Legislature Decides Against Funding Art Gallery's Movie

By DAWN STEWARD
Staff Writer

A film planned for Gray Art Gallery depicting sexual assaults upon women was the topic for debate at the SGA meeting Monday night.

The film was scheduled to be shown Nov. 7 through Dec. 6 in conjunction with Sexual Assault Awareness Week.

"I feel that the film will be very blatant, explicit," commented John Simon, a SGA member. "We were informed that counselors would be available after the film was shown for people who needed counseling. I don't think that this is appropriate for students' funds to be used for."

"I really feel this (the film) motivates young women of what is going on," contradicted Coralie Patterson. "It doesn't matter how many times you are told what can happen. Until you see it, it doesn't sink in or hit home."

Local high school students were to be brought in to view the film as well as ECU students so that the community could be reached and informed.

"This is not going to put us in good favor with the community if the kids go home upset," added Simon.

Other issues concerning the film included the lack of actual student involvement while the exhibit was at the gallery, the fact that funds had been approved for Sexual Assault Week, and the nature of the subject. The legislature was reminded that appropriations were made last year for visual art forms to the gallery.

In a 22-20 vote, the bill was not approved. Other bills that passed included

a constitution for East Carolina University Campus Girl Scouts of America Organization, a constitution for Students of America Organization and a transfer of funds for Sigma Gamma Epsilon Fraternity.

The Appropriations Committee reported that the budget for MSO would be $115 instead of the original $4300 the group requested.

Five day representative and one dorm representative positions were approved at the meeting.

Steve Cunanan, SGA president, informed the body that Executive Cabinet positions had not yet been filled and anyone interested who is not a member of the legislature should stop by room 228 Mendenhall for an application.

Alumni Honored

Awards Given Saturday

By CAROLYN DRISCOLL
Assistant News Editor

An executive for the television show "Sesame Street" and a retired chemistry professor will be honored by the East Carolina University Alumni Association as recipients of the 1986 Outstanding Alumni Awards.

Receiving the awards on Saturday will be Valeria Lovelace of Teaneck, N.J., and C. Ray Pruette of Franklinton. Recipients are selected each year by the association's board of directors based on nominations from alumni.

Lovelace is director of research for Sesame Street, an educational television program for children. The program is produced by the Children's Television Workshop in New York City, N.Y.

"Sesame Street" is undoubtedly the most successful educational program for children, and most of it is due to the careful planning and research which Dr. Lovelace is responsible for," wrote ECU psychology professor Rosina C. Chia in a letter nominating Lovelace for the award.

Lovelace received a BA in psychology from ECU in 1973. A university marshal and a member of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, she was listed in "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities," and served as a minority student counselor.

"She has been a loyal alumna, exemplified by her coming to speak to our students at a most nominal honorarium ($200), which wasn't even enough to cover her travel expenses," Chia said.

"Dr. Lovelace is an articulate and vivacious person whose enthusiasm for her work and for her education at ECU is infectious," said Marsha Ironsmith, an ECU psychology professor. "She is an excellent role model for our students and makes our faculty feel proud to have produced such a student."

Lovelace received her master's in psychology in 1977 and her Ph.D. in 1980 from the University of Michigan. Prior to her current position she held a postdoctoral fellowship at the University of Kansas Center for Research on the Influences of Television on Children.

She has been a program researcher for KTWU-TV in Topeka, Kansas, dissertation researcher at the University of Michigan, and research associate at the University of Michigan for the Institute for Social Research, the Project for Fair Administration of Student Discipline and the University Day Care Project.

C. Ray Pruette, a 1939 ECU graduate, retired in 1985 after 36 years of teaching chemistry and physics at Louisburg College.

"Dr. Pruette is a distinguished alumnus who has exemplified the purposes and objectives of East Carolina University through his dedicated years of teaching," said Judith B. Parrish, Louisburg College librarian. "He was truly a dedicated teacher who set high standards for his students."

J. Allen Norris Jr., president of Louisburg College, made these comments at the time of Pruette's retirement. "You have been centerstage in faculty leadership for 35 years, and countless students and colleagues are the better by your influence...You have earned the respect of all who in any way have been associated with Louisburg College, bringing to your work a commitment to excellence that continues to nourish a strong educational program."

While an undergraduate at East Carolina, the history and science major served as editor of the student newspaper, The Tec Echo. Later he returned to East Carolina and received a master's degree in science education in 1950.

Pruette also completed graduate courses at Wake Forest University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. In 1980 he received the doctor of arts in education from the University of Central Arizona.

"The sincere interest and concern that Dr. Pruette possesses for his fellow man is portrayed through his effective involvement with his church, professional and civic activities," Parrish said.

He is a past president of the North Carolina Institute of Chemists and is a member of the American Chemical Society. In 1969 he was elected a fellow in the American Institute of Chemists.

His awards are many—in February he was named Citizen of the Year by the Louisburg-Franklin County Chamber of Commerce. He received the Distinguished Service Award from Louisburg College at his retirement and in 1983 was recognized by then-Governor Jim Hunt with a Human Service Volunteer Award.

Earlier this year Governor Jim Martin recognized Pruette's volunteer service with a Certificate of Appreciation. In September, Pruette was keynote speaker at the ECU Alumni Association's annual Leadership Conference.

Both will be recognized at the association's annual awards luncheon on Minges Coliseum and during halftime of the homecoming football game.

Tickets to the 11:45 a.m. luncheon are $8 per person; reservations are necessary and will be accepted through Thursday, Oct. 16.

Alcohol Awareness

ECU News Bureau

Alcohol Awareness Week will be observed Oct. 19-23 at East Carolina University.

The week coincides with National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, a nationwide effort to make students aware of the problems associated with alcohol misuse and abuse. Activities on campus will include lectures, films, a concert and an alcohol information fair. These programs will be open to the public.

"Alcohol Awareness Week is intended to emphasize prevention through education as a means of helping to solve problems associated with alcohol misuse and abuse," Dr. John M. Howell, ECU Chancellor, said in a statement.

The program will promote responsible decision making regarding alcohol. It will also emphasize, Howell said, "that it is ultimately an individual's responsibility to make those decisions."

Directing activities for the week will be Dr. Ron Speier, associate dean and director of student services. The activities are:

• Sunday, Oct. 19, a concert at 2 p.m., on the mall or in Hendrix Theatre, by "The Awareness Art Ensemble."

• Monday at 6 p.m. in the lobby of Tyler Dorm, an information session on responsible drinking by BACCHUS (Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students.)

• Tuesday, 4-8 p.m., an Alcohol Information Fair in the lobby of Tyler and a 6 p.m. BACCHUS workshop and movie "Choices" in room 242 of Mendenhall Student Center.

• Wednesday, Oct. 22, at 6 p.m. a BACCHUS Information Session in the lobby of Slay Dorm. At 7 p.m. Mac McCarley, Greenville City Attorney, will discuss "Alcohol and the Law" in the basement of Jones Dorm.

• Thursday, Oct. 23, at 6 p.m. in room 242 Mendenhall Student Center, a BACCHUS Membership Meeting.

Speier said the programs will be open to the public and will be aimed at promoting prevention through education and through helping individuals make responsible decisions about alcohol use.

"We must begin to realize that only a personal commitment to making responsible decisions regarding alcohol will make an impact on the problems associated with its misuse and abuse," Speier said.

For more information contact Dr. Speier at 757-6824.

Summit Comes To End

WASHINGTON — (UPI)Before the Iceland Summit, President Reagan did not have to explain to anyone the agenda he was bringing to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. Now he has to explain it to the American people.

Reagan said he offered a 10-year delay in development of SDI in exchange for the elimination of ballistic missiles, but Gorbachev countered that SDI would have to be restricted to laboratory research.

Gorbachev held a news briefing shortly after the Shultz announcement, speaking at length about world peace and international relations but giving no details on the summit.

"The debates were very pointed and I'm still very much under the impression of those debates," he said, looking stone-faced. He added that arms talks in Geneva are now at a virtual standstill.

"The road that we have traveled to major accords on reduction of nuclear arms has given us substantial gains here in Reykjavik," Gorbachev said. "We have reached agreement on a great deal of things. I feel that President Reagan would have to seek advice of Congress, of American political leaders of the American public. We are waiting. We have not withdrawn the proposals we put forward."

