

February 9, 1929

I have been talking to you somewhat along the lines of good citizenship. I want to say just a word more about that. The great mass of students in the college are showing themselves to be the finest kind of citizens. There are a few girls who, according to the records I have received in the office, insist on being a law unto themselves. I advise those girls to change their ways or withdraw. If we are confident that you are not capable of teaching the children of North Carolina, you had better go somewhere else as we are not going to graduate you. There are a few girls in college that the best thing for them to do is to withdraw. I dont believe they are going to change.

Robert H. Wright, President