CHARLOTTE (AP) — Duke Power Co. meter readers have traded pepper spray for stun batons as protection against vicious animals, and the weapons are 10 times more powerful than the jolt from "invisible" fences.

Duke Power literature describes the 2-foot Super Baton as packing a punch similar to that of the system of collars and underground wires used to condition dogs to stay in their yards.

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina taxpayers would spend nearly $2.5 billion over the next decade to build and renovate schools if the General Assembly approves a study committee's recommendation.

The committee voted Tuesday to recommend a two-part plan that includes borrowing $950 million that would go to local districts by 1999. Voters would have to approve a bond issue, possibly in a special statewide election as soon as September.

PORTAGE, Ind. (AP) — An explosion ripped apart part of a 5-year-old steel mill Wednesday, killing at least one person and injuring four others. Two workers were reported missing.

The explosion happened in the southwest corner of the Beta Steel mill, said Bill Fritchley, director of planning and development for the Indiana Port Commission.

The blast partially collapsed part of the roof of a Beta office complex about 50 feet away, Fritchley said from Indianapolis.

TOMS RIVER, N.J. (AP) — Authorities have discovered that a woman who secretly recorded her conversation with the man accused of killing her managed to turn over the tape and preserve even more of their talk, newspapers reported Wednesday.

The dramatic 24 minutes of conversation that were first revealed on the tape hidden in Kathleen Weinstein's pocket led investigators to arrest Michael LaSane, 17, of Berkeley Township.

PARIS (AP) — A young person died in France Wednesday of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, the rare but fatal malady that British doctors suspect may in some cases be caused by a similar affliction in cows.

Tests were under way to determine if the patient, who was not identified, came down with the disease as a result of eating meat tainted with mad cow disease, the French newspaper Le Monde reported.

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A hijacker seized an Egypt Air jetliner with 145 passengers aboard Wednesday and forced the pilot to fly to Libya, airport officials and police said.

The plane landed in Tobruk, a Libyan city on the Mediterranean 70 miles west of the Egyptian border.

New policy prohibits amorous faculty/student relationships

Design derived from six UNC-system universities

Sharon Franklin
Staff Writer

A new state policy prohibits amorous relationships between faculty members and students under their supervision and evaluation.

The UNC Board of Governors (BOG) unanimously passed a policy on March 18, prohibiting amorous relationships between faculty members and the students under their supervision.

Appendix A of the policy defines an amorous relationship as follows: An amorous relationship exists when, without the benefit of marriage, two persons as consenting partners (a) have a sexual union or (b) engage in a romantic partnering or courtship that may or may not have been consummated sexually.

"Evaluate" or "supervise" is defined in the document to mean:

A. To assess, determine or influence (1) one's academic performance, progress or potential (2) one's entitlement to or eligibility for any institutionally conferred right, benefit or opportunity, or

B. To oversee, manage or direct one's academic or other institutionally prescribed activities.

Any amorous relations involving faculty and students under 18 years of age, are prohibited.

When designing their policy, the board drew upon the existing policies of six of their schools, a 1995 statement by the American Association of University Professors and recommendations from all 16 chancellors.

