Wednesday's 'Health Affair provided a different way to spend the afternoon, and it was education too!

Health Fair Offers Healthy Guidelines

By PATTI KEMMIS News Editor

From aerobic demonstrations breathalyzer tests, Wednesday's 'Health Affair' offered a wide number of booths and demonstrations displaying different alternatives for staying healthy.

Sponsored by the West Area Residents Council, the Student Health Center, and Intramurals Department, this was the Health Affair's second year in action.

"We wanted to show everyone different alternatives to staying healthy," explained Mary Elesha-Adams, health educator at the Student Health Center.

Healthy foods, such as yogurt, fruit juices, apples and popcorn were sold by West Area resident

"This was a great way to get people to work together and promote our area," said Neva Whitt, director of Fletcher Dorm.

The Counseling Center, Bacchus, The American Cancer Society and the Lung Association are a few of the organizations that participated by offering advice, pamphlets, and sometimes extra surprizes.

Blood pressure and sugar level was checked by the East Carolinia Nursing Association. There were also tables where students could take a breathalyzer test after drinking mouthwash, and where they could have their eyes checked.

Bacchus, the campus drug and alcohol awareness group, was making nonalcoholic mixed drinks called mocktails. One Bacchus member said the purpose of this was to show students an alternative to alcoholic beverages.

Food and educational information was not all that was avaliable. There were also several give-aways.

"I like the milk," said Billy White about Carolinia Dairies donation to the Affair.

Coupons for putt-putt, intramural activities, visors, buttons, and ballons were also given away.

The Intramural Department held two aerobic demonstrations. According to Steve Gerber, "aerobic observation" was a prime reason for attending the af-

There was also an aerobic selfdefense demonstration held by Doug Cobb, a karate expert.

"We really wanted to encourage students to learn good health habits," commented Janet Johnson, West Area Coordinator. "We're hoping the things we show them (the students) today will stay with them over the years."

According to Pam Cope, the Health Affair was a great opportunity to pick up some tips on health, watch a guy teach aerobics and eat good, healthy food.

"The educational aspects are phenomenal," said Edmund

Medical Loans

SGA Will Decide Future Of Loans

By DAWN STEWARD

The Sept. 29 meeting of the SGA Legislature will debate the passing of the SGA Emergency Medical Loan bill which was temporarily reinstated by the summer legislature.

The loan was to be terminated last July 1, but John Eagan, SGA treasurer, and Steve Cunanan, SGA president, acting as the summer legislation, temporarily ECU Fraternities Cope einstated the bill with two of three signatures needed.

> Last Spring, Eagan chaired a Student Loan Advisory Committee to examine the fund. The major problem they discovered concerned the payback of the loan. Several suggestions were offered by the committee and were implemented into the reinstated bill.

These additions include the time span to repay the loan, which went from six months to 60 days. This change took place because once the funds are distributed, there is no more money until the student repays the loan. It was also found that once a student graduates, after six months, they are harder to

In addition, the first day that payment of loan is overdue, the borrower's name will be turned over to the Greenville Credit Bureau for collection.

Lastly, the penalty for late payment will be $30 with a process-

"I think these guidelines will keep people from not paying it back," stated Eagan.

He explained that the controversy goes a little farther than just the payback issue. Some people are concerned that medical loans aren't the business of SGA.

The loans of up to $150, can be used to pay for expensive medicine, doctor's visits, wisdom teeth removal — any of medical reason. A student must have a doctor at ECU Student Health Center write a statement expressing a need for a loan. The student then takes the note and his or her ID to the SGA in order to sign the loan. Once the doctor has written a statement, the reason for the be disclosed to anyone involved with the loan (unless so desired). "SGA is here to help the students," continued Eagan. "Sometimes students who don't have the finances need medical assistance. This service is for them just like refrigerator sales or busing."

Although the loans are presently available, so far no one has taken advantage of them, said

The fate of the bill will be known after the September 29 meeting of the legislature. According to Eagan, this issue promises to hold a lot of controversy.