The abrupt end to the summit was clearly a disappointment to both sides. Expectations of a breakthrough in arms control was heightened by the unexpected scheduling of a fourth Reagan-Gorbachev meeting Sunday afternoon.

Both Soviet and U.S. spokesmen hinted that progress was possible, but that all broke down over what Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz said was a Soviet refusal to permit more than laboratory testing of "Star Wars" weapons.

Nonetheless, Reagan said there were great strides made in his meeting with the Soviet leader.

"We made more progress than we anticipated when we came to Iceland," the president said.

"We moved toward agreement on vastly reduced numbers of intermediate range nuclear missiles in both Europe and Asia. We approached agreement on sharply reduced strategic arsenals for both our countries. We made progress in the area of nuclear testing. But there remained at the end of our talks, one area of disagreement" — "Star Wars."

"The Soviet Union's objective was to kill off the SDI program," Secretary of State George Shultz said in an unusually candid briefing with reporters after the final meeting. "The president simply had to refuse to compromise the security of the United States, our allies and our freedom. So in the end we are deeply disappointed at this outcome."

The two leaders also failed to set a date for a third Reagan-Gorbachev summit in the United States. "I don't see any prospect of it (a summit)," Shultz said, but he would not rule out the possibility of such a meeting.

It appeared that the leaders were making progress when they suddenly extended their Icelandic summit to add a fourth meeting, which ended about 3 p.m. EDT.

In advance of the summit, Gorbachev had pressed the United States for action on banning nuclear tests and making significant cuts in strategic arsenals as a step to the total elimination of atomic weapons.

U.S. officials had emphasized the search for a "framework" to reduce medium-range missiles in Europe and rejected a total test ban.

HEALTH COLUMN

By MARY ELESIA-ADAMS
Student Health Center

Flu, or influenza, is a group of viruses that attack the respiratory tract. Most infections occur during winter when humidity is low so that mucous membranes are left dried out and easily penetrated. One person can have repeated cases of the flu because there are so many different flu viruses already and new strains being created naturally through genetic mutation. After exposure to one strain of flu virus the person becomes immune to that particular strain but is still susceptible to other strains.

Prevention can take several forms. Since the flu virus is a respiratory "bug", it is spread by sneezing or coughing. The sneeze or cough contains microscopic moisture droplets of virus. The droplets then are inhaled by unsuspecting victims. Therefore, simply avoiding other students with flu-like symptoms will help. Also, try to avoid stress because resistance to flu is due to the integrity of the immunological system. Eat and rest properly. Avoid fatigue.

Fever, cough, sore throat, headache, muscle aches, and fatigue are some of the symptoms that let everyone know a "bug" is going around. Having these means you may already have the flu; the only treatment is symptomatic. Avoid exertion for 24-48 hours after the temperature has returned to normal. Aspirin or Tylenol helps for muscle aches and headaches. Salt water gargles are useful for sore throat. Steam inhalation, from a vaporizer, prevents mucous secretions from drying out. Decongestants can be helpful for sinus symptoms.

Usually, complete recovery occurs in uncomplicated cases. However, complications can result; the most common are secondary bacterial infections. These are suggested by persistence of fever and cough for more than five days. Consult a doctor then because antibiotics are needed to cure this infection.

Visit the Student Health Center "Cold Clinic" between the lobby and the pharmacy if you have questions concerning your sore throat or cold symptoms.

Mail-order Diplomas Available

CINCINNATI, OH (CPS)—Last year, it cost nearly $1800 for U.S. Congressman Claude Pepper, D-Fl., to get mail-order doctorate.

If he'd only waited a few months, Pepper—who was trying to dramatize the prevalence of "diploma mills" for a fee—could have become a doctor of Aztec Cuisine or Yodeling for just $13, says Christopher Wigert, the "Dean of Deans" at Fergle University in Cincinnati.

"I got up early one morning and started thinking of strange universities and the catalogue business," Wigert explains. "There's a gap in between the Harvard University catalogue and Spiegel's."

One need only send Wigert $13 for an official Fergle U. t-shirt and a diploma—thus saving thousands of dollars in tuition and hundreds of hours of study time at a regular college.

"We're talking about $100,000—just for a B.A.—at some of the finger institutions," he says. "Here at Fergle, you can skip all that and go right for your Ph.D."

As for the low, low cost of an education, Wigert says it can't be beat.

"We're definitely in a class by ourselves. Even Harvard can't compete," he notes. "Take Bennington (College), which costs about $15,000 an hour. For what students spend for a few days there (for a bachelor's degree), they can come here and get their Ph.D."

By sending their kids to Fergle, he adds, parents "can save enough money to buy that new house or that new car."

However, the campus is small, Wigert says—about the size of a five by seven inch post office box—so don't expect a huge dorm room.

In the month or so that the "school" has existed, Wigert reports nearly 25 alumni association members, but says he hopes to increase the number.

"By 1990, we hope the association will get as big as the combined populations of North Dakota, Wyoming and Alabama," Wigert continues.

Fergle's motto—Disce Aut Morere (Learn or Die)—makes Wigert cringe a little, but "where else can you get a great education and a shirt besides," he asks.

Although the idea behind Fergle U. is strictly for laughs, consumers have in the past been taken in by mail-order diploma mills, says David Smith, director of the Society for Values in Higher Education.

"It's hard to believe someone offering a Ph.D. in Aztec Cuisine could be taken seriously, but it has happened," he says. "Consumers can be misled by what fake credentials are going to do for them."

"The word 'doctor' gets translated into a resume or on a business card and that person is known as 'Dr. So-and-So.' Then, doors are opened," he warns.

Earlier this year, the "open doors" included those at the White House and other levels of government. FBI figures show about 200 federal employees hold phony academic or medical degrees.

Despite a maximum penalty of $10,000 in fines and a five-year prison sentence for claiming false credentials, the FBI discovered nearly 500,000 Americans—one out of every 200 employees—use them for getting jobs.

To dramatize how easy it is to get such "degrees," Rep. Pepper last year had one of his staff members answer an ad in Popular Mechanics magazine, pay the $1800 fee, and submit four brief book reports.

The congressman is now "Dr. Pepper," holder of a Ph.D. in psychology from a Los Angeles "university."

"The danger of misuse outweighs the humor of the situation," Smith asserts. "Even if 99 percent (of the people in the country) consider this sort of thing as just a joke, if only one percent cause some kind of harm through misrepresentation, is it not then unethical?"

"It should show us how thin the line is between the humor (of a situation) and the (serious business) of education," Smith concludes.

The Observer Poll, published Saturday by the Charlotte Observer, shows both Broyhill and Sanford holding 44 percent of the vote in statewide sample of 691 registered voters.

Last month's survey showed Broyhill up at 48 percent, compared to 43 percent for Sanford.

"It's been neck-and-neck all along. We believe we're picking up momentum right now," Broyhill said at a GOP event in Emerald Isle Saturday.

"You can sense it—for the last two weeks, the flow of this campaign is moving in our direction," Sanford said. "We've begun to get our television (commercials) out; we've been getting better play in newspapers."

Who says campus homecoming queens must be 19 years old?

The first 40-year-old homecoming queen candidate in East Carolina University's history says she offers students "twice as much for their votes."

Mature candidate Elizabeth Brady Wightman is a French-English major, sponsored by the ECU International Language Organization (ILO), a student group which she currently serves as secretary. ECU is a campus where students of all ages "can feel at home," she says, noting that ECU has several thousand "non-traditional" (over 25) students enrolled.

"Non-traditional students should take an active part in university activities, both curricular and extra-curricular," Ms. Wightman insists. While she "practically lives in the reference room" at ECU's Joyner Library, and has achieved a perfect 4.0 (all A) academic grade point average, Ms. Wightman has enjoyed social life on and off campus too.

Besides ILO she belongs to one honor society and has been invited to join another. Poll: Sanford And Broyhill

Voters Evenly Divided

Charlotte, N.C. (UPI)— North Carolinians have less than a month to select their next senator, but, according to recent newspaper poll, most voters are evenly divided between Sen. Jim Broyhill, R-N.C. and Democrat Terry Sanford.