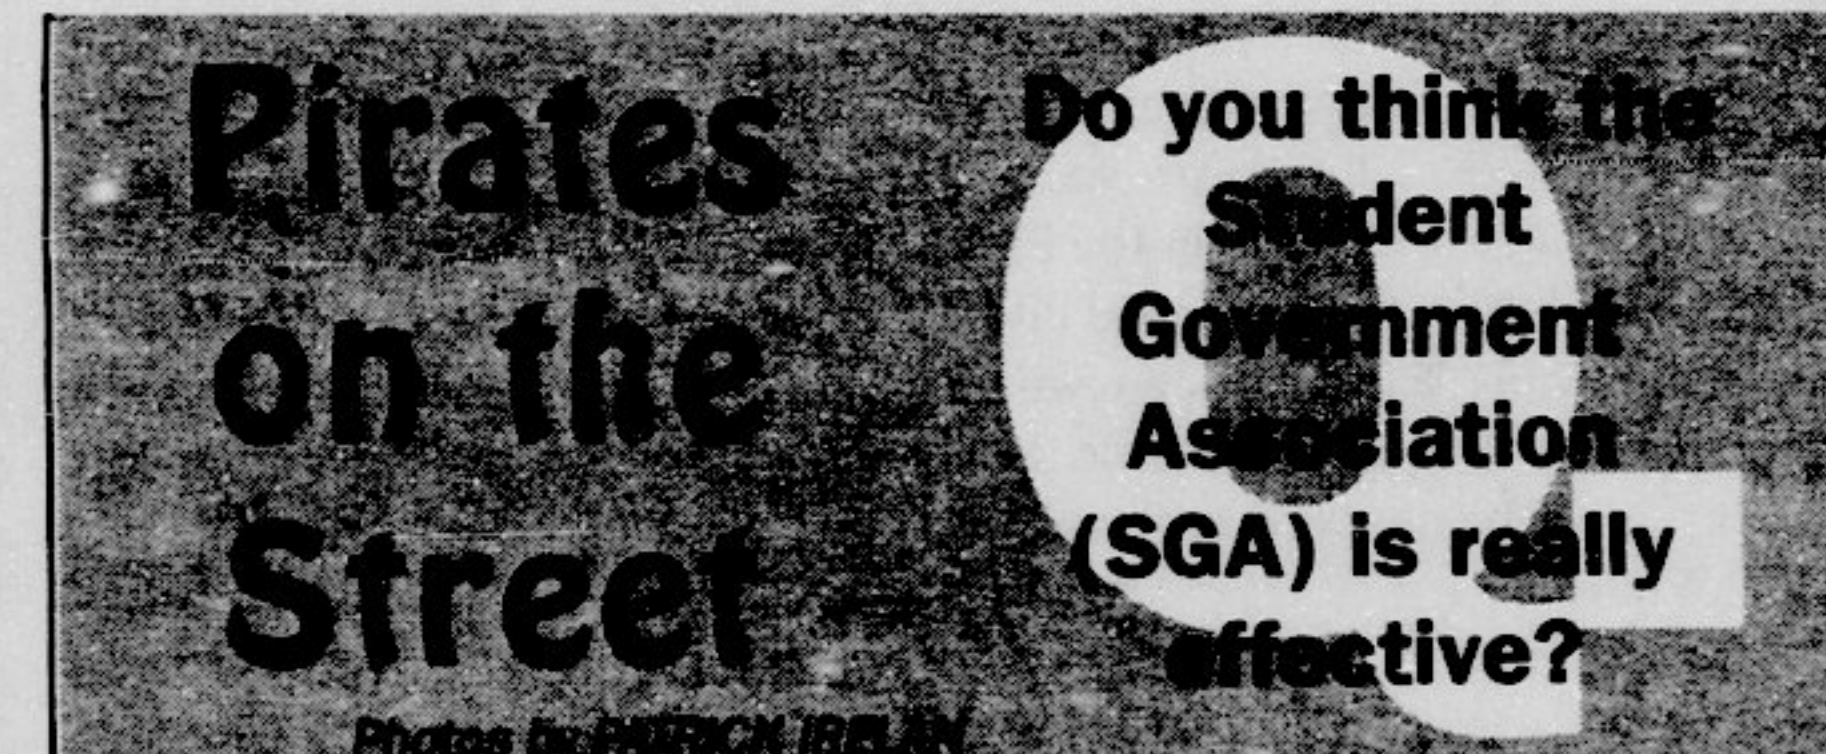

The BOG cited the following ex-

University dining earns As

Tara Conrad
Staff Writer

Two of ECU's campus dining facilities recently received a "Golden A" Award for their exceptional food sanitation and handling scores in 1995.

The Wright Soda Shop, the Croatan and ECU's School of Home Economics Dining Room all were recipients of the award. They claimed three out of the 23 awards that were given.

"This is an outstanding accomplishment," said Frank J. Salamon, director of University Dining Services. "We work very hard to maintain high standards in the dining halls, and it has paid off."

The Golden A Award is given by the Pitt County Division of Environmental Health. Every meat market, school lunchroom, food stand and restaurant in Pitt County is inspected. The inspections occur four times a year and the facilities receive a grade from A to C. They are evaluated on their food handling and sanitation procedures. An A includes scores from 90-100, a B includes scores from 80-89.5 and a grade of C includes scores from 70-79.5. A facility receiving a grade below a C results in an immediate shutdown.

The Golden A Award is given to recipients that have maintained a score of 95 or higher on all four inspections.

The facilities are evaluated by a panel of judges from the food and lodging staff of the department. The judges are led by Chief Paul Andrews, who works closely with the judges to evaluate each food handling and sanitation procedure.

This past year was the first year that Pitt County has given an award for outstanding scores. However, the employees of dining services have always worked to improve all food handling procedures.

"Safe food handling is critical," Salamon said. "It takes a lot of time and effort to plan and carry out these procedures." Dining Services works closely with Pitt County officials, along with going through a series of development courses to learn how to handle food in a clean and safe way.

The Golden A Award is an outstanding accomplishment. However, it does not mean that other dining halls are unsanitary. Other dining facilities on ECU's campus have all received the standard "A," which means that they have scored a 90 or better on their inspections.

"The Wright Place and the Croatan deserved their award," said freshman Renee Minton. "Overall, I think the food handling seems very clean and satisfactory."

Department encourages teens to enjoy history

ECU's department of history hosted National History Day 1996, for Education District I on Wednesday. The theme of the day was "Taking a Stand."

More than 200 high school and middle school students from north-eastern NC gathered to participate in the competition.

District I consists of public and private schools in Beaufort, Bertie, Camden, Chowan, Currituck, Dare, Gates, Hertford, Hyde, Martin, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Pitt, Tyrrell and Washington counties.

History Day is an annual event which ECU has hosted for more than ten years.

Students competed in the areas of papers, projects, performance and media presentations. There were group as well as individual entries.

Judges for the competition were professors as well as historians on and off campus with expertise in various areas.

The competition followed national rules and guidelines. There were two groups of competitors. The junior division consisted of grades six through eight and the senior division consisted of grades nine through twelve.

Organization eases last-minute tax headaches

Stephanie Ann Eaton
Senior Writer

The accounting honor society, Beta Alpha Psi, will be offering tax relief for ECU students, the Greenville community and staff.

Beta Alpha Psi will be offering free help to anyone who would like to prepare their Federal and state tax returns.

"We encourage people to come to us for tax assistance," said Dr. Douglas Schneider, one of the faculty advisors for Beta Alpha Psi. "We prepare students' and staff's taxes for free. This will prevent people from having to pay a CPA or tax services."

People who are in need of assistance are asked to bring their W-2 forms, Federal and state tax return form packets that they received in the mail, any "1099" forms received from banks or other financial institutions, Social Security and other material that is related to retirement income.

"People are intimidated by taxes," said Dr. Mark G. McCarthy, co-faculty advisor of Beta Alpha Psi. "This allows accounting students to branch out and help the community, and help those who are intimidated make filing their taxes a little less frightening."

McCarthy said some people's taxes are not hard to file. This service will help the community file their taxes without having to pay for tax services.

Graduate and undergraduate accounting majors along with accounting faculty will be in charge of working on the tax information.

People who just wish to ask questions are strongly encouraged to attend.

"I think this would be a great service to students," said Chip Heal, a junior applied sociology major. "Any help would be an asset, especially when it is free."

Heal said he participated in giving free tax advice to people in years past and said his services were very well received by the people he helped.

This is the last time that this service will be offered this year.

The tax prep service will be held in the General Classroom building in room 1028 on Friday from 2pm-5pm.

Any questions concerning this program can be addressed to Dr. McCarthy at 328-6623 or Dr. Schneider at 328-6161.

Student's background leads to global career

Miwa Anderson

Stephanie Ann Eaton
Senior Writer

A Japanese-American student at ECU has found that the key to finding a good job means being at the right place at the right time.

For the last three years, Miwa Anderson has lived in Greenville and has found several opportunities for her career goals.

A senior geography major who lived in Japan for 11 years, Anderson discovered that her years in Japan were an important commodity in Greenville. Soon after she enrolled, a large Japanese automotive electric motor manufacturer, Automotive Small Motors (ASMO), announced plans to build a park at the local industrial park. Before she knew it, Anderson had landed a part-time job interpreting for U.S. and Japanese

Her association with the company helped introduce her to area developers and to the people in charge of directing the plans for the Global TransPark in Thailand.

She starts a one-year internship in June at the Kenan Institute of Private Enterprise Southeast Regional Office in Bangkok. Her work will include helping in the development of promotional materials to attract Japanese companies to the blossoming Asian Global TransPark in Thailand.

The internship will include gathering information for the Japanese press for the Royal Thai Embassy in Tokyo about the Global TransPark project.

Anderson was born in Japan. Her mother is Japanese and her father is American. When she was three months old, she moved with her parents to Portland, Ore. Three years later, she and her family moved to Chicago and lived the U.S. four years ago. She lived in Raleigh with relatives and completed her senior year at Broughton High School.