Eagan concluded, we

By LESLEY DEES

ECU will become host to a new gerontology program that will go into full swing for the 1987 spring semester.

Gerontology, which is the study of the aged, will kick off its first year as a minors program after being in the development stage for four years.

"The demand is just starting and students are becoming interested," said Jim Mitchell, associate professor of sociology and director of the gerontology program. Studies done by the U.S.

Ceremony

Bureau of the Census show that by the year 2020, the number of elderly people will increase by 95 percent. In the year 2030, there will be a 121 percent increase. The increasing population of old people is a good reason to include the program along with majors such as nursing, psychology, sociology or even parks and recreation.

"A person is likely to be employed as a nutritionist, a therapist or a social worker with a minor in gerontology," said

He added, "It's broad enough and interdisciplinary enough that students can use it with a variety of majors." To obtain a gerontology minor, 24 credit hours must be fulfilled. Courses range from Introduction to Gerontology, to Physical Activities for the Aged to Death and Dying.

The pattern of study of the program begins with an Introduction to Gerontology and is followed by elective courses.

Research into and a practicum in gerontology follow. The program is concluded with a seminar in gerontology.

Gerontology, a relatively new field of study, is an "excellent opportunity for students, because it provides them with flexibility to go many ways in the field," explains Mitchell.

He added, "Eventually one will have to be confronted with elderly people. Some of us are going to end up taking care of our parents."

The AFROTC Det. 600 of ECU is sponsoring a formal Retreat Ceremony on Thursday, Sept. 18. The ceremony will begin at 5 p.m. in front of Minges Coliseum.

The ceremony is in honor of the Air Force's anniversary as an individual organization. The Air Force, which was once a part of the Army Air Corps, became in-

Medicine Whose Body Is It Anyway?

The New Republic

Research in modern biology laboratories routinely requires human cells and DNA, the hereditary material found in the cells of all living creatures. Ordinarily no one gives a passing thought to the donors. In nearly every case, the cells will not yield anything of commercial value. But lotteries do have winners.

What happens if scientists examining a person's cells find a protein that can be made into an anticancer drug? Should the profits go to the patient, whose cells were essential to the project's success? Or to the researchers, who transformed material destined for the trash into a valuable product? Whose body is it, anyway?

Consider John Moore, a recovered cancer patient treated at the UCLA Medical Center. His doctor removed Moore's diseased spleen, and then carried out research on cells from the organ. He eventually developed a line of cells that were commercially viable. UCLA patented the line, a biotechnology company developed a product based on it, and Moore sued. The case is in litigation.

In congressional hearings, in journals, in symposiums and in courtrooms, people are trying to thrash out answers. Odd as the questions sound, they are important. Biotechnology is big business. The Commerce Department predicts that the market for genetically engineered products, under $100 million today, will increase to tens of bilions by the 1990s.

Scientists tend to dismiss the body parts debate as absurd, but they should be wary. Their funding, stature and independence depend on the public's trust, and that support is fragile.

The gravity of the issue is often belied by the bemused tone of the discussion. Experts convened several months ago at a symposium sponsored by the Office of Technology Assessment, a non-partisan government agency. Before long, the panelists had been diverted from fighting the Great Cookie War. Thomas Murray, medical ethicist at the University of Texas, likened a patient who had allowed researchers to use his tissue to a cook who had shared a recipe: "You make a gift of (family recipes) to your neighbor. And two years later, they turn out to be the heart of a best-selling cookbook that your neighbor has published....Should you feel offended? Have you been done an injustice? Do you have any moral claim on a share of the profits from the sales of this cookbook? I think that is the question."

"Patient's Rights in Human Biological Materials" and found themselves instead

The pace of technological advance means there is no ducking these questions. According to figures compiled by the House Science and Technology Committee, "In the last five years, patent applications for university-owned inventions us- way. ing human biological materials increased over 300 percent as compared with the five years preceding."

