A NEVER-MIND FELLOW.

I never mind the weather—if it's spring-time, many a tree is shakin' down its blossoms in a shower over me;
 An' I know the girls are goin' where the honeysuckles grow
 An' I see the river flowin' an' I'm glad I'm fur from snow.

I never mind the weather—if it's summer, w li, I seem
 To pull myse f together an' jest dream, an' dream, an' dream!
 For the roses roll around me in a perfect foam o'sea.
 An' the good Lord runs the weather, an' it's alike to me!

I never mind the weather—if it's winter well, I see
 A dozen happy faces round the fireside for me:
 An' I know the kettle's steamin', an' I know the fire's bright.
 An' I see the blue eyes a-b-a-min', an' I'm a la hom at night.

They Ate Wild Onions

The Observer several days ago reported the death of three children of a negro named Black, in Steel Creek, and the illness of others, stating that the deaths were due to poisoning. The mother and one of the children were in a dying condition yesterday. The father is lame and very poor. The children went out to get something to cook as "greens," and got wild onions. All who ate of the dish have died or will die.—Charlotte Observer.

A Dog Chews Gum.

A pet dog that steals all the chewing gum he can find around is owned by a family in Greensboro. He has been watched to see what he did with it and it is claimed in all earnestness that he chews away for all the world like the young ladies from whom he steals it and that when he becomes tired he puts it away, but it is not stated whether he sticks it around on chairs like others who masticate it or leave it on the floor or ground as the case may be.—Greensboro Record.

NEWS OFF THE WIRE.

Served by our "Leased" Underground Cable—(Limited).

All truck crops in the tidewater section of Virginia are reported a little late.

Two men fell a distance of 60 feet while clearing out a furnace stack at Roanoke, Va., and one of them escaped unhurt. The other was badly bruised.

Nearly One Million.

During the latter part of last week the catch of fish here was unusually large. The steamers carried into the factories about one million fish that were ground up and made into scrap. This is a very nice catch and we are glad to see the fish run.—Beaufort Herald.

They Were Roosters.

The following is said to have occurred not a thousand miles from here:

A bashful country girl came into a certain grocery store the other day carrying some live chickens. The fowls had their feet tied together to prevent their escape and the young woman in her confusion placed them on the counter. Now the young clerk is noted for his polite manners, but he is not always grammatical, and he smilingly inquired: "Are you sure they will lay there?" "Oh, n-n no, si," she stammered, blushing, "they are all roosters," and the clerk hasn't recovered yet.

A well-known minister sent South to labor among the colored people was received with many demonstrations of joy. At the first meeting which he held, one colored preacher prayed for him with great earnestness, thus: "O Lord! bless dis yer brudder what's come down from de Nort' to preach de Gospel to us. 'Noint him wid the kerosene ile of salvasun, and set him on fire."

The Greensboro Daily Record has enlarged from a 6 to a 7 column paper. The Record is a hustling paper and shows signs of a liberal patronage.

In the elections Monday the Democrats seem to have almost made a clean sweep of the State. even in the towns where the Legislature changed the charters and there was a fighting chance the Democrats were victorious. Major Grant worked day and night to put Goldsboro under Republican rule when he was getting his bill through the Legislature but she still remains Democratic. Raleigh had been placed, as Shafer, Young & Co. thought, under the same rule, but she too is a Democratic city still, and so on throughout the State. This is a pointer for 1896. Our people will not stand such government as has been put upon us by a fusion Legislature.

MENTAL IMAGES.

"A man conversing in earnest," says Emerson in his essay on "Nature," "if he watch his intellectual processes, will find that a material image, more or less luminous, arises in his mind contemporaneous with every thought, which furnishes the vestment of the thought."

This power of forming mental images appears to vary in strength among individuals to a considerable degree. Naturally we should expect to find it powerful in poets and artists. Charles Dickens has himself told us that he actually "saw" his creations as he wrote, and M. Taine mentions a painter who only looked at an object while he sketched its outline and was able to fill in the colors from the image of it in his mind. On the other hand, there are people of equal intelligence who, being unable to use such mental images themselves, have doubted their existence, and Mr. Francis Galton has shown that habits of abstract thought, such as men of science and philosophers indulge in, are apt to weaken the capacity of forming mental pictures.

