey will take place ear-

Thirty percent of ECU resident students would live in an upperclassman dormitory with stricter noise regulations if the university had one, and more than 60 percent think the quiet dorm is a good idea, a Student Residence Association survey revealed this

A survey of 5,500 students living in all ECU residence halls was put together by SRA President Mark Niewald. With 1,322 of the surveys returned, 419 students said they would live in a residence hall with stricter noise regulations, and 841 students, or 63 percent, endorsed the idea of a quiet dorm. Though all statistics from the surveys haven't been tabulated, Niewald said most of the students interested in the dorm were freshmen and sophomores who will be at ECU when the dorm is set to open in the fall of 1985.

Niewald said the response was more favorable than he expected. "There will be a quiet dorm on campus; I'm confident of that,"

Niewald presented preliminary report on the survey results to the SGA Legislature Monday and called the early numbers "staggering" and "surprising." He plans to present the completed results to the legislature after spring break.

The SGA Student Welfare Committee last week voted unanimously to recommend that the legislature reject a resolution supporting the quiet dorm.

A Viable Candidate

Hart Wins On Clear, New Ideas

By JAY STONE

The complexion of the struggle for the Democratic Presidential nomination was profoundly altered by the New Hampshire primary Tuesday. It was predicted up until a day before the primary that if Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado succeeded in pulling within 10 percentage points of Mondale, the results of the New Hampshire vote could be considered a victory for him and a serious blow to Mondale's credibility as the party's front runner. Now, in the aftermath, analysts are stunned by the fact that Hart defeated Mondale by more than 10 percent of the vote. People are trying to figure out what Hart's upset victory means.

Many interpret the New Hampshire vote more as a vote against Mondale than one for Hart. They maintain that Hart's reliance upon campaign themes which emphasize he is the candidate of the new generation who has new ideas is merely empty rhetoric devoid of substance. They accuse Hart of not addressing the issues.

Yet, as Hart himself told CBS correspondent Dan Rather in an interview after the primary results were tabulated, he has, in fact, addressed the issues more thoroughly than any candidate in the

Both in his book A New Democracy and in the volumes of position papers that he has released during his tenure on the Senate Armed Services Committee, the Senate Budget Committee, and the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, Hart has addressed the major political issues of the day with clarity and depth. Some of the proposals which Hart has made in relation to the economy include:

 promoting new assistance for entrepreneurial small businesses by restructuring federal regulations to promote easier access to captial, as well as setting up government agencies to provide them with technical assistance;

 using more pension funds America's largest pool of captial more creatively to provide venture capital and investments in needed areas such as affordable housing:

• increasing federal investments in basic research and development to maintain the United State's world leadership.

In the area of the environment Hart has consistently proven himself as a champion of the national effort to protect the nation's air, water and wildlands. As chairman of the National Commission on Air Quality, he helped produce the first official recommendations for controlling acid rain and has led the Senate forces trying to preserve and strengthen the Clean Air Act. He has also sponsored legislation to prohibit landfill disposal of especially hazardous wastes.

In the area of defense, Hart has gained a reputation as the nation's foremost advocate of military reform. He advocates changing the kinds of weapons that he contends cost too much and don't work well in combat. Instead he feels that we need to buy simpler, more effective weapons in larger quantities. "More spending on a military that doesn't work," Hart says, "just buys a bigger military that doesn't work."

In addition, he believes we need to reform the kind of people we promote. According to Hart, we now promote military managers and bureaucrats, when we need strong leaders and imaginative tacticians in key command positions. Hart also endorses a mutually verifiable bilateral nuclear freeze on all nuclear weapons, as well as strong nonproliferation measures to prevent the further spread of nuclear weapons. Overall, Hart believes that by adopting the measures he recommends the defense budget can be cut by $100 billion over the next five years while yielding a stronger military.

This is merely the most cursory description of Hart's stand on the issues. He spells out his positions in far greater detail in his book and papers.