Continue to expect more heat than light from the argument over how those "human biological materials" - blood, sweat, tears and the rest - should be used.

Immense practical difficulties further obscure philosophical and ethical questions. As Levine noted, "Most of the time...we don't know who the human materials came from. The researcher gets the materials from the surgical pathologist, and the surgical pathologist, in the interest convicted, and then a few months later, of preserving the patient's privacy, does not tell the name or does not attach any identifier to the tissue. And so there is no way to find out anything."

the contributions of hundreds or thousands of subjects. Deciphering the structure of one hormone required taking pituitary glands from 7,000 cadavers. As Levine put it, "Should we go back and offer to share the proceeds with the estates of 7,000 dead people?"

The Daniloff Affair

The Kremlin Wants Its Spy Back

Concerning the Daniloff affair, a few observations:

1. It isn't easy to figure out what the Soviet Union is up to. If what the gang over there wanted was as simple as the release of its spy Gennadi Zakharov, the Soviets would have gone at it in another

On The Right

By WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY

By acting so flagrantly against an American journalist so flagrantly the victim of a setup, the Soviet Union has attracted attention to Zakharov he would never otherwise have gotten.

Why didn't they just let Zakharov get as happened in 1979, trade him for a few dissidents?

The way in which the Kremlin has played this argues both against the In many cases, research requires pooling likelihood of a release of Zakharov and certainly argues against that happy armin-arm march toward the end of the rainbow together that the Soviet Union has been promoting in various cultural and political theaters ever since the Geneva summit of last November.

2. In a word, the Soviet move is just plain stupid, to judge from what it is that the Soviet Union desires, namely maximum pressure on the United States to stall on our Strategic Defense Initiative. Speculation necessarily takes one to the inner politics of the Kremlin. It is by no means inconceivable that an arm of the Kremlin — the KGB, most likely — undertook the frame-up and publicized the results of it in order to put a different arm of the Kremlin on the spot.

We must always bear in mind that the majority of Russians, as distinguished the majority of Russian intelligentsia, believe what is told them, and Izvestia and Soviet television have been busy broadcasting the obvious guilt of Nick Daniloff.

It is generally correct to assume that the Kremlin is united, even as it is generally safe to assume that the Vatican is united. But there are factions everywhere, and in the Soviet Union we may be seeing in action a faction in very high gear.

3. Whatever the division within the Kremlin, there is certainly corresponding division within the Reagan administration. Every day the emphasis seems to change, first in the direction of toughness, next in the direction of conciliation.

Mr. Reagan, when he addressed the subject on his way back from Santa Barbara, Calif., was bluntly outspoken in saying there would be no "trade-off," Zakharov (who is guilty) in exchange for Daniloff (who is inno-

But on Wednesday, State Department press officer Bernard Kalb, a gentleman of very great sophistication, uttered the following ominous words: "The objective here is to win the release of Nick Daniloff, rather than engage ir retaliatory actions."

But the objective is not merely to win the release of Nick Daniloff. Presumably we could do that before midnight, by giving the communists back their spy. Our objective is to get back Daniloff without giving anything to the Soviet Union it does not now have. And how can we effect this without retaliatory action?

Such as? Well, one example is the prospective cancellation of the "town meeting" scheduled to take place in Latvia. The whole idea of a "town meeting" within the Soviet Union is something like a black Mass, but we have got together a pretty impressive American delegation, including Sen. Bill Bradley, Assistant Defense Secretary Richard Perle, Robert McFarlane, Helmut Sonnenfeldt, Jeane

Kirkpatrick and other luminaries. Clearly the Soviet Union wishes that town meeting to take place. Its cancellation would bother them and would clearly be interpreted as an act of retaliation.

What else? One is reminded that, last year, Caspar Weinberger remarked that 980 Soviet representatives were in the United States, many under diplomatic immunity, while the United States has, over there, only 276 representatives. Most of theirs are KGB agents, though it doesn't really make much difference, in dealing with the Soviet official, whether he is a KGB agent or not.