The Observer Poll, published Saturday by the Charlotte Observer, shows both Broyhill and Sanford holding 44 percent of the vote in statewide sample of 691 registered voters.

Last month's survey showed Broyhill up at 48 percent, compared to 43 percent for Sanford. "It's been neck-and-neck all along. We believe we're picking up momentum right now," Broyhill said at a GOP event in Emerald Isle Saturday.

"You can sense it — for the last two weeks, the flow of this campaign is moving in our direction," Sanford said. "We've begun to get our television (commercials) out; we've been getting better play in newspapers."

The poll, conducted Oct. 1-6 with a 3.7 margin of error, also revealed shifts among voters that will weigh heavily in making the election a close-call. While 12 percent are undecided for either candidate, nearly 43 percent of those asked said they could easily change their minds about who will win their vote.

But the poll indicated that voters standing behind Sanford appear more unwavering than those backing Broyhill. Some 61 percent of those for Sanford, who was governor from 1961 to 1965 and Duke University president until 1985, said they would not change their minds. The other 37 percent of Sanford supporters said they could easily change their mind.

For Broyhill, a 12-term congressman appointed to the Senate upon the death of Sen. John East, R-N.C., last summer, 55 percent of his supporters said they would vote for him in November. But 40 percent said they could easily switch their vote.

Strategists at both camps attribute the even-handed support to a campaign marked by little mud-slinging, which became the legacy of the 1984 Senate race between Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and then-Gov. Jim Hunt.

"Neither candidate is giving voters strong reasons against the other candidates. That reduces the intensity of their support," said Sanford poll-taker Harrison Hickman.

"If, all of a sudden, one candidate found a silver bullet, you could drive your support up," said Broyhill strategist Brad Hays. "But, with the kind of gentlemanly campaign we're running, I don't see a silver bullet anywhere."

About the only stickler in the Broyhill-Sanford race has been a TV commercial by the senator in which Sanford is chastised for creating a food tax. Sanford has broadcast his own commercial defending the 1961 food tax as a means of supporting North Carolina education and dismissing the critical ad as "silly."

The poll notes that North Carolinians are not soured by the food tax. Some 54 percent of the survey's respondents said that extending the state food tax for public education was a good idea while only 35 percent considered it a mistake. About 56 percent of those asked also said the food tax would not play into their choice for senator.

"That's the briar patch we didn't mind being thrown into," Hickman said. "Broyhill looks pretty foolish being against what North Carolinians believe was a correct decision."

But Broyhill campaign manager Kim Hutchens disagreed.

"Terry Sanford thinks it's an issue," Hutchens said. "He's taking time and spending money to defuse it."

A vivacious redhead with startlingly green eyes, Elizabeth has certainly led what she refers to as a "non-traditional life." Originally from Wilmington, N.C., she spent half her girlhood years in Wilmington before the family moved to Florida.

Reagan Hangs On To Star Wars

On the failure to reach an agreement at the Iceland pre-summit meeting, Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev said, "We were on the verge of taking major, history-making decisions. The American administration, as we understand now, is out to make a breakthrough...to military superiority."

Now it may be true that both Mr. Gorbachev and President Reagan were on the verge of making history. But it is also true that doing so may not have been in the best interest of the free world.

President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev took unprecedented steps when they verbally agreed to reduce long-range missile and bomber arsenals by half over the next five years and eliminate them completely by the year 1996.

Are you surprised? Read on, there's more. In addition they were prepared to eliminate all but 100 medium-range missiles on each side — including all those deployed in Europe — during the first five year phase and the balance of those by 1996 as well.

Sounds great, doesn't it. Well, there's a catch. In exchange for all this, the Soviets wanted one thing — Star Wars.

They insisted that the present ABM treaty be changed so as to confine the research, testing and development of SDI to the laboratory. Reagan, however, stood strong and flatly refused. When he did, the arms control talks came to a screaming halt.

If you're an advocate of SDI you're probably doing back flips by now — beaming with pride that your President stood by his guns. If you're an SDI critic you're undoubtedly frustrated, wondering how the President could blow such a golden opportunity to bring security to the world.

In the end, it matters little where you stand in the debate over the practicality and economics of SDI — the Soviets believe in it. They believe in it enough to walk away from the bargaining table with major agreements so close at hand.

Agreeing not to use a deadly weapon is no guarantee of safety. The only way to eliminate the nuclear threat completely is to render nuclear weapons impotent. This is the concept behind SDI, whether you believe it is feasible or not. This is reason enough to do what President Reagan did.

GREAT JOB OF STRATEGIC DEFENSE, LITTLE BUDDY! CAN YOU BELIEVE THAT THING ALMOST GOT THROUGH? IT WAS A CLOSE CALL FOR ALL OF US.

Sen. Helms: The Debate Continues

Dear editor:

I hope someone from the History Dept. read Matthew Clarke's gattling-gun response to Bern McCrady's column ("From the Left") in the Oct. 7 issue of this newspaper. I'm sure that Queen Elizabeth II and Margaret Thatcher are both doing handstands to know that South Africa is still a member of the British Commonwealth. Just think of all those back taxes they can collect!

If he didn't pick it up in his history books, a quick look at The World Almanac would have told Mr. Clarke that on May 31, 1961, by referendum, the Union of South Africa withdrew from the Commonwealth and became the Republic of South Africa.

Notwithstanding his incredibly naive statement that, "Both blacks and whites are free to come on as they please in South Africa," (!!) if Mr. Clarke can't keep his head straight, he should at least try to keep his facts straight.

Jan Higginbotham,
Greenville

On The Right Track

Dear editor:

One would ordinarily think that the Secretary of the Helms Club at ECU would offer a better defense for his favorite senator. Matthew Clarke's defense of Senator Jesse Helms (Campus Forum, Oct. 7) was totally irrelevant and, at times, uncomplimentary to our senator. Clarke's ideas are typical of today's narrow minded right wing college student.

First of all, he compared Senator Helms to "the freshest breath of air the senate has seen since Joe McCarthy, who cleansed many communists from America." Now, I'm not a history major like Clarke, but even I know what a hoax McCarthy instigated when he accused many Americans of communist ties — state department officials, other politicians, authors, actors, and various entertainers.

His accusations were credible until they became too numerous and absurd to believe. For the most part, The "Red Scare" was unveiled as a fraud, and Senator McCarthy soon began to look like a fool. Now I don't think Senator Helms would appreciate being compared to Joe McCarthy.

Another misguided and irrelevant point of Clarke's was his argument about the press's liberal bias. In the case of Grenada, Clarke stated that "the pinko-panzy press labeled it an invasion, but in truth it was a rescue mission..." Isn't an invasion defined as a forceable entry? Didn't U.S. military troops force their way into Grenada? Although it was a rescue mission, wasn't our government the first source to refer to it as an invasion?

And finally, I suppose I can agree with Mr. Clarke on one point. The nation of South Africa definitely deserves praise for their apartheid, segregation, suppression, and their ability to stand up against those who criticize their martial rule. They should continue to shoot all South African protestors, and those who survive should be shot again!

In addition, the world press should be banned from that country, for other nations of the world might become envious of the harmonious existence between the South African government and its citizens. We've all seen news shots of the military's popular reception in many black communities. (Blacks line the streets in protest and are met with direct force.)

In conclusion, Mr. Clarke, all of your points have little to do with defending Senator Helms. As Secretary for the Helms Club, don't you think you should be promoting Senator Helms' positive aspects? I suppose that since these are few and far between, you have to resort to his tactics — attacking or finding fault with someone else's ideas.

The time has come for politicians such as Senator Helms to stress their own ideas when campaigning. Their proponents should do the same being careful not to offend potential voters like myself. After all, that is the name of the game, isn't it? It's time the far right got back on the right track.

Capital Punishment: Should It Get The Axe?