After graduation, she was accepted into the Honors Program at ECU. She will complete her bachelor's degree in three years and has had a near-perfect academic record.

"ECU has had a lot of classes that I've really enjoyed," Anderson said.

Her extracurricular activities include being a member of four honor societies and an officer with the International Student Association. She also worked as a resident adviser in 1994-1995, and before her position at ASMO, she worked as an intern with the Pitt County Development Commission.

"Those students who say ECU sucks must realize that anyone going to a state school has a chance at a fine quality education," Anderson said. "You must tap into your resources. A college career is what you make of it."

Anderson said she hopes that her internship in Thailand will allow her to experience other opportunities to work at an international level involving the U.S., Japan and Southeast Asia. She said she is particularly interested in industrial recruiting and in airport management and development.

Her interest in airports and a course in economic geography led her to a meeting with an official for the Global TransPark Authority in North Carolina. Through this project, she learned the connections between the Kinston, N.C. project and another TransPark being developed in Thailand.

She later met planners and administrators at the Kenan Institute of Private Enterprise in Chapel Hill, who awarded her the internship to work at the Institute's Southeast Asia office. The office is coordinating the Thai effort in starting a Global TransPark there.

Anderson said she is thankful for the chance to work for ASMO and for the internship with the Kenan Institute.

Dr. David Sanders, director of ECU's Honors Program had strong words of praise for Anderson.

"Miwa is very bright and very focused," Sanders said. "She doesn't let go when she wants something."

Activities took place in Mendenhall Student Center and began with a convocation at 9:30 a.m. The viewing and judging of the entries took place from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m. History Day ended with an awards ceremony in Hendrix Theater.

Dr. Claire Pittman of the ECU history department was the District I coordinator.

"The day stimulates the students' interests, and they do draw a great deal from it. Students learn how to research and develop creativity from building their projects around a theme."

Pittman said the theme, "Taking a Stand" is broad with plenty of room for interpretation, Pittman said. The judges also talked with the students about what they have learned from their projects.

Pittman said if a student is not really interested in history, this is something to get them excited about history, and she said she hopes they can carry this over to the classroom.

Graduate students in the history department volunteered their services by working at the student information booth, monitoring students and teachers and working as ushers in Hendrix Theater.

One of the schools that competed was St. Peter's in Greenville. Sixth grader Will Corbitt followed the theme and did his project on the Negro Baseball League and how the league took a stand to break the barrier between separate Negro and white leagues.

Bryan Bunn, another sixth grader did a slide presentation on N.C. during the Civil War.

Two other sixth graders from St. Peter's did a project entitled, "Grandpa versus Baskin-Robbins". Jerome McMillen worked with Chris Diaz-Cobo on this project. McMillen's grandfather actually took Baskin-Robbins to court in the mid-1980s because the company was contaminating the air and water. He won and in result Baskin-Robbins had to ship their toxins elsewhere.

Diaz-Cobo said he enjoyed History Day.

"It allows kids to compete and get a chance to move on to a higher level," Diaz-Cobo said. "It gives us something to shoot for."

Student winners received a ribbon and a certificate with their rating seal. Each year the Pitt County Historical Society presents engraved plaques to each school having a first place winner in any category.

The winners will now advance to a statewide competition on April 27 at UNC-Asheville. State winners will then move on to the national competition at the University of Maryland in June.

cerpt from the University Professors' policy as providing helpful guidance in defining what constitutes a consensual relationship.

Sexual relations between students and faculty members with whom they also have an academic or evaluative relationship are fraught with potential for exploitation. The respect and trust accorded a professor by a student, as well as the power exercised by the professor in an academic or evaluative role, make voluntary consent by the student suspect. Even when both parties initially have consented, the development of a sexual relationship renders both the faculty member and the institution vulnerable to possible later allegations of sexual harassment in light of the significant power differential that exists between faculty members and students.

Most of the 16 schools in the university system, including ECU, have relied on sexual harassment policies in the past to deal with these issues.

Section C-5 of ECU's sexual harassment policy reads: "It is against the policies of East Carolina University for any employee of the university to engage in consensual, amorous relationships with students or other university employees whom the employee is or will be supervising or evaluating."

Dr. MaryAnn Rose, assistant to the chancellor and EEO officer, said the old and new policies vary in several ways.

The new policy addresses student/faculty relationships but does not set guidelines for staff and those employees under their supervision. It also does not prohibit relations, at this time, between students employed by the university and their supervisors who may or may not be faculty members.

The new policy, unlike the old, does provide for sanctions against faculty members found in violation of the guidelines. This will require stricter rules of proof of misconduct and must be clarified before penalties can be assigned.

"We have not yet worked out the details of the way the policy will be administered," Rose said.

Rose said she wants to make sure the faculty is well aware of the rule changes before they are implemented.

"We must publicize," Rose said. "To make it fair, we must first decide how it is to be administered."

Students in agreement with the ban, cite issues of conflict of interest as their prime concern.

"If a student is in class with a professor and they have a relationship, it's a conflict of interest," said Steve Carpenter, a senior majoring in industrial technology. "Even though the student may be evaluated objectively, it gives the appearance of conflict."

Some instructors welcome a clearly defined policy.

"We need certain guidelines for faculty/student relationships," said Shannon Griffin, graduate teaching assistant in health education. "I think all faculty will welcome that. Where you have ambiguity, problems exist."

The EEO office also welcomes the new policy.

"The university has for some time, prohibited those kinds of relationships," Rose said. "This new policy from the board of governors is good in that it reaffirms our commitment and strengthens our own policy."

Other schools in the university system are pleased to have a unified statement.

"I welcome any well-thought out policy," said Marsha McLean, interim director of university relations at Elizabeth City State University. "It's comprehensive and inclusive of all potential issues when done at the BOG level, and it's good that it's being implemented through all campuses equally."

Our View

Love it or hate it, basketball is a staple of American life.

With the final four fast approaching, March Madness is at a fever pitch. Sports-crazed basketball fans will not leave their sofas, except of course to get more beer or use the bathroom. Nacho and salsa sales will be at their highest since the Super Bowl. After the games, there will not be an empty basketball court in the nation. College star wannabes will be shooting jumpshots until they can no longer lift their arms. Sports bars will be packed with fans rooting for the underdogs or jumping on the bandwagon of the team favored to take it all.

But, there are some who care not to wear a basketball jersey to class every day, or go to work with a rainbow wig on their head. These people may have watched a few games during the first two rounds, but are now probably sick of the whole concept of the game at this point in the month. They're tired of the constant bombardment of commercials. They're tired of the pre-empting of their favorite programming. They just want everything to be normal again.

Here at TEC, we are split just like the rest of America. It all comes down to whether you love March Madness or you hate it.