A member of the KGB is merely another Soviet communist trained in specific artifices. Stalin wasn't a KGB agent but did enough harm without that special training. A Soviet diplomat is in America not to protect Soviet tourists, but to damage America.

But we could get much more serious than that. We could freeze agricultural shipments; why, we could even close our eyes and pretend that the Soviet Union is South Africa.

Unhappily, Mr. Reagan is in a spot, but he needs to remember that just as his policy has not been to get our hostages in Lebanon back at any cost, so it can't be now primarily our objective to get poor Mr. Daniloff back.

Will The Democrats Fumble The Ball Again?

By CHARLES LANE
The New Republic

Once, tax reform was a clearly Democratic idea. Jimmy Carter called our tax system "a disgrace to the human race." Liberal academics argued for a simpler system with fewer loopholes. Sen. Bill Bradley and Rep. Richard Gephardt, both Democrats, introduced the first bill in the current round of reform.

But in 1984, Walter Mondale refused to call for tax reform, for fear of offending various constituencies. Subsequently in Congress, many Democrats balked at hurting special interest-groups and business PACs. This November, Republicans will probably get most of the credit for the new tax reform bill.

If Democrats don't want to miss the next boat, too, they had better turn their attention to the Social Security payroll tax, or FICA. Including the employer contribution, it will rise to 15 percent by 1990. After tax reform, this will be equal to the top income tax bracket for 80 percent of taxpayers.

FICA is terribly regressive. Everyone pays the same rate — right now 7.15 percent, plus a matching share paid by employers. The only income distinctions benefit the well-off: income over $42,000 a year is FICA-free, as is income from investments.

Income-tax rates have been cut, especially for the well-off, while FICA has gotten more burdensome, especially for the poor. As a result, the total tax burden of a family of four at the poverty line rose from 1.8 percent of income in 1979 to 10.4 percent in 1985.

The tax reform bill undoes much of this damage. Households earning less than $20,000 a year will see their total federal tax bills cut by a fifth or more. Six million poor families will be taken off the income-tax rolls. But many still have to pay Social Security tax. One of FICA's worst follies is that it applies to the first dollar a poor person earns.

FICA is a job destroyer, too. Moneylosing businesses don't pay income tax. But they do have to pay FICA. New businesses start paying Social Security with their first hire. Companies struggling to avoid bankruptcy get no reprieve. The FICA tax amounts to a 14.3 percent penalty on the decision of a company to create a job and of a worker to take it. Otherwise intelligent people cling to the illusion that Social Security is like an annuity — that benefits are just the return on the money you put in. Mechanically, this is wrong. Today's FICA payments pay for today's Social Security checks they aren't saved and invested. Even metaphorically, the "insurance" idea is bogus. The money today's retirees paid into Social Security over their lifetimes, invested at a normal rate of return, would pay for less than one-sixth of the benefits a typical retiree gets.

Meanwhile higher FICA tax rates and benefit reductions set for after the year 2000 mean today's workers may not get as much out of the system as they put in. Social Security is, in fact, a transfer program. Democrats needn't apologize for suppporting such programs. But this one is a regressive transfer financed by a regressive tax. The average income per capita of the elderly is 15 percent higher than that of the general population.

From 1973 to 1984, the average nonelderly couple's real income didn't grow, but the average elderly couple's did thanks to Social Security benefits. That is, families struggling to keep up with inflation paid more FICA taxes so the elderly could stay ahead of inflation. What is liberal about that?

Social Security should be paid for like any other program: through income taxes. This makes even more sense now that we're about to get a broad-based new tax system. Increasing income-tax rates to raise the same amount now raised through FICA would make the overall tax system fairer and more efficient.

Most people would still face lower total tax rates than they do now. Simply cutting FICA would achieve the same purpose. But if revenues are cut, benefits must be cut as well. We mustn't squander the recent reforms, which have brought the Social Security system into financial and actuarial balance.

