

CHAPEL, APRIL 3, 1932

Scripture reading: Seven verses Second Chapter Genesis

After God had created the world and all of the things that were in the world we are told that he finished it on the seventh day. I dare say you have never heard that in the scripture "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made". "Ended his work" meant he set aside the seventh day as a rest day. A lot of folks in this world think God stopped work when he created the world and hasn't since. There isn't any justification of the idea that God's work ended with the creation of the earth. Jesus said, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. Creation has not stopped. It is still going on. There are a number of things that have been developed that we know the history of. We know when they were developed. The Irish potato was found in America but not in the form that we find it today. It has been developed and made into something different. And a man developed the orange. There are many species of the animal kingdom that have been developed since the first creation. God is still at work and he expects us to work, and we are not true disciples of his unless we want to work. He has filled us full of energy so that we will do something in this world worthwhile. It is God's will.