By DAVID LEWIS
Special To The East Carolinian

Congress, under pressure from constituents to act on what President Reagan calls his "Drug-Free America" initiative, is moving quickly to pass such legislation before the fall recess. The Senate has already passed its $1.5 billion version 97 to 2, while the House has its own $3 billion package. The two deliberative bodies are dangerously close to compromise language and a single, unified bill. "Dangerously" not because there is much doubt a war on drugs is a war of unanimous appeal, but because in the heady atmosphere of bandwagoning, undue haste may saddle us all with unwise legislation.

Besides the price, one of the differences between the two bills is that the House version calls for the death-penalty "for those who intentionally cause death while committing an offense" under the "drug kingpin" law. The Senate's version offers only a non-binding, sense-of-the-Senate resolution on capital punishment.

In these politically conservative times, it is not surprising to see calls for broadening the use of execution as a crime-fighting device. As with the other principals of the so-called moral agenda, (ex. abortion, prayer in school), the debate over capital punishment seldom proceeds at a reasonable decibel level. It is a volatile issue which generates hyperbole and ill-tempered invective, quickly establishing two basic camps: the barbarians versus the soft-headed bleeding hearts. Yet if ever there was a time for careful scrutiny and calm, responsible analysis, it is on such an issue — literally a matter of life and death.

The most practical claim for capital punishment is its deterrent capacity. But is the claim true? This is perhaps the oldest argument in the debate over execution.

In 1949, King George VI appointed a Royal Commission to investigate the advisability of limiting or modifying capital punishment in Great Britain. Serving from 1949-1953, the Commission requested information and statistics from various countries which had abolished the death-penalty, in order to understand what consequences had been observed. Some nations had no statistics available, but the following serve as representative comments by nations which had compiled such statistics:

Campus Spectrum

The Belgian Ministry of Justice wrote, "The lesson has been learnt that the best means of inculcating respect for life is to refrain from taking life in the name of the law." This was substantiated by the Belgian Government's report that, "since the practice of commuting all death sentences for civil offenses was introduced, no increasing crimes or offenses have been observed which could be attributed to the failure to carry out the death-penalty."

The Netherlands: "It is definitely established that the abolition of the death-penalty in the ordinary penal code has not resulted in an increase or a worsening of crime."

Norway: "There is no information to indicate that the abolition of the death-penalty has led to any increase in the number of homicides, of crimes of violence in general, or of attacks on prison staff."

Sweden: "The general view is that the abolition of the death sentence has not entailed any increase in the number of crimes." And so on.

In a number of instances, Italy and Germany in particular, abolition of the death-penalty preceded significant drops in homicide. Italy, for example, enjoyed a thirty year period following abolition, during which the homicide rate dropped to 1/3 of what it was previously.

If this evidence does not show execution is a deterrent to murder, it certainly does not prove abolition reduces murder, either. What it tends to indicate is what the Commission found, "that whether the death-penalty is used or not, or whether executions are frequent or not, both death-penalty states and abolitionist states show rates which suggest that these rates are conditioned by other factors than the death-penalty." Great Britain soon joined the majority of the developed world in abolishing capital punishment.

The study referred to by Lance Hardin (Dr. Stephen K. Layson, Southern Economic Journal, July 1985) in The East Carolinian (9/25) admits "unknown omitted variables" may be responsible for some of the study's data, and that (regarding the estimate of 18 murders deterred for every execution) "under certain conditions this may give misleading estimates of the true tradeoff."

For example, if juries react to any increased relative frequency of execution by demanding greater proof of guilt before convicting, an increase in the probability of execution may reduce the probability of convictions, wholly or partially offsetting the deterrent effect of the increase in probability of execution." This very phenomenon was reported by E. Roy Calvert in his book Capital Punishment in the 20th Century.

Concerning criminal statistics during periods of legal execution, Calvert recorded, "In consequence of the strong proofs of guilt necessary for conviction of crimes punishable by death, the proportion of acquittals for murder is higher than for most other crimes, and an acquittal in such a case does not necessarily imply failure to detect the perpetrator of the crime."

Many factors are involved in crime, and the assertion of the deterrent value of one particular factor (execution) on crimes of murder is difficult to support. That being the case, other aspects of capital punishment should be examined.

The irrevocable nature of death as a punishment is disturbingly clear to all who have contemplated the possibility of judicial error. Such errors have occurred in the past and will continue in the future.

Lafayette made the issue plain when he announced, "I will ask for the abolition of capital punishment until I have the infallibility of human judgment demonstrated to me." And never is the likelihood of error greater than when the brutality of certain crimes makes the public recoil in horror and demand immediate action by its officials.

As Mr. Hardin indicated in the past, the press plays a pivotal role in the public's appreciation of crime. Sensationalism sells copy. Most recently, we (along with the Law) have pursued Michael W. Jackson in his spree of alleged killings, abductions, and car thefts from Indiana across Illinois into Missouri. The public service that such coverage offers citizens endangered by such a man is great, but it overshadows the fact most homicide involves the unpremeditated crime of passion, not only unlikely to be repeated, but also unlikely to be deterred by thoughts of consequences. The public is left with the unrealistic stereotype of the murderer as a psychotic serial killer.

As Mr. Hardin points out, the victims must never be forgotten in our search for justice. Retribution is the responsibility of the state. But we make up the state, and we have a collateral responsibility to be sure some just purpose is served by our collective action. If we are blinded by frustration and vengeance, then our judgement, too, becomes a crime of passion.

Anti-Obscenity Law Changes Curriculum

GREENSBORO, N.C. (CPS) — A tough new anti-obscenity law is causing big changes in some classes at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro this fall.

At least two professors are changing their course content to avoid risking arrest.

As a result, film history students no longer can study Federico Fellini movies, while art students can't see slides of certain artwork.

Some human sexuality books were removed from the library and some artists' visions of nude figures were removed from campus display until student and faculty protest forced administrators to return them to public use last week.

Though the new law can be applied statewide, no other North Carolina colleges besides UNC-G are enduring any of its effects.

Some think it's because UNC-G's liberal reputation seems to have attracted the attention of a group of Christian fundamentalists who lobbied vigorously for the new anti-obscenity law in the state legislature last year.

"UNC-G is really no more liberal than any other UNC campus, but it does share a rather liberal reputation with UNC-Chapel Hill," says North Carolina State University spokeswoman Rosalind Reid.

But NC State hasn't "had any kind of reaction to the laws as yet," she adds.

"The only controversy, so far, has been at UNC-G," agrees George Gardner of the American Civil Liberties Union's (ACLU) Raleigh Office. "But it's hard to say what other professors aren't doing any longer at other campuses."

At UNC-G, however, the controversy has been continuous since film history Prof. Tony Fragola decided the new law was "ambiguous" enough to drop the works of Federico Fellini and a few other filmmakers from his syllabus.

Some films Fragola has shown in class "deal with sexual activity involving minors, and showing them could make me susceptible to prosecution under the law. If the students seeing the films are minors, I could also be liable for displaying sexually explicit materials to minors."

Communications Prof. Thomas Tedford's lawyer advised him to stop showing a slide show about erotic art and obscenity court cases from his class on First Amendment law, saying he could be arrested for it.

In addition, an art class using live nude models for life drawing probably will disappear after this semester.

School administrators, moreover, told Fragola they'd take no responsibility for what professors teach in their classes, "leaving it up to the individual to defend for himself" if obscenity charges arise, Fragola says.

Karen Carpenter, an assistant editor of the UNC-G Carolinian, agrees school officials seem content to "continue to do things as always. They say the law was not made for this school, but they're being very tight-lipped."

Indeed, no UNC-G official would respond officially to College Press Service questions about the course changes.

One campus official, who asked to remain anonymous, dismissed the controversy as overblown. "As far as I know, it's affected only two professors (Tedford and Fragola). I'm not aware of any other changes, and I don't anticipate any others."

The new law makes it a felony for adults to possess pornography in their homes, lets local communities—not state courts—define what is obscene, and lets police arrest anyone suspected of disseminating porn before a judge determines whether the material is in fact obscene.

As a result, Carpenter says, professors may not chance to argue the value of their allegedly obscene course content before being hauled off to jail.

"There's no fair warning clause," she notes. "Violators can be arrested on the spot, and it's up to a jury to determine if the material under question is legal or not."

The well-publicized course changes and the prospect of professors being carted off to jail "have raised interest in the issue on the part of students," the

ACLU's Gardner reports.