Of course, it's easy to hate something that's greatly overexposed, but that's just the baggage of commercialism that accompanies anything popular.

But, then again, organized sports is a stitch in the fabric of America.

There are so many basketball programs that have started in the U.S. that have successfully gotten kids off of the streets and out of trouble.

There are also countless stories of kids from low-income families that excel in sports and go on to be financially able to provide for their parents' every need.

Organized sports teach discipline, sportsmanship, good-will, determination and leadership skills to young people.

This may sound cheesy, like sports can solve the problems of the world, but even the smallest pebble dropped in a pond will cause ripples that will travel to the shore.

So, if you love March Madness, that's great, but don't let it rule your life. If you hate it, hate commercialism, but don't hate basketball.

Memories keep ECU alive

Well, one month from now exams will be halfway over and then summer arrives. I can't believe that summer has come so quickly. So much has happened this semester and yet it seems like it only just began.

For some, this is their last month here in the Emerald City. For others, it was supposed to be, but perhaps now, next December is the exit out. Either way, most of us usually do graduate and then what? The world awaits and yet a single yearning desire still burns in your heart.

Many people such as myself, never went down to the Keys or to the Bahamas for Spring Break. I always had to work and raise some capital to help pay those wonderful bills and debts that most of us accumulate over the years. Yet, that burning desire still needs to be freed from the soul and released into the atmosphere.

OK, so you're wondering what is this guy talking about? Simple, a final brief moment of glory, or in this case, a great time in the sun. Does this answer your question? Well then, perhaps this will — Purple and Gold weekend.

The Purple and Gold weekend is the last chance for some of us to see the Pirates play for one last time as a student here. It is definitely a game worth seeing. In the past, there have been rides, games, food and yes, fun. That's the whole key to the weekend. FUN!

I want you to be able to look back in a few years and say, "I really had a good time there." It will happen. I know that I'm sentimental about these things, and when I go to my high school reunion this year, I'll be able to tell my high school semi-friends (if that is what you call those interactions within the confinements of the school walls), all that happened here and all my experiences. Just as they will with theirs. Of course in my high school, less than half the senior class actually continued their education.

So, when you go this weekend and watch the purple team play the gold team, think of all the fond memories that ECU has brought you and of all the friends that you made while you were here. After which, as I am sure most of the students will do, there are many parties that await patrons and there are numerous bars downtown where you can celebrate.

Whatever you do when you leave this institution, don't leave your memories. Even if we don't have a yearbook that we can sit down with our friends and look at. Even if we do have a video that is used much like a matchbook in leveling off the end of my table. We can still carry the memories of all we did here with us.

Apathy reflects paralyzed souls

An old adage states that "He who stands for nothing is nothing." This statement may not have been conceived during our generation but has unfortunately come to represent it.

Generation X, as it has come to be called, has no underlying cause. Because it has no central cause, it has no central movement to follow in any direction. This lack of cause is one of the reasons why the biggest problem our generation is facing is not lack of family values, gun control or censorship. Our biggest problem is apathy.

Apathy has two similar definitions. The first definition says that it is the lack of feeling or emotion. The second definition states that it is the lack of interest or concern. To show the best example of how this problem is exhibited, we need only to look at the name our generation has received: X. The title X is the ultimate symbol of apathy. It is neither here nor there. It is singular (not part of a group), and it is generic (without identity of its own).

Leadership is one of the biggest problems facing our generation. Generation X is a group that everyone can admit exists, but no person can claim to lead. When someone tries to lead it we quickly strike them down not for real issues affecting the overall domestic good, but out of self interest (i.e. What are they doing for me personally).

Think of it as a ship without a rudder. It doesn't sink but it doesn't get to pick which direction it goes in either.

Through running for office myself,

The apathy dilemma is not just a national problem, but one that we see here on campus as well. In reading some of the writings of my colleagues I see that they feel left out because they have not had a candidate come up and speak to them personally. The popular solution is to just not participate in the campus elections. This is obvious on ECU's campus by the number of students who show up at debates, call in to the radio station debates and even vote (average turnout is less than 1,500).

Through running for office myself, self and managing the campaigns of others I know, it is tough to believe that any one person can avoid being spoken to. It is not uncommon for a candidate to speak to 1,000 different people in a three day period. This is where the apathy becomes apparent. A person does not join a group or club because they don't have a common goal or something they want to get accomplished. They are not willing to be part of a group and fail to get their issues addressed as a result. Its hard to change the world if you're not willing to get off the fence and go one way or the other. By not actively practicing and supporting your beliefs, nothing gets done.

The other extreme of apathy is complaining but not working on the solution. Anyone can gripe about the fact that groups should be allowed to paint their logos on the street in front of student store, but if no one is willing to get off that fence and take around the petition then nothing gets done.

It is a shame that students allow themselves to be paralyzed into such a subjective mode. By doing this they lose control of their own directions and get nothing accomplished. Think of it as a ship without a rudder. It doesn't sink but it doesn't get to pick which direction it goes in either.

Letters to the Editor

Discrimination letter missed mark

To the Editor,

I am writing in regard to the subject of the B-Glad celebration brought up in Tuesday's edition of TEC. I have no problem with the article, but concern did arise when I read "Wear jeans for diversity" on the Opinion Page.

I am a student here at East Carolina and am totally aware of the wide range of diversity we have on campus. Being a political science major I adamantly support equal rights for everyone. Just because my affectional orientation may not be the same I would in no way encourage any discrimination of someone different than myself.

When reading the article I found that the author tried very hard to establish the fact that if you wore blue jeans it in no way said that you were gay or lesbian. I was taken back when I read the sentence, "Those who choose not to wear blue jeans on this day must make a conscious effort not to do so." This is where my problem lies. My clothing preference may be different. When I walk by your table or just you and a group of friends not wearing "jeans" are you going to sit back and judge me as an individual who does not support "nondiscrimination"? What bothers me is it was by chance that I got a hold of Tuesday's edition of TEC, and

I probably would have never seen the article otherwise. I was not planning on wearing jeans on Thursday and my plans have not changed.

I hear you asking for change and requesting not to be judged, but I see you doing the same things that you dread from your oppressors. I am making a statement now, "DISCRIMINATION IS WRONG." I challenge you to not stereotype those Thursday that you see not wearing jeans. Who knows, the most prejudiced person in the world may have just passed you wearing jeans not having a clue as you cheered him on.