Gary Hart is not a typical politician. He grew up in Ottawa, Kansas where his father was a railroad worker who never earned more than $100 a week. Both of his parents grew up poor and neither graduated from high school. Hart, paradoxically, attended Yale Divinity School and earned an L.L.B. degree from the Yale Law School. His is a ready-made success story ripe for being exploited as a campaign trail narrative. Yet, Hart refuses to attempt to make political hay out of his life story. Says he: "Any time a candidate talks about himself I get turned off. It's old-style politics. It's commercializing your personal life." He adds: "There's a point beyond which you can sacrifice your individuality for ambition. I don't have to sell myself. I have to sell the need to change generations of leadership."

This commitment to personal integrity carries over into other aspects of Hart's campaign as well. For instance, he has refused to accept any contributions from political action committees, and he will not accept contributions from any source which exceed $1,000. His is truly a grass roots campaign.

Gary Hart still faces an uphill battle to win his party's nomination. Yet, ironically, he may be the only candidate within the Democratic Party who stands a real chance of defeating Reagan in November. For Hart, like Reagan, comes from the west and he would be able to challenge the president on his home ground. In addition, he offers a clear alternative to the hackneyed politics of traditional liberalism and the conservative politics embraced by the Reagan administration. He is a man passionately committed to America's traditional values but impatient with yesterday's politics.

Every day I hear more and more about arms buildups, increasing hostilities all around the world, the breaking down of strategic arms talks, and tensions that are mounting to the breaking point on both sides.

Now that Russia has a new president, I hear all this grumbling (mostly from Democrats) that we should jump to ease have totally separate and conflicting the tension between us, that Reagan goals in this world, and nothing will should have gone to Andropov's ever be achieved if both sides insist on funeral, and that we should put forth a stronger effort to "send a message" to the new Soviet government designed to thaw out our relationship a bit.

Bending over backwards to appease ting ever closer. the new government would be about as helpful to the world situation now as Reagan's volatile rhetoric was a while back when he called the Soviet regime an "evil empire" that will stop at nothing to achieve their goals. He wasn't totally wrong with his harsh statements, and the Russian government has never denied that their ultimate goal is to spread communism throughout the entire world, but I am glad that he has toned down his rhetoric somewhat. Carter's "slap'em on the wrist" policies portrayed us to the world as a giant weakling country that

One thing that must be addressed could be pushed around. Russia took 444 day Iranian hostage crisis?

The pendulum seems to have swung in the opposite direction when Reagan was elected, and his aggressive attitude may have payed off in some ways but it has been detrimental in others. One thing that is obvious to me, no matter which administration is in office, is the apparent frustration and futility in dealing with the actions of the iron curtain. America and Russia obviously submitting proposals to each other that everyone knows neither will ever accept. All the while, the risk of a head-on collision between us appears to be get-

It doesn't seem to matter which individual is the head of the Russian government because their system is run by a collective group of men known as the Politburo. Their president is little more than a figurehead and their policies are shaped by no one person. It seems that all America can do, short of war, is to take a firm stance in what we believe in and try to remove all the political games that we are playing just because they are playing them. The Soviet government mind simply does not work like ours, and if we ever want to accomplish anything constructive then we must come to grips with the real problems of the world, instead of laying everything at the doorstep of those "Russian troublemakers." One of our key goals should be to gain the trust and confidence of the world by exhibiting genuine concern for trying to help solve the major problems, and not by sending millions of dollars to terrorist governments just because they claim that they are anti-communist. Once we demonstrate to the world the true nature of communism, maybe we can prevent those troubled countries that are teetering on the fence from falling to communist regimes. If we can do that, I feel that we are on the way to a more peaceful and productive world.

Pragmatic Approach

I appreciated Patrick O'Neill's letter to Campus Forum, Feb. 23. No doubt, O'Neill is largely accurate in his view of our collective preoccupation with our day-to-day activities of making a living, or getting an "education," to neglect of his concern about nuclear war. In Postman and Weingartner's book, Teaching as a Subversive Activity, it is said that "We have no common world.

and communication is possible only to the extent that two perceivers have similar purposes, assumptions and experiences. The process of becoming an effective social being is contingent upon seeing the other's point of view."