Although Gardner adds private citizens are at just as much risk of arrest as professors, "there's not that much awareness (of the risk) on the part of the average person because most feel they aren't inconvenienced by the statute."

Several UNC-G students, however, have started a Citizens Against Censorship (CAC) group to raise money to try to repeal the new law.

While students seem to feel aggrieved by the law, CAC's Phil McCaul adds "this is a conservative environment and the law is vaguely written, so we're holding seminars and writing letters to publicize its potential danger."

"The law," he asserts, "is part of a big movement to return to 'traditional values' and 'anti-secular humanism.' Most people realize the law is a bad thing."

Next summer, she plans to study at the Sorbonne in Paris under an arrangement with the ECU Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures. When she graduates, Ms. Wightman would like to teach high school French—and find a docked boat to live in.

Right now, being a student again offers sufficient thrills and she's still getting used to "having to study again."

Horror

By MICAH HARRIS
Staff Writer

The season of hollow ghouls and artificial characters will soon be upon us and the reader's fancy may well turn to the bizarre, the horrific, even to repulsive.

But enough about romance novels. Let's talk about horror fiction. It was in the mid to late '70s when Stephen King's "Carrie" burst the dam of public bias against the murky waters of horror fiction entered the mainstream.

King followed up "Carrie" with more books than a werewolf has hairs. Others have joined in, taking advantage of the acceptability of the horror novel now enjoyed by many authors came out of the closet (where, as everyone with has been a child knows, the monsters are anyway), the most notable of King's partners in fear being Peter Straub, author of "Ghost Story" and collaborator with King on "The Talisman."

But as important as King has been to the welfare of horror fiction, it has gotten along pretty well without him for centuries. From the dirty, poverty-stricken and ignorant peasants who shared tales of the supernatural while the evening's fire flickered, distorted shadows over the faces and a wolf howled far, away, to the Universal and Hammer horror movies on "Shoof Theater," to today's spook novels, thicker than a New York telephone directory, and the multi-million dollar films literally oozing with special effects, the horror industry is going strong. Anti-Obscenity Law Changes Curriculum

GREENSBORO, N.C. (CPS) — A tough new anti-obscenity law is causing big changes in some classes at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro this fall.

At least two professors are changing their course content to avoid risking arrest.

As a result, film history students no longer can study Federico Fellini movies, while art students can't see slides of certain artwork.

Some human sexuality books were removed from the library and some artists' visions of nude figures were removed from campus display until student and faculty protest forced administrators to return them to public use last week.

Though the new law can be applied statewide, no other North Carolina colleges besides UNC-G are enduring any of its effects.

Some think it's because UNC-G's liberal reputation seems to have attracted the attention of a group of Christian fundamentalists who lobbied vigorously for the new anti-obscenity law in the state legislature last year.

"UNC-G is really no more liberal than any other UNC campus, but it does share a rather liberal reputation with UNC-Chapel Hill," says North Carolina State University spokeswoman Rosalind Reid.

But NC State hasn't "had any kind of reaction to the laws as yet," she adds.

"The only controversy, so far, has been at UNC-G," agrees George Gardner of the American Civil Liberties Union's (ACLU) Raleigh Office. "But it's hard to say what other professors aren't doing any longer at other campuses."

At UNC-G, however, the controversy has been continuous since film history Prof. Tony Fragola decided the new law was "ambiguous" enough to drop the works of Federico Fellini and a few other filmmakers from his syllabus.

Some films Fragola has shown in class "deal with sexual activity involving minors, and showing them could make me susceptible to prosecution under the law. If the students seeing the films are minors, I could also be liable for displaying sexually explicit materials to minors."

Communications Prof. Thomas Tedford's lawyer advised him to stop showing a slide show about erotic art and obscenity court cases from his class on First Amendment law, saying he could be arrested for it.

In addition, an art class using live nude models for life drawing probably will disappear after this semester.

School administrators, moreover, told Fragola they'd take no responsibility for what professors teach in their classes, "leaving it up to the individual to defend for himself" if obscenity charges arise, Fragola says.

Karen Carpenter, an assistant editor of the UNC-G Carolinian, agrees school officials seem content to "continue to do things as always. They say the law was not made for this school, but they're being very tight-lipped."

Indeed, no UNC-G official would respond officially to College Press Service questions about the course changes.

One campus official, who asked to remain anonymous, dismissed the controversy as overblown. "As far as I know, it's affected only two professors (Tedford and Fragola). I'm not aware of any other changes, and I don't anticipate any others."

The new law makes it a felony for adults to possess pornography in their homes, lets local communities—not state courts—define what is obscene, and lets police arrest anyone suspected of disseminating porn before a judge determines whether the material is in fact obscene.

As a result, Carpenter says, professors may not chance to argue the value of their allegedly obscene course content before being hauled off to jail.

"There's no fair warning clause," she notes. "Violators can be arrested on the spot, and it's up to a jury to determine if the material under question is legal or not."

The well-publicized course changes and the prospect of professors being carted off to jail "have raised interest in the issue on the part of students," the

ACLU's Gardner reports.

Although Gardner adds private citizens are at just as much risk of arrest as professors, "there's not that much awareness (of the risk) on the part of the average person because most feel they aren't inconvenienced by the statute."

Several UNC-G students, however, have started a Citizens Against Censorship (CAC) group to raise money to try to repeal the new law.

While students seem to feel aggrieved by the law, CAC's Phil McCaul adds "this is a conservative environment and the law is vaguely written, so we're holding seminars and writing letters to publicize its potential danger."

"The law," he asserts, "is part of a big movement to return to 'traditional values' and 'anti-secular humanism.' Most people realize the law is a bad thing."

survived snow and ice training at Mount Baker, an active volcano in the Oregon Cascades.

Next summer, she plans to study at the Sorbonne in Paris under an arrangement with the ECU Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures. When she graduates, Ms. Wightman would like to teach high school French—and find a docked boat to live in.

Right now, being a student again offers sufficient thrills and she's still getting used to "having to study again."

This year's homecoming queen competition winner at ECU won't just be "queen for a day" after Chancellor John Howell places the crown on her head during halftime at the Oct. 18 homecoming football game. She will be a "Miss ECU" designate who will be called upon to represent the campus in regional fairs, festivals and other occasions.

Horror

By MICAH HARRIS

The season of hollow gothic heads and artificial characters will soon be upon us and reader's fancy may well turn to the bizarre, the horrific, even the repulsive.

But enough about romance novels. Let's talk about horror fiction. It was in the mid-to-late '70s when Stephen King's Carrie burst the dam of public bias and the murky waters of horror fiction entered the mainstream.

King followed up Carrie with more books than a werewolf has hairs. Others have joined in, taking advantage of the acceptance of the horror novel now enjoyed by many authors came out of the closet (where, as everyone knows, monsters are anyway), the most notable of King's partners in crime being Peter Straub, author of Ghost Story and collaborator with King on The Talisman.

Horror Literature Still In The Main Stream

By MICAH HARRIS
Staff Writer

The season of hollow gourd heads and artificial characters will soon be upon us and a reader's fancy may well turn to the bizarre, the horrific, even the repulsive.

But enough about romance novels. Let's talk about horror fiction. It was in the mid to late '70s when Stephen King's Carrie burst the dam of public bias apart and the murky waters of horror fiction entered the main stream.

King followed up Carrie with more books than a werewolf has hairs. Others have joined in, taking advantage of the acceptability the horror novel now enjoys. Many authors came out of the closet (where, as everyone who has been a child knows, the monsters are anyway), the most notable of King's partners in fear being Peter Straub, author of Ghost Story and collaborator with King on The Talisman.

But as important as King has been to the welfare of horror fiction, it has gotten along pretty well without him for centuries.

From the dirty, poverty-stricken and ignorant peasants who shared tales of the supernatural while the evening's fire flickered distorted shadows over their faces and a wolf howled far, far away, to the Universal and Hammer horror movies on "Shock Theater," to today's spooky novels, thicker than a New York telephone directory, and the multi-million dollar firms literally oozing with special effects, the horror industry is going strong. (I can remember when it was a thrill to see on TV a version of "Horror of Dracula" that somehow escaped the censor's scissors. When Lucy Westmore is staked in her crypt, we actually get to see a blood stain squirt on her blouse. Wow!)

