NAACP Whimping Out?

own-shadow, NAACP board member to not realize that is grounds for bringing the Singapore "cane" punishment to the back-rooms of all civil rights board meetings, just in case there are more like him, not only at the N-Double-A, but just in case the Urban League and Joint Center and OIC and others have some board members like Joe Madison.

An invitation to the Detroit meeting, dated March 18, described the goal of access to Pan-Africanist, progressive and nationalist, to a "new" NAACP that would have an "African-centered, self-determined program thrust." That's the kind of NAACP that is going to get my membership in 1994.

"This smells of trying to re-create the NAACP in the image of Ben Chavis. It's as if (he) has handed the conservative right of this country a hand grenade and pulled the pin himself."

"Something to Consider"

By Virginia Gaynor

We continue to be bombarded on a day-to-day basis with the negative images of african-americans in this society. The written and visual media (T.V. Movies) have made millions of dollars writing and discussing african-americans. We are told about the drugs, low academic achievement of our children, poverty, pregnancy rates of our teenage girls, and the irresponsibility of black men... and the list goes on.

In fact, we have heard so much about the decadence of our race, that many of us have become paralyzed and have deaf ears, and are blind to the state of african americans and african american children in this country as well as Pitt County.

An example of this occurred three weeks ago. An african american male simply got tired of this life and the hopelessness and despair of merely existing... I can't help but believe that somehow his blood is stained on all of us as leaders and parents in this community.

I leave you with this thought of him and the others like him that we are ignoring everyday.

Is underage drinking worth the risk?

Despite the fact that middle and senior high school students drink throughout the year, a concerted effort to call attention to teenage drinking habits usually occurs with the first blossoming buds of spring. Maybe it's because underage drinking becomes visible again. In the spring, many high school students party in open fields, chirping birds inaudible over the blaring music from some car radio or boom box. If these kids aren't in a field partying, they may be in anyone's home, parents gone for the afternoon, evening, or worse, the weekend. And let's not forget the upcoming prom season and the descent of thousands of teens to the southern sandy shores of our state.

The results of these gathering are often devastating: serious automobile crashes with personal injuries, unwanted and unprotected sex, physical violence and property destruction. Most of these kids don't have substance abuse problems. Some may truly think they can walk away from the party after having just one beer.

The old cliches ring out like a bell from the highest tower: "It's just one beer." "I won't drink the hard stuff." "I can handle it." "There's no problem driving. I've only had one." worse are the parents that actually feed into these same attitudes.

One beer in the system of an average sized teenager is enough to put his or her blood alcohol level up to .02. Contrary to popular teenage myth, eating while drinking does not help absorb alcohol; and waiting an hour between drinks won't bring down the blood alcohol level either. It takes a considerable amount of time for the body to metabolize alcohol out of the system.

If caught, underage drinkers face the possibility of losing their licenses and possibly incurring fines, not to mention the fact that the more serious SWI charges usually result in a police record. Since kids probably won't read this column parents, ask your kids this: "Is one drink worth an automobile accident, a fight, unwanted (and possibly not remembered and unprotected sex or police record?"

Is one beer, or a drink of any alcoholic beverage really going to make the party better? Is one drink going to make that girl (or guy) think you're really that cool?

Hey, underage drinkers... it's decision making time. Is a drink really worth it? All you'll gain is one—or severally drinks. You have a lot more to lose.

OPEN HOUSE

Land Use Plan Update/Zoning Ordinance

Wednesday, May 25, 1994
3:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.

Agricultural Center Auditorium • 403 Government Circle

Dear Pitt County Citizen/Landowner:

In a continuing effort to prepare the County's first zoning ordinance, the Pitt County Planning Board is updating the Land Use section of the 1990 Comprehensive Plan. I would like to invite each of you to attend an Open House to see the results of our work so far. We need your input to prepare a valid Land Use Plan which will serve as the basis for the zoning ordinance.

During this informal meeting we will present Goals & Objectives and a Future Land Use Plan map, show various informational maps, answer questions, and collect your comments on our draft recommendations. This is your chance to provide input before we turn our attention to developing the zoning regulations which will be used to help carry out the plan.

Please come by anytime between 3:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. to learn more about this important effort. We hope you will be able to join us.

Sincerely,

Andy Foreman

If Your Energy Costs are Sky High, Consider Propane

If your energy costs are soaring, there is something you can do about it. Switch to clean burning, economical propane gas. Electricity costs more than propane because it isn't as efficient. Propane retains nearly 85% of its original fossil fuel energy. In fact, electric heat costs more than twice what propane would in many areas. And a gas water heater can provide twice as much hot water and save you up to 40% in the process. Safe, economical propane. It's the best way to land energy savings. ELECT CALVIN DANIELS Pitt County Sheriff

If you want honesty, and experience that will get the job done, vote for Calvin Daniels on May third. Calvin Daniels is an African-American who has many years of experience in law enforcement, and he knows the people of Pitt County. Originally from Pitt County, Calvin has proven many times that he is willing to bring about change in the Sheriff's department, especially for the African-American community. It appears that blacks are being targeted and arrested in record numbers in Pitt County, and this can be seen by looking at a jail house that has over a ninety percent black population. Daniels feels that this can change with the right man in control, this is why he wants to make history by being the first black Pitt County Sheriff. The black community should stand up and vote for a long needed change in Pitt County, a change that is represented by Calvin Daniels. Vote for a new beginning on May third.

Paid for by: Fuller for Justice Committee

Dear Friends,

There is a clear choice between the two candidates for the N.C. Supreme Court in the May 3rd Democratic primary.

We believe deeply that Jim Fuller is the only candidate we can support. We ask you to join us.

Jim Fuller is an excellent attorney. Jim Fuller is also a soldier who, for ten years, fought many battles for civil rights in the former Chambers law firm. With his own law firm, he has continued that fight, often without compensation. Recently, Jim represented civil rights marchers against the KKK and was instrumental in dissolving one of the meanest hate groups in the United States. He is the kind of person we need on our state's highest court.
