Summer school students are getting gypped again. Remember teacher evaluation forms? Well, chances are about 100 percent that you didn't see one in your summer school course,

The New College American Dictionary defines evaluate as "to examine and judge; appraise." The true definition of evaluation has lost its meaning in the summer school vocabulary. As we continue our education at this institution of higher learning, it is the university's duty to treat summer school students just as they would in any other term.

The upper echelon at ECU have already alienated summer school students enough. First it was the payroll change, in which someone forgot to notify the students that they would be receiving their paychecks at a later date. Then there's the food situation on campus. Students living in the dorms have to "pack a lunch" to survive the long hike to Todd Dining Hall. And now we are not even given the opportunity to evaluate the professors with whom we've spent fivelong weeks.

We are not attending summer school just to pass the time away. We are here to help ourselves in different ways, whether our intentions are graduating on time, raising our grades or picking up a class we were unable to get during another term.

The university obviously feels that the summer school students are here out of academic obligation; and in some cases that might be true, but our money is the did you? same color as that of the regular session students. The powers that be at this university are treating summer school students like second class citizens compared to our fall and spring term counterparts.

The quality of academic instruction at this university can greatly be examined in a summer school class. The tasks placed on the instructors are just as difficult as our task of learning in these abbreviated terms. Their job is to challenge us in the classroom and to evaluate our performance, and we should be given the same opportunity of evaluation.

Remember the hospitality we received as orientation students? Funny how quickly that fades.

Even today, corny as it may be, I believe in truth, justice and the American Way (that is, hard-headed individuality). I realize that those things are in short supply, and always have been, but still I persist.

Now, maybe I'm making a rather obvious point. We're all shaped by our childhoods in one way or another. But my generation in particular seems to have been shaped by the media more than its parents. I mean, my parents never gave me any lectures on justice and individuality, but Spider-Man certainly did. Who knows what strange world views people may have picked up from Scooby Doo or Fat Albert or, God forbid, He-Man?

And what about Star Wars? As near as I can tell, these films are a nearly universal experience for my generation. We couldn't have asked for a more clearly defined good vs. evil story.

Elsewhere on this page is a discussion of the new rise in popularity of Star Wars material. Certainly, most of this stuff is the first wave of a media blitz hyping the release of the new Wars film in 1998. I'm sure that by the time that movie rolls around, we'll all be sick to death of hearing about it. But I'm still glad it's coming.

is nearly impossible to listen to this disc more than once. My biggest fear is that this was not meant to be taken as a novelty CD.

A surprising number of artists of incredible variation responded to the call for songs on Stairways. Let's just list a few: Yoko Ono, Vanilla Ice, Andrew Ridgley (of Wham!), The Pogues, Prince, Weird Al Yankovic, Peter Gabriel, and Cher. Then there is the list of unknowns. Then there is the operatic version, which is not all that bad, but still a bit silly. And last on the high-art tip is a dramatic reading of the song without any music; it makes a good poem with its steady rhythm and rhyme.
