GOOD RECOMMENDATIONS.

And the Reasons the Grand Jury Had for Making Them.

The Grand Jury at the present term of court made the usual inspection of county buildings, the records in county offices, &c., all of which were reported in good condition and order. They reported that the Home for the Aged and Infirm was in a better condition than it had been for years, but made some recommendations that would add to the safety and comfort of the inmates. These were: First, that two street lamps be placed in the yard at the Home; Second, that a farm bell be placed on the premises; Third, that Miss Rillie Bailey, a young insane inmate of the Home be sent to the asylum.

Mr. L. A. Mayo, Foreman of the jury, handed us these reasons upon which the recommendations of the jury were based.

1. The need of two lamps in the yard of the Home for the Aged and Infirm is obvious to every person acquainted with the Home, its occupants and surroundings. There are at all times infirm inmates who are more or less demented, and who are at times disposed, the Overseer says, to roam about the yard at night, groping their way in the dark. They are liable to fall and injure themselves, besides giving the Overseer considerable trouble to find them and get them back to their rooms.

Another reason for this recommendation is that corrupt persons take advantage of the darkness to go on the premises with impure motives, and hiding in the shades of night defy the efforts of the Overseer to detect them; whereas, if the yard was lighted, any one entering the premises could be seen. The protection of the inmates and the property demand that the lamps be put up.

2. The reason for recommending the placing of a bell on the premises, is that as the Overseer is almost constantly at work about the farm during the day, there is no way to give an alarm if fire should occur in any of the buildings or any thing arises to need his immediate presence. If the Commissioners do not furnish the bell the county may some day sustain the loss of this property. It would be appalling should fire occur there and get beyond control. The buildings are near together, and in addition to the danger to them, a number of the inmates are so afflicted as to be powerless to get out of the buildings without assistance and might be burned to death.

3. They recommended that Miss Rillie Bailey be sent to the insane asylum because such an institution is deemed the proper place for her. If under the treatment patients receive at the asylum she could be cured, it is inhuman to keep her confined in the County Home, to eke out the remainder of her life there. A few months proper treatment might restore her mind and enable her to care for herself and enjoy life as other people.

EVERY AFTERNOON (EXCEPT SUNDAY).

It is now said that the decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax law will be that it is constitutional except as to income derived from realty rents and municipal bonds.

Governor Carr has commenced proceedings as a private citizen of North Carolina against the Secretary of State to prohibit the printing of the mortgage law alleging that it was fraudulently passed by the Douglasites.

The new charter of Raleigh does not exempt any property from taxation. It makes no difference for what purpose it is held. All church property and the property of all societies is taxed just as other property. The people of the Capital City are very indignant over the matter. It is hard to imagine any evil which the legislature could have done which they did not do.

Alas! how the mighty do tumble occasionally. Gen. William Mahone, of Virginia, who was on the most constant hanger-on around Washington while Congress was in session, trying to unload a city lot on the government for a fabulous sum, has gone back to his home in Petersburg and executed deed of assignment. His family figure conspicuously among the preferred creditors.

SIGNS AND OMENS.

Do public men believe in signs and omens? This is a question which is often discussed, but no conclusive answer can be, or, at least, has been, given, except that which may be drawn from individual cases. On the occasion of his last visit to Washington ex-Senator Ransom, of North Carolina, discussed most entertainingly upon it, in the presence of a few friends gathered in his old committee room at the Capitol, and shed some light upon the subject. The conversation came out by his statement that he intended to start for his new post duty as Minister to Mexico on Friday.

"O, aren't you afraid," exclaimed one of the party, "to begin such an important and extended trip on that day?"

"No," the new minister answered. "I do not recognize any difference between Friday and the other days of the week; I don't believe that it can have the slightest possible influence in determining the issue of an enterprise projected or begun on that day. In fact," he continued, in a contemplative mood, "I think I am not given to guiding my actions by any sign or omen. Only today, coming down to the Capitol, my companion saw a funeral procession coming up the avenue, evidently bound for Oak Hill Cemetery, Georgetown. Said he: 'Senator, let's turn off here so as to avoid meeting it. You know it's dangerous.' I said to him: 'Lock up the avenue. There are at least a thousand people in sight, many of whom must unavoidably meet the procession. Before it reaches Georgetown it will have met hundreds of people. Do you believe that all of them are to be afflicted with sudden death because of the presence of this funeral procession in their way? I don't, and we won't change our route.' And we didn't."

"There are some old saws," the ex-Senator went on to say, "that have a basis of sound reason, or had, for their existence, which way may not be generally known. That one which goes: 'It is unfortunate to meet a lady when starting on a journey,' is based on a very good reason. Ladies are so attractive that the would-be traveller is likely to be beguiled into a conversation with the one he may meet on his way to the station, which will prevent him from reaching there in time to take his train or boat, and he is thereby delayed, probably to his embarrassment or loss. Therefore, it may be unfortunate for a traveller to meet a lady in those circumstances."