Cutting Social Security poses a philosophical challenge for Democrats. Do they really believe in activist government to help the needy? Or are they simply protecting current programs and constituencies?

The issue isn't destroying Social Security. The issue is saving it. There is no liberal justification for refusing to amend a system that, on average, takes money from those with less and gives it to those with more.

There are a number of ways to prune Social Security without pushing those who depend on it into poverty. One is to tax benefits. Under the new lower rates, this may not bring in as much as before. But it's still a step in the right direction especially now that the tax system won't touch poor people.

Sometime soon, someone is going to make an issue of Social Security and the regressive, job-destroying FICA tax. Will the Democrats grab the next tax reform issue, or fumble it away like the last one?

'Star Trek' Celebrates Twentieth Anniversary

Entertainment

By MICAH HARRIS

Twenty years after its debut in 1966, "Star Trek" is still boldly going where no man has gone before. It remains a television phenomenon, perpetually fresh and intellectually and emotionally stimulating.

A gala party was held at Disney Land to celebrate it's twentieth anniversary, reuniting the cast and, more significantly, allowing discussion of a forth-coming movie, The Voyage Home.

Gene Rodenberry conceived "Star Trek" as a "Wagon Train to the stars." He modeled his hero, Captain Christopher Pike, dle. after the naval hero of literature, Captain Horatio Hornblower.

The original pilot for the series was entitled "The Cage." The only surviving character of this episode was Leonard Nimoy's "Spock," who was in the embrionic stages of development. In an early scene he speaks in a cold, computer-like monotone; later, he smiles in pleasure at an exotic, alien plant.

NBC decided the concept was okay but the pilot was deemed too intellectual for television audiences. "Go back and make another pilot," they said. "And one more thing — get rid of the dude with pointed ears."

Happily, Rodenberry did not compromise on an intelligent script... or the pointed-eared dude. In fact, the second pilot was more cerebral than the first.

"Where No Man Has Gone Before" was a classic Greek tragedy of the far future involving psionic powers thrust upon two innocent crew members and their progression to a godhood they were all too human to han-

There had been some personnel changes on the Enterprise by this time. The late Jeffrey Hunter who had played Captain Pike asked for a transfer, so Captain Jim Kirk was assigned duty.

The Enterprise crew was also becoming more familiar. Scotty and Sulu also signed aboard in this story.

The ordering of a second pilot was a first for television; one of several "Star Trek" would achieve. It was also the first series to be revived after cancellation because of a flood of fan mail; and the first to feature an interracial kiss between Kirk and Uhura in "Plato's Stepchildren." With Rodenberry at the helm, the Enterprise was able to circumnavigate the network censors. Stories dealt with such controversial subjects of the 60s as racism ("The Devil in the Dark"), and the Vietnam War ("A Private Little War").

The secret of "Star Trek's" continual success can be attributed to several things. Debuting in turbulent times, it offered an optimistic view of the future and what it could be, (a time of global peace in which men and women of different nationalities worked together to reach the stars).

Another reason for "Star Trek's" popularity is the actors' determination to create characters of depth to whom we can relate and care about. Kirk, Spock, and McCoy are all lonely men in conflict with their emotions...whether they admit to them or not.

Although story continuity was generally not stressed, William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, and DeForest Kelly took pains to be sure that character consistency

And again, "Star Trek" has maintained a high profile via syndication. It continues to gain new fans every year. This constant exposure keeps Trek enthusiasm high as opposed to Star Wars interest which is fizzling away because there has been no Jedirelated material presented in three years.

The TV programs continually promote interest in the new series of feature films which were a long time coming. There were rumors of a "Star Trek" movie in the early 70's. Then it was to be a new television series, and finally a movie again.