Sincerely,
Rachel Lawson

Bravo to housing employees

To the Editor,

In the past year, I have been treated in a rude and unprofessional manner by the majority of the Administrative organizations on this campus. This is both unproductive and a bad example for students who are supposed to be learning how to behave in the business world. After this short treatment, I found the personnel at the University Housing Services office to be a refreshing change. They were polite, courteous and went out of their way to help me. They took the time to answer all of my questions, and did not show the slightest sign of impatience or exasperation. It was not only one person either; it was the whole office. After my dealings with the other departments on campus, I am pleased to say that there was at least a few people who know what customer service means, and remember who pays their salaries.

Community service desk fails to serve

To the Editor,

I am a student here at ECU, and I feel cheated by our Community Service Desk up on the "Hill". About three weeks ago, I was trying to get some laundry done when I noticed the change machine was empty. Having put all of my clothes and my only pair of shoes in and applied detergent to them already, I was in a jam.

It was about 12 a.m. and my only hope was the service desk. So I walked over from Scott in nothing but a pair of shorts and a T-shirt in 15-degree weather. I explained to the clerk my situation and asked if I could have change for my $5. She said that she had change but it was against "policy" to give students change. It was there for refunds only and I should go around and check the other halls' change machines. So off I went in 15-degree weather to every hall on the hill, barefoot. Well, they were empty too!

So I went back to the desk for help. She still said that it was against "policy" and refused. I told her that I had an 8 a.m. class tomorrow and I would come back and get them their change from the Galley so she wouldn't have to lift a finger. She refused. I lost my temper and said some things I probably shouldn't have and stormed out.

I realized that she has policies to go by, but I think she should have given me the change. It was a question of morals. There I was, barefoot and cold yet I was still denied. After all, she was getting paid by my $2,800 a semester to help me. Yet I was refused the one time I needed it the most. It's not like the dean was going to fire her for giving me change! Next year I'll be living off campus thanks to the College Hill Community Service Desk.

A concerned student,

Constitution protects everyone

To the Editor:

I was sitting in class when I heard the first rumblings. "So are you wearing jeans tomorrow?" asked a girl. "My khakis are being pressed as we speak," replied a guy trying to look as manly as possible. Then another girl joined in the building wave of discontent as she commanded the class saying, "don't wear jeans tomorrow!" All I could do was sit in my chair and quietly think of how incredibly ridiculous all of this was.

The subject of this letter is, of course, B-Glad's request of the university to wear jeans to show support for equal rights regardless of sexual orientation. This sounds simple enough, right? After all, under that wonderful document known as the Constitution, all of us have inalienable equal rights. This is, of course, America. But based on the opinions overheard in one small class on campus, not everyone interprets the Constitution the same.

Can we, as a nation, ever get over this issue? Who cares what you do in your spare time, or rather, who you do in your spare time, as long as it only involves consenting adults. It's very scary to witness people willing to compromise the Constitution just because they don't like someone's sexual tastes.

Individual liberties, one of the finest aspects of Jeffersonian Democracy, makes America great. But what makes us greater is our ability to hold together as a nation and respect each other. Besides, I can think of at least 100 more important issues to worry about right now.

TRAVEL TO SOUTH OF THE BORDER

Dale Williamson
Senior Writer

If you ever find yourself driving down I-95 south of Greenville, keep an eye out when you cross the South Carolina border for the most offensive, unusual and ridiculous highway attraction you could ever conceive of.

Anyone who's been down this stretch of road knows exactly what I'm talking about. You can't escape it. Billboards advertising it plague the highway for at least a hundred miles in either direction. You know it's ludicrous. You know it's a big waste of money. You know it's a tourist trap. But you can't resist its appealing power. I'm talking about the infamous South of the Border!

What is South of the Border, you ask? Let me try to explain.

South of the Border is a tourist attraction for weary travelers who need a break from the road and a little something to do while they rest. But this is no simple rest area. South of the Border was built with a Mexican motif, and the Micky Mouse of this Disneyland is Pedro the happy little Mexican.

Whoever created this place must have been insane. I can only imagine that he wanted to offend everyone with his racist concept, and believe me when I say that South of the Border is offensive. But there's something so tacky about it that it's almost okay (almost). So either he was insane or he was a genius who knew that people could not resist anything this laughable.

Curiosity usually gets the best of you by the time you reach South of the Border because you've suffered through countless billboards with such magnificent slogans as "You never sausage a thing as South of the Border" (with a giant plaster sausage attached) and "Chile Today, Hot Tamale." When you finally reach this oasis, you may think it's some kind of amusement park because one of the first things you see is a giant sombrero tower hovering over the highway. However, when you enter into the realm of Pedro, you don't find rides (not many, anyway). What you find is every useless, clichéd tourist trap on Earth rolled up into one neat little package.

At South of the Border, you find the typical gift shop that sells such disposable items as wind-up plastic toys, towels with sex jokes plastered on them and key chains printed with your very own name(!).

Overall it's pretty lame, but I do have to give this gift shop a few points for having a brilliant addition for its customers. In the very back of the shop is a wonderful adult entertainment section, featuring such tasteful items as hardcore porn and various rubber sex toys and fake organs. At Pedro's Dirty Old Man Shop, you're sure to find a special gift for that special someone (of course, that someone may leave you when they see these particular gifts).

Other notable aspects of South of the Border include the lame arcade, the disappointing candy store (which doesn't really have that much candy) and the drug store that's open at 2 a.m.

Unfortunately, I didn't get a chance to sample any of the food. But judging from the smiling statues of Pedro that were displayed throughout the place, it must also be very special.

Speaking of statues, wait until you see how Pedro decorates his place. There are painted statues of zebras, dinosaurs, anatomically-correct bulls, a gargantuan Indian, and a giant ape wearing an orange South of the Border t-shirt. Pedro must be a design genius to have included this stuff on the grounds. It's authentic Mexican attractions such

KISS
MTV Unplugged

That's right fans! Once again it looks as if those long-tongued devils are back on the scene, acoustic style. Yes, it's KISS, and they've dropped the distortion and wa-wa for MTV. Does it add up? You decide!

The band opens up with "Comin Home," a song with a title to please. What better way to return to a live recording than to do it the Stanley way, with style.

All four current KISS members were on hand, including their original guitarist and drummer Ace Frehley and Peter Criss. A six-man acoustic jam. Could you believe it? KISS goes Allman Brothers. Who would have thought?

Despite their pretty-boy flashy style, their make-up and blood pills, and their thrill to kill, KISS was back up in the promos. It's hard to believe that a band whose last single was titled "Let's Put the X in Sex" is back on MTV and is receiving even more for their accomplishments than in the late '70s and early '80s.

What is it about KISS? Is it their black and white onslaught? Is it Simmons' tongue? What is it? Whatever it is, or was, it worked. People have to remember that no matter how much respect the band is given now, at one point this band conquered the world with album sales and T-shirts. Then again, so did their descendants.