Mr. Kirkpatrick of Winona, Minn., an experimental psychologist, has made a series of observations on this phenomenon with the help of his classes. The scholars were asked to write down just what came into their minds when certain familiar words, such as "book," "tree," "church," were called out, and the answers were carefully investigated. He found that the majority of the students formed distinct images of the objects corresponding to the words, and the rest formed indistinct images, with a few exceptions, who seem to have indulged in philosophical abstractions. The word "book," for example, called up visions of a Bible, a dictionary, a novel, in all but a few scholars, who thought of "food for the mind" or "the thoughts of some person." The word "tree" was represented by some kind of tree, more especially the illustrious cherry tree which George Washington cut down. The word "church" usually evoked a picture of some church in the vicinity, but some of the hearers thought of a "religious organization." It is evident from his results that most people are "visualizers" in thinking, while a few are "nonvisualizers." The tendency to form distinct images was very conspicuous among the female students, and in both sexes it reaches an abnormal development about the ages of 14 and 15 or during the period of adolescence, which, it has been otherwise observed, is also one of exceptional good health and rapid growth. The tendency is further checked or fostered by the occupations in life.—Cassel's Magazine.

According to a table recently published, showing the value of taxable properties in all of the States of the Union for the years 1893 and 1894, there was a tremendous falling off in the assessed valuation of property last year in most of the States. The heaviest decline of values took place in far off Washington, where it amounted to more than fifty-seven millions dollars, while Wisconsin stood second on the list, with a decline of fifty-four millions. The largest falling off values of occurred in the West, every State west of the western border of Pennsylvania except Minnesota and Missouri showing a decline. Five States in the South—Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana showed an increase, but the largest gains were in the Middle States and in New England, the States in those sections showing an increase being Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts and Maine.

WRINKLES OR NO WRINKLES.

One Can Be Smooth and Yet Not Young.

"Some of the new electrical processes for removing wrinkles do produce remarkable results," said a New York physician the other day, "but they are too dangerous to receive the commendation of any reputable physician, and as a matter of fact, the result, though so remarkable, is not at all what the victim hopes. There is Mrs. —, she has really had her wrinkles removed, but you would hardly notice it, except as she told you so. The curious thing is that she does not look a year younger. I say curious, but it is only so to a person who has not correctly analyzed the look of age. Wrinkles may be the most obvious thing about it, but they are not the main thing. What makes anyone look old is first, the change, the decline of all the chief moldings of the face, the falling of the cheeks, the heaviness or the scragginess of the throat, the settling of the flesh about the mouth. The pain that is given in removing wrinkles increases all this, and is likely to count more than the ameliorative process. Cleopatra says, in the play, that she is wrinkled, and Shakespeare was probably a good judge of beauty. She, to his mind, kept hers and her youthfulness because she was so vital, so well, so alive, that her face had the general contours of youth. Women are on the wrong road when they do anything painful to make them look young."

A Shy Authoress.

Mary E. Wilkins, the story writer, is so shy in general society, that it is the general verdict among the Boston and New York literary circles that no one feels acquainted with her. She scarcely speaks on social occasions except to answer when spoken to.

Sculptors Can't Sell Their Busts of Popular Frenchmen.

The portrait of M. Felix Faure, president of France, has just been commenced by Bonnat, the celebrated painter, and as this is a semi-official work, there is no doubt of the artist being fully compensated for it. Such is not the case, however, with the many painters and modelers in marble or clay who at each change in the French presidency have made many pictures or busts of the new chief executive or of other prominent men, on the ready sale of which they have built their hopes of fortune.

The sale of pictures or busts does not seem to follow any fixed rules. Even the individual popularity of the occupant of the presidential chair apparently has little to do with it. President Thiers, for instance, was not particularly popular with the Parisians, yet images of him sold better than those of any succeeding president. On the other hand Gambetta had an enormous and enthusiastic personal following, yet his likenesses are not salable. Even though France has been and is fervent in its praises of Russia and her ruler, the statuettes of the czar are a drug on the market.