The contribution of three other writers, all but one of their names unfamiliar to the general public (you never see them doing a Federal Express Card commercial or on MTV), kept horror fiction alive and indeed mid-wifed it through some hard labor.

They granted horror a safe passage from such far away gothic settings as a castle in Transylvania to, in the words of Stephen King, "the Seven-Eleven store down the block" in the home of baseball, hot dogs, and mom's apple pie.

Ray Bradbury, who entered mainstream fiction with his gentle (but occasionally biting) blend of fantasy and science fiction, is the most notable of these authors. But Bradbury's early work, as he confesses in his introduction to The October Country, is "...a type of story that I rarely have done since 1946." Said type was (by Stephen King's classifications in Danse Macabre) mostly horror, occasionally terror, and even a few memorable gross-outs.

In "The Man Upstairs," for example, a little boy discovers that one of his grandmother's boarders is a vampire. After watching Granny prepare a turkey for supper, the little rascal goes upstairs during the day, cuts open the vampire, and pulls out a variety of bizarre organs before sowing the monster with silver coins.

In "The October Game," a woman discovers she is playing the Halloween-party game of "the witches' guts" with her little girl's — well, you know...

Bradbury's horror is also superb. "The Small Assassin" is about a literal enfant terrible who systematically murders his parents. In "The Emissary," a bedridden youngster realizes he should have taught his dog not to dig in another person's garden — or grave — when the pet returns home accompanied by the walking corpse of the boy's favorite teacher.

A sort-of protege of Bradbury was the unjustly forgotten writer, Charles Beaumont. I have yet to see a book of Beaumont's at Walden Books or B. Dalton's; they are probably out of print but worth searching for in used book stores and libraries.

Beaumont's most visible work remains his "Twilight Zone" teleplays, some of which were based on his original series, such as "Elegy," in which astronauts land on a planet where, seemingly, the only inhabitants are embalmed corpses posed like mannequins throughout the city; or, "The Howling Man" in which a sick wanderer stumbles onto a European monastery where the devil is imprisoned.

Beaumont was capable of producing touching and sentimental work, as his short story "Fair Lady," and his script for The Seven Faces of Dr. Lao attest. But his fascination with the morbid stems from his upbringing which was a child's nightmare.

His story, "Miss Gentilbelle," in which a disturbed woman living in a secluded country mansion dresses her young son as a girl and sadistically kills his pets in front of him, was based on a true experience from Beaumont's own childhood.

Other Beaumont output was in an Alfred Hitchcock vein such as The Hunger and Open House. Sadly, Beaumont's short but prolific career came to a long, agonizing end when he succumbed to a degenerative brain disease. He died in 1967.

Richard Matheson, like Beaumont, was a regular contributor to the original "Twilight Zone." Matheson, now a story consultant for this season's "Amazing Stories," remains a much-beloved author by fantasy and SF fans although his work has not received the general recognition it deserves.

His novel, I Am Legend, is a tour de force account of the last human in a society of mutated vampires. Matheson actually works out a believable, scientific rationale for vampirism.

His short fiction is famous for its morbidly delightful twists. In "Through Channels," a piece consisting entirely of dialogue, a family pays little attention to a television show featuring giant worms with big mouths and broadcasting the message "FEED"... that is, until the TV devours them and the message changes to "FED".

Matheson has occasionally taken the point of view of a ghastly protagonist. The obvious example is his first and still most famous short story, "Born of Man and Woman," in which a horribly mutated child, kept in the cellar by his parents, expresses his frustrations by diary entries. Or, "Dress of White Silk," which is a story about a little girl who happens to be a werewolf. And you know how kids love to eat.

Most of the Bradbury stories mentioned above should be readily available in his collection The October Country. Beaumont's work is notably present in The Hunger And Other Stories and Matheson has sundry collections you may uncover in used book stores. Titles include The Shores of Space, Shock I, Shock II, Shock III and Born of Man and Woman.

Just the right stuff to curl up with by a Jack-O'-Lantern on a chilly October night.

The Phantoms

Greenville's hottest blues/rock band, The Phantoms, will play their distinctive interpretations of blues and rock 'n' roll classics, little-known tunes and contemporary songs as well as (if we're lucky) some of their originals Thursday night in The Underground.

Three Hot Comedians To Laugh It Up In Hendrix Tonight

By D.A. SWANSON
Staff Writer

The new drinking age got you down? Still trying to recuperate from mid-terms? Your roommate set fire to your gold fish while you were out of town this weekend? Sounds like you're in deep need of a good laugh.

Well, if you're not interested in paying the costs of a night at TW's Comedy Zone then the Student Union has the ticket for you. For only $2.50 ($4 for faculty and staff) you can be entertained by three of the hottest rising comic stars from New York and L.A.

Ron Darian, Mike Duga and Brett Butler, on tour with the Comedy Laff-Off, will be appearing tonight at Mendenhall's Hendrix Theater at 8 p.m. to thrill and delight you. Audience response to the tour has been nothing but outstanding. Fordham University in the Bronx calls it "Exciting and diverse." Eastern New Mexico University says it was "a tremendous success." Ron Darian left the St. Mary's College of Maryland "Rolling." Now, are those rave reviews, or what?

Headling tonight will be Darian. Currently he is starring in national television commercials for Diet Coke and Michelob beer and will be appearing regularly in Bill Bogg's new "Comedy Tonight" series. He also became something of a regular at New York's "The Bottom Line" where he has opened for such notable club bands as NRBO and The Straws. His forte is primarily in impersonations of characters and sounds — everything from Star Trek to The Twilight Zone. According to the reviews and re-bookings that chase him around the country, he is definitely a comic not to be missed.

Also appearing will be fire juggler and New Jersey native, Mike Duga. He has only recently been added to the Laff-Off tour roster and should be full of surprises. Strangely enough, Duga didn't begin his comedy career (formally, that is) until he'd left the Jersey shore for Salt Lake City. Must be all those crazy Mormons and their strange (or are they really so strange?) ideas about marriage that turned him to such a nutty career.

Newest to the Laff-Off roster is Brett Butler. We're assuming he's from Mars or something since his agent didn't send any promo material in advance.

That's it. If you're feeling a little down, or just enjoy a little humor, or just plain don't have anything better to do, Mendenhall is the place to be tonight. Two bucks is a piddling price for this kind of high quality entertainment. Be there, or be in the library.

Religions Come Together

Buddhists and Christians will discuss their religions at a conference, October 16, at the ECU Willis Building (Regional Development Institute).

The "Conference on Buddhist-Christian Dialogue" will feature Dr. Roger J. Corless, a well-known author and professor of religion at Duke University, and Bhante Henepola Gunaratana Mahathera, a Buddhist monk at the Washington Buddhist Vihara. Sessions begin at 10 a.m. and are free and open to the public.

"The main goal of the conference is to bring together persons who adhere to religions which derive from very different cultures," said Dr. Calvin Mercer, an ECU assistant professor of religious studies in the Department of Philosophy.

"We want the speakers to provide a context for Buddhists and Christians to learn from one another. The intent is certainly not to turn Christians into Buddhists or Buddhists into Christians, but rather to use religion as a means of bringing a greater understanding of and appreciation for another's culture," Mercer said.

Registration will begin at 9:30 a.m. and the conference will begin at 10 a.m. Dr. Gunaratana will speak at 10:15 and Dr. Corless at 11:15. Each will speak on the use of meditation and contemplation in their forms of worship.

Afternoon sessions begin with a panel discussion at 2 p.m. At 3 p.m. the audience will break into small groups for discussion of the issues. Another panel discussion and group reports, at 3:45 p.m., will follow.

Gunaratana was born in Sri Lanka and was a Buddhist monk in India and Malaysia before coming to the United States in 1968. He earned a Ph.D. in Philosophy from American University and is now the chief incumbent monk of the Washington Buddhist Vihara.

Corless is the author of numerous books and articles. He was recently named to the editorial board of Buddhist-Christian Studies.