"There is another that has a historic and philosophic basis—'to put one's sock on wrong side out is a sign of good luck.' That had its origin in the olden times, before the modern conveniences of gas and electric lighting were added to the appliances of home and hotel life. Therefore, the man who rose early in the morning, before daylight, and dressed himself, not stopping to discover whether or not his hose was strictly in order, because of the diligence implied in that action, was often enabled to score a triumph over a business rival who waited until he could determine that every article was in order. Hence the proverb, which simply means that a hustler, as we would term in these days, is bound to succeed."

"The same is true of the saying that it is lucky for a rabbit to cross your path." This has the respectability of age as a warrant for its circulation, but it has long lost its force, or should have done so. Rabbits haunt their warrens generally until dusk, and then they begin running about in search of food. In olden times travelling was dangerous, even in broad daylight, and to have a rabbit cross one's path meant that he was likely to be caught out after dark, and bad luck, either in the shape of injury from robbers or damages or delay through bad roads, was almost certain to befall the traveller.

"But that simple signs or omens in these days of practical things can affect one's interests, either for good or bad. I don't believe," concluded the Senator.—Washington Post.

The Baltimore Sun estimates that 2,000 vessels disappear every year and with them about 12,000 people, and $100,000,000 worth of property.

WHEN CUPID REIGNS.

A Curious Festival at Which the Little God Is Supreme.

A singular and ancient custom takes place the first Thursday in December every year in the little Belgian city of Arton. This is the celebrated St. Nicholas festival, and its counterpart is probably impossible to find in any other country.

Peasants, male and female, enter the city in the early morning, all dressed in their holiday dress and all bent on being married. The young men and women march up and down the market place, and as soon as a young peasant sees the girl for whom he has a liking he invites her into one of the many cabarets or cafes that surround the market, and here the agreement and conditions for the marriage are talked over.

The young peasant is always attended by an important personage called "the spokesman." This person plays a most important part, and without him no marriage could be arranged. This man enjoys the confidence of both parties; he knows the qualifications of every young peasant and how much of a marriage portion each girl is provided with. It is he who does the talking for both parties, and if an agreement is entered into and a wedding is the result, he receives a certain part of the wedding portion, a new high hat and a pair of boots. As long as the consultation between the two families, commenced at the festival, continues, the spokesman has a good time. He is entitled to the best of food and drink, and if he successfully carries out the negotiations he is the first one to be invited to the wedding.

As soon as the couple are engaged, which must be done before the festival is over, the custom is for the beau to purchase some oranges and candy for his girl, and she presents her intended husband with a pipe and a package of tobacco.

The origin of this marriage festival is lost in obscurity, but it is faithfully observed by the people of this province year after year.

Dr. De Koven's Letter.

At a recent exhibition of dolls in Chicago a doll was shown which once had a letter addressed to it by the late Dr. De Koven, the great Episcopal high church leader. It was as follows:

"My Dear Wax: I am glad to hear of your birth, and that you are named for me and that you are of wax. You could not be of better stuff for a minister. You will look sweet; this will please the young; you cannot talk too much; this will please the old. You can wink at things, which you will have to do. You will eat little, you will need but small pay. When you are bruised, you can be put on the shelf without a word and a doll, new, fresh and with red cheeks, will take your place. If you have to be a martyr by fire you will melt easy and save pain to those who have to put you in, but if you do good to even one little girl like C—your life will be worth a great deal. So good-by, from your affectionate friend, J. De K."

Mistakes Will Happen.

The Telegraph Age tells how a telegraph editor in a Boston newspaper office wrote a note of remonstrance to the telegraph operator because the latter in his copy had entirely omitted the letters "f" and "k" where they should have appeared. The operator replied to the note, saying: "Mr. Editor: Mistakes are liable to happen in the best of regulated families and to typewriters as well. It is, indeed, a very unfortunate affair, but the 'eph' and the 'cay' fell out and are lost. This morning I called at the office of the gentleman from whom I rent this outfit, but phailed to phind him in; in phact, the 'ophice cid' says he will not return phor phour or phive days. I don't lique the loox ov this variety ov spelling myselph, but will get the specials aphter a phasion. I, myself, consider this no joque, but a serious aphair. Phaithphully yours, J. Logan."

A Story of Mascagni.

The Philadelphia Record tells a good story of Mascagni, the composer. During his recent visit in London, while in his room at a hotel, he heard an organ-grinder play the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana." The man playing the piece entirely too fast exasperated Mascagni, and descending into the street the composer addressed the organist, saying: "You play entirely too fast. Let me show you how it ought to be played." "And who are you?" asked the wandering minstrel. "I happen to be the composer of the piece," replied Mascagni, and then he played the intermezzo for the astonished organ-grinder in the correct tempo. Imagine Mascagni's surprise when on the following day he saw the same organ-grinder in front of his house with a placard on the organ, on which was inscribed in large letters: "Pupil of Mascagni."

History of Henry VIII.

A small boy in one of the German-town public schools wrote a composition on King Henry VIII. It read as follows: "King Henry 8 was the greatest widower that ever lived. He was born at Annie Domino, in the year 1066. He had 510 wives besides children. The first was be-headed and afterwards executed, and the 2d was revoked. Henry 8 was succeeded to the throne by his great-grandmother, the beautiful Mary Queen of Scotts, sometimes called Lady of the Lake, or the Lay of the Last Minstrel."—Exchange.