The album itself sounds great. Not only does the band control the audiences attention, it gains a bit of respect due to Paul Stanley's voice, which has never failed, liked or

Friends is funny

Kevin Chaslon
TV Whore

I have tried to escape the Friends merchandising/publicity animal. It seems as if it hunts you everywhere, lurking through TV screens, peering at you off of magazine covers, always ready to strike in the form of an innocuous little ditty on your popular radio station.

That is what I truly hate about Friends — the marketing of style over substance. Still, I enjoy the show and, hey, I'll even go out on a limb to say I really like the show, making an effort to see it whenever a new episode is on. I am part of the throngs helping to make Friends so popular, getting Matt LeBlanc movie deals with fake monkeys and so on. I have nothing to do with that haircut, however.

Well, just in case you've been living on the sun, Friends (Can I say the word one more time?? Jeez!) is the pole position of NBC's Thursday night TV line-up. It's a comedy on the lives and tribulations of six friends in their mid-20s living in New York, being hip and drinking copious amounts of coffee. That said, let's get to the meat of it.

One thing that I have enjoyed as of late is the whole Ross/Rachel/Monica/Richard thing that has been the focus of recent shows. Ever since Rachel became aware of Ross' attraction (and then losing that attraction),

Friends ain't funny

TV Bastard

Friends is kind of the TV equivalent of Hootie and the Blowfish: everybody loves it, and I can't fathom why.

But there it is. Most of my friends find the show hysterical. They're heavily involved with the continuing plotlines (the whole Ross/Rachel thing), they gather to watch it every week and laugh heartily all the way through. I just don't get it.

Friends is a mediocre show at best. Top to bottom, it's a collection of clichés and stock characters. Only occasionally will a glimmer of originality shine through to brighten its otherwise dull existence. Every episode has a been-there, done-that quality that astounds me.

You want examples? Let's look at the show's premise: a bunch of friends hang out together in an urban setting. Sounds like the bastard child of Seinfeld and Cheers to me. The only difference is that those earlier shows were funnier. Even the fact that these friends are young and (supposedly) hip only brings an embarrassing Mod Squad quality to the proceedings that makes it all that much more lame.

And the characters? Basically, Friends gives us a collection of standard TV stereotypes. Ross is the nice guy. Joey is the dumb jock. Rachel is the vapid rich girl. Phoebe is the wacky

Sepultura
Roots

Brandon Waddell
Assistant Lifestyle Editor

Ladies and gentlemen, please make sure your seats are in the fully upright position, your meal trays are fastened to the seat in front of you and your seat belts are securely fastened. We're preparing for take off.

The listener hears engines ignite and begins to feel shaken all the way to his inner core. But there's one instruction the flight attendant forgot as we prepared for take off. She forgot to tell us to fasten our crash helmets and force our backs into our seats. The G-forces of Sepultura were soon to take over our voluntary bodily functions.

Ahhh... the soothing sounds of the outdoors, crickets chirping and a man chopping wood in the background. I know these therapeutic sounds won't last very long, but they ease my mind and make me feel happy.

Blast off!

The bottom end just blew out of my stereo. My insides feverishly shake. We're experiencing turbulence. "Roots Bloody Roots!" exclaims frontman/guitarist Max Cavalera on the first and title track of the CD.

Roots is Sepultura's sixth and most adventurous release to date for the quartet formed in Belo Horizonte, Brazil in 1984. It's so daring because, unlike any of their past efforts, Sepultura started this project with a definite concept in mind. In early 1995, the band embraced the idea of a back-to-basics foundation for Roots. The band wanted to pursue their Brazilian roots and incorporate it into their newest project.

Many times thrash and metal bands are lumped into a single, all-encompassing category. You either like it all or you hate it all. There's no middle ground and no individuality for the bands who play this type of music. Such statements can only be considered as farce.

Disagree? You don't have to go far to either support or refute such an idea. Go see Unsound, then Henry Acrobat, then Organ Grinder and come by and tell me you think they all sound alike. I think not.

Through years of trial and error, Sepultura has apparently learned that heavy doesn't equal fast and the second track, "Attitude," is proof. From the opening notes played by the berimbau (a Brazilian one-stringed instrument

Jennifer Aniston's portrayal of her has become funnier, as well as more touching. Listen, every single one of us has had to deal with that unrequited love crap, so we were all right there in the emotional trenches with Ross, but Rachel? Rachel's story was different—not only unrequited love, but also that nagging “Why didn’t I notice <blank>?” pain, too.

That combination makes for the mustard gas in the trenches of love. Also, I think Aniston is a very capable comedic actress and watching the pursued becoming the pursuer did wonders for the character. Before this, Rachel was all stereotype, no substance, and it's nice to see her slowly develop into a likable person.

Ross (David Schwimmer) has also developed past his hang-dog, nice guy stereotype—in fact, he has become a bit of a penis. And I love it. Let's look at some facts here. Now that Ross has Rachel, we've discovered in recent episodes that he damn near tortured Monica while they were children and gets completely bent out of shape over Rachel's ex-lovers.

The torture? Understandable; brothers and sisters do that, but most grow out of it. The ex-lovers thing? If there was some sort of question of diseases I could see it, but not in this case. No, this is pretty much just dumbass male insecurity rearing its ugly head (no pun intended). And why do I love this dark-side Ross? It proves he's more human, silly! Hey, I can be a penis too. In fact, some of us may go through life consciously trying not to be penises—it's part of the human condition. And as long as he is made to realize he's acting this way, Ross will head toward this journey, too.

As for Monica (Courtney Cox) and Richard (Tom Selleck)? There's just something cool about seeing an older man/younger woman relationship that doesn't seem sleazy. Getting Selleck as Richard does help (he is just so damn nice), but the best thing about this relationship has been the way it was handled so amusingly.

For all of you folks out of the loop, Richard is one of Monica's parents' best friends—and her former dentist. Well, Richard, 46, is a widower and begins to go out with Monica, prompting her parents to wonder about the identity of the 26-year-old cupcake Richard has in the city. A funny outcome that was made even more so by Elliot Gould as Monica's dad, who, minutes before the revelation of the cupcake's identity, was asking some pretty explicit questions about certain body parts and the like. I look forward to other shows dealing with this awkward relationship.

Friends did, and does, still have its problems. For a while, it seemed to turn into the Ross and Rachel show, while the other characters took the developmental low-road. Come to think of it, Joey (LeBlanc), Chandler (Matthew Perry), and Phoebe (Lisa Kudrow) are still pretty much more characterizations than characters. They haven't managed (or the writers haven't managed) to shake the stereotypes that created them: the dumb jock-stud, the wisecracking pretty boy, the spacey Earth-mother (even though Kudrow is consistently the funniest actor on the show).

