THE SO-CALLED TOWN COUNCIL.

EDITOR REFLECTOR:

The prejudice against bicycle riding manifested by a few of this town, and especially by those who the citizens of the town supposed were to represent them in the town council, is unintelligible to us.

Now the petition to repeal Ordinance XLVIII presented to the board Monday the 1st of July was signed by many of the citizens and tax payers of Greenville, and especially of 4th Ward. Yet the Councilman from that Ward seems the prime mover in legislating against the wheelmen. Does he or any other Councilman hold his position to enact the will of his constituents, or to foist his own views and prejudices upon those who honored him with their trust? Yet before the petition was read, as soon as its purport was seen, significant glances and nods were exchanged, the board was immediately canvassed, and for the rest, the reading of the signatures of the petition received about as much attention as a Chinese mortality list would; and the motion to table which proceeded from the above mentioned Councilman, passed unanimously. Is this representation?

Again: Since the Council has insisted upon voting down a repeal of this ordinance, is it not their duty, and due to the wheelmen, to make it plain, what is a sidewalk and how far it extends?

For many streets have no sidewalks, except a mere path beside the wheel track. On many more the sidewalk merges into a grass-plot, the grass-plot into the street with no perceptible line of demarcation between the two. On Saturday last a black negro with a view to a witness ticket, swore, although he was half a square distant, that a wheelman was on the sidewalk, whereas this wheelman (white) swore he was on the grass plot outside of any foot path. Now if the Councilmen and the scum whom the greater part of them seem trying to favor, wished to trick the cyclists into a trap with a view to witness tickets—why, they could not have conceived a shrewder device. Is it right that it should stand thus?

Again; there is much grandiloquent talk at present against class legislation. How is this for a sample?

The town has provided ways of passage for foot passengers, baby carriages, &c., and for road vehicles of a heavy nature. But any intelligent citizen knows that under the present law a man who has invested $100 in a wheel would as well have buried it in the sands of the streets of Greenville. In other towns such an ordinance has not been passed until the streets have been improved enough to make it possible to ride on them, e. g. Wilmington, Washington, Tarboro, Kinston. Now does not this ordinance legislate against a class? Why should not the wheelmen have some voice? and their friends? Give us good streets or allow us to ride where it is possible to ride. At least give us equal privileges with carts, and mark sidewalks so that any trifling loafer may not be able to take advantage of the present indefiniteness of boundary lines of sidewalks, and filch a perjured half-dollar.

EVERY AFTERNOON (EXCEPT SUNDAY)

The Cotton States Exposition which will open in Atlanta in September will be the greatest exhibit ever undertaken in the South. Most of the buildings have been completed and every thing will be in readiness by the date fixed for the opening. We have recently talked to two or three traveling men who had just come Atlanta, and they say the Exposition will be second in interest only to the World's Fair. Arrangements have been effected for the low rate of one cent a mile on the railroads.

Four years and six months will bring to a close the present century, the same being in its order the eighteenth. Now, why it has been, and is still, falsely called the "nineteenth century," upon which we have not yet entered, is what we would like to know. We may only guess that it is called the nineteenth century in order to cultivate the impression that we are a hundred years ahead of time.—Durham Sun.

Is not the Sun somewhat off in its reckoning? According to our way of counting, with the advent of the year A. D. 1 we commenced the first century and continued therein until the close of the year 100; and with the year 101 the second century started. By the same rule the eighteenth century closed with the year 1800 and the nineteenth began with 1801. Therefore this is the nineteenth century, and when the year 1901 arrives we will begin the twentieth century.

The town of Chicopee, Mass., recently passed an ordinance which imposes a fine of from $2 to $20 on any person who may be caught throwing into any street, lane or alley, ashes, glass, crockery, scrap iron, tacks, nails, or any other articles which might injure the tires of bicycles.

Found His Overcoat.

The train stopped in the great, dark station of a New England city, and a gentleman who had been dozing during the last hour of his journey got up in his haste, seized his bag, and hurried out of the car. In a moment he came rushing back; he had forgotten his overcoat. But no overcoat was there, for his son had come along from the smoking-car, recognized it, and carried it out.

"Where's my coat?" exclaimed the owner, excitedly, diving under the seat, and knocking off his hat as he rose. "This was my seat! I'm sure I left it here."

But the persons sitting near had just entered the car, and took no interest in him; nobody answered. Out he hurried, and again missed his son, who had gone into the station to inquire about tickets. He was sure his coat must be in that car! There was nothing for it but to go back, and back he went.

Meanwhile a tall, slender lady, dressed in black, with a long crape veil over her face, entered the seat he had vacated, and sank wearily back in the corner, her veil still over her face. In rushed the excited gentleman. The train was about to start, and if he was to find the coat, it was now or never. "There it is!" he exclaimed, in triumph, "I knew it was there!"

He plunged forward, and literally grabbed at the veiled lady. She shrieked, he gasped an apology, the train started, and he plunged out of the car.