Star Trek: The Motion Picture was a major disappointment to fans when it finally arrived. It was what "Star Trek" should never be -- dull. How a talented director, good actors, fantastic special effects, and an intriguing concept combined to produce this failure is a mystery of cosmic proportions which Carl Sagan would have difficulty unraveling. Fortunately, the movie still made money and Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan debuted a few years later. For my money, this remains the ultimate Trek movie. It captured the feel of the better episodes (interestingly, it was conceived as a TV movie) while updating them in style and character.

The aging of the cast, instead of being side-stepped, was used as a springboard for a story largely about Kirk's accepting of his own — and his friend, Spock's mortality. Continuity was also stessed by picking up a loose thread and character, Khan, from the series.

Star Trek III was perhaps the most controversial of the movies so far. Many fans wanted Spock to be resurrected; others felt his return made the beautiful and touching previous film futile. Equally pointless was the appearence of Kirk's son and (more painfully) the Enterprise's destruction.

The meaning of all this carnage was to show the capacity of human beings for self-sacrifice. But somehow suspension of disbelief was not achieved to this end as in The Wrath of Khan. In comparison, Star Trek III is a sensationalistic movie.

The fourth movie should wrap up the loose ends of the previous picture and hopefuly bring the story line begun in The Wrath of Khan to a close; thus completing a trilogy and allowing the Trek characters to get on to other

I have my own theory, though, and I think that monsters and Mondays are somehow related The boogie man that scared us as children really exists, and somehow he manages to wreak havoc once a week, on his day.

Mondays are days when you find that your girlfriend is now going with the geek down the hall (the guy who drives dad's BMW) and that your girlfriend (the homely one) isn't really your psych professor's daughter.

It's also the day you discover that the paper due this Friday was really due last Friday. You then discover the drawer into which you threw your dirty gym socks last week — just as the girl who thinks you aren't sophisticated enough wallks by.

People have told me all of this stuff is just in my mind — that all of those things happen to me because I'm just a klutz, which is true to a point. But the clincher for me came when I found out

I would even be willing to bet my entire checking and savings accounts (all $.69) that Mohammar Gadafi, the Ayatollah Khomeni, and Jesse Helms were all conceived and born on Mondays. No lie.

So my plan is to save the world by starting a campaign to end Mondays. Since Fridays are usually so nice, I think we'll just have two Fridays a week.

Of course this means chancing extra Friday the thirteenths, but I'm not superstitious.

Moore And Lowe Turn Out Top Performance In Movie

By ED TOSHACH

beginning of a meaningful and emotionally rewarding relationship? About Last Night asks just that, and whether or not you agree with the answer, the question makes one heck of a movie. In About Last Night, Rob Lowe and Jim Belushi are salesmen for a food service supply company who are both caught up in the singles scene. Demi Moore and Elizabeth Perkins are roommates who show up at the bar Lowe and Belushi frequent after a softball game they all attended.

After several lustful looks are exchanged, Lowe and Moore go back to his apartment, beginning an explicit and provocative series Perkins do their best to talk the two out of their eventual decision to move in together - Belushi by slighting Moore and constantly mourning Lowe's lost freedom, and Perkins by constantly flooding Moore with her stereoptyped ideas of the American male.

Turns out the two sidekicks are mostly worried about not seeing much of their friends anymore, a fear that comes true when Moore moves into Lowe's apartment.

A lot of the good that can be said about this picture has to do with the screenplay by Tim Can a one night stand be the Kazurinsky of Saturday Night Live and Denise Declue. Based on the play Sexual Perversity In Chicago, by David Mamet, its intelligent and witty dialogue is a pleasure from beginning to end. Most of the good lines go to Demi Moore, but she deserves them. She and Rob Lowe were both in St. Elmo's Fire, and both are developing well as actors. Jim Belushi is sometimes very funny as the unflattering stereotype of an urban bachelor. His character is at times allowed to have a heart; this gives him a human edge and makes him a little more real. Also turning in a nice performance is Elizabeth Perkins as Moore's cynical roommate. of one night stands. Belushi and Although mostly depicted as a bitter, lonely person, she too has a compassionate side that usually turns up in scenes from her job at a kindergarten.