Lately, there have been running gags about Joey and Chandler's friendship being akin to a homosexual one, right down to a subtly funny parody of Ross and Rachel's pining. Chandler sits in a bathrobe peering dejectedly out of his window into the rainy night sky, while on the other side of the city, Joey peers into his artificial rain-on-windows machine in his new pad. It's a nice touch, but would work so much better if the characters had begun to develop more.

Give Chandler a steady girl (or guy, for that matter) for a few episodes and let us see how that changes him. Show Joey as a competent actor winning a small, but quality, role that ignites his acting passion. Or is this too much to ask from a comedy? I don't think so.

There are some people in this world that don't like the NBC show Friends. I realize that may come as a shock to you die-hard fans with your T-shirts, big-ass coffee cups and posters, but it's true. In fact, there even may be one such Friends-hater lurking nearby, so let's just talk quietly so as not to attract attention. Now, I don't own one piece of merchandise, nor try to save any of them on tape (unlike Mad About You), but I do empathize with you. Yes, there are people who don't like Friends, but I am not one of them. In fact, I think it is, at times, pretty damn funny. They do need to tread lightly, however. I'm sure Carter Country had their own coffee cups, too, resplendent with a little sheriff's star on it.

On a scale of one to 10, Friends rates an eight and a half.

chick. Chandler is the witty cynic. The only character I can't find a stock description for is Courtney Cox's Monica, although her out-of-work chef persona reminds me a bit of Jack Tripper from Three's Company.

Even the plots of individual episodes have been done before. One recent story involves Joey bringing Chandler an expensive and gaudy bracelet. Chandler hates it and loses it, forcing him to buy another one to salvage his friendship with Joey.

How many times have we seen this? Caroline in the City (another hip urban comedy) did a nearly-identical episode at around the same time I saw the Friends version. Seinfeld does it at least once a season. Hell, I've seen this story on every sitcom ever broadcast, going all the way back to Andy Griffith, Leave It to Beaver and I Love Lucy.

But these are all problems that fans are aware of, I'm told. The interesting thing, apparently, is to watch how they twist these conventions, breathing new life into an old formula.

Okay. In the bracelet episode (a perfect example of the problems with Friends), the original bracelet is found and Chandler is caught red-handed with two of the things. He gives one to Joey, telling his pal that he bought it as a token of friendship and thus mending their broken relationship.

So, really, what Chandler has done (however accidentally) is buy Joey's friendship in the most insincere manner possible, and Joey is dumb enough to fall for it. That's certainly a twist on the theme, alright. Unfortunately, it's a cruel twist that makes both Chandler and Joey kind of unappealing.

Which brings us to another problem with Friends: the characters. Their faults aren't the problem; without character flaws there's no drama, and comedy is really just drama turned on its ear.

In fact, flaws make characters more real, and these characters' flaws, I must admit, do sometimes raise them above the stereotypes they so easily fall into. Granted, the Friends characters are pretty firmly entrenched in their stereotypes a good 90 percent of the time, but those occasional glimpses of something deeper do help flesh them out.

It's not really the cruelty, either. As George Carlin once said, comedy derives from pain. Cruel humor has a long tradition, and I enjoy quite a lot of it. If a show is essentially a farce (like, say, The Simpsons), cruelty plays fine. But if you make your characters more real (as the creators of Friends have apparently tried to do), their cruelty stops being funny and very swiftly becomes mean. If you're supposed to like this "real" character, he can't be too cruel.

And that's the problem with the Friends cast. They're not real enough to succeed as real characters, but they're too real to succeed as farical characters. The show is screwed from both ends.

So when people ask me why I hate Friends, this is the kind of thing I tell them. I'm not saying that the show's awful. It's not. Awful is a word I reserve for real crap, like that Urkle show or Saved by the Bell. Given a choice, I'd watch Friends over those shows any day.

I can even understand some of its appeal. The cast is attractive, the writing is competent and the acting is very self-confident (something most sitcoms are sadly lacking). The problem is, Friends isn't even half as funny as it seems to think, and that self-confidence comes off smug.

Basically, it's the same kind of humor sitcoms have given us since the heyday of Cheers. Friends does that kind of humor fairly well, but we've seen it all before. And besides, both Frasier and News Radio do it better, with characters that are at once more bizarre and more real than anybody on Friends and humor that actually bites every once in a while.

While Friends may be one of the 10 best sitcoms on television, that still doesn't make it good, nor does it explain its wild success. But mediocrity always attracts fans, just like garbage attracts flies.

On a scale of one to 10, Friends rates a derivative five.

played by Cavaleria, an uneasy heart-beat sounding percussion backbone helps "Attitude" reach its climax. The track explodes after 30 seconds as Cavaleria's trained voice expels. "Live your life / Not the way they taught you / Do what you feel / Give me pain / Give me blood / These scars won't heal."

Ladies and gentlemen, we've reached our cruising altitude. Please feel free to move about the cabin. The flight attendant will be coming through the cabin shortly, serving complimentary beverages and peanuts.

Sounding a tad industrial, "Lookaway" obviously has a different feel to it than any other track on Roots. Sepultura received help from several different places on this one. House of Pain's DJ Lethal handles drum programming while Mike Patton (Faith No More) and Jonathan Davis (Korn) help Cavaleria with the vocals. The song goes back and forth, eerie to aggressive.

Sepultura doesn't let down their true long-term fans either. "Dusted" is the one that peaks the monitors, cracks the amps, and breaks all the drum heads. This one rips through your ears

...impossible to stand still... I think we're losing cabin pressure.

Passengers, this is the captain speaking. Brace yourself for crash landing. We're losing altitude.

The tribal chants and percussion grooves are the distinguishable features on "Itsari." The band went to Brazil and recorded this one with the help of a real tribe. They traveled deep into the Amazon jungle where they set up their recorder and spent two days recording and living with the Xavantes tribe. Sepultura assimilated quickly with the tribe, painting their bodies and learning the customs and rituals of the Indians. The chant, Itsari, is from an ancient Xavantes healing ritual which means roots in their language.

The feel is crash-landing in uncharted regions of South America. Roots is not in any way typical heavy metal. Throughout the album, the band uses 15 different types of percussion instruments, including a rusted propane tank. Sepultura grabs and shakes the listener, like turbulence or an earthquake. You're unsure if you'll be all right when it's all over.

as these that make South of the Border so appealing.