New Deli Stands Out

By BECKY TOY
Staff Writer

In a town that caters to the student palate, there seems to be an endless procession of fast food, drive-in, drive-out establishments, with nothing more going for them than the speed with which they can churn out an edible plastic burger.

In the midst of this confusion of arches and girls with strange red pigtails, there is a place that stands out: the New Deli. By day, they are a low-budget, high-quality restaurant — the closest thing to a real deli that you'll find in this town. And by night, The New Deli offers perhaps the most eclectic range of musical entertainment.

So, back to the food — What do they have?

The Deli's menu offers a daily selection of soups, the standard salads (tossed $1.25, chef $3.75), bagels made any way you can imagine ($1.50 to $3.55), and a variety of sandwiches, combos, construct-your-own, and house specialties that will make it virtually impossible to decide on one.

The sandwiches range in price from $1.35 to $4.65, and the fillings run from the standard roast beef, ham and turkey to pastrami, tuna salad, and liver-wurst (palatable only to the few, the proud or the real deli-mongers, by the way).

The New Deli also has a selection of cookies, cakes, etc., cruelly arranged in a glass case near the register, so you can't say no.

They offer a wide selection of domestic and imported beers as well; Christian Brothers' Chablis, Rose, and a burgundy by Carlo Rossi are available by the glass, the carafe, and the half carafe — but only if you're 21. Sorry kids.

In short, The New Deli has all the makings of a beloved hangout — the food is wonderful and made the way you like it. The atmosphere invites you to sit down and stay for awhile, and the staff is highly attentive.

They want to ensure that everything is the way you like it, and that is the best reason to visit the New Deli again.

Too Much Paul Palmer

By TIM CHANDLER
Senior Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — Paul Palmer electrified the Temple fans and shocked ECU as he rushed for 349 yards and boosted the Owls to a 45-28 victory over the Pirates.

Palmer's total came up only eight yards short of the all-time NCAA single game rushing record. The senior running back and Heisman Trophy hopeful also added three touchdowns, one of which came on a 78-yard scamper.

After the game ECU head coach Art Baker could only shake his head at Palmer's performance.

"There was too much Paul Palmer today," said Baker. "I never felt anyone could gain 349 yards against us — he was almost like a ghost — he is certainly an outstanding football player."

Temple broke out into the lead first when quarterback Lee Saltz hit a streaking Keith Gloster with a 51-yard touchdown pass only 1:03 into the opening quarter. Bill Wright's PAT made the score 7-0.

The Pirates then began a drive at their own 31-yard line and behind the play of freshman Charlie Libretto moved the ball all the way to the Temple 34 before a fumble by Libretto turned the ball back over to the Owls.

After stopping Temple, the Pirates took over once again at their own 35 and moved all the way down for an apparent six-yard touchdown run. The TD, however, was called back because of an illegal formation call, forcing ECU to settle for a 22-yard field goal by Chuck Berleth.

After yielding a field goal to the Owls, the Pirates began what once again looked like a touchdown drive. The drive died at the Temple 18, however, and the Pirates had to settle for another Berleth field goal closing the margin to 10-6.

On Temple's next possession, Palmer picked up his first touchdown of the day with a two-yard burst over the right side of the line, giving Temple a 17-6 lead.

The Owls increased their lead to 24-6 when Todd McNair rammed 20 yards for a score capping off an 80-yard drive.

Red-shirt freshman Travis Hunter came with only 1:30 left in the half and guided the Pirates on a 74-yard drive capped off with a 27-yard pass to Jarrod Moody to close the gap. Hunter's two-point conversion pass to Don Gaylor pulled the Pirates within 24-14 at the half.

At the outset of the second half, Hunter seemed once again ready to push the Pirates into the endzone. A fumble by Moody at the Temple 37 killed the drive for the Bucs though.

The Pirates never recovered from the turnover as Palmer added a 20-yard touchdown followed by a 78-yard burst on the Owls next possession to give Temple a 38-14 lead.

Hunter got the Pirates within 16 points late in the third quarter as he guided the Bucs on a 76-yard drive. A ten-yard pass to Amos Adams gave the Bucs the touchdown.

The two teams exchanged touchdowns in the fourth quarter to round out the scoring.

Baker said after the game that he felt that the Pirates had beaten themselves.

"It was the type of game today that we could have kept up with them in scoring if we hadn't beaten ourselves," said Baker. "We had three consecutive missed opportunities in the first quarter where we came away with only six points instead of at least 17."

Baker, at his weekly press conference said that Hunter had earned the starting possession for this Saturday's game with Georgia Southern.

"Travis came in and did a very good job for us at the quarterback position," said Baker. "He came in and in the second half

Craig Faircloth was the top scorer for the men finishing with 2,662 points. He was closely followed by junior Patrick Brennan who compiled 2,584 points. Tyge Pistorio, also a junior was third with 2,514. Rounding out the top-five for the men were Raymond Kennedy and Ronald Fleming, who finished with 2,227 and 2,138 respectively.

Pistorio was the only double winner for the men, as he won both the 200-meter individual medley and the 100-meter backstroke.

Other winners for the men were: Fleming in the 100-meter fly, Kennedy in the 100-meter breaststroke and David Killeen in the 100-meter freestyle.

Pirate swim coach Rick Kobe was pleased with both the men and women in their first outing of the season, especially the depth.

"The meet went very well. It was the closest we've ever had," Kobe said. "If you score over one thousand points that's pretty good, and 38 of our 42 swimmers scored over 1000."

Kobe singled out freshmen swimmers Charles Thompson and Faircloth for the men and Dolan and Wilson for the women for their performances.

The next meet for swimmers will be the Purple/Gold swim meet on Thursday at 4:00 p.m. in Minges Natatorium.

