THE LEGISLATURE.

TUESDAY.

The chief law bills in the Legislature to-day were to protect sheep and goats against dogs; to regulate taxes of property covered by fire insurance; to allow members of the Legislature to hold other offices; to require bicycleriders to dismount when meeting vehicles.

The House tabled bills repealing the charter of the eastern band of Cherokee Indians, and prohibiting county officers from holding office more than two successive terms. The House made special orders of bills to make seven years' separation of husband and wife additional ground for divorce, and also to create a Code commission.

Bills passed allowing pensions to widows whose husbands have at any time died of injuries or wounds received during the war.

The Fair.

The Greenville contingent to the fair at Newbern returned in good time Wednesday night. The day was fine and the fair a success in every particular. No better exhibits have been displayed at any former fair. Besides every department being full, there were many side attractions with entertaining features. The races were equal to the best trials of speed on any track, and no more daring balloon ascensions have been witnessed anywhere. In fact nothing was wanting to make the fair interesting. Long live the Newbern fair, the best in the State! The right men are at the head of it.

Since the weather has become so much better more people are seen in town, and business generally is picking up.

The election bill was discussed in the House Tuesday with much spirit. Mr. Lusk was in charge of the bill. He said he had many particulars in his mind to suggest to the Democratic party, but that he would not say them as the Democrats were in a session of the bill. He said he had many things to say, but he would not say them as the Democrats were in a session of the bill.

The farmers of North Carolina were told the whole Southern was being ruined by the crop of 1864. These farmers will reduce their expenses just that much and if the example is followed throughout the entire cotton belt this year's crop will bring just as much as the big crop now being marketed and it will cost only a little over one half to make it. The reduced acreage can be devoted to corn, oats, wheat and other food products, making the farmer self-sustaining. Then the whole cotton crop will be a surplus crop and the proceeds clear profit.

The liquor bill was the special order in the Senate Tuesday. After much discussion, and a motion was made to table it. The yeas on this was a tie and Senator Douglas voted for America to win. A motion to adjourn was carried so the bill would come up again Wednesday. It will have the same effect as the bill will be of a kind that may operate against them in the next session. Mr. Ray said that the bill will be of a kind that may operate against them in the next session. Mr. Ray said that the bill will be of a kind that may operate against them in the next session.

A Mice Remains Story. John J. Tipton spent last Sunday at the residence of his father-in-law, Mr. S. J. Hester, near town. While walking about the place he noticed a mouse in a field, which had gotten away from the house and there was no place of refuge nearby. The mouse deliberately ran up in a small thorn bush and after surveying for a while, for a while stuck his head between the prongs of the bush and threw his body off. He died in that position. This is so, because Mr. Tipton says he saw it. — Durham News.

The Steamers News finishes this bit of consolation: "The Southern people, despite the fact that cotton is only 5 cents a pound, are about as well off as the people of any other section of the country. They could be better off if they would profit by the lesson taught by their fathers in the years from 1840 to 1865. That lesson comprises self-reliance and economy. For nearly five years the farmers of the South fed, clothed and kept in the field a half million of soldiers and supported themselves. Cotton was grown in sufficient quantities to buy a few war vessels abroad, together with small supplies of arms and ammunition, but the main products of the Southern farms were corn and hogs."

There are people who think that the physical business of a newspaper is to take issues with other publications on political, religious and economic topics, and to only take issues that will do good. But if people do not get their minds of general interest, and if they are also many persons who think it is a great part of their business to pick up the trash of their neighbors and to give it to the public. — Durham News.

A serious wreck occurred on the Norfolk & Western railroad near Huntington, W. Va. Four people were killed.

They Are Fine Actors.

There was not a large audience to see East Lynne by the G. A. Hill Theatre Co. last night, but the attendance is showing an increase with each performance. The acting last night, especially of the ladies, was splendid and their costumes were exquisite. They give way to-night for the home company to play "Imogene" as previously arranged for, and Friday night will present "The Daughter of Dixie or the South before the War." You should not miss this. The Hill company is composed of the very best actors and nothing but praise is heard of their plays.
