

KATIE GOULAH

As cliché as this may sound, I celebrate my diversity by being unapologetically me. I don't necessarily follow the gender-normative and heteronormative scripts that are laid out in our society. I celebrate my diversity by following my heart. Being gender non-conforming definitely makes me stand out among the crowd, and I used to be afraid of being so different than everyone else. As I've gotten older, I've realized that my own self-expression and my happiness is worth way more than what other people may think of me.