McCarthy Honored As Booters Win Pair

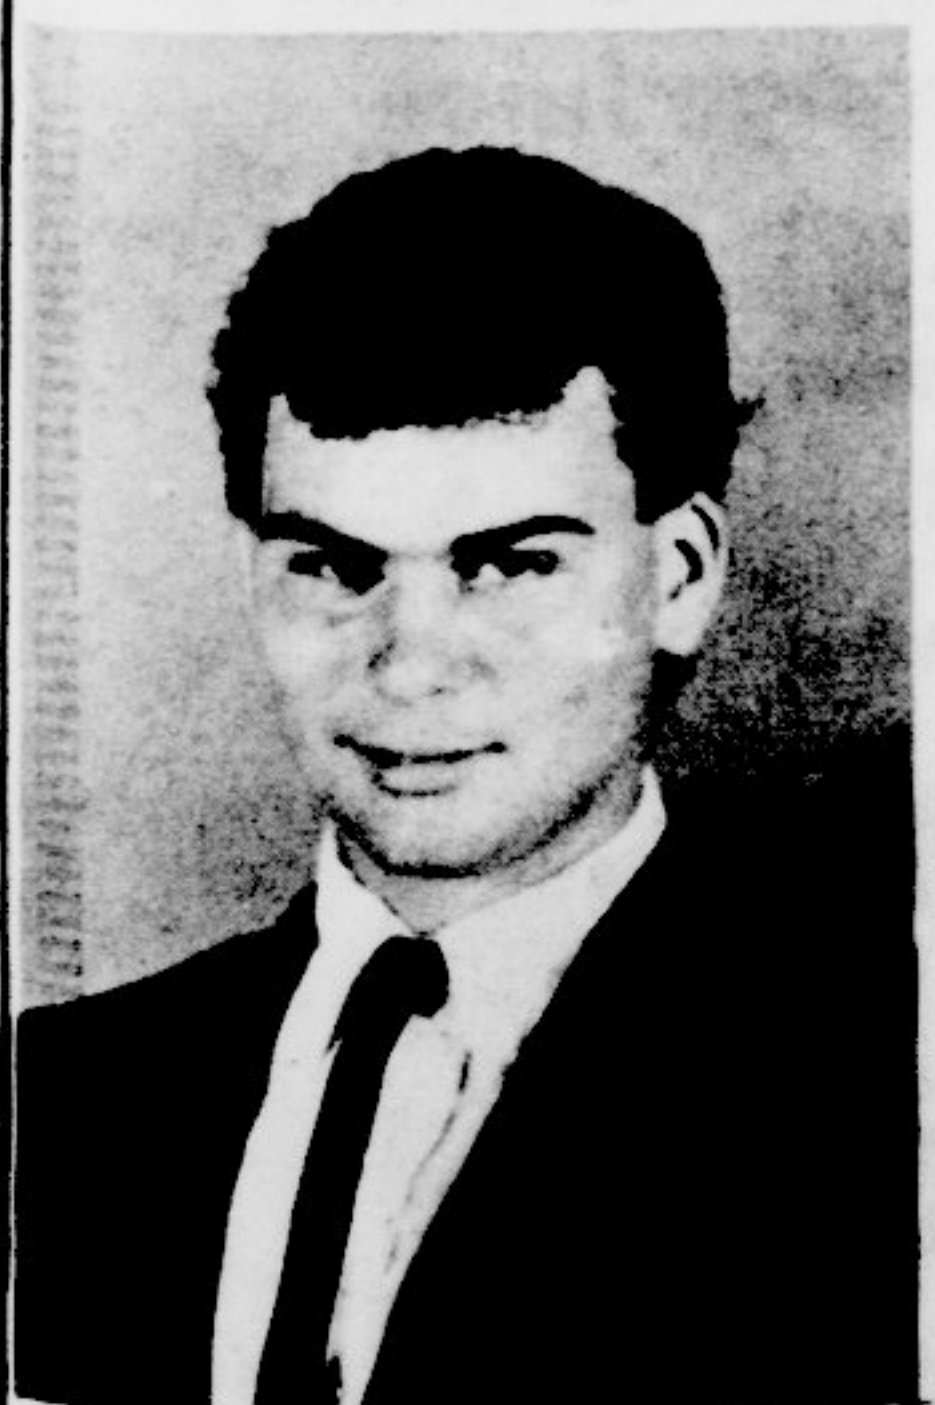

By SCOTT COOPER

ECU freshman Steve McCarthy has been named the Colonial Athletic Association soccer player of the week, CAA information director Ken Ries announced yesterday.

McCarthy was recognized for his achievement as a Pirate forward last week in the matches against Virginia Wesleyan and Methodist College.

The Columbia, Md., native had four goals in the pair of games last week and is the first ECU soccer player to gain such an honor this season.

The ECU soccer team.

Steve McCarthy

The Pirates blanked Methodist College 1-0 last Wednesday as McCarthy again supplied the score.

McCarthy was assisted by both Robert Larrison and Jeff Corson on the first-prior score. The defensive battle saw Methodist get just seven shots at goal while ECU had 21 attempts. The Pirates needed only one goalie save as Methodist accounted for nine.

The Pirates are currently 7-6-1 on the season and will face Elon College later this week.

Pirates

Men Netters Roll; Women Close Fall Season

By DON RUTLEDGE
Sports Writer

The men's tennis team just keeps rolling on. They added another notch in the win column Wednesday, making their record 8-0 in dual competition. This time they rolled over Pfeiffer College, 8-1, on the Minges asphalt.

It was simple, according to assistant coach John Anthony. "We just overpowered them," said Anthony. "We're used to seeing much better competition so we took advantage of this and basically overpowered them."

Except for the No. 1 singles and doubles spots, the Pirates had little trouble handling Pfeiffer for their eighth win of the fall season.

At the No. 1 spot, Pfeiffer had a strong left-handed player with a big serve and unusual spins. Dan LaMont, playing No. 1 singles for ECU played a tough match, winning the first set in a tiebreaker, but eventually fell to the lefty gun. "I think lefties should be outlawed," quipped LaMont after the match.

The rest of the team had a fairly easy time dispatching of the Pfeiffer squad. Anthony credited preparation and readiness on boys to the Pirate success so far.

"Physically, condition-wise, and mentally, they (ECU) just outdid them..."

—John Anthony

The men have just two dual matches remaining before they go to William & Mary for the Colonial Conference Tournament over fall break, Oct. 24-26. They will travel to High Point on Wednesday to face a tough small college team, and will return home for their last dual match against UNC-Charlotte on Tues., Oct. 21.

Meanwhile, the women, who are 5-3 on the season, will face a very strong Atlantic Christian College team this afternoon on the Minges Court for their last dual contest of the fall campaign.

The Lady Pirates are very hungry to avenge their loss to the Bulldogs at the Meredith Invitational earlier in the season. The two teams dominated that seven-team event, facing each other in all but one individual final. The Bulldogs came away with first place, having won seven of the nine individual flights. ECU won second, way out in front of the remainder of the field, winning the other two flights. Captain Susan Montjoy had relished a sweet victory over a tough ACC opponent in the 6th flight.

So don't miss this, your last chance to see fierce but lonely Pirates until next spring.

Spikers Drop Two

The ECU volleyball team dropped two matches this weekend at Wake Forest to make their season record 4-6.

The Lady Pirates lost a 3-0 decision to Wake Forest in the first match. The game scores were 15-8, 15-13 and 15-10.

Furman downed the Pirates in the second match also by a 3-0 score. The final game scores were 15-6, 15-6 and 15-2.

The next match for ECU will be today at Virginia Commonwealth.

Palmer Just Short Of Record

By TIM CHANDLER
Senior Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — Palmer! Palmer! Palmer!

The sparse crowd of 15,384 in Veterans Stadium began the chant when the scoreboard at the stadium flashed that Heisman Trophy hopeful Paul Palmer was only 11 yards short of the all-time NCAA single game rushing record held by Reuben Mayes of Washington State.

It was the first time during the game that the crowd had come together in a chant. The problem was that there was just a little over two minutes to go and ECU had the ball.

The Owls finally got the ball back with 1:14 to play, but, Palmer could manage only three yards on three carries.

After the game, Palmer expressed that the record would have meant not only a lot to him but also a lot to the team.

"I wanted it (the record) pretty bad," said Palmer. "But I believe my teammates wanted it even more. The offensive line let me know about it, and everyone was fired up."

"It hurt when I realized I was not going to break it (the record), but everybody gave it their best," added Palmer.

Palmer, who carried the ball 43 times said that he was more tired in the first half than in the second.

"I was more tired in the first half," said Palmer. "In the second half, I was psyched up because of the record and the way the line and Shely Poole (fullback) were blowing people away."

Palmer tied the all-time NCAA record for all-purpose yardage in the game as he piled up 417 yards.

"Before the season, my aim was to lead the nation in all purpose yardage," said Palmer. "And I think I took a step towards that today."

Temple head coach Bruce Arians complemented Palmer on being a fine athlete and a good team player.

"He is the finest running back I've seen," said Arians. "He has earned the recognition that he deserves and has done more for this team than anyone."

"He should be recognized for the Heisman, but our goal is post-season play — and Paul will to everything he can to help us."

Arians went on to say that he felt that the team wanted the record just as much as Palmer did.

"The team wanted it just as much as Paul did," said Arians. "It would have been a great achievement for this entire team, and it certainly would have helped to publicize the Temple program."

Palmer said that post-season play for the team was more important to him than breaking records.

"Our team goal is postseason play," said Palmer. "So individual records may have to wait."

Burton, Methany Pace Cross Country

By SCOTT COOPER
Co-Sports Editor

The men's and women's cross country teams competed at Methodist College in Fayetteville this past weekend.

The men, headed by Milton Methany, finished fourth (with 79 points) in the 8,400-meter course behind St. Augustines (38 pts.), Methodist (38 pts.) and UNC-Wilmington (69 pts.).

The women, again led by Annette Burton, finished second (with 48 pts.) in the 4,000-meter, four-team field behind St. Augustines (41 pts.) and in front of UNC-W (67 pts.) and Campbell College (76 pts.).

The men move to 19-22 overall and 2-3 in the conference while the women are 9-9 overall with a 1-3 conference mark. Both squads will travel to Duke Thursday for the North Carolina State Meet. Carolina, Duke, N.C. State and Wake Forest will be some of the teams on hand and it should prove to be a fine test for ECU, according to assistant coach Steve Thomas.

"We're going up there to try and see how we rate in the state," Thomas said. "We're using this (meet) to get ready for our conference meet on Nov. 8."