A young woman modeler, whose work has several times found a place in the Salon, has at this moment on her hands an even hundred busts of Casimir-Perier. The "deplorable inspiration," as a Frenchman would call it, came to her last fall to fashion these images, and she finished the last of them two days before the resignation of her model, and his fall from public favor.

Until President Carnot was assassinated copies of Chapu's bust of him were little in demand; but the day after the tragedy at Lyons forty were sold in that city.

Free Medical Aid.

M. Felix Faure has decided that all the state and other domestics at the Elysee and their families are to receive medical assistance gratis, says the London Daily News. The cost is to be paid out of his own purse. All the ushers and other servants employed there by the state have been nearly thirty years at the Elysee. They have been kept on longer than they might have been, because it would be so difficult to find men so fit for their places. They cannot be dismissed before a certain number of years' service has given them a right to a pension. Since influenza visited Paris, in 1889, they have often suffered from that illness, and, being old, had often to seek medical assistance. As their salaries are not high, they thought this was hard, and so also thinks the president. M. Faure has named Capt. Bouchez to look after them and to be their spokesman.

PUBLISHED IN MID-OCEAN.

A Newspaper That Is Printed on Board an American Cruiser.

A newspaper printed on shipboard, on the rolling decks of a man-of-war, out at sea, beyond the reach of telegraph wire or post.

An editor whose desk is in the narrow space below decks, known to sailors as the port brig, whose glimpse of the outside world is through a little round glass port in the ship's side, looking out over a waste of waters.

Such is the Ocean Wave, published "in the interests of all good men-o'-warships around the world," and for the particular instruction and amusement of the officers and men of the North Atlantic squadron. The paper is edited and printed on the flagship New York. Subscriptions, it is stated in big letters on the first page, are payable in gold, silver or jewels. No potatoes or garden truck are taken in exchange.

The Wave has six pages, each of which contains three columns of reading matter. It is printed in four colors—red, black, green and purple. A fine photo engraving of the flagship Baltimore, of the China station, is printed, showing that vessel lying off a Corean port. Copies of the paper just received in this city were printed while the squadron was at Port-of-Spain, in the island of Trinidad. The features are a story of the West Indies, some original poems contributed by members of the ship's company, a story of the visit made to Santa Cruz, describing the hospitable manner in which the islanders received the Americans and showed them over their sugar plantations, and an account of the international regatta held at Barbadoes, in which boats from the American ships New York, Cincinnati, Raleigh and Essex took part.

The jolly tars on board the ships feel proud of their little paper, and every issue is carefully preserved to send home to friends. There is a humorist on the staff, and the funny column is full of salty jokes which smack of the sea.

For the printing of this little paper the ship's printer, Michael Quinlan, of the admiral's staff, is responsible. He is a thorough-going seaman, as well as printer, and can keep his sea-legs and set type at the same time. Most of the work is necessarily done while the ship is at sea, and at such times the press has to be lashed to prevent it from breaking away.—N. Y. Recorder.

CURSED THE THUNDER.

And Was Suddenly Stricken Down With Apoplexy.

Some weeks ago a white man named Edward Eggleston, without friends, was taken sick and having no place to go, was sent to the almshouse. He was able to walk about his room and converse with those who visited him and attended to his wants.

On Saturday, April 27th, Eggleston was sitting in a chair in the door of his room, when a thunder storm came up. At every peal he was very profane and cursed the thunder. Suddenly Eggleston toppled over from his chair and on the floor as though he had been struck down by a thunderbolt. When assistance arrived the unfortunate man was found to have sustained a stroke of apoplexy. He was taken to his bed, where he lay until Monday night, when he breathed his last, never having spoken a word from the moment of the attack.

Eggleston was an Englishman by birth and had been in this community about six years, and is said to have been a mill operative. As stated above, he had no relatives in this city, but it is reported that he has a daughter living in England.—Danville Register.
