The death of a J. H. Rose High School student last week due to spinal meningitis shocked many and left students wondering if the young girl's death was only the beginning.

It's hard to believe that a man who has taught for almost 30 years, published books and raised a family, has found the time to collect more than 1,000 old westerns and serials from days long gone. Interim Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Tinsley Yarbrough has done just that.

"I videotape old westerns and cliffhanger serials of the '30s, '40s and early '50s, the kind of movies that kids went to see at the Saturday matinee back in those days," Yarbrough said. "I also go to conventions devoted to this interest and I go out to California with friends and we hunt for ranches and other locations that were used in making those movies, we videotape them and take photographs."

Yarbrough has held the position of interim vice chancellor for almost a year, and is looking forward to getting back to the classroom and his research.

"I primarily write judicial biographies ... later this year Oxford University Press will publish my biography of the first justice John Marshall Harlan," Yarbrough said.

While in college, he was torn between a career in the practice of law or teaching.

"I enjoy teaching very much, I think that teachers are privileged to teach - we don't always feel that way, but I feel that it's an honor to teach," Yarbrough said. "It's a very important function and I think teachers have a tremendous impact on the lives of students."

With the exception of his temporary administrative position, Yarbrough has taught classes ranging from introduction courses in political science, constitutional law and the courts, to classes concerning civil liberties and constitutional powers. Yarbrough left ECU for two years in 1978 for a visiting professorship at the University of Virginia, where his daughter now goes to school.

Yarbrough and his wife Mary Alice moved to Greenville in 1967. They met in a political science class at the University of Alabama where Yarbrough received his undergraduate, graduate and doctorate degrees in political science.

"... I think this was the only school I applied to," Yarbrough

Mrs. Yarbrough also held a political science teaching position for the first few years they lived in Greenville. She now works with the Pitt County School system coordinating programs for academically gifted students.

Spray paint not a sign of vandalism

Andy Turner

Wondering why there is white paint sprayed on the ground and on the grass all around capus? No, there is no mad vandal terrorizing the ECU campus, actually, it is part of an ongoing project being conducting by facility services.

"We are in the process of doing a photo metric mapping of the campus as part of a utility infrastructure project," said Dr. George Harrell, assistant vice chancellor of business affairs for facilities.

On March 12, an aircraft flyover of the campus was conducted and over 800 utility structures were identified throughout the campus. White paint was used to help make structures more visible from the sky. Letters were used to designate what the various structures were.

Harrell said it took about a week to mark water valves, manholes, switching gear and drainage systems throughout campus. Additionally, the fly-over had been postponed several times due to uncooperative weather.

He decided not to live on campus and look what he had to put up with.

"Last year I had an opportunity to live on campus and be a winner. But instead I chose to live off campus...what a mistake. I got stuck with utility, phone and cable bills. I had to eat my own cooking and then wash all the messy dishes. I don't have time to meet new friends because I have to spend so much time cleaning my apartment. Now, it looks like I will have to find someone to sublet my apartment because I won't be here during the summer.

But hey, it's not too late for next year-I can still be a winner! I'll sign up to live on campus during March 20 through 24 in Jones Cafeteria. I hear that Slay and Umstead are really going to be nice! See you there!"

Our View

First of all, we would like to applaud the efforts of those organizing Barefoot on the Mall for including more culturally diverse bands. However, the way these bands were chosen leaves much to be desired.

For years, the Battle of the Bands competition has been used to give local bands a chance to get more exposure. This year, J. Marshall, assistant director of student activities, said the organization is trying to stay away from the local bands that play downtown. This statement in itself is strikingly poignant considering that Green Bone Dance and Blood Stul (now Stul) have both played area clubs in the last few weeks.

Also competing this year at the Battle of the Bands is last year's winner PMS (Post Metal Syndrome). Is it really fair to the other local bands who are trying to get established that a former champion gets to return and bump another promising act? Gee, and we thought that people were supposed to get a taste of the new music around Greenville when watching Battle of the Bands.

