And the cable companies just make matters worse. Don't believe it? Go for a day (a single, solitary day) without turning on the tube. Even if that turns out successfully, evaluate how you felt not having the TV on. If you didn't crave it once, congrats. That's more than a lot of people could ever do.

But television addiction is not the purpose of this editorial. People all across eastern North Carolina are getting, shall we say, screwed and most won't even realize it. As cable rates went up and up every year, the government passed legislation that sure did seem like a good idea at the time.

The business world can get awfully slick. Businesspeople can get slick. And worst of all, the general public are the ones who end up carrying the brunt of the raw deal. If you're not careful, people can take full advantage of a situation. Quite possibly, the cable companies and those businesses affiliated with them are doing just that.

Along with basic cable, there is now a system in effect using creatures called a la carte channels. In Greenville, these include CNN, Headline News, TNT and TNN. Thanks to the Cable Consumer Protection Act of 1992 and the ever-trustworthy legislators, you, the friendly cable subscriber, will now be charged an extra $1-2 a piece for these a la carte channels. You won't be informed of it, but the extra charges will appear on your next bill.

And just for argument's sake, if you were receiving these channels as a part of your regular cable package and never happened to watch any of them, you will still be charged, simply because you didn't know. Sounds really fair, huh?

In addition to the sneaky way of billing, for various reasons, WCTI may disappear from your

By Stacy Van Peterson College radio station sounds restrained

College radio represents the voice of a campus community. This voice enjoys freedom from commercial restraint and can explore genres that may be too risky for commercial stations to undertake. Our campus radio station, WZMB, 91.3 F.M., possesses the diversity that separates college radio from commercial radio.

However, it seems that ECU wants to keep WZMB and the college community separate. Last October, the Media Board banned WZMB from associating with events involving alcohol because of liability questions. What did this really mean? Did this mean that WZMB could not sponbasic cable package. Channel 12, based in New Bern, is currently negotiating with Multimedia for a share of the profits that so many of you dish out monthly

WCTI wants compensation for allowing Multimedia to carry its signal. WCTI is crying that they must compete with cable stations, so to them, suppose it only makes sense that they should receive a share of the profits.

Well, sorry, that doesn't quite wash. When you think about it, it's completely feasible that both WNCT and WITN have cut a quiet deal with Multimedia. After all, this is the business world and private agreements are what provide sustanence for the grey-suited wonders we call businesspeople.

Who would have ever imagined that any of this were possible back in the first innocent days of television? The days when families gathered around, squinting to make out the somewhat distorted images of Ed Sullivan and Steve Allen, with not a care in the world.

Now we live in an age of negotiations, regulations, remote control charges, additional outlet fees, commercials in which the volume levels are significantly higher than the program's volume and executives who want just a bit more money. Oh, yeah, and there's all of that slickness.

It's hard to stomach, but then again, so are most TV shows. And we haven't even begun the new fall lineup. Stay tuned for more ...

sor events held downtown? Could employees go to bars as "employees of WZMB" and expect to be fired? If someone uttered the letters WZMB, would they be beaten about the head and shoulders?

This action seemed absurd, because The East Carolinian could go downtown and review a band or event at a bar with no consequences. Other campus organizations could meet at places with alcoholic beverages. Why not WZMB? Either blame it on the Federal Communications Commission, an organization that seems to have the power to tar and feather the First Amendment, or on liability, but this action was never justified as far as I am concerned. Another problem came for WZMB, when two employees of the station became managers for local bands. There arose a concern that perhaps the employees were abusing their jobs at the station with this extra endeavor. The employees were given the option to quit one job or the other.

This is not justified. When the WZMB employees are off-duty, it is none of the school's business what other jobs they undertake. Does this mean that if I worked at the Mendenhall Snack Shop and got a second job involving vending machines offcampus, that I would be fired? This also would mean that everytime an employee announced a local band's playing engagements or a local band's song, they would have to get prior permission.

It seems to me that WZMB is not treated with the same respect that other stations in the UNC system are treated. One way to involve WZMB with the ECU community is to play the station on the buses in the transit system. It makes sense to me to play the college radio station on the college bus system. As it is now, the drivers determine what music the passengers will listen to. By playing the station on the buses, students could be more informed of campus events. For instance, WXYC, 89.3 FM, the radio station for UNC-Chapel Hill, began as an underground station broadcast from a dorm room in 1976. Today, that station receives $19,603 a year in funding from the university. Perhaps the success of the station spawned from enthusiasm that involved the station with the community. This particular station is known for its involvement with Chapel Hill bands, the now-defunct Cat's Cradle club as well as small pamphlets the station published concerning local events.