> Overall, About Last Night is a good way to spend a couple of hours. Although at times it is just a tad long, the length is never a real problem, as the movie takes the time it needs to deal with its different themes like sexual attraction vs. love, friends vs. lovers, etc.

Elizabeth Perkins, Rob Lowe, Demi Moore and Jim Belushi star in 'About Last Night,' a controversial film in release lable. The film was formerly titled 'Sexual Perversity In Chicago,' but studios and movie theater owners balked at a film with such a title.

pearence of Kirk's son and (more painfully) the Enterprise's destruction

The meaning of all this carnage was to show the capacity of human beings for self-sacrifice. But somehow suspension of disbelief was not achieved to this end as in The Wrath of Khan. In comparison, Star Trek III is a sensationalistic movie.

The fourth movie should wrap up the loose ends of the previous picture and hopefuly bring the story line begun in The Wrath of Khan to a close; thus completing a trilogy and allowing the Trek characters to get on to other things.

A lot of the good that can be said about this picture has to do with the screenplay by Tim Kazurinsky of Saturday Night Live and Denise Declue. Based Chicago, by David Mamet, its intelligent and witty dialogue is a pleasure from beginning to end.

Auburn is led by an explosive, well balanced offense. In addition to a fleet of talented running backs, Auburn has improved their passing game considerably.

competed in the ODU Fall Invitational this past weekend, Sept. 13-14 at the Old Dominion University tennis facility.

Teams competing in the twoday event were: ECU, William & Mary, Penn State, Maryland and ODU. Team scores were not kept so that the event would count as only one date of play, but ODU was "strong all the way through," according the ECU assistant coach John Anthony, and would have earned the most points had they been tallied.

All teams took eight players, who were them divided into three levels — A, B, and C flights. The "A" flight players would be the best players for each team, the "B" flight would include the next best, and the "C" flight the last two seniors this year, did better than expected against the more experienced teams. In particular, Jon Melhorn and Dan LaMont were impressive, as they competed in the "A" flight and won against veteran opponents. Melhorn played exceptionally well, winning two tough matches against ODU's Schanck and Penn State's Mercer, before bowing in Sunday's championshipround final to ODU's Wolf.

Assistant Coach John Anthony lauded Melhorn's performance saying, "He played really tough all weekend. He could have

In doubles action, LaMont and his partner of two years, Greg Loyd, won their opening match in the championship round "B" flight, beating Bernstein and Egan of William & Mary in three close sets. They were taken out of the draw by ODU's "B" flight duo of Greswold and Gustafson, who both played at the top of

Coach Pat Sherman expressed satisfaction with the men's efforts, saying, "It is important (to consider) the caliber of play and the close scores of matches that our players were in."

John Anthony added that coaches of the other teams were impressed with the ECU players' attitudes and with the team's improvement on the courts.

Assistant coach Anthony summed up the weekend play with these thoughts: "Every team was strong at the top and we were competitive with everyone, and were equally as good or better than William & Mary."

By SCOTT COOPER

Fifth-year ECU head swim coach Rick Kobe is nothing short of optimistic for his Bucs and the upcoming 1986-87 dual-meet season as the team has just completed their third week of workouts.

Kobe said, "it's going to be the men and nine new faces for Kobe added.

As a matter of fact, the men's and women's squads recently finished their running program with the annual biathlon. The swim, a six-mile trail run, followed by another mile in the pool.

For the men, junior Patrick Brennan finished first in one hour and 30 minutes. Sophomore David Killeen and senior Stratton Smith finished second and third respectively.

Two years earlier, on an exhibition tour of Texas, Rhoads had saved the franchise in a most unusual manner: the Indians had run out of money and needed $1,600 for railroads tickets from San Antonio to Fort Worth, where their next game was scheduled. Taking matters into his own hands, Rhoads visited the local gambling establishment, the Crystal Palace, and won $1,800 at the crap tables.