Then there is the band Full Stop. This band was added ever. But who because of pressure put on by certain campus organizations about there not being enough culturally diverse bands playing at Barefoot on the Mall.

> Yes, cultural diversity is great, and people should be exposed to as many different types of music as they can, but why wait so late in the planning progress to add this band? Were they chosen in the same manner that the other bands were for Barefoot, or were they just randomly picked out of a hat?

> Are the Student Union Special Events Committee members aware that Full Stop just played a show downtown and has two more performances scheduled before Barefoot even takes place? And just for the sake of a good argument, did anyone out there notice that there are no women playing in any of these bands?

> Barefoot on the Mall is an event that people look forward to every year. All of the food, games and music draw thousands. It is one of the signs that spring and good times have arrived.

> The students deserve more of an opportunity to pick the music that they want to hear. Maybe the Student Union Special Events Committee will give us a chance next year. All of us at TEC hope that it will be successful, and in the future, not so political.

The opinion page may be an odd place to make a case for people keeping their opinions to themselves, but that's what I'm doing. Specifically I'm referring to those obnoxious and often crude bumper stickers that I see on cars everywhere I go.

These glib, pseudo-clever stickers tackle every subject imaginable from abortion to animal rights to gun control in a way that can be irritating or even down-right offensive. A speech, a discussion among friends (or enemies) or even a column on the opinion page of your local newspaper is the time or place to air your views.

In these cases the person being subjected to your personal opinion (and no matter how sure you are that you're right, it is only your opinion) can get up and leave or stop reading or choose to hear an issue. You aren't scoring any points. Personally, I see these bumper stickers aimed at angering other people as cowardly. People who are not confident enough in their convictions, or at least in their ability to speak intelligently and persuasively in defense of them, hide behind the self-righteous slogans they slap on their cars.

If you feel strongly enough about a particular subject that you are tempted to buy one of these bumper stickers that reduce a complex issue to a bad pun or an offensive statement, don't. Instead, find out enough about the subject to feel comfortable giving your opinion when it's wanted or when you feel it's needed, but please stop assaulting those of us who have to share the road with you with your unsolicited and unwanted opinions. ## Was George Washington unconstitutional?

Most Americans firmly believe that the separation of church and state is an established part of our heritage - an edict laid out in the very bedrock of our nation. Of course, they would be hard pressed to find the words (or the concept of) "separation of church and state" anywhere in the Constitution or the Bill of Rights.

This notion of separation is usually credited to the First Amendment, but it simply states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." As plainly read, it is to keep government off the back of religion. The amendment contains - no separation, no church, no state.

Like everything else they have done, this is weird and edgy, full of strange twists in sound and distortion. Being recorded in mono also helps to give the recording an empty, almost hollow sound. The producers and movie representatives inflicted some damage on the final result, but we are still left with Sonic Youth's signature sound. This album was done about two years before the masterful baroque noises of Daydream Nation, an album that many fans say is the height of their career. It is really hard to make comments about this music because it's mostly instrumental, and few of the 23 tracks on the album last longer than two minutes. Often they are twisted soundscapes with long droning bass lines and sparingly plucked guitars warped by distortion, echo and reverb. Sometimes they sound like they are under water, and at others they sound like factory noises slowed down to a haunting grind.

ECU's fourth-position tennis player. Two other tennis players have proved very important in coach Farfour's attack. Senior leader Elke Garten and junior Lisa Hadelman matched Cohen's performance by also taking two victories this weekend.

Hadelman, at the fifth position, easily defeated GMU's Lauren Boettcher 6-1, 6-0 and survived three tough sets with UNC-G's Rachel Matlin before she was able to break her confidence, 6-3, 1-6, 6-4.

Garten, a four-year threat for ECU, anchored the sixth position and upped her season record to 10-2. She swept the Patriots' Marie Veldhuyzen 6-1, 6-1, and had a difficult time with the Spartans' Kimberly Ledbetter before she got by the first set (7-5) and cruised in the second set (6-1).