I agree with O'Neill that all of us ought to be concerned about the likelihood of nuclear war, massive destruction, etc. I suspect that most Americans are concerned on this score. But most Americans don't see picketing, getting arrested and higly publicized as their cup of tea. Nor do I see effective protest as limited to those particular tactics. Sometimes those tactics work; sometimes they do, indeed, tend to invalidate one's argument and

Many tools are available, I think, but in most instances they need to be applied directly to the decision-makers. The choice of tools (or weapons) should be based on a careful consideration of the decision-maker one wishes to influence (or incapacitate). I think Sen. Helms, for example, would do no more than smile, quite righteously, if I and half a dozen other "liberal" faculty persons got arrested in connection with an anti-nuclear protest in Greenville. However, if several car loads of us visited his office, by appointment and simultaneously, he might at least pause to wonder what this means regarding his race for re-election. If we were so naive as to denounce all expenditures for defense, he would properly ignore us. If, on the other hand, we insisted on a strong conventional capability and a diversion of funds from proposed new nuclear weaponry to accomplish this, he might at least listen. There's no guarantee, but it might lead to a discussion of the mat-

The extreme right-wing persons have no more obligation to listen, or to compromise and negotiate, than do we socalled liberals. Also, if I and others could stop stereotyping conservatives, liberals, war-mongers, peaceniks, etc. it would help. I need to try to believe that my philosophical or political antagonist has some sincerity, some ability to negotiate and reason with me. Otherwise, I'm left with about two choices. I can just give up, or I can set out to destroy the antagonist. That reminds me a little of the present foreign policy dilemma of our nation.

It's Happening At The North Carolina Zoo

By GARY PATTERSON
Staff Writer

With the arrival of spring break, sightseers are set to journey to New York, skiers to Snowshoe and sunbathers to Florida's beaches. But if you find yourself state-bound this spring break, a world of adventure awaits you at the North Carolina Zoological Park.

Located in Asheboro, the Zoo is three-and-one-half hours drive from Greenville via U.S. Highway 64 West. The location is ideal for a one-day getaway from ECU's academic grindstone.

The North Carolina Zoo is unlike any other zoo planned or built in the world. When completed in the 1990s, it will be the world's largest natural habitat zoological park. Instead of traditional cage enclosures, the Zoo utilizes rock and water barriers that compliment the natural surroundings. The terrain closely resembles the animals' natural environments.

The 300-acre African section was the first phase of the Zoo to open, three years ago. Construction to the African and North mind you of someone you know. American parks, Australian, European, Asian and South American parks will also rise out of the North Carolina forests and plains this decade.

Just a short walk from the Forest Aviary is the construction site for the African Pavilion. Opening later this summer, the facility will house over 200 animals in a re-creation of the African tropical forest, savanna and lowland marsh. Monkeys, host of smaller animals will live under the pavilion.

Terrace walkways will carry you through the upper forest canopy enabling you to observe creatures who spend their entire lives in the tree tops.

Adjacent to the pavilion is the African Plains section. Here live the antelope, rhinoceros and elephant. The African elephants are active and amusing. Though some weigh 5,200 pounds, they can romp and play like children.

Rounding out the African section is the Zoe exhibit which contains zebra, ostrich and giraffe habitat. Zoe was the original exhibit the Zoo began with over three years ago. The animals were placed here because of their passive behavior toward each other. Though the ostrich is aggressive toward his own kind (except during the mating season) he will not challenge zebra or giraffe for territory.

Zoe is the end of the trail, yet you will discover more about the animals if you give them a second look. Take the time to observe each one in its own beauty.

Pirates From Slow to Fast; Stealing, Bunting New Fad

By DON GROSS

When the Lady Pirates take the diamond March 5 against South Carolina, they'll be playing a whole new game.

Instead of playing slow pitch softball, as they have for the last five years, the women will be playing fast pitch. Although the Pirates have traditionally been successful, Coach Manahan says that this team is virtually untested. "We started planning for the switch last year by bringing in players who have a background in fastpitch," explains Manahan.

In their season opener against the Lady Gamecocks, the women will be put to a stringent test. The Gamecocks finished fourth last year in the NCAA Fastpitch Nationals. "We have a challenging season ahead," says Manahan.

Other tough teams on the schedule include Penn State and George Mason, which was ranked sixth in Division I and finished second last year in the region behind South Carolina.

The tough schedule doesn't daunt Manahan and her team, though. "We are excited and we are looking forward to playing,"

she says. Manahan says that the girls have worked as hard, if not harder, than any team she has coached before. She adds that they still have a lot to learn and part of their success will be determined on their willingness to