In fact, South of the Border is so very appealing that, on our last southern journey, my friends and I stopped not once, but twice. The first time we visited early in the morning, the second time late at night. If you have the choice, I suggest planning your trip so you can bathe in the glorious night life of South of the Border. That's when Pedro's Pleasure Dome (a mini-Epcot right here in the Carolinas) really kicks into high gear.

Plus, placed against a black horizon, the colorful neon lights of South of the Border transform an already-tacky creation into an even tackier slice of Americana.

And Americana is the word for South of the Border. The motif may be Mexican and the mascot may be Pedro, but South of the Border is a monstrosity that only America could produce. So don't miss out. Hop in your car and head south. God bless America!

On a scale of one to 10, South of the Border rates a tacky 10.

It is always good to see friends settle their differences and put the rest aside to do something they love to do together. With hits like "Domino" and "Beth," listeners are sure and confident of what they are getting themselves into.

Melodic solos from Frehley and Kulick remind us that even though times are different now, we will always have their music to remind us of who we were back then. Whether good or bad, almost everyone has some type of emotional tie to this band or the bands that were formed due to their influence.

The message is strong. The only question is, why did this project happen? Was it to prove that they've still got it? Was it for money? Was it for the simple love of music? I'd hope for the third but I would expect, as I have seen in many cases, that this band has ulterior motives that they'll use to follow this disc up.

The word is out! KISS is planning a full make-up tour for this summer.

So watch out! With Simmons and the gang on the loose again, no one is safe! So if you have the time, catch KISS on tour this summer, coming to a dungeon near you!

last season, rushing for 127 yards on 35 carries and catching eight passes for 65 yards. His high point was a 16 carry, 63-yard performance in the season finale against Memphis.

Many fans will remember Scott Harley's record-setting performance against Temple when starter Jerris McPhail was out with an arm injury. In his first start, Harley netted 175 yards on the ground, setting ECU freshman single-game records for yards and carries (38). He got one TD against the Owls, and was second on the team in rushing with 263 yards. Harley also set records for Pirate running backs in the weight room. He squats 650 pounds and cleans 305. The native of Neptune, NJ also runs a 4.6 40-yard dash.

Raymond Mabry, out of West Craven high school, is another running back who gives depth to the Pirates' roster. Mabry saw action in five games last year, carrying the ball nine times for 33 yards.

These three ball carriers will compete for the starting position this fall.

"At the end of our five years, we're all going to be good, but one of us is going to be very good because he will have competed against the other two," Jones said.

On defense, keep an eye on safety E.J. Gunthrope, linebacker Matt Semenza, defensive tackles Tomha McMillan and Mondell Corbett, and nose guard Terrell Williams. Also at safety, redshirt freshmen Deone McKeithan and Tavares Taylor should see action.

All of the young players on the team, just like the older ones, realize the current conference situation. They know that every conference is afraid of ECU, but they want to do their part to insure the program's success.

"ECU is a sleeper team," Tinnen said. "You can't wake the gentle giant. When you wake the giant, he comes out to play. People don't want us in a conference because of the simple fact that they're scared of us."

To see why the nation is scared of the Pirates, come out and view them in action this weekend.

In Men's Purple, the all-campus final was captured by the Independent winners, the "UKB Posse" 74-49 over the Fraternity winners of "Pi Kappa Phi B". Jay Corby dazzled the fans with his waterbug quickness, penetration and passing by consistently feeding teammates Tom Corby, Jim Sawicki and Vinnie Brown for easy baskets.

Ryan Wickline and Justin Conrad lead the offense for "Pi Kappa Phi B" who reached the all-campus game in the most exciting fashion.

In the Fraternity Purple final, with the score tied and only seconds remaining, Patrick Doherty drained a runner from just inside the half-court line to cap off a mad celebration and escape with a 35-32 win over "Sigma Phi Epsilon B".

The men of "UKB" worked their way to the finals through a 64-team bracket and earned their path with a 65-56 win over "Ah! Pure Butter Baby" in the Independent Purple title game despite strong games from Mike Edgerton, Bill Seavey and Chris Stevenson.

The Residence Hall finals ended in surprising fashion as "Going Down Swinging" unveiled a relentless fast break attack behind Derek Atwood, David Edgerton and Jason Hicks to pound the "Garrett Fighting Pirates" in the title tilt.

The "Tantalizing Thompsons" won Men's Blue 38-15 over "Sigma Phi Epsilon D" behind the smooth moves of Andrew Minigutti and the defensive efforts of Mike Franklin. The "Thompsons" received their toughest test in the Blue Independent finals as they weathered the full-court trapping pressure of the "Cavemen" to escape with a 36-33 win. Daniel Finn's shooting and the defense of Brian "The Human Eraser" Wilkins lead the "Cavemen" attack.

In Women's Gold, Candy Foust had a driving shot with seconds remaining to cap a furious rally as the "Goof Troop" pulled off a 36-35 win over "CSC" in the final game. Allison Kemp and Zina "Remote Control" Briley lead the "Troop" while Hope Murray, Tomeika Morris and Tiffany Thompson fueled the offense for "CSC."

The Sorority final also came down to the final minutes as Andrea Luther, Marcie Shelton and Megan Hopkins made the plays down the stretch to carry "Alpha Xi Delta" to a 32-26 victory over "Alpha Delta Pi" before a large crowd. Ashley Danner and Nicole Williford lead the offense and defense respectively for "Alpha Delta Pi."

A summer 5-on-5 Basketball league will be offered during the first summer session and 3-on-3 will be offered in the second session for faculty, staff, and enrolled students.

practice, the Pirates bounced back with a sixth place finish out of a field of 20 teams up in Williamsburg, Va.

The Furman Intercollegiate Tournament proved to be another difficult task for the Pirates as they rolled up a 19th place finish in big field of teams. Next up for the Pirates is a weekend tournament in Lexington, Ky. at the University of Kentucky.

"This tournament is very crucial for us because it is the last tournament before the Conference Tournament in two weeks," Williams said. "We are counting on continued consistent, good play from Josh and Brent. Lately, Kevin Miller, a sophomore, has really stepped up his game in tournament play."

"We need someone to rise to the challenge and cover the number four spot because four scores are accounted for a team in tournament play. Freshman, Daniel Griffiths, has that ability to be this guy and we are going to need him and other young guys to play tough as the season moves on."

The CAA Conference Tournament is being held down in Goldsboro, N.C. this year. Newcomer to the conference, VCU, is the early favorite to win it all in only their first year in the CAA.

"VCU has a strong team," Williams said. "We would really have to play at the next level to knock off these guys. But, whatever happens I just hope we keep a positive outlook for the tournaments following the CAA. If we can finish strong this season, it should set the stage for next season and all the talented new faces."