Our Mayor's wit,

Mayor Russ' reputation as a wit is proverbial. His versatility and quick powers of seizing on to a bright idea have made him thousands of friends. There occurs something in the Mayor's court every day which appeals to the humorous and oftentimes Mayor Russ makes some striking remarks seemingly unconscious to himself which are worthy of being recorded. One day recently a gentleman was indicted in connection with another on a charge of assault. The evidence clearly showed that the former was not a belligerent but that he interposed his service merely in the capacity of peace maker. The Mayor after hearing the evidence rendered his decision in the case. Said he in regard to the former gentleman, "I was taught in infancy that peace makers would obtain their reward in Heaven," and in my court I am sure they will be rewarded. The gentleman is discharged. Court regained order after several minutes. — Raleigh Press.

Force of Example

"Like mistress, like maid" is a saying that is probably oftener true than "like master, like man." The story is told that Mlle. Augustine Brohan, a celebrated French comedian, who was extremely humane to all animals, no matter how humble, one day, at table, found a fly caught on her plate. She took it up tenderly with her thumb and finger, and called her maid.

"Marie," she said, take this fly—be careful, now, don't hurt him!—and put him out doors."

The girl took the fly and went away, but presently Mademoiselle Brohan saw her standing near with a troubled expression on her face.

"Well, Marie," she said, "did you do as I told you?"

"No, mademoiselle, I've got the fly still; I couldn't venture to put him outdoors—it was raining, and he might have taken cold!"

THE LAUREL

Its Sentimental Symbolism Among Greeks and Romans.

Often Used as an Instrument of Divination—Also as a Token of Some Glad Event, Especially Victory in Battle.

The tree which is known to us by the name of the laurel was held in high honor by the ancient Greeks and Romans, says Rev. A. E. Dawson in Golden Days. They chose it as a reward for virtue and valor, and it was considered the symbol of these excellent qualities. The laurel branch was used as an instrument of divination in their religious ceremonies. If the leaves cracked loudly when thrown into the fire it was considered a good omen, and if they made but little noise it was the reverse. To secure pleasant dreams all that was necessary upon retiring at night was to put a few laurel leaves at the head of the bed.

If laurels were planted before the door of a house it was secure from evil influences. Aside from the superstitious dependence upon the plant it had a place in their code of medicines. Decoctions of the leaves were specific cures for many complaints, while the sap of the tree was considered by them as an excellent antidote for poison, and was also used to cure epilepsy. From this use in medicine arose the custom of decorating the statues of Esculapius, the god of medicine, with laurel.

We are told by Juvenal that whenever any happy event took place it was the custom to decorate the house with laurel as a token of the event, just as we now decorate our houses with holly on Christmas day. The laurel was especially dedicated to Apollo in consequence of the general belief that it was he who conferred upon men the gifts of poetry and prophecy. Pausanias tells us that one of the priests of this god was always crowned with laurel, and a laurel crown was the reward for those who competed in the games which were held in honor of the god.

The custom of binding the brows of conquerors with laurel was a very ancient one. It is described as existing at the time of Æneas, and the Romans adopted it at an early period, using it chiefly in their triumphal ceremonies. The victorious general not only wore it on his forehead, but also carried a sprig of the tree in his hand. Sometimes this crown was gold, and merely in the form of laurel.

When the messengers were dispatched to tell the news of a victory laurel was placed on the points of their javelins, in order that all who saw them might know the news they bore.

The death of Mithradates was announced to Pompey by a sprig of laurel. It was also used to ornament letters and tablets containing news of this kind. Victorious ships were decorated with it, as were those about to depart on some glorious expedition. The laurel was placed at the stern of the vessel, because there were the tutelary gods of the ship, and it was to these gods that the sailors prayed when a storm threatened to destroy them.

The laurel was also a sign of peace and friendship. In the midst of a fight a soldier would offer it to his enemy as a sign that he surrendered and demanded quarter. Lastly, the laurel was bound about the brows of the dead who had distinguished themselves in battle and who died victorious.

The Judge and the Umbrella.

The old fable of the lawyers and the oyster, in which the ownership of an oyster being contested, the lawyers ate the oyster and gave a shell to each of the litigants, is matched by a story of a lawsuit which a Russian newspaper relates as entirely authentic.

In a city of Poland, this paper says, two men came into court with a suit over the ownership of an umbrella which had been left in a restaurant. Each one introduced evidence to prove that the umbrella was his.

Being unable to match the wisdom of Solomon by dividing the umbrella between them, the judge postponed the case. Pending its decision the umbrella was left in the judge's private room.

Later, as he left the court to go home, the judge found that the weather was rainy. He went back to his room, took the umbrella which was in litigation, and spread it over his head on the street.

On his way home he went into a restaurant, and left the umbrella on the rack; and when he was ready to leave the place, he found that it had been taken away by some unknown customer.

Then he bought another umbrella, and took it to his courtroom. When the case came up the litigants were confronted with it, and neither was able to identify it as his own. The court thereupon fined them both for invoking the law on frivolous pretext, and they departed empty-handed and decidedly "non-suited."

Old Virginia Ketchup.

Take one peck of green tomatoes, half a peck of white onions, three ounces of white mustard seed, one ounce each of allspice and cloves, half a pint of mixed mustard, an ounce of black pepper and celery seed each, and one pound of brown sugar, writes Eliza R. Parker in an article on "Some Pungent Ketchups," in the July Ladies' Home Journal. Chop the tomatoes and onions, sprinkle with salt and let stand three hours; drain the water off; put in a preserve kettle with the other ingredients. Cover with vinegar, and set on fire to boil slowly for one hour.
